alicuius maiestatis: a cursu enim et motu, non a potestatis eis dominatione formatum est. [2] Sed cum etiam ille unus Deus, quem colimus, qeoj cognominetur nec tamen aut motus ullus aut cursus eius appareat, quia nec uisibilis cuiquam sit, palam est ut uocabulum istud sit aliunde sumptum propriumque, quia a se natiuum, diuinitatis inuentum. [3] Itaque semota interpretationis eius astutia ueri similis est, non a cursu et motu qeouj dictos, sed de appellatione ueri dei mutuatum, uti quos aequae deos excudis setis, qeouj cognominaretis. [4] Denique quam ita sit, probatio suppetit, cum etiam uniuersos deos uestros, in quibus nullius cursus aut motus officium denotatur, qeouj communiter appelletis. [5] Itaque si [aeque] qeouj aequae immobiles, disceditur uocabuli interpretatione pariter et diuinitatis opinione, qua de cursu et motu modulata rescinditur. [6] Quodsi nomen istud proprium diuinitatis et simplex nec interpretatorium in illo deo reprehensum, in cetera quae deos uultis translatum, docete etiam qualitatis inter illos esse consortium, ut iure consistat collegium nominis communione substantiae. [7] Porro qeoj ille iam hoc solo quod non sit in promptu, uacat a comparatione eorum qui in promptu sunt et uisui et sensui. [8] Sed sensui satis quod est testimonii ad diuersitatem occulti et manifesti renuntiatio: si elementa palam proposita omnibus, si contra deus nemini, quomodo poteris ex ea parte quam non uidisti, quae uides congredi? [9] Cum ergo non habes con iungere sensu neque ratione, quid uocabulo coniungis, ut coniungas etiam potestate? [10] Ecce enim Zeno quoque materiam mundialem a deo separat, uel sic eum per illam tamquam mel per fauos transisse dicit. [11] Itaque materia et deus duo uocabula, duae res: pro discrimine uocabulorum etiam res separantur, etiam materiae condicio uocabulum sequitur. [12] Quodsi materia non deus, quia sic et appellatio praescribit, quomodo quae sunt in materia id est elementa, dei habebuntur, cum membra a corpore aliena esse non possint?

[13] Sed quid ego cum argumentationibus physiologicis? Sursum mens ascendere debuit de statu mundi, non in in- certa descendere. [14] Rotunda mundo Platonica forma: quadratum eum angulatumque commentum ab aliis, credo, circino rotundo ita collegit, quod sine capite solum credi laborat. [15] Sed Epicurus, qui dixerat: “quae super nos, nihil ad nos,” cum et ipse caelum inspicere desiderat, solis orbem pedalem deprehendit. Adhuc scilicet frugalitas et in caelis agebatur. [16] Denique ut ambitio profecit, etiam sol aciem suam extendit; ita illum orbe maiorem Peripatetici denotauerant. [17] Oro

uos, quid sapit coniecturarum libido? Quid probat tanta praesumptione asseuerationis otium affectatae morositatis eloquii artificio adornatum? [18] Merito ergo Milesius Thales, dum totum caelum examinat et ambulat oculis, in puteum cecidit turpiter, multum inrisus Aegyptio illi: “in terra”, inquit, “nihil perspicuens caelum tibi speculandum existimas?” [19] Itaque casus eius per figuram. philosophos notat, scilicet eos, qui stupidam exerceant curiositatem, in res naturae quam prius in artificem eius et praesidem, in uacuum < > dum habituros.

V. [1] Quin ergo ad humaniorem aliquanto conuertimur opinionem, quae de communi omnium sensu et simplici coniectura deducta uideatur? [2] Nam et Varro meminit eius, creditam propterea dicens elementorum diuinitatem, quod nihil omnino sine suffragio illorum gigni ali prouehi possit ad uitae humanae [et] conseruationem, [3] quando ne ipsa quidem corpora aut animas sufficere licuisset sine elementorum temperamento, quo habitatio ista mundi circulatorum condicionibus foederata praestatur, nisi quod hominum incolatui denegauit enormitas frigoris aut caloris, [4] proptereaque deos credi solem, qui diei de suo cumulet, fruges caloribus expediat et annum stationibus seruet, lunam, solacium noctium, patrocinium mensium; † gubernaculis; [5] item sidera, signacula quaedam temporum ad rurationem notandorum; ipsum denique caelum, sub quo omnia, [in] terram, super quam omnia, et quicquid illorum inter se ad commoda humana conspirat; [6] nec tantum de beneficiis fidem diuinitatis elementis conuenire, sed etiam de diuersis quae tamquam de ira et offensa eorum incidere soleant, ut fulmina, ut grandines, ut ardores, ut aerae pestilentes, item diluuia, item hiatus motusque terrarum; [7] et iure credi deos, quorum natura honoranda sit in secundis, metuenda sit in aduersis, domina scilicet iuuandi et nocendi. [8] Porro si ista sentiuntur in communi conuersatione, non perinde rebus ipsis quibus iuuantur siue laeduntur aut gratias referunt aut querellas intendunt, sed his, sub quorum iure et potestate operatio rerum decurrit. [9] Nam in uoluptatibus quoque non tibiae aut citharae coronam ad praemium adiudicatis, sed artifici qui tibiam et citharam suauitatis temperet ui. [10] Aequae cum quis uoletudine male est, non lanis nec antidotis aut malagmatibus ipsis gratiam meministis, sed medicis, quorum opera atque prudentia remedia proueniunt. [11] Item in aduersis: qui ferro sauciantur, non dolorem ipsum aut lanciam accusant, sed hostem uel latronem, et quos ruina opprimit, non tegulas aut imbrices arguunt, sed uetustatem, sicut et naufragi non petris et fluctibus imputant, sed procellae. [12] Merito : certum enim est, quodcumque fit, ei adscribendum, non per quod fit, sed a quo fit, quia is est caput facti, qui et ut fiat et per quod fiat, instituit (et sunt in omnibus rebus tres tituli isti: quod est, per quod est, et a quo est), quia prius esse qui quid uelit fieri, † et quod possit inueniri. [13] Et ita recte in ceteris agitis auctorem considerantes; at in physicis contra naturam regula uestra, quam in ceteris sapientiam iudicatis, disceditis, auferendo summum gradum auctoris, et quae fiunt, non a quo fieri * *. [14] Ita credere contingit elementorum potestates et arbitria esse quae sunt seruitutes et officia. Nos in ista inuestigatione alicuius artificis intus et domini * *, seruitutes autem contendimus elementorum ex operis eorum, quas facis potestates. [15] Sed dei non seruiunt; ea igitur quae seruiunt, dei non sunt. Aut doceant uulgo fieri, ut de licentia passiuitatis libertas approbetur, de libertate dominatio, de dominatione diuinitas intellegatur. [16] Nam si omnia haec super nos certis curriculis, legitimis decursibus, propriis spatiis, aequis uicibus sub legis instar constituta uoluendis temporibus et exercendis temporum ducatibus occurrere meminerunt, [17] < > ipsa obseruatione condicionum suarum et fide operum et instantia < > uum et cura demutationum, memoria reciprocationum aliquam dominationem sibi praeesse persuadeant uobis, cui apparere uideatur uniuersa negotiatio mundialis perueniens ad humani generis utilitatem < > nem? [18] Non enim potes dicere ea sibi agere ista ac sibi curare nec quicquam hominum causa disponere, cum propterea defendas elementis diuinitatem quod ab illis aut iuuari te aut laedi sentias; nam si sibi praestant, nihil eis debes.

VI. [1] Age iam, conceditisne diuinitatem non modo non seruiliter currere, sed inprimis integre stare neque minui neque intercipi neque corrumpi debere? Ceterum abiit omnis felicitas eius, si quid patitur umquam. [2] Ecce autem et astra intercidunt et intercidisse se attestantur; confitetur et luna, quantum amiserit, cum resumit. [3] Iam maiora eius detrimenta soletis in aquae speculo considerare, ut nihil amplius ullam partem credam, quod magi norunt. Ipse etiam sol saepe defectione temptatus est. [4] Fingite quaslibet rationes caelestium casuum, non uolet deus aut minor fieri aut esse desinere. Viderint igitur humanae doctrinae patrocinia quae coniectandi artificio sapientiam mentiuntur et ueritatem. [5] Num alias natura sic est, ut qui melius dixerit, hic uerius dixisse uideatur? non, qui uerius, is melius? [6] Ceterum cui res examinabitur, uerisimilius utique dicet elementa ista ab aliquo regi quam ultro carpi: igitur non deos, quae sub aliquo. [7] At si in isto erratur, melius est < . . . > simpliciter quam ut physici diligenter. Sedenim si ad mythicum spectes, melius iam in physico mortalitas errat, eis diuinitatem adiudicando quae super hominem putat situ et ui et magnitudine et diuturnitate sentiri: quod enim super hominem, credas deo proximum.

VII. [1] Ceterum ut ad mythicum transeamus, quod poetis deputatur, nescio an tantum < > mediocritati nostrae, an tanti de documentis diuinitatis confirmentur, ut Mopsus Africanus et Boeotus Amphiarus. Delibanda enim nunc est species ista, cuius suo loco ratio reddetur. [2] Interim hos certe homines fuisse uel eo palam est quod non constanter deos illos, sed heroas appellatis. [3] Quid ergo contendimus? Si addicenda mortuis diuinitas erat, non utique talibus. [4] Ecce uos, cum eadem licentia praesumptionis sepulchris regum uestrorum caelum infamatis, nonne probatos quosque iustitia, uirtute, pietate et omni bono eiusmodi consecrationis solacio honoratis, contenti protalibus etiam inrideri peierantes, [5] at e contrario impios, turpes etiam pristinis humanae gloriae praemiis aufertis, decreta eorum, titulos lancinatis, imagines detrahitis, monetam repercutitis? [6] Ille autem conspector omnium, comprobator, immo < . . . > ctor bonorum, tantae indulgentiae suae ordinationem uulgo prostituet, et plus diligentiae atque iustitiae hominibus licebit in distribuendis dignitatibus habere? Mundiore erunt regum et principum comites quam summi dei? [7] Atquin horretis et auersamini uagos, exules, infirmos, debiles, sordide natos, inhoneste institutos; contra incestos, adulteros, raptos, parricidas etiam legibus † exarendis. Ridendum an irascendum sit, tales deos credi quales homines esse non debeant?

fertis nec cauetis ne offendatis eos quorum detractatores honoratis? Sane fides a poetis non exigenda. [14] Nonne, qui dicitis deos post mortem factos, homines confitemini ante mortem? Quid ergo noui, si, qui homines fuerunt, humanis aut casibus aut criminibus aut fabulis polluantur? [15] Non creditis poetis, cum de relationibus eorum etiam sacra quaedam disposueritis? Cur rapitur sacerdos Cereris, si nihil tale Ceres passa est? Cur Saturno alieni liberi immolantur, si ille suis pepercit? [16] Cur Idaee masculus amputatur, si nullus illi fastidiosus adulescens libidinis frustratae dolore castratus est? [17] Cur Herculeum polluctum mulieres Lanuinae non gustant, si non mulierum causa periit? [18] Mentiuntur sane poetae, sed non ideo, quod talia gesserint, ue< > homines † quas defuerint, nec quod non diuinis adscripserint foeditates diuinitatis, cum interim uobis credibilius uisum est deos fuisse, sed non tales, quam tales, sed non deos.

VIII. [1] Superest gentile illud genus inter populos deorum quos libidine sumptos, non pro necessitate ueritatis, docet priuata notitia. [2] Deum ego existimo ubique notum, ubique praesentem, ubique dominantem, omnibus colendum, omnibus demerendum. [3] Atenim cum illi quoque, quos totus orbis communiter colit, excidant probationi uerae diuinitatis, quanto magis isti, quos ne ipsi quidem municipes sui norunt? [4] Nam quae idonea auctoritas praecucurrit eiusmodi theologiae, quam etiam fama destituit? [5] Quanti sunt qui norint uisu uel auditu Atargatim Syrorum, Caelestem Afrorum, Varsutinam Maurorum, Obodan et Dusarem Arabum, Belenum Noricum, [6] uel quos Varro ponit: Casiniensium Deluentinum, Narniensium Visidianum, Atiniensium Numiternum, Asculanorum Anchariam, et quam † praeuerint, Vulsiniensium Nortiam, quorum ne nominum quidem dignitas humanis cognominibus distat? [7] Satis rideo etiam deos decuriones cuiusque municipii, quibus honor intra muros suos determinatur.

[8] Haec libertas adoptandorum deorum quousque profecerit, Aegyptiorum superstitiones docent, qui etiam bestias priuatas colunt, ibes, corcodrillos et anguem suum. [9] Parum est, si etiam hominem consacrauerunt, illum dico quem non iam Aegyptus aut Graecia, uerum totus orbis colit et Afri iurant, de cuius statu quod conici potest, apud nostras litteras, ut uerisimile uidetur, positum est. [10] Nam Serapis iste quidem olim Ioseph dictus fuit, de genere sanctorum; iunior inter ceteros fratres, sed excelsior dignitate ab isdem fratribus per liuorem uenum in Aegyptum datur seruiturus in familia regis

Aegyptiorum Pharaos. [11] A regina minus pudica desideratur, sed quia non obsequebatur, e contrario ab eadem delatus a rege in carcerem datur. [12] Illic somnia quibusdam non perperam interpretatus uim spiritus sui ostendit. [13] Interea rex quoque somniat terribilia quaedam: illi detractantibus quos conuocauerat, ualuit exponere Ioseph, expedita de carcere edocuit, somnium regi aperit: [14] illos boues septem opimissimos diffluentem totidem annorum ubertatem significare, posteriores aequae septem enectos subsequentium septem annorum inopiam praedicare; sapere itaque de recondendis praesidiis in futuram famem de copia priore. [15] Credidit rex: exitus rerum et prudentem et sanctum semper et necessarium probauit; itaque Pharaos uniuersae Aegypto et frumentandae et exinde curandae eum praefecit.

[16] Hunc Serapidem ex suggestu quo caput eius ornatum, uocauerunt; cuius suggestus modalis figura frumentationis eius memoriam obsignat, et curam frugum super caput eius fuisse ipsis spicis, quibus per ambitum notatur, apparet. [17] Propterea et canem, quem apud inferos deputant, sub dextera eius dicauerunt, quod sub manu eius compressa turba Aegyptiorum. [18] (— Et Phariam adiungunt, quam filiam Pharaos deriuatio nominis esse demonstrat. Nam et tunc Pharaos inter cetera honorum et remunerationum filiam quoque in matrimonium ei dederat. —) [19] Sed quia et feras et homines colere susceperant, utramque faciem in unum Anubin contulerunt, in quo naturae condicionisque suae potius argumenta uideri posset consecrasse gens rixosa, suis regibus recontrans, in extraneis deiecta, sane et gula et spurcitia canibus par, par etiam seruitute ipsa.

IX. [1] Haec secundum tripartitam dispositionem totius diuinitatis aut notiora aut insigniora digessimus, ut possit uideri satis responsum de physico genere, de poetico, de gentili. [2] Sed quoniam omnis superstitio non iam philosophorum nec poetarum nec populorum, a quibus tradita est, sed dominantium Romanorum, a quibus occupata est, a quibus auctoritatem sibi extruxit, alia iam nobis ineunda est humani erroris latitudo, immo silua caedenda, quae undique conceptis superstitionum seminibus uitisue ueritatem obumbravit. [3] Sed et Romanorum deos Varro trifariam disposuit in certos, incertos et electos. Tantam uanitatem! Quid enim erat illis cum incertis, si certos habebant? [4] Nisi si Attico stupore recipere uoluerunt: nam et Athenis ara est inscripta: “ignotis deis.” Colit ergo quis quod ignorat? [5] Tum si certos habebant, contenti esse debuerunt nec electos desiderare, in quo etiam inreligiosi deprehenduntur: si enim dei ut bulbi seliguntur, qui non seliguntur, reprobi pronuntiantur.

[6] Nos uero bifariam Romanorum deos recognoscimus communes et proprios, id est quos cum omnibus habent et quos sibi ipsi sunt commenti. [7] Et numquid hi sunt publici et aduenticii dicti? Id eorum arae docent, aduenticiorum ad fanum Carnae, publicorum in Palatio. [8] Quare cum communes dei quam in physico quam in mythico comprehendantur, actum est iam de his sub istis speciebus. [9] De propriis dicere si placet, de Romanis, stupeamus tertium illud genus hostilium deorum necesse est, eo quod nulla gens alia tantum sibi superstitionis inuenerit. [10] Ipsos in duas species dirigimus; alios de hominibus assumptos, alios mente conceptos. [11] Igitur quoniam idem illis color suppetit consecrationis mortuorum, tamquam ob merita uitae, eandem et nos responsionem opponamus necesse est, neminem ex his quoque tanti fuisse.

[12] Patrem Indigentem Aenean crediderunt, militem numquam gloriosum, lapide debilitatum. Quod telum quantum uolgare atque caninum, tanto ignobile uolnus. Sed et proditor patriae Aeneas inuenitur, tam Aeneas quam Antenor. [13] Ac si hoc uerum nolunt, Aeneas certe patria flagrante dereliquit socios, feminae Punicae subiciendus, quae maritum Hasdrubalem, Aeneae timiditate in his supplicanti hosti, non comitata, raptis secum filiis formam et patrem sibi habere non in fugam sapit, sed in ignes ardentis Carthaginis ut in amplexus patriae pereuntis incubuit. [14] Pius Aeneas ob unicum puerum et decrepitem senem Priamo et Astyanacte destitutis? Atquin Romanis magis detestandus, qui pro salute principum et domus eorum aduersus liberos et coniuges et omne pignus suum deierant. [15] Consecrant filium Veneris, et hoc Volcanus sciens patitur et Iuno concedit. [16] Si baiuli parentum in caelo sedent, cur non potius Argiui iuuenes dei habiti, quod matrem, ne in sacris piaculum committeret, plus quam humano more iugales prouexerunt? [17] Cur non magis dea, quae magis pia, illa filia patris in carcere fame defecti uberibus suis educatrix? [18] Quid aliud Aeneae gloriosum, nisi quod proelio Laurentino nusquam comparuit? Rursus forsitan solito more quasi desertor e proelio fugerit.

[19] Romulus aequae post mortem deus. Si quia Urbem condidit, cur non alii usque in feminas urbium auctores? Sane Romulus et fratrem interfecit et alienas uirgines dolo rapuit. Ideo deus, ideo Quirinus, quia tunc parentibus

[20] Quid Sterculus meruit ad diuinitatem? Si agros stercoribus iuuando diligens fuit, plus fimi Augeas conferebat. [21] Si Faunus Pici filius in ius agitabatur mente ictus, curari eum magis quam consecrari decebat. [22] Si Fauni filia pudicitia praecelebat, ut ne conuersaretur quidem inter uiros aut barbaria aut conscientia deformitatis aut rubore insaniae paternae, quanto dignior Bona Dea Penelopa, quae inter tot uilissimos amatores deuersata obsessam castitatem tenere protexit? [23] Est et Sanctus propter hospitalitatem a rege Plotio fanum consecutus: potuit et Vlixes de humanissimo Alcinoos unum amplius deum uobis contulisse.

[11] Tot exemplis et u< > quis non deus affirmari potuit? Quis denique Antinoo controuersiam diuinitatis agitauit, quod decorior Ganymedes aut carior suo amatori? [12] Patet apud uos mortuis caelum, uiam ab inferis ad astra subigitis; passim scorta ascendunt, — ne multum putetis uos praestare regibus uestris!

XI. [1] Non tamen contenti eos deos asseuerare, qui uisi retro, auditi contrectatique sunt, quorum effigies descriptae, negotia digesta, memoria propagata est, [2] umbras aliquas incorporales, inanimales et nomina de rebus efflagitantes deos sanciunt, diuidentes omnem statum hominis singulis potestatibus ab ipso quidem uteri conceptu, [3] ut sit deus Conseuius quidam, qui con< >nibus concubitalibus praesit, et Fluiuionia, quae infan-tem in utero nutriat; [4] hinc Vitumnus et Sentinus, per quem uiuiscat infans et sentiat primum; dehinc Diespiter qui puerum perducit ad partum [5] cum primig. > et Candelifera, quoniam ad candelae lumina pariebant, et quae < > < >us dictae. [6] Peruerse natos < > recte uero Prosae Carmentis esse prouinciam [7] > et ab effatu Farinus, et alius a loquendo >uem ad cauendum subministrat < > rix et Albana et una Runcinia. Mirum < > non esse prouisos! [8] Exinde et primi cibi sumendi potionisque capiendae Potina et Edula, et statuendi infantis Statina. [9] Ab adeundo Adeona, abeundo Abeona est. Domiducam et habent et deam < > e et malam, item uoluntatis Volumnium Voletamque. [10] Habent et Pauentinam pauoris, spei Veniliam, uoluptatis Volupiam, praestantiae Praestitiam; aequae ab actu Peragenorem, a consiliis Consum. [11] Est et Iuuenta nouorum togatorum, uirorum iam Fortuna barbata. [12] Si de nuptialibus disseram, Afferenda est ab afferendis dotibus ordinata; sunt, pro pudor! et Mutunus et Tutunus et dea Pertunda et Subigus et Prema mater. [13] < > parcite, dei impudentes: luctantibus sponsis nemo interuenit; ipsi, quorum uotum est, foris gaudentes erubescunt.

XII. [1] Et quonam usque deos < >, quia disserendum, quales deos receperitis? Quantum uobis erubescendum? Rideam uanitatem an exprobrem caecitatem? Est admodum < >ponam. [2] Quot deos et quos utique producam? Maiores an et minores? ueteres an et nouicios? mares an et feminas? caelibes an et legitime nuptos? artifices an et inertes? rusticos an et urbanos? ciues an et peregrinos? [3] Tot enim familiae, tot nationes census bona fide quaerunt, ut dispici et distinguere describique non possint. [4] At quanto diffusa res est, tanto substringenda nobis erit, et ideo, qui in ista specie unum tuemur propositum demonstrandi illos omnes homines fuisse (— non quidem ut cognoscatis, nam quasi obliti agitis), compendio † ab ipsa dispiciendi rationem summam originem generis illorum retractando. Origo enim totius posteritatis. [5] Ea origo deorum uestrorum Saturno, ut opinor, signatur. Neque enim si Varro antiquissimos deos Iouem, Iunonem et Mineruam refert, nobis excidisse debet omnem patrem filiis antiquiorem, tam Saturnum Ioue quam Caelum Saturno; de Caelo enim et Terra Saturnus.

[6] Et tamen Caeli et Terrae originem omitto; erant undeunde, caelibes diu et orbi, antequam mariti et parentes: longo scilicet aevo crescendum illis fuit ad tantam proceritatem! [7] Denique simul coepit et Caelo uox inolescere et ubera Terrae lapilliscere, faciunt nuptias inter se: credo, aut Caelum descendit ad sponsam aut Terra ascendit ad sponsum. [8] Concepit tamen Terra de Caelo et peperit illa qeoj a!deoj Saturnum, mira ratione: utri parentum similis? [9] Sed etsi peperit, certe ante Saturnum neminem procreauerunt nisi unam post Saturnum Opem; exinde de subole cessatum est. [10] Nam Saturnus quidem Caelum castrauit dormientem (— legimus Caelum genere masculino: ceterum quomodo pater nisi masculinus? [11] Sed et unde ad castrandum falx illi, hoc sane aevo ? Nondum enim Vulcanus artifex ferri. —), Terra uero orbata aspernata est, etsi adhuc iuuenili aetate, alii nubere. [12] “Sed nec habebat Caelo potiore.” Quam tamen nisi illam Mare amplectitur? Sed olet salsuginem: dulcibus est aquis assueta.

[13] Ita Saturnus unicus masculus Caeli atque Terrae. Sed ipse pubescens sorori suae iungitur: nondum leges quae incesta prohiberent, nec quae parricidium plecterent. [14] Itaque filios uirili sexu deuorabat: melius ipse quam lupi, si exponeret! Timebat scilicet, ne quis illorum de paterna falce didicisset. [15] Nato mox et abalienato Ioue saxum infantis ementiti deglutiuit. Hoc ingenio diu securus tandem filio quem non digesserat, in tenebris adulto oppressus regnoque priuatus est. [16] Hunc uobis patriarcham deorum Caelum et Terra poetis obstetricantibus procreauerunt. [17] Sed eleganter quidam sibi uidentur physiologice per allegoricam argumentationem de Saturno interpretari tempus esse, et ideo Caelum et Terram parentes, ut et ipsos origini nullos, et ideo falcatum quia tempore omnia dirimantur, et ideo uoratore suorum quod omnia ex se edita in semetipsum consumat. Nominis quoque testimonium compellunt: Kro&non dictum Graece ut Xro&non. [18] Aequae Latini uocabuli a sationibus rationem deducunt, qui eum procreatorem coniectant, per eum seminalia caeli in terram deferri. [19] Opem adiungunt, quod opem uiuendi semina conferant, tum et quod opere semina euadant. [20] Quae, oro, huius translationis ratio? Nempe uelim exponas. Aut Saturnus fuit aut tempus. Quomodo Saturnus, si tempus? Si Saturnus, quomodo tempus? Vtrumque enim non potes corporale et incorporale in eo existimare. [21] Quid autem prohibuit tempus coli in sua qualitate, non in fabulis hominis, aut fabulam hominis in sua specie, non in temporibus prodi? [22] Quid sibi uult intellectio ista, nisi foedas materias mentitis argumentationibus colorare? [23] Saturnum neque ideo, quia dicis hominem, uis tempus, aut dum eum tempus facis, iam nec hominem uis fuisse. [24] > omnino Saturnus in terris humanae qualitatis apud ueteres memorias recensetur. Potest incorporaliter fingi quoduis quod non fuerit omnino; uacat fingendi locus, ubi ueritas est. [25] Cum autem Saturnum constat uixisse, frustra demutatis: non conceditur uobis quem non negabitis uixisse, negare fuisse hominem, qui neque deus neque tempus defendi potest.

[26] Exstat apud litteras uestras usquequaque Saturni census. Legimus apud Cassium Seuerum, apud Cornelios Nepotem et Tacitum, apud Graecos quoque Diodorum, quique alii antiquitatum canos collegerunt. [27] Nec fideliora uestigia eius quam in ipsa Italia signata sunt. Nam post plurimas terras et Attica hospitia Italiae uel, ut tunc uocabatur, Oenotriae consedit, exceptus ab Iano siue Iane, ut Salii uocant. [28] Mons quem coluerat, Saturnius dictus, urbs quam depalauerat, Saturnia usque nunc est; tota denique Italia de Saturno uocabatur. [29] Tali teste terra, quae nunc dominatur orbi, etiamsi de origine Saturni dubitatur, de actu tamen constat hominem illum fuisse. [30] Ita si homo Saturnus, procul dubio de homine, immo quia homo, non utique de Caelo atque Terra, sed cui parentes ignoti quidam, facile fuit illum eorum filium dici, quorum possumus omnes uideri. [31] Quis enim non caelum ac terram patrem ac matrem uenerationis gratia appellet? An de consuetudine humana, qua ignoti quique ex inopi nato apparentes de caelo aduenisse dicuntur? [32] Proinde Saturnum, cum esset peregrinus, repentino ubique inoleuit caelitem dici; nam et uolgo generis incertos terrae filios iactitamus. [33] Nihil allego de statu antiquitatis, quo adeo rudes tunc agebant et oculi et mentes hominum, ut cuius libet noui uiri aspectu quasi diuino commouerentur, nedum et regis, et quidem primi.

satiata primordiorum disputatione, nec praetermittam potiora testimonia diuinarum litterarum, quibus fides pro antiquitate superiore debetur. [35] Ante enim Sibylla quam omnis litteratura uestra, illa scilicet Sibylla ueri Dei uera uates, de cuius uocabula daemoniorum uatibus induistis. [36] Ea senario uersu in hunc sensum de Saturni prosapia et rebus eius exponit: “Decima,” inquit, “genitura hominum, ex quo cataclysmus prioribus accidit, regnauit Saturnus et Titan et Iapetus, Terrae et Caeli fortissimi filii.” [37] Si qua ergo uel uestris auctoribus litterisue uestris superioribus, sed idcirco magis proximis, quoniam illius aetatis, fides adiacet, satis de Saturno et prosapia eius probatum est homines fuisse. [38] Tenemus compendium in ceteros originis praescriptionem, ne per singulos euagemur. Qualitas posteritatis a principibus generis ostenditur, mortalia de mortalibus, terrena de terrenis; [39] gradus ad gradus comparantur; nuptiae, conceptus, natiuitates concurrunt; patriae sedes regna monumenta < >. Qui natos non possunt negare, mortuos credant; qui mortuos confitentur, deos nonputent!

XIII. [1] Sedenim manifestis uis sua adsistit. Quos a primordio possunt non < . . . > rere < > diuinitatem, affirmando illos post mortem deos factos, ut Varro, et qui cum eo somniauerunt. [2] Hic igitur consisto: si sunt allekti dei uestri in hoc nomen et numen, ut in ordinem senatorium, < > str < > concedatis iam necesse est, esse aliquem summum dominatorem habentem allegendi potestatem et quasi Caesarem: neque quisquam aliis praestare potest in quo non ipse dominetur; [3] (Ceterum si potuerunt deos sese facere post mortem, cur ergo deterioris condicionis ab initio esse uoluerunt?) [4] Aut si nemo est qui deos faceret, quomodo facti dicentur qui non nisi ab alio fieri potuissent? Ita nullus datur uobis renuendi locus esse mancipem quendam diuinitatis.

[5] Perspiciamus itaque causas allegendae mortalitatis in caelum. Harum duplicem rationem, credo, proferetis. [6] Aut enim ille, quisquis id praestans, facit ut habeat uel amminicula uel munimenta uel etiam ornamenta fastigii sui, aut meritorum necessitate conferens dignis quibusque. [7] Aliud quid suspicare non datur: nemo quid largiendo alicui aut non sua aut illius causa facit. [8] Sed non potest competere numini, ut sit tanta ei potestas, ut scilicet de mortuis deos faciat, et si tanta humanitas inrogetur, quia egeat opera uel etiam munimento quorundam et quidem mortuorum, † quo mirum, cum alios ab initio sibi immortales instituere potuisset? [9] Nec diutius de > tus

conquiret, qui humana diuinis comparauit. Sane quae posterior opinio est, discuti debet, si deus reminiscencia meritorum < > contributa, [10] si pristinis uiris caelum ob merita patuit, recogitandum, quod exinde nemo dignus eo honore fuit. Nisi si capere iam locus non potest: tantis uidelicet < > a meruerit antiquitas. [11] Ergo an meruerit retractemus. Qui ait meruisse, proponat ipsius merita. [12] Si quid incuna < > litatis ualent ad suffragium diuinitatis, incesto commaculatos Opem et Saturnum fratres recepistis. [13] Furtius infans Iuppiter uester, indignus et tecto et ubere humano, merito quem Cretae nutrix tam mala manebat. [14] Adultus denique qualemcumque genitorem pellit, felicissimum regem, aurei scilicet saeculi, sub quo laboris inopiae < > ae pax quiescebat, sub quo

[15] “Sed oderat patrem incestum, eius < > castratorem.” Ecce autem et ipse cum sorore miscetur, ut huic primum illud dictum putem: tou~ patroj to paiidi/on. Tam pius pater quam pius filius! [16] Quodsi iam tunc legibus ageretur, in duos culleos diuidi Iouem decuit! Post haec quid dubitaret libidine ab incesto corroborata in leuiora, id est adulteria se et stupra diffundere? [17] De quo poetica sic lusitauit, quomodo cum in libello de fugitio palam factum, solemus et operam eius percontandi aliorum abusui nundinare, [18] modo in pretia luxuriae eum figurando, quippe qui bouem aut pretium bouis pensauerit, et imbrem aureum pergulis immiserit, id est aditum pecunia ruperit, modo in similitudines actuum ipsorum, in aquilam qui rapuit, cycnum qui cantauerat.

[19] Adeo non fabulae istae sunt de fa < > sit an non lasciu < > na hominum quos < > emissa iam pridem a fide per incr < >, non est nobis extensius agendum. [20] Si enim et re > pibus et pro seminatoribus suis morata plebs eadem q < > natura, alibi auctoritas exigebat similitudinem morum. < > Quanto deterior, qui non melior? Priuato enim titulo Iouem Optimum dicitis, et est Vergilii “aequus Iuppiter.” [21] Omnes proinde incesti in suos, impudici in extraneos, impii, iniusti: cui nullam insignem infamiam fabula reliquit, is deus fieri non fuit

XIV. [1] Sed quoniam alios seorsum uolunt in diuinitatem ab hominibus receptos, et distingui inter natiuos et factos secundum Dionysium Stoicum, de ista quoque specie adiciam. [2] De ipso quidem Hercule ea est summa responsionis, an dignus caelo et diuinitate; sic enim pro uo< > meritis addicunt diuinitatem. [3] Si ob uirtutem, quod feras constanter confecerit, quid tam memorabile? Nonne ludo puniti, uel etiam ad< > arenariae uilitatis plurimas in unum, et quidem studiosiores bestias conficiunt? [4] Si ob peragratum orbem, quantis et locupletibus dulcis peregrinitas aut philosophis famulatoria mendicitas idem praestitit? Non meminerunt Asclepiaden Cynicum unica uaccula, cuius et dorso uehebatur, et, si quando, ubere alebatur, orbem totum oculis subegisse? [5] Si Hercules etiam ad inferos adiit, quis hoc nesciat, uiam ad inferos omnibus patere? [6] >as plurimas < > ille Pompeius < > qui nec Ostia salua in unum angulum Byrsae Cartha< >re. Quo magis Scipio quam Hercules ob tot caedes diuinitati deputatur. [7] Adicite potius titulis Herculaneis stupra uirginum, uxorum et fascias Omphales et ob decori pueri amissionem foede desertam militiam Argonautarum. [8] Adicite ad gloriam post turpitudinem illam etiam furias eius; adorate sagittas quae filios et uxorem interfecerunt! [9] Qui tunc dignius rogo sese inrogasset prae dolore parricidiorum, qui uxoris ob lasciuiam uenenis circumuentus magis meruit id quam ut honesta morte moreretur, hunc uos de pyra in caelum subleuastis, ipsa facilitate qua et alium igni sed diuino confectum, qui pauca experientiae ingenia commentus dicebatur mortuos ad uitam recurasse. [10] Is, etsi Apollinis filius, tam homo quam Iouis nepos, Saturni pronepos, (— nisi habendus spurius ut incerto patre, ut Arguius Socrates detulit —) quem expositum repertum, turpius Ioue educatum, canino scilicet ubere, hominem fuisse nemo negare potest, fulmine haustus est. [11] Malus Iuppiter Optimus hic rursus est, impius in nepotem, inuidus in artificem! [12] Sedenim Pindarus meritum eius non occultauit: cupiditatem et auaritiam lucri in eo canit iudicatam, qua quidem ille uiuos ad mortem, non mortuos rursus ad uitam, praeuaricatione uenalis medicinae agebat. [13] Dicitur etiam mater eius eodem casu obisse, merit< >m< > bestiam ediderat, isdem quasi scalis ad caelum erupisse. [14] “Et tamen Athenienses sciunt eiusmodi deis sacrificare; nam Aesculapio et matri inter mortuos parentant.” Quasi non et ipsi Thesea suum adorarent, merito deum. Quidni, si conseruatricem suam in litore peregrino dereliquit, eadem obliuione, immo amentia, quae patri causa mortis fuit?

XV. [1] Longum est recensere etiam de illis quos in sidera sepelistis et audaciter deis ministratis. Sic, opinor, digni de caelo Castores et Perseus et Erigona, quemadmodum et Iouis exoletus. Sed quid mirandum? Etiam canes et scorpios et caneros in caelum transtulistis!

[2] Differo de his quos in oraculis co< > et testimonium hic diuini. Qui et tristitiae deos arbitros esse uoltis, ut sit Viduus, qui animam corpore uiduet, quem intra muros cludi non permittendo damnastis, item Caeculus, qui oculos sensu exanimet, item Orbana, quae in orbitatem semina extinguat; et ipsius mortis dea est. [3] Vt cetera transuolem, etiam locorum urbis uel loca deos arbitramini, arcuum Ianum patrem (et diua Arquis est Iana), et montium septem Montinum. [4] < > illi faciunt, qui in isdem locis aras uel aedes habent, prae. in alieno loco aut mercedibus habitant. [5] Taceo Ascensum ab ascensibus, et Cliuicolam a cliuis; taceo deos Forculum a foribus et Cardeam a cardinibus et liminum Limentinum, siue qui alii inter uicinos apud uos numinum ianitorum adorantur. [6] Quid enim magnum, cum et numina sua habeant in lupanaribus, in culinis, et in imo carcere in< >? [7] Cum haec itaque propria his aliisque Romanorum deis, quibus totius uitae officia distribuuntur, taliter ut ceteris deis opus non sit, immo cum priuatim apud Romanos deputentur, quos supra signauimus, nec facile foris cogniti, quomodo ea omnia, quibus illos praeesse uoluerunt, in omni genere humano et in omni gente proueniunt, ubi praesides eorum non modo honore, sed ipsa quoque notitia carent?

XVI. [1] “Sedenim quidam fructus et necessaria uictui demonstraerunt.” Quaeso uos, cum dicitis inuenisse illos, nonne confitemini prius fuisse quae inuenirentur? [2] Cur ergo non auctorem potius honoratis, cuius haec dona sunt, sed auctorem transfertis in repertores? [3] < >que inuenisset, utique auctori gratias egit, utique illum deum sensit, < > ministerium institutoris, a quo et ipse institutus est qui inueniret et ipsum quod inueniretur. [4] Ficum uiridem Romae nemo nouerat Africanam, cum Cato senatui intulit, ut quam prope prouincia hostilis esset, cui subigendae semper instabat, exprimeret. [5] Cerasium Cn. Pompeius de Ponto primus Italiae prouolgauit. Potuerunt et hi nouorum apud Romanos pomorum repertoires meruisse praeconium diuinitatis!

[6] Tam uanum hoc quam etiam propter artium commenta deos haberi. Quibus si comparentur nostrae aetatis artifices, quanto dignius posteris quam prioribus consecratio competisset? [7] Mentior si non in omnibus iam artificiiis antiquitas exoleuit, usu quotidiano ubique instruente nouitatem. Atque adeo quos ob artes sanctificatis laeditis in ipsis artibus et prouocatis in aemulis insuperatis.

XVII. [1] Denique < >toribus suis non negatis omnibus his quos deos antiquitas uoluit, posteritas credidit, > [2] superstitionum praegrandis praesumptio, cui < >rel< > bemus, propterea scilicet Romanos totius orbis domin< >se, quod officiiis religionum meruerint diuturn< > eis praeualeant.

[3] Nimirum Sterculus et Mutunus et Larentina prouexit hoc imperium, in ius Romanum destinatum! [4] Nam peregrinos deos non putem extraneo potius populo quam suo fauisse, sicut fierent quasi desertores et destitutores, immo proditores patrii soli quo nati, adulti, morati sepultique sunt. [5] Ita ne Iuppiter quidem Cretam Romanis fascibus premi sineret, oblitus antrum illud Idaeum Corybantiaque aera et nutricis suae iucundissimum odorem! Nonne omni Capitolio sepulchrum suum praeposuisset, ut illa potius terra regnaret, quae cineres Iouis tegit? [6] Vellet Iuno urbem suam “posthabita Samo” dilectam et utique Aeneadarum ignibus adoleri? Quod sciam:

hic illius arma, hic currus fuit; hoc regnum dea gentibus esse, si qua fata sinant, iam tunc tenditque fouetque.

[7] Misera aduersus fata non ualuit! Nec tamen tantum honoris Romani fati decreuerunt, ut dedentibus Carthaginem sibi, quantum Larentinae!

[8] Si dei isti conferendi inperii potest< > regnauit enim Iuppiter Cretae et Saturnus Italiae et Isis Aegypto < > regnauerunt, quibus etiam operati plerique traduntur? [9] Ita quib< > dominos facit, et dediticius Admeti ciues Romanos imperio auget, dum liberalem cultorem suum Croesum ambiguis sortibus fallendo circumuenit. Num timebat deus uerum constanter praenuntiare regno exc< >?

[10] < > potestate regnandi qu< . . . > uelut in urbes suas

tueri < > potuissent! Si Romanis praestitisse ualuerunt, cur Athenas a Xerxe Minerua non defendit uel cur Delphos de manu Pyrrhi Apollo non eruit?

[11] Seruent urbem Romam qui suas perdiderunt, si hoc religiositas Romana meruit. Atqui non post summum imperium, auctis iam rebus superstitio quaesita est? [12] Etsi a Numa sacra introducta sunt, nondum tamen aut simulacris aut templis res uestras diuina frustabant. [13] Frugi religio et paupertina superstitio; altaria temeraria et uasa sordida, et nidor exilis ex illis, et deus ipse nusquam. Ergo non ante religiosi quam maiores, neque ideo maiores, quia religiosi.

[14] Atquin quomodo ob religionem et deorum profundissimam curam imperium Romanis < > uideri possit, quod laesis potius deis auctum est? [15] Nisi fallor enim, omne regnum uel imperium bellis quaeritur et bellis ampliatur. Porro < >bus et dei urbis. Nam eadem strages et moenium et templorum, eadem caedes et ciuium et sacerdotum, eadem rapina et profanorum et sacrorum. [16] Tot sacrilegia Romanorum quot tropaea, tot deinde dei quot de gentibus triumphus manent. At simulacra captiua et utique senti< >os non amant. Sed quia nihil sentiunt, inpune laeduntur, et quia inpune laeduntur, frustra adorantur. [17] Itaque, quorum fastigium sacrilegio adultum est, non possunt uideri religionis meritis excreuisse, < >nis siue laedendo creuerunt.

[18] Regnum uniuersae nationes suis quaeque temporibus habuerunt, ut Assyrii, ut Medi, ut Persae, ut Aegyptii; est adhuc penes quosdam, et tamen qui amiserunt, non sine religionibus et cultu et † depropitiis deorum morabantur, donec Romanis cessit uniuersa paene dominatio. [19] Sors temporum ita uoluit< >. Quaerite quis temporum uices ordinauit: idem regna dispensat, et nunc penes Romanos eam summam, tamquam pecuniam de multis nominibus exactam in unam arcam congregauit. Quid de ea statuerit, sciunt proximi ei!

De Testimonio animae (On the Witness of the Soul)

Magna curiositate et maiore longe memoria opus est ad studendum, si qui velit ex litteris receptissimis quibusque philosophorum vel poetarum vel quorumlibet doctrinae ac sapientiae saecularis magistrorum testimonia excerpere Christianae veritatis, ut aemuli persecutoresque eius de suo proprio instrumento et erroris in se et iniquitatis in nos rei revincantur. Nonnulli quidem, quibus de pristina litteratura et curiositatis labor et memoriae tenor perseveravit, ad eum modum opuscula penes nos condiderunt commemorantes et contestificantes in singula rationem et originem et traditionem et sententiarum argumenta, per quae recognosci possit nihil nos aut novum aut portentosum suscepisse, de quo non etiam communes et publicae litterae ad suffragium nobis patrocinentur, si quid aut erroris eiecimus aut aequitatis admisimus. Sed suis quidem magistris alias probatissimis [atque lectissimis] fidem inclinavit humana de incredulitate duritia, sicubi in argumenta Christianae defensionis impingunt. Tunc vani poetae, cum deos humanis passionibus et fabulis designant, tunc philosophi duri, cum veritatis fores pulsant. Hactenus sapiens et prudens habebitur, qui prope Christianum pronuntiaverit, cum, si quid prudentiae aut sapientiae affectaverit seu caerimonias despuens seu saeculum revincens, pro Christiano denotetur. Iam igitur nihil nobis erit cum litteris et doctrina perversae felicitatis, cum in falso eis creditur quam in vero. Viderint si qui de unico et solo deo pronuntiaverunt. Immo nihil omnino relatum sit, quod agnoscat Christianus, ne exprobrare possit. Nam et quod relatum est, neque omnes sciunt neque qui sciunt, constare confidunt. Tanto abest, ut nostris litteris annuant homines, ad quas nemo venit nisi iam Christianus. Novum testimonium advoco immo omni litteratura notius, omni doctrina agitatius, omni editione vulgatius, toto homine maius, id est totum quod est hominis. Consiste in medio, anima, seu divina et aeterna res es secundum plures philosophos, eo magis non mentieris: seu minime divina quoniam quidem mortalis ut Epicuro soli videtur, eo magis mentiri non debebis, seu de coelo exciperis, seu de terra conciperis, seu numeris seu atomis concinnaris, seu cum corpore incipis, seu post corpus induceris, undeunde et quoquo modo hominem facis animal rationale, sensus et scientiae capacissimum. Sed non eam te advoco, quae scholis formata, bybliotheccis exercitata, academiis et porticibus atticis pasta sapientiam ructas. Te simplicem et rudem et impolitam et idioticam compello qualem te habent qui te solam habent, illam ipsam de compito, de trivio, de textrino totam. Imperitia tua mihi opus est, quoniam aliquantulae peritiae tuae nemo credit. Ea expostulo quae tecum homini inferis, quae ex temetipsa aut ex quocumque auctore tuo sentire didicisti. Non es, quod sciam, Christiana. Fieri enim, non nasci solet Christiana.

Tamen nunc a te testimonium flagitant Christiani, ab extranea adversus tuos, ut vel tibi erubescant, quod nos ob ea oderint et inrideant, quae te nunc consciam detinent.

II

Non placemus deum praedicantes hoc nomine unico unicum, a quo omnia et sub quo universa. Dic testimonium, si ita scis. Nam te quoque palam et tota libertate qua non licet nobis, domi ac foris audimus ita pronuntiare, Quod deus dederit, et, Si deus voluerit. Ea voce et aliquem esse significas et omnem illi confiteris potestatem, ad cuius spectas voluntatem, simul et ceteros negas deos esse, dum suis vocabulis nuncupas, Saturnum, Iovem, Martem, Minervam.

Nam solum deum confirmas quem tantum deum nominias, ut, et cum illos interdum deos appellas, de alieno et quasi pro mutuo usa videaris. De natura quoque dei quem praedicamus, nec te latet. Deus bonus, Deus benefacit, tua vox est. Plane, adicis, Sed homo malus, scilicet contraria propositione oblique et figuraliter exprobrans ideo malum hominem, quia a deo bono abscesserit. Etiam quod penes deum bonitatis et benignitatis omnis benedictio inter nos summum sit disciplinae et conversationis sacramentum, Benedicat te deus tam facile pronuntias quam Christiano necesse est, at cum in maledictum convertis dictionem dei, perinde dicto omnem super nos potestatem eius consistere secundum nos confiteris. Sunt qui etsi deum non negent, dispectorem plane et arbitrum et iudicem non putent — in quo utique nos maxime reiciunt, qui ad istam disciplinam metu praedicati iudicii transvolamus — sic deum honorantes, dum curis observationis et molestiis animadversionis absolvunt, cui ne iram quidem adscribunt. Nam si deus, inquit, irascitur, corruptibilis et passionalis est: porro quod patitur quodque corrumpitur, etiam interitum potest capere, quem deus non capit. At idem alibi animam divinam et a deo conlatam confitentes cadunt in testimonium ipsius animae retorquendum adversus opinionem superiorem. Si enim anima aut divina aut a deo data est, sine dubio datorem suum novit, et si novit, utique et timet et tantum postremo adauctorem. An non timet quem magis propitium velit quam iratum? Unde igitur naturalis timor animae in deum, si deus non novit irasci? Quomodo timebitur, qui nescit offendi? Quid timetur nisi ira? Unde ira nisi ex animadversione? Unde animadversio nisi de iudicio? Unde iudicium nisi de potestate? Cuius potestas summa, nisi dei solius? Hinc ergo tibi, anima, de conscientia suppetit domi ac foris nullo irridente vel prohibente praedicare, Deus videt omnia, et Deo commendo, et Deus reddet, et Deus inter nos iudicabit. Unde tibi hoc non Christianae? Atque adeo et plerumque et vitta Cereris redimita, et pallio Saturni coccinata, et deae Isidis linteata, in ipsis denique templis deum iudicem imploras. Sub Aesculapio stas, Iunonem in aere exornas, [Minervam calcias furvis galeam formis], et neminem de praesentibus deis contestaris. In tuo foro aliunde iudicem appellas, in tuis templis alium deum pateris. O testimonium veritatis, quae apud ipsa daemonia testem efficit Christianorum!

Enimvero cum daemonia affirmamus esse, sane quasi non et probemus qui ea soli de corporibus exigimus, aliqui Chrysippi adsentator inludit. Et esse et abominationem sustinere execrationes tuae respondent. Daemonium vocas hominem aut immunditia aut malitia aut insolentia aut quacumque macula quam nos daemoniis deputamus ad necessitatem odii inportunum. Satanam denique in omni vexatione et aspernatione et detestatione pronuntias, quem nos dicimus malitiae angelum, totius erroris artificem, totius saeculi interpolatorem, per quem homo a primordio circumventus, ut praeceptum dei excederet, et propterea in mortem datus exinde totum genus de suo semine infectum suae etiam damnationis traducem fecit. Sentis igitur perditorem tuum, et licet soli illum noverint Christiani vel quaecumque apud dominum secta, et tu tamen eum nosti, dum odisti.

expectare diem iudicii proque meritis aut cruciatui destinari aut refrigerio, utroque sempiterno; quibus sustinendis necessario tibi substantiam pristinam eiusdemque hominis materiam et memoriam reversuram, quod et nihil mali ac boni sentire possis sine carnis passionalis facultate et nulla ratio sit iudicii sine ipsius exhibitione qui meruit iudicii passionem. Ea opinio Christiana etsi honestior multo Pythagorica, quae te non in bestias transfert, etsi plenior Platonica, quae tibi etiam dotem corporis reddit, etsi Epicurea gravior, quae te ab interitu defendit, tamen propter suum nomen soli vanitati et stupori et, ut dicitur, praesumptioni deputatur. Sed non erubescimus, si tecum erit nostra praesumptio. Primo enim, cum alicuius defuncti recordaris, misellum vocas eum, non utique quod de bono vitae ereptum sed ut poenae et iudicio iam adscriptum. Ceterum alias securos vocas defunctos. Profiteris et vitae incommodum et mortis beneficium. Vocas porro securos, si quando extra portam cum obsoniis et matteis tibi potius parentans ad busta recedis aut a bustis dilutior redis. At ego sobriam tuam sententiam exigo. Misellos vocas mortuos, cum de tuo loqueris, cum ab eis longe es. Nam in convivio eorum quasi praesentibus et conrecumbentibus sortem suam exprobrare non possis. Debes adulari propter quos lautius vivis. Misellum ergo vocas qui nihil sentit? Quid, quod ut sentienti maledicis? Cuius memoriam cum alicuius offensae morsu facis, terram gravem inprecari et cineri penes inferos tormentum. Aequè ex bona parte cui gratiam debes, ossibus et cineribus eius refrigerium comprecari et ut bene requiescat apud inferos cupis. Si nihil passionis est tibi post mortem, si nulla sensus perseverantia, si denique nihil est tui, cum istud corpus reliquisti, cur mentiris in te, quasi aliquid ultra pati possis? Immo cur in totum times mortem? Nihil est tibi timendum post mortem, qua nec experiundum post mortem. Nam et si dici potest ideo mortem timeri non ultra quid minantem, sed ut commodum vitae amputantem, atquin cum et incommoda longe plura vitae pariter excedant, lucratiōne gravioris partis metum diluit, ne iam timenda est amissio bonorum quae altero bono, id est incommodorum pace, pensatur. Non est timendum quod nos liberat ab omni timendo. Si times vita decedere quia optimam nosti, certe mortem timere non debes quam malam nescis. At cum times, scis malam. Non scires autem malam, quia nec timeres, si non scires aliquid esse post mortem quod eam malam faciat, ut timeas. Omittamus nunc naturalem formam timendi mortem. Nemo timeat quod evadere non potest. Ex altera parte congregior laetioris spei post mortem. Nam omnibus fere ingenua est fama post mortem cupido. Longum est retexere Curtios et Regulos et Graecos viros quorum innumerabilia elogia sunt contemptae mortis propter postumam famam. Quis non hodie memoriae post mortem frequentandae ita studet, ut vel litteraturae operibus vel simplici laude morum vel ipsorum sepulcrorum ambitione nomen suum servet? Unde animae [hodie] affectare aliquid quod velit post mortem et tantopere praeparare quae sit usura post obitum? Nihil utique de postero curaret, si nihil de postero sciret. Sed forsitan de sensu post excessum tui certior sis quam de resurrectione quandoque cuius nos praesumptores denotamur. Atquin hoc quoque ab anima praedicatur. Nam si de aliquo iam pridem defuncto tanquam de vivo quis requirat, prae manu occurrit dicere, Abiit iam et reverti debet.

Haec testimonia animae quanto vera tanto simplicia, quanto simplicia tanto vulgaria, quanto vulgaria tanto communia, quanto communia tanto naturalia, quanto naturalia tanto divina. Non puto cuiquam frivola et ridicula videri posse, si recogitet naturae maiestatem, ex qua censetur auctoritas animae. Quantum dederis magistrae, tantum adiudicabis discipulae. Magistra natura, anima discipula est. Quicquid aut illa edocuit aut ista perdidicit, a deo traditum est, magistro scilicet ipsius magistrae. Quid anima possit de principali institutore praesumere, in te est aestimare de ea quae in te est. Senti illam quae ut sentias efficit. Recogita in praesagiis vatem, in ominibus augurem, in eventibus prospicem. Mirum, si a deo data novit homini divinare? Tam mirum, si eum, a quo data est, novit? Etiam circumventa ab adversario meminit sui auctoris et bonitatis et decreti eius et exitus sui et adversarii ipsius. Sic mirum, si a deo data eadem canit quae deus suis dedit nosse? Sed qui eiusmodi eruptiones animae non putavit doctrinam esse naturae et congenitae et ingenitae conscientiae tacita commissa, dicet potius divinitatis in vulgus opinionibus publicatarum litterarum usum iam et quasi vitium corroboratum taliter sermocinandi. Certe prior animas quam littera, et prior sermo quam liber, et prior sensu quam stilus et prior homo ipse quam philosophus et poeta. Numquid ergo credendum est ante litteraturam et divulgationem eius mutos ab huiusmodi pronuntiationibus homines vixisse? Nemo deum et bonitatem eius, nemo mortem, nemo inferos loquebatur?

Mendicabat sermo, opinor, immo nec ullus esse poterat, cessantibus etiam tunc, sine quibus etiam hodie beator et locupletior et prudentior non potest, si ea, quae tam facilia, tam assidua, tam proxima hodie sunt, in ipsis quodammodo labiis parta, retro non fuerunt, antequam litterae in saeculo germinassent, antequam Mercurius, opinor, natus fuisset. Et unde, oro, ipsis litteris contigit nosse et in usum loquelae disseminare quae nulla umquam mens conceperat aut lingua protulerat aut auris exceperat? At enim cum divinae scripturae quae penes nos vel Iudaeos sunt, in quorum oleastro insiti sumus, multo saecularibus litteris vel modica tantum aetate aliqua antecedant, ut loco suo edocuimus ad fidem earum demonstrandam, et si haec eloquia de litteris usurpavit anima, utique de nostris credendum erit, non de vestris, quia potiora sunt ad instruendam animam priora quam posteriora, quae et ipsa a prioribus instrui sustinebant, cum, etsi de vestris instructam concedamus, ad originem tamen principalem traditio pertineat, nostrumque omnino sit quodcumque de nostris sumsisse et tradidisse contigit vobis. Quod cum ita sit, non multum refert, a deo formata sit animae conscientia an a litteris dei. Quid igitur vis, homo, de humanis sentiis litterarum tuarum exisse haec in usus communis callositatem?

Crede itaque tuis et de commentariis nostris tanto magis crede divinis, sed de animae ipsius arbitrio perinde crede naturae. Elige quam ex his fidem sororem observes veritatis. Si de tuis litteris dubitas, neque deus neque natura mentitur. Ut et naturae et deo credas, crede animae, ita fiet ut et tibi credis. Illa certe est quam tanti facis, quantum illa te facit, cuius es totus, quae tibi omnia est, sine qua nec vivere potes nec mori, propter quam deos neglegis. Cum enim times fieri Christianus, eam conveni. Cur cum alium colat, deum nominat? Cur cum maledicendo spiritus denotat, daemonia pronuntiat? Cur ad caelum contestatur et ad terram detestatur? Cur alibi servit, alibi vindicem convenit? Quid de mortuis iudicat? Quae verba habet Christianorum quos nec auditos visosque vult? Cur aut nobis dedit ea verba aut accepit a nobis? Cur aut docuit aut didicit? Suspectam habe convenientiam praedicationis in tanta disconvenientia conversationis. Vanus es, si huic linguae soli aut Graecae quae propinquae inter se habentur, reputabis eiusmodi, ut neges naturae universitatem. Non Latinis nec Argivis solis anima de caelo cadit. Omnium gentium unus homo, varium nomen est, una anima, varia vox, unus spiritus, varius sonus, propria cuique genti loquela, sed loquela materia communis. Deus ubique et bonitas dei ubique, daemonium ubique et maledictio daemonii ubique, iudicii divini invocatio ubique et conscientia mortis ubique et testimonium ubique. Omnis anima suo iure proclamat quae nobis nec mutire conceditur. Merito igitur omnis anima et rea et testis est, in tantum et rea erroris in quantum et testis veritatis, et stabit ante aulas dei die iudicii nihil habens dicere. Deum praedicabas et non requirebas, daemonia abominabaris et illa adorabas, iudicium dei appellabas nec esse credebas, inferna supplicia praesumebas et non praecavebas, Christianum nomen sapiebas et persequeris.

De Pallio (On the Ascetic Mantle)

I. I. [1] Principes semper Africae, uiri Carthaginienses, uetustate nobiles, nouitate felices, gaudeo uos tam prosperos temporum, cum ita uacat ac iuuat habitus denotare. Pacis haec et annonae otia. Ab imperio et a caelo bene est. Tamen et uobis habitus aliter olim, tunicae fuere, et quidem in fama de subteminis studio et luminis concilio et mensurae temperamento, quod neque trans crura prodigae nec intra genua inuerecundae nec brachiis parcae nec manibus artae, sed (nec cingulo sinus diuidere expeditum) beatae quadrata iustitia in uiris stabant. Pallii extrinsecus habitus et ipse quadrangulus ab utroque laterum regestus et ceruicibus circumstrictus in fibulae morsu, humeris acquiescebat.

[2] Instar eius hodie Aesculapio iam noster sacerdotium est. Sic et in proximo soror ciuitas uestiebat, et sicubi alibi in Africa Tyros. At cum saecularium sortium uariavit urna et Romanis deus maluit, soror quidem ciuitas suo pte arbitrio mutare properauit, ut adpulsum Scipionem ante iam de habitu salutasset, Romanum praecoca. Vobis uero post iniuriae beneficium, ut senium non fastigium exemptis, post Gracchi obscena omina et Lepidi uiolenta ludibria, post trinas Pompei aras et longas Caesaris moras, ubi moenia Statilius Taurus imposuit, sollemnia Sentius Saturninus enarrauit, cum concordia iuuat, toga oblata est. Pro, quantum circummeauit, a Pelasgis ad Lydos, a Lydis ad Romanos, ut ab humeris sublimioris populi Carthaginienses complecteretur!

[3] Exinde tunicam longiorem cinctu arbitrate suspenditis, et pallii iam teretis redundantiam tabulata congregatione fulcitis, et si quid praeterea condicio uel dignitas uel temporalitas uestit, pallium tamen generaliter uestrum immemores etiam denotatis. Equidem haud miror prae documento superiore. Nam et arietem (non quem Laberius reciprocicornem et lanicutem et testitrahum, sed trabes machina est, quae muros frangere militat) nemini unquam adhuc libratum illa dicitur Carthago, studiis asperrima belli, prima omnium armasse in oscillum penduli impetus, commentata uim tormenti de bile pecoris capite <se> uindicantis. Cum tamen ultimant tempora patriae et aries iam Romanus in muros quondam suos audet, stupuere illico Carthaginienses ut nouum extraneum ingenium:

Sic denique nec pallium agnoscitur.

II. [1] Sit nunc aliunde res, ne Poenicum inter Romanos aut erubescat aut doleat. Certe habitum uertere naturae totius sollemne munus est. Fungitur et ipse mundus interim iste quem incumbimus. Viderit Anaximander, si plures putat, uiderit, si quis uspiam alius, ad Meropas, ut Silenus penes aures Midiae blattit, aptas sane grandioribus fabulis. Sed et si quem Plato aestimat, cuius imago hic sit, etiam ille habeat necesse est proinde mutare. Quippe si mundus, ex diuersis substantiis officiisque constabit, ad formam eius quod mundus hic est; neque enim mundus, si non ut mundus proinde. Diuersa in unum ex demutatione diuersa sunt. Denique diuersitatis discordiam uices foederant. Ita mutando erit mundus omnis qui et diuersitatibus corporatus et uicibus temperatus.

[2] Nostra certe metatio, quod clausis, uel in totum. Homericis oculis liquet, totum uersiforme est. Dies et nox inuicem uertunt. Sol stationibus annuis, luna modulationibus menstruis uariat. Siderum distincta confusio interdum reicit quid, interdum resuscitat. Caeli ambitus nunc subdiuo splendidus, nunc nubilo sordidus; aut imbres ruunt, et si qua missilia cum imbris; dehinc substillum et denuo sudum. Sic et mari fides infamis, dum et flabris aequae mutantibus de tranquillo probum, de flustris temperatum et extemplo de decumanis inquietat. Sic et terram si recenseas temporatim uestiri amantem, prope sis eandem negare, memor uiridem cum conspicias flauam, mox uisurus et canam. Ceteri quoque eius ornatus quid non aliud ex alio mutant, et montium scapulae decurrendo, et fontium uenae cauillando et fluminum uiae obhumando?

[3] Mutauit et totus orbis aliquando, aquis omnibus obsitus. Adhuc maris conchae et buccinae peregrinantur in montibus, cupientes Platoni probare etiam ardua fluitasse. Sed et enatando rursus in forma mutauit rursus orbis, alius idem. Mutat et nunc localiter habitus, cum situs laeditur, cum inter insulas nulla iam Delos, harenae Samos, et Sibylla non mendax, cum <terra> in Atlantico Libyam aut Asiam adaequans iam quaeritur, cum Italiae quondam latus Hadria Tyrrhenoque quassantibus mediotenus interceptum reliquias Siciliam facit, cum tota illa plaga discidii contentiosos aequorum coitus angustis retorquens nouum uitii maris imbuat, non exspuentis maufragia sed deuorantis.

[4] Patitur et continiens de caelo aut de suo. Aspice ad Palaestinam. Qua Iordanis amnis finium arbiter, uastitas ingens, et orba regio, et frustra ager. At urbes retro, et populi frequentes, et solum audiebat. Dehinc, ut deus censor est et impietas ignium meruit imbres, hactenus Sodoma, et nulla Gomorrha, et cinis omnia, et propinquitas maris iuxta cum solo mortem uiuit. Ex huiuscemodi nubilo et Tuscia Vulsinius pristinos deusta, quo magis de montibus suis Campania speret, erepta Pompeios. Sed absit. Vtinam et Asia secura iam sit de soli ingluuie! Vtinam et Africa semel uoraginiem pauerit, unicis castris fraudatis expiata! Multa et alia huiusmodi detrimenta habitum. orbis nouauere situsque mouere.

[5] Bellis quoque plurimum licuit. Sed piget tristia non minus quara et regnorum uices recensere, quotiens et ista mutauerint iam inde a Nino, Beli progenie, si tamem Ninus regnare primus, ut autumant superiorum profanitas. Ferme apud uos ultra stilus non solet: ab Assyriis, si forte, aevi historiae patescunt. Qui uero diuinas lectitamus, ab ipsius mundi natalibus compotes sumus.

[6] Sed laeta iam malo, quippe et laeta mutant. Denique si quid mare diluit, caelum deussit, terra subduxit, gladius detotondit, alias uersura compensati reddit. Nam et primitus maiorem ambitum terra cassa et uacans hominum, et sicubi aliqua gens occuparat, sibimet soli erat. Itaque colere omnia (si demum intelligis alibi stipantem copiam, alibi deserentem), runcare atque ruspae consuluit, ut inde uelut ex surculis et propaginibus populi de populis, urbes de urbibus per ubique orbis pangerentur. Transuolauere redundantium gentium examina. Scythae exuberant Persas, Phoenices in Africam eructant, Romanos Phryges pariunt, Chaldaeam semen in Aegyptum educatur, dehinc cum inde transducitur, Iudaea gens est. Sic et Herculea posteritas Temeno pariter Peloponnesum occupando producunt; sic et Iones, Nelei comites, Asiam nouis urbibus instruunt; sic et Corinthii cum Archia muniunt Syracusas.

[7] Sed uanum iam antiquitas, quando curricula nostra coram. Quantum reformauit orbis saeculum istud! Quantum urbium aut produxit aut auxit aut reddidit praesentis imperii triplex uirtus! Deo tot Augustis in unum fauente, quot census transcripti, quot populi repurgati, quot ordines illustrati, quot barbari exclusi! Reuera orbis cultissimum huius imperii rus est, eradicated omni aconito hostilitatis et cacto et rubo subdolae familiaritatis conuulso, et amoenus super Alcinoi pometum et Midae rosetum. Laudans igitur orbera mutantem, quid denotas hominem?

III. [1] Mutant et bestiae pro ueste formam; quamquam et pauo pluma uestis, et quidera de cataclistis, immo omni conchylio pressior qua colla florent, et omni patagio inauratior qua terga fulgent, et omni syrmate solutior qua caudae iacent, multicolor et discolor et uersicolor, nunquam ipsa, semper alia, etsi semper ipsa quando alia, totiens denique mutanda quotiens mouenda.

[2] Nominandus est et serpens, licet pone pauum; nam et iste quod sortitus est conuertit, corium et aeuum. Siquidem ut senium persensit, in angustias stipat, pariterque specum ingrediens et cutem egrediens ab ipso statim limine erasus exuuiis ibidem relictis nouus explicat; cum squamis et anni recusantur. Hyaena, si obserues, sexus annalis est, marem et feminam alternat. Taceo cenium, quod et ipse aetatis suae arbiter, serpente pastus ueneno languescit in iuuentutem.

[3] Est et

Quadrupes tardigrada, agrestis, humilis, aspera.

Testudinem Pacuianam putas? Non est. Capit et alia bestiola uersiculum, de mediocribus oppido, sed nomen grande. Chamaeleontem qui audieris haud ante gnarus, iam timebis aliquid amplius cum leone. At cum offenderis apud uineam, ferme et sub pampino totum, ridebis illico audaciam et Graeci iam nominis, quippe nec sucus est corpori, quod minutioribus multo licet. Chamaeleon pellicula uiuit. Caputulum statim a dorso; nam deficit ceruix. Itaque durum reflecti, sed circumspectu emissicii ocelli, immo luminis puncta uertiginant. Hebes, fessus, uix a terra suspendit, molitur incessura stupens et promouet, gradum magis demonstrat quam explicat, ieiunus scilicet semper et in defectus, oscitans uescitur, follicans ruminat, de uento cibus. Tamen et chamaeleon mutare totus, nec aliud ualet. Nam cum illi coloris proprietas una sit, ut quid accessit, inde suffunditur. Hoc soli chamaeleonti datum, quod uulgo dictum est, de corio suo ludere.

[5] Sed arcana ista, nec omnium nosse. Cedo iam de uestro quod Aegyptii narrant et Alexander digerit et mater legit de tempestate Osiridis, qua ad illum ex Libya Ammon facit ouium diues. Denique cura ipsis Mercurium autumant forte palpati arietis mollitie delectatum deglubasse ouicullam, dumque pertemptat quod facilitas materiae suadebat, tractu prosequente filum eliquasse et in restis pristinae modum, quam philyrae taeniis iunxerat, texuisse. Sed uos omnem lanitii dispensationem structuramque telarum Mineruae maluistis, cum penes Arachnen diligentior officinia.

[6] Exinde materia. Nec de ouibus dico Milesiis et Selgicis et Altinis, aut quis Tarentum uel Baetica cluet natura colorante, sed quoniam et arbusta uestiunt, et lini herbida post uirorem lauacro niuescunt. Nec fuit satis tunicam pangere et serere, ni etiam piscari uestitum contigisset; nam et de mari uellera, qua muscosae lanositatis lautiores conchae comant. Prorsus haud latet bombycem [uermiculi genus est], quae per aerem liquando araneorum horoscopis idonius distendit, dehinc deuorat, mox aluo reddere. Proinde, si necaueris, a nemate iam stamina uolues.

IV. [1] Quid nunc, si est Romanitas omni salus, nec honestis tamen modis ad Graios estis? Aut, ni ita est, unde gentium, in prouinciis melius exercitis, quas natura agro potius eluctando commodauit, studia palaestrae, male senescentia et cassum laborantia et lutea unctio et puluerea uolutatio, arida saginatio? Vnde apud aliquos Numidas etiam equis caesariatos iuxta cutem tonsor et cultri uertex solus immunis? Vnde apud hirtos et hirsutos tam rapax a culo resina, tam furax a mento uolsella? Prodigium est haec sine pallio fieri. Illius est haec tota res Asiae. Quid tibi Libya, et Europa, cum xysticis munditiis, quas uestire non nosti? Reuera enim quale est Graecatim depilari magis quam amiciri?

[2] Habitum transferre ita demum culpaeprope est, si non consuetudo, sed natura mutetur. Sat refert inter honorem temporis et religionem. Det consuetudo fidem tempori, natura deo. Naturam itaque concussit Larissaeus heros in uirginem mutando, ille ferarum medullis educatus (unde et nominis concilium, quandoquidem, labiis uacuerat ab uberum gustu), ille apud rupicem et siluicolam et monstrum eruditorem scrupula schola eruditus. Feras, si in puero, matris sollicitudinem patiens; certe iam histriculus, certe iam uirum alicui clanculo functus adhuc sustinet stolam fundere, comam struere, cutem fingere, speculum consulere, collum demulcere, aurem quoque foratu effeminatus, quod illi apud Sigeum strongyla seruat.

Plane postea miles est, necessitas enim reddidit sexum. De proelio sonuerat, nec arma longe. Ipsum, inquit, ferrum uirum attrahit. Ceterum, si post incentiuum quoque puellam persuerasset, potuit et nubere. Ecce itaque mutatio. Monstrum equidem geminum, de uiro femina, mox de femina uir, quando neque ueritas negari debuisset neque fallacia confiteri. Vterque habitus mutandi malus, alter aduersus naturam, alter contra salutem.

[3] Turpius adhuc libido uirum cultu transfigurauit quam aliqua materna formido. Tametsi adoratur a uobis qui erubescendus est, ille scytalosagittipelliger, qui totam epitheti sui sortem cum muliebri cultu compensauit. Tantum Lydiae clanculariae licuit, ut Hercules in Omphale et Omphale in Hercule prostitueretur. Vbi Diomedes et cruenta praesepia? Vbi Busiris et bustuaria altaria? Vbi Geryon ter unus? Cerebris adhuc eorum claua foetere malebat, cum unguentis offenderetur. Vetus iam Hydrae Centaurorumque sanguis in sagittis pumice spiculi excludebatur, insultante luxuria, ut post monstra transfixa coronam forsitan suerent. Ne sobriae mulieris quidem aut uiraginis alicuius scapulae sub exuias bestiae tantae introire potuissent, nisi diu mollitas et euigoratas et exodoratas, quod apud Omphalem balsamo aut telino spero factum. Credo et iubas pectinem passas, ne ceruicem eneruem inureret sciria leonina. Hiatus crinibus infarsus, genuini inter antias adumbrati: tota oris contumelia mugiret, si posset. Nemea certe, si quis loci genius, ingemebat: tunc enim se circumspexit leonem perdidisse. Qualis ille Hercules in serico Omphales fuerit, iam Omphale in Herculis scorto designata descripsit.

[6] Nec tepidior uis uanae quoque gloriae mutandis induiis, etiam uiro saluo. Calor est omnis affectus; uerum cum in affectationem flabellatur, iam de incendio gloriae ardor est. Habes igitur ex isto fomite aestuantem magnum regem, sola gloria minorem. Vicerat Medicam gentem, et uictus est Medica ueste. Triumphalem cataphractem amolitus in captiua sarabara decessit; pectus squamarum signaculis disculptum textu perlucido tegendo nudauit, anhelum adhuc ab opere belli, et ut mollius uentilante serico extinxit. Non erat satis animi tumens Macedo, ni illum etiam uestis inflatior delectasset; nisi quod et philosophi, puto, ipsi aliquid eiusmodi affectant.

[7] Audio enim et in purpura philosophatum. Si philosophus in purpura, cur non et in baxa? Tyrium calciari nisi auro minime Graecatum decet. Atquiri alius et sericatus et crepidam aeratus incessit. Digne quidem, ut bacchantibus indumentis aliquid subtinniret, cymbalo incessit. Quod si iam tunc locorum Diogenes de dolio latraret, non caenulentis pedibus, ut tori Platonici sciunt, <inculcasset>, sed omnino totum Empedoclem in adyta Cloacinarum detulisset, ut qui se caelitem delirarat, sorores prius suas, dehinc homines deus salutaret.

[8] Tales igitur habitus, qui de natura et modestia transferunt, et acie figere et digito destiniare et nutu tradere merito sit. Prorsus, si quis Menandrico fluxu delicatam uestem humi protrahat, audiat penes se quod et comicus: Qualem demens iste chlamydem disperdit? Enimuero iamdudum censoriae intentionis episcynio disperso, quantum denotatui passiuitas offert? Libertinos in equestribus, subuerbustos in liberalibus, dediticios in ingenuis, rupices in urbanis, scurras in forensibus, paganos in militaribus: uespillo, leno, lanista tecum uestiuntur.

planius adeantur, et stolam et supparum et crepidulum et calindrum, ipsas quoque iam lecticas et sellas, quis in publico quoque domestice ac secrete habebantur, eierauere. Sed alius extinguit sua lumina, alius non sua accendit. Aspice lupas, popularium libidinum nundinas, ipsas quoque frictrices, et si praestat oculos abducere ab eiusmodi propudiis occisae in publico castitatis, aspice tamen uel sublimis, iam matronas uidebis.

[10] Et cum latrinarum antistes sericum uentilat et immundiorem loco ceruicem monilibus consolatur et armillas, quas ex uirorum fortium donis ipsae quoque matronae temere usurpassent, omnium pudendorum conscias manus inserit, impuro cruri purum aut mulleolum inducit calceum, cur istos non spectas uel illos item habitus, qui nouitatis uestitu religionem mentiuntur? Cum ob cultum omnia candidatum et ob notam uitae et priuilegium galeri Cereri initiantur; cum ob diuersam affectionem tenebricae uestis et tetrici super caput uelleris in Bellonae montes fugantur; cum latioris purpurae ambitio et Galatici ruboris superiectio Saturnum commendat. Cum ipsum hoc pallium morosius ordinatum et crepidae Graecatim Aesculapio adulantur, quanto tunc magis arguas illud et urgeas oculis, et<si> iam simplicis et inaffectedatae, tamen superstitionis reum? Enimuero cum hanc primum sapientiam uestit, quae uanissimis superstitionibus renuit, tunc certissime pallium super omnes exuias et peplos augusta uestis superque omnes apices et titulos sacerdos suggestus. Deduc oculos, suadeo, reuerere habitum, unius interim. erroris tui renuntiatorem.

V. [1] Tamen, inquis, ita a toga ad pallium? Quid enim, si et a diademate et a sceptro? An aliter mutauit Anacharsis, cum regno Scythiae philosophiam praeuertit? Nulla in melius transgressi sinit signa, est habitus iste quod faciat. Prius etiam, ad simplicem captatellam eius, nullo taedio constat. Adeo nec artificem necesse est qui pridie rugas ab exordio formet et inde deducat in tilias totumque contracti umbonis figmentum custodibus forcipibus assignet, dehinc diluculo, tunica prius cingulo correpta, quam praestabat moderatiorem texuisse, recognito rursus umbone et, si quid exorbitauit, reformato, partem quidem de laeua promittat, ambitum uero eius, ex quo sinis nascitur, iam deficientibus tabulis retrahat a scapulis et, exclusa dextera, in laeuam adhuc congerat cum alio pari tabulato in terga deuoto, atque ita hominem sarcina uestiat.

[2] Conscientiam denique tuam perrogabo, quid te prius in toga sentias, indutumne an onustum? habere uestem an baiulare? Si negabis, domum consequar; uidebo quid statim a limine properes. Nullius profecto alterius indumenti expositio quam togae gratulatur. Calceos nihil dicimus, proprium togae tormentum, immundissimam pedum tutelam, uertim et falsam. Quem, enim non expediat in algore et ardore rigere nudipedem, quam in calceo uincipedem? Magnum incessui munimentum sutrinae Venetiae prospexere perones effeminatos!

[3] At enim pallio nihil expeditius, etiam si duplex, quod Cratetis. Mora nusquam uestiendo imponitur; quippe tota molitio eius operire est solutum. Id uno circumiectu licet, et quidem nusquam inhumano; ita omnia hominis simul contegit. Humerum uolens exponit uel includit, ceteroquin humero adhaeret, nihil circumfulcit, nihil circumstringit, nihil de tabularum fide laborat, facile sese regit, facile reficit; etiam cum exponitur, nulli cruci in crastinum demandatur. Si quid interulae subter est, uacat zonae tormentum; si quid calceatus inducitur, mundissimum opus est, aut pedes nudi magis, certe uiriles magis quam in calceis.

[4] Haec pro pallio interim, quantum nomine comitiasti. Iam uero et de negotio prouocat. Ego, inquit, nihil foro, nihil campo, nihil curiae debeo; nihil officio aduigilo, nulla rostra praeoccupo, nulla praetoria obseruo; canales non odor, cancellos non adoro; subsellia non contundo, iura non conturbo, causas non elatro; non iudico, non milito, non regno: secessi de populo. In me unicum negotium mihi est; nisi aliud non curo quam ne curem. Vita meliore magis in secessu fruire, quam in promptu. Sed ignauam infamabis: scilicet patriae et imperio reique uiuendum est. Erat olim ista sententia: nemo alii nascitur moriturus sibi. Certe cum ad Epicuros et Zenonas uentum est, sapientes uocas totum quietis magisterium, qui eam summae atque unicae uoluptatis nomine consecrauere.

item qua lances centenarii ponderis Sulla molitur! Vereor sane, ne parua sit ista trutina, cum Drusillanus, equidem seruus Claudii, quingenariam promulsidem aedificat, suprascriptis fortassean mensis necessariam, cui si officina exstructa est, debuit et triclinium.

[7] Taceo Nerones et Apicios, Rufos. Dabo catharticum impuritati Scauri et aleae Curii et uinolentiae Antonii. Et memento istos interim ex multis togatos fuisse; quales apud pallium haud facile. Has purulentias ciuitatis quis eliciet et exuaporabit, ni sermo palliatus?

VI. [1] Sermone, inquit, me suasisti, medicamine sapientissimo. Verum, etsi eloquium quiescat, aut infantia subductum aut uerecundia retentum (nam et elingua philosophia uita contenta est), ipse habitus sonat. Sic denique auditur philosophus dum uidetur. De occurso meo uitia suffundo. Quis non, aemulum suum cum uidet, patitur? Quis oculis in eum potest, in quem mentibus non potest? Grande pallii beneficium est, sub cuius recogitatu improbi mores uel erubescunt.

[2] Viderit nunc philosophia, quid prosit; nec enim sola mecum est. Habeo et alias artes in publico utiles. De meo uestiuntur et primus informator litterarum et primus enodator uocis et primus numerorum harenarius et grammaticus et rhetor et sophista et medicus et poeta et qui musicam pulsat et qui stellarem coniectat et qui uolaticam spectat. Omnis liberalitas studiorum quattuor meis angulis tegitur. Plane post Romanos equites, uerum et accendonis et omnis gladiatorum ignominia togata producit. Haec nimirum indignitas erit: =AB A toga ad pallium =BB!

Sed ista pallium loquitur. At ego iam illi etiam, diuinae sectae ac disciplinae commercium confero. Gaude pallium et exsulta! Melior iam te philosophia dignata est ex quo Christianum uestire coepisti.

Adversus Hermogenem (Against Hermogenes)

I. [1] Solemus haereticis compendii gratia de posteritate praescribere. In quantum enim ueritatis regula prior, quae etiam haereses futuras renuntiauit, in tantum posteriores quaeque doctrinae haereses praeiudicabuntur, quia sunt quae futurae ueritatis antiquiore regula praenuntiabantur. [2] Hermogenis autem doctrina tam nouella est; denique ad hodiernum homo in saeculo, et natura quoque haereticus, etiam turbulentus, qui loquacitatem facundiam existimet et inpuentiam constantiam deputet et maledicere singulis officium bonae conscientiae iudicet. Praeterea pingit <in>licite, nubis assidue, legem dei in libidinem defendit, in artem contemnit, bis falsarius, et cauterio et stilo, totus adulter, et praedicationis et carnis, siquidem et nubentium contagio foetet nec ipse apostolicus Hermogenes in regula perseuerauit. [3] Sed uiderit persona, cum doctrina mihi quaestio est. [Christum] Dominum non alium uidetur agnoscere, alium tamen facit quem aliter agnoscit, immo totum quod est deus aufert nolens illum ex nihilo uniuersa fecisse. [4] A Christianis enim ad philosophos conuersus, de ecclesia in Academiam et Porticum, inde sumpsit [a Stoicis] materiam cum domino ponere, quae et ipsa semper fuerit neque nata neque facta nec initium habens omnino nec finem, ex qua dominus omnia postea fecerit.

II. [1] Hanc primam umbram plane sine lurnine pessimus pictor illis argumentationibus colorauit praestruens aut[em] dominum de semetipso fecisse cuncta aut de nihilo aut de aliquo, ut, cum ostenderit neque ex semetipso fecisse potuisse neque ex nihilo, quod superest exinde confirmet, ex aliquo eum fecisse atque ita aliquid illud materiam fuisse. [2] Negat illum ex semetipso facere potuisse, quia partes ipsius fuissent quaecumque ex semetipso fecisset dominus; porro in partes non deuenire ut indiuisibilem et indemutabilem et eundem semper, qua dominus. Ceterum si de semetipso fecisset aliquid, ipsius fuisset aliquid; omne autem, et quod fieret et quod faceret, imperfectum habendum, quia ex parte fieret et ex parte faceret. [3] <A>ut si totus totum fecisset, oportuisset illum simul et totum esse et non totum, quia oporteret et totum esse, ut faceret semetipsum, et totum non esse, ut fieret de semetipso. Porro difficillimum: si enim esset, non fieret, esset enim; si uero non esset, non faceret, quia nihil esset. Eum autem qui semper sit non fieri sed esse illum in aeuum aeuorum. Igitur non de semetipso fecisse illum qui non eius fuerit condicionis, ut de semetipso facere potuisset. [4] Proinde ex nihilo non potuisse eum facere sic contendit, bonum et optimum definiens dominum, qui bona atque optima tam uelit facere quam sit; immo nihil non bonum atque optimum et uelle eum et facere. Igitur omnia ab eo bona et optima oportuisse fieri secundum condicionem ipsius. Inueniri autem et mala ab eo facta, utique non ex arbitrio nec ex uoluntate, quia si ex arbitrio et uoluntate, nihil incongruens et indignum sibi faceret. Quod ergo non arbitrio suo fecerit, intellegi oportere ex uitio alicuius rei factum ex materia esse sine dubio.

III. [1] Adicit et aliud: deum semper deum <semper> etiam dominum fuisse, nunquam non dominum. Nullo porro modo potuisse illum semper dominum haberi, sicut et semper deum, si non fuisset aliquid retro semper cuius semper dominus haberetur; fuisse itaque materiam semper deo domino. [2] Hanc coniecturam eius iam hinc destruere properabo, quam hactenus propter non intellegentes adiecisse duxi, ut sciant cetera quoque argumenta <tam> intellegi quam reuinci. [3] Dei nomen dicimus semper fuisse apud semetipsum et in semetipso, dominum uero non semper. Diuersa enim utriusque condicio: [sed] deus substantiae ipsius nomen, id est diuinitatis, dominus uero non substantiae sed potestatis. Substantiam semper fuisse cum suo nomine quod est deus; postea dominus, accedentis scilicet rei mentio. [4] Nam ex quo esse coeperunt in quae potestas domini ageret, ex illo per accessionem potestatis et factus et dictus est dominus, quia et pater deus est et iudex deus est, non tamen ideo pater et iudex semper, quia deus semper, nam nec pater potuit esse ante filium nec iudex ante delictum. Fuit autem tempus cum ei delictum et filius non fuit quod iudicem et qui patrem dominum faceret. Sic et dominus non ant<e> ea quorum dominus existeret sed dominus tantum futurus quandoque, sicut pater per filium, sicut iudex per delictum, ita et dominus per ea quae sibi seruitura fecisset. [5] Argumentari tibi uideor, Hermogenes? Nauiter scriptura nobis patrocinator, quae utrumque nomen ei distinxit et suo tempore ostendit. Nam ‘deus’ quidem, quod erat semper, statim nominat: In principio fecit deus caelum et terram, ac deinceps, quamdiu faciebat quorum dominus futurus erat, ‘deus’ solummodo ponit: Et dixit deus et fecit deus et uidit deus, et nusquam adhuc ‘dominus’. At ubi uniuersa perfecit ipsumque uel maxime hominem qui, proprie dominus, et intellecturus erat dominum? et iam cognominaturus, tunc etiam ‘dominus’ nomen adiunxit: Et accepit deus dominus hominem quem finxit; et praecepit deus dominus Adae. Exinde dominus qui retro deus tantum, ex quo habuit cuius esset. Nam deus sibi erat, rebus autem tunc deus cum et dominus. [6] Igitur in quantum putabit ideo materiam semper fuisse quia dominus semper esset, in tantum constabit nihil fuisse, quia constat dominum non semper fuisse. [7] Adiciam et ego propter non intellegentes quorum Hermogenes extrema linea est, et quidem ex penitentia ipsius retorquebo aduersus illum. Cum enim neget materiam natam aut factam, sic quoque inuenio domini nomen deo non competisse in materiam, qua libera fuerit necesse est quae originem non habendo non habuit <aucto>rem, quod erat nemini debens ideoque nemini seruiens. Itaque ex quo deus potestatem suam exercuit in eam faciendo ex materia, ex illo materia dominum deum passa demonstrat hoc illum tamdiu non fuisse quamdiu fuit hoc.

IV. [1] Hinc denique incipiam de materia retractare, quod eam deus sibi comparet proinde non natam, proinde non factam, proinde aeternam, sine initio sine fine proposita<m>. Quis enim alius dei census quam aeternitas? Quis alius aeternitatis status quam semper fuisse et futurum esse ex praerogatiua nullius initii et nullius finis? [2] Hoc si dei est proprium, solius dei erit, cuius est proprium, scilicet quia et si alii adscribatur, iam non erit dei proprium sed commune cum eo cui et adscribitur. [3] Nam etsi sunt qui dicuntur dii siue in caelo siue in terra nomine, ceterum nobis unus deus pater ex quo omnia; quo magis apud nos solius dei esse debeat quod dei proprium est et, ut dixi, iam non proprium esset, quia alterius esset. Quod si deus est, unicum sit necesse est, ut unius sit. [4] Aut quid erit unicum et singulare nisi cui nihil adaequabitur? quid principale nisi quod super omnia, nisi quod ante omnia et ex quo omnia? Haec deus solus habendo est et solus habendo unus est. Si et alius habuerit, tot iam erunt dii quot habuerint quae dei sunt. Ita Hermogenes duos deos infert: materiam parem deo infert. [5] Deum autem unum esse oportet, quia quod summum sit deus est; summum autem non erit nisi quod unicum fuerit; unicum autem esse non poterit cui aliquid adaequabitur; adaequabitur autem deo materia cum aeterna censetur.

V. [1] ‘Sed deus deus est et materia materia est.’ Quasi diuersitas nominum comparationi resistat, si status idem uindicetur! Sit et natura diuersa, sit et forma non eadem, dummodo ipsius status una sit ratio. Innatus deus; an non et innata et materia? Semper deus; an non semper et materia? Ambo sine initio, ambo sine fine, ambo etiam auctores uniuersitatis, tam qui fecit quam de qua fecit. Neque enim potest non et materia auctrix omnium deputari, de qua uniuersitas consistit. [2] Quomodo respondebit? Non statim materiam comparari deo si quid dei habeat, quia non totum habendo non concurrat in plenitudinem comparationis? Quid <d>eo reliquit amplius, ut non totum dei materiae dedisse uideatur? ‘Vel qua’, inquit, ‘et sic habente materia salua sit deo et auctoritas et substantia, qua solus et primus auctor est et dominus omnium censeatur.’ [3] Veritas autem sic unum deum exigit, defendendo ut solius sit quicquid ipsius est. Ita enim ipsius erit, si fuerit solius, et ex hoc alius deus non possit admitti, dum nemini licet habere de deo aliquid. [4] ‘Ergo’, inquis, ‘nec nos habemus dei aliquid.’ Immo habemus et habebimus, sed ab ipso, non a nobis. Nam et dii erimus, si meruerimus illi esse de quibus praedicauit Ego dixi, uos dii estis et Stetit deus in ecclesia deorum, sed ex gratia ipsius, non ex nostra proprietate, quia ipse est solus qui deos faciat. [5] Materia<e> autem proprium facit quod cum deo habet; aut si a deo accepit quod est dei, ordinem dico aeternitatis, potest et credi et habere illam cum deo aliquid et deum illam non esse. Quale est autem cum confitetur illam aliquid cum deo habere et uult solius dei esse quod materiam non negat habere?

VI. [1] Dicit saluum deo esse, ut et solus sit et primus et omnium auctor et omnium dominus et nemini comparandus, quae mox materiae quoque adscribit. Ille quidem deus. Contestabitur deus et iurauit nonnunquam per semetipsum quod alius non sit qualis ipse, sed mendacem eum faciet Hermogenes. Erit enim et materia qualis deus, infecta, innata, initium non habens nec finem. Dicet deus: Ego primus. Et quomodo primus cuius materia coaetanea est? Inter coaetaneos autem et contemporales ordo non est. Aut et materia prima est? Extendi, inquit, caelum solus. Atquin non solus, cum ea enim extendit de qua et extendit. [2] Cum proponit saluo dei statu fuisse materiam, uide ne irrideatur a nobis proinde saluo statu materiae fuisse deum? communi tamen statu amborum. Saluum ergo erit et materiae, ut et ipsa fuerit, sed cum deo, quia et deus solus, sed cum illa. Et ipsa prima cum deo, quia et deus primus cum illa, sed et ipsa incomparabilis cum deo, quia et deus incomparabilis cum illa, et auctrix cum deo et domina cum deo; sic aliquid et non totum materiae habere. [3] Ita illi nihil reliquit Hermogenes quod non et materiae contulisset, ut non materia deo sed deus potius materiae comparetur. Atque adeo cum ea <quae> propria dei uindicamus, semper fuisse sine initio, sine fine et primum fuisse et solum et omnium auctorem, materiae quoque competa<n>t, quaero quid diuersum et alienum a deo ac per hoc priuatum materia possederit per quod deo non compararetur. In qua omnia dei propria recensentur, satis praeiudicant de reliqua comparatione.

VII. [1] Si minorem et inferiorem materiam deo et idcirco diuersam ab eo et idcirco incomparabilem illi contendit, ut maiori, ut superiori, praescribo non capere ullam diminutionem et humiliationem quod sit aeternum et innatum, quia hoc et deum faciat tantum quantus est, nullo minorem neque subiectiorem, immo omnibus maiorem et sublimiorem. Sicut enim cetera quae nascuntur aut finiunt et idcirco aeterna non sunt, semel opposita fini quae et initio, admittunt ea quae deus non capit, diminutionem dico interim et subiectionem, quia nata et facta sunt, ita et deus ideo ea non capit, quia nec natus omnino nec factus est. Et materiae autem status talis est. [2] Igitur ex duobus aeternis ut innatis, ut infectis, deo atque materia, ob eandem rationem communis status ex aequo habentibus id quod neque diminui nec subici admittit, id est aeternitatem, neutrum dicimus altero esse minorem siue maiorem, neutrum altero humiliorem siue superiorem, sed stare ambo ex pari magna, ex pari sublimia, ex pari solidae et perfectae felicitatis quae censetur aeternitas. [3] Neque enim proximi erimus opinionibus nationum quae, si quando coguntur deum confiteri, tamen et alios infra illum uolunt. Diuinitas autem gradum non habet, utpote unica; quae si et in materia erit, ut proinde innata et infecta et aeterna, aderi[n]t utrobique, quia minor se nusquam poterit esse. [4] Quomodo ergo discernere audebit Hermogenes atque ita subicere deo materiam, aeternam aeterno, innatam innato, auctricem auctori, dicere audentem: ‘et ego prima, et ego ante omnia, et ego a qua omnia; pares fuimus, simul fuimus, ambo sine initio sine fine, ambo sine auctore sine deo. Quis me deo subicit contemporali coetaneo? Si quia deus dicitur, habeo et ego meum nomen. Aut ego sum deus et ille materia, quia ambo sumus quod alter est nostrum?’ Putas itaque materiam deo non comparasse quam scilicet subiciat illi?

VIII. [1] Atquin etiam praeponit illam deo et deum potius subicit materiae, cum uult eum de materia cuncta fecisse. Si enim ex illa usus est ad opera mundi, iam et materia superior inuenitur, quae illi copiam operandi subministrat, et deus subiectus materiae uidetur, cuius substantiae eguit. Nemo enim non eget eo de cuius utitur; nemo non subicitur ei de cuius eget ut possit uti: sic et nemo de alieno utendo non minor est eo de cuius utitur, et nemo qui praestat de suo uti non in hoc superior est eo cui praestat uti. Itaque materia ipsa quidem deo non eguit sed egenti se deo praestitit diuitem et locupletem et liberalem minori, opinor, et inualido et minus idoneo de nihilo facere quae uelit. [2] Grande re uera beneficium deo contulit, ut haberet hodie per quae deus cognosceretur et omnipotens uocaretur, nisi quod iam non omnipotens, si non et hoc potens: ex nihilo omnia proferre. [3] Sane et sibi praestitit aliquid materia, ut et ipsa cum deo possit agnosci, coequalis deo, immo et adiutrix, nisi quod solus eam Hermogenes cognouit et haereticorum patriarchae philosophi; prophetis enim et apostolis usque adhuc latuit, puto et Christo.

IX. [1] Non potest dicere deum ut dominum materia usum ad opera mundi, dominus enim non potuit esse substantiae coequalis. [2] Sed precario forsitan usus est, et ideo precario, non dominio, ut, cum ea mala[non] esset, de mala tamen sustinuerit uti, scilicet ex necessitate mediocritatis suae qua non ualebat ex nihilo uti, non ex potestate, quam si[bi] habuisset omnino ut deus in materiam quam malam norat, ante eam in bono conuertisset ut dominus et bonus, ut ita de bono, non de malo uteretur. Sed quia bonus quidem, dominus autem non, ideo qualem habuit tali[a] usus necessitatem suam ostendit cedentem condicioni materiae quam, si dominus fuisset, emendasset. [3] Sic enim Hermogeni respondendum est, cum ex dominio defendit deum materia usum et de re non sua, scilicet non facta ab ipso. Iam ergo malum ab ipso qui est mali, si non auctor, quia non effector, certe permissor, quia dominator. [4] Si uero materia non et ipsius, qua malum dei non erit, de alieno ergo usus aut precario usus est, qua egens eius, aut et iniuria, qua praeualens eius. His enim tribus modis aliena sumuntur, iure beneficio impetu, id est dominio precario ui. Dominio non suppetente eligat Hermogenes qui<d> deo congruat, precario an ui de materia cuncta fecisse. [5] Non ergo melius censuisset deus nihil omnino faciendum quam precario aut ui faciendum et quidem de malo? Nonne etiam si materia optima fuisset, <ae>que indecorum sibi existimasset de alieno, licet bono, facere? Satis itaque gloriae suae causa molitus est mundum, ut debitorem se alienae substantiae ostenderet <et> quidem non bonae!

X. [1] ‘Ergo’, inquis, ‘ex nihilo faceret, ut mala quoque arbitrio eius imputarentur?’ Magna, bona fide, caecitas haereticorum pro huiusmodi

argumentatione, cum ideo aut alium deum bonum et optimum uolunt credi quia mali auctorem existiment creatorem aut materiam cum creatore proponunt, ut <m>al[i]um a materia, non a creatore deducant, quando nullus omnino deus liberetur ista quaestione, ut non auctor mali uideri proinde possit quisquis ille est qui malum, etsi non ipse fecit, tamen a quocumque et undeunde passus est fieri. [2] Audiat igitur et Hermogenes, dum alibi de mali ratione distinguimus, interim se quoque nihil egisse hac sua iniectione. Ecce enim, etsi non auctor, sed assentator mali inuenitur deus qui malum materiae tanto sustinuit de bono ante mundi constitutionem quam ut bonus et mali aemulus emendasse debuerat. [3] Aut enim potuit emendare sed noluit aut uoluit quidem uero non potuit infirmus deus. Si potuit et noluit, malus et ipse, quia malo fauit, et sic iam habetur eius quod, licet non instituerit, qui tamen, si noluisset illud esse, non esset, ipse iam fecit esse quod noluit non esse. Quo quid est turpius? Si id uoluit esse quod ipse noluit fecisse, aduersum semetipsum egit, cum et uoluit esse quod noluit fecisse et noluit fecisse quod uoluit esse. Quasi bonum uoluit esse et quasi malum noluit fecisse; quod non faciendo malum iudicauit, id sustinendo bonum pronuntiauit. Malum pro bono sustinendo et non potius eradicando assertor eius inuentus est, male, si per uoluntatem, turpiter, si per necessitatem. Aut famulus erit mali deus aut amicus, cum materiae malo conuersatus, nedum etiam de malo eius operatus.

XI. [1] Et tamen unde nobis persuadet Hermogenes malam esse materiam? Non enim poterit non malum dicere cui malum adscribit. Nam definimus diminutionem et subiectionem capere non posse quod si<t> aeternum, ut alii coaeterno inferius deputetur. Ita et nunc nec malum dicimus competere illi, quia nec ex hoc subici possit, quod nullo modo potest subici, quia aeternum est. Sed cum alias summum bonum constet esse quod sit aeternum ut deus, per quod solus est deus, dum aeternus est, et ita bonus, dum deus, quomodo materiae inherit malum, quam ut aeternam summum bonum credi necesse est? [2] Aut si quod aeternum est poterit et mali capax esse, poterit hoc et in deum credi et sine causa gestiuit malum a deo transferre, si competit et aeterno competendo materiae. [3] Iam uero si quod aeternum est malum potest credi, inuincibile et insuperabile erit malum ut aeternum, et tum nos frustra laboramus de auferendo malo ex nobis ipsis, tum et deus hoc frustra mandat et praecipit, immo et iudicium frustra constituit deus, iniustitia utique puniturus. Quod si contra <erit> mali finis, cum praeses eius diabolus abierit in ignem quem praepparauit illi deus et angelis eius, prius in puteum abyssi relegatus, cum reuelatio filiorum dei redemerit conditionem a malo utique uanitati subiectam, cum restituta innocentia et integritate conditionis pecora condixerint bestiis et paruuli de serpentibus luserint, cum pater filio posuerit inimicos sub pedes, utique operarios mali — itaque si finis malo competit, necesse est competierit initium <et> erit materia habens initium habendo et finem mali; quae enim malo deputantur, secundum mali statum <materiae> computantur.

XII. [1] Age nunc malam ac pessimam credamus esse materiam, utique natura, sicut deum bonum et optimum credimus, proinde natura. Porro naturam certam et fixam haberi oportebit, tam in malo perseuerantem apud materiam quam et in bono apud deum, inconuertibilem et indemutabilem scilicet, qua, si demutabitur natura in materia de malo in bonum, demutari poterit et in deo de bono [non] in malum. [2] Hoc loco dicet aliquis: ‘Ergo de lapidibus filii Abrahae non suscitabuntur et genimina uiperarum non facie<n>t paenitentiae fructum et filii irae non fient filii pacis, si natura mutabilis non erit?’ Temere ad ista exempla respicies, o homo. Non enim competunt ad causam materiae, quae innata est, ea quae nata sunt, lapides et uiperae et homines; horum enim natura habendo institutionem habere poterit et cessationem. [3] Materiam uero tene semel aeternam determinatam ut infectam, ut innatam et ideo indemutabilis et incorruptibilis naturae credendam, ex ipsius etiam sententia Hermogenis quam opponit, cum deum negat ex semetipso facere potuisse, quia non demutetur quod sit aeternum, amissurum scilicet quod fuerat, dum fit ex demutatione quod non erat, si non esset aeternum; dominum uero aeternum aliud esse non posse quam quod est semper. [4] Hac et ego definitione merito illum reperiui. Materiam aequè reprehendo, cum ex illa mala, pessima etiam, bona atque optima a deo fiunt: Et uidit deus quia bona, et benedixit ea deus, utique quasi optima, non certe quasi mala ac pessima. Demutationem igitur admisit materia, et si ita est, statum aeternitatis amisit; mortua est denique sua forma. Sed aeternitas amitti non potest, quia nisi amitti non possit, aeternitas non est. Ergo nec demutationem potuit admississe, quia si aeternitas est, demutari nullo modo potest.

XIII. [1] Et quaeretur, quomodo ex ea bona facta sint, quae ex demutatione nullo modo facta sunt. Unde in mala ac pessima boni atque optimi semen?

Certe nec bona arbor fructus malos edit, quia nec deus nisi bonus, nec mala arbor bonos, quia nec materia est <nisi> pessima. [2] Aut si dabimus illi aliquid etiam boni germinis, iam non erit uniformis naturae, id est malae in totum, sed iam tum duplex, id est malae et bonae naturae, et quaeretur iterum an in <eadem> bono et malo potuerit conuenire, luci et tenebris, dulci et amaro. [3] Aut si potuit utriusque diuersitas, boni et mali, concurrisset et duplex natura fuisse materiae, amborum ferax fructuum, iam nec bona ipsa deo deputabuntur, ut nec mala illi inputentur, sed utraque species de materiae proprietate sumpta ad materiam pertinebit. Quo pacto neque gratiam bonorum deo debebimus nec inuidiam malorum, quia nihil de suo operatus ingenio; per quod probabitur manifeste materiae deseruisse.

XIV. [1] Nam et si dicatur licet ex occasione materiae, suo tamen arbitrio bona protulisse quasi nactus bonum materiae — quamquam et hoc turpe sit —, certe cum ex eadem etiam mala profert, uel haec utique non de suo arbitrio proferendo seruit materiae aliud non habens facere quam ex malo proferre, inuitus utique, qua bonus, ex necessitate, ut inuitus, et ex seruitute, ut ex necessitate. [2] Quid ergo dignius, ex necessitate eum condidisse mala an ex uoluntate? Siquidem ex necessitate condidit, si ex materia, ex uoluntate, si ex nihilo. Iam enim sine causa laboras, ne malorum auctor constituatur deus, quia et si de materia fecit, ipsi deputabuntur qui fecit proinde quatenus fecit. Plane sic interest unde fecerit ac si de nihilo fecisset nec interest unde fecerit, ut inde fecerit unde eum magis decuit; magis autem eum decuit ex uoluntate fecisse quam ex necessitate, id est ex nihilo potius quam ex materia. Dignius est deum etiam malorum auctorem liberum credere quam seruum; quaecumque potestas ei quam pusillitas competit. [3] Sic et, si[c] concedimus materiam quidem nihil boni habuisse, dominum uero, si quid boni edidit, sua uirtute edidisse, aliae aequae oborientur quaestiones. Primo, si bonum in materia omnino non fuit, non ex materia bonum factum, quod materia scilicet non habuit; dehinc, si non ex materia, iam ergo ex deo factum; si nec ex deo, iam ergo ex nihilo factum, hoc enim superest secundum Hermogenis dispositionem.

XV. [1] Porro si bonum neque ex materia factum est, quia non erat in illa, ut in mala, neque ex deo, quia nihil potuit ex deo fieri, sicut definit Hermogenes, inuenitur bonum iam ex nihilo factum ut ex nullo factum, ut neque ex materia neque ex deo. Et si bonum ex nihilo, cur non et malum? Immo cur non omnia

ex nihilo, si aliquid ex nihilo? Nisi si insufficiens fuit diuina uirtus omnibus producendis, quae aliquid protulerit ex nihilo. [2] Aut si ex materia mala bonum processit, quia neque ex nihilo neque ex deo, sequetur ut ex conuersione processerit materiae contra denegatam aeterni conuersionem. Ita unde bonum constitit, iam negabit Hermogenes inde illud constare potuisse; necesse est autem ex aliquo eorum processerit, ex quibus negauit procedere potuisse. [3] Ceterum si ideo malum non ex nihilo, ne dei fiat de cuius arbitrio uidebitur factum sed ex materia, ut ipsius sit de cuius substantia erit factum, et hic, ut dixi, auctor mali habebitur deus qui, cum eadem uirtute et uoluntate debuisset omnia bona ex materia protulisse aut tantum bona, non omnia tamen bona protulit sed etiam mala, utique aut uolens esse mala, si poterat efficere ne esse<n>t, aut non ualens efficere omnia bona, si uoluit et non fecit, dum nihil intersit per infirmitatem dominus auctor mali extiterit an per uoluntatem. Aut quae fuit ratio ut, cum bona fecisset quasi bonus, etiam mala protulisset quasi non bonus, cum non congruentia sibi solummodo edidit? Quid necesse erat suo opere prolato etiam materiae negotium curare proinde et malum proferendo, solus ut cognosceretur bonus de bono, materia autem ne cognosceretur mala de malo? Plus bonum floruisset sine mali afflatu. [4] Nam et Hermogenes expugnat quorundam argumentationes dicentium mala necessaria fuisse ad inlumptionem bonorum ex contrariis intellegendorum. [5] Ergo aut nec propterea locus mali proferendi fuit aut si qua alia ratio exegit illud induci, cur non et ex nihilo potuerit induci ipsa ratione excusatura dominum, ne mali auctor existimaretur, quae nunc, <cum> de materia operatur [cum], mala excusat? Si excusat, adeo ubique et undique illuc compellitur quaestio quo nolunt qui ipsam mali rationem non examinando nec dinoscendo, quomodo illud aut deo adtribuunt aut a deo separent, pluribus et indignioribus destructionibus deum obiciunt.

XVI. [1] Igitur in praestruccione huius articuli et alibi forsitan retractandi equidem definitio aut deo adscribendum et bonum et malum, quae ex materia fecit, aut materiae ipsi, ex qua fecit, aut utrumque utrique, qui ambo sibi obligantur, qui fecit et de qua fecit, aut alterum alteri; tertius enim praeter materiam et deum non est. [2] Porro si dei erit utramque, uidebitur deus etiam mali auctor; deus autem, ut bonus, auctor mali non erit. Si materiae utrumque, uidebitur materia etiam boni matrix; mala autem in totum materia boni non erit matrix. Si utriusque erit utrumque, in hoc quoque comparabitur deo materia et pares erunt ambo, ex aequo mali ac boni adfines; aequari autem deo materia non debet, ne duos deos efficiat. Si alterum alterius, utique dei bonum et materiae malum, neque malum deo neque materiae bonum adscribetur; et bona autem et mala deus de materia faciendo cum ea facit. [3] Haec si ita sunt, nescio qua possit euadere sententia Hermogenes qui deum, quoquo modo de materia malum condidit, siue uoluntate siue necessitate siue ratione, non putet mali auctorem. Porro si mali auctor est ipse qui fecit, plane socia materia per substantiae suggestum, excusas iam causam materiae introducendae. Nihilominus enim et per materiam deus auctor mali ostenditur, si ideo materia praesumpta est, ne deus mali auctor uideretur. Exclusa itaque materia, dum excluditur causa eius, superest uti deum omnia ex nihilo fecisse constet. [4] Videbimus an et mala, cum apparuerit, quae mala, et an mala interim ea quae putas. Dignius enim de suo arbitrio produxit haec quoque producendo de nihilo, quam de praeiudicio alieno, si de materia produxisset. Libertas, non necessitas, deo competit. Malo uoluerit mala a semetipso condidisse quam non potuerit non condidisse.

XVII. [1] Vnici dei status hanc regulam uindicat, non aliter unici nisi quia solius, non aliter solius nisi quia nihil cum illo. Sic et primus erit, quia omnia post illum; sic omnia post illum, quia omnia ab illo; sic ab illo, quia ex nihilo, ut illi quoque scripturae ratio constet: Quis cognouit sensum domini? aut quis illi consiliarius fuit? aut quem consultatus est? aut uiam intellegentiae et scientiae quis demonstrauit illi? quis tradidit et retribuetur ei? Nemo utique, quia nulla uis, nulla materia, nulla natura substantiae alterius aderat illi. [2] Porro si de aliqua operatus est, necesse est ab ea ipsa acceperit et consilium et tractatum dispositionis, ut uiam intellegentiae et scientiae. Pro qualitate enim rei operari habuit et secundum ingenium materiae, non secundum suum arbitrium, adeo ut et mala pro natura non sua sed substantiae fecerit.

XVIII. [1] Si necessaria est deo materia ad opera mundi, ut Hermogenes existimauit, habuit deus materiam longe digniorem et idoneiorem, non apud philosophos aestimandam sed apud prophetas intellegendam, sophiam suam scilicet. Haec denique sola cognouit sensum domini. Quis enim scit quae sunt dei et quae in ipso nisi spiritus qui in ipso? Sophia autem spiritus: haec illi consiliarius fuit, uia intellegentiae et scientiae ipsa est; ex hac fecit faciendo per illam et faciendo cum illa. Cum pararet caelum, inquit, aderam illi, et cum fortia faciebat super uentos quae sursum nubila, et quomodo firmos ponebat fontes eius quae sub caelo est, ego eram compingens cum ipso. Ego eram, ad quem gaudebat; cotidie autem oblectabar in persona eius, quando oblectabatur, cum perfecisset orbem, et inoblectabatur in filiis hominum. Quis non hanc potius omnium fontem et originem commendet, materiam uere materialium, non fini subditam, non statu diuersam, non motu inquietam, non habitu informem, sed insitam et propriam et compositam et decoram, quali deus potuit eguisse sui magis quam alieni <e>gen[i]s? Denique ut necessariam sensit ad opera mundi, statim eam condit et generat in semetipso. Dominus, inquit, condidit me initium uiarum suarum in opera sua: ante saecula fundauit me, priusquam faceret terram, priusquam montes collocarentur; ante omnes autem colles generauit me, prior autem abyssu genita sum. [2] Agnoscat ergo Hermogenes idcirco etiam sophiam dei natam et conditam praedicari, ne quid innatum et inconditum praeter solum deum crederemus. Si enim intra dominum quod ex ipso et in ipso fuit sine initio non fuit, sophia scilicet ipsius, exinde nata et condita ex quo in sensu dei ad opera mundi disponenda coepit agitari, multo magis non capit sine initio quicquam fuisse quod extra dominum fuerit. [3] Si uero sophia eadem dei sermo est [sensu sophia et], sine quo factum est nihil, sicut et dispositum sine sophia, quale est ut filio dei, sermone unigenito et primogenito, aliquid fuerit praeter patrem antiquius et hoc modo utique generosius, nedum quod innatum <nato> fortius et quod infectum facto ualidius, quia quod, ut esset, nullius eguit auctoris, multo sublimius erit eo quod, ut esset, aliquem habuit auctorem? Proinde si malum quidem innatum est, natus autem sermo dei — eructauit enim inquit sermonem optimum — non scio an a bono malum possit adduci, ualidius ab infirmo, ut innatum a nato. 4. Ita et hoc nomine materiam deo praeponit Hermogenes, praeponendo eam filio — filius enim sermo et deus sermo et Ego et pater unum sumus —, nisi quod sustinebit aequo animo filius eam praeponi sibi quae patri adaequatur.

XIX. [1] Sed et ad originale instrumentum Moysi <e>i prouocabo unde et diuersa pars suspensiones suas ingratas fulcire conatur, ne scilicet non inde instrui uideretur unde oportet. Itaque occasiones sibi sumpsit quorundam uerborum, ut haereticis fere mos est simplicia quaeque torquere. Nam et ipsum principium in quo deus fecit et caelum et terram aliquid uoluit fuisse quasi substantium et corpulentum quod in materiam interpretari possit. [2] Nos autem unicuique uocabulo proprietatem suam uindicamus, principium initium esse et competisse ita poni rebus incipientibus fieri; nihil enim quod fieri habet sine initio esse, quin initium sit illi ipsum dum incipit fieri; ita principium siue initium inceptionis esse uerbum, non alicuius substantiae nomen. [3] Iam nunc si principalia dei opera caelum et terra sunt, quae ante omnia deus fecit suorum esse proprie principium, quae priora sunt facta, merito[que] sic praefatur scriptura[m]: In principio fecit deus caelum et terram, quemadmodum dixisset: ‘In fine[m] fecit deus caelum et terram’, si post uniuersa fecisset. Aut si principium aqua substantia est, erit et finis aliqua materia. [4] Plane licebit etiam substantiarum aliquid principium esse alii rei quae ex ipso sit futura, ut argilla principium testae, ut semen principium herbae, sed cum ita utimur uocabulo principii, quasi originis, non quasi ordinis nomine, adicimus et mentionem ipsius rei specialiter quam uolumus principium alterius rei. De cetero si sic ponamus uerbi gratia: ‘In principio fecit figulus peluim uel urnam’, iam non materiam significabit principium, non enim argillam nominaui principium, sed ordinem operis, quia figulus ante cetera primum peluim et urnam fecit exinde factururus et cetera; ad ordinationem operum principii uocabulum pertinebit, non ad originem substantiarum. [5] Possum et aliter principium interpretari, non ab re tamen; nam et in Graeco principii uocabulum, quod est arch[i]e, non tantum ordinatum sed et potestatum capit principatum, unde et archontes dicunt principes et magistratus. Ergo secundum hanc quoque significationem principium pro principatu et potestate sumetur; in principatu enim et in potestate deus fecit caelum et terram.

XX. [1] Sed ut nihil aliud significet Graeca uox quam principium et principium nihil aliud capiat quam initium, habemus etiam illam initium agnoscere quae dicit: Dominus condidit me in opera sua. Si enim per sophiam dei omnia facta sunt, et caelum ergo et terram deus faciens in principio, id est initio, in sophia sua fecit. [2] Denique si principium materiam significaret, non ita scriptura instruxisset: In principio deus fecit sed ‘Ex principio’; non enim in materia sed ex materia fecisset. De sophia autem potuit dici: In principio. In sophia enim primo fecit in qua cogitando et disponendo iam fecerat, quoniam, et si ex materia factururus fuisset, ante in sophia cogitando et disponendo iam fecerat, quoniam [et si] erat initium uiarum, quia cogitatio et dispositio prima sophiae sit operatio de cogitatu uiam operibus instituens. [3] Hanc et inde auctoritatem scripturae mihi uindico, quod et deum qui fecit et ea quae fecit ostendens unde fecerit non proinde testatur. Nam cum in omni operatione tria sint principalia, qui facit et quod fit et ex quo fit, tria nomina sunt edenda in legitima operis enarratione, persona factoris, species facti, forma materiae. Si materia non edetur, ubi et opera et operae operator eduntur, apparet ex nihilo eum operatum; proinde enim ederetur ex quo, si ex aliquo fuisset operatus. [4] Denique euangelium ut supplementum instrumenti ueteris adhibebo, in quo uel eo magis debuerat ostendi deus ex aliqua materia uniuersa fecisse, quo illic etiam per quem omnia fecerit reuelatur. In principio erat sermo — in quo principio scilicet deus fecit caelum et terram — et sermo erat apud deum et deus erat sermo. Omnia per illum facta sunt et sine illo factum est nihil. Cum igitur et hic manifestetur et factor, id est deus, et facta, id est omnia, et per quem, id est sermo, nonne et unde omnia facta essent a deo per sermonem exegisset ordo profiteri, si ex aliquo facta essent? Ita quod non fuit, non potuit scriptura profiteri et non profitendo satis probauit non fuisse, quia profiteretur, si fuisset.

XXI. [1] ‘Ergo’, inquis, ‘si tu ideo praeiudicas ex nihilo facta omnia quia non sit manifeste relatum de materia praecedenti factum quid, uide ne diuersa pars ideo contendat ex materia omnia facta, quia proinde non aperte significatum sit ex nihilo quid factum.’ [2] Plane retorqueri quaedam facile possunt, non statim et ex aequo admitti, ubi diuersitas causae est. Dico enim, etsi non aperte scriptura pronuntiauit ex nihilo facta omnia, sicut nec ex materia, non tantem fuisse necessitatem aperte significandi de nihilo facta omnia quanta esset, si ex materia facta fuissent, quoniam quod fit ex nihilo, eo ipso dum non ostenditur ex aliquo factum, manifestatur ex nihilo factum et non periclitatur ne ex aliquo factum existimetur, quando non demonstretur ex quo sit factum. [3] Quod autem ex aliquo fit, nisi hoc ipsum aperte declaratur ex aliquo factum illud, dum ex quo factum sit ostenditur, periclitabitur primo uideri ex nihilo factum, quia non editur ex quo sit factum, dehinc, etsi ea sit condicione ut non possit <non factum> uideri ex aliquo, proinde periclitabitur ex alio longe factum uideri quam ex quo factum est, dum non proponitur unde sit factum. [4] Ita si ex nihilo deus cuncta fecisse potuit, <potuit> scriptura non adiecisse illum ex nihilo fecisse; ex materia eum fecisse omni modo debuit edixisse, <si sci>licet ex materia fecisset, quia illud in totu<m> habebat intellegi, et si non significaretur, at istud in dubio, nisi significaretur.

constituit ut, cum quid ex aliquo[quo] fit, et quod fit et unde fit referat. Fructificet, inquit, terra herbam foeni seminantem semen secundum genus et secundum similitudinem et lignum fructuosum faciens fructum, cuius semen in ipso in similitudinem. Et factum est sic. Et produxit terra herbam foeni seminantem semen secundum genus et lignum fructuosum faciens fructum, cuius semen in ipso in similitudinem. Et rursus: Et dixit deus: Producant aquae repentia animarum uiuarum et uolatilia uolantia super terram per firmamentum caeli. Et factum est sic. Et fecit deus cetos magnos et omnem animam animalium repentium, quae prodixerunt aquae secundum genus ipsorum. Item post haec: Et dixit deus: Producat terra animam uiuam secundum genus, quadrupedia et repentia et bestias terrae secundum genus ipsorum. [2] Si ergo ex iam factis rebus alias res deus proferens ostendit per prophetam et dicit, quid unde protulerit — quamquam possimus <unde>unde illas prolatas aestimare, dum ne ex nihilo; iam enim facta erant quaedam ex quibus prolatae uideri possent — , si tantam curam instructionis nostrae insumpsit spiritus sanctus, ut sciremus quid unde processerit, nonne proinde nos et de caelo et de terra compotes reddidisset significando unde ea esset operatus, si de aliqua materia origo constaret illorum, ne tanto magis ex nihilo ea uideretur operatus quanto nihil adhuc erat factum ex quo operatus uideretur? Itaque sicut ea quae de aliquo prolata sunt ostendit unde prolata sint, ita que non ostendit unde prolata sint ex nihilo prolata confirmat. [3] Igitur in principio deus fecit caelum et terram. Adoro scripturae plenitudinem qua mihi et factorem manifestat et facta. In euangelio uero amplius et ministrum atque arbitrum factoris inuenio sermonem. An autem de aliqua subiacenti materia facta sint omnia, nusquam adhuc legi: scriptum esse doceat Hermogenis officina; si non est scriptum, timeat uae illud adicientibus aut detrahentibus destinatum.

XXIII. [1] Sed ex sequentibus argumentatur, quia scriptum sit: Terra autem erat inuisibilis et incomposita. Nam et terrae nomen redigit <in> materiam, quia terra sit quae facta est ex illa, et erat in hoc dirigit, quasi quae semper retro fuerit, innata et infecta, inuisibilis autem et ‘rudis’, quia informem et confusam et inconditam uult fuisse materiam. [2] Has quidem opiniones eius singillatim reuincam sed interim uolo sic ei respondere: Putemus his articulis materiam demonstrari; numquid tamen, quia erat ante omnia, et tale aliquid esse ex ea factum scriptura significat? Atquin nihil tale significat. Fuerit licet materia quantum sibi licet uel potius Hermogeni: potuit et fuisse et tamen nihil deus ex illa fecisse, uel quia non decebat deum alicuius eguisse, certe quia nec ostenditur quicquam ex materia fecisse. ‘Sine causa ergo esset’, inquis. Non plane adeo sine causa. Nam etsi mundus non est factus ex illa, sed haeresis facta est et quidem hoc impudentior, quod non ex materia facta est haeresis sed materiam ipsam potius haeresis fecit.

XXIV. [1] Reuertor nunc ad singulos articulos per quos putauit significatam esse materiam et primo de nominibus expostulabo. Horum enim alterum legimus, quod est terrae, alterum non inuenimus, quod est materiae. Quaero ergo, cum materiae nominatio non extet in scriptura, quomodo ei etiam terrena appellatio adcommo- detur in alio iam genere substantiae nota, quo magis materiae quoque nominatio extitisse debuerat consecuta etiam terrae appellationem, ut scirem terram commune cum materia esse nomen, ne illud ei soli substantiae uindicarem cuius et proprium, in qua magis notum est, uel ne illud in quamcumque aliam speciem, nec utique omni materia<e>, communicare possem, si uellem. Cum enim non extat proprium uocabulum eius rei cui commune uocabulum adscribitur, quanto non comparet cui adscribatur, cuicumque alii poterit adscribi. Ita Hermogenes, et si materiam ostenderet nominatam, deberet eandem probare terram quoque cognominatam, ut ita utrumque illi uocabulum uindicaret.

XXV. [1] Vult igitur duas proponi terras in ista scriptura, unam quam in principio deus fecit, aliam materiam ex qua fecit, de qua dictum sit: Terra autem erat inuisibilis et rudis. Utique si quaeram ex duabus quae cui nomen terrae adcommo- dare debeat, dicetur hanc quae facta sit ex illa ex qua facta est uocabulum deriuasse, quia ueri similis sit ab origine sobolem potius quam originem a sobole uocitari. Hoc si ita est, alia nobis obuoluitur quaestio, an competat terram hanc quam deus fecit ex illa ex qua fecit cognomentum deriuasse. [2] Audio enim apud Hermogenem ceterosque materiarios haereticos terram quidem illam informem et inuisibilem et rudem fuisse, hanc uero nostram proinde et formam et conspectum et cultum a deo consecutam, aliud ergo factam quam erat ea ex qua facta est. Porro aliud facta non potuit cum ea de nomine sociari a cuius condicione descuerat. Si nomen proprium materiae illius fuit terra, haec quae non est materia, aliud scilicet facta, terrae quoque non capit nomen alienum et statu suo extraneum. [3] ‘Sed materia facta, id est haec terra, habuit cum sua origine consortium nominis, sicut et generis.’ Non adeo. Nam et testam, licet ex argilla confectam, iam non argillam uocabo sed testam, et electrum, licet ex auro et argento foederatum, nec argentum tamen nec aurum appellabo sed electum. A cuius habitu quid diuertit, pariter et a uocatu eius recedit appellationis sicut et condicionis proprietate. Quam autem transierit de statu terrae illius, id est materiae, ista terra uel eo palam est quod haec apud Genesis testimonium boni accipit: Et uidit deus quia bonum, illa autem apud Hermogenem in originem et causam malorum deputatur. [4] Postremo si ideo haec terra quia et illa, cur non et materia haec quoque quia et illa? Immo iam et caelum et omnia, si ex materia constant, et terrae et materiae uocari debuerunt. [5] Satis ista de terrae nomine in quo[d] materiam intellegi uoluit; quod nomen unius elementi omnes sciunt natura primum, dehinc scriptura docente, nisi si et Sileno illi apud Midam regem adseueranti de alio orbe credendum est auctore Theopompo; sed et deos multos idem refert.

XXVI. [1] Nobis autem unus deus et una est terra quam in principio deus fecit. Cuius ordinem incipiens scriptura decurrere primo factam eam edicit, dehinc qualitatem ipsius edisserit, sicut et caelum primo factum professa: In principio deus fecit caelum, dehinc dispositionem eius superducit: Et separauit inter aquam quae erat infra firmamentum et quae erat super firmamentum, et uocauit deus firmamentum caelum, ipsum quod in primordio fecerat. Proinde et de homine: Et fecit deus hominem, ad imaginem dei fecit illum, dehinc qualiter fecerit reddit: Et finxit deus hominem de limo terrae et adflauit in faciem eius flatum uitae et factus est homo in animam uiuam. Et utique sic decet narrationem inire: primo praefari, postea proseguere, <ante> nominare, deinde describere. Alioquin uanum, si eius rei cuius nullam praemiserau mentionem, id est materiae, ne ipsum quidem nomen, subito formam et habitum promulgauit, ante enarrat qualis esset antequam an esset ostendit, figuram deformat[i], nomen abscondit. [2] At quanto credibilius secundum nos eius rei dispositionem scriptura subiunxit cuius institutionem simulque nominationem praemisit! Quam denique integer sensus est: In principio deus fecit caelum et terram, terra autem erat inuisibilis et rudis, quam deus scilicet fecit, de qua scriptura cum maxime edixerat! Nam et autem ipsum uelut fibula coniunctivae particulae ad connexum narrationi adpositum est: Terra autem; hoc enim uerbo reuertitur ad eam de qua supra dixerat et alligat sensum. Adeo aufer hinc autem et soluta compago est, ut tunc possit de alia terra dictum uideri: Terra erat inuisibilis et rudis.

XXVII. [1] Sed tu supercilia capitis nutu digiti adcommodato altius tollens et quasi retro iactans ‘erat’ inquis, quasi semper fuerit, scilicet innata et infecta et idcirco materia credenda. [2] At ego sine ullo lenocinio pronuntiationis simpliciter respondebo de omni re posse dici ‘erat’, etiam de ea quae facta, quae nata sit, quae aliquando non fuerit et quae materia non sit. Omne enim quod habet esse, <unde>unde habet, siue per initium siue sine initio, hoc ipso quod est etiam ‘erat’ dicitur. Cui competit prima uerbi positio in definitionem, eiusdem etiam declinatio uerbi decurret in relationem; ‘est’ definitionis caput, ‘erat’ relationis facit. [3] Haec sunt argutiae et subtilitates haereticorum simplicitatem communium uerborum torquentes in quaestionem: magna[m] scilicet quaestio est, si erat terra, quae facta est! Sane discutiendum an ei competat inuisibilem et rudem fuisse quae facta est an ei ex qua facta est, ut eiusdem sit ‘erat’ cuius et quod erat.

XXVIII. [1] Atquin non tantum probabimus istum habitum huic terrae competisse, sed et alii non competisse. Nam si nuda sic materia deo subiacebat nullo scilicet elemento obstruente, siquidem nondum quicquam erat praeter ipsam et deum, utique inuisibilis esse non poterat, quia etsi tenebras uolet in substantia fuisse materiae — cui articulo respondere debemus suo ordine — , etiam homini tenebrae uisibiles sunt — hoc enim ipsum quod sunt tenebrae uide[n]tur — , nedum deo. Et utique si inuisibilis esset, nullo modo cognosceretur qualitas eius. Unde ergo compertus est Hermogenes informem et confusam et inquietam illam fuisse quae ut inuisibilis latebat? Aut si hoc a deo reuelatum est, probare debet. [2] Sic et an rudis dici potuerit expostulo. Certe enim rude illud est quod imperfectum est. Certe imperfectum non potest esse nisi quod factum est; quod enim minus factum est, imperfectum est. ‘Certe’, inquis. Ergo materia, quae facta non erat in totum, imperfecta esse non potuit; quae imperfecta non fuit, etiam rudis non fuit. Initium non habens, quia facta non fuit, caruit et rudimento; initii enim accidens est rudimentum. Terra uero, quae facta est, meruit et rudis dici; statim enim ut facta est, habuit imperfectae locum ante perfectionem.

XXIX. [1] Siquidem omnia opera sua deus ordine consummauit incultis primo elementis depalans quodam modo mundum, dehinc exornatis uelut dedicans. Nam et lumen non statim splendore solis impleuit et tenebras non statim solacio lunae temperauit et caelum non statim sideribus stellisque signauit et ma[te]ria non statim beluis frequentauit et ipsam terram non statim uaria fecunditate dotaui sed primo esse ei contulit, dehinc non in uacuum esse suppleuit. Sic enim et Esaias non in uacuum, ait, fecit illam sed inhabitari. [2] Postea ergo quam facta est, futura etiam perfecta, interim erat inuisibilis et rudis, rudis quidem hoc quoque ipso quod inuisibilis, ut nec uisui perfecta, simul[et] et ut de reliquo nondum instructa, inuisibilis uero, ut adhuc aquis tamquam munimento genitalis humoris obducta, qua forma etiam adfinis eius caro nostra producitur. Nam et Dauid ita canit: Domini est terra et plenitudo eius, orbis terrae, et omnes qui habitant in illa; ipse super maria fundauit eam et super flumina praeparauit eam. Segregatis enim aquis in cauationem sinum emicantior facta est arida quae antehac aquis tegebatur. Exinde itaque et uisibilis efficitur dicente deo: Congregetur aqua in congregatione una et uideatur arida. ‘Videatur’, inquit, non ‘fit’, iam enim facta erat sed inuisibilis usque tunc uideri sustinebat; ‘arida’ autem, quod erat futura ex diuortio humoris, tamen terra: et uocauit deus aridam terram, non materiam. [3] Sic et perfectionem postea consecuta desinit rudis haberi, cum pronuntiat deus: Fructificet terra herbam foeni seminantem semen secundum genus et secundum similitudinem, et lignum fructuosum faciens fructum, cuius semen in ipso in similitudinem, item: Producat terra animam uiuam secundum genus, et quadrupedia et repentia et bestias terrae secundum genus. [4] Impleuit igitur ordinem suum scriptura diuina, quam enim praedixerat inuisibilem et rudem, ei et uisionem reddidit et perfectionem. Non alia autem materia erat inuisibilis et rudis; ergo materia erit postea uisibilis et perfecta. Volo itaque uidere materiam, uisibilis enim facta est; uolo et perfectam eam recognoscere, ut ex illa etiam foeni herbam et ex illa decerpam lignum fructu<osu>m et ex illa animalia usui meo famulentur. Sed materia quidem nusquam, terra uero haec, id est coram. Hanc uideo, hanc perfruor ex quo inuisibilis et rudis esse desiit.

XXX. [1] Sic et sequentia coniecturam Hermogenis instruere uidebuntur, Et tenebrae super abyssum et spiritus dei super aquas ferebatur, quasi et hae confusae substantiae massalis illius molis argumenta portendant. Atquin singillatim definiens tenebras abyssum spiritum dei aquas nihil confusum nec in confusione incertum aestimari facit tam diuisa relatio certorum et distinctorum elementorum. Hoc quidem amplius, cum situs proprios eis adscribit, tenebras super abyssum, spiritum super aquas, negauit confusionem substantiarum quarum demonstrando dispositionem demonstrauit etiam distinctionem. [2] Vanissimum denique ut materia, quae informis inducitur, de tot formarum uocabulis informis adseueretur non edito quid sit illud corpus confusionis, quod unicum utique credendum est, si informe est. [3] Uniforme etenim quod informe est, informe autem quod ex uarietate confusum est: unam habeat necesse est speciem quod non habet speciem, dum ex multis unam habet speciem. Ceterum aut habebat in se species istas materia de quarum uocabulis intellegenda[s] esse<τ>, tenebras dico et abyssum et spiritum et aquas, aut non habebat; si autem habebat, quomodo inducitur non habens formas? si non habebat, <unde> agnoscitur?

XXXI. [1] Sed et illud utique captabitur, de caelo solo et de terra ista scripturam significasse, quod ea[m] in principio deus fecerit, de speciebus autem supra dictis nihil tale, et ideo eas quae factae non significantur ad infectam materiam pertinere. Respondebimus huic quoque scrupulo. [2] Scriptura diuina satis dissereret, si summas ipsas rerum a deo factas commendasset caelum et terram, habentes utique suggestus suos proprios qui in ipsis summis intellegi possent. [3] Suggestus autem caeli et terrae primo tunc fuerunt tenebrae et abyssus et spiritus et aquae. Nam terrae quidem suberat abyssus et tenebrae; si enim abyssus infra terram, tenebrae autem super abyssum, sine dubio et tenebrae et abyssus infra terram. Caelo uero spiritus et aquae subiacebant; nam si aquae super terram, qua[1]e eam texerant, spiritus autem super aquas, pariter et spiritus et aquae super terram; quae uero super terram, ea utique infra caelum. Et sicut terra abyssus et tenebris, ita et caelum spiritui et aquis incubabat et complectebatur. [4] Et ita nouum non est ut id solum quod continet nominetur, qua summale, in isto autem intellegatur et quod continetur, qua portionale. Ecce, si dicam: ‘ciuitas extruxit theatrum et circum, scena autem erat talis et talis, et statuae super euripum, et obeliscus super omnia ferebatur’, quia non et has species edixerim factas a ciuitate, non erunt ab ea cum circo et theatro? An ideo non adieci factas has quoque species, quae inerant eis quae facta praedixeram, et inesse quibus inerant intellegi poterant? Sed uacet hoc exemplum ut humanum; aliud de auctoritate scripturae ipsius arripiam. Fecit, inquit, deus hominem de terra et adflauit in faciem eius flatum uitae et factus est homo in animam uiuam. Faciem quidem eius hic nominat, sed nec ipsam factam a deo dixit, cutem uero et ossa et carnem et oculos et sudorem et sanguinem postea loquitur, quae nec tunc facta a deo significauit. Quid respondebit Hermogenes? Numquid et membra hominis ad materiam pertinebunt, quia non nominatim facta referuntur? An et haec in hominis factitatione censetur? [5] Proinde membra erunt caeli et terrae abyssus et tenebrae, spiritus et aquae. In corporibus enim membra sunt facta, in corporibus et membra sunt nominata. Nullum elementum non membrum est eius elementi quo continetur; omnia autem elementa caelo aut terra continentur.

XXXII. [1] Haec responderim pro scriptura praesenti, quatenus hic solum corporum factitationem commendare uidetur caeli et terrae. Sciit esse qui ultro in corporibus et membra cognoscerent et ideo compendio usa est, prouidit tamen et hebetes et insidiosos qui dissimulato tacito intellectu ipsius quoque membris uerbum factitationis significatorum exigerent. Itaque et propter istos singulas species factas docet aliis in locis. [2] Habes Sophiam prior autem abyssu genita sum dicentem, ut credas abyssum quoque genitam, id est factam, quia et filios facimus, licet generemus. Nihil interest facta an nata sit abyssus, dum initium detur illi, quod non daretur, si materiae subiecta esset. De tenebris uero ipse dominus per Esaïam: Ego qui struxi lucem et feci tenebras. De spiritu aeque Amos: Qui solidat tonitruum et condit spiritum et adnuntiat in homines Christum suum, eum spiritum conditum ostendens qui in terras conditas deputabatur, qui super aquas ferebatur, librator et adflator et animator uniuersitatis, non ut quidam putant ipsum deum significari spiritum, quia deus spiritus - neque enim aquae dominum sustinere sufficerent — , sed eum spiritum dicit de quo etiam uenti constiterunt, ut ait per Esaïam: Quia spiritus a me exiuit et flatum omne ego feci. Item de aquis eadem Sophia: Et quomodo firmos ponebat fontes quae sub caelo, ego eram modulans cum ipso. [3] Cum ergo et eas species probamus a deo factas, etsi in Genesi tantummodo nomina tur sine factitationis mentione, respondebitur fortasse ex diuerso plane factas eas sed ex materia, ut stilus quidem Moysei, Et tenebrae super abyssum et spiritus dei super aquas ferebatur, materiam sonet, ceterae uero scripturae quae ex materia factae sunt species in disperso demonstrent. [4] Ergo sicut terra de terra, ita et abyssus ex abyssu et tenebrae ex tenebris et spiritus et aquae ex spiritu et aquis constiterunt. Et sicut supra diximus, non potuit informis fuisse materia, <si> species habebat, ut et aliae ex ea sint confectae; nisi quod non aliae sed ipsae ex semetipsis, siquidem non capit diuers[it]as fuisse quae iisdem nominibus eduntur, quo[d] iam et operatio diuina otiosa uideri possit, si quae erant fecit, cum generosiora esse<n>t quae non erant facta quam si fierent. [5] Igitur ut concludam, aut materiam tunc significauit Moyses scribens: Et tenebrae super abyssum et spiritus dei super aquas ferebatur — at cum hae species alibi postea demonstrantur factae a deo, debuerunt aequae demonstrari ex materia quam Moyses praemiserat factae — aut si species istas et non materiam significauit Moyses, ubi materia demonstrata sit quaero.

XXXIII. [1] Sed dum illam Hermogenes inter colores suos inuenit — inter scripturas enim dei inuenire non potuerit — satis est quod omnia et facta a deo constat et ex materia facta non constat; quae etiam si fuisset, ipsam quoque a deo factam credidissemus, quia nihil innatum praeter deum praescribentes obtineremus. In hunc usque articulum locus est retractatui, donec ad scripturas prouocata deficiat exhibitio materiae. Expedita summa est: nihil inuenio factum nisi ex nihilo, quia quod factum inuenio non fuisse cognosco. Etiam si quid ex aliquo factum est, ex facto habet censem, ut ex terra herba et fructus et pecudes et figuratio hominis ipsius, ut ex aquis natatiles et uolatiles animae. Huiusmodi origines rerum ex his prolatarum potero materias appellare sed factas a deo et ipsas.

XXXIV. [1] Ceterum omne ex nihilo constitisse illa postremo diuina dispositio suadebit quae omnia in nihilum redactura est. [2] Siquidem et caelum conuoluetur ut liber, immo nusquam fiet cum ipsa terra, cum qua primordio factum est. Caelum et terra praeteribunt, inquit, caelum primum et terra prima abierunt, et locus non est inuentus illis, quia scilicet quod et finit locum amittit. Sic et Dauid: Opera manuum tuarum caeli et ipsi peribunt. Nam et si mutabit illos uelut opertorium et mutabuntur, sed et mutari perire est pristino statui que<m>, dum mutantur, amittunt. Et stellae quidem de caelo ruent, sicut fici arbor cum ualido commota uento acerba sua amittit, montes uero tamquam cera liquescent a conspectu domini, cum surrexerit scilicet confringere terram. Sed et paludes, inquit, arefaciam et quaerent aquam nec inuenient; etiam mare hactenus. [3] Quae omnia et si aliter putauerit [spiritaliter] interpretanda, non tamen poterit auferre ueritatem ita futurorum quomodo scripta sunt. Si quae enim figurae sunt, ex rebus consistentibus fiant necesse est, non ex uacantibus, quia nihil potest ad similitudinem de suo praestare nisi sit ipsum quod tali similitudinem praestet. [4] Reuertor igitur ad causam definientem omnia ex nihilo edita in nihilum peruentura. Ex aeterno enim, id est ex materia, nihil deus interibile fecisset nec ex maioribus minora condidisset, cui magis congruat ex minoribus maiora producere, id est ex interibili aeternum, quod et carni nostrae pollicetur. [5] Cuius uirtutis et potestatis suae hunc iam arrabonem uoluit in nobis collocasse, ut credamus etiam illum uniuersitatem ex nihilo uelut emortuam, quae scilicet non erat, in hoc, ut esset, suscitasse.

XXXV. [1] De cetero uero statu[m] materiae etsi non est retractandum — prius enim erat ut eam esse constaret — , tamen ac si constiterit persequendus est ordo, quo magis eam non esse constet cuius nec reliquus statu<s> consistat, simul ut contrarietates suas agnoscat Hermogenes. [2] ‘Prima’, inquit, ‘facie uidetur nobis incorporalis esse materia, exquisita autem ratione recta inuenitur neque corporalis neque incorporalis.’ Quae est ista ratio recta quae nihil recti renuntiat, id est nihil certi? Nisi fallor enim, omnis res aut corporalis <aut incorporalis> sit necesse est — ut concedam interim esse aliquid incorporale, de substantiis dumtaxat, cum ipsa substantia corpus sit rei cuiusque — ; certe post corporale et incorporale nihil tertium. [3] Age nunc sit et tertium, quod illa recta ratio Hermogeniana compererit quae neque corporalem neque incorporalem materiam facit: ubi est? quale est? quid uocatur? quid describitur? quid intellegitur? Tantum hoc ratio renuntiauit, nec corporalem materiam nec incorporalem.

XXXVI. [1] Sed ecce contrarium subicit — aut alia fortasse ratio ei occurrit — ex parte corporalem renuntians materiam et ex parte incorporalem. Iam ergo ne neutrum sit, utrumque materia censenda est? Erit enim corporalis et incorporalis aduersus renuntiationem rectae rationis illius plane rationem non reddentis sententiae suae, sicut nec alia reddit. [2] Corporale[m] enim materiae uult esse de quo corpor edantur, incorporale uero inconditum motum eius. ‘Si enim’, ait, ‘corpus tantummodo esse<t>, nihil ei incorporale appareret, id est motus; si uero in totum incorporalis fuisse, nullum corpus ex ea fieret.’ [3] Quanto haec rector ratio! Nis[s] i quod, si t<am > rectas lineas duci<s >, Hermogenes, quam ratiocinans, pictor te bardior non est. Qui<s> enim tibi concedit motum in secundam partem substantiae deputare[t], cum substantia res non sit, quia nec corporalis, sed accidens, si forte, substantiae et corpori, ut actus et pulsus, ut lapsus et casus, ita et motus? [4] Nam si ue<l> a semetipso quid mouetur, [f]actus eius est motus, certe pars substantiae non est, sicut tu motum substantiam facis <faciendo partem> materiae incorporealem. Omnia denique mouentur aut [ut] a semetipsis, ut animalia, aut ab aliis, ut inanimalia; tamen nec hominem nec lapidem et corporalem et incorporealem dicemus, quia et corpus habeat et motum, sed unam omnibus formam solius corporalitatis, quae substantiae res est. Si qua incorpora<lia> eis adsunt, aut actus aut passiones aut officia aut libidines eorum, non portiones deputamus. [5] Quo ergo facit portionem materiae in motum disponere, qui non ad substantiam pertinet sed ad substantiae habitum? Quid enim, si immobilem placuisset tibi inducere materiam, numquid immobilitas secunda pars formae uideretur? Sic itaque nec motus. Sed <d>e motu et alibi licebit.

XXXVII. [1] Nunc enim uideo te ad illam rursus rationem reuerti quae tibi nihil certi renuntiare consuevit. Nam sicut nec corporalem nec incorporealem infers materiam, ita nec bonam nec malam adlegas [s]et proinde superargumenta<n>s ‘Si enim’, inquis, ‘esset bona, quae semper hoc fuerat, non desideraret compositionem dei; si esset natura mala, non accepisset translationem in melius nec quicquam compositionis suae adplicuisset illi deus tali natura; in uacuum enim laborasset.’ [2] Verba haec tua sunt quorum te et alibi meminisse oportuerat, ne quid his contrarium inferres. Sed quoniam de mali et boni ambiguitate super materiam in praeteritis aliquid retractauimus, nunc ad praesentem et solam propositionem et argumentationem tuam respondebo. Nec dicam et hic te certum aliquid debuisse pronuntiasse, aut bona<m> aut mala<m> aut tertium aliquid, sed nec hic quod tibi libuit pronuntiasse custodisse. [3] Rescindis enim quod pronuntiasti nec bonam nec malam, quia, cum dicis: ‘Si esset bona, non desideraret componi a deo,’ mala<m> portendis et cum adponis: ‘Si esse[n]t mala natura, non admitteret in melius translationem,’ bonam subostendis. Atque ita et boni et mali adfinem constituisti [ei] quam nec bonam nec malam pronuntiasti. [4] Ut autem et argumentationem qua putasti te propositionem tuam confirmaturum retundam, oppono etiam illud: ‘Si bona fuisset materia semper, quare non desiderasset in melius reformari? Quod bonum, non desiderat aut non optat aut non capit profectum, ut fiat de bono melius? Aeque si mala natura fuisset, quare non potuerit a deo conuerti ut a potentiore, ut ab eo qui lapidum quoque naturam conuertere ualeat in filios Abrahæ?’ [5] Nempe ergo non tantum comparas dominum materiae, sed et subicis, a quo natura[m] materiae deuinci et edomari <in> melius <non> potuisset. Sed et quam hic non uis natura[m] malam, <malam> alibi te confessum negabis.

XXXVIII. [1] De situ materiae id tracto quod et de modo, ut peruersitatem tuam traducam. Subiacentem facis deo materiam et utique locum <adsignas> illi qui sit infra deum. In loco ergo materia; si in loco, ergo intra locum; si intra locum, ergo determinatur a loco intra quem est; si determinatur, habet lineam extremam quam, quantum proprie pictor, agnoscis finem esse omni rei cuius linea extrema est. Non ergo erit infinita materia quae, dum in loco [quo] est, a loco determinatur et, dum determinatur ab illo, extrema eum linea patitur. [2] At tu infinitam facis dicens: ‘Infinita est autem eo quod semper est’. [3] Et si qui discipulorum tuorum uoluerit argumentari, quasi infinitam? aeuo, non modo corporis intellegi uelis, atquin corporaliter infinitam, ut corporaliter immensam et incircumscriptam, sequentia ostendunt. ‘Vnde,’ inquis, ‘nec tota fabricatur sed partes eius.’ Adeo corpore infinita, non tempore est et obduceris corpore <e>am infinitam faciens, cum locum ei adscribens intra locum et extremam loci lineam includis. [4] Sed tamen cur non totam eam formauerit deus non scio, nisi qua ut inualidus aut inuidus. Itaque [ut] dimidium eius quae non tota formata sit quaero, <ut> qualis tota fuerit agnoscam. Debuerat enim deus ut exemplarium antiquitatis ad gloriam operis palam fecisse.

XXXIX. [1] Sit nunc definitiua, sicut rectius tibi uidetur, per demutationes suas et translationes, sit et comprehensibilis, ‘ut quae fabricatur,’ inquis, ‘a deo,’ quia et conuertibilis et demutabilis et dispartibilis — — ‘Demutationes enim eius,’ inquis, ‘dispartibilem eam ostendunt’ — : et hic a lineis tuis excidisti quibus circa personam dei usus es praescribe<n>s deum illam non ex semetipso fecisse, quia in partes uenire non posset qui sit[a] aeternus et manens in aeuum ac per hoc immutabilis et indiuisibilis. Si et materia eadem aeternitate censetur, neque initium habens neque finem, eadem ratione non poterit pati dispartitionem et demutationem, qua nec deus; in aeternitatis consortio posita participet cum illo necesse est et uires et leges et condiciones aeternitatis. [2] Aequae cum dicis: ‘Partes autem eius omnia simul ex omnibus habent, ut ex partibus totum dinoscatur,’ utique eas partes intellegi uis quae ex illa prolatae sunt, quae hodie uidentur a nobis. Quomodo ergo omnia ex omnibus habent, utique ex pristinis, quando que hodie uidentur aliter habeant quam pristina fuerunt?

XL. [1] Dicis in melius reformatam materiam, utique <de> deterioribus, et uis meliora deteriorum exemplarium ferre? Confusa res erat, nunc uero composita est, et uis ex compositis incomposita praebere? [2] Nulla res speculum est rei alterius, id est non coaequalis. Nemo se apud tonsorem pro homine mulum inspexit; nisi si qui putat in hac extructione mundi disposita<e> iam et compta<e> informem et incultam materiam respondere. Quid hodie informe in mundo, quid retro speciatum in materia, [a]ut speculum sit mundus materiae? Cum ornamentis nomine sit penes Graecos mundus, quomodo inornata<e> materiae imaginem praefert, ut dicas totum eius ex partibus cognosci? [3] Certe ex illo toto erit etiam hoc quod non uenit in deformationem (et supra edidisti non totam eam fabricatam). Igitur uel hoc rude et confusum et incompositum non [in] potest in expolitis et distinctis et compositis recognosci, quae nec partes materiae appellari conuenit, cum a forma eius ex mutatione diuisa recesserunt.

XLI. [1] Reuertor ad motum, ut ubique te lubricum ostendam. ‘Inconditus et [in]confusus et turbulentus fuit materiae motus’; sic enim et ollae undique ebullientis similitudinem opponis. Et quomodo alibi alius a te adfirmatur? Cum enim uis materiam nec bonam nec malam inducere, ‘Igitur,’ inquis, ‘subiacens materia aequalis momenti habens motum neque ad bonum neque ad malum plurimum uergit.’ Si aequalis momenti, iam non turbulentus nec caccabacius, sed compositus et temperatus, scilicet qui inter bonum et malum suo arbitrio agitatus, in neutram tamen partem pronus et praeceps, mediam, quod aiunt, gina<m> ten<ens> exin<de> librato impetu ferebatur. Haec inquires non est, haec turbulenta et passiuitas non est, sed moderatio et modestia et iustitia motationis neutram <in> partem inclinantis. Plane si huc et illuc aut in alterum magis proclinarer, tunc inconcinnitatis et inaequalitatis et turbulentiae denotari mereretur. [2] Porro si neque ad bonum neque ad malum pronior erat motus, utique inter bonum et malum agebatur, ut ex hoc quoque materia<m> determinabilem apparet cuius motus [nec mala] nec malo nec bono pronus, eo quod in neutrum uergebat, inter utrumque ab utroque pendebat et hoc nomine ab utroque determinabatur. [3] Sed et bonum et malum in loco facis, cum dicis motum materiae in neutrum eorum fuisse propensum. Materia enim, quae in loco erat, neque huc neque illuc deurgens in loca non deurgebat in quibus erat bonum et malum. Dans autem locum bono et malo corporalia ea facis faciendo localia, quia quae locum habent prius est ut corporalia sint — denique incorporalia proprium locum non haberent nisi in corpore, cum corpori accedunt — , <ad> bonum autem et malum non deurgens materia ut ad corporalia aut localia non deurgebat. Bonum ergo et malum erras si substantias esse uis; substantias enim facis quibus loca adsignas, loca autem adsignas, cum materiae motum ab utraque regione suspendis.

XLII. [1] Dispersisti omnia, ne de proximo quam contraria sibi sint relucerent, at ego colligam singula et conferam. Inconditum adseueras motum materiae eamque adicis sectari informitatem, dehinc alibi, desiderare componi a deo. Desiderat formationem quae sectatur informitatem? Aut sectatur informitatem quae desiderat formationem? [2] Non uis uideri deum aequari materiae et subicis habere illa<m> cum deo commun<ion>em. ‘Impossibile enim,’ inquis, ‘non habentem illam commune aliquid cum deo ornari eam ab ipso.’ Atquin si commune aliquid habebat cum deo, non desiderabat exornari ab ipso, pars scilicet dei per communionem, aut et deus poterat ornari a materia habendo cum illa aliquid et ipse commune; etiam in hoc necessitati subici<s> deum, si fuit aliquid in materia propter quod eam formare<t>. [3] Commune autem inter illos facis, quod a semetipsis mouentur et semper moueantur. Quid minus materiae quam deo adscribis? Totum consortium diuinitatis hoc erit, libertas et aeternitas motus. ‘Sed deus composite, materia incomposite mouentur.’ Tamen diuinum proinde, motu proinde libero et aeterno. Atquin plus materiae das, cui licuit sic moueri quomodo deo non licuit.

XLIII. [1] De motu et illud notauerim. Nam secundum ollae similitudinem ‘Sic erat’, inquis, ‘materiae motus antequam disponderetur, concretus inquietus inadprehensibilis prae nimietate certaminis,’ dehinc subicis: ‘Stetit autem in dei compositionem et [in]adprehensibilem habuit inconditum motum prae tarditate inconditi motus’. Supra certamen motui adscribis, hic tarditatem. [2] Nam de natura materiae quotiens cadas, accipe. Supra dicis: ‘Si autem esset materia natura mala, non accepisset translationem in melius nec deus aliquid compositionis adcommoddasset illi; in uacuum enim laborasset.’ Finisti igitur duas sententias, nec materiam natura malam nec naturam eius a deo potuisse conuerti, horum immemor postea inferens: ‘At ubi accepit compositionem a deo et ornata est, cessauit a natura’. Si in bonum reformata est, utique de malo reformata est, et si per compositionem dei cessauit a natura mali,  natura cessauit. Ergo et mala fuit natura ante compositionem et desinere potuit a natura post reformationem.

XLIV. [1] Sed et qualiter operatum facias deum sequitur ut ostendam. Plane a philosophis recedis (se<d> tamen et a prophetis). Stoici enim uolunt deum sic per materiam decucurrisse quomodo mel per fauos, at tu ‘Non’, inquis, ‘pertransiens illam facit mundum, sed solummodo apparens et adpropinquans ei, sicut facit quid decor solummodo apparens et magnes lapis solummodo adpropinquans’. [2] Quid simile deus fabricans mundum et decor uulnerans animum aut magnes adtrahens ferrum? Nam et si apparuit deus materiae, sed non uulnerauit illam, quod decor animum; et si adpropinquauit, sed non cohaesit illi, quod magnes ferro. [3] Puta nunc exempla tua competere: certe si apparendo et adpropinquando materiae fecit ex illa deus mundum, utique ex quo apparuit fecit et ex quo adpropinquauit. Ergo quando non fecerat retro, nec apparuerat illi nec adpropinquauerat. Et cui credibile est deum non apparuisse materiae uel qua consubstantiali suae per aeternitatem? Ab ea longe fuisse quem credimus ubique esse et ubique apparere, cui etiam inanimalia et incorporalia laudes canunt apud Danielelem? Quantus hic locus in quo deus a materia tantum distabat ut neque apparere<t> neque adpropinquare<t> ante mundi molitionem? Credo, peregrinatus est ad illam de longinquo, cum primum ei uoluit apparere et adpropinquare.

XLV. [1] At enim prophetae et apostoli non ita tradunt mundum a deo factum apparente solummodo et adpropinquante materiae, quia nec materiam ullam nominauerunt, sed primo sophiam conditam, initi[ar]um uiarum in opera[m] ipsius, dehinc et sermonem prolatum per quem omnia facta sunt et sine quo factum est nihil; denique sermone eius caeli confirmati sunt et spiritu ipsius uniuersae uirtutes eorum. Hic est dei dextra et manus ambae per quas operatus est atque molitus est — opera enim manuum tuarum, inquit, caeli — , per quas et mensus est caelum et palmo terram. [2] Noli ita deo adulari, ut uelis illum solo uisu et solo accessu tot ac tantas substantias protulisse et non propriis uiribus instituisse. Sic enim et Hieremias commendat: Deus faciens terram in ualentia sua, parans orbem in intellegentia sua, et suo sensu extendit caelos. Haec sunt uires eius quibus enixus totum hoc condidit. Maior est gloria eius, si laborauit; denique septima die requieuit ab operibus, utrumque suo more. Aut si appre<n>s so/ummodo et adpropinquans fecit hunc mundum, numquid, cum facere[t] desiit, rursus apparere et adpropinquare cessauit? Atquin magis apparere coepit et ubique conueniri deus ex quo factus est mundus. [3] Vides ergo quemadmodum operatione dei uniuersa consistunt ualentia facientis terram, intellegentia parantis orbem et sensu extendentis caelum, non apparentis solummodo nec adpropinquantis sed adhibentis tantos animi sui nisus, sophiam ualentiam sensum sermonem spiritum uirtutem, quae illi non erant necessaria, si apparendo tantummodo et adpropinquando profectus fuisset. Haec autem sunt inuisibilia eius quae secundum apostolum ab institutione mundi factis eius conspiciuntur, non materiae nescio quae sed sensualia ipsius; quis enim cognouit sensum domini, de quo exclamat: <O> profundum diuitiarum et sophiae, ut <in>inuentibilia iudicia eius et <in>inuestigabiles uiae eius! Quid haec magis sapiunt quam: ut ex nihilo omnia facta sunt! Quae nec inueniri nec inuestigari nisi soli deo possent, alioquin inuestigabilia <et inuentibilia>, si ex materia sunt inuestigata et [non] inuenta. [4] Igitur in quantum constit[u]it materiam nullam fuisse, ex hoc etiam, quod nec talem competat fuisse qualis inducitur, in tantum proba[re]tur omnia a deo ex nihilo facta; nisi quod Hermogenes eundem statum describendo materiae quo[d] est ipse, inconditum confusum turbulentum, ancipitis et praecipitis et feruidi motus, documentum artis suae dum ostendit, ipse <se> pinxit.

Adversus Valentinianus (Against the Valentinians)

CAP. I. [1] Valentiniani, frequentissimum plane collegium inter haereticos, quia plurimum ex apostatis veritatis et ad fabulas facile est et disciplina non terretur, nihil magis curant quam occultare quod praedicant, si tamen praedicant qui occultant. custodiae officium conscientiae officium est. confusio praedicatur dum religio adserveratur. nam et illa Eleusinia, haeresis et ipsa Atticae superstitionis, quod tacent, pudor est. [2] idcirco et aditum prius cruciant diutius initiant quam consignant, cum epoptas ante quinquennium instituunt ut opinionem suspensio cognitionis aedificent atque ita tantam maiestatem exhibere videantur quantam praestruxerunt cupiditatem. sequitur silentii officium; [3] attente custoditur quod tarde invenitur, ceterum tota in adytis divinitas, tota suspira epoptarum, totum signaculum linguae: simulacrum membri virilis revelatur. sed naturae venerandum nomen allegorica dispositio praetendeus, patrocinio coactae figurae sacrilegium obscurat et convicium falsis simulacris excusat. proinde quos nunc destinamus haereticos sanctis nominibus et titulis et argumentis verae religionis vanissima atque turpissima figmenta configurantes — facili caritate ex divinae copiae occasione quia de multis multa succedere est — Eleusinia Valentiniana fecerunt lenocinia, sancta silentio magno, sola taciturnitate caelestia. [4] si bona fide quaeras, concreto vultu, suspenso supercilio “altum est” aiunt. si subtiliter temptes, per ambiguitates bilingues communem fidem adfirmat. si scire te subostendas, negant quicquid agnoscunt. si comminus certes astuta simplicitate suam caedem dispergunt. ne discipulis quidem propriis ante commitunt quam suos fecerint. habent artificium quo prius persuadeant quam edocent. veritas autem docendo persuadet non suadendo docet.

CAP II. [1] Ideoque simplices notamur apud illos, ut hoc tantum non etiam sapientes, quasi statim deficere cogatur a simplicitate sapientia, domino utramque ingente, “estote prudentes ut serpentes et simplices ut columbae.” aut si nos propterea insipientes quia simplices, num ergo et illi propterea non simplices quia sapientes? nocentissimi autem qui non simplices sicut stultissimi qui non sapientes. [2] et tamen malim meam partem meliori sumi vitio, si forte. praestat minus sapere quam peius, errare quam fallere. porro facies dei spectatur in simplicitate quaerendi ut docet ipsa Sophia, non quidem Valentini, sed Salomonis. deinde infantes testimonium Christi sanguine litaverunt; pueros vocem qui crucem clamant? nec pueri nec infantes, id est simplices non erant; [3] repuerascere nos et apostolus iubet secundum deum, ut malitia infantes per simplicitatem ita demum sapientes sensibus; simul dedit sapientiae ordinem de simplicitate manandi. [4] in summa: Christum columba demonstrare solita est, serpens vero temptare; illa et a primordio divinae pacis praeco, ille a primordio divinae imaginis praedo. ita facilius simplicitas sola deum et agnoscere poterit et ostendere, prudentia sola concuterepotius et prodere.

CAP. III. [1] abscondat itaque se serpens quantum potest, totamque prudentiam in latebrarum ambagibus torqueat, alte habitet, in casca detrudat, per amfractus seriem suam evolvat; tortuose procedat nec semel totus, lucifuga bestia; nostrae 10 columbae etiam domus simplex in editis semper et apertis et ad lucem. amat figura spiritus sancti orientem Christi figuram. [2] Nihil veritas erubescit nisi solummodo abscondi, quia nec pudebit ullum aures ei dedere, eum deum recognoscere quem iam illi natura commisit, quem cotidie in operi- 15 bus omnibus sentit, hoc solum minus notum quod unicum non putavit, quod in numero nominavit, quod in aliis adoravit. [3] alioquin a turba eorum et aliam frequentiam suadere, adomestico principatu ad incognitum transmove, a manifesto ad occultum retorquere de limine fidem offendere est. iam si et in totam fabulam initietur nonne tale aliquid recordabitur se in infamia inter somni difficultates a nutricula audisse, Lamiae turre et pectines Solis. [4] sed qui ex alia conscientia venerit fidei, si inveniat tot nomina Aeonum, tot conjugia, tot genimina, tot exitus, tot eventus felicitates infelicitates dispersae atque concisae divinitatis, dubitabitne ibidem pronuntiare has esse fabulas et genealogias indeterminatas quas apostoli spiritus, his iam tunc pullulantibus seminibus haereticis, damnare praevenit? [5] merito itaque non simplices, merito tantummodo prudentes, qui talia neque facile producant neque exerte defendunt sed nec omnes quos edocent, perdocent. utique astute, ut pudenda, ceterum inhumane, si honesta. tamen simplices nos omnia scimus. denique hunc primum cuneum congressionis armavimus detectorem et designatorem totius conscientiae illorum primamque hanc victoriam auspicamur quia quod tanto impendio absconditur, etiam solummodo demonstrare destruere est.

CAP. IV.[1] novimus inquam optime originem quoque ipsorum et scimus cur Valentinianos appellemus, licet non esse videantur, abscesseruat enim a

conditore sed minime origo deletur et si forte mutetur: testatio est ipsa mutatio. speraverat episcopatum Valentinus quia et ingenio poterat et eloquio, sed alium ex martyrii praerogativa loca potitum indignatus, de ecclesia authenticae regulae abruptit. ut solent animi pro prioratu exciti praesumptione ultionis accendi, [2] ad expugnandum conversus veritatem et cuiusdam veteris opinionis semitam nactus Colorbaso viam delineavit. eam postmodum Ptolomaeus intravit, nominibus et numeris Aeonum distinctis in personales substantias, sed extra deum determinatas, quas Valentinus in ipsa summa divinitatis (ut sensus et affectus, motus) incluserat. deduxit et Heracleon inde tramites quosdam et Secundus et magus Marcus. [3] multum circa imagines legis Theotimus operatus est. ita nusquam iam Valentinus et tamen Valentiniani qui per Valentinum. soius ad hodiernum Antiochiae Axionicus memoriam Valentini integra custodia regularum eius consolatur. alioquin tantum se huic haeresi suadere permissum est quantum lupae feminae formam cotidie supparare solemne est. [4] quidni, cum spiritale illud semen suum sic in unoquoque recenseant? si ali- quid novi adstruxerint revelationem statim appellant praesumptionem et charisma ingenium, nec unitatem sed diversitatem. ideoque prospicimus, seposita alla solemni dissimulatione sua, plerosque dividi quibusdam articulis. etiam bona fide dicturos “hoc ita non est” et “hoc aliter accipio” et “hoc non agnosco.” varietate enim innovatur regularum facies; habet etiam colores ignorantiarum. CAP V. [1] mihi autem cum archetypis erat limes principalium magistrorum, non cum affectatis ducibus passivorum discipulorum. nec undique dicemur ipsi nobis finxisse materias quas tot iam viri sanctitate et praestantia insignes, nec solum nos- tra antecessores sed ipsorum haeresiarcharum contemporales, instructissimis voluminibus et prodiderunt et retulerunt Iustinus, philosophus et martyr; ut Miltiades, ecclesiarum sophista; ut Irenaeus, omnium doctrinarum curiosissimus explorator; ut Proculus noster, virginis senectae et Christianae eloquentiae dignitas, quos in omasi opere fidei quemadmodum in isto optaverim adsequi; [2] aut si in totum haereses non sunt, ut qui eas pellunt finxisse credantur, mentietur apostolus praedicator illarum. porro si sunt, non aliae erunt quam quae retractantur. nemo tam otiosus fertur, stilo ut materias habens fingat.

CAP. VI. [1] igitur hoc libello quo demonstrationem solum praemittentes illius arcani, ne quem ex nominibus tam peregrinis et coac- tis et compactis et ambiguus caligo suffundat, quomodo iis usuri sumus, prius demandabo: quorundam enim de Graeco interpretatio non occurrit ad expeditam proinde nominis formae; quorundam nec de sexu genera conveniunt; quorundam usitatio in Graeco notitia est. [2] itaque plurimum Graeca ponemus; significantiae per paginarum limites aderunt, nec Latinis quidem deerunt Graeca sed in lineis desuper notabuntur ut signum hoc sit personalium nominum propter ambiguitates eorum quae cum alia significatione communicant. quamquam distulerim congestionem, solam interim professus narrationem, sicubi tamen indignitas meruerit suggillari non erit delibatione transpunctatoria expugnatio. congressionis lusionem deputa, lector, ante pugnam; ostendam sed non imprimam vulnera. [3] si et ridebitur alicubi, materiis ipsis satisfiet. multa sic digna sunt revinci ne gravitate adornentur. vanitati proprie festivitas cedit. congruit et veritate ridere quia laetans, de aemulis suis ludere quia secura est. curandum plane ne risus eius rideatur si fuerit indignus. ceterum ubicumque dignus risus, officium est. denique hocmodo incipiam.

CAP. VII. [1] primus omnium Ennius poeta Romanus “caenacula maxima caeli” simpliciter pronuntiavit elati situs nomine vel quia Iovem illic epulantem legerat apud Homerum. sed haeretici quantas supernitates supernitatum et quantas sublimitates sublimitatum in habitaculum dei sui cuiusque suspenderint extulerint expanderint, mirum est. [2] etiam creatori nostro Enniana caenacula in aedicularum disposita sint forma, aliis atque aliis pergulis superstructis et unicuique deo per totidem scalas distributis, quot haereses fuerint. meritorium factus est mundus. [3] Insulam Feliculam credas tanta tabulata caelorum nescio ubi. illic etiam Valentinianorum deus adsummas tegulas habitat. hunc substantialiter quidem aiōwna te&leion appellant; personaliter vero propatoria et proarx&n etiam Bython — quod in sublimibus habitanti minime congruebat. innatum immensum infinitum invisibilem aeternumque definiunt, quasi statim probent esse si talem definiant qualem scimus esse debere. sic et ante omnia fuisse dicatur. [4] sed ut sit expostulo nec aliud magis in huiusmodi denoto quam quod post omnia inveniuntur qui ante omnia fuisse dicuntur, et quidem non sua. sit itaque Bythos iste infinitis retro aevis in maxima et altissima quiete, in otio plurimo placidae et — ut ita dixerim — stupentis divinitatis, qualem iussit Epicurus. [5] et tamen quem solum volunt, dant ei secundam in ipso et cum ipso personam, Ennonian, quam et Charin et Sigen insuper nominant. et forte accedunt in illa commendatissima quiete movere eum de proferendo tandem initio rerum a semetipso. hoc vice seminis in Sige sua velunt in genitabilibus vulvae locis collocat. suscipit illa statim et praegnans efficitur et parit (utique silentio) Sige. et quem parit? Nus est simillimum Patri et parem per omnia. [6] denique solus hic capere sufficit immensam illam et incomprehensibilem magnitudinem Patris. ita et ipse Pater dicitur et initium omnium et proprie Monogenes; atquin non proprie siquidem non solus agnoscitur. nam cum illo processit et femina cui Veritas nomen. Monogenes quia prior genitus quanto congruentius Protogenes vocaretur. ergo Bythos et Sige, Nus et Veritas prima quadriga defenditur Valentinianae factionis, matrix et origo cunctorum. namque ibidem Nus simul accepit prolationis suae officium, emittit et ipse ex semetipso Sermonem et Vitam — [7] quae si retro non erat, utique nec in Bytho; et quale est ut in deo vita non fuerit! sed et haec suboles, ad initium universitatis et formati Pleromatis totius emissa, facit fructum: Hominem et Ecclesiam procreat. [8] habes ogdoadem, tetradem duplicem ex coniugationibus masculorum et feminarum, cellas ut ita dixerim primordialium Aeonum, fraterna conubia Valentinianorum, deorum, census omnis sanctitatis et maiestatis haereticae, nescio criminum an numinum turbam, certe fontem reliquae fecunditatis.

CAP. VIII. [1] ecce enim secunda tetras, Sermo et Vita, Homo et Ecclesia, quod in Patris gloria fruticasset huic numero gestientes et ipsi tale quid Patri de suo offerre, alios ebulliunt fetus-proinde coniugales per copulam utriusque naturae: hac et Sermo et Vita decuriam Aeonum simul fundunt; illac Homo et Ecclesia duos amplius aequiperando parentibus, quia et ipso duo cum illis decem tot efficiunt quot ipsi procreaverunt. [2] reddo nunc nomina quos decuriam dixi: Bythios et Mixis, Ageratos et Henosis, Autophyes et Hedone, Acinetos et Syncrasis, Monogenes et Macaria. contra duodenarius numerus hi erunt: Paracletus et Pistis, Patricos et Elpis, Metricos et Agape, Aeinus et Synesis, Ecclesiasticus et Macariotes, Theletus et Sophia. cogor hic, quid ista nomina desiderent, proferre de pari exemplo: [3] in scholis Karthaginensibus fuit quidam frigidissimus rhetor Latinus, Phosphorus nomine. cum virum fortem peroraret “venio (inquit) ad vos, optimi cives, de proelio cum Victoria mea, cum Felicitate vestra, Amplius Gloriosus Fortunatus Maximus Triumphalis.” et scholastici statim familiae Phosphori feu~ acclamant. [4] audisti Fortunatam et Hedonen et Acinetum et Theletum; acclama familiae Ptolomaei feu~. hoc erit Pleroma illud arcanum, divinitatis tricenariae plenitudo. videamus quae sint istorum privilegia numerorum — quaternarii et octonarii et duodenarii. [5] interim in tricenario fecunditas tota deficit; castrata est vis et potestas et libido genitalis Aeonum — quasi non et numerorum tanta adhuc coagula superessent et nulla alia de paedagogio nomina. quare enim non et quinquaginta et centum procreantur? quare non et Sterceiae et Syntrophii nominantur?

CAP. IX. [1] sed et hoc exceptio personarum est quod solus ille Nus ex omnibus immensi Patris fruitur notione gaudens et exultans, illis utique maerentibus. plane Nus et quantum in ipso fuit et voluerat et temptaverat ceteris quoque communicare quae norat, quantus et quam incomprehensibilis Pater. sed inter- cessit mater Sige, illa scilicet quae et ipsis haereticis suis tacere praescribit, etsi de Patris nutu aiunt factum volentis omnes in desiderium sui accendi. [2] itaque dum macerantur intra semetipsos, dum tacita cupidine cognoscendi Patrem uruntur, paene scelus factum est. namque ex illis duodecim Aeonibus quos Homo et Ecclesia ediderant novissima natu Aeon — viderit soloecismus, Sophia nomen est — incontinentia sui sine coniugis Theleti societate prorumpit in patrem inquirere et genus contrahit vitii quod exorsum quidem fuerat in illis aliis, qui circa Nun, in hunc autem, id est in Sophiam, derivarat, ut solent vitia in corpore alibi connata in aliud membrum perniciem suam efflare. [3] sed enim sub praetexto dilectionis in Patrem aemulatio superabat in Nun solum de Patre gaudentem. ut vero impossibilia contendens Sophia frustra erat et vincitur difficultate et extenditur affectione; modico abfuit prae vi dulcendinis et laboris devorari et in reliquam substantiam dissolvi. nec alias quam pereundo cessasset nisi bono fato in Horon incur- sasset (quaedam et huic vis est: fundamentum, universitatis illius extrinsecus custos) quem et Crucem appellant et Lytrotem et Carpisten. [4] ita Sophia periculo exempta et tarde persuasa de inclinata investigatione Patris, conquievit et totam Enthymesin (animationem) cum passione quae insuper accederat exposuit. CAP X. [1] sed quidam exitum Sophia et restitutionem aliter somniaver- unt: post inritos conatus et spei deiectionem deformatam eam; (pallore, credo, et macie et incuria. proprie utique patrem non minus denegatum dolebat quam amissum.) dehinc in illo maerore ex semetipsa sola nulla opera coniugii concepit et procreat feminam. miraris hoc? et gallina sortita est de suo parere, sed et vultures feminas tantum aiunt. [2] et tamen sine masculo mater et metuere postremo ne finis quoque insisteret, haerere de ratione casus, curare de occultatione. remedia nusquam: ubi enim iam tragoediae atque comoediae a quibus forma mutaretur exponendi quod citra pudorem natum? dum in malis res est, suscipit convertit ad patrem, sed incassum enisa et vires deserebant, in preces succedit. tota enim propinquitas pro ea supplicat, vel maxime Nus. (quid? in causa mali tanti?) nullus tamen Sophiae exitus vacuit: [3] omnes aerumnae eius operantur, siquidem et illa tunc conflictatio in materiae originem pervenit. ignorantia, pavor, maeror substantiae fiunt. ibi demum pater motus aliquando quem supra diximus Horon per Monogenem Nun in haec promit in imagine sua femina-marem, quia et de patris sexu ita variant. adiciunt autem Horon etiam Metagogeia (circumductorem) vocari et Horotheten. [4] huius praedicant opera et repressam ab illicitis et purgatam a malis et dienceps confirmatam Sophiam et coniugio restitutam, et ipsam quidem in Pleromatis censu remansisse, Enthymesin vero eius et illam appendicem passionem ab Horo relegatam et crucifixam et extra eum factam — [5] malum, quod aiunt, foras. spiritalem tamen substantiam illam ut naturalem quendam impetum Aeonis sed informem et inspeciatam, quatenus nihil adprehendisset, ideoque fructum infirmum et feminam pronuntiatam. [1] igitur post Enthymesin extorrem et matrem eius Sophiam coniugi reducem ille iterum Monogenes ille Nus, otiosus plane de Patris cura atque prospectu, solidandis rebus et Pleromati muniendo iamque figendo ne qua eiusmodi rursus concussio incuteret, novam excludit copulationem, Christum et Spiritum Sanctum, turpissimam putem duorum masculorum — [2] aut femina erit Spiritus Sanctus et vulneratur a femina masculus. munus enim his datur unum: procurare concinnationem Aeonum et ab eius officii societate duae scholae protinus, duae cathedrae, inauguratio quaedam dividendae doctrinae Valentini. Christi erat inducere Aeonas naturam coniugiorum — vides quam rem plane — et Innati coniectationem et idoneos efficere generandi in se agnitionem Patris, quod capere eum non sit neque comprehendere non visu denique non auditu compotiri eius nisi per Monogenem. [3] et tamen tolerabo quod ita discunt patrem nosse — ne nos et illud! magis denotabo doctrinae perversitatem quod docebantur incomprehensibile quidem Patris causam esse perpetuitatis ipsorum, comprehensibile vero eius generationis illorum et formationis esse rationem.

hac enim dispositione illud, opinor, insinuat expedit deum non apprehendi siquidem inapprehensibile eius perpetuitatis est causa. (4) apprehensibile autem non perpetuitatis, sed nativitatis et formationis, egentium perpetuitatis. [4] filium autem constituunt apprehensibile patris; quomodo tamen apprehendatur tum prolatus Christus edocuit. Spiritus vero Sancti propria ut de doctrinae studio omnes peraequati gratiarum actionem proseguere nosset et veram inducerentur quietem.

CAP. XII. [1] itaque omnes et forma et scientia peraequantur facti omnes quod unusquisque; nemo aliud quia alteri omnes. refunduntur in Nun omnes in Homines, in Theletos, aequae feminae in Sigas, in Zoas, in Ecclesias, in Fortunatas, ut Ovidius Metamorphoses suas delevisset si hodie maiorem cognovisset. [2] exinde refecti sunt et constabiliti sunt et in requiem ex veritate compositi magno cum gaudii fructu hymnis Patrem concinunt. diffundebatur et ipse laetitia et utique bene cantantibus filiis, nepotibus. quidni diffunderetur omni iocunditate, Pleromate liberato. quis nauclerus non etiam cum dedecore laetatur? videmus cotidie nauticorum lascivias gaudiorum. [3] itaque ut nautae ad symbolam semper exultant, tale aliquid et Aeones; unum iam omnes etiam forma nedum sententia, convenientibus ipsis quoque novis fratribus et magistris Christo et Spirito Sancto, quod optimum atque pulcherrimum unusquisque florebat conferunt in medium. vane, opinor; si enim unum erant omnes ex supra dicta peraequatione, vacabat symbolae ratio quae ferme ex varietatis gratia constat. [4] unum omnes bonum conferebant quod omnes erant; de modo forsitan fuerit ratio aut de forma ipsius iam peraequationis. igitur ex aere collatio, quod aiunt, in honorem et gloriam Patris pulcherrimum Pleromatis sidus fructumque perfectum compingunt Iesum. eum cognominant Soterem et Christum et Sermonem de patris et Omnia iam ut ex omnium defloratione constructum: Graculum Aesopi, Pandoram Hesiodi, Acci Patinam, Nestoris Cocetum, Miscellaneam Ptolomaei. [5] quam proprius fuit de aliquibus Osciae scurris Pancapipannirapiam vocari a tam otiosis auctoribus nominum. ut autem tantum sigillarium extrinsecus quoque inornasset, satellites ei angelos proferunt par genus; si inter se, potest fieri, si vero Soteri consubstantivos-ambigue enim positura inveni — quae erit eminentia eius inter satellites coaequales?

CAP. XIII. [1] continet hic igitur ordo primam professionem pariter et nascentium et nubentium et generantium Aeonum, Sophiae ex desiderio Patris periculosissimum casum. Hori oportunissimum auxilium, Enthymeseos et coniunctae Passionis expiatum, Christi et Spiritu Sancti paedagogatum, Aeonum tutelarem reformatum, Soteris pavoninum ornatum, Angelorum comparaticum antistatum. [2] quod superest, inquis, vos valete et plaudite. immo quod superest, inquam, vos erudite et proicite. ceterum haec intra coetum Pleromatis decucurisse dicuntur prima tragoediae scaena, alia autem trans siparium coturnatio est — extra Pleroma dico. et tamen hic exitus sub sinu Patris intra ambitum Hori custodis; qualis extra iam inlibero ubi deus non est?

CAP. XIV.^[1] namque Enthymesis sive iam Achamoth, quod abhinc scripta hoc solo ininterpretabili nomine, ut cum vitio individuae passionis explosa est in loca luminis aliena, quod Pleromatis res est, in vacuum atque inane illud Epicuri, miserabilis etiam de loco est. certe nec forma nec facies ulla, defectiva scilicet et abortiva genitura. dum ita rerum habet, flectitur a superioribus Christus, deducitur per Horon aborsum ut illud informet de suis viribus solius substantiae, non etiam scientiae, forma. [2] et tamen cum aliquo peculio relinquitur, id erat odor incorruptibilitatis quo compos se casus sui potiorum desiderio suppararetur. hac misericordia functus non sine Spiritus Sancti societate recurrit Christus in Pleroma. usus est rerum ex liberalitatibus quoque nomina accedere: Enthymesis de actu fuit, Achamoth unde adhuc quaeritur, Sophia de matre manat, Spiritus Sanctus ex angelo. [3] accipit Christi a quo derelictam se statim senserat desiderium. itaque prosiluit et ipsa lumen eius inquirere. quem si omnino non noverat ut invisibiliter operatum quomodo lumen eius ignotum cum ipso requirebat? tamen temptavit et fortasse adprehendisset si non idem Horos qui matri eius tam prospere venerat nunc tam importune filiae occurrisset ut etiam inclamaverit in eam “Iao” — quasi “porro quirites” aut “fidem Caesaris.” [4] inde invenitur “Iao” in scripturis. ita depulsa quominus pergeret nec habens supervolare Crucem, id est Horon, quia nullum Catulli Laureolum fuerit exercitata, ut destituta ut passioni illi suae intricata multiplici atque perplexae, omni genere eius coepit adfligi: maerore quod non perpetrasset inceptum, metu ne sicut luce ita et vita orbaretur, tum ignorantia. nec ut mater eius, illa enim Aeon, at haec pro conditione deterius insurgente adhuc et alio fluctu, conversionis scilicet in Christum a quo vivificata fuerat et in hanc ipsam conversionem temperata.

CAP. XV. ^[1] age nunc discant Pythagorici, agnoscant Stoici, Plato ipse, unde materiam quam innatam volunt et originem et substantiam traxerit in omnem hanc struem mundi, quod nec Mercurius ille Trismegistus, magister omnium physicorum, recogitavit. [2] audisti conversionem genus aliud passionis. ex hac omnis anima huius mundi dicitur constitisse, etiam ipsius Demiurgi, id est dei nostri. audisti maerorem et timorem; ex his initiata sunt cetera; nam ex lacrimis eius universa aquarum natura manavit. [3] hinc aestimandum quem exitum duxerit, quantis lacrimarum generibus inundaverit. habuit et salsas, habuit et amaras et dulces et calidas et frigidas guttas et bituminosas et ferruginantes et sulphurantes, utique et venenatas ut et Nonacris inde sudaverit quae Alexandrum occidit, et Lyncestarum inde defluerit quae ebrios efficit, et Salmacis inde se solverit quae masculos molles. [4] caelestes imbres pipiavit Achamoth et nos in cisternis etiam alienos luctus et lacrimas servare curamus, proinde ex consternatione et pavore corporalia elementa ducta sunt. et tamen in tanta circumstantia solitudinis, in tanto circumspectu destitutionis ridebat interdum qua conspecti Christi recordans. eodem gaudii risu lumen effulsit. [5] cuius hoc providentiae beneficium! quae illam ridere cogebat idcirco ne semper nos in tenebris moraremur. nec obstupescas quin laetitia eius tam splendidum elementum radiaverit mundo cum maestitia quoque eius tam necessarium instrumentum defuerit saeculo. o risum illuminatorem! o fletum rigatorem! et tamen poterat remedio iam agere cum illius loci horrore-omnem enim obscuritatem eius discussisset quotiens ridere voluisset — vel ne cogeretur desertores suos supplicare.

CAP. XVI. [1] convertitur enim ad preces et ipsa more materno, sed Christus quem iam pigebat extra Pleroma proficisci vicarium praeficit. Paracletum Soterem (hic erit Iesus largito et Patre universorum Aeonum summam potestatem subiciendis eis omnibus uti in ipso secundum Apostolum omnia conderentur) ad eam emittit cum officio atque comitatu coaetaneorum angelorum; credas et cum duodecim fascibus. [2] ibidem adventu pompatico eius concussa Achamoth protinus velamentum sibi obduxit ex officio primo venerationis et verecundiae. dehinc contemplatur eum fructiferumque suggestum; quibus inde conceperat viribus occurrit illi ku&rie xai=re. hic opinor susceptam ille confirmat atque conformat agnitione iam et ab omnibus iniuriis passionis expumicat non eadem neglegentia in exterminium discre- tis quae acciderat in casibus matris. [3] sed enim exercitata vitia et usu viriosa confudit atque ita massaliter solidata defixit seorsum in materiae incorporalem paraturam commutans ex incorporali passione, indita habilitate atque natura qua pervenire mox posset in aemulas aequiperantias corpulentiarum ut duplex substantiarum conditio ordinaretur: de vitiis pessima, de conversione passionalis. haec erat materia quae nos commisit cum Hermogene ceterisque qui deum ex materia, non ex nihilo, operatum cuncta praesumunt.

CAP. XVII. ^[1] abhinc Achamoth expedita tandem de malis omnibus ecce iam proficit et in opera maiora frugescit. prae gaudio enim tanti ex infelicitate successus concalefacta simulque contemplatione ipsa angelicorum luminum, ut ita dixerim, subfermentata — pudet sed aliter exprimere non est — quodammodo subsuriit intra et ipsa in illos et conceptu statim intumuit spiritali ad imaginem ipsam quam vi laetantis ex laetitia prurientis intentionis imbiberat et sibi intimarat. ^[2] peperit denique et facta est exinde trinitas generum ex trinitate causarum: unum materiale quod ex passione, aliud animale quod ex conversione, tertium spiritale quod ex imaginatione.

CAP. XVIII. ^[1] hac auctoritate — trium scilicet liberorum — agendis rebus exercitior facta, formare singula genera constituit. sed spiritale quidem non ita potuit attingere ut et ipsa spiritalis; fere enim paria et consubstantiva in alterutrum valere societas naturae negavit. ^[2] eo animo se unum ad animale convertit prolatis Soteris disciplinis. et primum — quod cum magno horrore blasphemiae et pronuntiandum et legendum est et audiendum — deum fingit hunc nostrum et omnium praeter haereticorum, Patrem et Demiurgem et Regem universorum quae post illum, ab illo enim — si tamen ab illo, et non ab ipsa potius Achamoth a qua occulto, nihil sentiens eius et velut sigillario extrinsecus ductu, in omnem operationem movebatur. ^[3] denique ex hac personarum in operibus ambiguitate nomen illi Metropatoris miscuerunt distinctis appellationibus ceteris secundum status et situs operum: ut animalium quidem substantiarum quas ad dextram commendant Patrem nuncupant, materialium vero quas ad laevam delegant Demiurgem nominent, Regem autem communiter in universitatem.

CAP. XIX. ^[1] sed nec nominum proprietas competit proprietati operum de quibus nomina cum deberet illa haec omnia vocitari a qua res agebantur — nisi quod iam nec ab illa! cum enim dicant Achamoth in honorem Aeonum imagines commentatam, rursus hoc in Soterem auctorem detorquent qui per illam sit operatus, ut ipsam quidem imaginem Patris invisibilis et incogniti daret, incognitam licet et invisibilem Demiurgo. eundem autem Demiurgum Nun filium effingeret. Archangeli vero, Demiurgi opus, reliquos Aeonas experimerent. [2] cum imagines audio tantas trium, quaero, non vis nunc ut imagines rideam perversissimi pictoris illorum: feminam Achamoth imaginem Patris, et ignarum matris Demiurgum — multo magis Patris — imaginem Nu non ignorantis Patrem, et angelos famulos simulacra dominorum? hoc est mulum de asino pingere et Ptolomaeum describere de Valentino.

CAP. XX. [1] igitur Demiurgus extra Pleromatis limites constitutus in ignominiosa aeterni exilii vastitate novam provinciam condit, hunc mundum, repurgata confusione et distincta diversitate duplici substantiae illius detrusae, animalium et materialium. ex incorporalibus corpora aedificat gravia levia sublimantia et vergentia caelestia atque terrena. tum ipsam caelorum septemPLICem scaenam solio desuper suo finit; [2] unde et Sabbatum dictum est ab hebdomade sedis suae et Ogdoada mater Acha-moth ab argumento ogdoadis primigenitalis. caelos autem noerouj deputant et interdum angelos eos faciunt sicut et ipsum Demiurgum, sicut et Paradisum Archangelum quartum quoniam et hunc supra caelum tertium pangunt, ex cuius virtute sumpserit Adam deversatus illic inter nubeculas et arbusculas. [3] satis meminerat Ptolomaeus puerilium dicibulorum, in mari poma nasci et in arbore pisces; sic et in caelestibus nuceta praesumpsit. operatur Demiurgus ignorans et ideo fortasse non scit arbores in sola terra institui oportere. plane mater sciebat; quidni suggerebat quae et effectum suum ministrabat? sed tantum fastigium filio extruens per ea opera quae illum et patrem et deum et regem ante Valentinianorum ingenia testantur, cur sibi quoque ipsa noluit esse nota, postea quaeram.

CAP. XXI. [1] interim tenendum Sophiam cognominari et Terram et Matrem et (quod magis rideas) etiam Spiritum Sanctum quasi marem Terram. ita omnem illi honorem contulerunt feminae, puto et barbam-ne dixerim cetera. alioquin Demiurgus adeo rerum non erat com pos — de animalis scilicet census invaliditudine spiritalia accedere — ut se solum ratus contionaretur “ego deus et absque me non est.” [2] certe tamen non fuisse se retro sciebat. ergo et factum intellegebat et factitorem facti esse quemcumque. quomodo ergo solus sibi videbatur etsi non certus, saltim suspectus de aliquo factitore?

CAP. XXII.[1] tolerabilior infamia est apud illos in diabolum vel quia origo sordidior capit. ex nequitia enim maeroris illius deputatur ex qua angelorum et daemonum et omnium spiritalium malitiarum genituras notant. [2] et tamen diabolus quoque opus Demiurgi adfirmant et Munditenentem appellant et superiorum magis gnarum defendunt ut spiritalem natura quam Demiurgum et animalem. meretur ab illis praelationem cui omnes haere-ses procurantur.

CAP. XXIII.[1] singularium autem potestatum arces his finibus collocant: in summis summitatibus praesidet tricenarius Pleroma Horo signante lineam extremam; inferius illum metatur medietatem Achamoth filium calcans; subest enim Demiurgus in hebdomade sua; [2] magis diabolus in isto nobiscum convenit mundo coelemen- tato et concorporificato, ut supra editum est, ex Sophiae utilissimis casibus, qua nec aerem haberet, reciprocandi spiritus spatium, teneram omnium corporum vestem, colorum omnium iudicem, organum temporum, si non et istum Sophiae maestitia colasset — sicut animalia metus, sicut conversio eius ipsum Demiurgum. [3] his omnibus elementis atque corporibus ignis inflabellatus est. cuius originaiem Sophiae passionem quia nondum ediderunt ego argumentabor motiunculis eius excussam; credas enim illam in tantis vexationibus etiam febricitasse. CAP XXIV. [1] cum talia de deo vel de diis, qualia de homine figmenta? molitus enim mundum Demiurgus ad hominem manus confert et substantiam ei capit non ex ista, inquirunt, arida quam nos unicam novimus terram — quasi non, etsi arida postmodum, adhuc tamen tunc aquis ante segregatis superstitute limo, siccaverit — sed ex invisibili corpore materiae illius scilicet philosophicae de fluxili et fusili eius, quod unde fuerit audeo aestimare quia nusquam est: [2] si enim fusili et fluxile liquoris est qualitas, liquor autem omnis de Sophiae fletibus fluxit, sequitur ut limum ex pituitis et gramis Sophiae constitisse credamus quae lacrimarum proinde sunt faeces, sicut aquarum quod desidet limus est. figulat ita hominem Demiurgas et de afflatu suo animat. sic erit et choicus et animalis ad imaginem et similitudinem factus quadruplex res: ut imago quidem choicus deputetur — materialis scilicet etsi non ex materia Demiurgus; similitudo autem animalis — hoc enim et Demiurgus. [3] habes duos. interim carnalem superficiem postea aiunt choico supertextam et hanc esse pelliceam tunicam ob-noxiam sensui.

CAP. XXV. [1] inerat autem in Achamoth ex substantia Sophiae matris peculium quoddam seminis spiritalis sicut et ipsa; Achamoth in filio Demiurgo sequestraverat ne hoc quidem gnaro. (accipe industriam clandestinae providentiae huius.) [2] ad hoc enim et deposuerat et occultaverat ut, cum Demiurgus animam mox de suo afflatu in Adam communicaret, pariter et semen illud spiritale quasi per canalem animae derivaretur in choicum atque ita feturatum in corpore materiali velut in utero et adultum illic idoneum inveniretur suscipiendo quandoque sermoni perfecto. [3] itaque cum Demiurgus traducem animae suae committit in Adam, latuit homo spiritalis flatui eius insertus et pariter corpori inductus quia non magis semen noverat matris Demiurgus quam ipsam. hoc semen Ecclesiam dicunt, Ecclesiae supernae speculum et Hominis, censum proinde eum ab Achamoth deputantes quemadmodum animalem a Demiurgo, choicum substantis a)rxh~j, carnem materia. habes novum id est quadruplum Geryontem.

CAP. XXVI. [1] sic et exitum singulis dividunt: materiali quidem, id est carnali, quem et sinistrum vocant, indubitatum interitum; animali vero quem et dextrum appellant dubitatum eventum utpote inter materialem spiritalemque nutanti et illac debito qua plurimum adnuerit. ceterum spiritalem emitti in animalis comparisonem ut erudiri cum eo et exerceri in conversationibus possit. [2] indiguissse enim animalem etiam sensibilibus disciplinarum. in hoc et paraturam mundi prospectam, in hoc et Sotem in mundo repraesentatum, in salutem scilicet animalis. alia adhuc compositione monstruosum volunt illum prosicias earum substantiarum induisse quarum summam saluti esset redactus: ut spiritalem quidem susceperit ab Achamoth, animalem vero quem mox a Demiurgo induit Christum, ceterum corporalem ex animali substantia sed miro et inenarrabili rationis ingenio constructam administrationis causa interim tulisse quo congressui et conspectui et contactui et defunctui ingratiss subiaceret. materiale autem nihil in illo fuisse utpote salutis alienum — quasi aliis fuerit neces- sarius quam egentibus salutem. et totum hoc ut carnis nostrae habitum alienando a Christo a spe etiam salutis excipiant.

CAP. XXVI. [1] nunc reddo de Christo in quem tanta licentia Iesum inserunt quidem quanta spiritale semen animali cum inflatu infulciunt, fartilia nescio quae commenti et Hominum et deorum suorum: esse etiam Demiurgo suum Christum filium naturalem denique animalem, prolatum ab ipso, promulgatum prophetis, in praepositionum quaestionibus positum, id est per virginem non ex virgine editum quia delatus in virginem transmeatoria potius quam generatorio more processerit per ipsam non ex ipsa, non matrem eam sed viam passus. [2] super hunc itaque Christum devolasse tunc in baptismatis sacramento Iesum per effigiem columbae. fuisse autem et in Christo etiam ex Achamoth spiritalis seminis condimentum ne marceresceret scilicet reliqua farsura. nam in figuram principalis tetradis quattuor eum substantiis stipant: spiritali Achamothiana, animali Demiurgina, corporali inenarrativa, et illa Sotericiana, id est columbina. et Soter quidem permansit in Christo impassibilis inlaesibilis inapprehensibilis. denique cum ad prehensiones venit, discessit ab illo in cognitione Pilati; [3] proinde nec matris semen admisit iniurias aequae insubditivum et ne ipsi quidem Demiurgo compertum. patitur vero animalis et carneus Christus in delineationem superioris Christi qui Achamoth formando substantivali non agnitionali forma Cruci, ed est Horo, fuerat innixus. ita omnia in imagines surgent, plane et ipsi imaginarii Christiani.

CAP. XXVIII. [1] interea Demiurgus omnium adhuc nescius etsi aliquid et ipse per prophetas contionabitur ne huius quidem operis sui intellegens — dividunt enim et prophetiale patrocinium in Achamoth, semen, in Demiurgum — ubi adventum Soteris accepit propere et ovanter accurrit cum omnibus suis viribus — centurio de evangelio — et de omnibus inluminatus ab illo etiam suam discit quod successurus sit in locum matris. [2] ita exinde securus dispensationem mundi huius vel maxime ecclesiae protegendae nomine quanto tempore oportuit insequitur.

CAP. XXIX. [1] colligam nunc ex disperso ad concludendum quae de totius generis humani dispositione iusserunt. triformem naturam primordio professi et tamen inunitam in Adam, inde iam dividunt per singulares generum proprietates nacti occasionem distinctionis huiusmodi ex posteritate ipsius Adae moralibus quoque differentiis tripertita. [2] Cain et Abel, Seth fontes quodammodo generis humani in totidem derivant argumenta naturae atque sententiae: choicum, saluti degeneratum, ad Cain redigunt; animale, mediae spei deliberatum, ad Abel componunt; spiritale, certae saluti praeiudicatum, in Seth recondunt. sic et animas ipsas duplici proprietate discernunt, bonas et malas secundum choicum statum ex Cain et animalem ex Abel. [3] spiritalem enim ex Seth de obvenientia superducunt iam non naturam sed indulgentiam ut quos Achamoth de superioribus in animas bonas depluat, id est animali censui inscriptas. choicum enim genus, id est malas animas, numquam capere salutaria; immutabilem enim et irreformabilem naturae pronuntiaverunt. id ergo granum seminis spiritalis modicum et parvulum iactu sed eruditum huius fides augetur atque provehitur, ut supra diximus, animaeque hoc ipso ita ceteris praeverterant ut Demiurgus tunc ignorans magni eas fecerit. [4] ex earum ergo laterculo et in reges et in sacerdotes allegere consueverat; quae nunc quoque si plenam atque perfectam notitiam apprehenderint istarum neniarum naturificatae iam spiritalis condicionis germanitate certam obtinebunt salutem immo omnimodo debitam.

CAP. XXX. [1] ideoque neo operationes necessarias sibi existimant neo ulla disciplinae mania observant martyrii quoque eludentes necessitatem qua volant interpretatione. hanc enim regulam ani- mali semini praestitutam ut salutem quam non de privilegio status possidemus de suffragio actus elaboremus. nobis enim inscriptura huius seminis qui imperfectae scientiae sumus qua non norimus Theletum et utique abortui deputatur (quod mater illorum!). [2] sed nobis quidem — vae si excesserimus in aliquod disciplinae iugum, si obtorpuerimus in operibus sanctitatis atque iustitiae, si confitendum alibi nescio ubi et non sub potestatibus istius saeculi apud tribunalia praesidium optaverimus. [3] illi vero et de passivitate vitae et diligentia delictorum generositatem suam vindicent blandiente suis Achamoth quoniam et ipsa delinquendo proficit. nam et honorandorum coniugiorum supernorum gratia edicatur apud illos meditandum atque celebrandum semper sacramentum “comiti,” id est feminae, adhaerendi. alioquin degenerem nec legitimum veritatis qui deversatus in mundo non amaverit feminam nec se ei iunxerit. et quid facient spadones quos videmus apudillos?

CAP. XXXI. [1] superest de consummatione et dispensatione mercedis: ubi Achamoth totani massam seminis sui presserit dein colligere in horreum coeperit, vel cum ad molas delatum et defarinatum in consparsione salutari absconderit donec totum confrequentetur, tunc consummatio urgebit. igitur imprimis ipsa Achamoth de regione medietatis de tabulato secundo in summumtransferetur restituta Pleromati. statim excinit compacticius ille Soter — Sponsus scilicet; ambo coniugium novum fient — hic erit in scripturis sponsus et sponsalis Pleroma. [2] credas enim ubi de loco in locum transmigratur leges quoque Iulias intervenire. sicut et scaenem et Demiurgus tunc de hebdomade caelesti in superiora mutabit in vacuum iam caenaculum matris sciens iam nec videns illam. nam si ita erat, semper ignorare maluisset.

CAP. XXXII. [1] humana vero gens in hoc exitus ibit: choicae et materialis notae totum in interitum quia omnis caro foenum. et anima mortalis apud illos nisi quae salutem fide invenerit. iustorum animae, id est nostrae, ad Demiurgum in medietatis receptacula transmittentur — agimus gratias, contenti erimus cum deo nostro deputaci qua census animalis. nihil in Pleromacis palatium admittitur nisi spiritale examen Valentini. [2] illic itaque primo despoliantur homines ipsi, id est interiores; despoliare est autem deponere animas quibus induti videbantur, easque Demiurgo suo reddent quas ab eo averterant. ipsi autem spiritus in totum fient intellectuales neque detentui neque conspectui obnoxii, atque ita invisibiliter in Pleroma recipiuntur. furtim si ita est. [3] quid deinde? angelis distribuentur satellitibus Soteris. in filios putas? non. sed in adparatores? ni istud quidem. sed in imagines? utinam vel hoc. in quid ergo si non pudet dicere? in sponsas! tunc illi sabinas raptas inter se de matrimoniis ludent. haec erat spiritualium merces, hoc prae- mium credendi. [4] fabulae tales utiles ut Marcus aut Gaius in hac carne barbatus et in hac anima severus maritus pater avus proavus — certe quod sufficit masculus — in nyphone Pleromatis ab angelo. . . tacendo iam dixi; et forsitan parias aliquem novissimum Aeonem. his nuptiis recte deducendis pro face et flammeo tunc credo ille ignis arcanus erumpet et universam substantiam depopulatus ipse quoque decineratis omnibus in nihilum finietur et nulla iam fabula. [5] sed ne ego temerarius qui tantum sacramentum etiam inludendo prodiderim. verendum mihi est ne Achamothe quae se nec filio agnitam voluit insaniet, ne Theletus irascatur, ne Fortunata acerbetur. et tamen homo sum Demiurgi; illuc habeo devertere ubi post excessum omnino non obnubitur, ubi superindui potius quam despoliari, ubi etsi despolior sexui meo, deutor angelis non angelus non angela; nemo mihi quicquam faciet quem nec tunc masculum inveniet.

CAP. XXXIII. [1] producam denique velut epicitharisma post fabulam tantam etiam illa quae, ne ordini obstreperent et lectoris intentionem interiectione dispargerent, hunc malui in locum distulisse aliter atque aliter commendata ab emendatioribus Ptolomaei. exstiterunt enim de schola ipsius discipuli supermagistrum qui duplex coniugium Bytho suo adfingerent, Cogitationem et Voluntatem. [2] una enim sans non erat Cogitatio qua nihil producere potuisset. ex duabus facillime prolatum secundum coniugium Monogenem et Veritatem, ad imaginem quidem Cogitationis feminam Veritatem, ad imaginem Voluntatis marem Monogenem. Voluntatis enim vis, ut quae effectum praestat Cogitationi, viritatis obtinet censum.

CAP. XXXIV. [1] pudiciores alii honorem divinitatis recordati ut etiam unius coniugis dedecus ab eo avellerent maluerunt nullum Bytho sexum deputare et fortasse hoc dominum non hic deus neutro genere pronuntiant. [2] alii contra magis et masculum et feminam dicunt ne apud solos Lunenses Hermaphroditum existimet annalium commentator Fenestella.

CAP. XXXV. [1] sunt qui nec principatum Bytho defendunt sed postumatum, ogdoadem ante omnia praemittentes ex tetrade quidem et ipsum sed et aliis nominibus derivatam. primo enim constituunt Proarchen, secondo Anennoeton, tertio Arrheton, quarto Aoraton. [2] ex Proarche itaque processisse primo et quinto loco Archen, ex Anennoeto secondo et sexto loco Acatalepton, ex Arrheto tertio et septimo loco Anonomaston, ex Invisibili quarto et ottavo loco Agenneton. hoc quae ratio disponat ut singula binis locis et quidem tam intercisis nascantur malo ignorare quam discere. quid enim recti habent quae tam perverse proferuntur?

CAP. XXXVI. [1] quanto meliores qui totum hoc taedium de medio amoliti nullum Aeonem voluerunt alium ex alio per gradus revera Gemonios structam, sed mappa quod aiunt missa semel octoiugum istam ex Propatore et Ennoea eius excusam. ex ipso denique rerum motu nomina gerunt: [2] cum (inquiunt) cogitavit proferre, hoc Pater dictus est; cum protulit quia vero protulit, hic Veritas appellata est. cum semetipsum voluit probare, hoc Homo pronuntiatus est. quos autem praecogitavit cum protulit, tane Ecclesia nuncupata est. sonuit Homo Sermonem, et hic est primogenitus filius; et Sermoni accessit Vita, et ogdoas prima conclusa est. sed hoc taedium ominopusillum.

CAP. XXXVII. [1] accipe alia ingenia circulatoria insignioris apud eos magistri qui et pontificali sua auctoritate in hunc modum censuit: “est (inquit) ante omnia Proarche inexcogitabile et inenarrabile innominabile quod ego nomino Monoteta. cum hac erit alia virtus quam et ipsam appello Honoteta. [2] Monotes et Henotes, id est Solitas et Unitas, cum unum essent protulerunt non proferentes initium omnium intellectuale innascibile invisibile quod Sermo Monada vocavit. huic adest consubstantiva virtus quam appellat Unionem. hae igitur virtutes, Solitas, Unitas Singularitas, Unio, ceteras prolaciones Aeonum propagarunt.” o differentia, mutetur Unio et Unitas et Singularitas et Solitas quaqua designaveris — unum est.

CAP. XXXVIII. [1] humanior iam Secundus ut brevior, ogdoadem in duas tetradas dividens, in dexteram et sinistram, in lumen et tenebras, tantum quod desultricem et defectricem illam virtutem non vult ab aliquo deducete Aeonum sed a fructibus de substantiavenientibus.

CAP. XXXIX. ^[1] de ipso iam domino Iesu quanta diversitas scinditur: hi ex omnium Aeonum flosculis eum construunt: illi ex solis decem constitisse contendunt quos Sermo et Vita protulerunt. inde et in ipsum Sermonis et Vitae concurrerint tituli. isti ex duodecim potius ex Hominis et Ecclesiae fetu ideoque Filium Hominis avite pronuntiatum. alii a Christo et Spiritu Sancto constabiliendae conversitati provisus confictum et inde paternae appellationis heredem. ^[2] sunt qui Filium Hominis non aliunde conceperint dicendum quam quia ipsum Patrem pro magno nominis sacramento Hominem appellasse se praesumpserit, ut quid amplius speres de diis dei fide cui nunc adaequaris. talia ingenia superfruticant apud illos ex materni seminis redundantia. atque ita insolescentes doctrinae Valentinianorum in silvas iam exoleverunt Gnosticorum.

EXPLICIT LIBER TERTULLIANI ADVERSUS VALENTINIANOS

Ad Scapulam (To Scapula, Proconsul of Africa)

CAP. I. 1. Nos quidem neque expauescimus, neque pertimescimus ea quae ab ignorantibus patimur, cum ad hanc sectam, utique suscepta condicione eius pacti, uenerimus, ut etiam animas nostras exauctorati in has pugnas accedamus, ea quae Deus repromittit consequi optantes, et ea quae diuersae uitae comminatur pati timentes. 2. Denique cum omni saeuitia uestra concertamus, etiam ultro erumpentes, magisque damnati quam absoluti gaudemus. Itaque hunc libellum non nobis timentes misimus, sed uobis et omnibus inimicis nostris, nedum amicis. 3. Ita enim disciplina iubemur diligere inimicos quoque et orare pro iis qui nos persequuntur, ut haec sit perfecta et propria bonitas nostra, non communis. Amicos enim diligere omnium est, inimicos autem solorum Christianorum. 4. Qui ergo dolemus de ignorantia uestra, et misere mur erroris humani, et futura prospicimus, et signa eorum cottidie intentari uidemus, necesse est uel hoc modo erumpere ad proponenda uobis ea quae palam non uultis audire.

CAP. II. 1. Nos unum Deum colimus, quem omnes naturaliter nostis, ad cuius fulgura et tonitrua contremiscitis, ad cuius beneficia gaudetis. Ceteros et ipsi putatis deos esse, quos nos daemonas scimus. 2. Tamen humani iuris et naturalis potestatis est unicuique quod putauerit colere; nec alii obest aut prodest alterius religio. Sed nec religionis est cogere religionem, quae sponte suscipi debeat, non ui, cum et hostiae ab animo libenti expostulentur. Ita etsi nos compuleritis ad sacrificandum, nihil praestabitis diis uestris: ab inuitis enim sacrificia non desiderabunt, nisi si contentiosi sunt; contensiosus autem Deus non est. 3. Denique qui est uerus, omnia sua ex aequo et profanis et suis praestat. Ideoque et iudicium constituit aeternum de gratis et ingratis. Tamen nos, quos sacrilegos existimatis, nec in furto unquam deprehendistis, nedum in sacrilegio. 4. Omnes autem qui templa despoliant, et per deos iurant, et eosdem colunt, et Christiani non sunt, et sacrilegi tamen deprehenduntur. Longum est si retexamus, quibus aliis modis et derideantur et contemnantur omnes dii ab ipsis cultoribus suis. 5. Sic et circa maiestatem imperatoris infamamur; tamen nunquam Albiniani, nec Nigriani, uel Cassiani inueniri potuerunt Christiani, sed idem ipsi qui per genios eorum in pridie usque iurauerant, qui pro salute eorum hostias et fecerant et uouerant, qui Christianos saepe damnauerant, hostes eorum sunt reperti. 6. Christianus nullius est hostis, nedum imperatoris, quem sciens a Deo suo constitui, necesse est ut et ipsum diligat et reuereatur et honoret et saluum uelit, cum toto Romano imperio, quousque saeculum stabit: tamdiu enim stabit. 7. Colimus ergo et imperatorem sic quomodo et nobis licet et ipsi expedit, ut hominem a Deo secundum; et quicquid est a Deo consecutum est, solo tamen Deo minorem. Hoc et ipse uolet. Sic enim omnibus maior est, dum solo Deo minor est. Sic et ipsis diis maior est, dum et ipsi in potestate eius sunt. 8. Itaque et sacrificamus pro salute imperatoris, sed Deo nostro et ipsius, sed quomodo praecepit Deus, pura prece. Non enim eget Deus, conditor uniuersitatis, odoris aut sanguinis alicuius. Haec enim daemoniorum pabula sunt. 9. Daemonas autem non tantum respuimus, uerum et reuincimus, et cottidie traducimus, et de hominibus expellimus, sicut plurimis notum est. Ita nos magis oramus pro salute imperatoris, ab eo eam postulantes qui praestare potest. 10. Et utique ex disciplina patientiae diuinae agere nos, satis manifestum esse uobis potest, cum tanta hominum multitudo, pars paene maior ciuitatis cuiusque, in silentio et modestia agimus, singuli forte noti magis quam omnes, nec aliunde noscibiles quam de emendatione uitiorum pristinorum. Absit enim ut indigne feramus ea nos pati quae optamus, aut ultionem a nobis aliquam machinemur, quam a Deo exspectamus.

CAP. III. 1. Tamen, sicut supra diximus, doleamus necesse est, quod nulla ciuitas impune latura sit sanguinis nostri effusio nem; sicut et sub Hilariano praeside, cum de areis sepultura rum nostrarum acclamassent: 'Areae non sint!' Areae ipsorum non fuerunt: messes enim suas non egerunt. 2. Ceterum et imbres anni praeteriti quid commemorauerint genus humanum apparuit, cataclysmum scilicet et retro fuisse propter incredulitates et iniquitates hominum; et ignes qui super moenia Carthaginis proxime pependerunt per noctem, quid minati sint, sciunt qui uiderunt; et pristina tonitrua quid sonuerint, sciunt qui obduruerunt. 3. Omnia haec signa sunt imminētis irae Dei, quam necesse est, quoquo modo possumus, ut et nuntiemus et praedicemus, et deprecemur interim localem esse. Vniuersalem enim et supremam suo tempore sentient, qui exempla eius aliter interpretantur. Nam et sol ille in conuentu Vticensi extincto paene lumine adeo portentum fuit, ut non potuerit ex ordinario deliquio hoc pati, positus in suo hypsomate et domicilio. Habetis astrologos. 4. Possumus aequae et exitus quorundam praesidum tibi proponere, qui in fine uitae suae recordati sunt deliquisse, quod uexassent Christianos. Vigellius Saturninus, qui primus hic gladium in nos egit, lumina amisit. Claudius Lucius Herminianus in Cappodocia, cum indigne ferens uxorem suam ad hanc sectam transisse, Christianos crudeliter tractasset, solusque in praetorio suo uastatus peste, conuiuis uermibus ebullisset: 'Nemo sciat, aiebat, ne gaudeant Christiani aut sperent Christianae.' Postea cognito errore suo, quod tormentis quosdam a proposito suo excidere fecisset, paene Christianus decessit. Caecilius Capella in illo exitu Byzantino: 'Christiani gaudete!' exclamauit. 5. Sed qui sibi uidentur impune tulisse, uenient in diem diuini iudicii. Tibi quoque optamus admonitionem solam fuisse, quod, cum Adrumeticum Mauilum idem Caecilius ad bestias damnasset, statim haec uexatio subsecuta est, nunc ex eadem causa interpellatio sanguinis. Sed memento de cetero.

CAP. IV. 1. Non te terremus, qui nec timemus; sed uelim, ut omnes saluos facere possimus, monendo mh qeomaxein. Potes et officio iurisdictionis tuae fungi et humanitatis meminisse, uel quia et uos sub gladio estis. 2. Quid enim amplius tibi mandatur quam nocentes confessos damnare, negantes autem ad tormenta reuocare? Videtis ergo quomodo ipsi uos contra mandata faciatis, ut confessos negare cogatis. Adeo confitemini innocentes esse nos, quos dannare statim ex confessione non uultis. Si autem contenditis ad elidendos nos, iam ergo innocentiam expugnatis. 3. Quanti autem praesides, et constantiores et crudeliores, dissimulauerunt ab huiusmodi causis ! ut Cincius Seuerus, qui Thysdri ipse dedit remedium, quomodo responderent Christiani ut dimitti possent; ut Vespronius Candidus, qui Christianum quasi tumultuosum ciuibus suis satisfacere dimisit; ut Asper, qui modice uexatum hominem et statim deiectum, nec sacrificium compulit facere, ante professus inter aduocatos et adessores, dolere se incidisse primum in hanc causam. Pudens etiam missum ad se Christianum, in elogio concussionis eius intellecta, dimisit, scisso eodem elogio, sine accusatore negans se auditurum hominem secundum mandatum. 4. Haec omnia tibi et de officio suggeri possunt, et ab eisdem aduocatis, qui et ipsi beneficia habent Christianorum, licet acclament, quae uolunt. 5. Nam et cuiusdam notarius, cum a daemone praecipitaretur, liberatus est; et quorundam propinquus et puerulus; et quanti honesti uiri (de uulgaribus enim non dicimus) aut a daemoniis aut ualetudinibus remediati sunt ! Ipse etiam Seuerus, pater Antonini, Christianorum memor fuit. Nam et Proculum Christianum qui Torpacion cognominabatur, Euhodiae procuratorem, qui eum per oleum aliquando curauerat, requisivit et in palatio suo habuit usque ad mortem eius; quem et Antoninus optime nouerat, lacte Christiano educatus. 6. Sed et clarissimas feminas et clarissimos uiros Seuerus, sciens huius sectae esse, non modo non laesit, uerum et testimonio exornauit, et populo furenti in nos palam restitit. Marcus quoque Aurelias in Germanica expeditione Christianorum militum orationibus ad Deum factis imbres in siti illa impetrauit. Quando non geniculationibus et ieiunationibus nostris etiam siccitates sunt depulsae? Tunc et populus acclamans Deo deorum, qui solus potens. In Iouis nomine Deo nostro testimonium reddidit. 7. Praeter haec depositum non abnegamus, matrimonium nullius adulteramus, pupillos pie tractamus, indigentibus refrigeramus, nulli malum pro malo reddimus. Viderint, qui sectam mentiuntur, quos et ipsi recusamus. Quis denique de nobis allo nomine queritur? Quod aliud negotium patitur Christianus, nisi suae sectae, quam incestam, quam crudelem tanto tempore nemo probauit? 8. Pro tanta innocentia, pro tanta probitate, pro iustitia, pro pudicitia, pro fide, pro ueritate, pro Deo uiuo, cremamur; quod nec sacrilegi, nec hostes publici, uerum nec tot maiestatis rei pati solent. Nam et nunc a praeside Legionis, et a praeside Mauritaniae uexatur hoc nomen, sed gladio tenus, sicut et a primordio mandatum est animaduerti in huiusmodi. Sed maiora certamina maiora sequuntur praemia.

CAP. V. 1. Crudelitas uestra gloria est nostra. Vide tantum ne hoc ipso, quod talia sustinemus, ad hoc solum uideamur erumpere, ut hoc ipsum probemus, nos haec non timere, sed ultro uocare. Arrius Antoninus in Asia cum persequeretur 5 instanter, omnes illius ciuitatis Christiani ante tribunalia eius se manu facta obtulerunt. Tum ille, paucis duci iussis, reliquis ait: JW dei=loi, ei0 qe/lete a)pognh&skein, krhmnouj h@ bro&xouj e!xete. 2. Hoc si placuerit et hic fieri, quid facies de tantis milibus hominum, tot uiris ac feminis, omnis sexus, omnis aetatis, omnis dignitatis, offerentibus se tibi? Quantis ignibus, quantis gladiis opus erit ! Quid ipse Carthago passura est, decimata a te, cum propinquos, cum contubernales suos illic unusquisque cognouerit, cum uiderit illic fortasse et tui ordinis uiros et matronas, et principales quasque personal, et amicorum tuorum uel propinquos uel amicos? 3. Parce ergo tibi, si non nobis. Parce Carthagini, si non tibi. Parce prouinciae, quae uisa intentione tua obnoxia facta est concussionibus et militum et inimicorum suorum cuiusque. 4. Magistrum neminem habemus, nisi solum

Deum. Hic ante te est, nec abscondi potest, sed cui nihil facere possis. Ceterum quos putas tibi magistros, homines sunt et ipsi morituri quandoque. Nec tamen deficiet haec secta, quam tunc magis aedificari scias, cum caedi uidetur. Quisque enim tantam tolerantiam spectans, ut aliquo scrupulo percussus et inquirere accenditur, quid sit in causa, et ubi cognouerit ueritatem et ipse statim sequitur.

[1] Qui status fidei, quae ratio veritatis, quod praescriptum disciplinae inter cetera saecularium errorum etiam spectaculorum voluptates adimat, dei servi, cognoscite, qui cum maxime ad deum acceditis, recognoscite, qui iam accessisse vos testificati et confessi estis, ne aut ignorando aut dissimulando quis peccet. [2] tanta est enim voluptatum vis, ut et ignorantiam protelet in occasionem et conscientiam corrumpat in dissimulationem. [3] ad utrumque adhuc forsitan alicui opiniones ethnicorum blandiantur, qui in ista causa adversus nos ita argumentari consuerunt: nihil obstrepere religioni in animo et in conscientia tanta solacia extrinsecus oculorum vel aurium nec vero deum offendi oblectatione hominis, qua salvo erga deum metu et honore suo in tempore et suo in loco frui scelus non sit. [4] atquin hoc cum maxime paramus demonstrare, quemadmodum ista non competant verae religioni et vero obsequio erga verum deum. [5] sunt qui existimant Christianos, expeditum morti genus, ad hanc obstinationem abdicatione voluptatum erudiri, quo facilius vitam contemnant amputatis quasi retinaculis eius nec desiderent, quam iam supervacuum sibi fecerint, ut hoc consilio potius et humano prospectu, non divino praescripto definitum existimetur. [6] pigebat scilicet etiam perseverantes tantis in voluptatibus propter dominum mori. quamquam, etsi ita esset, tam apto consilio tantae obstinatio disciplinae debebat obsequium.

[1] Iam vero nemo est, qui non hoc quoque praetendat: omnia a deo instituta et homini attributa, sicut praedicamus, et utique bona omnia, ut boni auctoris; inter haec deputari universa ista, ex quibus spectacula instruuntur, equum verbi gratia et leonem et vires corporis et vocis suavitates; igitur neque alienum videri posse neque inimicum deo quod de conditione constet ipsius, neque cultoribus dei deputandum, quod ei non sit inimicum, quia nec alienum. [2] plane et ipsae extructiones locorum, quod saxa, quod caementa, quod marmora, quod columnae dei res sunt, qui ea ad instrumentum terrae dedit; sed et ipsi actus sub caelo dei transiguntur.

Quam sapiens argumentatrix sibi videtur ignorantia humana, praesertim, cum aliquid eiusmodi de gaudiis et de fructibus saeculi metuit amittere. [3] plures denique invenias, quos magis periculum voluptatis quam vitae avocet ab hac secta. nam mortem etiam stultus ut debitam non extimescit, voluptatem etiam sapiens ut datam non contemnit, cum alia non sit et stulto et sapienti vitae gratia nisi voluptas. [4] nemo negat, quia nemo ignorat, quod ultro natura suggerit, deum esse universitatis conditorem eamque universitatem tam bonam quam homini mancipatam. [5] sed quia non penitus deum norunt nisi naturali iure, non etiam familiari, de longinquo, non de proximo, necesse est ignorent, qualiter administrari aut iubeat aut prohibeat quae instituit, simul quae vis sit aemula ex adverso adulterandis usibus divinae conditionis, quia neque voluntatem neque adversarium noveris eius quem minus noveris. [6] non ergo hoc solum respiciendum est, a quo omnia sint instituta, sed a quo conversa. ita enim apparebit, cui usui sint instituta, si appareat, cui non. [7] multum interest inter corruptelam et integritatem, quia multum est inter institutorem et interpolatorem.

Ceterum omnes species malorum, quae etiam ethnici ut indubitata et prohibent et defendunt, ex operibus dei constant. [8] vides homicidium ferro veneno magicis devinctionibus perfici: tam ferrum dei res est quam herbae, quam angeli. numquid tamen in hominis necem auctor ista providit? atquin omnem homicidii speciem uno et principali praecepto interimit: “non occides.” [9] proinde aurum aes argentum ebur lignum et quaecumque fabricandis idolis materia captatur quis in saeculo posuit nisi saeculi auctor deus? numquid tamen, ut haec adversus ipsum adorentur? atquin summa offensa penes illum idololatria. quid non dei est quod deum offendit? sed cum offendit, dei esse desiit, et cum desiit, offendit. [10] ipse homo, omnium flagitiorum auctor, non tantum opus dei, verum etiam imago est; et tamen et corpore et spiritu desciiit a suo institutore. neque enim oculos ad concupiscentiam sumpsimus et linguam ad maliloquium et aures ad exceptaculum maliloquii et gulam ad gulae crimen et ventrem ad gulae societatem et genitalia ad excessus impudicitiae et manus ad vim et gressus ad vagam vitam, aut spiritus ideo insitus corpori, ut insidiarum, ut fraudium, ut iniquitatum cogitatorium fieret. non opinor. [11] nam si omnem malignitatem et si tantum malitiam excogitatam dens exactor innocentiae odit, indubitate quaecumque condidit non in exitum operum constat condidisse quae damnat, licet eadem opera per ea quae condidit administrentur, quando haec sit tota ratio damnationis: perversa administratio conditionis a conditis.

[1] hac conscientia instructi adversus opinionem ethnicorum convertamur magis ad nostrorum detractatus. quorundam enim fides aut simplicior aut scrupulosior ad hanc abdicationem spectaculorum de scripturis auctoritatem exposcit et se in incertum constituit, quod non significanter neque nominatim denuntietur servis dei abstinencia eiusmodi. [2] plane nusquam invenimus, quemadmodum aperte positum est: “non occides, non idolum coles, non adulterium, non fraudem admittes”, ita exerte definitum: non ibis in circum, non in theatrum, agonem, munus non spectabis. [3] sed invenimus ad hanc quoque speciem pertinere illam primam vocem David: “felix vir”, inquit, “qui non abiit in concilium impiorum et in via peccatorum non stetit nec in cathedra pestium sedit.” [4] nam etsi iustum illum videtur praedicasse, quod in concilio et in consessu Iudaeorum de necando domino consultantium non communicavit, late tamen semper scriptura divina dividitur, ubicumque secundum praesentis rei sensum etiam disciplina munitur, ut hic quoque non sit aliena vox a spectaculorum interdictione. [5] si enim pauculos tunc Iudaeos impiorum concilium vocavit, quanto magis tantum conventum ethnici populi? minus impii ethnici, minus peccatores, minus hostes Christi quam tunc Iudaei? [6] quid, quod et cetera congruunt: nam apud spectacula et in cathedra sedetur et in via statur; vias enim et cardines vocant balteorum per ambitum et discrimina popularium per proclivum; cathedra quoque nominatur ipse in anfractu ad consessum situs. [7] itaque e contrario “infelix qui in quodcumque concilium impiorum abierit et in quacumque via peccatorum steterit et in quacumque cathedra pestium sederit.” generaliter dictum intellegamus, cum quid aliter, etiam specialiter interpretari capit. nam et specialiter quaedam pronuntiata generaliter sapiunt. [8] cum deus Israhelitas admonet disciplinae vel obiurgat, utique ad omnes habet; cum Aegypto et Aethiopiae exitium comminatur, utique in omnem gentem peccatricem praeiudicat. sic omnis gens peccatrix Aegyptus et Aethiopia a specie ad genus, quemadmodum etiam omne spectaculum concilium impiorum a genere ad speciem.

[1] ne quis argutari nos putet, ad principalem auctoritatem convertar ipsius signaculi nostri. cum aquam ingressi Christianam fidem in legis suae verba profitemur, renuntiassse nos diabolo et pompae et angelis eius ore nostro contestamur. [2] quid erit summum atque praecipuum, in quo diabolus et pompae et angeli eius censeantur, quam idololatria? ex qua omnis immundus et nequam spiritus ut ita dixerim, + quia nec diutius de hoc. [3] igitur si ex idololatria universam spectaculorum paraturam constare constiterit, indubitate praeiudicatum erit etiam ad spectacula pertinere renuntiationis nostrae testimonium in lavacro, quae diabolo et pompae et angelis eius sint mancipata, scilicet per idololatriam. [4] commemorabimus origines singulorum, quibus in cunabulis in saeculo adoleverint exinde titulos, quibus nominibus nuncupentur, exinde apparatus, quibus superstitionibus instruantur, tum loca, quibus praesidibus dicentur, tum artes, quibus auctoribus deputentur. si quid ex his non ad idolum pertinuerit, id neque ad idololatriam neque ad nostram eierationem pertinebit.

festis et templis et religionibus reputat. [4] nihil iam de caussa vocabuli, cum rei caussa idololatria sit. nam et cum promiscue ludi Liberalia vocarentur, honorem Liberi patris manifeste sonabant. Libero enim a rusticis primo fiebant ob beneficium quod ei adscribunt demonstrata gratia vini. [5] exinde ludi Consualia dicti, qui initio Neptunum honorabant. eundem enim et Consum vocant. dehinc Ecurria ab equis Marti Romulus dixit; quamquam et Consualia Romulo defendunt, quod ea Conso dicaverit deo, ut volunt, consilii, eius scilicet, quo tunc Sabinarum virginum rapinam militibus suis in matrimonia excogitavit. [6] probum plane consilium et nunc quoque inter ipsos Romanos iustum et licitum, ne dixerim penes deum. facit enim et hoc ad originis maculam, ne bonum existimes quod initium a malo accepit, ab impudentia a violentia ab odio, a fratricida institutore, a filio Martis. [7] et nunc ara Conso illi in circo demersa est ad primas metas sub terra cum inscriptione eiusmodi: CONSUS CONSIPIO MARS DUELLO LARES +COILLO +POTENTES. sacrificant apud eam nonis Iuliis sacerdotes publici, XII. Kalend. Septembres flamen Quirinalis et virgines. [8] dehinc idem Romulus Iovi Feretrio ludos instituit in Tarpeio, quos Tarpeios dictos et Capitolinos Piso tradit; post hunc Numa Pompilius Marti et Robigini fecit (nam et robiginis deam finxerunt); dehinc Tullus Hostilius dehinc Ancus Marcius et ceteri. qui quos quem per ordinem et quibus idolis ludos instituerint, positum est apud Suetonium Tranquillum vel a quibus Tranquillus accepit. sed haec satis erunt ad originis de idololatria reatum.

[1] accedit ad testimonium antiquitatis subsecuta posteritas formam originis de titulis huius quoque temporis praeferens, per quos signatum est, cui idolo et cui superstitioni utriusque generis ludi notarentur. [2] Megalenses enim et Apollinares, item Cereales et Neptunales et Latiare et Florales in commune celebrantur, reliqui ludorum de natalibus et sollemnibus regum et publicis prosperitatibus et municipalibus festis superstitionis causas habent. [3] inter quos etiam privatorum memoriis legatariae editiones parentant, id quoque secundum institutionis antiquitatem. nam et a primordio bifariam ludi censebantur, sacri et funebres id est deis nationum et mortuis. [4] sed de idololatria nihil differt apud nos, sub quo nomine et titulo, dum ad eosdem spiritus perveniat, quibus renuntiamus. licebit mortuis, licebit deis suis

Aegyptio superstitio est. frugebat daemonum concilium sine sua Matre Magna; ea itaque illic praesidet euripo. [6] Consus, ut diximus, apud metas sub terra delitescit Murcias. eas quoque idolum fecit: Murciam enim deam amoris volunt, cui in illa parte aedem voverunt. [7] animadvertite, Christiane, quot nomina immunda possederint circum. aliena est tibi regio, quam tot diaboli spiritus occupaverunt.

de locis quidem locus est retractandi ad praeveniendam quorundam interrogationem. [8] quid enim, inquis, si alio in tempore circum adiero, periclitabor de inquinamento? nulla est praescriptio de locis. nam non sola ista conciliabula spectaculorum, sed etiam templa ipsa sine periculo disciplinae adire servus dei potest urgente causa simplici dumtaxat, quae non pertineat ad proprium eius loci negotium vel officium. [9] ceterum et plateae et forum et balneae et stabula et ipsae domus nostrae sine idolis omnino non sunt: totum saeculum satanas et angeli eius repleverunt. [10] non tamen quod in saeculo sumus, a deo excidimus, sed si quid de saeculi criminibus attigerimus. proinde si Capitolium, si Serapeum sacrificator vel adorator intravero, a deo excidam, quemadmodum circum vel theatrum spectator. loca nos non contaminant per se, sed quae in locis fiunt, a quibus et ipsa loca contaminari altercati sumus: de contaminatis contaminamur. [11] propterea autem commemoramus, quibus eiusmodi loca dicentur ut eorum demonstramus esse quae in iis locis fiunt, quibus ipsa loca dicantur.

[1] nunc de artificio quo circenses exhibentur. res equestris retro simplex: de dorso agebatur, et utique communis usus reus non erat. sed cum ad ludos coactus est, transiit a dei munere ad daemoniorum officia. [2] itaque Castori et Polluci deputatur haec species, quibus equos a Mercurio distributos Stesichorus docet. sed et Neptunus equestris est, quem Graeci HIPPION appellant. [3] de iugo vero Iovi, quadrigas Soli, bigas Lunae sanxerunt. sed et primus Erichthonius currus et quattuor ausus iungere equos rapidusque rotis insistere victor.

Erichthonius, Minervae et Vulcani filius, et quidem de caduca in terram libidine, portentum est daemonicum, immo diabolus ipse, non coluber. [4] si vero Trochilus Argivus auctor est currus, primae Iunoni id opus suum dedicavit. si Romae Romulus quadrigam primus ostendit, puto et ipse inter idola conscriptus est, si idem est Quirinus. [5] talibus auctoribus quadrigae productae merito et aurigas coloribus idololatriae vestierunt. namque initio duo soli fuerunt, albus et russeus. albus hiemi ob nives candidas, russeus aestati ob solis ruborem voti erant. sed postea tam voluptate quam superstitione provecta russeum alii Marti, alii album Zephyris consecraverunt, prasinum vero Terrae matri vel verno, venetum Caelo et Mari vel autumnno. [6] cum autem omnis species idololatriae damnata sit a deo, utique etiam illa damnatur, quae elementis mundialibus profanatur.

[1] transeamus ad scaenicas res, quarum et originem communem et titulos pares secundum ipsam ab initio ludorum appellationem et administrationem coniunctam cum re equestri iam ostendimus. [2] apparatus etiam ex ea parte consortes, qua ad scaenam a templis et aris et illa infelicitate turis et sanguinis inter tibias et tubas itur duobus inquinatissimis arbitris funerum et sacrorum, dissignatore et haruspice. [3] ita cum de originibus ludorum ad circenses transiimus, inde nunc ad scaenicos ludos dirigemus a loci vitio. theatrum proprie sacrarium Veneris est. hoc denique modo id genus operis in saeculo evasis. [4] nam saepe censores nascentia cum maxime theatra destruebant moribus consulentes, quorum scilicet periculum ingens de lascivia providebant, ut iam hinc ethnicis in testimonium cedat sententia ipsorum nobiscum faciens et nobis in exaggerationem disciplinae etiam humana praerogativa. [5] itaque Pompeius Magnus solo theatro suo minor cum illam arcem omnium turpitudinum extruxisset, veritus quandoque memoriae suae censoriam animadversionem Veneris aedem superposuit et ad dedicationem edicto populum vocans non theatrum, sed Veneris templum nuncupavit, cui subiecimus, inquit, gradus spectaculorum. [6] ita damnatum et damnandum opus templi titulo praetexuit et disciplinam superstitione delusit. sed Veneri et Libero convenit. duo ista daemonia conspirata et coniurata inter se sunt ebrietatis et libidinis. [7] itaque theatrum Veneris Liberi quoque domus est. nam et alios ludos scaenicos Liberalia proprie vocabant, praeterquam Libero devotos, quae sunt Dionysia penes Graecos, etiam a Libero institutos. [8] et est plane in artibus quoque scaenicis Liberi et Veneris patrocinium. quae privata et propria sunt scaenae, de gestu et corporis flexu mollitiam Veneri et Libero immolant, illi per sexum, illi per luxum dissolutis. [9] quae vero voce et modis et organis et litteris transiguntur, Apollines et Musas et Minervas et Mercurios mancipes habent.

Oderis, Christiane, quorum auctores non potes non odisse.

XI

[1] superest illius insignissimi spectaculi ac receptissimi recognitio. munus dictum est ab officio, quoniam officium etiam muneris nomen est. officium

autem mortuis hoc spectaculo facere se veteres arbitrabantur, posteaquam illud humaniore atrocitate temperaverunt. [2] nam olim, quoniam animas defunctorum humano sanguine propitiari creditum erat, captivos vel mali status servos mercati in exequiis immolabant. [3] postea placuit impietatem voluptate adumbrare. itaque quos paraverant, armis quibus tunc et qualiter poterant eruditos, tantum ut occidi discerent, mox edicto die inferiarum apud tumulos erogabant. ita mortem homicidiis consolabantur. [4] haec muneri origo. sed panlatim provecti ad tantam gratiam, ad quantam et crudelitatem, quia ferarum voluptati satis non fiebat nisi et feris humana corpora dissiparentur. quod ergo mortuis litabatur, utique parentationi deputabatur; quae species proinde idololatria est, quoniam et idololatria parentationis est species: tam haec quam illa mortuis ministrat. [5] in mortuorum autem idolis daemonia consistunt.

ut et titulos considerem, licet transierit hoc genus editionis ab honoribus mortuorum ad honores viventium, quaesturas dico et magistratus et flaminia et sacerdotia, cum tamen nominis dignitas idololatriae crimine teneatur, necesse est quicquid dignitatis nomine administratur communicet etiam maculas eius, a qua habet causas. [6] idem de apparatus interpretabimur in ipsorum honorum suggestu deputandis, quod purpurae, quod fasces, quod vittae, quod coronae, quod denique contiones et edicta et pultes pridianae sine pompa diaboli, sine invitatione daemonum non sunt. [7] quid ergo de horrendo loco perorem, quem nec periuria sustinent? pluribus enim et asperioribus nominibus amphitheatrum consecratur quam Capitolium: omnium daemonum templum est. tot illic immundi spiritus considunt, quot homines capit. ut et de artibus concludam, Martem et Dianam utriusque ludi praesides novimus.

[1] satis, opinor, implevimus ordinem, quot et quibus modis spectacula idololatriam committant, de originibus, de titulis, de apparatus, de locis, de artificiis, quo certi simus nulla ex parte competere nobis ea, qui bis idolis renuntiamus. [2] non quod idolum sit aliquid, ut apostolus ait, sed quoniam quae faciunt daemones faciunt consistentibus scilicet in consecrationibus idolorum, sive mortuorum sive, ut putant, deorum. [3] propterea igitur, quoniam utraque species idolorum condicionis unius est, dum mortui et dei unum sunt, utraque idololatria abstinemus. [4] nec minus templa quam

monumenta despuimus, neutram aram novimus, neutram effigiem adoramus, non sacrificamus, non parentamus. sed neque de sacrificio et parentato edimus, quia non possumus cenam dei edere et cenam daemoniorum. [5] si ergo gulam et ventrem ab inquinamentis liberamus, quanto magis augustiora nostra, et aures et oculos, ab idolothytis et necrothytis voluptatibus abstinemus, quae non intestinis transiguntur, sed in ipso spiritu et anima digeruntur, quorum munditia magis ad deum pertinet quam intestinorum.

[1] ceterum rettulimus supra de locorum condicione, quod non per semetipsa nos inquinant, sed per ea quae illic geruntur, per quae, simul inquinamentum combiberunt, tunc etiam in alteros respuunt. viderit ergo, ut diximus, principalis titulus, idololatria; reliquas ipsarum rerum qualitates contrarias dei omnes feramus. [2] deus praecepit spiritum sanctum, utpote pro naturae suae bono tenerum et delicatum, tranquillitate et lenitate et quiete et pace tractare, non furore, non bile, non ira, non dolore inquietare. [3] huic quomodo cum spectaculis poterit convenire? omne enim spectaculum sine concussione spiritus non est. ubi enim voluptas, ibi et studium, per quod scilicet voluptas sapit; ubi studium, ibi et aemulatio, per quam studium sapit. [4] porro et ubi aemulatio, ibi et furor et bilis et ira et dolor et cetera ex his, quae cum his non competunt disciplinae. [5] nam et si qui modeste et probe spectaculis fruitur pro dignitatis vel aetatis vel etiam naturae suae condicione, non tamen immobilis animi est et sine tacita spiritus passione. [6] nemo ad voluptatem venit sine affectu, nemo affectum sine casibus suis patitur. ipsi casus incitamenta sunt affectus. ceterum si cessat affectus, nulla est voluptas, et est reus iam ille vanitatis eo conveniens, ubi nihil consequitur. [7] puto autem etiam vanitas extranea est nobis. quid quod et ipse se iudicat inter eos positus, quorum se similem nolens utique detestatorem confitetur? [8] nobis satis non est, si ipsi nihil tale facimus, nisi et talia factitantibus non conferamur. “si furem” inquit “videbas, concurrebas cum eo.” utinam ne in saeculo quidem simul cum illis moraremur! sed tamen in saecularibus separamur, quia saeculum dei est, saecularia autem diaboli.

XVI

[1] similiter impudicitiam omnem amoliri iubemur. hoc igitur modo etiam a theatro separamur, quod est privatum consistorium impudicitiae, ubi nihil probatur quam quod alibi non probatur. [2] ita summa gratia eius de spurcitia

plurimum concinnata est, quam Atellanus gesticulatur, quam mimus etiam per muliebres repraesentat, sensum sexus et pudoris exterminans, ut facilius domi quam scaenae erubescant, quam denique pantomimus a pueritia patitur ex corpore, ut artifex esse possit. [3] ipsa etiam prostibula, publicae libidinis hostiae, in scaena proferuntur, plus miserae in praesentia feminarum, quibus solis latebant, perque omnis aetatis, omnis dignitatis ora transducuntur; locus, stipes, elogium, etiam quibus opus non est, praedicatur, etiam (taceo de reliquis) quae in tenebris et in speluncis suis delitescere decebat, ne diem contaminarent. [4] erubescat senatus, erubescant ordines omnes! ipsae illae pudoris sui interemprices de gestibus suis ad lucem et populum expavescentes semel anno erubescunt.

[1] quodsi stadium contendas in scripturis nominari, sane obtinebis. sed quae in stadio geruntur, indigna conspectu tuo non negabis, pugnos et calces et colaphos et omnem petulantiam manus et quaecumque humani oris, id est divinae imaginis, depugnationem. [2] non probabis usquam vanos cursus et iaculatus et saltus vaniores, nusquam tibi vires aut iniuriosae aut vanae placebunt, sed nec cura facticii corporis, ut plasticam dei supergressa, et propter Graeciae otium altiles homines oderis. [3] et palaestrica diaboli negotium est: primos homines diabolus elisit. ipse gestus colubrina vis est, tenax ad occupandum, tortuosa ad obligandum, liquida ad elabendum. nullus tibi coronarum usus est; quid de coronis voluptates aucuparis?

[1] exspectabimus nunc ut et amphitheatri repudium de scripturis petamus? si saevitiam, si impietatem, si feritatem permissam nobis contendere possumus, eamus in amphitheatrum. si tales sumus quales dicimur, delectemur sanguine humano. [2] “bonum est, cum puniuntur nocentes.” quis hoc nisi nocens negabit? et tamen innocentes de supplicio alterius laetari non oportet, cum magis competat innocenti dolere, quod homo, par eius, tam nocens factus est, ut tam crudeliter impendatur. [3] quis autem mihi sponsor est, nocentes semper vel ad bestias vel ad quodcumque supplicium decerni, ut non innocentiae quoque inferatur aut ultione iudicantis aut infirmitate defensionis aut instantia quaestionis? quam melius ergo est nescire cum mali puniuntur, ne sciam et cum boni pereunt, si tamen bonum sapiunt. [4] certe quidem gladiatores innocentes in ludum veneunt, ut publicae voluptatis hostiae fiant. etiam qui damnantur in ludum, quale est ut de leviori delicto in homicidas emendatione proficiant?

[5] sed haec ethnicis respondi. ceterum absit ut de istius spectacula aversione diutius discat Christianus. quamquam nemo haec omnia plenius exprimere potest nisi qui adhuc spectat. malo non implere quam meminisse.

[1] quam vana igitur, immo desperata argumentatio eorum, qui sine dubio tergiversatione amittendae voluptatis optendunt nullam eius abstinenciae mentionem specialiter vel localiter in scripturis determinari, quae directo prohibeat eiusmodi conventibus inseri servum dei. [2] novam proxime defensionem suaviludii cuiusdam audiui. sol, inquit, immo ipse etiam deus de caelo spectat nec contaminatur. sane, sol et in cloacam radios suos defert nec inquinatur. [3] utinam autem deus nulla flagitia hominum spectaret, ut omnes iudicium evaderemus. sed spectat et latrocinia, spectat et falsa et adulteria et fraudes et idololatrias et spectacula ipsa. et idcirco ergo nos non spectabimus, ne videamur ab illo, qui spectat omnia. [4] comparas, homo, reum et iudicem, reum, qui, quia videtur, reus est, iudicem, qui, quia videt, iudex est. [5] numquid ergo et extra limites circi furori studemus et extra cardines theatri impudicitiae intendimus et insolentiae extra stadium et immisericordiae extra

amphitheatrum, quoniam deus etiam extra cameras et gradus et apulias oculos habet? erramus: nusquam et numquam excusatur quod deus damnat, nusquam et numquam licet quod semper et ubique non licet. [6] haec est veritatis integritas et, quae ei debetur, disciplinae plenitudo et aequalitas timoris et fides obsequii, non inmutare sententiam nec variare iudicium. non potest aliud esse, quod vere quidem est bonum seu malum. omnia autem penes veritatem dei fixa sunt.

[1] ethnici, quos penes nulla est veritatis plenitudo, quia nec doctor veritatis deus, malum et bonum pro arbitrio et libidine interpretantur: alibi bonum quod alibi malum, et alibi malum quod alibi bonum. [2] sic ergo evenit, ut, qui in publico vix necessitate vesicae tunicam levet, idem in circo aliter non exuat, nisi totum pudorem in faciem omnium intentet, ut et qui filiae virginis ab omni spurco verbo aures tuetur, ipse eam in theatrum ad illas voces gesticulationesque deducat, [3] et qui in plateis litem manu agentem aut compescit aut detestatur, idem in stadio gravioribus pugnis suffragium ferat, et qui ad cadaver hominis communi lege defuncti exhorret, idem in amphitheatro derosa et dissipata et in suo sanguine squalentia corpora patientissimis oculis desuper incumbat, [4] immo qui propter homicidae poenam probandam ad spectaculum veniat, idem gladiatorem ad homicidium flagellis et virgis compellat invitum, et qui insigniori cuique homicidae leonem poscit, idem gladiatori atroci petat rudem et pilleum praemium conferat, illum vero confectum etiam oris spectaculo repetat, libentius recognoscens de proximo quem voluit occidere de longinquo, tanto durior, si non voluit.

[1] quid mirum? inaequata ista hominum miscentium et commutantium statum boni et mali per inconstantiam sensus et iudicii varietatem. [2] etenim ipsi auctores et administratores spectaculorum quadrigarios scaenicos xysticos arenarios illos amatissimos, quibus viri animas, feminae autem illis etiam corpora sua substernunt, propter quos se in ea committunt quae reprehendunt, ex eadem arte, qua magnificiunt, deponunt et deminuunt, immo manifeste damnant ignominia et capitis minutione, arcentes curia rostris senatu equite ceterisque honoribus omnibus simul et ornamentis quibusdam. [3] quanta perversitas! amant quos multant, depretiant quos probant, artem magnificant, artificem notant. [4] quale iudicium est, ut ob ea quis offuscetur, per quae promeretur? immo quanta confessio est malae rei! cuius auctores, cum acceptissimi sint, sine nota non sunt.

[1] quot adhuc modis perorabimus, nihil ex his quae spectaculis deputantur placitum deo esse aut congruens servo dei quod deo placitum non sit? [2] si omnia propter diabolum instituta et ex diaboli rebus instructa monstravimus (nihil enim non diaboli est quicquid dei non est vel deo displicet), hoc erit pompa diaboli, adversus quem in signaculo fidei eieramus. [3] quod autem

eieramus, neque facto neque dicto neque visu neque prospectu participare debemus. ceterum nonne eieramus et rescindimus signaculum rescindendo testationem eius? numquid ergo superest, ut ab ipsis ethnicis responsum flagitemus? illi nobis iam renuntient, an liceat Christianis spectaculo uti. atquin hinc vel maxime intelligunt factum Christianum, de repudio spectaculorum. [4] itaque negat manifeste qui per quod agnoscitur tollit. quid autem spei superest in eiusmodi homine? nemo in castra hostium transit nisi proiectis armis suis, nisi destitutis signis et sacramentis principis sui, nisi pactus simul perire.

XXVI

[1] Cur ergo non eiusmodi etiam daemoniis penetrabiles fiant? Nam et exemplum accidit domino teste eius mulieris, quae theatrum adiit, et inde cum daemonio rediit. [2] itaque in exorcismo cum oneraretur immundus spiritus, quod ausus esset fidelem aggredi, constanter: "et iustissime quidem" inquit "feci: in meo eam inveni." [3] constat et alii linteum in somnis ostensum eius diei nocte, qua tragoedum audierat, cum exprobratione nominato tragoedo nec ultra quintum diem eam mulierem in saeculo fuisse. [4] quot utique et alia documenta cesserunt de his qui cum diabolo apud spectacula communicando a domino exciderunt. “nemo enim potest duobus dominis servire.” “quid luci cum tenebris? quid vitae et morti?”

[1] odisse debemus istos conventus et coetus ethnicorum, vel quod illic nomen dei blasphematur, illic in nos quotidiani leones expostulantur, inde persecutiones decernuntur, inde temptationes emittuntur. [2] quid facies in illo suffragiorum impiorum aestuario reprehensus? non quasi aliquid illic pati possis ab hominibus (nemo te cognoscit Christianum), sed recogita, quid de te fiat in caelo. [3] dubitas illo enim momento, quo diabolus in ecclesia furit, omnes angelos prospicere de caelo et singulos denotare, quis blasphemiam dixerit, quis audierit quis linguam, quis aures diabolo adversus deum ministraverit? [4] non ergo fugies sedilia hostium Christi, illam cathedram pestilentiarum ipsumque aerem qui desuper incubat scelestis vocibus conspurcatum? sint dulcia licebit et grata et simplicia, etiam honesta quaedam. nemo venenum temperat felle et elleboro, sed conditis pulmentis et bene saporatis, et plurimum dulcibus id mali inicit. ita et diabolus letale quod conficit rebus dei gratissimis et acceptissimis imbuat. [5] omnia illic seu fortia seu honesta seu sonora seu canora seu subtilia perinde habe ac stillicidia mellis de lucunculo venenato nec tanti gulam facias voluptatis quanti periculum per suavitatem.

[1] saginentur eiusmodi dulcibus convivae sui: et loca et tempora et invitator ipsorum est. nostrae coenae, nostrae nuptiae nondum sunt. non possumus cum illis discumbere, quia nec illi nobiscum: vicibus disposita res est. nunc illi laetantur, nos conflictamur. [2] “Saeculum” inquit “gaudebit, vos tristes eritis.” lugeamus ergo, dum ethnici gaudent, ut, cum lugere coeperint, gaudeamus, ne pariter nunc gaudentes tunc quoque pariter lugeamus. [3] delicatus es, Christiane, si et in saeculo voluptatem concupiscis, immo nimium stultus, si hoc existimas voluptatem. [4] philosophi quidam hoc nomen quieti et tranquillitati dederunt, in ea gaudent, in ea avocantur, in ea etiam glorianur. tu mihi metas et scaenam et pulverem et harenam suspiras? [5] dicas velim: non

possumus vivere sine voluptate, qui mori cum voluptate debemus? nam quod est aliud votum nostrum quam quod et apostoli, exire de saeculo et recipi apud dominum? Hic voluptas, ubi et votum.

saevioribus quam ipsi flammis saevierunt insultantes contra Christianos liquescentes? [4] quos praeterea? sapientes illos philosophos coram discipulis suis una conflagrantibus erubescences, quibus nihil ad deum pertinere suadebant, quibus animas aut nullas aut non in pristina corpora redituras affirmabant? etiam poetas non ad Rhadamanthi nec ad Minonis, sed ad inopinati Christi tribunal palpitantes? [5] tunc magis tragoedi audiendi, magis scilicet vocales in sua propria calamitate; tunc histriones cognoscendi, solutiores multo per ignem; tunc spectandus auriga in flammea rota totus ruber; tunc xystici contemplandi, non in gymnasiis, sed in igne iaculati, nisi quod ne tunc quidem illos velim visos, ut qui malim ad eos potius conspectum insatiabilem conferre, qui in dominum desaevierunt. [6] hic est ille, dicam, fabri aut quaestuariae filius, sabbati destructor, Samarites et daemonium habens; hic est quem a Iuda redemistis, hic est ille harundine et colaphis diverberatus, sputamentis dedecoratus, felle et aceto potatus; hic est, quem clam discentes subripuerunt, ut surrexisse dicatur, vel hortulanus detraxit, ne lactucae suae frequentia commeantium adlaederentur. [7] ut talia spectes, ut talibus exultes, quis tibi praetor aut consul aut quaestor aut sacerdos de sua liberalitate praestabit? et tamen haec iam quodammodo habemus per fidem spiritu imaginante repraesentata. ceterum qualia illa sunt, quae nec oculus vidit nec auris audivit nec in cor hominis ascenderunt? credo, circo et utraque cavea et omni stadio gratiora.

De Idololatria (On Idolatry)

I. [1] Principale crimen generis humani, summus saeculi reatus, tota causa iudicii idololatria. Nam etsi suam speciem tenet unumquodque delictum, etsi suo quodque nomine iudicio destinatur, in idololatriae tamen crimine expungitur. Omitte titulos, opera recognosce. Idololatres idem homicida est. Quaeris quem occiderit? Si quid ad elogii ambitionem facit, non extraneum nec inimicum, sed ipsum se. Quibus insidiis? Erroris sui. Quo telo? Offensa dei. Quot plagis? Quotquot idololatriis. [2] Qui negat idololatren perisse, is negabit idololatren homicidium fecisse. Perinde adulterium et stuprum in eodem recognoscas; nam qui falsis deis seruit, sine dubio adulter est ueritatis, quia omne falsum adulterium est. Sic et stupro mergitur. Quis enim immundis spiritibus cooperator non conspurcatus et constupratus incedit? Atque adeo scripturae sanctae stupri uocabulo utuntur in idololatriae exprobratione. [3] Fraudis condicio ea est, opinor, si quis alienum rapiat aut alii debitum deneget, et utique erga hominem admissa fraus maximi criminis nomen est. At enim idololatria fraudem deo facit honores illi suos denegans et conferens aliis, ut fraudi etiam contumeliam coniungat. Quodsi tam fraus quam stuprum atque adulterium mortem afferunt, iam in his aequae idololatria de homicidii reatu non liberatur. [4] Post talia crimina, tam exitiosa, tam deuoratoria salutis cetera quoque aliquem ad modum et seorsum perinde disposita in idololatria condicionem suam repraesentant. In illa et concupiscentiae saeculi. Quae enim idololatriae sollemnitas sine ambitione cultus et ornatus? In illa lasciuiiae et ebrietatis, cum plurimum uictus et uentris et libidinis causa frequententur. In illa iniustitia. Quid enim iniustius ea quae iustitiae patrem nescit? In illa etiam uanitas, cum tota eius ratio uana sit. In illa mendacium, cum tota substantia eius mendax sit. [5] Ita fit, ut omnia in idololatria et in omnibus idololatria deprehendatur. Sed et alias, cum uniuersa delicta aduersus deum sapiant, nihil autem, quod aduersus deum sapiat, non daemoniis et immundis spiritibus deputetur quibus idola mancipantur, sine dubio idololatriam admittit quicunque delinquit. Id enim facit quod ad idolorum mancipes pertinet.

II. [1] Sed uniuersa nomina criminum discedant in operum suorum proprietates, remaneat idololatria in eo quod ipsa est. Sufficit sibi tam inimicum deo nomen, tam locuples substantia criminis, quae tot ramos ponigit, tot uenas diffundit, ut de hoc cum maxime materia suscepta sit, quot modis nobis praecauenda sit idololatriae latitudo, quoniam multifariam seruos dei nec tantum ignorata, sed etiam dissimulata subuertit. [2] Plerique idololatrian simpliciter existimant his solis modis interpretandam, si quis aut incendat aut imolet aut polluceat aut sacris aliquibus aut sacerdotiis obligetur, quemadmodum si quis existimet adulterium in osculis et in amplexibus et in ipsa carnis congressione censendum aut homicidium in sola sanguinis profusione et in animae ereptione reputandum. [3] At enim, dominus quam extensius ista disponat, certi sumus, cum adulterium etiam in concupiscentia designat, si oculum quis impegerit libidinose et animam commouerit impudice, cum homicidium etiam in uerbo maledicti uel conuicii iudicat et in omni impetu irae et in neglegentia caritatis in fratrem. [4] Sicut Iohannes docet homicidam esse qui oderit fratrem. Alioquin in modico consisteret et diaboli ingenium de malitia et dei dominium de disciplina, qua nos aduersus diaboli latitudines munit, si in his tantum delictis iudicemur, quae etiam nationes decreuerunt uindicanda. [5] Quomodo abundabit iustitia nostra super scribas et pharisaeos, ut dominus praescripsit, nisi abundantiam aduersariae eius id est iniustitiae perspexerimus? Quod si caput iniustitiae idololatria est, prius est, uti aduersus abundantiam idololatriae praemuniamur, dum illam non solum in manifestis recognoscimus.

III. [1] Idolum aliquamdiu retro non erat. Priusquam huius monstri artifices ebullissent, sola templa et uacuae aedes erant, sicut in hodiernum quibusdam locis uetustatis uestigia permanent. Tamen idololatria agebatur, non in isto nomine, sed in isto opere. Nam et hodie extra templum et sine idolo agi potest. [2] At ubi artifices statuarum et imaginum et omnis generis simulacrorum diabolus saeculo intulit, rude illud negotium humanae calamitatis et nomen de idolis consecutum est et profectum. Exinde iam caput facta est idololatriae ars omnis quae idolum quoquomodo edit. Neque enim interest, an plastes effingat, an caelator exculpat, an phrygio detexat, quia nec de materia refert, an gypso, an coloribus, an lapide, an aere, an argento, an filo formetur idolum. [3] Quando enim et sine idolo idololatria fiat, utique, cum adest idolum, nihil interest, quale sit, qua de materia, qua de effigie, ne qui putet id solum idolum habendum, quod humana effigie sit consecratum. [4] Ad hoc necessaria est uocabuli interpretatio. Ei!doj Graece formam sonat; ab eo per diminutionem ei!dwlon deductum; aeque apud nos forma formulam fecit. Igitur omnis forma uel formula idolum se dici exposcit. Inde idololatria omnis circa omne idolum famulatus et seruitus. Inde et omnis idoli artifex eiusdem et unius est criminis, nisi parum idololatriam populus admisit, quia simulacrum uituli et non hominis sibi consecrauit.

IV. [1] Idolum tam fieri quam coli deus prohibet. Quanto praecedat, ut fiat quod coli possit, tanto prius est, ne fiat, si coli non licet. Propter hanc causam, ad eradicandam scilicet materiam idololatriae, lex diuina proclamat, ne feceris idolum, et coniungens, neque similitudinem eorum quae in caelo sunt et quae in terra et quae in mari, toto mundo eiusmodi artibus interdixit seruis dei. [2] Antecesserat Enoch praedicens omnia elementa, omnem mundi censum, quae caelo, quae mari, quae terra continentur, in idololatriam uersuros daemones et spiritus desertorum angelorum, ut pro deo aduersus deum consecrarentur. Omnia igitur colit humanus error praeter ipsum omnium conditorem. Eorum imagines idola imaginum consecratio idololatria. Quicquid idololatria committit, in artificem quemcumque et cuiuscumque idoli deputetur necesse est. Denique idem Enoch simul et cultores idoli et fabricatores in comminatione praedamnat. [3] Et rursus: iuro uobis peccatores, quod in diem sanguinis perditionis tristitia parata est. Qui seruitis lapidibus et qui imagines facitis aureas et argenteas et ligneas et lapideas et fictiles et seruitis phantasmatibus et daemoniis et spiritibus infernis et omnibus erroribus non secundum scientiam, nullum ab iis inuenietis auxilium. [4] Esaias uero, testes, ait, uos estis, si est deus absque me. Et non erant tunc qui fingunt et exculpant, omnes uani, qui faciunt libita sibi, quae illis non proderunt. Et deinceps tota illa pronuntiatio quam artifices, quam cultores detestatur. Cuius clausula est: cognoscite, quod cinis sit cor illorum et terra, et nemo animam suam liberare possit. + Vbi aequae Dauid et factores. Tales fiant, inquit, qui faciunt ea. [5] Et quod ego, modicae memoriae homo, ultra quid suggeram? Quid recolam de scripturis? Quasi aut non sufficiat uox spiritus sancti aut ultra deliberandum sit, an maledixerit atque damnauerit dominus ipsos prius artifices eorum, quorum cultores maledicit et damnat?

V. [1] Plane impensius respondebo ad excusationes huiusmodi artificum, quos numquam in domum dei admitti oportet si quis eam disciplinam norit. Iam illa obici solita uox, non habeo aliud quo uiuam, districtius reperi potest: uiuere ergo habes? quid tibi cum deo est, si tuis legibus uiuis? Tum quod et de scripturis audent argumentari, dixisse apostolum: ut quisque fuerit inuentus, ita perseueret, possumus igitur omnes in peccatis perseuerare ex ista interpretatione. [2] Nec enim quisquam nostrum non peccator inuentus est, cum Christus non alia ex causa descenderit quam peccatorum liberandorum. Item eundem praecepisse dicunt secundum suum exemplum, uti manibus suis unusquisque operetur ad uictum. Si hoc praeceptum ab omnibus manibus defenditur, credo et fures balneares manibus suis uiuere et ipsos latrones manibus agere quo uiuant, item falsarios utique non pedibus, sed manibus operari malas litteras, histriones uero non manibus solis, sed totis membris uictum elaborare. [3] Pateat igitur ecclesia omnibus, qui manibus et suo opere tolerant, si nulla exceptio est aritum quas dei disciplina non recipit. Sed ait quidam aduersus similitudinis interdictae propositionem: cur ergo Moses in eremo simulacrum serpentis ex aere fecit? Seorsum figurae, quae dispositioni alicui arcanae praestuebantur, non ad erogationem legis, sed ad exemplarium causae suae. Alioquin si haec ut aduersarii legis interpretemur, numquid et nos, quod et Marcionitae, inconstantiam adscribimus omnipotenti, quem illi hoc modo destruunt ut mutabilem, dum alibi uetat, alibi mandat? [4] Si quis autem dissimulat illam effigiem aerei serpentis suuspensi in modum figuram designasse dominicae crucis a serpentibus id est ab angelis diaboli liberaturae nos, dum per semetipsam diabolum id est serpentem interfectum suspendit, siue quae alia figurae istius expositio dignioribus reuelata est, dummodo apostolus affirmet omnia tunc figurate populo accidisse. Bene, quod idem deus et lege uetuit similitudinem fieri et extraordinario praecepto serpentis similitudinem indixit. Si eundem deum obseruas, habes legem eius, ne feceris similitudinem. Si et praeceptum factae postea similitudinis respicis, et tu imitare Moysen, ne facias aduersus legem simulacrum aliquod, nisi et tibi deus iusserit.

VI. [1] Si nulla lex dei prohibuisset idola fieri a nobis, nulla uox spiritus sancti fabricatoribus idolorum non minus quam cultoribus comminaretur, de ipso sacramento nostro interpretaremur nobis aduersas esse fidei eiusmodi artes. [2] Quomodo enim renuntiauius diabolo et angelis eius, si eos facimus? Quod repudium diximus iis, non dico cum quibus, sed de quibus uiuimus? Quam discordiam suscepimus in eos, quibus exhibitionis nostrae gratia obligati sumus? Potes lingua negasse quod manu confiteris? Verbo destruere quod facto struis? Vnum deum praedicare qui tantos efficis? Verum deum praedicare qui falsos facis? Facio, ait quidam, sed non colo: quasi ob aliquam causam colere non audeat, nisi ob quam et facere non debeat, scilicet ob dei offensam utrobique. [3] Immo tu colis, qui facis, ut coli possint. Colis autem non spiritu uilissimi nidoris alicuius, sed tuo proprio nec anima pecudis impensa, sed anima tua. Illis ingenium tuum immolas, illis sudorem tuum libas, illis prudentiam tuam accendis. Plus es illis quam sacerdos, cum per te habeant sacerdotem; diligentia tua numen illorum est. Negas te quod facis colere? Sed illi non negant, quibus hanc saginationem et auratiorem et maiorem hostiam caedis, salutem tuam tota die.

VII. [1] Ad hanc partem zelus fidei perorabit ingemens: Christianum ab idolis in ecclesiam uenire, de aduersaria officina in domum dei uenire, attollere ad deum patrem manus matres idolorum, his manibus adorare, quae foris aduersus deum adorantur, eas manus admouere corpori domini, quae daemoniis corpora conferunt? [2] Nec hoc sufficit. Parum sit, si ab aliis manibus accipiant quod contaminent, sed etiam ipsae tradunt aliis quod contaminauerunt. [3] Adleguntur in ordinem ecclesiasticum artifices idolorum. Pro scelus! Semel Iudaei Christo manus intulerunt, isti quotidie corpus eius laccessunt. O manus praecidendae! Viderint iam, an per similitudinem dictum sit: si te manus tua scandalizat, amputa eam. Quae magis amputandae, quam in quibus domini corpus scandalizatur?

VIII. [1] Sunt et aliae conplurium artium species, quae, etsi non contingunt idolorum fabricationem, tamen ea, sine quibus idola, nil possunt, eodem crimine expediunt. Nec enim differt, an extruas uel exornes, si templum, si aram, si aediculam eius instruxeris, si bratteam expresseris aut insignia aut etiam domum fabricaueris. Maior est eiusmodi opera, quae non effigiem confert, sed auctoritatem. [2] Si ita necessitas exhibitionis extenditur, habent et alias species, quae sine exorbitatione disciplinae id est sine idoli confectura opem uictus praestent. Scit albarius tector et tecta sarcire et tectoria inducere et cisternam liare et cymatia distendere et multa alia ornamenta praeter simulacra parietibus incrispare. Scit et pictor et marmorarius et aerarius et quicumque caelator latitudines suas et utique multo faciliores. [3] Nam qui signum describit, quanto facilius abacum linit? Qui de tilia Martem exculpit, quanto citius armarium compingit? Nulla ars non alterius artis aut mater aut propinqua est. Nihil alterius uacat. Tot sunt artium uenae, quot hominum concupiscentiae. Sed de mercedibus et manus pretiis interest. Perinde interest et de labore. Minor merces frequentiore actu repensatur. [4] Quot parietes signa desiderant? Quot templa et aedes idolis aedificantur? Domus uero et praetoria et balnea et insulae quantae? Soccus et baxa quotidie deauratur, Mercurius et Serapis non quotidie. Sufficiat ad quaestum artificiorum. Frequentior est omni superstitione luxuria et ambitio. Lances et scyphos facilius ambitio quam superstitione desiderabit. [5] Coronas quoque magis luxuria quam sollemnitas erogat. Cum igitur ad haec artificiorum genera cohortemur, quae idolum quidem et quae idolo competunt non adtingant, sint autem et hominibus communia saepe quae et idolis, hoc quoque cauere debemus, ne quid scientibus nobis ab aliquibus de manibus nostris in rem idolorum postuletur. Quod si concesserimus et non remediis iam usitatis egerimus, non puto nos a contagio idololatriae uacare, quorum manus non ignorantium in officio uel in honore et usu daemoniorum deprehenduntur.

IX. [1] Animaduertimus inter artes etiam professiones quasdam obnoxias idololatriae. De astrologis ne loquendum quidem est. Sed quoniam quidam istis diebus prouocauit defendens sibi perseuerantiam professionis istius, paucis utar. Non allego, quod idola honoret, quorum nomina caelo inscripsit, quibus omnem dei potestatem addixit, quod propterea homines non putant deum requirendum praesumentes stellarum nos immutabili arbitrio agi: unum propono, angelos esse illos desertores dei, amatores feminarum, proditores etiam huius curiositatis, propterea quoque damnatos a deo. [2] O diuina sententia usque ad terram pertinax, cui etiam ignorantes testimonium reddunt ! Expelluntur mathematici, sicut angeli eorum, Vrbs et Italia interdicitur mathematicis, sicut caelum angelis eorum. Eadem poena est exilii discipulis et magistris. [3] Sed magi [et astrologi] ab oriente uenerunt. Scimus magiae et astrologiae inter se societatem. Primi igitur stellarum interpretes natum Christum annuntiauerunt, primi munerauerunt. Hoc nomine Christum, opinor, sibi obligauerunt. Quid tum? Ideo nunc et mathematicis patrociniabitur illorum magorum religio? De Christo scilicet est mathesis hodie, stellas Christi, non Saturni et Martis et cuiusque ex eodem ordine mortuorum obseruat et praedicat. [4] At enim scientia ista usque ad euangelium fuit concessa, ut Christo edito nemo exinde natiuitatem alicuius de caelo interpretetur. Nam et tus illud et myrram et aurum ideo infanti tunc domino obtulerunt quasi clausulam sacificationis et gloriae saecularis, quam Christus erat adempturus. [5] Quod igitur isdem magis somnium sine dubio ex dei uoluntate suggessit, ut irent in sua, sed alia, non qua uenerant, uia, id est, ne pristina secta sua incederent, non, ne illos Herodes persecueretur, qui nec persecutus est, etiam ignorans alia uia digressos, quoniam et qua uenerant ignorabat, adeo uiam sectam et disciplinam intellegere debemus. [6] Itaque magis praeceptum, ut exinde aliter incederent. Sic et alia illa species magiae, quae miraculis operatur, etiam aduersus Moysen aemulata patientia dei traxit ad euangelium usque. Nam exinde et Simon Magus iamiam fidelis, quoniam aliquid adhuc de circulatoria secta cogitaret, ut scilicet inter miracula professionis suae etiam spiritum sanctum per manuum inpositionem enundinaret, maledictus ab apostolis de fide eiectus est: alter magus, qui cum Sergio Paulo, quoniam isdem aduersabatur apostolis, luminum amissione multatus est. [7] Hoc et astrologi retulissent, credo, si qui in apostolos incidisset. Attamen cum magia punitur, cuius est species astrologia, utique et species in genere damnatur. Post euangelium nusquam inuenias aut sophistas aut Chaldaeos aut incantatores aut coniectores aut magos, nisi plane punitos. Vbi sapiens, ubi litterator, ubi conquisitor huius aeu? Nonne infatuauit deus sapientiam huius saeculi? [8] Nihil scis, mathematice, si nesciebas te futurum Christianum. Si sciebas, hoc quoque scire debueras, nihil tibi futurum cum ista professione. Ipsa te de periculo suo instrueret, quae aliorum climacterica praecanit. Non est tibi pars neque sors in ista ratione. Non potest regna caelorum sperare cuius digitus aut radius abutitur caelo.

X. [1] Quaerendum autem est etiam de ludimagistris, sed et ceteris professoribus litterarum. Immo non dubitandum affines illos esse multimodae idololatriae. Primum quibus necesse est deos nationum praedicare, nomina, genealogias, fabulas, ornamenta honorifica quaeque eorum enuntiare, tum sollemnia festaque eorundem obseruare, ut quibus uestigalia sua supputent. [2] Quis ludimagister sine tabula VII idolorum Quinquatria tamen frequentabit? Ipsam primam noui discipuli stipem Mineruae et honori et nomini consecrat, ut, etsi non profanatus alicui idolo uerbotenius de idolothyto esse dicatur, pro idololatra uitetur. Quid? Minus est inquinamenti? Eoque praestat quaestus et nominibus et honoribus idolo nuncupatus? [3] Quam Minerualia Mineruae, quam Saturnalia Saturni, quae etiam seruiculis sub tempore Saturnalium celebrari necesse est. Etiam strenuae captandae et septimontium, et Brumae et carae cognationis honoraria exigenda omnia, Florae scholae coronandae; flaminicae et aediles sacrificant creati; schola honoratur feriis. [4] Idem fit idoli natali; omnis diaboli pompa frequentatur. Quis haec competere Christiano existimabit, nisi qui putabit conuenire etiam non magistro? Scimus dici posse:

si docere litteras dei seruis non licet, etiam nec discere licebit, et, quomodo quis institueretur ad prudentiam interim humanam uel ad quemcumque sensum uel actum, cum instrumentum sit ad omnem uitam litteratura? Quomodo repudiamus saecularia studia, sine quibus diuina non possunt? [5] Videamus igitur necessitatem litteratoriae eruditionis, respiciamus ex parte eam admitti [non] posse, ex parte uitari. Fideles magis discere quam docere litteras capit; diuersa est enim ratio discendi et docendi. Si fidelis litteras doceat, insertas idolorum praedicationes sine dubio, dum docet, commendat, dum tradit, affirmat, dum commemorat, testimonium dicit. [6] Deos ipsos hoc nomine obsignat, cum lex prohibeat, ut diximus, deos pronuntiari et nomen hoc in uano conlocari. Hinc prima diabolo fides aedificatur ab initiis eruditionis. Quaere, an idololatriam committat qui de idolis catechizat. At cum fidelis haec discit, si iam sapit, quid sit, neque recipit neque admittit, multo magis, si dudum sapit. Aut ubi coeperit sapere, prius sapiat oportet quod prius didicit, id est de deo et fide. Proinde illa respuet nec recipiet et erit tam tutus, quam qui sciens uenenum ab ignaro accipit nec bibit. [7] Huic necessitas ad excusationem deputatur, quia aliter discere non potest. Tanto autem facilius est litteras non docere quam non discere, quanto et reliqua scholarum de publicis ac propriis sollemnitatibus inquinamenta facilius discipulis fidelis non adibit quam magister non frequentabit.

XI. [1] + De generationibus si cetera delictorum recogitemus, inprimis cupiditatem radicem omnium malorum, qua quidam inretiti circa fidem naufragium sunt passi, cum bis et idololatria ab eodem apostolo dicta sit cupiditas, tum mendacium cupiditatis ministrum — taceo de periurio, quando ne iurare quidem liceat — negotiatio seruo dei apta est? Ceterum si cupiditas abscedat, quae est causa adquirendi? Cessante causa adquirendi non erit necessitas negotiandi. [2] Sit nunc aliqua iustitia quaestus secura de cupiditatis et mendacii obseruatione, in crimen offendere idololatriae eam opinor, quae ad ipsam idolorum animam et spiritum, pertinet, quae omne daemonium saginat. Sane non illa principalis idololatria? Viderint, si eadem merces, tura dico et cetera peregrinitatis ad sacrificium idolorum etiam hominibus ad pigmenta medicinalia, nobis quoque insuper ad solacia sepulturae usui sunt. Certe cum pompae, cum sacerdotia, cum sacrificia idolorum de periculis, de damnis, de incommodis, de cogitationibus, de discursibus negotiationibusne instruuntur, quid aliud quam procurator idolorum demonstraris? Nemo contendat posse hoc modo omnibus negotiationibus controuersiam fieri. [3] Grauiora delicta quaeque pro magnitudine periculi diligentiam extendunt obseruationis, ut non ab his tantum abscedamus, sed et ab iis per quae fiunt. Licet enim ab aliis fiat, non interest, si per me. [4] In nullo necessarius esse debeat alii, cum facit quod mihi non licet. Ex hoc, quod uetor facere, intellegere debeat curandum mihi esse, ne fiat per me. Denique in alia causa non leuioris reatus praeiudicium istud obseruo. Nam quod mihi de stupro interdictum sit, aliis ad eam rem nihil aut operae aut conscientiae exhibeo. [5] Nam quod ipsam carnem meam a lupanaribus segregauimus, agnosco me neque lenocinium neque id genus lucrum alterius causa exercere posse. Sic et homicidii interdictio ostendit mihi lanistam quoque ab ecclesia arceri: nec per se non faciet quod faciendum alio subministrat. Ecce magis proximum praeiudicium. [6] Si publicarum uictimarum redemptor ad fidem accedat, permittes ei in eo negotio permanere? Aut si iam fidelis id agere suscepit, retinendum in ecclesia putabis? Non opinor, nisi si quis et de turario dissimulabit. Scilicet ad alios peruenit procuratio sanguinis, ad alios odorum. Si, antequam idola in saeculo essent, his mercibus adhuc informis idololatria transigebatur, si et nunc fere sine idolo opus idololatriae incendiis odorum perpetratur, ecquid maioris operae et erga daemones turarius? [7] Nam facilius sine idolo idololatria, quam sine turarii merce. Ipsius fidei conscientiam perrogerimus. Quo ore Christianus turarius, si per templa transibit, quo ore fumantes aras despuet et exsufflabit, quibus ipse prospexit? Qua constantia exorcizabit alumnos suos, quibus domum suam cellarium praestat? Ille quidem si excluserit daemones, non sibi placeat de fide. Neque enim inimicum exclusit. [8] Facile debuit de eo impetrare, quem cotidie pascit. Nulla igitur ars, nulla professio, nulla negotiatio, quae quid aut instruendis aut formandis idolis administrat, carere poterit titulo idololatriae; nisi si aliud omnino interpretemur idololatriam, quam famulatum idolorum colendorum.

XII. [1] Male nobis de necessitatibus humanae exhibitionis supplaudimus, si post fidem obsignatam dicimus: non habeo quo uiuam. Iam hic enim plenius illi abruptae propositioni respondebo. Sero dicitur. Ante enim fuit deliberandum ex similitudine prouidentissimi aedificis illius, qui prius sumptus operis cum uiribus suis supputat, ne, ubi coeperit, defectus postea erubescat. [2] Sed et nunc habes dicta domini et exempla adimentia tibi omnem causationem. Quid enim dicis? Egebo. Sed felices egenos dominus appellat.

Victum non habebō: sed nolite, inquit, cogitare de uictu. Et uestitus habemus exemplum lilia. Substantia milti opus erat: atquin omnia uendenda sunt et egentibus diuidenda. Sed filiis et posteritati prouidendum: nemo aratro manum imponens et retro spectans aptus est operi. Sed condicionalis eram: nemo duobus dominis seruire potest. Si uis domini discipulus esse, crucem tuam tollas et dominum sequaris necesse est id est angustias et cruciatus tuos uel corpus solum, quod in modum crucis est. [3] Parentes, coniuges, liberi propter deum relinquendi erunt. De artibus et negotiationibus et de professionibus etiam liberorum et parentum causa dubitas? Iam tunc demonstratum est nobis et pignera et artificia et negotia propter dominum derelinquenda, cum Iacob et Iohannes uocati a domino et patrem nauemque derelinquunt, cum Matthaeus de teloneo suscitatur, cum etiam sepelire patrem tardum fuit fidei. [4] Nemo eorum, quos dominus allegit, non habeo, dixit, quo uiuam. Fides famem non timet. Scit etiam famem non minus sibi contemnendam propter deum quam omne mortis genus. Didicit non respicere uitam, quanto magis uictum? Quotusquisque haec adimpleuit? Sed quae penes homines difficilia, penes deum facilia. [5] Sic tamen nobis de mansuetudine et clementia dei blandiamur, ut non usque ad idololatriae affinitates necessitatibus largiamur, sed omnem afflatum eius uice pestis etiam de longinquo deuitemus, non in his tantum quae praemisimus, sed in uniuersa serie humanae superstitionis, siue deis suis siue defunctis siue regibus mancipatae, ut ad eosdem spiritus immundos pertinentis, modo per sacrificia et sacerdotia, modo per spectacula et hoc genus, modo per festos dies.

XIII. [1] Sed de sacrificiis et sacerdotiis quid loquar? De spectaculis autem et uoluptatibus eiusmodi suum iam uolumen impleuimus. Hoc loco retractari oportet de festis diebus et aliis extraordinariis sollempnitatibus, quas interdum lasciuiiae, interdum timiditati nostrae subscribimus aduersus fidem disciplinamque communicantes nationibus in idolicis rebus. [2] De hoc quidem primo consistam, an cum ipsis quoque nationibus communicare in huiusmodi seruus dei debeat siue habitu siue uictu uel quo alio genere laetitiae earum. Gaudere cum gaudentibus et lugere cum lugentibus de fratribus dictum est ab apostolo ad unanimitatem cohortante. [3] Ceterum ad haec nihil communionis est lumini et tenebris, uitae et morti, aut scindimus quod est scriptum: saeculum gaudebit, uos uero lugebitis. Si cum saeculo gaudemus, uerendum est, ne cum saeculo et lugeamus. [4] Saeculo autem gaudente lugeamus et saeculo postea lugente gaudebimus. Sic et Eleazar apud inferos in sinu Abrahae refrigerium consecutus, contra diues in tormento ignis constitutus alternas malorum et bonorum uices aemula retributione compensant. Sunt quidam dies munerum, quae apud alios honoris titulum, apud alios mercedis debitum expungunt. [5] Nunc ergo, inquis, recipiam meum uel rependam alienum. Si hunc morem sibi homines de superstitione consecrauerunt, tu extraneus ab omni eorum uanitate quid participas idolothyta sollemnia, quasi tibi quoque praescriptum sit de die, quominus id, quod homini debes uel tibi ab homine debetur, citra diei obseruationem luas uel recipias. [6] Da formam, in qua uelis agi tecum. Cur enim et lateas, cum ignorantia alterius tuam conscientiam contamines? Si non ignoraris quod sis Christianus, temptaris et contra conscientiam alterius agis tamquam non Christianus: sin uero et dissimulaueris, temptatus addictus es. Certe siue hac siue illac, reus es confusionis in deo. Qui autem confusus super me fuerit penes homines, et ego confundar super illo, inquit, penes patrem meum, qui est in caelis.

XIV. [1] Sed enim plerique iam induxerunt animo ignoscendum esse, si quando, quae ethnici, faciunt, ne nomen blasphemetur. Porro blasphemia, quae nobis omni modo deuitanda est, haec opinor est, si qui nostrum ad iustam blasphemiam ethnicum deducat aut fraude aut iniuria aut contumelia aliaue materia dignae querelae, in qua nomen merito percutitur, ut merito irascatur et dominus. [2] Ceterum si de omni blasphemia dictum est, uestra causa nomen meum blasphematur, perimus uniuersi, cum totus circus scelestis suffragiis nullo merito nomen lacessit. Desinamus, et non blasphemabitur. Immo blasphemetur, dum sumus in obseruatione, non in exorbitatione disciplinae, dum probamur, non dum reprobamur. [3] O blasphemiam martyrii adfinem, quae tunc me testatur Christianum, cum propterea me detestatur ! Benedictio est nominis maledictio custoditae disciplinae. Si hominibus, inquit, uellem placere, seruus Christi non essem. Sed idem alibi iubet, omnibus placere curemus. Quemadmodum ego, inquit, omnibus per omnia placeo. [4] Nimirum Saturnalia et Kalendas Ianuarias celebrans hominibus placebat? An modestia et patientia? An grauitate, an humanitate, an integritate? Proinde cum dicit, omnibus omnia factus sum, ut omnes lucrifaciam: numquid idololatriis idololatres ? Numquid ethnicis ethnicus? Numquid saecularibus saecularis? [5] Sed etsi non prohibet nos conuersari cum idololatriis et adulteris et ceteris criminosis dicens, ceterum de mundo exiretis, non utique eas habenas conuersationis inmittit, ut, quoniam necesse est et conuiuere nos et commisceri cum peccatoribus, idem et compeccare possimus. Vbi est commercium uitae, quod apostolus concedit, ibi * * peccare, quod nemo permittit. Licet conuiuere cum ethnicis, commori non licet. Conuiuiamus cum omnibus; conlaetemur ex communione naturae, non superstitionis. Pares anima sumus, non disciplina, compossessores mundi, non erroris. [6] Quod si nobis nullum ius est communionis in huiusmodi cum extraneis, quanto scelestius est haec inter fratres frequentare. Quis hoc sustinere aut defendere potest? Iudaeis dies suos festos exprobrat spiritus sanctus. Sabbata, inquit, uestra et numenias et ceremonias odit anima mea. Nobis, quibus sabbata extranea sunt et numeniae et feriae a deo aliquando dilectae, Saturnalia et Ianuariae et Brumae et Matronales frequentantur, munera commeant et strenae, consonant lusus, conuiuia constrepunt. [7] O melior fides nationum in suam sectam, quae nullam sollemnitatem Christianorum sibi uindicat ! Non dominicum diem, non pentecosten, etiamsi nossent, nobiscum communicassent; timerent enim, ne Christiani uiderentur. Nos ne ethnici pronuntiemur, non ueremur. Si quid et carni indulgendum est, habes, non dicam tuos dies tantum, sed et plures. Nam ethnicis semel annuus dies quisque festus est, tibi octauo quoque die. Excerpe singulas sollemnitates nationum et in ordinem exsere: pentecosten implere non poterunt.

XV. [1] Sed luceant, inquit, opera uestra. At nunc lucent tabernae et ianuae nostrae. Plures iam inuenias ethnicorum fores sine lucernis et laureis, quam Christianorum. De ista quoque specie quid uidetur? Si idoli honor est, sine dubio idoli honor idololatria est. Si hominis causa est, recogitemus omnem idololatriam in hominis causam esse. [2] Recogitemus omnem idololatriam in homines esse culturam, cum ipsos deos nationum homines retro fuisse etiam apud suos constet. Itaque nihil interest, superioris an huius saeculi uiris superstitio ista praestetur. Idololatria non propter personas, quae opponuntur, sed propter officia ista damnata est, quae ad daemonas pertinent. [3] Reddenda sunt Caesari quae sunt Caesaris. Bene quod apposuit: et quae sunt dei deo. Quae ergo sunt Caesaris? Scilicet de quibus tunc consultatio mouebatur, praestandusne esset census Caesari an non. Ideo et monetam ostendi sibi dominus postulauit et de imagine, cuius esset, requisiiuit, et cum audisset Caesaris, reddite, ait, quae sunt Caesaris Caesari, et quae sunt dei deo, id est imaginem Caesaris Caesari, quae in nummo est, et imaginem dei deo, quae in homine est, ut Caesari quidem pecuniam reddas, deo temetipsum. [4] Alioquin quid erit dei, si omnia Caesaris? Ergo, inquis, honor dei est lucernae pro foribus et laurus in postibus? Non utique quod dei honor est, sed quod eius, qui pro deo eiusmodi officiis honoratur, quantum in manifesto est, salua operatione, quae est in occulto, ad daemona perueniens. [5] Certi enim esse debemus, si quos latet per ignorantiam litteraturae saecularis, etiam ostioram deos apud Romanos, Cardeam a cardinibus appellatam et Forculum a foribus et Limentinum a limine et ipsum Ianum a ianua: et utique scimus, licet nomina inania atque conficta sint, cum tamen in superstitionem deducuntur, rapere ad se daemona et omnem spiritum immundum per consecrationis obligamentum. [6] Alioquin daemona nullum habent nomen singillatim, sed ibi nomen inueniunt, ubi et pignus. Etiam apud Graecos Apollinem Thyraeum et Antelios daemonas ostiorum praesides legimus. Haec igitur ab initio praeuidens spiritus sanctus etiam ostia in superstitionem uentura praececinuit per antiquissimum propheten Enoch. Nam et alia ostia in balneis adorari uidemus. [7] Si autem sunt qui in ostiis adorentur, ad eos et lucernae et laureae pertinebunt. Idolo feceris, quicquid ostio feceris. Hoc in loco ex auctoritate quoque dei contestor, quia nec tutum est subtrahere, quodcumque uni fuerit ostensum utique omnium causa. Scio fratrem per uisionem eadem nocte castigatum grauiter, quod ianuam eius subito adnuntiatis gaudiis publicis serui coronassent. [8] Et tamen non ipse coronauerat aut praeceperat; nam ante processerat et regressus reprehenderat factum. Adeo apud deum in huiusmodi etiam disciplina familiae nostrae aestimamur. Igitur quod attineat ad honores regum uel imperatorum, satis praescriptum habemus, in omni obsequio esse nos oportere secundum apostoli praeceptum subditos magistratibus et principibus et potestatibus, sed intra limites disciplinae, quousque ab idololatria separamur. [9] Propterea enim et illud exemplum trium fratrum praecucurrit, qui alias obsequentes erga regem Nabuchodonosor honorem imaginis eius constantissime respuerunt probantes idololatriam esse, quicquid ultra humani honoris modum ad instar diuinae sublimitatis extollitur. [10] Sic et Daniel cetera Dario subnixus tamdiu fuit in officio, quamdiu a periculo disciplinae uacaret. Nam ne id subiret, non magis leones regios timuit, quam illi regios ignes. Accendant igitur quotidie lucernas, quibus lux nulla est, affigant postibus lauros postmodum arsuras, quibus ignes imminet; illis competunt et testimonia tenebrarum et auspicia poenarum. [11] Tu lumen es mundi et arbor uirens semper. Si templis renuntiasti, ne feceris templum ianuam tuam. Minus dixi: si lupanaribus renuntiasti, ne indueris domui tuae faciem noui lupanaris.

XVI. [1] Circa officia uero priuatarum et communium sollemnitatum, ut togae purae, ut sponsalium, ut nuptialium, ut nominalium, nullum outem periculum obseruari de flatu idololatriae, quae interuenit. [2] Causae enim sunt considerandae, quibus praestatur officium. Eas mundas esse opinor per semetipsas, quia neque uestitus uirilis neque anulus aut coniunctio maritalis de alicuius idoli honore descendit. Nullum denique cultum a deo maledictum inuenio, nisi muliebrem in uiro. Maledictus enim, inquit, omnis qui muliebribus induitur. Togauero etiam appellatione uirilis est. [3] Nuptias quoque celebrari non magis deus prohibet quam nomen imponi. Sed his accommodantur sacrificia. Sim uocatus nec adsacrificii sit titulus officii, et operae meae expunctio quantum sibi licet. [4] Vtinam quidem nec uidere possimus quae facere nobis nefas est. Sed quoniam ita malus circumdedit saeculum idololatria, licebit adesse in quibusdam, quae nos homini, non idolo, officiosos habent. Plane ad sacerdotium et sacrificium uocatus non ibo (proprium enim idoli officium est), sed neque consilio neque sumptu aliaue opera in eiusmodi fungar. [5] Si propter sacrificium uocatus adsistam, ero particeps idololatriae: si me alia causa coniungit sacrificanti, ero tantum spectator sacrificii.

XVII. [1] Ceterum quid facient serui uel liberti fideles, item officiales sacrificantibus dominis uel patronis uel praesidibus suis adhaerentes? Sed si merum quis sacrificanti tradiderit, immo si uerbo quoque aliquo sacrificio necessario adiuuerit, minister habebitur idololatriae. Huius regulae memores etiam magistratibus et potestatibus officium possumus reddere secundum patriarchas et ceteros maiores, qui regibus idololatriis usque ad finem idololatriae apparuerunt. [2] Hinc proxime disputatio oborta est, an seruus dei alicuius dignitatis aut potestatis administrationem capiat, si ab omni specie idololatriae intactum se aut gratia aliqua aut astutia etiam praestare possit, secundum quod et Ioseph et Daniel mundi ab idololatria et dignitatem et potestatem administrauerunt in ornamento et purpura praefecturae totius Aegypti siue Babyloniae. [3] Cedamus itaque succedere alicui posse, ut in quoquo honore in solo honoris nomine incedat neque sacrificet neque sacrificiis auctoritatem suam accommodet, non hostias locet, non curas templorum deleet, non uectigalia eorum procuret, non spectacula edat de suo aut de publico aut edendis praesit, nihil sollemne pronuntiet uel edicat, ne iuret quidem; iam uero quae sunt potestatis, neque iudicet de capite alicuius uel pudore — feras enim de pecunia — neque damnet neque praedamnet, neminem uinciat, neminem recludat aut torqueat, si haec credibile est fieri posse.

XVIII. [1] Iam uero de solo suggestu et apparatu honoris retractandum. Proprius habitus uniuscuiusque est tam ad usum quotidianum quam ad honorem et dignitatem. Igitur purpura illa et aurum ceruicis ornamentum eodem more apud Aegyptios et Babylonios insignia erant dignitatis, quo more nunc praetextae uel trabeae uel palmatae et coronae aureae sacerdotum prouincialium, sed non eadem condicione. [2] Tantum enim honoris nomine conferebantur iis, qui familiaritatem regum merebantur. Vnde et purpurati regum uocabantur a purpura, sicut apud nos a toga candida candidati, sed non ut suggestus ille sacerdotiis quoque aut aliquibus idolorum officiis adstringeretur. Nam si ita esset, utique tantae sanctitatis et constantiae uiri statim habitus inquinatos recusassent, statimque apparuisset Daniele idolis non deseruisse nec Belem nec draconem colere, quod multo postea apparuit. [3] Simplex igitur purpura illa nec iam dignitatis erat, sed ingenuitatis apud barbaros insigne. Quemadmodum enim et Ioseph, qui seruus fuerat, et Daniel, qui per captiuitatem statum uerterat, ciuitatem Babyloniam et Aegyptiam sunt consecuti per habitum barbaricae ingenuitatis, sic penes nos quoque fideles, si necesse fuerit, poterit et pueris praetexta concedi et puellis stola, natiuitatis insignia, nec potestatis, generis, non honoris, ordinis, non superstitionis. Ceterum purpura uel cetera insignia dignitatum et potestatum insertae dignitati et potestatibus idololatriae ab initio dicata habent profanationis suae maculam, cum praeterea ipsis etiam idolis induantur praetextae et trabeae et laticlaui, fasces quoque et uirgae praeferantur, et merito. Nam daemonia magistratus sunt saeculi huius; unius collegii insignia fasces et purpuras gestant. [4] Quid ergo proficies, si suggestu quidem utaris, opera eius uero non administres? Nemo in inmundis mundus uideri potest. Tunicam si induas inquinatam per se, poterit forsitan illa non inquinari per te, sed tu per illam mundus esse non poteris. Iam nunc qui de Ioseph et Daniel argumentaris, scito, non semper comparanda esse uetera et noua, rudia et polita, coepta et explicita, seruilia et liberalia. [5] Nam illi etiam condicione serui erant: tu uero nullius seruus, in quantum solius Christi, qui te etiam captiuitate saeculi liberauit, ex forma dominica agere debebis. Ille dominus in humilitate et ignobilitate incessit domicilio incertus: nam filius, inquit, hominis non habet ubi caput collocet; uestitu incultus, neque enim dixisset, ecce qui teneris uestiuntur, in domibus regum sunt; uultu denique et aspectu inglorius, sicut et Esaias pronuntiauerat. [6] Si potestatis ius quoque nullum ne in suos quidem exercuit, quibus sordido ministerio functus est, si regem denique fieri conscius sui regni refugit, plenissime dedit formam suis derigendo omni fastigio et suggestu quam dignitatis quam potestatis. [7] Quis enim magis iis usus fuisset, quam dei filius? Quales et quanti eum fasces producerent, qualis purpura de umeris eius floreret, quale aurum de capite radiaret, nisi gloriam saeculi alienam et sibi et suis iudicasset? Igitur quam noluit, reiecit, quam reiecit, damnauit, quam damnauit, in pompa diaboli deputauit. Non enim damnasset, nisi non sua: alterius autem esse non possunt, nisi diaboli, quae dei non sunt. [8] Tu si diaboli pompam eierasti, quicquid ex ea attigeris, id scias esse idololatriam. Vel hoc te commonefaciat omnes huius saeculi potestates et dignitates non solum alienas, uerum et inimicas dei esse, quod per illas aduersus dei seruos supplicia consulta sunt, per illas et poenae ad impios paratae ignorantur. 9. Sed et natiuitas et substantia tua molestae tibi sunt aduersus idololatriam. Ad euitandum remedia deesse non possunt, cum et, si defuerint, supersit unicum illud, quo felicior factus non in terris magistratus, sed in caelis.

XIX. [1] Possit in isto capitulo etiam de militia definitum uideri, quae inter dignitatem et potestatem est. At nunc de isto quaeritur, an fidelis ad militiam conuerti possit et an militia ad fidem admitti, etiam caligata uel inferior quaeque, cui non sit necessitas immolationum uel capitalium iudiciorum. [2] Non conuenit sacramento diuino et humano, signo Christi et signo diaboli, castris lucis et castris tenebrarum; non potest una anima duobus deberi, deo et Caesari. Et uirgam portauit Moyses, fibulam et Aaron, cingitur loro et Iohannes, agmen agit et Iesus Naue, bellauit et populus, si placet ludere. [3] Quomodo autem bellabit, immo quomodo etiam in pace militabit sine gladio, quem dominus abstulit? Nam etsi adierant milites ad Iohannem et formam obseruationis acceperant, si etiam centurio crediderat, omnem postea militem dominus in Petro exarmando discinxit. Nullus habitus licitus est apud nos illicito actui adscriptus.

XX. [1] Sed enim cum conuersatio diuinæ disciplinae non factis tantum, uerum etiam uerbis periclitetur (nam sicut scriptum est, ecce homo et facta eius, ita, ex ore tuo iustificaberis), meminisse debemus etiam in uerbis quoque idololatriæ incursum præcauendum aut de consuetudinis uitio aut timiditatis. [2] Deos nationum nominari lex prohibet non utique: nomina eorum pronuntiemus, quæ nobis ut dicamus conuersatio extorquet. Nam id plerumque dicendum est: in templo Aesculapii illum habes, et, in uico Isidis habito, et sacerdos Iouis factus est, et multa alia in hunc modum, quando et hominibus hoc genus nomina inducuntur. Neque enim Saturnum honoro, si ita uocauero eum suo nomine; tam non honoro, quam Marcum, si uocauero Marcum. [3] Sed ait: nomen aliorum deorum ne commemoremini neque audiatur de tuo ore. Hoc praecepit, ne deos uocemus illos. Nam et in prima parte legis, non sumes, inquit, nomen domini dei tui in uano id est idolo. Cecidit igitur in idololatriam qui idolum nomine dei honorauerit. [4] Quodsi deos dicendum erit, adiciendum est aliquid quo appareat, quia non ego illos deos dico. Nam et scriptura deos nominat, sed adicit suos uel nationum; sicut Dauid, cum deos nominasset, ubi ait, dei autem nationum daemonia. Sed hoc mihi ad sequentia magis praestructum est. [5] Ceterum consuetudinis uitium est Mehercule dicere, Medius Fidius, accedente ignorantia quorundam, qui ignorant iusiurandum esse per Herculem. Porro quid erit deieratio per eos quos eierasti quam praeuaricatio fidei cum idololatria? Quis enim, per quos deierat, non honorat?

XXI. [1] Timiditatis est autem, cum te alius per deos suos obligat iuratione uel aliqua testificatione et tu, ne intellegaris, quiescis. Nam aequè quiescendo confirmas maiestatem eorum, cuius causa uideberis obligatus. [2] Quid refert, deos nationum dicendo deos an audiendo confirmes? Iures per idola, an ab alio adiuratus acquiescas? Cur non agnoscamus uersutias satanae, qui, quod ore nostro perficere non potest, id agit, ut suorum ore perficiat per aures inferens nobis idololatriam? Certe quisquis ille est, aut amica aut inimica congressione adstringit. [3] Si inimica, iam ad pugnam uocaris et scis tibi dimicandum esse: si amica, quanto securius in dominum transferes sponsionem tuam, ut dissoluas obligationem eius, per quem te malus honori idolorum id est idololatriæ quaerebat annectere. [4] Omnis patientia eiusmodi idololatria. Honoras eos, quibus impositis obsequium praestitisti. Scio quendam, cui dominus ignoscat, cum illi in publico per litem dictum esset:

Iupiter tibi sit iratus, respondisse: immo tibi. Quid aliter fecisset ethnicus, qui Iouem deum credidit? Etiam si non per eundem retorsisset maledictum nec per ullum Iouis similem, confirmauerat Iouem deum, per quem se maledictum indigne tulisse demonstrauerat remaledicens. [5] Ad quid enim indigneris per eum, quem scis nihil esse? Iam si insanis, iam esse confirmas, et erit idololatria professio timoris tui: quanto magis, cum per ipsum remaledicis, eodem Iouis honorem facis, quo et ille, qui te prouocauit? Fidelis autem in eiusmodi ridere debet, non insanire, immo, secundum praeceptum, ne per deum quidem remaledicere, sed plane benedicere per deum, ut et idola destruas et deum praedices et adimpleas disciplinam.

XXII. [1] Aequè benedici per deos nationum Christo initiatus non sustinebit, ut non semper reiciat immundam benedictionem et eam sibi in deum conuertens emundet. Benedici per deos nationum maledici est per deum. [2] Si cui dederò eleemosynam uel aliquid praestitero beneficii, et ille mihi deos suos uel coloniae genium propitios imprecetur, iam oblatio mea uel operatio idolorum honor erit, per quae benedictionis gratiam compensat. [3] Cur autem non sciat me dei causa fecisse, ut et deus potius glorificetur et daemonia non honorentur in eo quod propter deum feci? Si deus uidet, quoniam propter ipsum feci, pariter uidet, quoniam propter ipsum fecisse me nolui ostendere, et praeceptum eius idolothytum quodammodo feci. [4] Multi dicunt, nemo se debet promulgare; puto autem nec negare. Negat enim, quicumque dissimulat in quacumque causa pro ethnico habitus, et utique omnis negatio idololatria est, sicut omnis idololatria negatio siue in factis siue in uerbis.

XXIII. [1] Sed est quaedam eiusmodi species in facto et in uerbo bis acuta et infesta utrimque, licet tibi blandiatur, quasi uacet in utroque, dum factum non uidetur, quia dictum non tenetur. Pecuniam de ethnicis mutuantes sub pignoribus fiduciati iurati cauent et se negant; se scire uolunt scilicet tempus persecutionis et locus tribunalis et persona praesidis. [2] Praescribit Christus non esse iurandum. Scripsi, inquit, sed nihil dixi: lingua, non littera occidit. Hic ego naturam et conscientiam aduoco: naturam, quia nihil potest manus scribere, etiam si lingua in dictando cessat immobilis et quieta, quod non anima dictauerit; quamquam et ipsi linguae anima dictauerit aut a se conceptum aut ab alio traditum. [3] Iam, ne dicatur, alius dictauit; hic conscientiam appello, an quod alius dictauit anima suscipiat et siue comitante siue residente lingua ad manum transmittat. Et bene, quod in animo et conscientia delinqui dominus dixit. Si, inquit, concupiscentia uel malitia in cor hominis ascenderit, pro facto teneris. [4] Cauisti igitur, quod in cor tuum plane ascendit, quod neque ignorasse te contendere potes neque noluisse. [5] Nam cum caueres, scisti, cum scires, utique uoluisti; et est tam facto quam cogitatu. Nec potes leuiore crimine maius excludere, ut dicas falsum plane effici cauendo quod non facis. Tamen non negaui, quia non iuraui. Quin immo, etsi nihil tale fecisses, sic tamen dicereris deierare, fecisse si consenseris. Non ualet tacita uox in stilo et mutus in litteris sonus. [6] At enim Zacharias temporali uocis oratione multatus cum animo conlocutus linguam inritam transit, cum manibus suis a corde dictat et nomen filii sine ore pronuntiat: loquitur in stilo, auditur in cera manus omni sono clarior, littera omni ore uocalior. Quaere, an dixerit qui dixisse compertus est. [7] Dominum oremus, ne qua nos eiusmodi contractus necessitas circumsistat et, si ita euenerit, det fratribus operandi copiam uel nobis abrumpendae omnis necessitatis constantiam, ne illae litterae negatrices uicariae oris nostri in die iudicii aduersus nos proferantur signatae signis non iam aduocatorum, sed angelorum.

XXIV. [1] Inter hos scopulos et sinus, inter haec uada et freta idololatriae uelificata spiritu dei fides nauigat, tuta si cauta, segura si attonita. Ceterum inenatabile excussis profundum est, inextricabile inpactis naufragium est, inrespirabile deuoratis hypobrychium in idololatria. Quicumque fluctus eius offocant, omnis uertex eius ad inferos desorbet. [2] Nemo dicat: quis tam tuto praecauebit? Exeundum de saeculo erit. Quasi non tanti sit exire, quam idololatren in saeculo stare. Nihil esse facilius potest, quam cautio idololatriae, si timor eius in capite sit. Quaecumque necessitas minor est periculo tanto comparata. [3] Propterea spiritus sanctus consultantibus tunc apostolis uinculum et iugum nobis relaxauit, ut idololatriae deuitandae uacemus. Haec erit lex nostra, quo expedita hoc plenius administranda, propria Christianorum, per quam ab ethnicis agnoscimur et examinamur, haec accedentibus ad fidem proponenda et ingredientibus in fidem inculcanda est, ut accedentes deliberent, obseruantes perseuerent, non obseruantes renuntient sibi. [4] Viderimus enim si secundum arcae typum et coruus et miluus et lupus et canis et serpens in ecclesia erit. Certe idololatres in arcae typo non habetur. Nullum animal in idololatren figuratum est. Quod in arca non fuit, in ecclesia non sit.

LIBER I

I. [1] Si tanta in terris moraretur fides quanta merces eius expectatur in caelis, nulla omnino uestrum, sorores dilectissimae, ex quo Deum uiuum cognouisset et de sua, id est de feminae condicione, didicisset, laetiozem habitum, ne dicam gloriosiozem, appetisset, ut non magis in sordibus ageret et squalorem potius affectaret, ipsam se circumferens Euam lugentem et paenitentem, quo plenius id quod de Eua trahit — ignominiam dico primi delicti et inuidiam perditionis humanae — omni satisfactionis habitu expiaret.

In doloribus et anxietatibus paris, mulier, et ad uirum tuum conuersio tua et ille dominatur tui: et Euam te esse nescis? [2] Viuit sententia Dei super sexum istum in hoc saeculo: uiuat et reatus necesse est. Tu es diaboli ianua; tu es arboris illius resignatrix; tu es diuinae legis prima desertrix; tu es quae eum suasisti, quem diabolus aggredi non ualuit; tu imaginem Dei, hominem, tam facile elisisti; propter tuum meritum, id est mortem, etiam filius Dei mori habuit: et adornari tibi in mente est super pelliceas tuas tunicas?

II. [1] Nam et illi qui ea constituerunt damnati in poenam mortis deputantur, illi scilicet angeli qui ad filias hominum de caelo ruerunt, ut haec quoque ignominia feminae accedat. Nam et cum materias quasdam bene occultas et artes plerasque non bene reuelatas saeculo multo magis imperito prodidissent, si quidem et metallorum opera nudauerant et herbarum ingenia traduxerant et incantationum uires prouulgauerant et omnem curiositatem usque ad stellarum interpretationem designauerant, proprie et quasi peculiariter feminis instrumentum istud muliebris gloriae contulerunt: lumina lapillorum quibus monilia uariantur, et circulos ex auro quibus brachia artantur, et medicamina ex fuco quibus lanae colorantur, et illum ipsum nigrum puluerem quo oculorum exordia producuntur.

[2] Haec qualia sunt, interim iam ex doctorum suorum qualitate et condicione pronuntiari potest, quod nihil ad integritatem peccatores, nihil ad castitatem adamatore, nihil ad timorem Dei desertores spiritus aut monstrare potuerunt aut praestare. Si doctrinae dicendae sunt, mali magistri male docuerint necesse est; si mercedes pro libidine, nullius rei turpis merces decora est.

Quid autem tanti fuit ista monstrare sicut conferre? [3] Vtrum ne mulieres sine materiis splendoris et sine ingeniis decoris placere non possent hominibus, quae adhuc incultae et incompositae et, ut ita dixerim, crude ac rudes angelos mouerant? An ne sordidi et per gratuitum usum contumeliosi amatores uiderentur, si nihil feminis in connubium allectis contulissent? Sed haec non capit aestimare. Nihil plus desiderare poterant quae angelos possidebant; magno scilicet nupserant.

III. [1] Scio scripturam Enoch, quae hunc ordinem angelis dedit, non recipi a quibusdam quia nec in armarium Iudaicum admittitur. Opinor, non putauerant illam, ante cataclysmum editam, post eum casum orbis omnium rerum abolitorem saluam esse potuisse. Si ista ratio est, recordentur pronepotem ipsius Enoch fuisse superstitem cataclysmi, Noë, qui utique domestico nomine et hereditaria traditione audierat et meminerat de proauis sui penes Deum gratia et de omnibus praedicatis eius, cum Enoch filio suo Mathusalae nihil aliud mandauerit quam ut notitiam eorum posteris suis traderet. Igitur sine dubio potuit Noe in praedicationis delegatione<m> successisse, uel quia et alias non tacuisset tam de Dei conseruatoris sui dispositione quam de ipsa domus suae gloria.

[2] Hoc si non tam expedite haberet, illud quoque assertionem scripturae illius tueretur: proinde potuit abolefactam eam uiolentia cataclysmi in spiritu rursus reformare, quemadmodum et Hierosolymis Babylonia expugnatione deletis omne instrumentum Iudaicae litteraturae per Esdram constat restauratum. [3] Sed cum Enoch eadem scriptura etiam de domino praedicarit, a nobis quidem nihil omnino reiciendum est quod pertineat ad nos. Et legimus omnem scripturam aedificationi habilem diuinitus inspirari. A Iudaeis postea <potest> iam uideri propterea reiectam sicut et cetera fere quae Christum sonant. Nec utique mirum hoc, si scripturas aliquas non receperunt de eo locutas quem et ipsum coram loquentem non erant recepturi. Eo accedit quod Enoch apud Iudam apostolum testimonium possidet.

IV. [1] Nulla nunc muliebri pompae nota inusta sit praedamnationis de exitu auctorum; nihil angelis illis imputetur praeter repudium caeli et matrimonium carnis: rerum ipsarum qualitates examinemus, ut consilia quoque concupiscentiae earum deprehendamus.

Habitus feminae duplicem speciem circumfert, cultum et ornatum. [2] Cultum dicimus quem mundum muliebrem uocant, ornatum quem immundum muliebrem conuenit dici. Ille in auro et argento et gemmis et uestibus deputatur, iste in cura capilli et cutis et earum partium corporis quae oculos trahunt. Alteri ambitionis crimen intendimus, alteri prostitutionis, ut iam hinc prospicias, Dei ancilla, quid ex his disciplinae tuae conueniat, quae de diuersis institutis censearis, scilicet humilitatis et castitatis.

V. [1] Aurum et argentum, principes materiae cultus saecularis, id sint necesse est unde sunt, terra scilicet plane gloriosior, quoniam in maledictorum metallorum feralibus officinis poenali opere deplorata nomen terrae in igni reliquit atque exinde de tormentis in ornamenta, de suppliciis in delicias, de ignominiis in honores metalli refuga mutatur. 2. Sed et ferri et aeris et aliarum uilissimarum materiarum par condicio est et terreni generis et metallici operis, quo nihilo generosior iudicari possit auri et argenti substantia penes naturam.

Quod si de qualitate usus gloria est auro et argento, atquin magis ferro et aeri quorum ita disposita utensilitas ut et proprias operas plures et necessariores exhibeant rebus humanis et nihilominus auri et argenti de suo uicem accommodent iustioribus causis. Nam et anuli ferro fiunt; quaedam esui et potui uascula ex aere adhuc seruat memoria antiquitatis. Viderit, si etiam ad spurca instrumentis auri et argenti demens copia deseruit. 3. Certe nec ager auri opere paratur, nec nauis argenti uigore eontexitur. Nullus bidens aurum demergit in terram, nullus clauus argentum intimat tabulis. Taceo totius uitae necessitates ferro et aeri innixas, cum illae ipsae diuites materiae et de metallis refodiendae et in quocumque usu producendae sine ferri et aeris operario uigore non possint. 4. Iam igitur aestimarxdum est unde obueneat tanta dignitas auro et argento, cum et consanguineis quantum ad genus et potioribus quantum ad utensilitatem materiis praeferantur.

VI. [1] Sed et lapillos istos qui cum auro superbiam iungunt, quid aliud interpreter quam lapillos et calculos eiusdem terrae minutalia? Nec tamen aut fundamentis demandandis aut parietibus moliendis aut fastigiis sustinendis aut tectis densandis necessaria; solum hunc mulierum stuporem aedificare nouerunt, quia tarde teruntur ut niteant, et subdole substruuntur ut floreant, et anxie forantur ut pendeant, et auro lenocinium mutuum praestant.

Aiunt et de frontibus draconum gemmas erui, sicut et in piscium cerebris lapidositas quaedam est. 3. Hoc quoque deerat christianae ut de serpente cultior fiat. Sic calcabit diaboli caput, dum de capite eius ceruicibus suis aut ipsi capiti ornamentum struit!

VII. [1] Haec omnia de raritate et peregrinitate sola gloriam possident. Denique intra terminos suos patrios non tanti habentur. Semper abundantia contumeliosa in semetipsam est. Apud barbaros quosdam, quia uernaculum est aurum et copiosum, auro uinctos in ergastulis habent et diuitiis malos onerant, tanto locupletiores quanto nocentiores. Aliquando re uera inuentum est quomodo et aurum non ametur.

quod nec ad ostensionem fere habentur: latent in cingulis smaragdi et cylindros uaginae suae solus gladius sub sinu nouit et in peronibus uniones emergere de luto cupiunt. Denique tam gemmatum habent quod gemmatum esse non debet si non comparet, aut ideo comparet ut neglectum quoque ostendatur.

VIII. [1] Proinde et uestium de coloribus honorem serui etiam eorum terunt. Sed et parietes Tyriis et hyacinthinis et illis regiis uelis quae uos operose resoluta transfiguratis pro pictura abutuntur. Vilior est apud illos purpura quam rubrica. [2] Quis enim est uestium honor iustus de adulterio colorum iniustorum? Non placet Deo quod non ipse produxit; nisi si non potuit purpureas et aerinas oues nasci iubere. Si potuit, ergo iam noluit; quod Deus noluit utique non licet fingi. Non ergo natura optima sunt ista quae a Deo non sunt, auctore naturae. Sic a diabolo esse intelleguntur, ab interpolatore naturae. [3] Alterius enim esse non possunt, si Dei non sunt, quia aemuli sint necesse est quae Dei non sunt. Alius autem praeter diabolum et angelos eius aemulus Dei non est. — Ceterum materiae ex Deo sunt. — Non statim et huiusmodi fructus latent in omnibus. Quaeritur et unde sint eonchae et qua dispositione decurrant et ubi spem suam collocent. [4] Nam et omnes istae profanae spectaculorum saecularium uoluptates, sicut de ipsis suum uolumen edidimus, ipsa etiam idololatria ex rebus Dei constat. [5] Non tamen ideo circi furoribus aut arenae atrocitatibus aut scenae turpitudinibus christianum affici oportet, quia Deus et equum et pantheram et uocem homini dedit; nec ideo idololatriam impune faciat christianus quia Dei conditio est et tus et merum et ignis qui uescitur et animalia quae uictimae fiunt, cum et ipsa materia quae adoratur Dei sit. [6] Sic ergo et circa actum materiarum, census a Deo descendens propterea excusatus, Deo extraneum ut reum scilicet gloriae saeculum.

IX. [1] Nam ut quaeque rerum per singulas quasque terras et unamquamque regionem maris a Deo distributa sunt, inuicem sibi peregrina, apud externos mutuo rara, apud suos iure si utique uel negleguntur uel <non> appetuntur, quia non tantus est in illis gloriae feruor inter domesticos frigidae. Sed enim ex possessionum distributione quam Deus ut uoluit ordinauit, raritas et peregrinitas apud extraneos semper gratiam inueniens de simplici causa non habendi quae Deus alibi collocauit concupiscentiam concitat habendi.

[2] Ex hac uitium aliud extenditur, immoderate habendi, quod, etsi forte

habendum sit, modus tamen debetur: haec erit ambitio. Vnde et nomen eius interpretandum est quod concupiscentia apud animum ambiente nascatur ad gloriae uotum, grande scilicet uotum quod, ut diximus, non natura nec ueritas sed uitiosa animi passio, concupiscentia, commendauit. Et alta uitia ambitionis et gloriae. Sic et pretia rebus inflammauit ut se quoque accenderet.

[3] Nam tanto maior fit concupiscentia quanto magno fecit quod concupiit.

De breuissimis loculis patrimonium grande profertur; uno lino decies sestertium inseritur; saltus et insulas tenera ceruix circumfert; graciles aurium cutes kalendarium expendunt et sinistra per singulos digitos de saccis singulis ludit. Hae sunt uires ambitionis tantarum usurarum substantiam uno et muliebri corpusculo baiulari.

LIBER II

I. [1] Ancillae Dei uiui, conseruae et sorores meae, quo iure deputor uobiscum, postremissimus omnium quidem, eo iure conseruiti et fraternitatis audeo ad uos uerba ista facere, non utique affectationi sed affectioni procurans in causa uestrae salutis.

Ea salus, nec feminarum modo sed etiam uirorum, in exhibitione praecipue pudicitiae statuta est. Nam cum omnes templum Dei simus, inlato in nos et consecrato Spiritu Sancto, eius templi aeditua et antistes pudicitia est quae nihil immundum nec profanum inferri sinat, ne Deus ille qui inhabitat inquinatam sedem offensus derelinquat.

[2] Sed modo nos non de pudicitia cui indicendae et exigendae sufficiunt instantia ubique diuina praecepta, uerum de pertinentibus ad eam, id est qualiter uos incedere oporteat. Pleraeque enim — quod ipsum mihi utique reprehendendo in omnibus reprehendere Deus permittat — aut ignorantes simpliciter aut dissimulantes audaciter ita ingrediuntur quasi pudicitia in sola carnis integritate et stupri auersione consistat nec quicquam extrinsecus opus sit, de cultus dico et ornatus dispositione. Sed enim perseuerant in pristinis studiis formae et nitoris, eandem superficiem sui circumferentes quam feminae nationum a quibus abest conscientia uerae pudicitiae, quia nihil uerum in his quae Deum nesciunt praesidem et magistrum ueritatis. [3] Nam et si qua in gentilibus pudicitia credi potest, usque adeo eam imperfectam et inconditam constat <ut>, licet in animo aliquatenus tenax sui agat, in habitus tamen licentia sese dissoluat, propter ueritatem gentilium solacium appetendo cuius rei deuitat effectum. Quota denique est quae nec placere quidem extraneis concupiscat, quae non uelit idcirco se expingere ut neget appetitum, quamquam et hoc gentili pudicitiae familiare sit non delinquere, attamen uelle, uel etiam nolle, attamen non denegare? Quid mirum? Peruersa sunt omnia quae a Deo non sunt. [4] Viderint igitur quae, totum bonum non obtinendo, facile et quod obtinent malo permiscent. Vos ab illis, ut in ceteris, incessu quoque diuertere necessarium est, quoniam perfectae esse debetis sicut pater uester qui in caelis est.

II. [1] Perfectae autem id est christianae pudicitiae appetitionem sui non tantum non appetendam sed etiam execrandam uobis sciatis. Primo quod non de integra conscientia uenit studium placendi per decorem quem naturaliter inuitatorem libidinis scimus. Quid igitur excitas in te malum istud? Quid inuitas cuius te profiteris extraneam? Tum quod temptationibus uiam aperire non debemus, quae nonnumquam quod Deus a suis abigat instando perficiunt, certe uel spiritum scandalo permouent. [2] Debemus quidem ita sancte et tota fidei substantia incedere ut confisae et securae simus de conscientia nostra, optantes perseuerare id in nobis, non tamen praesumentes. Nam qui praesumit minus iam ueretur; qui minus ueretur minus praecauet; qui minus praecauet plus periclitatur. Timor fundamentum salutis est, praesumptio impedimentum timoris. [3] Vtilius ergo si speremus nos posse delinquere quam si praesumamus non posse. Sperando enim timebimus, timendo cauebimus, cauendo salui erimus. Contra si praesumamus neque timendo neque cauendo difficile salui erimus. Qui securus agit, non, et sollicitus, non possidet tutam et firmam securitatem. At qui sollicitus est, is uere poterit esse securus.

Et de suis quidem seruis Deus pro misericordia sua curet et iam praesumere illis de bono suo feliciter liceat. [4] Quid autem alteri periculo sumus? Quid alteri concupiscentiam importamus? Quam si dominus ampliando legem a facto stupri non discernit in poena, nescio an impune habeat qui alicui fuerit causa perditionis. Perit emm ille simul ut tuam formam concupierit et admisit iam in animo quod concupiit, et facta es tu gladius illi ut etsi a culpa uaces ab inuidia non liberaberis. Vt, cum in alicuius agro latrocinium gestum est, crimen quidem dominum non constringit; dum rus tamen eius ignominia notatur, ipse quoque infamia aspergitur.

[6] Nam etsi accusandus decor norx est ut felicitas corporis, ut diuinae plasticae accessio, ut animae aliqua uestis bona, timendus est tamen uel propter iniuriam et uiolentiam sectatorum: quam etiam pater fidei Abraham in uxoris suae specie pertimuit et sororem mentitus Saram salutem contumelia redemit.

III. [1] Nunc non sit timenda dignitas formae ut nec possidentibus grauis, nec appetentibus exitiosa, nec coniunctis periculosa; non exposita temptationibus, non circumdata scandalis existimetur. Sufficit quod angelis Dei non est necessaria. Nam ubi pudicitia, ibi uacua pulchritudo, quia proprie usus et fructus pulchritudinis corporis luxuria, nisi si quis aliam messem decori corporis arbitratur. Illae sibi formositatem et datam extendant et non datam conquirant quae quod ab illa flagitatur sibi quoque praestare se putant, cum alteri praestant.

[2] Dicet aliquis: «Quid ergo? Non, et exclusa luxuria et admissa castitate, laude formae sola frui et de bono corporis gloriari licet?» Viderit quem iuuat de carne gloriari. Nobis autem nullum gloriae studium est, quia gloria exaltationis ingenium est. Porro exaltatio non congruit professoribus humilitatis ex praeceptis Dei. Deinde, si omnis gloria uana et stuporata, quanto magis quae in carne, nobis dumtaxat! Nam etsi gloriandum est, in spiritus bono, non in carnis, placere uelle debemus quia spiritualium sectatores sumus. [3] In quibus operamur, in illis et gaudeamus; de his gloriam carparamus de quibus salutem speramus. Plane gloriabitur christianus in carne, sed cum propter Christum lacerata durauerit ut spiritus in ea coronetur, non ut oculos et suspiria adulescentium post se trahat.

Ita quod ex omni parte in uobis uacat, merito et non habentes fastidiatis et habentes neglegatis. Sancta femina sit naturaliter speciosa, non adeo sit occasionem. Certe si fuerit, non ignorare sed etiam impedire se debet.

IV. [1] Quasi gentilibus dicam, gentili et communi omnium praecepto alloquens uos: solis maritis uestris placere debetis. In tantum autem placebitis eis in quantum alteris placere non curaueritis. Securae estote, benedictae, uxor nulla deformis est marito suo; satis placuit cum electa est seu moribus seu forma commendata. Ne quae uestrum putent si temperauerint a compositione sui, odium et auersionem maritorum prosecuturam. [2] Omnis maritus castitatis exactor est; formam uero fidelis non expectat quia non isdem bonis quae gentiles bona putant capimur; infidelis contra etiam suspectam habet, uel propter illam sceleratam in nos opinionem gentilium. Cui ergo pulchritudinem tuam nutrias? Si fideli, non exigit; si gentili, non credit. Quid gestias aut suspecto aut non desideranti placere?

V. [1] Haec utique non ad crudam in totum et ferinam habitudinem insinuandam uobis suggeruntur, nec de bono squaloris et paedoris suademus, sed de modo et cardine et iustitia corporis excolendi. Non supergrediendum ultra quam quod simplices et sufficientes munditiae concupiscunt, ultra quam Deo placere.

[2] In illum enim delinquant quae cutem medicaminibus urgent, genas rubore maculant, oculos fuligine porrigunt. Displicet nimirum illis plastica Dei; in ipsis redarguunt et reprehendunt artificem omnium. Reprehendunt enim cum emendant, cum adiciunt, utique ab aduersario artifice sumentes additamenta ista, [3] id est a diabolo. Nam quis corpus mutare monstraret nisi qui et spiritum hominis malitia transfigurauit? Ille indubitate huiusmodi ingenia concinnauit ut in nobis quodam modo manus Deo inferret. [4] Quod nascitur opus Dei est. Ergo quod infingitur diaboli negotium est. Diuino operi Satanae ingenia superducere quam scelestum est! Serui nostri ab inimicis nostris nihil mutantur; milites ab hoste imperatoris sui nihil concupiscunt. De aduersario enim eius in cuius manu sis aliquid usui postulare transgressio est. Christianus a malo illo adiuuabitur? Nescio an hoc nomen ei perseueret. Erit enim eius de cuius doctrinis instrui concupiscit. [5] Quantum autem a uestris disciplinis et professionibus aliena sunt, quam indigna nomini christiano faciem fictam gestare quibus simplicitas omnis indicitur, effigie mentiri quibus lingua non licet, appetere quod datum non sit quibus alieni abstinentia traditur, adulterium in specie exercere quibus studium pudicitiae est! Credite, benedictae, quomodo praecepta Dei custodietis, liniamenta eius in uobis non custodientes?

VI. [1] Video quasdam et capillum croco uertere. Pudet eas etiam nationis suae quod non Germaniae atque Galliae sint procreatae. Ita patriam capillo transferunt. Male ac pessime sibi auspicantur flammeo capite et decorum putant quod inquinant. [2] Atqui et detrimentum crinibus medicaminum uis inurit et cerebro perniciem etiam cuiuslibet sinceri humoris assiduitas reseruatur, tum solis animando simul et siccando capillo exoptabilis ardor. Quis decor cum iniuria? Quae cum immunditiis pulchritudo? Crocum capiti suo mulier christiana ingeret ut in aram? Quodcumque enim immundo spiritui excremari solet, id nisi probis et necessariis et salubribus usibus adhibeatur, ad quod Dei creatura prospecta est, sacrificium uideri potest. Sed enim dominus ait: [3] «Quis uestrum potest capillum atrum ex albo facere aut album ex atro?» Hae quae reuincunt Deum: «Ecce, inquit, pro albo uel atro flauum facimus, gratiae faciliorem». Quamuis et atrum ex albo conantur facere quas paenituit

VII. [1] Quid enim tanta ornandi capitis operositas ad salutem subministrat? Quid crinibus uestris quiescere non licet, modo substrictis, modo relaxatis, modo suscitatis, modo elisis? Aliae gestiunt in cincinnos coercere, aliae ut uagi et uolucres elabantur, non bona simplicitate. Affigitis praeterea nescio quas enormitates sutilium atque textilium capillamentorum, nunc in galeri modum quasi uaginam capitis et operculum uerticis, nunc in ceruicum retro suggestum. [2] Mirum quod non contra domini praecepta contenditur! Ad mensuram neminem sibi adicere posse pronuntiatum est. Vos sane adicitis ad pondus, collyridas quasdam uel scutorum umbilicos ceruicibus adstruendo. Si non pudet enormitatis, pudeat inquinamenti, ne exuuias alieni capitis forsitan immundi, forsitan nocentis et gehennae destinati sancto et christiano capiti supparetis. Immo, omnem hanc ornatus seruitutem a libero capite propellite. Frustra laboratis ornatae uideri, frustra peritissimos quosque structores capillaturae adhibetis: Deus uos uelari iubet, credo ne quarumdam capita uideantur.

VIII. [1] Videlicet nunc ut uir et sexu aemulus feminas a suis depello. An et nobis quaedam respectu obediendae grauitatis propter metum debitum Deo detrahuntur? [2] Siquidem et uiris propter feminas et feminis propter uiros uitio naturae ingenua est placendi uoluntas, propriasque praestigias formae et hic sexus sibi agnoscit: barbam acius cadere, interuellere, circumradere, capillum disponere etiam colorare, canitiem primam quamque subducere, totius corporis lanuginem pigmento quoque muliebri dstringere, cetera pulueris cuiusdam aspritudine leuigare, tum speculum omni occasione consulere, anxie inspicere, cum tamen, cognito Deo, adempta placendi uoluntate, per luxuriae uacationem omnia illa ut otiosa ut hostilia pudicitiae recusantur. [3] Nam ubi Deus, ibi pudicitia, ibi grauitas, adiutrix et socia eius. Quo ergo pacto pudicitiam sine instrumento suo, id est sine grauitate, tractabimus? Quomodo autem grauitatem administrandae pudicitiae adhibebimus, nisi et in facie et in cultu et in totius hominis contemplatione seueritas circumferatur?

IX. [1] Quamobrem erga uestitum quoque et reliqua compositionis uestrae impedimenta proinde uobis curanda est amputatio et decussio redundantioris nitoris. Nam quid prodest faciem quidem frugi et expeditam et simplicitate condignam diuinae disciplinae exhibere, cetera uero corporis laciniosis pomparum et deliciarum ineptiis occupare? [2] Hae pompae quam de proximo curent luxuriae negotium et obstrepant pudicitiae disciplinis dinoscere in facili est, quod gratiam decoris cultus societate prostuant, adeo si desint irritam et ingratam reddunt, uelut exarmatam et naufragam; contra si forma defecit, adminiculum nitoris quasi de suo gratiam supplet. [3] Aetates denique requietas iam et in portum modestiae subductas splendor et dignitas cultus auocant et seueritatem appetitionibus inquietant compensantibus scilicet habitus irritamenta pro frigore aetatis. [4] Ergo, benedictae, primo quidem ut lenones et prostitute uestitus et cultus ne in uos admiseritis; tum si quas uel diuitiarum suarum uel natalium uel retro dignitatum ratio compellit ita pompaticas progredi, ut sapientiam consecutae, temperare saltem ab huiusmodi curate, ne totis habenis licentiam usurpetis praetextu necessitatis. [5] Quomodo etenim humilitatem quam christiani profitemur implere poteritis non repastinantes diuitiarum uestrarum uel elegantiarum usum quae tantum ad gloriam faciunt? Gloria autem exaltare, non humiliare consuevit.

demonstrat tanquam non habeantur, propter angustias temporum, quid de uanis his instrumentis earum? [7] Non enim et ita multi faciunt et se spadonatu obsignant, propter regnum Dei tam fortem et utique permissam uoluntatem sponte ponentes? Quidam ipsam Dei creaturam sibi interdicut, abstinentes uino et animalibus esculentis quorum fructus nulli periculo aut sollicitudini adiacent, sed humilitatem animae suae in uictus quoque castigatione Deo immolant. Satis igitur et uos usae estis diuitiis atque deliciis, satis dotum uestrarum fructus decidistis ante notitiam salutarium disciplinarum.

[8] Nos sumus in quos decucurrerunt fines saeculorum; nos destinati a Deo ante mundum in extimationem temporum, tanquam castigando et castrando, ut ita dixerim, saeculo erudimur a domino. Nos sumus circumcisio omnium, et spiritalis et carnalis. Nam et spiritu et carne saecularia circumcidimus.

X. [1] Nimirum enim Deus monstrauit sucis herbarum et concharum salius incoquere lanas: exciderat illi, cum uniuersa nasci iuberet, purpureas et coccineas oues mandare! Deus et ipsarum uestium officinas commentus quae, leues et exiles, solo pretio graues essent. Deus et auri tanta opera produxit complectendis et distinguendis lapillis scrupulosa. Deus auribus uulnera intulit et tanti habuit uexationem operis sui et cruciatus infantiae innocentis tunc primum dolentis ut ex illis ad ferrum nati corporis cicatricibus grana nescio quae penderent quae plane Parthi per omnia quaeque sua bullarum uice inserunt. [2] Quamquam et aurum ipsum cuius uos gloria occupat cuidam genti ad uincula seruire referunt gentilium litterae. Adeo non ueritate bona sunt sed raritate. Per angelos autem peccatores demonstrata sunt, qui et ipsas materias prodiderunt, et operositas cum raritate commissa pretiositatem et ex ea libidinem possidendae pretiositatis feminarum excitauit. [3] Quod si idem angeli qui et materias eiusmodi et illecebras detexerunt, auri dico et lapidum illustrium, et operas eorum tradiderunt, etiam ipsum calliblepharum uellerumque tinturas inter cetera docuerunt damnati a Deo sunt, ut Enoch refert, quomodo placebimus Deo gaudentes rebus illorum qui iram et animaduersionem Dei propterea prouocauerunt?

Deo prouisa tunc et in saeculo posita uti nunc essent in quibus disciplina seruorum eius probaretur, uti per licentiam utendi continentiae experientia procederet. Nonne sapientes patres familiae de industria quaedam seruis suis offerunt atque permittunt ut experiantur an et qualiter permissis utantur, si probe, si modeste? [6] Quanto autem laudabilior qui abstinerit in totum, qui timuerit etiam indulgentiam domini. Sic igitur et apostolus: «Omnia, inquit, licent, sed non omnia expediunt». Quanto facilius illicita timebit qui licita uerebitur.

XI. [1] Quae autem uobis causa exstructius prodeundi cum remotae sitis ab his quae talium indigent? Nam nec templa circuitis, nec spectacula postulatis nec festos dies gentilium nostis. Propter istos enim conuentus et mutuum uidere ac uideri omnes pompae in publicum proferuntur aut ut luxuria negotietur aut gloria insolecat. Vobis autem nulla procedendi causa non tetrica: [2] aut imbecillus aliquis ex fratribus uisitur, aut sacrificium offertur, aut Dei sermo administratur. Quiduis horum grauitatis et sanctitatis negotium et si cui opus non sit habitu extraordinario et composito et soluto. Ac si necessitas amicitiarum officiorumque gentilium uos uocat, cur non uestris armis indutae proceditis, tanto magis quanto ad extraneas fidei ut sit inter diaboli ancillas et Dei discrimen, ut exemplo sitis illis, ut aedificentur in uobis, ut, quomodo ait apostolus, magnificetur Deus in corpore uestro. Magnificatur autem in corpore per pudicitiam utique et per habitum pudicitiae competentem.

[3] Sed enim a quibusdam dicitur: «Ne blasphemetur nomen in nobis si quid de pristino habitu et cultu detrahamus». Non auferamus ergo nobis et uitia pristina; simus et moribus isdem si et superficie eadem: et tunc uere non blasphemabunt nationes. Grandis blasphemia si qua dicatur: «Ex quo facta est christiana, pauperius incedit»! Timebis pauperior uideri ex quo locupletior facta es et sordidior ex quo mundior? Secundum gentilium an secundum Dei placitum incedere christianos oportet?

XII. [1] Optemus tantummodo ne iustae blasphemationis causa simus. Quanto autem magis blasphemabile est si quae sacerdotes pudicitiae dicimini impudicarum ritu procedatis cultae et expictae. Aut quid minus habent infelicissimae illae publicarum libidinum uictimae? Quas, si quae leges a matronis et matronalibus decoramentis coercerant, iam certe saeculi improbitas cotidie insurgens honestissimis quibusque feminis usque ad errorem dinoscendi coaequauit. [2] Quamquam lenocinia formae nunquam non prostituto corpori coniuncta et debita etiam scripturae suggerunt. Illa ciuitas ualida quae super montes septem et plurimas aquas praesidet, cum prostitutae appellationem a domino meruisset, quali habitu appellationi suae comparata est? Sedet certe in purpura et coccino et auro et lapide pretioso. Quam maledicta sunt sine quibus non potuit maledicta et prostituta describi. [3] Tamar illa, quia se expinxerat et ornauerat, idcirco Iudae suspicioni uisa est quaestui sedere adeoque sub uelamento latebat, habitus qualitate quaestuariam mentiente, ut quaestuariam et uoluit et compellauit et pactus est. Vnde addiscimus aduersus congressus etiam et suspensiones impudicas prouidendum omni modo esse. Quid enim castae mentis integritas in alterius suspitione maculatur? Quid speratur in me quod auersor? Cur non mores meos habitus pronuntiat, ne spiritus per aures ab impudentia uulneretur? Liceat uideri pudicam, certe impudicam si licet.

XIII. [1] Aliqua fors dicit: «Non est mihi necessarium hominibus probari. Nec enim humanum testimonium requiro. Deus conspexor est cordis.» Scimus omnes, cum tamen quid idem per apostolum dixerit recordemur: «Probum uestrum coram hominibus appareat». Ad quid, nisi ut malitia ad uos accessum omnino non habeat et ut malis et exemplo et testimonio sitis? Aut quid est: «Luceant opera uestra»? Aut quid nos dominus lumen terrae uocauit? Quid ciuitati super montem constitutae comparauit si non relucemus in tenebris et extamus inter demersos? [2] Si lucernam tuam sub modio abstruseris, in tenebris relictam a multis incurseris necesse est. Haec sunt quae nos luminaria mundi faciunt, bona scilicet nostra. Bonum autem, dumtaxat uerum et plenum, non amat tenebras sed gaudet uideri et ipsa denotatione sui exultat.

[5] Quare, benedictae, meditemur duriora et non sentiemus; relinquamus

laetiora et non, desiderabimus; stemus expeditae ad omnem uim, nihil habentes quod relinquere timeamus. Retinacula ista sunt spei nostrae. Proiciamus ornamenta terrena, si caelestia optamus. [6] Ne dilexeritis aurum in quo prima delicta populi Israel denotantur.

Odisse debetis quod Iudaeos perdidit, quod derelinquentes Deum adorauerunt. Iam tunc aurum ignis est esca. Ceterum tempora christianorum semper et nunc uel maxime non auro sed ferro transiguntur: stolae martyriorum praeparantur, angeli baiuli sustinentur. [7] Prodite uos iam medicamentis et ornamentis exstructae prophetarum et apostolorum, sumentes de simplicitate eandorem, de pudicitia ruborem, depictae oculos uerecundia et os taciturnitate, inserentes in aures sermonem Dei, adnectentes ceruicibus iugum Christi. Caput maritis subicite et satis ornatae eritis; manus lanis occupate, pedes domi figite et plus quam in auro placebitis. Vestite nos serico probitatis, byssino sanctitatis, purpura pudicitiae. Taliter pigmentatae Deum habebitis amatorem.

LIBER I.

1. [1] Si quid retro gestum est nobis adversus Marcionem, iam hinc viderit. Novam rem aggredimur ex vetere. Primum opusculum quasi properatum pleniore postea compositione rescideram. Hanc quoque nondum exemplariis suffectam fraude tunc fratris, dehinc apostatati, amisi, qui forte descripserat quaedam mendosissime et exhibuit frequentiae. [2] Emendationis necessitas facta est. Innovationis eius occasio aliquid adicere persuasit. Ita stilus iste nunc de secundo tertius et de tertio iam hinc primus hunc opusculi sui exitum necessario praefatur, ne quem varietas eius in disperso reperta confundat. [3] Pontus, qui dicitur Euxinus, natura negatur, nomine illuditur. Ceterum hospitalem Pontum nec de situ aestimes; ita ab humanioribus fretis nostris quasi quodam barbariae suae pudore secessit. Gentes ferocissimae inhabitant; si tamen habitatur in plaustro. Sedes incerta, vita cruda, libido promiscua et plurimum nuda, etiam cum abscondunt, suspensis de iugo pharetris indicibus, ne temere qui intercedat. Ita nec armis suis erubescunt. Parentum cadavera cum pecudibus caesa convivio convorant. Qui non ita decesserint ut escatiles fuerint, maledicta mors est. Nec feminae sexu mitigantur secundum pudorem; ubera excludunt, pensum securibus faciunt, malunt militare quam nubere. Durtia de caelo quoque. Dies nunquam patens, sol nunquam libens, unus a'r nebula, totus annus hibernum, omne quod flaverit aquilo est. Liquores ignibus redeunt, amnes glacie negantur, montes pruina exaggerantur. Omnia torpent, omnia rigent; nihil illic nisi feritas calet, illa scilicet quae fabulas scenis dedit de sacrificiis Taurorum et amoribus Colchorum et crucibus Caucasorum. [4] Sed nihil tam barbarum ac triste apud Pontum quam quod illic Marcion natus est, Scythia tetrior, Hamaxobio instabilior, Massageta inhumanior, Amazona audacior, nubilo obscurior, hieme frigidior, gelu fragilior, Istro fallacior, Caucaso abruptior. Quidni? penes quem verus Prometheus deus omnipotens blasphemiis lancinatur. [5] Iam et bestiis illius barbariei importunior Marcion. Quis enim tam castrator carnis castor quam qui nuptias abstulit? Quis tam comesor mus Ponticus quam qui evangelia corrosit? Nae tu, Euxine, probabilior feram philosophis edidisti quam Christianis. Nam ille canicola Diogenes hominem invenire cupiebat lucernam meridie circumferens, Marcion deum quem invenerat extincto lumine fidei suae amisit. [6] Non negabunt discipuli eius primam illius fidem nobiscum fuisse, ipsius litteris testibus, ut hinc iam destinari possit haereticus qui deserto quod prius fuerat id postea sibi elegerit quod retro non erat. In tantum enim haeresis deputabitur quod postea inducitur, in quantum veritas habebitur quod retro et a primordio traditum est. [7] Sed alius libellus hunc gradum sustinebit adversus haereticos, etiam sine retractatu doctrinarum revincendos, quod hoc sint de praescriptione novitatis. Nunc quatenus admittenda congressio est, interdum ne compendium praescriptionis ubique advocatum diffidentiae deputetur, regulam adversarii prius praetexam, ne cui lateat in qua principalis quaestio dimicatura est.

2. [1] Duos Ponticus deos affert, tanquam duas Symplegadas naufragii sui: quem negare non potuit creatorem, id est nostrum, et quem probare non poterit, id est suum : passus infelix huius praesumptionis instinctum de simplici capitulo dominicae pronuntiationis in homines non in deos disponentis exempla illa bonae et malae arboris, quod neque bona malos neque mala bonos proferat fructus, id est neque mens vel fides bona malas edat operas neque mala bonas. [2] Languens enim (quod et nunc multi, et maxime haeretici), circa mali quaestionem, unde malum, et obtusis sensibus ipsa enormitate curiositatis, inveniens creatorem pronuntiantem, Ego sum qui condo mala, quanto ipsum praesumpserat mali auctorem et ex aliis argumentis, quae ita persuadent perverso cuique, tanto in creatorem interpretatus malam arborem malos fructus condentem, scilicet mala, alium deum praesumpsit esse debere in partem bonae arboris bonos fructus. [3] Et ita in Christo quasi aliam inveniens dispositionem solius et purae benignitatis, ut diversae a creatore, facile novam et hospitam argumentatus est divinitatem in Christo suo revelatam, modicoque exinde fermento totam fidei massam haeretico acore desipuit. Habuit et Cerdonem quendam, informatorem scandali huius, quo facilius duos deos caeci perspexisse se existimaverunt. Unum enim non integre viderant. Lippientibus etiam singularis lucerna numerosa est. Alterum igitur deum, quem confiteri cogeatur, de malo infamando destruxit, alterum, quem commentari connitebatur, de bono praestruendo construxit. Has naturas quibus disposuerit articulis per ipsas responsiones nostras ostendemus.

3. [1] Principalis itaque et exinde tota congressio de numero, an duos deos liceat induci, si forte, poetica et pictoria licentia, et tertia iam, haeretica. Sed veritas Christiana dstrictae pronuntiavit, Deus si non unus est, non est, quia dignius credimus non esse quodcunque non ita fuerit ut esse debebit. [2] Deum

autem ut scias unum esse debere, quaere quid sit deus, et non aliter invenies. Quantum humana conditio de deo definire potest, id definitio quod et omnium conscientia agnoscet, deum summum esse magnum, in aeternitate constitutum, innatum, infectum, sine initio, sine fine. Hunc enim statum aeternitati censendum, quae summum magnum deum efficiat, dum hoc est in deo ipsa, atque ita et cetera, ut sit deus summum magnum et forma et ratione et vi et potestate. [3] Cum de isto conveniat apud omnes (nemo enim negabit deum summum magnum quid esse, nisi qui potuerit deum imum modicum quid e contrario pronuntiare, ut deum neget auferendo quod dei est), quae erit iam condicio ipsius summi magni? [4] Nempe ut nihil illi adaequetur, id est ut non sit aliud summum magnum, quia, si fuerit, adaequabitur, et si adaequabitur non erit iam summum magnum, eversa condicione et, ut ita dixerim, lege quae summo magno nihil sinit adaequari. [5] Ergo unicum sit necesse est quod fuerit summum magnum, par non habendo, ne non sit summum magnum. Ergo non aliter erit quam per quod habet esse, id est unicum omnino. Proinde deus cum summum magnum sit, recte veritas nostra pronuntiavit, Deus si non unus est, non est. Non quasi dubitemus esse deum, dicendo, Si non unus, non est, sed quia quem confidimus esse, id eum definiamus esse quod si non est, deus non est, summum scilicet magnum. Porro summum magnum unicum sit necesse est. Ergo et deus unicus erit: non aliter deus, nisi summum magnum, nec aliter summum magnum, nisi parem non habens, nec aliter parem non habens, nisi unicus fuerit. [6] Certe quemcunque alium deum induxeris, non alia poteris eum forma tueri deum quam ut et illi proprium divinitatis adscripseris, sicut aeternum, ita et summum magnum. Duo ergo summa magna quomodo consistent, cum hoc sit summum magnum, par non habere, par autem non habere uni competat, in duobus esse nullo modo possit?

4. [1] Sed argumentabitur quilibet posse et duo summa magna consistere, distincta atque disiuncta in suis finibus, et utique advocabit exemplum regna terrarum tanta numero et tamen summa magna in suis quibusque regionibus, et putabit ubique humana divinis conferenda. Iam ergo si huic argumentationi locus dabitur, quid prohibet, non dico et tertium et quartum deum inducere, verum tot iam numero quot et gentium reges? [2] De deo agitur, cuius hoc principaliter proprium est, nullius exempli capere comparisonem. Hoc natura ipsa, si non aliquis Esaias, vel ipse per Esaiam deus, contionabitur, Cui me

similabit? Divinis forsitan comparabuntur humana, deo non ita. [3] Aliud enim deus, aliud quae dei. Denique qui exemplo uteris regis quasi summi magni, vide ne iam non possis eo uti. Rex enim etsi summum magnum. est in suo solio usque ad deum, tamen infra deum, comparatus autem ad deum excidet iam de summo magno, translato in deum. Hoc si ita, quomodo uteris eius rei exemplo ad dei comparisonem quae, dum ad comparisonem accedit, amittitur? [4] Quid nunc, si nec inter reges plurifarum videri potest summum magnum, sed unicum et singulare, apud eum scilicet qui rex regum ob summam magnitudinem et subiectionem ceterorum graduum quasi culmen dominationis excipitur? [5] Sed etiam alterius formae reges, qui singulares in unione imperii praesunt, si minutalibus, ut ita dixerim, regnis undique conferantur in examinationem, qua constet quis eorum praecellat in substantiis et viribus regni, in unum necesse est summa magnitudinis eliquetur, omnibus gradatim per comparisonis exitum de magnitudinis summa expressis et exclusis. [6] Adeo etsi in disperso multifarum videtur summum magnum, suis viribus et sua natura et suo statu unicum est. Proinde cum duo dii conferuntur, ut duo reges et duo summa magna, in alterum concedat necesse est unio summi magni ex sententia comparisonis, quia summum ex victoria sua constat, superato aemulo alio magno, non tamen summo, atque ex defectione aemuli solitudinem quandam de singularitate praestantiae suae possidens unicum est. Ineluctabilis iste complexus in hoc sententiam constringit, aut negandum deum esse summum magnum, quod nemo patietur sapiens, aut nulli alii communicandum.

5. [1] Aut quae ratio duo summa magna composuit? Primo enim exigam, cur non plura, si duo, quando locupletiores oporteret credi substantiam divinitatis, si competeret ei numerus. Honestior et liberalior Valentinus, qui simul ausus est duos concipere, Bython et Sigen, tum usque ad xxx aeonum fetus, tanquam Aeneiae scrofae, examen divinitatis effudit. [2] Quaecunque ratio plura summa magna non patitur admitti, eadem nec duo, ut ipsa plura post unum. Post unum enim numerus. Quae potuit duo admittere, eadem potuit et plura. Post duo enim multitudo, unione iam excessa. Denique apud nos vis rationis istius ipso termino plures deos credi non sinit, quod nec duos illa regula unum deum sistens, qua deum id esse oporteat cui nihil adaequetur, ut summo magno, unicum autem sit cui nihil adaequetur. [3] Iam nunc duo summa magna, duo paria, cui operae pretio, cui emolumento deputarentur?

Quid interfuit numeri, cum duo paria non different uno? Una enim res est quae eadem in duobus est. Etiam si plura essent paria, tantundem omnia unum fuissent, nullo inter se differendo, qua paria. [4] Porro si neutrum ex duobus altero distat, iam ut ambo summa magna, qua dei ambo, neutrum plus altero praestat, nullam rationem numeri sui ostendunt, praestantiam non habentes. Numerus autem divinitatis summa ratione constare deberet, vel quoniam et cultura eius in anceps deduceretur. Ecce enim duos intuens deos tam pares quam duo summa magna, quid facerem? [5] Si ambos colerem, vererem ne abundantia officii superstitio potius quam religio existimaretur, quia duos tam pares et in altero ambos possem in uno demereri, hoc ipsum testimonio praestans parilitati et unitati eorum, dum alterum in altero venerarer, dum in uno mihi duo sunt. Si alterum colerem, aequae recogitarem ne suffundere viderem numeri vanitatem sine differentia supervacui, hoc est ut tutius censerem neutrum colendum quam alteram cum scrupulo colendum aut ambos vane.

6. [1] Sic adhuc videmur disputare quasi Marcion duos pares constituat. Nam dum defendimus deum summum magnum unicum credi oportere, excludentes ab eo parilitatem, tanquam de duobus paribus de his retractavimus: nihilominus tamen docendo pares esse non posse secundum summi magni formam, satis confirmavimus duos esse non posse, alioquin certi Marcionem dispares deos constituere, alterum iudicem, ferum, bellipotentem, alterum mitem, placidum et tantummodo bonum atque optimum. [2] Dispiciamus aequae et hanc partem, an diversitas saltem duos capiat, si parilitas capere non potuit. Porro et hic eadem regula summi magni patrociniabitur nobis, utpote quae totum statum vindicet divinitatis. Conveniens enim et quodammodo iniecta manu detinens adversarii sensum non negantis creatorem deum iustissime praescribo illi diversitati locum non esse inter eos quos ex aequo deos confessus non potest facere diversos, non quia non et homines licet sub eadem appellatione diversissimos esse, sed quia deus non erit dicendus, quia nec credendus, nisi summum magnum. [3] Cum ergo summum magnum cogatur agnoscere quem deum non negat, non potest admitti ut summo magno aliquam adscribat diminutionem, qua subiciatur alii summo magno. Desinit enim, si subiciatur. Non est autem dei desinere de statu suo, id est de summo magno. Nam et in illo deo potius periclitari poterit summum magnum, si depretiari capit in creatore. [4] Ita cum duo dii pronuntiantur duo summa magna, necesse est neutrum altero aut maius sit aut minus, neutrum altero aut sublimius aut deiectius. Nega deum quem dicis deteriorem; nega summum magnum quem credis minorem. Deum vero confessus utrumque duo summa magna confessus es. Nihil alteri adimes aut alteri adscribes. Agnoscens divinitatem negasti diversitatem.

7. [1] Temptabis ad haec de nomine dei concutere retractatum ut passivo et in alios quoque permissio, quia scriptum sit, Deus deorum stetit in ecclesia deorum, in medio autem deos diiudicabit, et, Ego dixi, vos dii estis: nec tamen idcirco eis competat possessio summi magni quia dei cognominentur; ita nec creatori. [2] Respondebo et stulto, qui nec hoc recogitaverit, ne tantundem et in deum Marcionis possit retorqueri, ut et illum deum dictum, nec ideo tamen summum magnum probatum, sicut nec angeli aut homines creatoris. Si communio nominum condicionibus praeiudicat, quanti nequam servi regum nominibus insultant, Alexandri et Darii et Olofernae? Nec tamen ideo regibus id quod sunt detrahetur. Nam et ipsa idola gentium dei vulgo, sed deus nemo ea re qua deus dicitur. [3] Ita ego non nomini dei nec sono nec notae nominis huius summum magnum in creatore defendo, sed ipsi substantiae cui nomen hoc contigit: hanc inveniens solam innatam, infectam, solam aeternam et universitatis conditricem, non nomini, sed statui, nec appellationi, sed condicioni eius summum magnum et adscribo et vindico. [4] Et ideo, quia deus iam vocari obtinuit substantia cui adscribo, nomini me adscribere putas, quia necesse est per nomen ostendam cui adscribam substantiae, scilicet qua constat qui deus dicitur, et summum magnum ex substantia, non ex nomine, deputatur. Denique hoc et Marcion suo deo vindicans, secundum statum, non secundum vocabulum vindicat. [5] Id ergo summum magnum, quod deo adscribimus ex substantiae lege, non ex nominis sorte, contendimus ex pari esse debere in duobus qui ea substantia constant qua deus dicitur, quia in quantum dii vocantur, id est summamagna, substantiae scilicet merito innatae et aeternae ac per hoc magnae et summae, in tantum non possit summum magnum minus et deterius alio summo magno haberi. [6] Si summi magni felicitas et sublimitas et integritas stabit in deo Marcionis, stabit aequae et in nostro: si non et in nostro, aequae nec in Marcionis. Ergo nec paria erunt duo summa magna, quia prohibet disposita iam regula summi magni comparisonem non sustinentis: nec disparia, quia et alia summi magni regula occurrit, diminutionem non admittens. [7] Haesisti, Marcion, in medio Ponti tui aestu. Utrunque te fluctus involvunt veritatis. Nec pares nec dispaes deos sistere potes. Duo enim non sunt; quod pertineat proprie ad numeri retractatum. Quamquam tota materia de duobus deis dimicetur, his interim lineis eam clausimus, intra quas de singularibus iam proprietatibus congregiemur.

8. [1] Primo, supercilio stuporem suum aedificant Marcionitae, quod novum deum proferant, quasi nos veteris dei pudeat. Inflantur et pueri novis calceis, sed a vetere paedagogo calceati mox vanam gloriam vapulabunt. Novum igitur audiens deum in vetere mundo et in vetere aevo et sub veteri deo ignotum, inauditum, quem tantis retro saeculis neminem, et ipsa ignorantia antiquum, quidam Iesus Christus, et ille in veteribus nominibus novus, revelaverit, nec alius antehac, gratias ago huic gloriae eorum, maximo adiutorio eius hinc iam haeresim probaturus, novae scilicet divinitatis professionem. [2] Haec erit novitas quae etiam ethnicis deos peperit novo semper ac novo titulo consecrationis cuiusque. Quis deus novus nisi falsus? Ne Saturnum quidem tanta hodie antiquitas deum probabit, quia et illum novitas aliquando produxerit, cum primum consecravit. At enim viva et germana divinitas nec de novitate nec de vetustate, sed de sua veritate censetur. [3] Non habet tempus aeternitas. Omne enim tempus ipsa est. Quod facit, pati non potest. Caret aetate quod non licet nasci. Deus si est vetus, non erit; si est novus, non fuit. Novitas initium testificatur, vetustas finem comminatur. Deus autem tam alienus ab initio et fine est quam a tempore, arbitro et metatore initii et finis.

nunc quoque incerta, certe immensa aliqua et maior indubitate eo quem abscondit; [4] sed breviter proponam et plenissime exsequar, praescribens deum ignorari nec potuisse nomine magnitudinis nec debuisse nomine benignitatis, praesertim in utroque praelatiorem nostro creatore. Sed quoniam animadverto in quibusdam ad formam creatoris provocari oportere omnis dei novi et retro ignoti probationem, hoc ipsum ratione fieri a nobis prius commendare debebo, quo constantius utar rationis editae patrocinio. [5] Ante omnia quidem quale est ut qui deum agnoscis creatorem, et priorem de notitia confiteris, non eisdem modis et aliuin scias tibi examinandum quibus iam in alio didicisti deum nosse? Omnis res anterior posteriori normam praeministravit. [6] Duo nunc dei proponuntur, ignotus et notus. De noto vacat quaestio. Esse eum constat, quia notus non fuisset nisi esset. De ignoto instat altercatio. Potest enim et non esse, quia si esset, notus fuisset. Quod ergo quaeritur quamdiu ignoratur, incertum est quamdiu quaeritur, et potest non esse quamdiu in incerto est. Habes deum certum qua notum, et incertum qua ignotum. [7] Si ita est, ecquid tibi videtur iusta ratione defendi, ut ad normam et formam et regulam certorum probentur incerta? Ceterum si ad hanc causam et ipsam adhuc incertam etiam argumenta de incertis adhibeantur, series implicabitur quaestionum ex ipsorum quoque argumentorum aequae incertorum retractatu periclitantium de fide per incertum, et ibitur in illas iam indeterminabiles quaestiones, quas apostolus non amat. [8] Sin de certis et indubitatis et absolutis regulae partibus incertis et dubiis et inexpeditis praeiudicabunt — plane in quibus diversitas status invenitur, fortassean non provocentur incerta ad formam certorum, ut liberata a reliqua comparationis provocatione per diversitatem status principalis — [9] cum vero duo dei proponuntur, communis est illis status principalis. Quod enim deus est, ambo sunt, innati, infecti, aeterni. Hic erit status principalis. Cetera viderit Marcion si in diversitate disposuit. Posteriora enim sunt in retractatu, immo nec admittentur, si de principali statu constet. [10] Porro constat, quia dei ambo: et ita de quorum statu constat communem esse, cum sub eo ad probationem devocantur, si incerta sunt, ad eorum certorum formam provocanda erunt cum quibus de communione status principalis censentur, ut proinde et de probatione communicent. Hinc itaque constantissime dirigam deum non esse qui sit hodie incertus quia retro ignotus, quando quem constat esse, ex hoc ipso constat quod nunquam fuerit ignotus, ideo nec incertus.

10. [1] Siquidem a primordio rerum conditor earum cum ipsis pariter compertus est, ipsis ad hoc prolatis ut deus cognosceretur. Nec enim si aliquanto posterior Moyses primus videtur in templo litterarum suarum deum mundi dedicasse, idcirco a Pentateucho natales agnitionis supputabuntur, cum totus Moysi stilus notitiam creatoris non instituat sed a primordio enarret, a paradiso et Adam non ab Aegypto et Moyse recensendam. [2] Denique maior popularitas generis humani, ne nominis quidem Moysi compotes, nedum instrumenti, deum Moysi tamen norunt; etiam tantam idololatria dominationem obumbrante seorsum tamen illum quasi proprio nomine deum perhibent et deum deorum, et, Si deus dederit, et, Quod deo placet, et, Deo commendo. Vide an noverint quem omnia posse testantur. Nec hoc ullis Moysi libris debent. [3] Ante anima quam prophetia. Animae enim a primordio conscientia dei dos est; eadem nec alia et in Aegyptiis et in Syris et in Ponticis. Iudaeorum enim deum dicunt animae deum. Noli, barbаре haeretice, priorem Abraham constituere quam mundum. Etsi unius familiae deus fuisset creator, tamen posterior tuo non erat, etiam Ponticis ante eum notus. [4] Accipe igitur ab antecessore formam, a certo incertus, a cognito incognitus. Nunquam deus latebit, nunquam deus deerit. Semper intellegitur, semper audietur, etiam videbitur, quomodo volet. Habet deus testimonia, totum hoc quod sumus et in quo sumus. Sic probatur et deus et unus, dum non ignoratur, alio adhuc probari laborante.

11. [1] Et merito, inquiunt. Quis enim non tam suis notus est quam extraneis? Nemo. Teneo et hanc vocem. Quale est enim ut ali- quid extraneum deo sit, cui nihil extraneum esset, si quis esset? quia dei hoc est, omnia illius esse et omnia ad illum pertinere, vel ne statim audiret a nobis, Quid ergo illi cum extraneis? Quod plenius suo loco audiet. [2] At nunc satis est nullum probari cuius nihil probatur. Sicut enim creator ex hoc et deus et indubitatus deus, quia omnia ipsius et nihil extraneum illi, ita et alius idcirco non deus quia omnia non eius ideoque et extranea. [3] Denique si universitas creatoris est, iam nec locum video dei alterius. Plena et occupata sunt omnia suo auctore. Si vacat aliquid spatii alicuius divinitati in creaturis, plane falsae vacabit. Patet mendacio veritas. Tanta vis idolorum cur non recipiat alicubi deum Marcionis? [4] Igitur et hoc ex forma creatoris expostulo, deum ex operibus cognosci debuisse alicuius proprii sui mundi et hominis et saeculi, quando etiam error orbis propterea deos praesumpserit quos homines

interdum confitetur, quoniam aliquid ab unoquoque prospectum videtur utilitatibus et commodis vitae. [5] Ita et hoc ex forma dei creditum est divinum esse, instituere vel demonstrare quid aptum et necessarium sit rebus humanis. Adeo inde auctoritas accommodata falsae divinitati unde praecesserat verae. Unam saltem cicerculam deus Marcionis propriam protulisse debuerat, ut novus aliqui Triptolemus praedicaretur. [6] Aut exhibe rationem deo dignam, cur nihil condiderit, si est; quia condidisset, si fuisset, illo scilicet praeiudicio quo et nostrum deum non alias manifestum est esse quam quia totum condidit hoc. Semel enim praescriptio stabit non posse illos et deum confiteri creatorem, et eum quem volunt aequae deum credi non ad eius formam probare quem et ipsi et omnes deum, [7] ut, quando hoc ipso nemo creatorem deum dubitet quia totum hoc condidit, hoc ipso nemo debeat credere deum et illum qui nihil condidit, nisi ratio forte proferatur. Duplex ista videatur necesse est, ut aut noluerit condere quid aut non potuerit. Tertium cessat. Sed non potuisse indignum deo est. [8] Noluisse an dignum, volo inquirere. Dic mihi, Marcion, voluit deus tuus cognosci se quocunque in tempore, an non? alio proposito et descendit et praedicavit et passus resurrexit quam uti cognosceretur? Et sine dubio, si cognitus est, voluit. Nihil enim circa eum fieret nisi voluisset. Quid ergo tantopere notitiam sui procuravit ut in dedecore carnis exhiberetur, et quidem maiore, si falsae? Nam hoc turpius, si et mentitus est substantiam corporis, qui et maledictum in se creatoris admisit ligno suspensus. [9] Quanto honestius per aliqua propriae molitionis indicia cognitionem sui praestruisset, maxime adversus eum cognosci habens apud quem ex operibus ab initio cognitus non erat! Nam et quale est ut creator quidem ignorans esse alium super se deum, ut volunt Marcionitae, qui solum se etiam iurans asseverabat, tantis operibus notitiam sui armaverit, quam potuerat non ita curasse secundum singularitatis suae praesumptionem, ille autem. sublimior sciens inferiorem deum tam instructum nullam sibi prospexerit agnoscendo paraturam? quando etiam insigniora et superbiora opera debuisset condidisse, ut et deus ex operibus cognosceretur secundum creatorem, et ex honestioribus potior et generosior creator.

12. [1] Ceterum et si esse eum possemus confiteri, sine causa esse eum deberemus argumentari. Sine causa enim esset qui rem non haberet, quia res omnis causa est, ut sit aliquis cuius res sit. Porro in quantum nihil oportet esse sine causa, id est sine re, quia si sine causa sit proinde est atque si non sit non habens rei causam rem ipsam, in tantum deum dignius credam non esse quam esse sine causa. Sine causa est enim qui rem non habendo non habet causam. Deus autem sine causa, id est sine re, esse non debet. [2] Ita quotiens ostendo eum sine causa esse, tanquam sit, hoc constituo non esse illum, quia si fuisset omnino sine causa non fuisset. Sic et ipsam fidem dico illum sine causa ab homine captare, aliter solito deum credere ex operum auctoritate formatum, quia nihil tale prospexit per quod homo deum didicit. [3] Nam etsi credunt plerique in illum, non statim ratione credunt, non habentes dei pignus, opera eius deo digna. Itaque hoc nomine cessationis et defectionis operum et impudentiae et malignitatis affinis est: impudentiae, qua fidem non debitam sibi captat, cui praestruendae nihil prospexit; malignitatis, qua plures incredulitatis reos fecit nihil fidei procurando.

13. [1] Cum deum hoc gradu expellimus, cui nulla conditio tam propria et deo digna quam creatoris testimonium praesignaverit, narem contrahentes impudentissimi Marcionitae convertuntur ad destructionem operum creatoris. [2] Nimirum, inquiunt, grande opus et dignum deo mundus. Numquid ergo creator minime deus? Plane deus. Ergo nec mundus deo indignus; nihil etenim deus indignum se fecit, etsi mundum homini non sibi fecit, etsi omne opus inferius est suo artifice. [3] Et tamen, si quale quid fecisse indignum est deo, quanto indignius deo est nihil eum omnino fecisse, vel indignum, quo posset etiam digniorum auctor sperari? Ut ergo aliquid et de isto huius mundi indigno loquar, cui et apud Graecos ornamenti et cultus, non sordium, nomen est, indignas videlicet substantias ipsi illi sapientiae professores, de quorum ingeniis omnis haeresis animatur, deos pronuntiaverunt, ut Thales aquam, ut Heraclitus ignem, ut Anaximenes aerem, ut Anaximander universa caelestia, ut Strato caelum et terram, ut Zeno aerem et aetherem, ut Plato sidera, quae genus deorum igneum appellat, cum de mundo, considerando scilicet et magnitudinem et vim et potestatem et honorem et decorem, opem, fidem, legem singulorum elementorum, quae omnibus gignendis, alendis, conficiendis reficiendisque conspirant, ut plerique physicorum formidaverint initium ac finem mundo constare, ne substantiae eius, tantae scilicet, minus dei haberentur, quas colunt et Persarum magi et Aegyptiorum bierophantae et Indorum gymnosophistae. [4] Ipsa quoque vulgaris superstitio communis idololatriae, cum in simulacris de nominibus et fabulis veterum mortuorum pudet, ad interpretationem naturalium refugit, et dedecus suum ingenio obumbrat, figurans Iovem in substantiam fervidam et Iunonem eius in aeream, secundum sonum Graecorum vocabulorum, item Vestam in ignem, et Camenas in aquas, et Magnam Matrem in terram seminalia demessam, lacertis aratam, lavacris rigatam. [5] Sic et Osiris quod semper sepelitur et in uvido quaeritur et cum gaudio invenitur, reciprocarum frugum et vividorum elementorum et recidivi anni fidem argumentantur, sicut aridae et ardentis naturae sacramenta leones Mithrae philosophantur. Et superiores quidem situ aut statu substantias sufficit facilius deos habitas quam deo indignas. Ad humilia deficiam? Unus, opinor, de sepibus flosculus, non dico de pratis, una cuiuslibet maris conchula, non dico de rubro, una tetraonis pennula, taceo de pavo, sordidum artificem pronuntiabit tibi creatorem?

14. [1] At cum et animalia irrides minutiora quae maximus artifex de industria ingeniis aut viribus ampliavit, sic magnitudinem in mediocritate probari docens quemadmodum virtutem in infirmitate secundum apostolum, imitare, si potes, apes aedificia, formicae stabula, araneae retia, bombycis stamina, sustine, si potes, illas ipsas lectuli et tegetis tuae bestias, cantharidis venena, muscae spicula, culicis et tubam et lanceam. [2] Qualia erunt maiora, cum tam modicis aut iuvaris aut laederis, ut nec in modicis despicias creatorem? Postremo te tibi circumfer, intus ac foris considera hominem: placebit tibi vel hoc opus dei nostri, quod tuus dominus, ille deus melior, adamavit, propter quem in haec paupertina elementa de tertio caelo descendere laboravit, cuius causa in hac cellula creatoris etiam crucifixus est. [3] Sed ille quidem usque nunc nec aquam reprobavit creatoris qua suos abluit, nec oleum quo suos unguat, nec mellis et lactis societatem qua suos infantat, nec panem quo ipsum corpus suum repraesentat, etiam in sacramentis propriis egens mendicitatibus creatoris. At tu super magistrum discipulus, et servus super dominum, sublimius illo sapis, destruens quae ille desiderat. [4] Volo inspicere si ex fide saltem, ut non et ipse quae destruis appetas. Adversaris caelo, et libertatem caeli in habitationibus captas. Despicias terram plane inimicae iam tuae carnis matricem, et omnes medullas eius victui extorques. Reprobas et mare, sed usque ad copias eius, quas sanctiorem cibum deputas. Rosam tibi si obtulero, non fastidies creatorem. [5] Hypocrita, ut apocarteresi probes te Marcionitam, id est repudiatorem creatoris (nam haec apud vos pro martyrio affectari debuisset, si vobis mundus displiceret), in quamcunque materiam resolveris, substantia creatoris uteris. Quanta obstinatio duritiae tuae! Depretias in quibus et vivis et moreris.

15. [1] Post haec, vel ante haec, cum dixeris esse et illi conditionem suam et suum mundum et suum caelum, de caelo quidem illo tertio videbimus si et ad apostolum vestrum discutiendum pervenerimus, interim, quaecunque substantia est, cum suo utique deo apparuisse debuerat. At nunc quale est ut dominus anno xv Tiberii Caesaris revelatus sit, substantia vero anno xv iam Severi imperatoris nulla omnino comperta sit? Quae frivolis creatoris praecellens utique latere desisset, non latente iam domino suo et auctore. [2] Et ideo si ipsa non potuit manifestari in hoc mundo, quomodo dominus paruit eius in hoc mundo? Si dominum cepit hic mundus, cur substantiam capere non potuit, nisi domino fortasse maiorem? Iam nunc de loco quaestio est, pertinens et ad mundum illum superiorem et ad ipsum deum eius. Ecce enim si et ille habet mundum suum infra se, super creatorem, in loco utique fecit eum cuius spatium vacabat inter pedes suos et caput creatoris. [3] Ergo et deus ipse in loco erat, et mundum in loco faciebat, et erit iam locus ille maior et deo et mundo. Nihil enim non maius est id quod capit eo quod capitur. Et videndum ne qua adhuc illic vacent subsiciva, in quibus et tertius aliqui stipare deus se cum mundo suo possit. Ergo iam incipe deos computare. Erit enim et locus deus, non tantum qua deo maior, sed et qua innatus et infectus ac per hoc aeternus et deo par, in quo semper deus fuerit. [4] Dehinc si et ille mundum ex aliqua materia subiacente molitus est innata et infecta et contemporali deo, quemadmodum de creatore Marcion sentit, redigis et hoc ad maiestatem loci, qui et deum et materiam, duos deos, clusit. Et materia enim deus, secundum formam divinitatis, innata scilicet et infecta et aeterna. Aut si de nihilo molitus est mundum, hoc et de creatore sentire cogetur, cui materiam subicit in substantia mundi. Sed ex materia et ille fecisse debbit, eadem ratione occurrente illi quoque deo quae opponeretur creatori, ut aequae deo. [5] Atque ita tres interim mihi deos numera Marcionis, factorem et locum et materiam. Proinde et creatorem in loco facit utique eadem condicione censendo, et materiam ei subicit utique innatam et infectam et hoc nomine aeternam, ut domino. Amplius et malum materiae deputans, innatum innatae, infectum infectae et aeternum aeternae, quartum iam hic deum fecit. [6] Habes igitur in superioribus tres substantias divinitatis, in inferioribus quatuor. His cum accedunt et sui Christi, alter qui apparuit sub Tiberio, alter qui a creatore promittitur, manifestam iam fraudem Marcion patitur ab eis qui duos illum

16. [1] Non comparante igitur mundo alio, sicut nec deo eius, consequens est ut duas species rerum, visibilia et invisibilia, duobus auctoribus deis dividant, et ita suo deo invisibilia defendant. Quis autem poterit inducere in animum, nisi spiritus haereticus, eius esse invisibilia qui nihil visibile praemiserit, quam eius qui visibilia operatus invisibilium quoque fidem fecerit, cum iustius multo sit aliquibus exemplariis adnuere quam nullis? [2] Videbimus et apostolus cui auctori invisibilia deputet, cum et illum exploraverimus. Nunc enim communibus plurimum sensibus et argumentationibus iustis securitae scripturarum quoque advocacy fidem sternimus, confirmantes diversitatem hanc visibilium et invisibilium adeo creatori deputandam, sicuti tota operatio eius ex diversitatibus constat, ex corporalibus et incorporeis, ex animalibus et inanimalibus, ex vocalibus et mutis, ex mobilibus et stantibus, ex genitalibus et sterilibus, ex aridis et succidis, ex calidis et frigidis. [3] Sic et hominem ipsum diversitas temperavit, tam in corpore quam in sensu. Alia membra fortia, alia infirma; alia honesta, alia inhonesta; alia gemina, alia unica; alia comparia, alia disparia. Proinde et in sensu nunc laetitia, nunc anxietas; nunc amor, nunc odium; nunc ira, nunc lenitas. [4] Quod si ita est, ut aemulae inter se condicionis universitas ista modulata sit, iam igitur et visibilibus invisibilia debentur, non alteri auctori deputanda quam cui et aemula eorum, ipsum creatorem diversum notantia, iubentem quae prohibuit et prohibentem quae iussit, percutientem et sanantem. Cur in hac sola specie uniformem eum capiunt, visibilium solummodo conditorem, quem proinde credendum sit et visibilia et invisibilia condidisse, quemadmodum et vitam et mortem, et mala et pacem? Et utique, si illa invisibilia maiora sunt visibilibus creaturis suo loco magnis, sic quoque congruit eius esse maiora cuius et magna, quia nec magna, nedum maiora, ei competant cuius nec modica comparent.

17. [1] His compressi erumpunt dicere: Sufficit unicuique hoc opus deo nostro, quod hominem liberavit summa et praecipua bonitate sua, et omnibus locustis anteposenda. O deum maiorem, cuius tam magnum opus non potuit inveniri quam in homine dei minoris! Enimvero prius est ut probes eum esse per quae deum probari oportet, per opera, tunc deinde per beneficia. Primo enim quaeritur, an sit, et ita, qualis sit. Alterum de operibus, alterum de beneficiis dinoscetur. [2] Ceterum non quia liberasse dicitur hominem, ideo esse eum constat, sed si esse constiterit, tunc et liberasse dicetur, ut et an liberaverit constet, quia potuerit et esse et non liberasse. Quomodo ergo quia liberasse dicetur, etiam esse credetur, cum potuerit et esse et non liberasse? [3] Nunc in isto articulo ab ignoti dei quaestione deducto satis constitit tam nihil illum condidisse, quam debuisse condidisse uti cognosceretur ex operibus, quia si fuisset, cognosci debuisset, et utique a primordio rerum; deum enim non decuisse latuisse. Regrediar necesse est ad originem quaestionis dei ignoti, ut ceteros quoque ramulos eius excutiam. [4] Primo enim quaeri oportebit, qui postea se protulerit in notitiam, cur postea, et non a primordio rerum; quibus utique necessario qua deus, et quidem necessarius qua melior, latere non debuit. Non enim potest dici non fuisse aut materiam aut causam cognoscendi deum, cum et homo a primordio esset in saeculo, cui nunc subvenit, et malitia creatoris, adversus quam ut bonus subvenit. Igitur aut ignoravit et causam et materiam suae revelationis necessariae, aut dubitavit, aut non potuit, aut noluit. Omnia haec deo indigna, maxime optimo. Sed et hunc locum alibi implebimus exprobratione serae revelationis, sicut nunc sola demonstratione.

18. [1] Processerit, age, iam in notitiam quando voluit, quando potuit, quando hora fatalis advenit. Fortasse enim anabibazon ei obstabat, aut aliqua maleficae, aut Saturnus quadratus, aut Mars trigonus. Nam et mathematici plurimum Marcionitae, nec hoc erubescerent, de ipsis etiam stellis vivere creatoris. Tractandum et hic de revelationis qualitate, an digne cognitus sit, ut constet an vere, et ita credatur esse quem digne constiterit revelatum. [2] Digna enim deo probabunt deum. Nos definimus deum primo natura cognoscendum, deinde doctrina recognoscendum, natura ex operibus, doctrina ex praedicationibus. Sed cui nulla natura est, naturalia instrumenta non suppetunt. Ergo vel praedicationibus revelationem sui debuerat operari, maxime adversus eum revelandus qui et conditionis et praedicationis operibus tot ac tantis vix tamen hominum fidem impleverat. [3] Quomodo itaque revelatus est? Si per humanam coniecturam, nego deum alias cognosci posse quam per semetipsum, nec tantum ad formam provocans creatoris, vervun et ad condicionem tam divinae magnitudinis quam humanae mediocritatis; ne maior deo homo videri possit, qui eum non ultro volentem cognosci suis viribus quodammodo in publicum agnitionis extraxerit, cum humana mediocritas facilius deos fingere sibi norit secundum totius aevi experimenta quam verum sectari quem natura iam intellegunt. [4] Alioquin, si sic homo deum commentabitur quomodo Romulus Consum et Tati Cloacinam et Hostilius Pavorem et Metellus Alburnum et qviidam ante hoc tempus Antinuum, hoc aliis licebit? Nos Marcionem nauclerum novimus, non regem nec imperatorem.

19. [1] Immo, inquiunt Marcionitae, deus noster, etsi non ab initio, etsi non per conditionem, sed per semetipsum revelatus est in Christo Iesu. Dabitur et in Christum liber de omni statu eius. Distingui enim materias oportet, quo plenius et ordinatius retractentur. Interim satis erit ad praesentem gradum ita occurrere, ut ostendam Christum Iesum non alterius dei circumlatorem quam creatoris, et quidem paucis. [2] Anno xv Tiberii Christus Iesus de caelo manare dignatus est, spiritus salutaris. Marcionis salutis, qui ita voluit, quoto quidem anno Antonini maioris de Ponto suo exhalaverit aura canicularis non curavi investigare. De quo tamen constat, Antoninianus haereticus est, sub Pio impius. A Tiberio autem usque ad Antoninum anni fere cxv et dimidium anni cum dimidio mensis. Tantundem temporis ponunt inter Christum et Marcionem. [3] Cum igitur sub Antonino primus Marcion hunc deum induxerit, sicut probavimus, statim, qui sapis, plana res est. Praejudicant tempora quod sub Antonino primum processit sub Tiberio non processisse, id est deum Antoniniani imperii Tiberiani non fuisse, atque ita non a Christo revelatum quem constat a Marcione primum praedicatum. [4] Hoc nunc ut probem constare, quod superest ab ipsis adversariis sumam. Separatio legis et evangelii proprium et principale opus est Marcionis, nec poterunt negare discipuli eius quod in summo instrumento habent, quo denique initiantur et indurantur in hanc haeresim. Nam hae sunt Antitheses Marcionis, id est contrariae oppositiones, quae conantur discordiam evangelii cum lege committere, ut ex diversitate sententiarum utriusque instrumenti diversitatem quoque argumententur deorum. [5] Igitur cum ea separatio legis et evangelii ipsa sit quae alium deum evangelii insinuaverit adversus deum legis, apparet ante eam separationem deum in notitia non fuisse qui ab argumento separationis innotuit, atque ita non a Christo revelatum, qui fuit ante separationem, sed a Marcione commentatum, qui instituit separationem adversus evangelii legisque pacem, quam retro illaesam et inconcussam ab apparentia Christi usque ad audaciam Marcionis illa utique ratio servavit quae non alium deum et legis et evangelii tuebatur praeter creatorem, adversus quem tanto post tempore separatio a Pontico immissa est.

20. [1] Huic expeditissimae probationi defensio quoque a nobis necessaria est adversus obstrepticula diversae partis. Aiunt enim Marcionem non tam innovasse regulam separationis legis et evangelii quam retro adulteratam recurasse. O Christe, patientissime domine, qui tot annis interversionem praedicationis tui sustinuisti, donec scilicet tibi Marcion subveniret! [2] Nam et ipsum Petrum ceterosque, columnas apostolatus, a Paulo reprehensos opponunt quod non recto pede incederent ad evangelii veritatem, ab illo certe Paulo qui adhuc in gratia rudis, trepidans denique ne in vacuum cucurrisset aut curreret, tunc primum cum antecessoribus apostolis conferebat. [3] Igitur si ferventer adhuc, ut neophytus, adversus Iudaismum aliquid in conversatione reprehendendum existimavit, passivum scilicet convictum, postmodum et ipse usu omnibus omnia futurus, ut omnes lucraretur, Iudaeis quasi Iudaeus, et eis qui sub lege tanquam in lege, tu illam solius conversationis, placiturae postea accusatori suo, reprehensionem suspectam vis haberi etiam de praedicationis erga deum praevaricatione. [4] Atquin de praedicationis unitate, quod supra legimus, dexteris iunxerant, et ipsa officii distributione de evangelii societate condixerant: sicut et alibi, Sive ego, inquit, sive illi, sic praedicamus. Sed et si quosdam falsos fratres irrepsisse descripsit, qui vellent Galatas ad aliud evangelium transferre, ipse demonstrat adulterium illud evangelii non ad alterius dei et Christi fidem transferendam, sed ad disciplinam legis conservandam. habuisse intentionem, deprehendens scilicet illos circumcisionem vindicantes et observantes tempora et dies et menses et annos Iudaicarum caeremoniarum, quas iam exclusas agnovisse debuerant, secundum innovatam dispositionem creatoris olim de hoc ipso praedicantis per prophetas suos: ut per Esaiam, Vetera transierunt, inquit, ecce nova quae ego nunc facio; et alibi, Et disponam testamentum, non quale disposui ad patres vestros cum illos eduxissem de terra Aegypti. Sic et per Hieremiam, Renovate vobis novamen novum, et circumcidimini deo vestro, et circumcidimini praeputia cordis vestri. [5] Hanc ergo circumcisionem iam sistens apostolus et hoc novamen illas quoque vetustates caeremoniarum dissuadebat de quibus idem conditor earum quandoque cessaturis profitebatur per Osee, Et avertam omnes iocunditates eius et dies festos eius et neomenias et sabbata et omnes caeremonias eius. Sic enim per Esaiam, Neomenias vestras et sabbata et diem magnum non sustineo, ferias et ieiunium et dies festos vestros odit anima mea. [6] Quodsi et creator omnia haec iampridem recusaverat, et apostolus ea iam recusanda pronuntiabat, ipsa apostoli sententia consentanea decretis creatoris probat non alium deum ab apostolo praedicatum quam cuius decreta cupiebat iam agnosci, falsos et apostolos et fratres notans in hac causa qui evangelium Christi creatoris transferrent a novitate praenuntiata a creatore ad vetustatem recusatam a creatore.

21. [1] Ceterum si qua novum deum praedicans veteris dei legem cupiebat excludere, quare de deo quidem novo nihil praescribit, sed de vetere lege solummodo, nisi quoniam fide manente in creatorem sola lex eius concessare debebat? Ut et psalmus ille praecinuerat: Disrumpamus vincula a nobis eorum et abiciamus eorum iugum a nobis; ex quo scilicet tumultuatae sunt gentes et populi meditati sunt inania; astiterunt reges terrae et magistratus convenerunt in unum adversus dominum et adversus Christum eius. [2] Et utique, si alius deus praedicaretur a Paulo, nulla disceptatio esset servandae legis necne, non pertinentis scilicet ad dominum novum et aemulum legis. Ipsa enim dei novitas atque diversitas abstulisset non modo quaestionem veteris et alienae legis, verum omnem eius mentionem. Sed hic erat totus status quaestionis, quod, cum idem deus legis in Christo praedicaretur, legi eius derogaretur. [3] Stabat igitur fides semper in creatore et Christo eius, sed conversatio et disciplina nutabat. Nam et alii de idolothyto edendo, alii de mulierum velamento, alii de nuptiis vel repudiis, nonnulli et de spe resurrectionis disceptabant, de deo nemo. Nam si fuisset haec quoque quaestio disceptata, et ipsa apud apostolum inveniretur, vel quanto principalis. [4] Quodsi post apostolorum tempora adulterium veritas passa est circa dei regulam, ergo iam apostolica traditio nihil passa est in tempore suo circa dei regulam, et non alia agnoscenda erit traditio apostolorum quam quae hodie apud ipsorum ecclesias editur. Nullam autem apostolici census ecclesiam invenias quae non in creatore christianizet. Aut si hae erunt a primordio corruptae, quae erunt integrae? nimirum adversariae creatoris? [5] Exhibe ergo aliquam ex tuis apostolici census, et obduxeris. Igitur cum omnibus modis constet alium deum in regula sacramenti istius non fuisse a Christo usque ad Marcionem quam creatorem, satis iam et probatio nostra munita est, qua ostendimus notitiam dei haeretici ex evangelii et legis separatione coepisse, et definitio superior instructa est, non esse credendum deum quem homo de suis sensibus composuerit, nisi plane prophetae, id est non de suis sensibus. [6] Quod si

22. [1] Sed quomodo funditus evertetur antichristus, nisi ceteris quoque iniectionibus eius elidendis locus detur, relaxata praescriptionum defensione? Accedamus igitur iam hinc ad ipsam dei personam, vel potius umbram et phantasma, secundum Christum ipsius, per idque examinetur per quod creatori praefertur. [2] Et utique erunt regulae certae ad examinandam dei bonitatem. Sed prius est ut inveniam illam et apprehendam, et ita ad regulas perducam. Cum enim circumspicio tempora, nusquam est a primordio materialium et introitu causarum, cum quibus debuerat inveniri, exinde agens quo agi habuit. [3] Erat enim iam mors, et aculeus mortis delictum, et ipsa malitia creatoris, adversus quam subvenire deberet alterius dei bonitas, primae huic regulae divinae bonitatis occurrens, si se naturalem probaret, statim succurrens ut causa coepit. Omnia enim in deo naturalia et ingenita esse debebunt, ut sint aeterna, secundum statum ipsius, ne obvenientia et extranea reputentur, ac per hoc temporalia et aeternitatis aliena. [4] Ita et bonitas perennis et iugis exigitur in deo, quae in thesauris naturalium proprietatum reposita et parata antecederet causas et materias suas, et primam quamque susciperet, non despiceret et destitueret, si antecederat. Denique et hic non minus quaeram, cur non a primordio operata sit bonitas eius, quam de ipso quaesivimus, cur non a primordio sit revelatus. Quidni? qui per bonitatem revelari haberet, si qui fuisset. Non posse quid deo non licet, nedum naturalibus suis fungi; [5] quae si continentur quo minus currant, naturalia non erunt. Et otium enim sui natura non novit. Hinc censetur, si agat; sic nec noluisse videbitur exercere bonitatem interim naturae nomine. [6] Natura enim se non potest nolle, quae se ita dirigit ut si cessaverit non sit. Sed cessavit aliquando in deo Marcionis de opere bonitas. Ergo non fuit naturalis bonitas quae potuit aliquando cessasse, quod naturalibus non licet. Et si non erit naturalis, iam nec aeterna credenda, nec deo par quia non aeterna, dum non naturalis quae denique nullam sui perpetuitatem aut de praeterito constituat aut de futuro repromittat. [7] Nam et a primordio non fuit et in finem sine dubio non erit. Potest enim et non esse quandoque, sicut non fuit aliquando. Igitur cum constet in primordio cessasse bonitatem dei illius (non enim a primordio liberavit hominem), et voluntate potius eam quam infirmitate cessasse, iam voluntas suppressae bonitatis finis invenietur malignitatis. [8] Quid enim tam malignum quam nolle prodesse cum possis, quam utilitatem cruciare, quam iniuriam sinere? Totum denique creatoris elogium in illum rescribetur qui saevitias eius bonitatis suae mora iuvat. Nam in cuius manu est quid ne fiat, eius iam deputatur cum fit. Homo damnatur in mortem ob unius arbusculae delibationem, et exinde proficiunt delicta cum poenis, et pereunt iam omnes qui paradisi nullum caespitem norunt. [9] Et hoc melior aliqui deus aut nescit aut sustinet. Si ut ex hoc melior inveniretur quanto creator deterior haberetur, satis et in isto consilio malitiosus, qui et illum voluit oneratum, operationibus eius admissis, et saeculum in vexatione detinuit. Quid de tali medico iudicabis qui nutriat morbum mora praesidii et periculum extendat dilatione remedii, quo pretiosius aut famosius curet? [10] Talis et in deum Marcionis dicenda sententia est, mali permissorem, iniuriae fautorem, gratiae lenocinatorem, benignitatis praevaricatorem quam non statim causae suae exhibuit; plane exhibiturus, si natura bonus et non accessione, si ingenio optimus et non disciplina, si ab aevo deus et non a Tiberio, immo, quod verius, a Cerdone et Marcione. Tiberio nunc deus ille praestiterit ut imperio eius divina bonitas in terris dedicaretur.

ministra et comite sua, id est indebita, prior. Igitur cum prima bonitatis ratio sit in rem suam exhiberi ex iustitia, secunda autem in alienam ex redundantia iustitiae super scribarum et pharisaeorum, quale est secundam ei rationem referri cui deficit prima, non habenti proprium hominem, ac per hoc quoque exiguae? Porro exigua, quae suum non habuit, quomodo in alienum redundavit? [6] Exhibe principalem rationem, et tunc vindica sequentem. Nulla res sine ordine rationalis potest vindicari, tanto abest ut ratio ipsa in aliquo ordinem amittat. Sit nunc et a secundo gradu incipiens ratio bonitatis, in extraneum scilicet, nec secundus illi gradus ratione constabit alio modo destructus. Tunc enim rationalis habebitur vel secunda in extraneum bonitas, si sine iniuria eius operetur cuius est res. Quamcunque bonitatem iustitia prima efficit rationalem. Sicut in principali gradu rationalis erit, cum in rem suam exhibetur, si iusta sit, sic et in extraneum rationalis videri poterit, si non sit iniusta. [7] Ceterum qualis bonitas quae per iniuriam constat, et quidem pro extraneo? Fortasse enim pro domestico aliquatenus rationalis habeatur bonitas iniuriosa. Pro extraneo vero, cui nec proba legitime deberetur, qua ratione tam iniusta rationalis defendetur? Quid enim iniustius, quid iniquius et improbius quam ita alieno benefacere servo ut domino eripiatur, ut alii vindicetur, ut adversus caput domini subornetur, et quideni, quo indignius, in ipsa adhuc domo domini, de ipsius adhuc horreis vivens, sub ipsius adhuc plagis tremens? Talis assertor etiam damnaretur in saeculo, nedum plagiator. [8] Non aliter deus Marcionis irrumpens in alienum mundum, eripiens deo hominem, patri filium, educatori alumnum, domino famulum, ut eum efficiat deo impium, patri irreligiosum, educatori ingratum, domino nequam. Oro te, si rationalis bonitas talem facit, qualem faceret irrationalis? [9] Non putem impudentiorem quam qui in aliena aqua alii deo tingitur, ad alienum caelum alii deo expanditur, in aliena terra alii deo sternitur, super alienum panem alii deo gratiarum actionibus fungitur, de alienis bonis ob alium deum nomine eleemosynae et dilectionis operatur. Quis iste deus tam bonus ut homo ab illo malus fiat, tam propitius ut alium illi deum, et dominum quidem ipsius, faciat iratum?

24. [1] Sed deus sicut aeternus et rationalis, ita opinor et perfectus in omnibus: Eritis enim perfecti, quemadmodum pater vester qui in caelis est. Exhibe perfectam quoque bonitatem eius. Etsi de imperfecta satis constat, quae neque naturalis invenitur neque rationalis, nunc et alio ordine traducetur;

nec iam imperfecta, immo et defecta, exigua et exhausta, minor numero materialium suarum, quae non in omnibus exhibetur. [2] Non enim omnes salvi fiunt, sed pauciores omnibus et Iudaeis et Christianis creatoris. Pluribus vero pereuntibus quomodo perfecta defenditur bonitas ex maiore parte cessatrix, paucis aliqua, pluribus nulla, cedens perditioni, partiaria exitii? Quodsi plures salvi non erunt, erit iam non bonitas sed malitia perfectior. Sicut enim bonitatis operatio est quae facit salvos, ita malignitatis quae non facit salvos. Magis autem non faciens salvos dum paucos facit, perfectior erit in non iuvando quam iuvando. Non poteris et in creatorem referre bonitatis in omnes defectionem. [3] Quem enim iudicem tenes, dispensatorem, si forte, bonitatis ostendis intellegendum, non profusorem, quod deo tuo vindicas. Usque adeo hac sola eum praefers bonitate creatori quam si solam proficitur et totam, nulli deesse debuerat. Sed nolo iam de parte maiore pereuntium imperfectum bonitatis arguere deum Marcionis. Sufficit ipsos quos salvos facit imperfectae salutis inventos imperfectam bonitatem eius ostendere, scilicet anima tenus salvos, carne deperditos, quae apud illum non resurgit. Unde haec dimidiatio salutis nisi ex defectione bonitatis? [4] Quid erat perfectae bonitatis quam totum hominem redigere in salutem, totum damnatum a creatore, totum a deo optimo allectum? Quod sciam, et caro tingitur apud illum et caro de nuptiis tollitur, et caro in confessione nominis desaevitur. Sed etsi carni delicta reputantur, praecedit animae reatus, et culpae principatus animae potius adscribendus, cui caro ministri nomine occurrit. Carens denique anima caro hactenus peccat. Ita et in hoc iniusta bonitas et sic quoque imperfecta, innocentior substantiam relinquens in exitium, obsequio non arbitrio delinquentem; [5] cuius Christus etsi non induit veritatem, ut tuae haeresi visum est, imaginem tamen eius subire dignatus est. Ipso quod mentitus est illam, aliquid ei debuit debuisse. Quid est autem homo aliud quam caro, siquidem nomen hominis materia corporalis, non animalis, ab auctore sortita est? Et fecit hominem deus, inquit, limum de terra, non animam; anima enim de afflatu: Et factus est homo in animam vivam; quis? utique qui de limo: Et posuit deus hominem in paradiso; quod finxit, non quod flavit; qui caro nunc, non qui anima. Itaque si ita est, quo ore contendes perfectum bonitatis titulum, quae non iam a partitione speciali hominis liberandi defecit, sed a proprietate generali? [6] Si plena est gratia et solida misericordia quae soli animae salutaris est, plus praestat haec vita, qua toti et integri sumus. Ceterum ex parte resurgere multari erit, non liberari. Erat et illud perfectae bonitatis, ut homo liberatus in fidem dei optimi statim eximeretur de domicilio atque dominatu dei saevi. [7] At nunc et febricitas, o Marcionita, et ceteros tribulos et spinas dolor carnis tuae tibi edit, nec fulminibus tantum aut bellis et pestibus aliisque plagis creatoris, sed et scorpiis eius obiectus. In quo te putas liberatum de regno eius, cuius te muscae adhuc calcant? Si de futuro erutus es, cur non et de praesenti, ut perfecte? Alia est nostra condicio apud auctorem, apud iudicem, apud offensum principem generis. Tu tantummodo bonum deum praefers. Non potes autem perfecte bonum ostendere a quo non perfecte liberaris.

25. [1] Quod attinet ad bonitatis quaestionem, his lineis deduximus eam minime deo adaequari, ut neque ingenitam neque rationalem neque perfectam, sed et improbam et iniustam et ipso iam bonitatis nomine indignam, quod scilicet in quantum deo congruat, in tantum deum non esse conveniat qui de tali bonitate etiam praeferatur, nec de tali modo, verum et sola. [2] Iam enim et hoc discuti par est, an deus de sola bonitate censendus sit, negatis ceteris appendicibus, sensibus et affectibus, quos Marcionitae quidem a deo suo abigunt in creatorem, nos vero et agnoscimus in creatore ut deo dignos. Et ex hoc quoque negabimus deum in quo non omnia quae deo digna sint constant. [3] Si aliquem de Epicuri schola deum affectavit Christi nomine titolare, ut quod beatum et incorruptibile sit neque sibi neque alii molestias praestet (hanc enim sententiam ruminans Marcion removet ab illo severitates et iudiciarias vires), aut in totum immobilem et stupentem deum concepisse debuerat (et quid illi cum Christo, molesto et Iudaeis per doctrinam et sibi per crucem?), aut et de ceteris motibus eum agnovisse (et quid illi cum Epicuro, nec sibi nec Christianis necessario?). [4] Ecce enim hoc ipso quod retro quietus, qui nec notitiam sui aliquo interim opere curaverit, post tantum aevi senserit in hominis salutem, utique per voluntatem, nonne concussibilis tunc fuit novae voluntati, ut et ceteris motibus videatur obnoxius? Quae autem voluntas sine concupiscentiae stimulo est? Quis volet quod non concupiscet? Sed et cura accedet voluntati. [5] Quis enim volet quid et concupiscet, et non curabit? Igitur cum et voluit et concupiit in hominis salutem, iam et sibi et aliis negotium fecit, Epicuro nolente, consiliario Marcione. Nam et adversarium sibi constituit ipsum illud adversus quod et voluit et concupiit et curavit, sive delictum sive mortem, inprimis ipsum arbitrum eorum et dominum, hominis creatorem. [6] Porro nihil sine aemulatione decurret quod sine adversario non erit. Denique volens et concupiscens et curans hominem liberare hoc ipso iam aemulatur et eum a quo liberat, adversus eum scilicet sibi liberaturus, et ea de quibus liberat, in alia liberaturus. Proinde enim aemulationi occurrant necesse est officiales suae in ea quae aemulatur, ira, discordia, odium, dedignatio, indignatio, bilis, nolentia, offensa. [7] Haec omnia si aemulationi adsistunt, aemulatio autem liberando homini procurat, liberatio autem hominis operatio bonitatis est, non poterit ea bonitas sine suis dotibus, id est sine sensibus et affectibus, per quos administratur adversus creatorem, ne sic quoque irrationalis praescribatur, si careat et sensibus et affectibus debitis. Haec multo plenius defendemus in causa creatoris, in qua et exprobrantur.

26. [1] At hic sufficit perversissimum deum ostendi in ipso praeconio solitariae bonitatis, qua nolunt ei adscribere eiusmodi motus animi quos in creatore reprehendunt. Si enim neque aemulatur neque irascitur neque damnat neque vexat, utpote qui nec iudicem praestat, non invenio quomodo illi disciplinarum ratio consistat, et quidem plenior. [2] Quale est enim ut praecepta constituat non executurus, ut delicta prohibeat non vindicaturus, quia non iudicaturus, extraneus scilicet ab omnibus sensibus severitatis et animadversionis? Cur enim prohibet admitti quod non defendit admissum, cum multo rectius non prohibuisset quod defensurus non esset quam ut non defenderet quod prohibuisset? Immo et pennisisse directo debuit, sine causa prohibiturus, ut non defensurus. [3] Nam et nunc tacite permissum est quod sine ultione prohibetur. Et utique non aliud prohibet admitti quam quod non amat fieri. Stupidissimus ergo qui non offenditur facto quod non amat fieri, quando offensa comes sit frustratae voluntatis. Aut si offenditur, debet irasci; si irascitur, debet ulcisci. Nam et ultio fructus est irae, et ira debitum offensae, et offensa, ut dixi, comes frustratae voluntatis. Sed non ulciscitur; ergo nec offenditur. Sed non offenditur, ergo nec laeditur voluntas eius cum fit quod fieri noluit, et fit iam delictum secundum voluntatem eius, quia non fit adversus voluntatem quod non laedit voluntatem. [4] Aut si hoc erit divinae virtutis sive bonitatis, nolle quidem fieri et prohibere fieri, non moveri tamen si fiat, dicimus iam motum esse illum qui noluit, et vane non moveri ad factum qui motus sit ad non faciendum, quando noluit fieri. Nolendo enim prohibuit. Non enim et iudicavit nolendo fieri et idcirco prohibendo? Non faciendum enim iudicavit et prohibendum pronuntiavit. [5] Ergo et ille iam iudicat. Si indignum est deum iudicare, aut si eatenus dignum est deum iudicare qua tantummodo nolit et prohibeat, non etiam defendat admissum, atquin nihil deo tam indignum quam non exequi quod noluit et prohibuit admitti: primo, quod qualicunque sententiae suae et legi debeat vindictam in auctoritatem et obsequii necessitatem; secundo, quia aemulum sit necesse est quod noluit admitti et nolendo prohibuit; malo autem parcere deum indignius sit quam animadvertere, et quidem deo optimo, qui non alias plene bonus sit, nisi mali aemulus, uti boni amorem odio mali exerceat et boni tutelam expugnatione mali impleat.

27. [1] Sed iudicat plane malum nolendo et damnat prohibendo, dimittit autem non vindicando et absolvit non puniendo. O deum veritatis praevaricatore! sententiae suae circumscriptorem! Timet damnare quod damnat, timet odisse quod non amat, factum sinit quod fieri non sinit, mavult ostendere quid nolit quam probare. Hoc erit bonitas imaginaria, disciplina phantasma et ipsa, transfunctoria praecepta, secunda delicta. [2] Audite, peccatores, quique nondum hoc estis, ut esse possitis! deus melior inventus est, qui nec offenditur nec irascitur nec ulciscitur, cui nullus ignis coquitur in gehenna, cui nullus dentium frendor horret in exterioribus tenebris: bonus tantum est. Denique prohibet delinquere, sed litteris solis. In vobis est, si velitis illi obsequium subsignare, ut honorem deo habuisse videamini; timorem enim non vult. [3] Atque adeo prae se ferunt Marcionitae quod deum suum omnino non timeant. Malus autem, inquiunt, timebitur, bonus autem diligetur. Stulte, quem dominum appellas, negas timendum, cum hoc nomen potestatis sit, et iam timendae? At quomodo diliges, nisi timeas non diligere? Plane nec pater tuus est, in quem competat et amor propter pietatem et timor propter potestatem, nec legitimus dominus, ut diligas propter humanitatem et timeas propter disciplinam. [4] Sic denique plagiarii diliguntur, non etiam timentur. Non enim timebitur nisi iusta et ordinaria dominatio, diligere autem potest etiam adultera; sollicitatione enim constat, non auctoritate, et adulatione, non potestate. Quid denique adulantius quam delicta non exequi? [5] Age itaque, qui deum non times quasi bonum, quid non in omnem libidinem ebullis, summum, quod sciam, fructum vitae omnibus qui deum non timent? Quid non frequentas tam sollemnes voluptates circi furentis et caveae saevientis et scenae lascivientis? Quid non et in persecutionibus statim oblata acerra animam negatione lucaris? Absit, inquis, absit. Ergo iam times delictum, et timendo probasti illum timeri qui prohibet delictum. Aliud est si eadem dei tui perversitate quem non times observas, qua et ille quod non vindicat prohibet. [6] Multo adhuc vanius cum interrogati, Quid fiet peccatori cuique die illo? respondent abici illum quasi ab oculis. Nonne et hoc iudicio agitur? Iudicatur enim abiciendus, et utique iudicio damnationis; nisi si in salutem abiciatur peccator, ut et hoc deo optimo competat. Et quid erit abici, nisi amittere id quod erat consecuturus si non abiceretur, id est salutem? Ergo salutis in detrimentum abicietur, et hoc decerni non poterit nisi ab irato et offenso et executore delicti, id est iudice.

28. [1] Exitus autem illi abiecto quis? Ab igne, inquiunt, creatoris deprehendetur. Adeone nullum habet elementum vel in hanc causam provisum quo peccatores suos vel sine saevitia releget, ne illos dedat creatori? Quid tunc creator? Credo, sulphuratiorem eis gehennam praeparabit, ut blasphemis suis scilicet; nisi quod deus zelotes fortassean desertoribus adversarii sui parcat. O deum usquequaque perversum, ubique irrationalem, in omnibus vanum, atque ita neminem! [2] cuius non statum, non condicionem, non naturam, non ullum ordinem video consistere, iam nec ipsum fidei eius sacramentum. Cui enim rei baptismus quoque apud eum exigitur? Si remissio delictorum est, quomodo videbitur delicta dimittere qui non videbitur retinere? Quia retineret, si iudicaret. Si absolutio mortis est, quomodo absolveret a morte qui non devinxit ad mortem? Devinxisset enim, si a primordio damnasset. Si regeneratio est hominis, quomodo regenerat qui non generavit? [3] Iteratio enim non competit ei a quo quid nec semel factum est. Si consecutio est spiritus sancti, quomodo spiritum attribuet qui animam non prius contulit? Quia suffectura est quodammodo spiritus anima. Signat igitur hominem nunquam apud se resignatum, lavat hominem nunquam apud se coinquinatum, et in hoc totum salutis sacramentum carnem mergit exsortem salutis. [4] Nec rusticus terram rigabit fructum non relaturam, nisi tam vanus quam deus Marcionis. Proinde cur tantam sive sarcinam sive gloriam infirmissimae aut indignissimae carni imponit sanctitatem? Quid dicam autem de disciplinae vanitate, qua sanctificat substantiam sanctam? Quid aut onerat infirmam aut exornat indignam? Quid non salute remunerat quam onerat vel exornat? Quid fraudat mercedem operis, non rependens carni salutem? Quid et honorem sanctitatis in illa mori patitur?

29. [1] Non tinguitur apud illum caro nisi virgo, nisi vidua, nisi caelebs, nisi

divortio baptismata mercata, quasi non etiam spadonibus ex nuptiis nata. Sine dubio ex damnatione coniugii institutio ista constabit. [2] Videamus an iusta, non quasi destructuri felicitatem sanctitatis, ut aliqui Nicolaitae assertores libidinis atque luxuriae, sed qui sanctitatem sine nuptiarum damnatione noverimus et sectemur et praeferamus, non ut malo bonum, sed ut bono melius. Non enim proicimus sed deponimus nuptias, nec praescribimus sed suademus sanctitatem, servantes et bonum et melius pro viribus cuiusque sectanda, tunc denique coniugium exserte defendentes cum inimice accusatur spurcitiae nomine in destructionem creatoris, qui proinde coniugium pro rei honestate bene- dixit in crementum generis humani, quemadmodum et universum conditionis in integros et bonos usus. [3] Non ideo autem et cibi damnabuntur quia operosius exquisiti in gulam committunt, ut nec vestitus ideo accusabuntur quia pretiosius comparati in ambitionem tumescunt. Sic nec matrimonii res ideo despiciuntur quia intemperantius diffusae in luxuriam inardescunt. Multum differt inter causam et culpam, inter statum et excessum. [4] Ita huiusmodi non institutio sed exorbitatio reprobanda est, secundum censuram institutoris ipsius, cuius est tam, Crescite et multiplicamini, quam et, Non adulterabis, et, Uxorem proximi tui non concupisces, morte punientis et incestam sacrilegam atque monstruosam in masculos et in pecudes libidinum insaniam. Sed et si nubendi iam modus ponitur, quem quidem apud nos spiritalis ratio paracleto auctore defendit unum in fide matrimonium praescribens, eiusdem erit modum figere qui modum aliquando diffuderat, is colliget qui sparsit, is caedet silvam qui plantavit, is metet segetem qui seminavit, is dicet, Superest ut et qui uxores habent sic sint quasi non habeant, cuius et retro fuit Crescite et multiplicamini; eiusdem finis cuius et initium. [5] Non tamen ut accusanda caeditur silva, nec ut damnanda secatur seges, sed ut tempori suo parens. Sic et connubii res non ut mala securem et falcem admittit sanctitatis, sed ut matura defungi, ut ipsi sanctitati reservata, cui caedendo praestaret messem. Unde iam dicam deum Marcionis, cum matrimonium ut malum et impudicitiae negotium reprobatur, adversus ipsam facere sanctitatem, cui videtur studere. Materiam enim eius eradit, quia si nuptiae non erunt sanctitas nulla est. [6] Vacat enim abstinentiae testimonium cum licentia eripitur, quoniam ita quaedam in diversis probantur. Sicut et virtus in infirmitate perficitur, sic et abstinentia nubendi in facultate dinoscitur. Quis denique abstinens dicetur sublato eo a quo abstinendum est? Quae temperantia gulae in fame? Quae ambitionis repudiatio in egestate? Quae libidinis infrenatio in castratione? [7] Iam vero sementem generis humani compescere totum, nescio an hoc quoque optimo deo congruat. Quomodo enim salvum hominem volet quem vetat nasci, de quo nascitur auferendo? Quomodo habebit in quo bonitatem suam signet, quem esse non patitur? Quomodo diligit cuius originem non amat? [8] Timet forsitan redundantiam subolis, ne laboret plures liberando, ne multos faciat haereticos, ne generosiores habeat Marcionitas ex Marcionitis. Non erit humanior duritia Pharaonis, nascentium enecatrix? Nam ille animas adimit, hic non dat; ille aufert de vita, hic non admittit in vitam. Nihil apud ambos de homicidio differt. Sub utroque homo interficitur, sub altero iam editus, sub altero edendus. Gratus esses, o dee haeretice, si isses in dispositionem creatoris, quod marem et feminam miscuit; utique enim et Marcion tuus ex nuptiis natus est. [9] Satis haec de deo Marcionis, quem et definitiones unicae divinitatis et condiciones statuum eius omnino non esse confirmant. Sed et totius opusculi series in hoc utique succedit. Proinde si cui minus quid videmur egisse, speret reservatum suo tempori, sicut et ipsarum scripturarum examinationem quibus Marcion utitur.

LIBER II.

1. [1] Occasio reformandi opusculi huius, cui quid acciderit primo libellulo praefati sumus, hoc quoque contulit nobis, uti duobus deis adversus Marcionem retractandis suum cuique titulum et volumen distingueremus pro materiae divisione, alterum deum definientes omnino non esse, alterum defendentes digne deum esse, quatenus ita Pontico placuit alterum inducere, alterum excludere. Non enim poterat aedificare mendacium sine demolitione veritatis. Aliud subruere necesse habuit, ut quod vellet extrueret. Sic aedificat qui propria paratura caret. [2] Oportuerat autem in hoc solum disceptasse, quod nemo sit deus ille qui creatori superducitur, ut falso deo depulso regulis certis et unicam et perfectam praescribentibus divinitatem, nihil iam quaereretur in deum verum, quem quanto constaret esse sic quoque dum alium esse non constat, tanto qualemcumque sine controversia haberi deceret, adorandum potius quam iudicandum, et demerendum magis quam retractandum, vel quam timendum ob severitatem. [3] Quid enim amplius homini necessarium quam cura in deum verum, in quem, ut ita dixerim, inciderat, quia alius deus non erat?

retractares. Reddens nomen illi negas substantiam nominis, id est magnitudinis quae deus dicitur, non tantam eam agnoscens quantam si homo omnifariam nosse potuisset magnitudo non esset. [4] Esaias iam tum apostolus pro spiciens haeretica corda, Quis, inquit, cognovit sensum domini, aut quis consiliarius eius fuit? aut ad quem consultavit, aut viam intellectus et scientiae quis demonstravit ei? Cui et apostolus condicet, O profundum divitiarum et sophiae dei, ut ininvestigabilia iudicia eius, utique dei iudicis, et in investigabiles viae eius, utique intellectus et scientiae, quas ei nemo monstravit, nisi forte isti censores divinitatis, dicentes, Sic non debuit deus, et, Sic magis debuit, quasi cognoscat aliquis quae sint in deo nisi spiritus dei. [5] Mundi autem habentes spiritum, non agnoscentes in sapientia dei per sapientiam deum, consultiores sibimet videntur deo, quoniam sicut sapientia mundi stultitia est penes deum, ita et sapientia dei stultitia est penes mundum. Sed nos scimus stultum dei sapientius hominibus, et invalidum dei validius hominibus. [6] Et ita deus tunc maxime magnus cum homini pusillus, et tunc maxime optimus cum homini non bonus, et tunc maxime unus cum homini duo aut plures. Quodsi a primordio homo animalis, non recipiens quae sunt spiritus, stultitiam existimavit dei legem, ut quam observare neglexit, ideoque non habendo fidem etiam quod videbatur habere ademptum est illi, paradisi gratia et familiaritas dei per quam omnia dei cognovisset si obedisset, quid mirum, si redhibitus materiae suae et in ergastulum terrae laborandae relegatus in ipso opere prono et devexo ad terram usurpatum ex illa spiritum mundi universo generi suo tradidit, duntaxat animali et haeretico, non recipienti quae sunt dei? [7] Aut quis dubitabit ipsum illud Adae delictum haeresim pronuntiare, quod per electionem suae potius quam divinae sententiae admisit? Nisi quod Adam nunquam figulo suo dixit, Non prudenter definxisti me. Confessus est seductionem. Non occultavit seductricem. Rudis admodum haeticus fuit. Non obaudiit, non tamen blasphemavit creatorem, nec reprehendit auctorem, quem a primordio sui bonum et optimum invenerat, et ipse, si forte, iudicem fecerat [a primordio].

bonitatem dei nostri dignam quoque deo agnoscere per eosdem titulos per quos indignam ostendimus in deo illorum. Iam hoc ipsum, quod materia est agnitionis suae, non apud alium invenit, sed de suo sibi fecit. Prima denique bonitas creatoris, qua se deus noluit in aeternum latere, id est non esse aliquid cui deus cognosceretur. [3] Quid enim tam bonum quam notitia et fructus dei ? Nam etsi nondum apparebat hoc bonum esse, quia nondum erat quicquam cui appareret, sed deus praesciebat quid boni appariturum esset, et ideo in suam summam commisit bonitatem, apparituri boni negotiatricem, non utique repentinam nec obventiciae bonitatis nec provocaticiae animationis, quasi exinde censendam quo coepit operari. [4] Si enim ipsa constituit initium exinde quo coepit operari, non habuit initium ipsa cum fecit. Initio autem facto ab ea etiam ratio temporum nata est, utpote quibus distinguendis et notandis sidera et luminaria caelestia disposita sunt. Erunt enim, inquit, in tempora et menses et annos. Ergo nec tempus habuit ante tempus quae fecit tempus, sicut nec initium ante initium quae constituit initium. [5] Atque ita carens et ordine initii et modo temporis de immensa et interminabili aetate censebitur, nec poterit repentina vel obventicia et provocaticia reputari, non habens unde reputetur, id est aliquam temporis speciem, sed et aeterna et deo ingenua et perpetua praesumenda ac per hoc deo digna, suffundens iam hinc bonitatem dei Marcionis, non dico initiis et temporibus sed ipsa malitia creatoris posteriorem, si tamen malitia potuit a bonitate committi.

deus commendaretur, bonus et dicere et facere. Maledicere adhuc sermo non norat, quia nec malefacere. Videbimus causas quae hoc quoque a deo exegerunt. Interim mundus ex bonis omnibus constitit, satis praemonstrans quantum boni pararetur illi cui praeparabatur hoc totum. Quis denique dignus incolere dei opera quam ipsius imago et similitudo? [4] Eam quoque bonitas et quidem operantior operata est, non imperiali verbo sed familiari manu, etiam verbo blandiente praemisso, Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram. Bonitas dixit, bonitas finxit hominem de limo in tantam substantiam carnis ex una materia tot qualitativis exstructam. Bonitas inflavit animam, non mortuam sed vivam. Bonitas praefecit universis fruendis atque regnandis, etiam cognominandis. Bonitas amplius delicias adiecit homini, ut, quamquam totius orbis possidens, in amoenioribus moraretur translatus in paradysum, iam tunc de mundo in ecclesiam. Eadem bonitas et adiutorium prospexit, ne quid non boni. [5] Non est enim, inquit, bonum, solum esse hominem. Sciebat illi sexum Mariae et deinceps ecclesiae profuturum. Sed et quam arguis legem, quam in controversias torques, bonitas erogavit, consulens homini, quo deo adhaereret, ne non tam liber quam abiectus videretur, aequandus famulis suis, ceteris animalibus, solutis a deo et ex fastidio liberis, sed ut solus homo gloriaretur, quod solus dignus fuisset qui legem a deo sumeret, utque animal rationale intellectus et scientiae capax ipsa quoque libertate rationali contineretur, ei subiectus qui subiecerat illi omnia. [6] Cuius legis observandae consilium bonitas pariter adscripsit: Qua die autem ederitis, morte moriemini. Benignissime enim demonstravit exitum transgressionis, ne ignorantia periculi negligentiam iuvaret obsequii. Porro si legis imponendae ratio praecessit, sequebatur etiam observandae, ut poena transgressionis adscriberetur, quam tamen evenire noluit qui ante praedixit. Agnosce igitur bonitatem dei nostri interim vel hucusque ex operibus bonis, ex benedictionibus bonis, ex indulgentiis, ex providentiis, ex legibus et praemonitionibus bonis et benignis.

5. [1] Iam hinc ad quaestiones omnes, o canes, quos foras apostolus expellit, latrantes in deum veritatis. Haec sunt argumentationum ossa, quae obroditis. Si deus bonus et praescius futuri et avertendi mali potens, cur hominem, et quidem imaginem et similitudinem suam, immo et substantiam suam, per animae scilicet censum, passus est labi de obsequio legis in mortem circumventum a diabolo? [2] Si enim et bonus, qui evenire tale quid nollet, et

praescius, qui eventurum non ignoraret, et potens, qui depellere valeret, nullo modo evenisset quod sub his tribus condicionibus divinae maiestatis evenire non posset. Quod si evenit, absolutum est e contrario deum neque bonum credendum neque praescium neque potentem; siquidem in quantum nihil tale evenisset, si talis deus, id est bonus et praescius et potens, in tantum ideo evenit quia non talis deus. [3] Ad haec prius est istas species in creatore defendere quae in dubium vocantur, bonitatem dico et praescientiam et potentiam. Nec immorabor huic articulo, praeunte definitione etiam ipsius Christi. Ex operibus ineundae probationes. Opera creatoris utrumque testantur, et bonitatem eius, qua bona, sicut ostendimus, et potentiam, qua tanta, et quidem ex nihilo. Nam et si ex aliqua materia, ut quidam volunt, hoc ipso tamen ex nihilo, dum non id fuerunt quod sunt. [4] Postremo vel sic magna, dum bona, vel sic deus potens, dum omnia ipsius, unde et omnipotens. De praescientia vero quid dicam, quae tantos habet testes quantos fecit prophetas? Quamquam quis praescientiae titulus in omnium auctore, qua universa utique disponendo praesciit et praesciendo disposuit? certe ipsam transgressionem, quam nisi praescisset, nec cautionem eius delegasset sub metu mortis. [5] Igitur si et fuerunt in deo istae facultates prae quibus nihil mali evenire homini aut potuisset aut debuisset, et nihilominus evenit, videamus et hominis condicionem, ne per illam potius evenerit quod per deum evenire non potuit. Liberum et sui arbitrii et suae potestatis invenio hominem a deo institutum, nullam magis imaginem et similitudinem dei in illo animadvertens quam eiusmodi status formam. [6] Neque enim facie et corporalibus lineis tam variis in genere humano ad uniformem deum expressus est, sed in ea substantia quam ab ipso deo traxit, id est animae ad formam dei respondentis, et arbitrii sui libertate et potestate signatus est. Hunc statum eius confirmavit etiam ipsa lex tunc a deo posita. [7] Non enim poneretur lex ei qui non haberet obsequium debitum legi in sua potestate, nec rursus comminatio mortis transgressioni adscriberetur, si non et contemptus legis in arbitrii libertatem homini deputaretur. Sic et in posteris legibus creatoris invenias, proponentis ante hominem bonum et malum, vitam et mortem, sed nec alias totum ordinem disciplinae per praecepta dispositum, avocante deo et minante et exhortante, nisi et ad obsequium et ad contemptum libero et voluntario homine.

6. [1] Sed quoniam ex hoc iam intellegimur eo struentes liberam hominis potestatem arbitrii sui ut quod ei evenit non deo sed ipsi debeat exprobari, ne et tu hinc iam opponas non ita illum institui debuisse, si libertas et potestas arbitrii exitiosa futura esset, hoc quoque prius defendam ita institui debuisse, quo fortius commendem et ita institutum et digne deo institutum, potiore ostensa ea causa quae ita fecit institui. Bonitas dei et ratio eius huic quoque instituto patrocinaabuntur, in omnibus conspirantes apud deum nostrum. [2] Nec ratio enim sine bonitate ratio est, nec bonitas sine ratione bonitas, nisi forte penes deum Marcionis irrationaliter bonum, sicut ostendimus. Oportebat deum cognosci. Bonum hoc utique et rationale. Oportebat dignum aliquid esse quod deum cognosceret. Quid tam dignum prospici posset quam imago dei et similitudo? [3] Et hoc bonum sine dubio et rationale. Oportebat igitur imaginem et similitudinem dei liberi arbitrii et suae potestatis institui in qua hoc ipsum imago et similitudo dei deputeretur, arbitrii scilicet libertas et potestas, in quam rem ea substantia homini accommodata est quae huius status esset, afflatus dei utique liberi et suae potestatis. Sed et alias quale erat ut totius mundi possidens homo non inprimis animi sui possessione regnaret, aliorum dominus, sui famulus? [4] Habes igitur et bonitatem dei agnoscere ex dignatione, et rationem ex dispositione. Sola nunc bonitas deputeretur quae tantum homini largita sit, id est arbitrii libertatem. Aliud sibi ratio defendat in eiusmodi institutionem. Nam bonus natura deus solus. Qui enim quod est sine initio habet, non institutione habet illud, sed natura. Homo autem, qui totus ex institutione est, habens initium cum initio sortitus est formam qua esset, atque ita non natura in bonum dispositus est, sed institutione, non suum habens bonus esse, quia non natura in bonum dispositus est, sed institutione, secundum institutorem bonum, scilicet bonorum conditorem. [5] Ut ergo bonum iam suum haberet homo, emancipatum sibi a deo, et fieret proprietas iam boni in homine et quodammodo natura, de institutione adscripta est illi quasi libripens emancipati a deo boni libertas et potestas arbitrii, quae efficeret bonum, ut proprium, iam sponte praestari ab homine, quoniam et hoc ratio bonitatis exigeret voluntarie exercendae, ex libertate scilicet arbitrii, [non] favente institutioni, non serviente, ut ita demum bonus consisteret homo, si secundum institutionem quidem sed ex voluntate iam bonus inveniretur, quasi de proprietate naturae, proinde ut et contra malum (nam et illud utique deus providebat) fortior homo praetenderet, liber scilicet et suae potestatis, quia si careret hoc iure, ut bonum quoque non voluntate obiret, sed necessitate, usurpabilis etiam malo futurus esset ex infirmitate servitii, proinde et malo sicut bono famulus. [6] Tota ergo libertas arbitrii in utramque partem concessa est illi, ut sui dominus constanter occurreret et bono sponte servando et malo sponte vitando, quoniam et alias positum hominem sub iudicio dei oportebat iustum illud efficere de arbitrii sui meritis, liberi scilicet.

[7] Ceterum nec boni nec mali merces iure pensaretur ei qui aut bonus aut malus necessitate fuisset inventus, non voluntate. In hoc et lex constituta est, non excludens sed probans libertatem, de obsequio sponte praestando vel transgressionem sponte committenda; ita in utrumque exitum libertas patuit arbitrii. Igitur si et bonitas et ratio dei invenitur circa libertatem arbitrii concessam homini, non oportet omissa prima definitione bonitatis atque rationis, quae ante omnem tractatum constituenda est, post factis praeiudicare non ita deum instituere debuisse, quia aliter quam deum deceret evasis, sed dispecto quia ita debuerit instituere, salvo eo quod dispectum est cetera explorare. [8] Ceterum facile est offendentes statim in hominis ruinam, antequam conditionem eius inspexerint, in auctorem referre quod accidit, quia nec auctoris examinata sit ratio. Denique et bonitas dei a primordio operum perspecta persuadebit nihil a deo mali evenire potuisse, et libertas hominis recogitata se potius ream ostendet quod ipsa commisit.

7. [1] Hac definitione omnia deo salva sunt, et natura bonitatis et ratio dispositionis et praescientiae et potentiae copia. Exigere tamen a deo debes et gravitatem summam et fidem praecipuam in omni institutione eius, ut desinas quaerere an deo nolente potuerit quid evenire. Tenens enim gravitatem et fidem dei boni, sed rationalibus institutionibus eius vindicandas, nec illud miraberis, quod deus non intercesserit adversus ea quae noluit evenire ut conservaret ea quae voluit. [2] Si enim semel homini permiserat arbitrii libertatem et potestatem, et digne permiserat, sicut ostendimus, utique fruendas eas ex ipsa institutionis auctoritate permiserat, fruendas autem, quantum in ipso, secundum ipsum, id est secundum deum, id est in bonum (quis enim adversus se permittet aliquid?), quantum vero in hominem, secundum motus libertatis ipsius (quis enim non hoc praestat ei cui quid semel frui praestat, ut pro animo et arbitrio suo fruatur?). Igitur consequens erat uti deus secederet a libertate, semel concessa homini, id est contineret in semet ipso et praescientiam et praepotentiam suam, per quas intercessisse potuisset quominus homo male libertate sua frui aggressus in periculum laberetur. [3] Si enim intercessisset, rescidisset arbitrii libertatem, quam ratione et bonitate permiserat. Denique puta intercessisse, puta rescidisse illum arbitrii libertatem, dum revocat ab arbore, dum ipsum circumscriptorem colubrum a congressu feminae arcet, nonne exclamaret Marcion, O dominum fulem, instabilem, infidelem, rescindentem quae instituit? Cur permiserat liberum arbitrium, si intercedit? Cur intercedit, si permisit? Eligat ubi semetipsum erroris notet, in institutione, an in rescissione. [4] Nonne tunc magis deceptus ex impraesentia futuri videretur, cum obstitisset? et quod quasi ignorans quomodo evasurum esset indulserat, quis non diceret? Sed et si praescierat male hominem institutione sua usurum, quid tam dignum deo quam gravitas, quam fides institutionum qualiumcunque? Vidisset homo, si non bene dispunxisset quod bene acceperat, ut ipse legi reus fuisset cui obsequi nolisset, non ut legislator ipse fraudem legi suae faceret, non sinendo praescriptum eius impleri. [5] Haec dignissime peroraturus in creatorem, si libero arbitrio hominis ex providentia et potentia, quas exigit, obstitisset, nunc tibi insurra pro creatore et gravitatem et patientiam et fidem, institutionibus suis functo ut et rationalibus et bonis.

8. [1] Neque enim ad vivendum solummodo produxerat hominem, ut non ad recte vivendum, in respectu scilicet dei legisque eius. Igitur vivere quidem illi ipse praestiterat facto in animam vivam, recte vero vivere demandarat admonito in legis obsequium. Ita non in mortem institutum hominem probat qui nunc cupit in vitam restitutum, malens peccatoris paenitentiam quam mortem. [2] Igitur sicut deus homini vitae statum induxit, ita homo sibi mortis statum attraxit, et hoc non per infirmitatem, sicuti nec per ignorantiam, ne quid auctori imputaretur. Nam etsi angelus qui seduxit, sed liber et suae potestatis qui seductus est, sed imago et similitudo dei fortior angelo, sed afflatus dei generosior spiritu materiali quo angeli constiterunt. Qui facit, inquit, spiritus angelos et apparitores flammam ignis. Quia nec universitatem homini subiecisset infirmo dominandi et non potiori angelis, quibus nihil tale subiecit. [3] Sic nec legis pondus imposuisset, si gravis lex invalido sustinendi, nec quem excusabilem sciret nomine imbecillitatis, eum definitione mortis convenisset; postremo non libertate nec potestate arbitrii fecisset infirmum, sed potius defectione earum. Atque adeo eundem hominem, eandem substantiam animae, eundem Adae statum eadem arbitrii libertas et potestas victorem efficit hodie de eodem diabolo, cum secundum obsequium legum eius administratur.

9. [1] Quoquo tamen, inquis, modo substantia creatoris delicti capax invenitur, cum afflatus dei, id est anima, in homine deliquit, nec potest non ad originalem summam referri corruptio portionis. Ad hoc interpretanda erit qualitas animae. Inprimis tenendum quod Graeca scriptura signavit, afflatum nominans, non spiritum. [2] Quidam enim de Graeco interpretantes non recogitata differentia nec curata proprietate verborum pro afflatu spiritum ponunt, et dant haereticis occasionem spiritum dei delicto infuscandi, id est ipsum deum. Et usurpata iam quaestio est. Intellege itaque afflatum minorem spiritu esse, etsi de spiritu accidit, ut aurulam eius, non tamen spiritum. Nam et aura vento rarior, et si de vento aura, non tamen ventus aura. Capit etiam imaginem spiritus dicere flatum. [3] Nam et ideo homo imago dei, id est spiritus; deus enim spiritus. Imago ergo spiritus afflatus. Porro imago veritati non usquequaque adaequabitur. Aliud est enim secundum veritatem esse, aliud ipsam veritatem esse. Sic et afflatus cum imago sit spiritus, non potest ita imaginem dei comparare, ut, quia veritas, id est spiritus, id est deus, sine delicto est, ideo et afflatus, id est imago, non debuerit admisisse delictum. [4] In hoc erit imago minor veritate et afflatus spiritu inferior, habens illas utique lineas dei, qua immortalis anima, qua libera et sui arbitrii, qua praescia plerumque, qua rationalis, capax intellectus et scientiae, tamen et in his imago, et non usque ad ipsam vim divinitatis, sic nec usque ad integritatem a delicto, quia hoc soli deo cedit, id est veritati, et hoc solum imagini non licet. [5] Sicut enim imago, cum omnes lineas exprimat veritatis, vi tamen ipsa caret, non habens motum, ita et anima, imago spiritus, solam vim eius exprimere non valuit, id est non delinquendi felicitatem. Ceterum non esset anima, sed spiritus, nec homo, qui animam sortitus est, sed deus. [6] Et alias autem non omne quod dei erit deus habebitur, ut expostules deum et afflatum, id est vacuum a delicto, quia dei sit afflatus. Nec tu enim si in tibiam flaveris, hominem tibiam feceris, quamquam de anima tua flaveris, sicut et deus de spiritu suo. Denique cunx manifeste scriptura dicat flasse deum in faciem hominis, et factum hominem in animam vivam, non in spiritum vivificantem, separavit eam a condicione factoris. [7] Opus enim aliud sit necesse est ab artifice, id est inferius artifice. Nec urceus enim factus a figulo ipse erit figulus, ita nec afflatus factus a spiritu ideo erit spiritus. Ipsum quod anima vocitatus est flatus, vide ne etiam de afflatus condicione transierit in aliquam deminutiorem qualitatem. Ergo, inquis, dedisti animae infirmitatem supra negatam. Plane cum illam exigis deo parem, id est delicti immunem, dico infirmam. Cum vero ad angelum provocatur, fortiorem defendam necesse est dominum universitatis, cui iam angeli administrant, qui etiam angelos iudicaturus est, si in dei lege constiterit, quod in primordio noluit. [8] Hoc ipsum ergo potuit afflatus dei admittere; potuit, sed non debuit. Potuisse enim habuit per substantiae exilitatem, qua afflatus, non spiritus, non debuisset autem per arbitrii potestatem, qua liber, non servus, adsistente amplius demonstratione non delinquendi, sub comminatione moriendi, qua substrueretur substantiae exilitas et regeretur sententiae libertas. Itaque non per illud iam videri potest anima deliquisse quod illi cum deo affine est, id est per afflatum, sed per illud quod substantiae accessit, id est per liberum arbitrium, a deo quidem rationaliter attributum, ab homine vero qua voluit agitatam. [9] Quodsi ita se habent, omnis iam dei dispositio de mali exprobratione purgatur. Libertas enim arbitrii non ei culpam suam respuet a quo data est, sed a quo non ut debuit administrata est. Quod denique malum describes creatori? Si delictum hominis, non erit dei quod est hominis, nec idem habendus est delicti auctor qui invenitur interdictor, immo et condemnator. Si mors malum, nec mors comminatori suo sed contemptori faciet invidiam, ut auctori. Contemnendo enim eam fecit, non utique futuram si non contempsisset.

10. [1] Sed et si ab homine in diabolum transcripseris mali elogium, ut in instinctorem delicti, uti sic quoque in creatorem dirigas culpam ut in auctorem diaboli, qui facit angelos spiritus, ergo quod factus a deo est, id est angelus, id erit eius qui fecit, quod autem factus a deo non est, id est diabolus, id est delator, superest ut ipse sese fecerit, deferendo de deo, et quidem falsum, primo, quod deus illos ex omni ligno edere vetuisset, dehinc, quasi morituri non essent, si edissent, tertio, quasi deus illis invidisset divinitatem. [2] Unde igitur malitia mendacii et fallaciae in homines et infamiae in deum? A deo utique non, qui et angelum ex forma operum bonorum instituit bonum. Denique sapientissimus omnium editur ante quam diabolus; nisi malum est sapientia. Et si evolvas Ezechielis prophetiam, facile animadverteres tam institutione bonum angelum illum quam sponte corruptum. [3] In persona enim principis Sor ad diabolum pronuntiatur, Et factus est sermo domini ad me dicens: Fili hominis, sume planctum super principem Sor, et dices, Haec dicit dominus: Tu es resignaculum similitudinis, qui scilicet integritatem imaginis et similitudinis resignaveris, corona decoris (hoc ut eminentissimo angelorum, ut archangelo, ut sapientissimo omnium) in deliciis paradisi dei tui natus es; illic enim, ubi deus in secunda animalium figurae formatione angelos fecerat. Lapidem optimum indutus es, sardium, topazium, smaragdum, carbunculum, sapphirum, iaspin, lyncurium, achaten, arnethystum, chrysolithum, beryllum, onychinum, et auro replesti horrea tua et thesauros tuos. Ex qua die conditus es, cum cherub imposui te in monte sancto dei, fuisti in medio lapidum igneorum, fuisti invituperabilis in diebus tuis, ex qua die conditus es, donec inventae sunt laesurae tuae; de multitudine negotiationis tuae promas tuas replesti, et deliquisti, et cetera, quae ad suggillationem angeli, non ad illius principis, proprie pertinere manifestum est, eo quod nemo hominum in paradiso dei natus sit, ne ipse quidem Adam, translatus potius illuc, nec cum cherub impositus in monte sancto dei, id est in sublimitate caelesti, de qua satanam dominus quoque decidisse testatur, nec inter lapides igneos demoratus, inter gemmantes siderum ardentium radios, unde etiam quasi fulgur deiectus est satanas. [4] Sed ipse auctor delicti in persona peccatoris viri denotabatur, retro quidem invituperabilis a die conditionis suae, a deo in bonum conditus, ut a bono conditore invituperabilium conditionum, et excultus omni gloria angelica, et apud deum constitutus, qua bonus apud bonum, postea vero a semetipso translatus in malum. Ex quo enim, inquit, apparuerunt laesurae tuae, illi eas reputans, quibus scilicet laesit hominem eiectum a dei obsequio, [5] et ex illo deliquit ex quo delictum seminavit, atque ita exinde negotiationis, id est malitiae, suae multitudinem exercuit, delictorum scilicet censum, non minus et ipse liberi arbitrii institutus, ut spiritus. Nihil enim deus proximum sibi non libertate eiusmodi ordinasset. Quem tamen et praedamnando testatus est ab institutionis forma libidine propria conceptae ultro malitiae exorbitasse, et commeatum operationibus eius admetiendo rationem bonitatis suae egit, eodem consilio differens extinctionem diaboli quo hominis restitutionem. [6] Certamini enim dedit spatium, ut et homo eadem arbitrii libertate elideret inimicum qua succiderat illi, probans suam, non dei culpam, et ita salutem digne per victoriam recuperaret, et diabolus amarius puniretur ab eo quem eliserat ante devictus, et deus tanto magis bonus inveniretur, sustinens hominem gloriosorem in paradysum ad licentiam decerpendae arboris vitae iam de vita regressurum.

11. [1] Igitur usque ad delictum hominis deus a primordio tantum bonus, exinde iudex et severus et, quod Marcionitae volunt, saevus. Statim mulier in doloribus parere et viro servire damnatur, sed quae ante sine ulla contristatione per benedictionem incrementum generis audierat, Crescite, tantum, et multiplicamini, sed quae in adiutorium masculo, non in servitium fuerat destinata. Statim et terra maledicatur, sed ante benedicta. Statim tribuli et spinae, sed ante foenum, et herbae et arborum fructuosa. Statim sudor et labor panis, sed ante ex omni ligno victus immunis et alimenta secura. [2] Exinde homo ad terram, sed ante de terra; exinde ad mortem, sed ante ad vitam; exinde in scortis vestibis, sed ante sine scrupulo nudus. Ita prior bonitas dei secundum naturam, severitas posterior secundum causam. Illa ingenita, haec accidens; illa propria, haec accommodata; illa edita, haec adhibita. Nec natura enim inoperatam debuit continuisse bonitatem, nec causa dissimulatam evasisse severitatem. Alteram sibi, alteram rei deus praestitit. [3] Incipe nunc etiam iudicis statum ut affinem mali arguere, qui idcirco alium deum somniasti, solummodo bonum, quia non potes iudicem. Quamquam et illum ut iudicem ostendimus; aut si non iudicem, certe perversum ac vanum, disciplinae non vindicandae, id est non iudicandae, constitutorem. Non reprobas autem deum iudicem, qui non iudicem deum probas: ipsam sine dubio iustitiam accusare debebis, quae iudicem praestat, aut et eam in species malitiae deputare, id est iniustitiam in titulos bonitatis adscribere. [4] Nunc enim iustitia malum, si iniustitia bonum. Porro cum cogeris iniustitiam de pessimis pronuntiare, eodem iugo urgeris iustitiam de optimis censere. Nihil enim aemulum mali non bonum, sicut et boni aemulum nihil non malum. Igitur quanto malum iniustitia, tanto bonum iustitia. Nec species solummodo, sed tutela reputanda bonitatis, quia bonitas, nisi iustitia regatur ut iusta sit, non erit bonitas, si iniusta sit. Nihil enim bonum quod iniustum, bonum autem omne quod iustum.

12. [1] Ita si societas et conspiratio bonitatis atque iustitiae separationem earum non potest capere, quo ore constitues diversitatem duorum deorum, in separatione seorsum deputans deum bonum et seorsum deum iustum? Illic consistit bonum ubi et iustum. A primordio denique creator tam bonus quam et iustus. Pariter utrumque processit. Bonitas eius operata est mundum, iustitia modulata est, quae etiam tum mundum iudicavit ex bonis faciendum quia cum bonitatis consilio iudicavit. [2] Iustitiae opus est quod inter lucem et tenebras separatio pronuntiata est, inter diem et noctem, inter caelum et terram, inter aquam superiorem et inferiorem, intermaris coetum et aridae molem, inter luminaria maiora et minora, diurna atque nocturna, inter marem et feminam, inter arborem agnitionis mortis et vitae, inter orbem et paradisum, inter aquigena et terrigena animalia. Omnia ut bonitas concepit, ita iustitia distinxit. [3] Totum hoc iudicato dispositum et ordinatum est. Omnis situs, habitus elementorum, effectus, motus, status, ortus, occasus singulorum, iudicia sunt creatoris: ne putes eum exinde iudicem definiendum quo malum coepit, atque ita iustitiam de causa mali offusces. His enim modis ostendimus eam cum auctrice omnium bonitate prodisse, ut et ipsam ingentem deo et naturalem nec obventiciam deputandam, quae in domino inventa sit arbitrix operum eius.

13. [1] At enim ut malum postea erupit atque inde iam coepit bonitas dei cum adversario agere, aliud quoque negotium eadem illa iustitia dei nacta est iam secundum aversionem dirigendae bonitatis, ut seposita libertate eius, qua et ultro deus bonus, pro meritis cuiusque pensetur, dignis offeratur, indignis denegetur, ingratum auferatur, proinde omnibus aemulis vindicetur. [2] Ita omne hoc iustitiae opus procuratio bonitatis est; quod iudicando damnat, quod damnando punit, quod, ut dicitis, saevit, utique bono, non malo proficit. Denique timor iudicii ad bonum, non ad malum confert. Non enim sufficebat bonum per semetipsum commendari, iam sub adversario laborans. Nam et si commendabile per semetipsum, non tamen et conservabile, quia expugnabile iam per adversarium, nisi vis aliqua praecesset timendi, quae bonum etiam nolentes appetere et custodire compelleret. [3] Ceterum tot illecebris mali expugnantibus bonum quis illud appeteret quod impune contemneret? Quis custodiret quod sine periculo amitteret? Legis mali viam latam et multo frequentiore: nonne omnes illa laberentur, si nihil in illa timeretur? Horremus terribiles minas creatoris, et vix a malo avellimur. Quid, si nihil minaretur? Hanc iustitiam malum dices, quae malo non favet? Hanc bonum negabis, quae bono prospicit? Qualem oportet deum velles? qualem malles expedit? Sub quo delicta gauderent, cui diabolus illuderet? [4] Illum bonum iudicares deum qui hominem posset magis malum facere securitate delicti? Quis boni auctor, nisi qui et exactor? Proinde quis mali extraneus, nisi qui et inimicus? Quis inimicus, nisi qui et expugnator? Quis expugnator, nisi qui et punitor? Sic totus deus bonus est, dum pro bono omnia est. Sic denique omnipotens, quia et iuvandi et laedendi potens. Minus est tantummodo prodesse, quia non aliud quid possit quam prodesse. De eiusmodi qua fiducia bonum sperem, si hoc solum potest? quomodo innocentiae mercedem secter, si non et nocentiae spectem? [5] Diffidam necesse est, ne nec alteram partem remuneretur qui utramque non valuit. Usque adeo iustitia etiam plenitudo est divinitatis ipsius, exhibens deum perfectum et patrem et dominum, patrem clementia, dominum disciplina, patrem potestate blanda, dominum severa, patrem diligendum pie, dominum timendum necessarie, diligendum quia malit misericordiam quam sacrificium, et timendum quia nolit peccatum, diligendum quia malit paenitentiam peccatoris quam mortem, et timendum quia nolit peccatores sui iam non paenitentes. Ideo lex utrumque definit: Diliges deum, et, Timebis deum. Aliud obsecutori proposuit, aliud exorbitatori.

14. [1] Ad omnia tibi occurrit deus, idem percutiens sed et sanans, mortificans sed et vivificans, humilians sed et sublimans, condens mala sed et pacem faciens, ut etiam et hinc respondeam haereticis. Ecce enim, inquit, ipse se conditorem profitetur malorum dicens, Ego sum qui condo mala. [2] Amplexi enim vocabuli communionem duas malorum species in ambiguitate turbantem, quia mala dicuntur et delicta et supplicia, passim volunt eum conditorem intellegi malorum, ut malitiae auctor renuntietur. Nos autem adhibita distinctione utriusque formae, separatis malis delicti et malis supplicii, malis culpa et malis poenae, suum cuique parti definimus auctorem, malorum quidem peccati et culpa diabolum, malorum vero supplicii et poenae deum creatorem, ut illa pars malitiae deputetur, ista iustitiae, mala condentis iudicii adversus mala delicti. [3] De his ergo creator profitetur malis quae congruunt iudici: quae quidem illis mala sunt quibus rependuntur, ceterum suo nomine bona, qua iusta, et bonorum defensoria et delictorum inimica, atque in hoc ordine deo digna. Aut proba ea iniusta, ut probes malitiae deputanda, id est iniustitiae mala, quia si iustitiae erunt, iam mala non erunt, sed bona, malis tantummodo mala, quibus etiam directo bona pro malis damnantur. [4] Constitue igitur iniuste hominem divinae legis voluntarium contemptorem id retulisse quo voluit caruisse, iniuste malitiam aevi illius imbribus, dehinc et ignibus caesam, iniuste Aegyptum foedissimam, superstitiosam, amplius hospitis populi conflictatricem, decemplici castigatione percussam. Indurat cor Pharaonis. Sed meruerat in exitium subministrari qui iam negaverat deum, qui iam legatos eius totiens superbus excusserat, qui iam populo laborem operis adiecerat; postremo, quae Aegyptius, olim deo reus fuerat gentilis idololatriae, ibi et crocodilum citius colens quam deum vivum. Impendit et ipsum populum, sed ingratum. Immisit et pueris ursos, sed irreverentibus in prophetam.

15. [1] Iustitiam ergo primo iudicis dispice, cuius si ratio constiterit, tunc et severitas, et per quae severitas decurrit, rationi et iustitiae reputabuntur. Ac ne pluribus immoremur, asserite causas ceteras quoque, ut sententias condemnetis, excusate delicta, ut iudicia reprobetis. Nolite reprehendere iudicem, sed revincite malum iudicem. Nam et si patrum delicta de filiis exigebat, duritia populi talia remedia compulerat, ut vel posteritatibus suis prospicientes legi divinae obedirent. Quis enim non magis filiorum salutem quam suam curet? [2] Sed et si benedictio patrum semini quoque eorum destinabatur, sine ullo adhuc merito eius, cur non et reatus patrum in filios quoque redundaret? Sicut gratia, ita et offensa; ut per totum genus et gratia decurreret et offensa, salvo eo quod postea decerni habebat, non dicturos acidam uvam patres manducasse et filiorum dentes obstupuisse, id est non sumpturum patrem delictum filii, nec filium delictum patris, sed unumquemque delicti sui reum futurum, ut post duritiam populi duritia legis edomita, iustitia iam non genus sed personas iudicaret. [3] Quamquam si evangelium veritatis accipias, ad quos pertineat sententia reddentis in filios patrum delicta cognosces, ad illos scilicet qui hanc ultro sibi sententiam fuerant irrogaturi, Sanguis illius super capita nostra et filiorum nostrorum. Hoc itaque omnis providentia dei censuit quod iam audierat.

16. [1] Bona igitur et severitas quia iusta, si bonus iudex, id est iustus. Item cetera bona per quae opus bonum currit bonae severitatis, sive ira sive aemulatio sive saevitia. Debita enim omnia haec sunt severitati, sicut severitas debitum est iustitiae. Vindicanda erat procacitas aetatis verecundiam debentis. Atque ita non poterunt iudici exprobrari quae iudici accedunt, carentia et ipsa culpa, sicut et iudex. Quid enim, si medicum quidem dicas esse debere, ferramenta vero eius accuses quod secent et inurant et amputent et constrictent, quando sine instrumento artis medicus esse non possit? [2] Sed accusa male secantem, importune amputantem, temere inurentem, atque ita ferramenta quoque eius ut mala ministeria reprehende. Proinde est enim cum deum quidem iudicem admittis, eos vero motus et sensus per quos iudicat destruis. Deum nos a prophetis et a Christo, non a philosophis nec ab Epicuro

erudimur. [3] Qui credimus deum etiam in terris egisse et humani habitus humilitatem suscepisse ex causa humanae salutis, longe sumus a sententia eorum qui nolunt deum curare quicquam. Inde venit ad haereticos quoque definitio eiusmodi, si deus irascitur et aemulatur et extollitur et exacerbatur, ergo et corrumpetur, ergo et morietur. Bene autem quod Christianorum est etiam mortuum deum credere et tamen viventem in aevo aevorum. [4] Stultissimi, qui de humanis divina praeiudicant, ut quoniam in homine corruptoriae conditionis habentur huiusmodi passionες, idcirco et in deo eiusdem status existimentur. Discerne substantias, et suos eis distribue sensus tam diversos quam substantiae exigunt, licet vocabulis communicare videantur. Nam et dexteram et oculos et pedes dei legimus, nec ideo tamen humanis comparabuntur quia de appellatione sociantur. Quanta erit diversitas divini corporis et humani sub eisdem nominibus membrorum, tanta erit et animi divini et humani differentia sub eisdem licet vocabulis sensuum, quos tam corruptorios efficit in homine corruptibilitas substantiae humanae quam incorruptorios in deo efficit incorruptibilitas substantiae divinae. [5] Certe deum confiteris creatorem? Certe, inquis. Quomodo ergo in deo humanum aliquid existimas, et non divinum omne? Quem deum non negas, confiteris non humanum, siquidem deum confitendo praeiudicasti utique illum ab omni humanarum conditionum qualitate diversum. Porro cum pariter agnoscas hominem a deo inflatum in animam vivam, non deum ab homine, satis perversum est ut in deo potius humana constituas quam in homine divina, et hominis imagine deum induas potius quam dei hominem. [6] Et haec ergo imago censenda est dei in homine, quod eosdem motus et sensus habeat humanus animus quos et deus, licet non tales quales deus; pro substantia enim et status eorum et exitus distant. Denique contrarios eorum sensus, lenitatem dico, patientiam, misericordiam, ipsamque matricem earum, bonitatem, cur divina praesumitis? Nec tamen perfecte ea obtinemus, quia solus deus perfectus. Ita et illas species, irae dico et exasperationis, non tam feliciter patimur, quia solus deus de incorruptibilitatis proprietate felix. [7] Irascetur enim sed non <quatiētur>; exacerbabitur sed non periclitabitur; movebitur sed non evertetur. Omnia necesse est adhibeat propter omnia; tot sensus quot et causas; et iram propter scelestos, et bilem propter ingratos, et aemulationem propter superbos, et quicquid non expedit malis. Sic et misericordiam propter errantes, et patientiam propter non resipiscentes, et praestantiam propter

17. [1] Haec ita dispecta totum ordinem dei iudicis operarium et, ut dignius dixerim, protectorem catholicae et summae illius bonitatis ostendunt quam semotam a iudiciariis sensibus et in suo statu puram nolunt Marcionitae in eodem deo agnoscere, pluentem super bonos et malos et solem suum oriri facientem super iustos et iniustos, quod alius deus omnino non praestat. Nam etsi hoc quoque testimonium Christi in creatorem Marcion de evangelio eradere ausus est, sed ipse mundus inscriptus est et omni a conscientia legitur.

18. [1] Sed quae potius legis bona defendam quam quae haeresis concu<tere concu>piit ut talionis definitionem, oculum pro oculo, dentera pro dente, et livorem pro livore repetentis? Non enim iniuriae mutuo exercendae licentiam

sapit, sed in totum cohibendae violentiae prospicit, ut quia durissimo et infideli in deum populo longum vel etiam incredibile videretur a deo expectare defensam, edicendam postea per prophetam, Mihi defensam, et ego defendam, dicit dominus, interim commissio iniuriae metu vicis statim occurrurae repastinaretur, et licentia retributionis prohibitio esset provocationis, ut sic improbitas aestuata cessaret, dum secunda permissa prima terretur, et prima deterrita nec secunda committitur, qua et alias facilius timor talionis per eundem saporem passionis. Nihil amarius quam id ipsum pati quod feceris aliis. [2] Et si lex aliquid cibis detrahit et immunda pronuntiat animalia quae aliquando benedicta sunt, consilium exercendae continentiae intellege, et frenos impositos illi gulae agnosce quae cum panem ederet angelorum, cucumeres et pepones Aegyptiorum desiderabat. Agnosce simul et comitibus gulae, libidini scilicet atque luxuriae, prospectum, quae fere ventris castigatione frigescunt. Manducaverat enim populus et biberat et surrexerat ludere. Proinde ut et pecuniae ardor restringeretur ex parte qua de victus necessitate causatur, pretiosorum ciborum ambitio detracta est: postremo, ut facilius homo ad ieiunandum deo formaretur, paucis et non gloriosis escis assuefactus, et nihil de lautioribus esuriturus. [3] Reprehendendus sane creator quod cibos potius populo suo abstulit quam ingratoribus Marcionitis. Sacrificiorum quoque onera et operationum et oblationum negotiosas scrupulositates nemo reprehendat, quasi deus talia sibi proprie desideraverit, qui tam manifeste exclamat, Quo mihi multitudinem sacrificiorum vestrorum? et, Quis exquisivit ista de manibus vestris? sed illam dei industriam sentiat qua populum primum in idololatriam et transgressionem eiusmodi officii religioni suae voluit adstringere quibus superstitio saeculi agebatur, ut ab ea avocaret illos, sibi iubens fieri quasi desideranti, ne simulacris faciendis delinqueret.

19. [1] Sed et in ipsis commerciis vitae et conversationis humanae domi ac foris adusque curam vasculorum omnifariam distinxit, ut istis legalibus disciplinis occurrentibus ubique nec ullo momento vacarent a dei respectu. Quid enim faceret beatum hominem quam in lege domini voluntas eius, et in lege domini meditabitur die ac nocte? Quam legem non duritia promulgavit auctoris, sed ratio summae benignitatis, populi potius duritiam edomantis et rudem obsequio fidem operosis officiis dedolantis, ut nihil de arcanis attingam significantiis legis, spiritalis scilicet et propheticae, et in omnibus paene

argumentis figuratae. [2] Sufficit enim in praesenti si simpliciter hominem deo obligabat, ut nemo eam reprobare debeat, nisi cui non placet deo deservire. Ad hoc beneficium, non onus, legis adiuvandum etiam prophetas eadem bonitas dei ordinavit, docentes deo digna, auferre nequitias de anima, discere benefacere, exquirere iudicium, iudicare pupillo et iustificare viduam, diligere quaestiones, fugere improborum contactum, dimittere conflictam integram, dissipare scripturam inivistam, infringere panem esurienti et tectum non habentem inducere in domum tuam, nudum si videris, contegere, et domesticos seminis tui non despicere, compescere linguam a malo, et labia ne loquantur dolum, declinare a malo et facere bonum, quaerere pacem et sectari eam, irasci et non delinquere, id est in ira non perseverare sive saevire, non abire in concilium impiorum, nec stare in via peccatorum, nec in cathedra pestilentium sedere. Sed ubi? [3] Vide quam bonum et iocundum habitare fratres in unum, meditantes die ac nocte in lege domini, quia bonum scilicet fidere in dominum quam fidere in hominem, et sperare in dominum quam sperare in hominem. Qualis enim apud deum merces homini? Et erit tanquam lignum quod plantatum est iuxta exitus aquarum, quod fructum suum dabit in tempore suo, et folium eius non decidet, et omnia quaecunque faciet prosperabuntur illi. Innocens autem et purus corde, qui non accepit in vanum nomen dei et non iuravit ad proximum suum in dolo, iste accipiet benedictionem a domino, et misericordiam a deo salutificatore suo. [4] Oculi enim domini super timentes eum, sperantes in misericordiam ipsius, ad deliberandas animas eorum de morte, utique aeterna, et nutriendos eos in fame, utique vitae aeternae. Multae enim pressurae iustorum, et ex omnibus liberabit eos dominus. Honorabilis mors in conspectu domini sanctorum eius. Dominus custodit omnia ossa eorum unum ex ipsis non comminuetur. Redimet dominus animas servorum suorum. Pauca ista de tantis scripturis creatoris intulimus, et nihil puto iam ad testimonium dei optimi deesse, quod satis et praecepta bonitatis et praemissa consignant.

argenti, mandatam ab illo Hebraeis in Aegyptios. [2] Age, infelicissime haeretice, te ipsum expostulo arbitrum, cognosce in utramque gentem prius, et ita de auctore praecepti iudicabis. Reposcunt Aegyptii de Hebraeis vasa aurea et argentea. Contra Hebraei mutuas petitiones instituunt, allegantes sibi quoque eorundem patrum nomine, ex eodem scripturae instrumento, mercedes restitui oportere illius operariae servitutis pro laterinis deductis, pro civitatibus et villis aedificatis. [3] Quid iudicabis, optimi dei elector? Hebraeos fraudem agnoscere debere, an Aegyptios compensationem? Nam et aiunt ita actum per legatos utrinque, Aegyptiorum quidem repetentium vasa, Iudaeorum vero reposcentium operas suas. Et tamen vasis iustitia renuntiaverunt ibi Aegyptii. Hodie adversus Marcionitas amplius allegant Hebraei, negantes compensationi satis esse quantumvis illud auri et argenti, si sexcentorum milium operae per tot annos vel singulis nummis diurnis aestimentur. [4] Quae autem pars maior, repetentium vasa an incolentium villas et urbes? Querela ergo maior Aegyptiorum, an gratia Hebraeorum? Ut solo iniuriarum iudicio Hebraei Aegyptios reprecuterent, liberi homines in ergastulum subacti: ut solas scapulas suas scribae eorum apud subsellia sua ostenderent flagellorum contumeliosa atrocitate laceratas: non paucis lancibus et scyphis, pauciorum utique divitum ubique, sed totis et ipsorum facultatibus et popularium omnium collationibus satisfaciendum Hebraeis pronuntiasset. Igitur si bona Hebraeorum causa, bona iam et causa, id est mandatum, creatoris, qui et Aegyptios gratos fecit nescientes, et suum populum in tempore expeditionis angusto aliquo solatio tacitae compensationis expunxit. Plane minus exigi iussit. Hebraeis etiam filios Aegyptii restituere debuerant.

21. [1] Sic et in ceteris contrarietates praeceptorum ei exprobras ut mobili et instabili, prohibentis sabbatis operari et iubentis arcam circumferri per dies octo, id est etiam sabbato, in expugnatione civitatis Hiericho. Nec sabbati enim inspicias legem, opera humana, non divina, prohibentem. Siquidem, Sex, inquit, diebus operare, et facies omnia opera tua, septima autem die sabbata domino deo tuo; non facies in ea omne opus. Quod? utique tuum. Consequens enim est ut ea opera sabbato auferret quae sex diebus supra indixerat, tua scilicet, id est humana et cotidiana. [2] Arcam vero circumferre neque cotidianum opus videri potest neque humanum, sed et rarum et sacrosanctum et ex ipso tunc dei praecepto utique divinum. Quod et ipse quid significaret edissererem, nisi longum esset figuras argumentorum omnium creatoris

expandere, quas forsitan nec admittis. Sed plus est si de absolutis revincamini, simplicitate veritatis, non curiositate: sicut et nunc certa distinctio est sabbati humana, non divina, opera prohibentis. Ideoque qui sabbatis lignatum ierat, morti datus est: suum enim opus fecerat, lege interdictum. Qui vero arcam sabbatis circumtuleraunt, impune gesserunt: non suum enim opus sed dei, ex praecepto scilicet ipsius, administraverant.

22. [1] Proinde et similitudinem vetans fieri omnium quae in caelo et in terra et in aquis, ostendit et causas, idololatriae scilicet substantiam cohibentes. Subicit enim, Non adorabitis ea neque servietis illis. Serpentis autem aenei effigies postea praecepta Moysi a domino non ad idololatriae titulum pertinebat, sed ad remediandos eos qui a serpentibus infestabantur. Et taceo de figura remedii. [2] Sic et cherubim et seraphim aurea, in arcae figuratum exemplum certe simplex ornamentum, accommodata suggestui: longe diversas habendo causas ab idololatriae condicione, ob quam similitudo prohibetur, non videntur similitudinum prohibitarum legi refragari, non in eo similitudinis statu deprehensa ob quem similitudo prohibetur. Diximus de sacrificiorum rationali institutione, avocante scilicet ab idolis ad deum officia ea quae si rursus eiecerat dicens, Quo mihi multitudinem sacrificiorum vestrorum? hoc ipsum voluit intellegi quod non sibi ea proprie exegisset. Non enim bibam, inquit, sanguinem taurorum, quia et alibi ait, Deus aeternus non esuriet nec sitiet. [3] Nam etsi ad oblationes Abel advertit, et holocausta Noe odoratus est libenter, quae iocunditas sive viscerum vervecinorum sive nidoris ardentium victimarum? Sed animus simplex et deum metuens offerentium ea quae a deo habebant, et pabuli et suavis olentiae, gratiae apud deum deputabatur, non quae fiebant exigentis, sed illud propter quod fiebant, ob honorem scilicet dei. Si cliens diviti aut regi nihil desideranti tamen aliquid vilissimi munusculi obtulerit, quantitas et qualitas muneris infuscabit divitem et regem, an delectabit titulus officii? [4] At si cliens ei munera ultro, vel etiam indicta, ordine suo offerat, et sollemnia regis observet, non ex fide tamen, nec corde puro, nec pleno circa cetera quoque obsequia, nonne consequens ut rex ille vel dives exclamet, Quo mihi multitudinem munerum tuorum? plenus sum: et, Sollemnitates et dies festos et vestra sabbata? Vestra dicendo quae secundum libidinem suam non secundum religionem dei celebrando, sua iam non dei fecerant, condicionalem idcirco et rationalem demonstravit recusationem eorum quae administranda praescripserat.

23. [1] Si vero etiam circa personas levem vultis intellegi cum reprobatur aliquando probatos, aut improvidum cum probatur quandoque reprobandos, quasi iudicia sua aut damnet praeterita aut ignoret futura, atquin nihil tam bono et iudici convenit quam pro praesentibus meritis et reicere et adlegere. Adlegitur Saul, sed nondum despector prophetae Samuelis. Reicitur Salomon, sed iam a mulieribus alienis possessus et idolis Moabitarum et Sidoniorum mancipatus. [2] Quid faceret creator ne a Marcionitis reprehenderetur? Bene adhuc agentes praedamnaret iam propter futura delicta? Sed dei boni non erat nondum merentes praedamnare. Proinde peccantes nunc non recusaret propter pristina benefacta? Sed iusti iudicis non erat rescissis iam bonis pristinis scelera donare. Aut quis hominum sine delicto, ut eum deus semper adlegeret quem nunquam posset recusare? [3] Vel quis item sine aliquo bono opere, ut eum deus semper recusaret quem nunquam posset adlegere? Exhibe bonum semper, et non recusabitur; exhibe malum semper, et nunquam adlegetur. Ceterum si idem homo, ut in utroque pro temporibus, in utroque dispungetur a deo et bono et iudice, qui non levitate aut improvidentia sententias vertit, sed censura gravissima et providentissima merita temporis cuiusque dispensat.

24. [1] Sic et paenitentiam apud illum prave interpretaris, quasi proinde mobilitate vel improvidentia, immo iam ex delicti recordatione paeniteat, quoniam quidem dixerit, Paenituit quod regem fecerim Saul, praescribens scilicet paenitentiam confessionem sapere mali operis alicuius vel erroris. Porro non semper. Evenit enim in bonis factis paenitentiae confessio ad invidiam et exprobrationem eius qui beneficii ingratus extiterit, [2] sicut et tunc circa personam Saulis honorandam annuntiatur a creatore, qui non deliquerat cum Saulem assumit in regnum et sancto spiritu augeat; optimum enim adhuc, qualis, inquit, non erat in filiis Israelis, dignissime adlegerat. Sed nec ignoraverat ita eventurum. Nemo enim te sustinebit improvidentiam adscribentem deo ei quem deum non negans confiteris et providum. Haec enim illi propria divinitas constat. Sed malum factum Saulis, ut dixi, onerabat paenitentiae suae professione, quam vacante delicto circa Saulis adlectionem consequens est invidiosam potius intellegi, non criminosam. Ecce, inquis, criminosam eam animadverto circa Ninivitas, dicente scriptura Ionae, Et paenituit dominum de malitia quam dixerat facturum se illis, nec fecit. Sicut et ipse Ionas ad dominum, Propterea praeveni profugere in Tarsos, quia cognoveram te esse misericordem et miserescentem, patientem et plurimum misericordiae, paenitentem malitiarum. [3] Bene igitur quod praemisit optimi dei titulum, patientissimi scilicet super malos et abundantissimi misericordiae et miserationis super agnoscentes et deplangentes delicta sua, quales tunc Ninivitae. Si enim optimus qui talis, de isto prius cessisse debebis, non competere in talem, id est in optimum, etiam malitiae concursus. Et quia et Marcion defendit arborem bonam malos quoque fructus non licere producere, sed malitiam tamen nominavit, quod optimus non capit, numquid aliqua interpretatio subest earum malitiarum intellegendarum quae possint et in optimum decucurrere? Subest autem. [4] Dicimus denique malitiam nunc significari non quae ad naturam redigatur creatoris, quasi mali, sed quae ad potestatem, quasi iudicis; secundum quam enuntiarit, Ego sum qui condo mala, et, Ecce ego emitto in vos mala, non peccatoria sed ultoria, quorum satis diluimus infamiam ut congruentium iudici. Sicut autem, licet mala dicantur, non reprehenduntur in iudice, nec hoc nomine suo malum iudicem ostendunt, ita et malitia haec erit intellegenda nunc quae ex illis malis iudiciariis deputata cum ipsis competat iudici. [5] Nam et apud Graecos interdum malitiae pro vexationibus et laesuris, non pro malignitatibus ponuntur, sicut et in isto articulo. Atque adeo si eius malitiae paenituit creatorem, quasi creaturae reprobandae scilicet et deletui vindicandae, atqui nec hic ullum admissum criminosum reputabitur creatori, qui iniquissimam civitatem digne meritoque decreverat abolendam. [6] Ita quod iuste destinaverat non male destinans, ex iustitia non ex malitia destinavit; sed poenam ipsam malitiam nominavit ex malo et merito passionis ipsius. Ergo, dices, si malitiam iustitiae nomine excusas, quia iuste exitium destinavit in Ninivitas, sic quoque culpandus est, qui iustitiae utique non paenitendae paenitentiam gessit. Immo nec iustitiae, inquam, paenitebit deum, et superest iam agnoscere quid sit paenitentia dei. Non enim, si hominem ex recordatione plurimum delicti, interdum et ex alicuius boni operis ingratia paenitet, ideo et deum proinde. [7] In quantum enim deus nec malum admittit nec bonum damnat, in tantum nec paenitentiae boni aut mali apud eum locus est. Nam et hoc tibi eadem scriptura determinat, dicente Samuele Sauli, Discidit dominus regnum Israelis de manu tua hodie et dabit illud proximo tuo, optimo super te, et scindetur Israel in duas partes, et non convertetur neque paenitentiam aget, quia non sicut homo est ad paenitendum. [8] Haec itaque definitio in omnibus aliam formam divinac paenitentiae statuit, quae neque ex improvidentia neque ex levitate neque ex ulla boni aut mali operis damnatione reputetur, sicut humana. Quis ergo erit mos paenitentiae divinae? Iam relucet, si non ad humanas condiciones eam referas. Nihil enim aliud intellegetur quam simplex conversio sententiae prioris, quae etiam sine reprehensione eius possit admitti, etiam in homine, nedum in deo, cuius omnis sententia caret culpa. Nam et in Graeco sono paenitentiae nomen non ex delicti confessione, sed ex animi demutatione compositum est, quam apud deum pro rerum variantium sese occursu regi ostendimus.

25. [1] Iam nunc, ut omnia eiusmodi expediam, ad ceteras pusillitates et infirmitates et incongruentias, ut putatis, interpretandas purgandasque pertendam. Inclamat deus, Adam, ubi es? scilicet ignorans ubi esset, et causato nuditatis pudore an de arbore gustasset interrogat, scilicet incertus. Immo nec incertus admissi nec ignorans loci. Enimvero oportebat conscientia peccati delitescentem evocatum prodire in conspectum domini, non sola nominis inclamatione, sed cum aliqua iam tunc admissi suggillatione. [2] Nec enim simplici modo, id est interrogatorio sono legendum est, Ubi es, Adam? sed impresso et incusso et imputativo, Adam, ubi es! id est in perditione es, id est iam hic non es, ut et increpandi et dolendi exitus vox sit. Ceterum qui totum orbem comprehendit manu velut nidum, cuius caelum thronus et terra scabellum, nimirum huius oculos aliqua paradisi portio evaserat, quominus illi ubicunque Adam ante evocationem viseretur tam latens quam de interdicta fruge sumens? [3] Speculatorem vineae vel horti tui lupus aut furunculus non latet. Deum puto de sublimioribus oculatiorem aliquid subiecti praeterire non posse. Stulte, qui tantum argumentum divinae maiestatis et humanae instructionis naso agis. Interrogat deus quasi incertus, ut et hic liberi arbitrii probans hominem in causa aut negationis aut confessionis daret ei locum sponte confitendi delictum et hoc nomine relevandi. Sicut de Cain sciscitatur ubinam frater eius; quasi non iam vociferatum a terra sanguinem Abelis audisset: sed ut et ille haberet potestatem ex eadem arbitrii potestate sponte negandi delicti et hoc nomine gravandi, atque ita nobis conderentur exempla confitentorum potius delictorum quam negandorum; ut iam tunc initiaretur evangelica doctrina, Ex ore tuo iustificaberis et ex ore tuo damnaberis. [4] Nam etsi Adam propter statum legis deditus morti est, sed spes ei salva est, dicente domino, Ecce Adam factus est tanquam unus ex nobis, de futura scilicet adlectione hominis in divinitatem. Denique quid sequitur? Et nunc, ne quando extendat manum et sumat de ligno vitae et vivat in aevum. Interponens enim, Et nunc, praesentis temporis verbum, temporalem et ad praesens dilationem vitae fecisse se ostendit. [5] Ideoque nec maledixit ipsum Adam et Evam, ut restitutionis candidatos, ut confessione relevatos. Cain vero et maledixit et cupidum morte luere delictum mori interim vetuit, ut praeter admissum etiam negationis eius oneratum. Haec erit ignorantia dei nostri, quae ideo simulabatur ne delinquens homo quid sibi agendum sit ignoret. [6] Sed ad Sodomam et Gomorram descendens, Videbo, ait, si secundum clamorem pervenientem ad me consummantur, si vero non, ut agnoscam. Et hic videlicet ex ignorantia incertus et scire cupidus? An hic sonus pronuntiationis necessarius, non dubitativum, sed comminativum exprimens sensum, sub sciscitationis obtentu? Quodsi descensum quoque dei irrides, quasi aliter non potuerit perficere iudicium nisi descendisset, vide ne tuum aequum deum pulses. Nam et ille descendit ut quod vellet efficeret.

26. [1] Sed et iurat deus. Numquid forte per deum Marcionis? Immo, inquit, multo vanius, quod per semetipsum. Quid vellet facere, si alius deus non erat in conscientia eius, hoc cum maxime iurantem alium absque se omnino non esse? Igitur peierantem deprehendis, an vane deierantem? Sed non potest videri peierasse qui alium esse non scivit, ut dicitis. Quod enim scit hoc deierans, vere non peieravit. Sed nec vane deierat alium deum non esse. [2] Tunc enim vane deieraret, si non fuissent qui alios deos crederent, tunc quidem simulacrorum cultores, nunc vero et haeretici. Iurat igitur per semetipsum, ut vel iuranti deo credas alium deum omnino non esse. Hoc ut deus faceret tu quoque Marcion coegisti. Iam tunc enim providebaris. Proinde si et in promissionibus aut comminationibus iurat, fidem in primordiis arduam extorquens, nihil deo indignum est quod efficit deo credere. [3] Satis et tunc pusillus deus in ipsa etiam ferocia sua, cum ob vituli consecrationem efferatus in populum de famulo suo postulat Moyse, Sine me, et indignatus ira disperdam illos, et faciam te in nationem magnam. Unde meliorem soletis affirmare Moysen deo suo, deprecatorem, immo et prohibitorum irae. Non facies enim, inquit, istud, aut et me una cum eis impende. [4] Miserandi vos quoque cum populo, qui Christum non agnoscitis in persona Moysi figuratum, patris deprecatorem et oblatorem animae suae pro populi salute. Sed sufficit si et Moysi proprie donatus est populus ad praesens. Quod ut famulus postulare posset a domino, id dominus a se postulavit. Ad hoc enim famulo dixit, Sine me, et disperdam illos, ut ille postulando et semetipsum offerendo non sineret, atque ita disceres quantum liceat fideli et prophetae apud deum.

27. [1] Iam nunc, ut et cetera compendio absolvam, quaecunque adhuc ut pusilla et infirma et indigna colligitis ad destructionem creatoris, simplici et certa ratione proponam, deum non potuisse humanos congressus inire, nisi humanos et sensus et affectus suscepisset, per quos vim maiestatis suae, intolerabilem utique humanae mediocritati, humilitate temperaret, sibi quidem indigna, homini autem necessaria, et ita iam deo digna, quia nihil tam dignum deo quam salus hominis. [2] De isto pluribus retractarem, si cum ethnicis agerem; quamquam et cum haereticis non multo diversa stet congressio. Quatenus et ipsi deum in figura et in reliquo ordine humanae conditionis deversatum iam credidistis, non exigitis utique diutius persuaderi deum conformasse semetipsum humanitati, sed de vestra fide revincimini. Si enim deus, et quidem sublimior, tanta humilitate fastigium maiestatis suae stravit ut etiam morti subiceret, et morti crucis, cur non putetis nostro quoque deo aliquas pusillitates congruisse, tolerabiliores tamen Iudaicis contumeliis et patibulis et sepulcris? [3] An hae sunt pusillitates, quae iam hinc praeiudicare debebunt Christum humanis passionibus obiectum eius dei esse cui humanitates exprobrantur a vobis? Nam et profiteamur Christum semper egisse in dei patris nomine, ipsum ab initio conversatum, ipsum congressum cum patriarchis et prophetis, filium creatoris, sermonem eius, quena ex semetipso proferendo filium fecit, et exinde omni dispositioni suae voluntatique praefecit, diminuens illum modico citra angelos, sicut apud David scriptum est; [4] qua diminutione in haec quoque dispositus est a patre quae ut humana reprehenditis, ediscens iam inde a primordio, iam inde hominem <indutus, id esse> quod erat futurus in fine. Ille est qui descendit, ille qui interrogat, ille qui postulat, ille qui iurat. Ceterum patrem nemini visum etiam commune testabitur evangelium dicente Christo, Nemo cognovit patrem nisi filius. [5] Ipse enim et veteri testamento pronuntiarat, Deum nemo videbit et vivet, patrem invisibilem determinans, in cuius auctoritate et nomine ipse erat deus qui videbatur, dei filius. Sed et penes nos deus in persona Christi accipitur, quia et hoc modo noster est. [6] Igitur quaecunque exigitis deo digna, habebuntur in patre invisibili incongressibilique et placido et, ut ita dixerim, philosophorum deo. Quaecunque autem ut indigna reprehenditis, deputabuntur in filio et viso et audito et congresso, arbitro patris et ministro, miscente in semetipso hominem et deum, in virtutibus deum, in pusillitatibus hominem, ut tantum homini conferat quantum deo detrahit. [7] Totum denique dei mei penes vos dedecus sacramentum est humanae salutis. Conversabatur deus <humane>, ut homo divine agere doceretur. Ex aequo agebat deus cum homine, ut homo ex aequo agere cum deo posset. Deus pusillus inventus est, ut homo maximus fieret. Qui talem deum dedignaris, nescio an ex fide credas deum crucifixum. Quanta itaque perversitas vestra erga utrumque ordinem creatoris! [8] Iudicem eum designatis, et severitatem iudicis secundum merita causarum congruentem pro saevitia exprobratis. Deum optimum exigitis, et lenitatem eius benignitati congruentem pro captu mediocritatis humanae deiecius conversatam ut pusillitatem depretiatis. Nec magnus vobis placet nec modicus, nec iudex nec amicus. Quid si nunc eadem et in vestro deprehendantur? Iudicem quidem et illum esse iam ostendimus in libello suo, et de iudice necessarie severum, et de severo sic et saevum, si tamen saevum.

28. [1] Nunc et de pusillitatibus et malignitatibus ceterisque notis et ipse adversus Marcionem antitheses aemulas faciam. Si ignoravit deus meus esse alium super se, etiam tuus omnino non scivit esse alium infra se. Quod enim ait Heraclitus ille tenebrosus, eadem via sursum et deorsum. Denique si non ignorasset, et ab initio ei occurrisset. Delictum et mortem et ipsum auctorem delicti diabolum et omne malum quod deus meus passus est esse, hoc et tuus, qui illum pati passus est. Mutavit sententias suas deus noster, proinde qua et vester. Qui enim genus humanum tam sero respexit, eam sententiam mutavit qua tanto aevo non respexit. [2] Paenituit mali in aliquo deum nostrum, sed et vestrum. Eo enim, quod tandem animadvertit ad hominis salutem, paenitentiam dissimulationis pristinae fecit debitam malo facto. Porro malum factum deputabitur negligentia salutis humanae, non nisi per paenitentiam emendata apud deum vestrum. Mandavit fraudem deus noster, sed auri et argenti. Quanto autem homo pretiosior auro et argento, tanto fraudulentior deus vester, qui hominem domino et factori suo eripit. Oculum pro oculo reposcit deus noster, sed et vester vicem prohibens iterabilem magis iniuriam facit. Quis enim non rursus percutiet non percussus? Nescit deus noster quales adlegeret. Ergo nec vester. Iudam traditorem non adlegisset, si praescisset. Si et mentitum alicubi dicis creatorem, longe maius mendacium est in tuo Christo, cuius corpus non fuit verum. Multos saevitia dei mei absumpsit. [3] Tuus quoque deus quos salvos non facit utique in exitium disponit. Deus meus aliquem iussit occidi. Tuus semetipsum voluit interfici, non minus homicida in semetipsum quam in eum a quo vellet occidi. Multos autem occidisse deum eius probabo Marcioni. Nam fecit homicidam, utique peritum, nisi si populus nihil deliquit in Christum. Sed expedita virtus veritatis paucis amat. Multa mendacio erunt necessaria.

29. [1] Ceterum ipsas quoque Antitheses Marcionis cominus cecidissem, si operosiore destructione earum egeret defensio creatoris tam boni quam et iudicis, secundum utriusque partis exempla congruentia deo, ut ostendimus. Quodsi utraque pars bonitatis atque iustitiae dignam plenitudinem divinitatis efficiunt omnia potentis, compendio interim possum antitheses retudisse, gestientes ex qualitatibus ingeniorum sive legum sive virtutum discernere, atque ita alienare Christum a creatore, ut optimum a iudice, et mitem a fero, et salutarem ab exitioso. [2] Magis enim eos coniungunt quos in eis diversitatibus ponunt quae deo congruunt. Aufer titulum Marcionis et intentionem atque propositum operis ipsius, et nihil aliud praestaret quam demonstrationem eiusdem dei optimi et iudicis, quia haec duo in solum deum competunt. Nam et ipsum studium in eis exemplis opponendi Christum creatori ad unitatem magis spectat. [3] Adeo enim ipsa et una erat substantia divinitatis, bona et severa, et eisdem exemplis et in similibus argumentis, ut bonitatem suam voluerit ostendere in quibus praemiseraat severitatem; quia nec mirum erat diversitas temporalis, si postea dens mitior pro rebus edomitis, qui retro austerior pro indomitis. Ita per antitheses facilius ostendi potest ordo creatoris a Christo refonnatus quam repercussus, et redditus potius quam exclusus, praesertim <cum> deum tuum ab omni motu amariore secernas, utique et ab aemulatione creatoris scilicet. [4] Nam si ita est, quomodo eum antitheses singulas species creatoris aemulatum demonstrant? Agnoscam igitur et in hoc per illas deum meum zeloten, qui res suas arbustiores in primordiis bona, ut rationali, aemulatione maturitatis praecuraverit suo iure, cuius antitheses etiam ipse mundus eius agnoscet ex contrarietatibus elementorum, summa tamen ratione modulatus. Quam ob rem, inconsiderantissime Marcion, alium deum lucis ostendisse debueras, alium vero tenebram, quo facilius alium bonitatis, alium severitatis persuasisses. Ceterum eius erit antithesis cuius est et in mundo.

LIBER III.

1. [1] Secundum vestigia pristini operis, quod amissum reformare perseveramus, iam hinc ordo de Christo, licet ex abundanti post decursam defensionem unicae divinitatis. Satis etenim praeiudicatum est Christum non alterius dei intellegendum quam creatoris, cum determinatum est alium deum non credendum praeter creatorem, quem adeo Christus praedicaverit, et deinceps apostoli non alterius Christum adnuntiaverint quam eius dei quem Christus praedicavit, id est creatoris, ut nulla mentio alterius dei atque ita nec alterius Christi agitata sit ante scandalum Marcionis. [2] Facillime hoc probatur apostolicarum et haeticarum ecclesiarum recensu, illic scilicet pronuntiandam regulae interversionem ubi posteritas invenitur. Quod etiam primo libello intexui. Sed et nunc congressio ista seorsum in Christum examinatura eo utique proficiet, ut dum Christum probamus creatoris, sic quoque deus excludatur Marcionis. Decet veritatem totis viribus uti suis, non ut laborantem: ceterum in praescriptionum compendiis vincit: sed [decretum est] ut gestientem ubique adversario occurrere, in tantum furenti ut facilius praesumpserit eum venisse Christum qui nunquam sit adnuntiatus quam eum qui semper sit praedicatus.

2. [1] Hinc denique gradum consero, an debuerit tam subito venisse. Primo quia et ipse dei sui filius. Hoc enim ordinis fuerat, ut ante pater filium profiteretur quam patrem filius, et ante pater de filio testaretur quam filius de patre. Dehinc et quia missus, praeter filii nomen. Proinde enim praecessisse debuerat mittentis patrocinium in testimonium missi, quia nemo veniens ex alterius auctoritate ipse eam sibi ex sua affirmatione defendit, sed ab ipsa defensionem potius expectat, praeunte suggestu eius qui auctoritatem praestat. [2] Ceterum nec filius agnoscetur quem nunquam pater nuncupavit, nec missus credetur quem nunquam mandator designavit, nuncupaturus pater et designaturus mandator, si fuisset. Suspectum habebitur omne quod exorbitarit a regula, rerumque principalis gradus non sinit posterius agnosci patrem post filium et mandatorem post mandatum et deum post Christum. [3] Nihil origine sua prius est in agnitione, quia nec in dispositione. Subito filius et subito missus et subito Christus. Atquin nihil putem a deo subitum, quia nihil a deo non dispositum. Si autem dispositum, cur non et praedicatum, ut probari posset et dispositum ex praedicatione et divinum ex dispositione? [4] Et utique tantum opus, quod scilicet humanae saluti parabatur, vel eatenus subitum non fuisset qua per fidem profuturum. In quantum enim credi habebat ut prodesset, in tantum paraturam desiderabat ut credi posset, substructam fundamentis dispositionis et praedicationis, quo ordine fides informata merito et homini indiceretur a deo et deo exhiberetur ab homine, ex agnitione debens credere quia posset, quae scilicet credere didicisset ex praedicatione.

3. [1] Non fuit, inquis, ordo eiusmodi necessarius, quia statim se et filium et missum et dei Christum rebus ipsis esset probaturus per documenta virtutum. At ego negabo solam hanc illi speciem ad testimonium competisse, quam et ipse postmodum exauctoravit, siquidem edicens multos venturos et signa facturos et virtutes magnas edituros, aversionem etiam electorum, nec ideo tamen admittendos, temerariam signorum et virtutum fidem ostendit, ut etiam apud pseudochristos facillimarum. [2] Aut quale est si inde se voluit probari et intellegi et recipi, ex virtutibus dico, unde ceteros noluit aeque et ipsos tam subito venturos quam a nullo auctore praedicatos? Si quia prior eis venit et prior virtutum documenta signavit, idcirco, quasi locum in balneis, ita fidem occupavit, posteris quibusque praeripuit, vide ne et ipse in condicione posteriorum deprehendatur, posterior inventus creatore ante iam cognito, et proinde virtutes ante operato, et non aliter praefato non esse aliis credendum, post eum scilicet. [3] Igitur si priorem venisse et priorem de posteris pronuntiasse hoc fidem excludet, praedamnatus erit et ipse iam ab eo quo posterior est agnitus, et solius erit auctoritas creatoris hoc in posteros constituendi, qui nullo posterior esse potuit. Iam nunc, cum probaturus sim creatorem easdem virtutes, quas solas ad fidem Christo tuo vindicas, interdum per famulos suos retro edidisse, interdum per Christum suum edendas destinasse, possum et ex hoc merito praescribere tanto magis Christum non ex solis virtutibus credendum fuisse quanto illum non alterius quam creatoris interpretari potuissent, ut respondentes virtutibus creatoris et editis per famulos suos et in Christum suum repromissis. [4] Quamquam, et si alia documenta invenirentur in tuo Christo, nova scilicet, facilius crederemus etiam nova eiusdem esse cuius et vetera, quam cuius tantummodo nova, egentia experimentis fidei victricis vetustatis, ut sic quoque praedicatus venire debuerit tam praedicationibus propriis exstruentibus ei fidem quam et virtutibus, praesertim adversus Christum creatoris venturum et signis et prophetiis propriis munitum, ut aemulus Christi per omnes diversitatum species reluceret. Sed quomodo a deo nunquam praedicato Christus eius praedicaretur? Hoc est ergo quod exigit nec deum nec Christum tuum credi, quia et deus ignotus esse non debuit, et Christus agnosci per deum debuit.

4. [1] Dedignatus, opinor, est imitari ordinem dei nostri, ut displicentis, ut cum maxime revincendi. Novus nove venire voluit, filius ante patris professionem et missus ante mandatoris auctoritatem, ut et ipse fidem monstruosissimam induceret, qua ante crederetur Christum venisse quam sciretur fuisse. Competit mihi etiam illud retractare, cur non post Christum venerit. [2] Nam cum intueor deum eius tanto aevo patientissimum acerbissimi creatoris annuntiantis interea in homines Christum suum, quacunque id ratione fecit tam revelationem quam intercessionem suam differens, eadem ratione dico illum patientiam debuisse creatori in Christo quoque suo dispositiones suas executuro, ut perfecta et expleta omni operatione aemuli dei et aemuli Christi tunc et ipse proprias dispositiones superduceret. [3] Ceterum paenitentia tantae patientiae fecit quod non in finem rerum creatoris perseveraverit. Vane sustinuit praedicari Christum eius quem non sustinuit exhiberi. Aut sine causa intercidit temporis alieni decursum, aut sine causa tam diu non intercidit. Quid illum detinuit, quidve turbavit? Atquin in utrumque commisit, post creatorem quidem tam tarde revelatus, ante Christum vero eius tam propere. [4] Alterum vero iam dudum debuerat traduxisse, alterum nondum. Ne illum quidem tam diu saevientem sustinuisse, istum vero adhuc quiescentem inquietasse! circa ambos excidens ab optimi dei titulo, certe varius et ipse et incertus, tepidus scilicet in creatorem et calidus in Christum, et vanus utrobique. Non magis enim compescuit creatorem quam obstitit Christo. Manet et creator, qualis omnino est; veniet et Christus, qualis et scribitur. Quid venit post creatorem, quem emendare non valuit? Quid ante Christum eius revelatus est, quem revocare non potuerit? [5] Aut si emendavit creatorem, post illum revelatus est, ut emendanda praecederent: ergo et Christum eius aequae emendaturus expectasse debuerat, proinde et illius posterior emendator futurus, sicut creatoris. Aliud est si et ipse post illum rursus adveniet, ut primo quidem adventu processerit adversus creatorem, legem et prophetas destruens eius, secundo vero procedat adversus Christum, regnum redarguens eius. Tunc ergo conclusurus ordinem suum, tunc, si forte, credendus est: aut si iam hinc perfecta res est eius, vane ergo venturus est, nihil scilicet peracturus.

5. [1] His proluserim quasi de gradu primo adhuc et quasi de longinquo. Sed et hinc iam ad certum et cominus dimicaturus video aliquas etiam nunc lineas praeducendas, ad quas erit dimicandum, ad scripturas scilicet creatoris. Secundum eas enim probaturus Christum creatoris fuisse, ut postea Christo suo adimpletas, necesse habeo ipsarum quoque scripturarum formam et, ut ita dixerim, naturam demandare, ne tunc in controversiam deductae cum adhibentur ad causas, et sua et causarum defensione commixta obtundant lectoris intentionem. [2] Duas itaque causas prophetici eloquii adlego agnoscendas abhinc adversariis nostris. Unam, qua futura interdum pro iam transactis enuntiantur. Nam et divinitati competit quaecunque decreverit ut perfecta reputare, quia non sit apud illam differentia temporis apud quam uniformem statum temporum dirigit aeternitas ipsa. Et divinationi propheticae magis familiare est id quod prospiciat, dum prospicit, iam visum atque ita iam expunctum, id est omni modo futurum, demonstrare, sicut per Esaïam, Dorsum meum posui in flagella, maxillas autem meas in palmas, faciem meam vero non averti a sputaminibus. [3] Sive enim Christus iam tunc in semetipsum secundum nos, sive propheta de semetipso secundum Iudaeos pronuntiabat, nondum tamen factum pro iam transacto sonabat. Alia species erit qua pleraque figurate portenduntur per aenigmata et allegorias et parabolas, aliter intellegenda quam scripta sunt. Nam et montes legimus destillaturos dulcorem, non tamen ut sapam de petris aut defrutum de rupibus speres; et terram audimus lacte et melle manantem, non tamen ut de glebis credas te unquam placentas et Samias coacturum; quia nec statim aquilicem et agricolam se deus repromisit, dicens, Ponam flumina in regione sitiendi et in solitudine buxum et cedrum. Sicut et praedicans de nationum conversione, Benedicent me bestiae agri, sirenes et filiae passerum, non utique ab hirundinum pullis et vulpeculis et illis monstruosis fabulosisque cantricius fausta omina relaturus est. [4] Et quid ego de isto genere amplius? cum etiam haereticorum apostolus ipsam legem indulgentem bubus terentibus os liberum, non de bubus sed de nobis interpretetur, et petram potui subministrando comitem Christum adleget fuisse, docens proinde et Galatas duo argumenta filiorum Abrahae allegorice cucurrisse, et suggerens Ephesiis quod in primordio de homine praedicatum est relicturo patrem et matrem et futuris duobus in unam carnem, id se in Christum et ecclesiam agnoscere.

6. [1] Si satis constat de istis interim duabus proprietatibus Iudaicae

litteraturae, memento, lector, constitisse ut, cum tale quid adhibuerimus, non retractetur de forma scripturae sed de statu causae. Cum igitur haeretica dementia eum Christum venisse praesumeret qui nunquam fuerat annuntiatus, sequebatur ut eum Christum nondum venisse contenderet qui semper fuerat praedicatus; [2] atque ita coacta est cum Iudaico errore sociari et ab eo argumentationem sibi struere, quasi Iudaei certi et ipsi alium fuisse qui venit, non modo respuerint eum ut extraneum verum et interfecerint eum ut adversarium, agnitori sine dubio et omni officio religionis persecutori, si ipsorum fuisset. [3] Scilicet nauclero illi non quidem Rhodia lex, sed Pontica, caverat errare Iudaeos in Christum suum non licere, quando, et si nihil tale praedicatum in illos inveniretur, vel sola utique humana conditio deceptui obnoxia persuasisset Iudaeos errare potuisse, qua homines, nec statim praeiudicium sumendum de sententia eorum quos credibile fuerat errasse. [4] Porro cum et praedicatum sit non agnituros eos Christum ideoque etiam perempturos, iam ergo ipse erit et ignoratus et interemptus ab illis in quem ita admissuri praenotabantur. Hoc si probari exigis, non eas scripturas evolvam quae interemptibilem Christum edicentes utique et ignorabilem affinnant (nisi enim ignoratus nihil scilicet pati posset), sed reservatis eis ad causam passionum eas praedicationes in praesenti sufficiet adhibere quae interim ignorabilem probent Christum, et hoc breviter, dum ostendunt omnem vim intellectus ademptam populo a creatore. [5] Auferam, inquit, sapientiam sapientium illorum, et prudentiam prudentium eorum abscondam, et, Aure audietis et non audietis, et oculis videbitis et non videbitis: incrassatum est enim cor populi huius, et auribus graviter audierunt et oculos concluderunt, ne quando auribus audiant et oculis videant et corde coniciant et convertantur, et sanem illos. [6] Hanc enim obtusionem salutarium sensuum meruerant, labiis diligentes deum, corde autem longe absistentes ab eo. Igitur si Christus quidem annuntiabatur a creatore solidante tonitruum et concludente spiritum et annuntiante in homines Christum suum, secundum Ioelem prophetam, si omnis spes Iudaeorum, ne dicam etiam gentium, in Christi revelationem destinabatur, sine dubio id demonstrabantur non agnituri et non intellecturi, ablatis agnitionis et intellegentiae viribus, sapientia atque prudentia, quod annuntiabatur, id est Christus, erraturis in eum principalibus sapientibus eorum, id est scribis, et prudentibus eorum, id est pharisaeis, pariter et populo auribus audituro et non audituro, utique Christum docentem, et oculis visuro et non visuro, utique Christum signa facientem, secundum quod et alibi, Et quis caecus, nisi pueri mei? et quis surdus, nisi qui dominatur eorum? [7] Sed et cum exprobrat per eundem Esaiam, Filios generavi et exaltavi, at illi me reiecerunt: agnovit bos possessorem suum et asinus praesepe domini sui, Israel autem me non cognovit et populus me non intellexit; nos quidem certi Christum semper in prophetis locutum, spiritum scilicet creatoris, sicut propheta testatur, Persona spiritus nostri Christus dominus, qui ab initio vicarius patris in dei nomine et auditus sit et visus, scimus ipsius voces eiusmodi fuisse iam tunc Israeli exprobrantis quae in illum commissuri praedicabantur, Dereliquistis dominum et in iram provocastis sanctum Israel. [8] Si vero non in Christum, sed in ipsum potius deum volueris referre omnem Iudaicae ignorantiae de pristino reputationem, nolens etiam retro sermonem et spiritum, id est Christum creatoris, despectum ab eis et non agnitum, sic quoque revinceris. Non negans enim filium et spiritum et substantiam creatoris esse Christum eius, concedas necesse est eos qui patrem non agnoverint nec filium agnoscere potuisse, per eiusdem substantiae condicionem, cuius si plenitudo intellecta non est, multo magis portio, certe qua plenitudinis consors. [9] His ita dispectis iam apparet quomodo et respuerint Iudaei Christum et interemerint, non ut extraneum Christum intellegentes, sed ut suum non agnoscentes. Qui enim extraneum intellegere potuissent de quo nihil unquam fuerat annuntiatum, cum intellegere non potuissent de quo semper fuerat praedicatum? Id enim intellegi vel non intellegi capit quod habendo substantiam praedicationis habebit et materiam vel agnitionis vel erroris. Quod vero materia caret, non admittit sapientiae eventum. [10] Et adeo non qua alterius dei Christum aversati persecutique sunt, sed qua solummodo hominem, quem planum in signis et aemulum in doctrinis existimabant; ut et ipsum hominem qua suum, id est Iudaeum, sed Iudaismi exorbitatorem et destructorem, deduxerint in iudicium et suo iure punierint, alienum scilicet non iudicaturi. Tanto abest ut alienum Christum intellexisse videantur, qui nec hominem eius ut alienum iudicaverunt.

ante tondentem sine voce, ita non aperiens os suum, ne aspectu quidem honestus. [2] Annuntiavimus enim, inquit, de illo: sicut puerulus, sicut radix in terra sitienti, et non est species eius neque gloria, et vidimus eum, et non habebat speciem neque decorem, sed species eius inhonorata, deficiens citra filios hominum, homo in plaga, et sciens ferre infirmitatem, ut positus a patre in lapidem offensionis et petram scandali, minoratus ab eo modicum citra angelos, vermem se pronuntians et non hominem, ignominiam hominis et nullificamen populi. [3] Quae ignobilitatis argumenta primo adventui competunt, sicut sublimitatis secundo, cum fiet iam non lapis offensionis nec petra scandali, sed lapis summus angularis post reprobationem adsumptus et sublimatus in consummationem templi, ecclesiae scilicet, et petra sane illa apud Daniele de monte praecisa, quae imaginem saecularium regnorum comminuet et conteret. [4] De quo adventu idem propheta, Et ecce cum nubibus caeli tanquam filius hominis veniens, venit usque ad veterem dierum, aderat in conspectu eius, et qui adsistebant adduxerunt illum, et data est ei potestas regia, et omnes nationes terrae secundum genera, et omnis gloria famulabunda, et potestas eius usque in aevum, quae non auferetur, et regnum eius quod non vitiabitur, [5] tunc scilicet habiturus et speciem honorabilem et decorem indeficientem super filios hominum. Tempestivus enim, inquit, decore citra filios hominum, effusa est gratia in labiis tuis, propterea benedixit te deus in aevum. Accingere ensem super femur tuum, potens tempestivitate tua et pulchritudine tua; cum et pater, posteaquam diminuit eum modicum quid citra angelos, gloria et honore coronabit illum et subiciet omnia pedibus eius. [6] Tunc et cognoscent eum qui compugerunt, et caedent pectora sua tribus ad tribum, utique quod retro non agnoverunt eum in humilitate condicionis humanae: Et homo est, inquit Hieremias, et quis cognoscet illum? Quia et, Nativitatem eius Esaias, quis, inquit, enarrabit? Sic et apud Zachariam in persona Iesu, immo et in ipso nominis sacramento, verus summus sacerdos patris, Christus Iesus, duplici habitu in duos adventus delineatur, primo sordidis indutus, id est carnis passibilis et mortalis indignitate, cum et diabolus adversabatur ei, auctor scilicet Iudae traditoris, ne dicam etiam post baptismum temptator, dehinc despoliatus pristinas sordes, et exornatus podere et mitra et cidari munda, id est secundi adventus gloria et honore. [7] Si enim et duorum hircomm qui ieiunio offerebantur faciam interpretationem, nonne et illi utrumque ordinem Christi figurant? Pares quidem atque consimiles propter eundem dominum conspectum, quia non in alia venturus est fonna, ut qui agnosci habeat a quibus laesus est. Alter autem eorum circumdatus coccino, maledictus et consputus et convulsus et compunctus, a populo extra civitatem adiciebatur in perditionem, manifestis notatus insignibus dominicae passionis. Alter vero, pro delictis oblatus et sacerdotibus templi in pabulum datus, secundae repraesentationis argumenta signabat, qua delictis omnibus expiatis sacerdotes templi spiritalis, id est ecclesiae, dominicae gratiae quasi visceratione quadam fruerentur, ieiunantibus ceteris a salute. [8] Igitur quoniam primus adventus et plurimum figuris obscuratus et omni inhonestate prostratus canebar, secundus vero et manifestus et deo condignus, idcirco quem facile et intellegere et credere potuerunt, eum solum intuentes, id est secundum, non immerito decepti sunt circa obscuriorem, certe indigniorem, id est primum. Atque ita in hodiernum negant venisse Christum suum, quia non in sublimitate venerit, dum ignorant etiam in humilitate fuisse venturum.

8. [1] Desinat nunc haereticus a Iudaeo, aspis quod aiunt a vipera, mutuari venenum, evomat iam hinc proprii ingenii virus, phantasma vindicans Christum. Nisi quod et ista sententia alios habebit auctores, praecoquos et abortivos quodammodo Marcionitas, quos apostolus Ioannes antichristos pronuntiavit, negantes Christum in carne venisse, et tamen non ut alterius dei ius constituerent, quia et de isto notati fuissent, sed quoniam incredibile praesumpserant deum carnem. [2] Quo magis antichristus Marcion sibi eam rapuit praesumptionem, aptior scilicet ad renuendam corporalem substantiam Christi, qui ipsum deum eius nec auctorem carnis induxerat nec resuscitorem, optimum videlicet et in isto, et diversissimum a mendaciis et fallaciis creatoris. Et ideo Christus eius, ne mentiretur, ne falleret, et hoc modo creatoris forsitan deputeretur, non erat quod videbatur, et quod erat mentiebatur, caro nec caro, homo nec homo, proinde deus Christus nec deus.

quoque virtutes. Si enim tangendo aliquem liberavit a vitio vel tactus ab aliquo, quod corporaliter actum est non potest vere actum credi sine corporis ipsius veritate. Nihil solidum ab inani, nihil plenum a vacuo perfici licuit. Putativus habitus, putativus actus: imaginarius operator, imaginariae operae. [5] Sic nec passiones Christi eius fidem merebuntur. Nihil enim passus est qui non vere est passus; vere autem pati phantasma non potuit. Eversum est igitur totum dei opus. Totum Christiani nominis et pondus et fructus, mors Christi negatur, quam tam impresse apostolus demandat, utique veram, summum eam fundamentum evangelii constituens et salutis nostrae et praedicationis suae. Tradidi enim, inquit, vobis inprimis, quod Christus mortuus sit pro peccatis nostris, et quod sepultus sit, et quod resurrexerit tertia die. [6] Porro si caro eius negatur, quomodo mors eius asseveratur, quae propria carnis est passio, per mortem devertentis in terram de qua est sumpta, secundum legem sui auctoris? Negata vero morte, dum caro negatur, nec de resurrectione constabit. Eadem enim ratione non resurrexit qua mortuus non est, non habendo substantiam scilicet carnis, cuius sicut et mors, ita et resurrectio est. Proinde resurrectione Christi infirmata etiam nostra subversa est. Nec ea enim valebit, propter quam Christus venit, si Christi non valebit. [7] Nam sicut illi, qui dicebant resurrectionem mortuorum non esse, revincuntur ab apostolo ex resurrectione Christi, ita resurrectione Christi non consistente aufertur et mortuorum resurrectio. Atque ita inanis est et fides nostra, inanis est praedicatio apostolorum. Inveniuntur autem etiam falsi testes dei, quod testimonium dixerint quasi resuscitaverit Christum quem non resuscitavit. Et sumus adhuc in delictis. Et qui in Christo dormierunt, perierunt; sane resurrecturi, sed phantasmate forsitan, sicut et Christus.

9. [1] In ista quaestione qui putaveris opponendos esse nobis angelos creatoris, quasi et illi in phantasmate, putativae utique carnis, egerint apud Abraham et Loth, et tamen vere sint et congressi et pasti et operati quod mandatum eis fuerat, primo non admitteris ad eius dei exempla quem destruis. Nam et quanto meliorem et perfectiorem deum inducis, tanto non competunt illi eius exempla quo nisi diversus in totum non erit omnino melior atque perfectior. [2] Dehinc scito nec illud concedi tibi, ut putativa fuerit in angelis caro, sed verae et solidae substantiae humanae. Si enim difficile non fuit illi putativae carnis veros et sensus et actus exhibere, multo facilius habuit veris et sensibus et actibus veram dedisse substantiam carnis, vel qua proprius

auctor et artifex eius. [3] Tuus autem deus, eo quod carnem nullam omnino produxerit, merito fortasse phantasma eius intulerit cuius non valuerat veritatem. Meus autem deus, qui illam de limo sumptam in hac reformavit qualitate, nondum ex semine coniugali et tamen carnem, aequae potuit ex quacunque materia angelis quoque adstruxisse carnem, qui etiam mundum ex nihilo in tot ac talia corpora, et quidem verbo aedificavit. [4] Et utique, si deus tuus veram quandoque substantiam angelorum hominibus pollicetur, Erunt enim, inquit, sicut angeli, cur non et deus meus veram substantiam hominum angelis accommodarit undeunde sumptam? Quia nec tu mihi respondebis unde illa apud te angelica sumatur, sufficit mihi hoc definire quod deo congruit, veritatem scilicet eius rei quam tribus testibus sensibus obiecit, visui, tactui, auditui. [5] Difficilius deo mentiri quam carnis veritatem undeunde producere, licet non natae. Ceterum et aliis haereticis, definientibus carnem illam in angelis ex carne nasci debuisse si vere fuisset humana, certa ratione respondemus, qua et humana vere fuerit et innata: humana vere propter dei veritatem a mendacio et fallacia extranei, et quia non possent humanitus tractari ab hominibus nisi in substantia humana; innata autem, quia solus Christus in carnem ex carne nasci habebat, ut nativitatem nostram nativitate sua reformaret, atque ita etiam mortem nostram morte sua dissolveret resurgendo in carne in qua natus est ut et mori posset. [6] Ideoque et ipse cum angelis tunc apud Abraham in veritate quidem carnis apparuit, sed nondum natae quia nondum moriturae, sed et discentis iam inter homines conversari. Quo magis angeli, neque ad moriendum pro nobis dispositi, brevem carnis commeatum non debuerunt nascendo sumpsisse, quia nec moriendo deposituri eam fuerant; [7] sed undeunde sumptam et quoquo modo omnino dimissam, mentiti eam tamen non sunt. Si creator facit angelos spiritus et apparitores suos ignem flagrantem, tam vere spiritus quam et ignem, idem illos vere fecit et carnem, ut nunc recordemur et haereticis renuntiemus eius esse promissum homines in angelos reformandi quandoque qui angelos in homines formarit aliquando.

10. [1] Igitur non admissus ad consortium exemplorum creatoris, ut alienorum, et suas habentium causas, velim edas et ipse consilium dei tui, quo Christum suum non in veritate carnis exhibuit. Si aspernatus est illam ut terrenam et, ut dicitis, stercoribus infersam, cur non et simulacrum eius proinde despexit? Nullius enim dedignandae rei imago dignanda est. Sequitur

statum similitudo. [2] Sed quomodo inter homines conversaretur, nisi per imaginem substantiae humanae? Cur ergo non potius per veritatem, ut vere conversaretur, si necesse habebat conversari? Quanto dignius necessitas fidem quam stropham administrasset? [3] Satis miserum deum instituis, hoc ipso quod Christum suum non potuit exhibere nisi in indignae rei effigie, et quidem alienae. Aliquantis enim indignis conveniet uti, si nostris, sicut alienis non congruet uti, licet dignis. Cur enim non in aliqua alia digniore substantia venit, et inprimis sua, ne et indigna et aliena videretur eguisse? [4] Si creator meus per rubum quoque et ignem, idem postea per nubem et globum cum homine congressus est, et elementorum corporibus in repraesentationibus sui usus est, satis haec exempla divinae potestatis ostendunt deum non eguisse aut falsae aut etiam verae carnis paratura. Ceterum si ad certum spectamus, nulla substantia digna est quam deus induat. [5] Quodcunque induerit, ipse dignum facit, absque mendacio tamen. Et ideo quale est ut dedecus existimarit veritatem potius quam mendacium carnis? Atquin honoravit illam fingendo. Quanta iam caro est cuius phantasma necessarium fuit deo superiori?

11. [1] Totas istas praestigias putativae in Christo corpulentiae Marcion illa intentione suscepit, ne ex testimonio substantiae humanae nativitas quoque eius defenderetur, atque ita Christus creatoris vindicaretur, ut qui nascibilis ac per hoc carneus annuntiaretur. Stultissime et hic Ponticus; quasi non facilius crederetur caro in deo non nata quam falsa, praestruentibus vel maxime fidem istam angelis creatoris in carne vera conversatis, nec tamen nata. [2] Nam et Philumene illa magis persuasit Apelli ceterisque desertoribus Marcionis ex fide quidem Christum circumtulisse carnem, nullius tamen nativitatis, utpote de elementis eam mutuatum. Quodsi verebatur Marcion ne fides carnis nativitatis quoque fidem induceret, sine dubio qui homo videbatur, natus utique credebatur. [3] Nam et mulier quaedam exclamaverat, Beatus venter qui te portavit, et ubera quae hausisti. Et quomodo mater et fratres eius dicti sunt foris stare? [4] Et videbimus de his capitulis suo tempore. Certe cum et ipse se filium hominis praedicaret, natum scilicet profitebatur. Nunc ut haec omnia ad evangelii distulerim examinationem, tamen, quod supra statui, si omni modo natus credi habebat qui homo videbatur, vane nativitatis fidem consilio imaginariae carnis expungendam putavit. [5] Quid enim profuit non vere fuisse quod pro vero haberetur, tam carnem quam nativitatem? Aut si dixeris, viderit opinio humana: iam deum tuum honoras fallaciae titulo, si aliud se sciebat esse quam quod homines fecerat opinari. Iam tunc potuisti etiam nativitatem putativam illi accommodasse, ne in hanc quoque impegisses quaestionem. [6] Nam et mulierculae nonnunquam praegnantēs sibi videntur aut sanguinis tributo aut aliqua valetudine inflatae. Et utique debuerat phantasmatis scenam decucurrisse, ne originem carnis non desaltasset, qui personam substantiae ipsius egisset. Plane nativitatis mendacium recusasti: ipsam enim carnem veram edidisti. Turpissimum scilicet dei etiam vera nativitas. [7] Age iam, perora in illa sanctissima et reverenda opera naturae, invehere in totum quod es: carnis atque animae originem destrue; cloacam voca uterum tanti animalis, id est hominis, producendi officinam; persequere et partus immunda et pudenda tormenta, et ipsius exinde puerperii spurcos, anxios, ludicros exitus. Tamen cum omnia ista destruxeris, ut deo indigna confirmes, non erit indignior morte nativitas et cruce infantia et natura poena et caro damnatione. [8] Si vere ista passus est Christus, minus fuit nasci. Si mendacio passus est, ut phantasma, potuit et mendacio nasci. Summa ista Marcionis argumenta, per quae alium efficit Christum, satis opinor ostendimus non consistere omnino, dum docemus magis utique competere deo veritatem quam mendacium eius habitus in quo Christum suum exhibuit. [9] Si veritas fuit, caro fuit; si caro fuit, natus est. Ea enim quae expugnat haec haeresis confirmantur, cum ea per quae expugnat destruuntur. Itaque, si carneus habebitur quia natus, et natus quia carneus, quia phantasma non fuerit, ipse erit agnoscendus qui in carne et ex nativitate venturus annuntiabatur a creatoris prophetis, utpote Christus creatoris.

12. [1] Provoca nunc, ut soles, ad hanc Esaiæ comparisonem Christi, contendens illam in nullo convenire. Primo enim, inquis, Christus Esaiæ Emmanuel vocari habebit, debinc virtutem sumere Damasci et spolia Samariae adversus regem Assyriorum. Porro iste, qui venit, neque sub eiusmodi nomine est editus neque ulla re bellica functus est. [2] At ego te admonebo, uti cohaerentia quoque utriusque capituli recognoscas. Subiuncta est enim et interpretatio Emmanuelis, Nobiscum deus; uti non solum sonum nominis spectes, sed et sensum. Sonus enim Hebraicus, quod est Emmanuel, suae gentis est; sensus autem eius, quod est Deus nobiscum, ex interpretatione communis est. Quaere ergo an ista vox, Nobiscum deus, quod est Emmanuel, exinde quo Christus illuxit, agitetur in Christo. [3] Et puto, non negabis, utpote qui et ipse dicas, Deus nobiscum dicitur, id est Emmanuel. Aut si tam vanus es, ut quia penes te Nobiscum deus dicitur, non Emmanuel, idcirco nolis venisse illum cuius proprium sit vocari Emmanuel, quasi non hoc sit et Deus nobiscum, invenies apud Hebraeos Christianos, immo et Marcionitas, Emmanuelem nominare, cum volunt dicere Nobiscum deus; sicut et omnis gens, quoquo sono dixerit Nobiscum deus, Emmanuelem pronuntiavit in sensu sonum expungens. [4] Quodsi Emmanuel Nobiscum deus est, deus autem nobiscum Christus est, qui etiam in nobis est (quotquot enim in Christum tincti estis, Christum induistis), tam proprius est Christus in significatione nominis, quod est Nobiscum deus, quam in sono nominis, quod est Emmanuel. Atque ita constat venisse iam illum qui praedicabatur Emmanuel, quia quod significat Emmanuel venit, id est Nobiscum deus.

13. [1] Aeque et sono nominum duceris, cum virtutem Damasci et spolia Samariae et regem Assyriorum sic accipis quasi bellatorem portendant Christum creatoris, non animadvertens quid scriptura praemittat, quoniam priusquam cognoscat vocare patrem et matrem, accipiet virtutem Damasci et spolia Samariae adversus regem Assyriorum. [2] Ante est enim inspicias aetatis demonstrationem, an hominem iam Christum exhibere possit, nedum imperatorem. Scilicet vagitu ad arma esset convocaturus infans, et signa belli non tuba sed crepitacillo daturus, nec ex equo vel de curru vel de muro, sed de nutricis aut gerulae suae collo sive dorso hostem destinaturus, atque ita Damascum et Samariam pro mammillis subactus? [3] Aliud est si penes Ponticos barbariae gentis infantes in proelium erumpunt, credo ad solem uncti prius, dehinc pannis armati et butyro stipendiati, qui ante norint lanciare quam lancinare. Enimvero si nusquam hoc natura concedit, ante militare quam vivere, ante virtutem Damasci sumere quam patris et matris vocabulum nosse, sequitur ut figurata pronuntiatio videatur. Sed et virginem, inquit, parere natura non patitur, et tamen creditur prophetae. Et merito. [4] Praestruxit enim fidem incredibili rei, rationem edendo, quod in signo esset futura. Propterea, inquit, dabit vobis dominus signum: Ecce virgo concipiet in utero et pariet filium. Signum autem a deo, nisi novitas aliqua monstruosa, iam signum non fuisset. Denique et Iudaei, si quando ad nos dei ciendos mentiri audent, quasi non virginem [5] sed iuvenulam concepturam et parituram scriptura contineat, hinc revincuntur quod nihil signi videri possit res cotidiana, iuvenulae scilicet praegnatus et partus. In signum ergo disposita virgo et mater merito creditur, infans vero bellator non aeque. Non enim et hic signi ratio versatur.

Sed signo nativitatis novae adscripto exinde post signum alius ordo iam infantis edicitur, mel et butyrum manducaturi. [6] Nec hoc utique in signum est, malitiae non assentaturi, et hoc enim infantiae est, sed accepturi virtutem Damasci et spolia Samariae adversus regem Assyriorum. Serva modum aetatis et quaere sensum praedicationis, immo redde evangelio veritatis quae posterior detraxisti, et tam intellegitur prophetia quam renuntiatur expuncta. Maneant autem orientales illi Magi in infantia Christum recentem auro et ture munerantes, et acceperit infans virtutem Damasci sine proelio et armis. [7] Nam praeter quod omnibus notum est, orientis virtutem, id est vim et vires, auro et odoribus pollere solitam, certe est creatori virtutem ceterarum quoque gentium aurum constituere, sicut per Zachariam, Et Iudas praetendet apud Hierusalem et congregabit omnem valentiam populorum per circuitum, aurum et argentum. [8] De illo autem tunc auri munere etiam David, Et dabitur illi ex auro Arabiae; et rursus, Reges Arabum et Saba munera offerent illi. Nam et Magos reges habuit fere oriens, et Damascus Arabiae retro deputabatur, antequam transcripta esset in Syrophoenicen ex distinctione Syriarum, cuius tunc virtutem Christus accepit, accipiendo insignia eius, aurum scilicet et odores; spolia autem Samariae ipsos Magos, qui cum illum cognovissent et muneribus honorassent et genu posito adorassent quasi deum et regem sub testimonio indicis et ducis stellae, spolia sunt facti Samariae, id est idololatriae, credentes videlicet in Christum. [9] Idololatriam enim Samariae nomine notavit, ut ignominiosae ob idololatriam, qua desciverat tunc a deo sub rege Hieroboam. Nec hoc enim novum est creatori, figurate uti translatione nominum ex comparatione criminum. Nam et archontas Sodomorum appellat archontas Iudaeorum, et populum ipsum populum Gomorrae vocat. Et idem alibi, Pater inquit tuus Amorraeus et mater tua Cethea, ob consimilem impietatem; quos aliquando etiam suos filios dixerat, Filios generavi et exaltavi. [10] Sic et Aegyptus nonnunquam totus orbis intellegitur apud illum, superstitionis et maledictionis elogio. Sic et Babylon etiam apud Ioannem nostrum Romanae urbis figura est, proinde magnae et regno superbae et sanctorum dei debellatricis. Hoc itaque usu Magos quoque Samaritarum appellatione titulavit, despoliatos quod habuerant cum Samaritis, ut diximus, idololatriam. Adversus regem autem Assyriorum adversus Herodem intellege, cui utique adversati sunt Magi tunc non renuntiando de Christo, quem intercipere quaerebat.

14. [1] Aduvabitur haec nostra interpretatio, dum et alibi bellatorem existimans Christum ob armorum quorundam vocabula et eiusmodi verba, ex reliquorum quoque sensuum comparatione convinceris. Accingere, inquit David, ense super femur. Sed quid supra legis de Christo? Tempestivus decore praeter filios hominum, effusa est gratia in labiis tuis. [2] Rideo si, quem ad bellum ense cingebat, ei de tempestivitate decoris et labiorum gratia blandiebatur. Sic item subiungens, Et extende et prosperare et regna, adiecit propter veritatem et lenitatem et iustitiam. Quis enim <ea> ense operabitur, et non contraria potius, dolum et asperitatem et iniustitiam, propria scilicet negotia proeliorum? Videamus ergo an alius sit ensis ille, cuius alius est actus. [3] Nam et apostolus Ioannes in Apocalypsi ensem describit ex ore dei prodeuntem bis acutum, praeacutum, quem intellegi oportet sermonem divinum, bis acutum, duobus testamentis legis et evangelii, acutum sapientia, infestum diabolo, armantem nos adversus hostes spiritales nequitiae et concupiscentiae omnis, amputantem etiam a carissimis ob dei nomen. [4] Quodsi Ioannem agnitum non vis, habes communem magistrum Paulum, praecingentem lumbos nostros veritate et lorica iustitiae, et calciantem nos praeparationem evangelii pacis, non belli, adsumere iubentem scutum fidei, in quo possimus omnia diaboli ignita tela extinguere, et galeam salutaris, et gladium spiritus, quod est, inquit, dei sermo. [5] Hanc et dominus ipse machaeram venit mittere in terram, non pacem. Si tuus Christus est, ergo et ipse bellator est. Si bellator non est, machaeram intentans allegoricam, licuit ergo et Christo creatoris in psalmo sine bellicis rebus ense sermonis praecingi figurato, cui supradicta tempestivitas congruat et gratia labiorum, quem tunc iam cingebatur super femur apud David, quandoque missurus in terram. [6] Hoc est enim quod ait, Et extende et prosperare et regna. Extendens sermonem in omnem terram ad universam gentium vocationem, prosperaturus successu fidei, qua est receptus, et regnans exinde, qua mortem resurrectione devicit. Et deducet te, inquit, mirifice dextera tua, virtus scilicet gratiae spiritalis, qua Christi agnitio deducitur. [7] Sagittae tuae acutae, pervolantia ubique praecepta, et minae et traductiones cordis, compungentes et transfigentes conscientiam quamque. Populi sub te concident, utique adorantes. Sic bellipotens et armiger Christus creatoris, sic et nunc accipiens spolia, non solius Samariae, verum et omnium gentium. Agnosce et spolia figurata, cuius et arma allegorica didicisti. Figure itaque et domino eiusmodi loquente et apostolo scribente non temere interpretationibus eius utimur, quarum exempla etiam adversarii admittunt, atque ita in tantum Esaiæ erit Christus qui venit, in quantum non fuit bellator, quia non talis ab Esaia prædicatur.

15. [1] De quaestione carnis et per eam nativitatis et unius interim nominis Emmanuelis hucusque. De ceteris vero nominibus et imprimis Christi quid pars diversa respondebit? Si proinde commune est apud vos Christi nomen quemadmodum et dei, ut sicut utriusque dei filium Christum competat dici, sic utrumque patrem <et> dominum, certe ratio huic argumentationi refragabitur. [2] Dei enim nomen quasi naturale divinitatis potest in omnes communicari quibus divinitas vindicatur, sicut et idolis, dicente apostolo, Nam et sunt qui dicuntur dii sive in caelo sive in terris. Christi vero nomen non ex natura veniens, sed ex dispositione, proprium eius efficitur a quo dispositum invenitur. Nec in communicationem alii deo subiacet, maxime aemulo et habenti suam dispositionem, cui et nomina privata debebit. [3] Quale est enim quod diversas dispositiones duorum commentati deorum societatem nominum admittunt in discordiam dispositionum, quando nulla magis probatio assisteret duorum et aemulorum deorum quam si in dispositione eorum etiam diversitas nominum inveniretur? Nullus enim status differentiarum nonnisi proprietatibus appellationum consignatur. [4] Quibus deficientibus si quando, nunc Graeca catachresis de alieno abutendo succurrit. Apud deum autem deficere, puto, nihil debet, nec de alieno instrui dispositiones eius. Quis hic deus est, qui filio quoque suo nomina a creatore vindicat, non dico aliena, sed vetera et vulgata quae vel sic non competerent deo novo et incognito? [5] Quomodo denique docet novam plagulam non adsui veteri vestimento, nec vinum novum veteribus utribus credi, adsutus ipse et indutus nominum senio? Quomodo abscidit evangelium a lege, tota lege vestitus, in nomine scilicet Christi? Quis illum prohibuit aliud vocari, aliud prædicantem aliunde venientem, cum propterea nec corporis suscepit veritatem ne Christus creatoris crederetur? [6] Vane autem noluit eum se videri quem voluit vocari, quando et si vere corporeus fuisset, magis Christus creatoris non videretur, si non vocaretur. At nunc substantiam respuit, cuius nomen accepit, etiam substantiam probaturus ex nomine. Si enim Christus unctus est, ungui utique corporis passio est. Qui corpus non habuit, ungui omnino non potuit; qui ungui omnino non potuit, Christus vocari nullo modo potuit. Aliud est si et nominis phantasma affectavit. [7] Sed quomodo, inquit, irreperet in Iudaeorum fidem, nisi per sollemne apud eos et familiare nomen? Inconstantem aut subdolum deum narras; aut diffidentiae aut malitiositatis consilium est fallendo quid promovere. Multo liberius atque simplicius egerunt pseudoprophetae adversus creatorem in sui dei nomine venientes. Sed nec effectum consilii huius invenio, cum facilius aut suum crediderint Christum aut planum potius aliquem quam alterius dei Christum, sicut evangelium probabit.

16. [1] Nunc si nomen Christi, ut sportulam furunculus, captavit, cur etiam Iesus voluit appellari, non tam expectabili apud Iudaeos nomine? Nec enim, si nos per dei gratiam intellectum consecuti sacramentorum eius hoc quoque nomen agnoscimus Christo destinatum, ideo et Iudaeis, quibus adempta est sapientia, nota erit res. Denique ad hodiernum Christum sperant, non Iesum, et Heliam potius interpretantur Christum quam Iesum. [2] Qui ergo et in eo nomine venit in quo Christus non praesumebatur, potuit in eo solo nomine venisse quod solum praesumebatur. Ceterum cum duo miscuit, speratum et insperatum, expugnatur utrumque consilium eius. Sive enim ideo Christus, ut interim quasi creatoris irreperet, obstreperet Iesus, quia non sperabatur Iesus in Christo creatoris: sive <ideo Iesus> ut alterius haberetur, non sinit Christus quia non alterius sperabatur Christus quam creatoris. [3] Quid horum constare possit ignoro. Constabit autem utrumque in Christo creatoris, in quo invenitur etiam Iesus. Quomodo, inquis? Disce et hic cum partiariis erroris tui Iudaeis. Cum successor Moysi destinaretur Auses filius Nave, transfertur certe de pristino nomine et incipit vocari Iesus? [4] Certe, inquis. Hanc prius dicimus figuram futuri fuisse. Nam quia Iesus Christus secundum populum, quod sumus nos nati in saeculi desertis, introducturus erat in terram promissionis melle et lacte manantem, id est vitae aeternae possessionem, qua nihil dulcius, idque non per Moysen, id est non per legis disciplinam, sed per Iesum, per evangelii gratiam, provenire habebat, circumcisis nobis petrina acie, id est <praeceptis> Christi, [5] petra enim Christus, — ideo is vir, qui in huius sacramenti imagines parabatur, etiam nominis dominici inauguratus est figura, Iesus cognominatus. Hoc nomen ipse Christus suum iam tunc esse testatus est cum ad Moysen loquebatur. Quis enim loquebatur, nisi spiritus creatoris, qui est Christus? Cum ergo mandato diceret populo, Ecce ego mitto angelum meum ante faciem tuam, qui te custodiat in via et introducat in terram quam paravi tibi, intende illi et exaudi eum, ne inobaudieris eum; non enim celabit te, quoniam nomen meum super illum est: angelum quidem eum dixit ob magnitudinem virtutum quas erat editurus, et ob officium prophetae, nuntiantis scilicet divinam voluntatem; Iesum autem ob nominis sui futuri sacramentum. [6] Identidem nomen suum confirmavit quod ipse ei indiderat, quia non angelum nec Ausen, sed Iesum eum iusserat exinde vocitari. Ergo si utrumque nomen competit in Christum creatoris, tanto utrumque non competit in Christum non creatoris, sicut nec reliquus ordo. Facienda est denique iam hinc inter nos certa ista et iusta praescriptio et utrique parti necessaria, qua determinatum sit nihil omnino commune esse debere alterius dei Christo cum Christo creatoris. [7] Nam et a vobis proinde diversitas defendenda est, sicut a nobis repugnanda est, quia nec vos probare poteritis alterius dei venisse Christum, nisi eum longe alium demonstraveritis a Christo creatoris, nec nos eum creatoris vindicare, nisi talem eum ostenderimus qualis constituitur a creatore. De nominibus iam obduximus. Mihi vindico Christum, mihi defendo Iesum.

17. [1] Reliquum ordinem eius cum scripturis conferamus. Quodcunque illud corpusculum sit, quoniam habitum et quoniam conspectum fuit, si inglorius, si ignobilis, si inhonorabilis, meus erit Christus, talis enim habitu et aspectu annuntiabatur. Adest rursus Esaias: Annuntiavimus, inquit, coram ipso: velut puerulus, velut radix in terra sitiendi, et non est species eius neque gloria, et vidimus eum, et non habebat speciem neque decorem, sed species eius inhonorata, deficiens citra omnes homines. Sicut et supra patris ad filium vox, Quemadmodum expavescent multi super te, sic sine gloria erit ab hominibus forma tua. [2] Nam etsi tempestivus decore apud David supra filios hominum, sed in allegorico illo statu gratiae spiritalis, cum accingitur ense sermonis, qui vere species et decor et gloria ipsius est. [3] Ceterum habitu incorporabili apud eundem prophetam vermis etiam et non homo, ignominia hominis et nullificamen populi. Neque interiorum qualitatem eius eiusmodi annuntiat. Si enim plenitudo in illo spiritus constitit, agnosco virgam de radice Iesse. Flos eius meus erit Christus, in quo requievit secundum Esaiam spiritus sapientiae et intellectus, spiritus consilii et vigoris, spiritus agnitionis et pietatis, spiritus timoris dei. [4] Neque enim ulli hominum diversitas spiritalium documentorum competeat nisi in Christum, flori quidem ob gratiam spiritus adaequatum, ex stirpe autem Iesse deputatum, per Mariam inde censendum. Expostulo autem de proposito: si das ei omnis humilitatis et patientiae et tranquillitatis intentionem, et ex his Esaiae erit Christus — homo in plaga et sciens ferre imbecillitatem, qui tanquam ovis ad victimam adductus est, et tanquam agnus ante tondentem non aperuit os, qui neque contendit neque clamavit, nec audita est foris vox eius, qui arundinem contusam, id est quassam Iudaeorum fidem, non comminuit, qui linum ardens, id est momentaneum ardorem gentium, non extinxit — non potest alius esse quam qui praedicebatur. [5] Oportet actum eius ad scripturarum regulam recognosci, duplici, nisi fallor, operatione distinctum, praedicationis et virtutis. Sed de utroque titulo sic disponam, ut, quoniam ipsum quoque Marcionis evangelium discuti placuit, de speciebus doctrinarum et signorum illuc differamus, quasi in rem praesentem: hic autem generaliter expungamus ordinem coeptum, docentes praedicatorem interim annuntiari Christum per Esaiam: Quis enim, inquit, in vobis, qui deum metuit et exaudiet vocem filii eius? Item medicatorem: Ipse enim, inquit, imbecillitates nostras abstulit, et languores portavit.

18. [1] De exitu plane, puto, diversitatem temptatis inducere, negantes passionem crucis in Christum creatoris praedicatam, et argumentantes insuper non esse credendum ut in id genus mortis exposuerit creator filium suum quod ipse maledixerat. Maledictus, inquit, omnis qui pependerit in ligno. Sed huius maledictionis sensum differo, dignae sola praedicatione crucis, de qua nunc maxime quaeritur, quia et alias antecedit rerum probatio rationem. De figuris prius edocebo. [2] Et utique vel maxime sacramentum istud figurari in praedicatione oportebat, quanto incredibile, tanto magis scandalo futurum si nude praedicaretur, quantoque magnificum, tanto magis obumbrandum, ut difficultas intellectus gratiam dei quaereret. Itaque inprimis Isaac, cum a patre in hostiam deditus lignum sibi ipse portaret, Christi exitum iam tunc denotabat, in victimam concessi a patre et lignum passionis suae baiulantis. [3] Ioseph et ipse Christum figuraturus (nec hoc solo, ne demorer cursum, quod persecutionem a fratribus passus est ob dei gratiam, sicut et Christus a Iudaeis carnaliter fratribus) cum benedicitur a patre etiam in haec verba, Tauri decor eius, cornua unicornis cornua eius, in eis nationes ventilabit pariter ad summum usque terrae: non utique rhinoceros destinabatur unicornis nec minotaurus bicornis, sed Christus in illo significabatur, taurus ob utramque dispositionem, aliis ferus ut iudex, aliis mansuetus ut salvator, cuius cornua essent crucis extrema. [4] Nam et in antenna, quae crucis pars est, extremitates cornua vocantur; unicornis autem medius stipitis palus. Hac denique virtute crucis et hoc naore cornutus universas gentes et nunc ventilat per fidem, auferens a terra in caelum, et tunc per iudicium ventilabit, deiciens de caelo in terram. [5] Idem erit et alibi taurus apud eandem scripturam, cum Iacob in Simeonem et Levi, id est in scribas et pharisaeos (ex illis enim deducitur census istorum) spiritualiter interpretatur: Simeon et Levi perfecerunt iniquitatem ex sua haeresi, qua scilicet Christum sunt persecuti; in concilium eorum ne venerit anima mea, et in stationem eorum ne incubuerint iecora mea, quia in indignatione sua interfecerunt homines, id est prophetas, et in concupiscentia sua ceciderunt nervos tauro, id est Christo, quem post necem prophetarum suffigendo, <in> nervos utique eius clavis desaevierunt. Ceterum vanum, si post homicidia alicuius bovis illis exprobrat carnificinam. [6] Iam vero Moyses, quid utique tunc tantum, cum Iesus adversus Amalech proeliabatur, expansis manibus orabat residens, quando in rebus tam attonitis magis utique genibus depositis et manibus caedentibus pectus et facie humi volutante orationem commendare debuisset, nisi quia illic, ubi nomen domini dimicabat dimicaturi quandoque adversus diabolum, crucis quoque erat habitus necessarius, per quam Iesus victoriam esset relaturus? [7] Idem rursus Moyses, post interdictam omnis rei similitudinem, cur aereum serpentem ligno impositum pendentis habitu in spectaculum salutare proposuit? An et hic dominicae crucis vim intentabat, qua serpens diabolus publicabatur, et laeso cuique a spiritalibus colubris, intuenti tamen et credenti in eam, sanitas morsuum peccatorum et salus exinde praedicabatur?

prophetiam exinde dominus regnaret a ligno. Hoc lignum et Hieremias tibi insinuat, dicturis praedicans Iudaeis, Venite, iniciamus lignum in panem eius, utique in corpus. [4] Sic enim deus in evangelio quoque vestro revelavit, panem corpus suum appellans, ut et hinc iam eum intellegas corporis sui figuram pani dedisse, cuius retro corpus in panem propheta figuravit, ipso domino hoc sacramentum postea interpretaturo. [5] Si adhuc quaeris dominicae crucis praedicationem, satis iam tibi potest facere vigesimus primus psalmus, totam Christi continens passionem, canentis iam tunc gloriam suam: Foderunt, inquit, manus meas et pedes, quae propria atrocitas crucis. Et rursus, cum auxilium patris implorat, Salvum, inquit, fac me ex ore leonis, utique mortis, et de cornibus unicornis humilitatem, [6] de apicibus scilicet crucis, ut supra ostendimus. Quam crucem nec ipse David passus est, nec ullus rex Iudaeorum, ne putes alterius alicuius prophetari passionem quam eius qui solus a populo tam insigniter crucifixus est. Nunc et si omnes istas interpretationes respuerit et irriserit haeretica duritia, concedam illi nullam Christi crucem significatam a creatore, quia nec ex hoc probabit alium esse qui crucifixus est: [7] nisi forte ostenderit hunc exitum eius a suo deo praedicatum, ut diversitas passionum, ac per hoc etiam personarum, ex diversitate praedicationum vindicetur. Ceterum nec ipso Christo eius praedicato, nedum cruce ipsius, sufficit in meum Christum solius mortis prophetia. Ex hoc enim quod non est edita qualitas mortis, potuit et per crucem evenisse, tunc alii deputanda si in alium fuisset praedicatum. [8] Nisi si nec mortem volet Christi mei prophetatam, quo magis erubescat, si suum quidem Christum mortuum annuntiat, quem negat natum, meum vero mortalem negat, quem nascibilem confitetur. Et mortem autem et sepulturam et resurrectionem Christi mei una voce Esaiae volo ostendere dicentis, Sepultura eius sublata de medio est. [9] Nec sepultus enim esset nisi mortuus, nec sepultura eius sublata de medio nisi per resurrectionem. Denique subiecit, Propterea ipse multos haereditati habebit et multorum dividet spolia, pro eo quod tradita est anima eius in mortem. Ostensa est enim causa gratiae huius, pro iniuria scilicet mortis repensandae. Pariter ostensum est haec illum [propter mortem consecuturum,] post mortem utique per resurrectionem consecuturum.

annuntiabatur, ut iam ex ista consonantia rerum eius et scripturarum creatoris illis etiam restituenda sit fides ex praeiudicio maioris partis quae ad diversas sententias vel in dubium deducuntur vel negantur. Amplius nunc superstruimus ea quoque paria ex scripturis creatoris quaequae post Christum futura praecinebantur. [2] Nec enim dispositio expuncta inveniretur, si non ille venisset post quem habebat evenire. Aspice universas nationes de voragine erroris humani exinde emergentes ad deum creatorem, ad deum Christum, et, si audes, nega prophetatum. [3] Sed statim tibi in psalmis promissio patris occurret: Filius meus es tu, ego hodie generavi te: postula a me, et dabo tibi gentes haereditatem tuam et possessionem tuam terminos terrae. Nec poteris magis David filium eius vindicare quam Christum, aut terminos terrae David potius promissos qui intra unicam Iudaeorum gentem regnavit, quam Christo qui totum iam orbem evangelii sui fide cepit. [4] Sic et per Esaïam: Ecce dedi te in dispositionem generis, in lucem nationum, aperire oculos caecorum, utique errantium, exsolvere de vinculis vinctos, id est de delictis liberare, et de cella carceris, id est mortis, sedentes in tenebris, ignorantiae scilicet. [5] Quae si per Christum eveniunt, non in alium erunt prophetata quam per quem eveniunt. Item alibi: Ecce testimonium eum nationibus posui, principem et imperantem nationibus; nationes, quae te non sciunt, invocabunt te, et populi confugient ad te. Nec enim haec in David interpretaberis, quia praemisit, Et disponam vobis dispositionem aeternam, religiosa et fidelia David. [6] Atquin hinc magis Christum intellegere debebis ex David deputatum carnali genere ob Mariae virginis censem. De hoc enim promisso iuratur in psalmo ad David, Ex fructu ventris tui collocabo super thronum tuum. Quis iste venter est? Ipsius David? Utique non. Neque enim pariturus esset David. [7] Sed nec uxoris eius. Non enim dixisset, Ex fructu ventris tui, sed potius, Ex fructu ventris uxoris tuae. Ipsius autem dicendo ventrem superest ut aliquem de genere eius ostenderit cuius ventris futurus esset fructus caro Christi, quae ex utero Mariae floruit. Ideoque et fructum ventris tantum nominavit, ut proprie ventris, quasi solius ventris, non etiam viri, et ipsum ventrem ad David redegit, ad principem generis et familiae patrem. [8] Nam quia viro deputare non poterat virginis eum ventrem, patri deputavit. Ita quae in Christo nova dispositio invenitur hodie, haec erit quam tunc creator pollicebatur, religiosa et fidelia David appellans, quae erant Christi, quia Christus ex David: immo ipsa erit caro eius religiosa et fidelia David, iam sancta religione et fidelis ex resurrectione. Nam et Nathan propheta in prima Basilium professionem ad David facit semini eius, quod erit, inquit, ex ventre ipsius. Hoc si in Salomonem simpliciter edisseres, risum mihi incuties: videbitur enim David peperisse Salomonem. An et hic Christus significatur, ex eo ventre semen David qui esset ex David, id est Mariae? [9] Quia et aedem dei magis Christus aedificaturus esset, hominem scilicet sanctum, in quo potiore templo inhabitaret dei spiritus, et in dei filium magis Christus habendus esset quam Salomon filius David. Denique et thronus in aevum et regnum in aevum magis Christo competit quam Salomoni, temporali scilicet regi. Sed et a Christo misericordia dei non abscessit, Salomoni vero etiam ira dei accessit post luxuriam et idololatriam. [10] Suscitavit enim illi Satan hostem Idumaeum. Cum ergo nihil horum competat in Salomonem, sed in Christum, certa erit ratio interpretationum nostrarum, ipso etiam exitu rerum probante quas in Christum apparet praedicatas. Et ita in hoc erunt sancta et fidelia David. Hunc deus testimonium nationibus posuit, non David; principem et imperantem nationibus, non David, qui soli Israeli imperavit. Christum hodie invocant nationes quae eum non sciebant, et populi ad Christum hodie confugiunt, quem retro ignorabant. Non potest futurum dici quod vides fieri.

21. [1] Sic nec illam iniectionem tuam potes sistere ad differentiam duorum Christorum, quasi Iudaicus quidem Christus populo soli ex dispersione redigendo destinetur a creatore, vester vero omni humano generi liberando collatus sit a deo optimo, cum postremo priores inveniantur Christiani creatoris quam Marcionis, exinde vocatis omnibus populis in regno eius ex quo deus regnavit a ligno, nullo adhuc Cerdone, nedum Marcione. [2] Sed et revictus de nationum vocatione convertere iam in proselytos. Quaeris qui de nationibus transeant ad creatorem, quando et proselyti diversae et propriae condicionis seorsum a propheta nominentur: Ecce, inquit Esaias, proselyti per me accedent ad te, ostendens ipsos quoque proselytos per Christum accessuros ad deum. Et nationes, quod sumus nos, proinde suam habebant nominationem sperantes in Christum: Et in nomine, inquit, eius nationes sperabunt. [3] Proselyti autem, quos in nationum praedicatione substituis, non in Christi nomine sperare solent, sed in Moysi ordine, a quo institutio illorum est. Ceterum allectio nationum a novissimis diebus exorta est. Iisdem verbis Esaias, Et erit, inquit, in novissimis diebus manifestus mons domini, utique sublimitas dei, et aedes dei super summos montes, utique Christus, catholicum dei templum, in quo deus colitur, constitutum super omnes eminentias virtutum et potestatum: et venient ad eum universae nationes, et ibunt multi et dicent, Venite, ascendamus in montem domini et in aedem dei Iacob, et annuntiabit nobis viam suam, et incedemus in ea: ex Sion enim exibat lex, et sermo domini ex Hierusalem. Haec erit via novae legis evangelium, et novi sermonis in Christo, iam non in Moyse. Et iudicabit inter nationes, de errore scilicet earum: et revincet populum amplum, ipsorum inprimis Iudaeorum et proselytorum: et concident machaeras suas in aratra et sibynas in falces, id est animorum nocentium et linguarum infestarum et omnis malitiae atque blasphemiae ingenia convertent in studia modestiae et pacis: et non accipiet gens super gentem machaeram, utique discordiae: et non discent amplius bellare, id est inimicitias perficere, ut et hic discas Christum non bellipotentem, sed paciferum repromissum. [4] Haec aut prophetata nega, cum coram videntur, aut adimpleta, cum leguntur, aut si non negas utrumque, in eo erunt adimpleta in quem sunt prophetata. Inspice enim adhuc etiam ipsum introgressum atque decursum vocationis in nationes a novissimis diebus adeuntes ad deum creatorem, non in proselytos, quomm a primis magis diebus allectio est. Etenim fidem istam apostoli induxerunt.

22. [1] Habes et apostolorum opus praedicatum: Quam tempestivi pedes evangelizantium pacem, evangelizantium bona, non bellum nec mala. Respondit et psalmus, In omnem terram exivit sonus eorum et in terminos terrae voces eorum, circumferentium scilicet legem ex Sion profectam et sermonem domini ex Hierusalem, ut fieret quod scriptum est, Longe quique a iustitia mea appropinquaverunt iustitiae meae et veritati. [2] Cum huic negotio accingerentur apostoli, renuntiaverunt presbyteris et archontibus et sacerdotibus Iudaeorum. An non vel maxime, inquit, ut alterius dei praedicatores? Atquin ipsius eiusdem cuius scripturam cum maxime implebant. Divertite, divertite, inclamat Esaias, excedite illinc, et immundum ne attigeritis, blasphemiam scilicet in Christum: excedite de medio eius, utique synagogae; separamini, qui dominica vasa portatis. [3] Iam enim secundum supra scripta revelaverat dominus brachio suo sanctum, id est virtute sua Christum coram nationibus, ut viderint universae nationes et summa terrae salutem quae erat a deo. Sic et ab ipso Iudaismo divertentes, cum legis obligamenta et onera evangelica iam libertate mutarent, psalmum exsequebantur: Disrumpamus vincula eorum et abiciamus a nobis iugum

eorum; postea certe quam tumultuatae sunt gentes et populi meditati sunt inania; astiterunt reges terrae, et principes congregati sunt in unum adversus dominum et adversus Christum eius. [4] Quae dehinc passi sunt apostoli? Omnem, inquis, iniquitatem persecutionum, ab hominibus scilicet creatoris, ut adversarii eius quem praedicabant. Et quare creator, si adversarius erat Christi, non modo praedicat hoc passuros apostolos eius, verum et exprobrat? [5] Nam neque praedicaret alterius dei ordinem, quem ignorabat ut vultis, neque exprobrasset quod ipse curasset: Videte quomodo perit iustus, nec quisquam excipit corde, et viri iusti auferantur, nec quisquam animadvertit: a persona enim iniustitiae sublatus est iustus. Quis, nisi Christus? Venite, inquit, auferamus iustum, quia inutilis est nobis. Praemittens itaque, et subiungens proinde, passum etiam Christum, aequae iustos eius eadem passuros tam apostolos quam et deinceps omnes fideles prophetavit, signatos illa nota scilicet de qua Ezechiel: Dicit dominus ad me, Pertransi in medio portae in media Hierusalem, et da signum Tau in frontibus virorum. [6] Ipsa est enim littera Graecorum Tau, nostra autem T, species crucis, quam portendebat futuram in frontibus nostris apud veram et catholicam Hierusalem, in qua fratres Christi, filios scilicet dei, gloriam patri deo relaturos psalmus vigesimus primus canit ex persona ipsius Christi ad patrem: Enarrabo nomen tuum fratribus meis, in medio ecclesiae hymnum tibi dicam. Quod enim in nomine et spiritu ipsius hodie fieri habebat, merito a se futurum praedicabat. Et paulo infra: A te laus mihi in ecclesia magna. Et in sexagesimo septimo: In ecclesiis benedicite dominum deum; ut pariter concurreret et Malachiae prophetia: Non est voluntas mea, dicit dominus, et sacrificia vestra non accipiam; quoniam ab ortu solis usque in occasum nomen meum glorificatum est in nationibus, et in omni loco sacrificium nomini meo offertur, et sacrificium mundum, gloriae scilicet relatio et benedictio et laus et hymni. [7] Quae omnia cum in te quoque deprehendantur, et signaculum frontium et ecclesiarum sacramenta et munditiae sacrificiorum, debes iam erumpere uti dicas spiritum creatoris tuo Christo prophetasse.

Christum veritate idola proiecit, vide an quod sequitur expunctum sit: [2] Abstulit enim dominus sabaoth a Iudaea et ab Hierusalem inter cetera et prophetam et sapientem architectum, spiritum scilicet sanctum, qui aedificat ecclesiam, templum scilicet et domum et civitatem dei. Nam exinde apud illos destitit dei gratia, et mandatum est nubibus ne pluerent imbrem super vineam Sorech, id est caelestibus beneficiis ne provenirent domui Israelis. [3] Fecerat enim spinas, ex quibus dominum coronaverat, et non iustitiam, sed clamorem, quo in crucem eum extorserat. Et ita subtractis charismatum roribus lex et prophetae usque ad Ioannem. Dehinc cum ea perseverantia furoris et nomen domini per ipsos blasphemaretur, sicut scriptum est: Propter vos blasphematur nomen meum in nationibus (ab illis enim coepit infamia), et tempus medium a Tiberio usque ad Vespasianum non paenitentiam intellexissent, facta est terra eorum deserta, civitates eorum exustae, regionem eorum sub ipsorum conspectu extranei devorant, derelicta filia Sion, et tanquam specula in vinea vel in cucumerario casula, ex quo scilicet Israel dominum non cognovit, et populus eum non intellexit, sed dereliquit, et in indignationem provocavit sanctum Israelis. [4] Sic et machaerae condicionalis comminatio, Si nolueritis nec audieritis me, machaera vos comedet, probavit Christum fuisse quem non audiendo perierunt. Qui et in psalmo quinquagesimo octavo dispersionem eis postulat a patre: Disperge eos in virtute tua. Qui et rursus per Esaïam in exustionem eorum perorans, Propter me haec, inquit, facta sunt vobis, in anxietate dormietis. [5] Satis vane, si haec non propter eum passi sunt qui propter se passuros pronuntiarat, sed propter Christum dei alterius. Atquin Christum, inquam, alterius dei dicitis a creatoris virtutibus et potestatibus, ut ab aemulis, in crucem actum. Sed ecce defensio ostenditur a creatore, et dati sunt pessimi pro sepultura eius, qui scilicet subreptam eam asseveraverant, et locupletes pro morte eius, qui scilicet et a Iuda traditionem redemerant, et a militibus falsum testimonium cadaveris subrepti. [6] Igitur aut non propter illum acciderunt ista Iudaeis — sed revinceris conspirante et sensu scripturarum cum exitu rerum et ordine temporum — aut si propter illum acciderunt, non potuit creator ulcisci nisi suum Christum, remuneraturus potius Iudam si adversarium domini sui peremissent. Certe si nondum venit Christus creatoris, propter quem haec passuri praedicantur, cum venerit ergo, patientur. Et ubi tunc filia Sion derelinquenda, quae nulla hodie est? [7] Ubi civitates exurendae, quae iam in tumultis? Ubi dispersio gentis, quae iam

extorris? Redde statum Iudaeae, quem Christus creatoris inveniatur, et alium contende venisse. Iam vero quale est ut per caelum suum admiserit quem in terra sua esset interempturus, honestiore et gloriosiore regni sui regione violata, ipsa aula sua et arce calcata? An hoc magis affectavit? Plane deus zelotes, tamen vicit. Erubescere, qui victo deo credis. Quid sperabis ab eo qui se protegere non valuit? Aut enim per infirmitatem oppressus est a virtutibus et hominibus creatoris, aut per malitiositatem, ut tantum illis sceleris patientia infingeret.

24. [1] Immo, inquis, spero ab illo, quod et ipsum faciat ad testimonium diversitatis, regnum dei aeternae et caelestis possessionis. Ceterum vester Christus pristinum statum Iudaeis pollicetur ex restitutione terrae, et post decursum vitae apud inferos in sinu Abrahae refrigerium. Deum optimum, si reddit placatus quod et abstulerat iratus! O deum tuum, qui et caedit et sanat, condit mala et facit pacem! O deum etiam ad inferos usque misericordem! [2] Sed de sinu Abrahae suo tempore. De restitutione vero Iudaeae, quam et ipsi Iudaei ita ut describitur sperant locorum et regionum nominibus inducti, quomodo allegorica interpretatio in Christum et in ecclesiam et habitum et fructum eius spiritualiter competat et longum est persequi et in alio opere digestum, quod inscribimus DE SPE FEDELIIUM, et in praesenti vel eo otiosum quia non de terrena sed de caelesti promissione sit quaestio. [3] Nam et confitemur in terra nobis regnum repromissum, sed ante caelum, sed alio statu, utpote post resurrectionem, in mille annos in civitate divini operis Hierusalem caelo delata, quam et apostolus matrem nostram sursum designat: et politeuma nostrum, id est municipatum, in caelis esse pronuntians alicui utique caelesti civitati eum deputat. [4] Hanc et Ezechiel novit, et apostolus Ioannes vidit: et qui apud fidem nostram est novae prophetiae sermo testatur, ut etiam effigiem civitatis ante repraesentationem eius conspectui futuram in signum praedicarit. Denique proxime expunctum est orientali expeditione. Constat enim ethnicis quoque testibus in Iudaea per dies quadraginta matutinis momentis civitatem de caelo pependisse, omni moeniorum habitu evanescente de profectu diei, et alias de proximo nullam. [5] Hanc dicimus excipiendis resurrectione sanctis et refovendis omnium bonorum utique spiritualium copia in compensationem eorum quae in saeculo vel despeximus vel amisimus a deo prospectam. Siquidem et iustum et deo dignum illic quoque exultare famulos eius ubi sunt et afflicti in nomine ipsius. Haec ratio regni caelestis, [6] post cuius mille annos, intra quam aetatem concluditur sanctorum resurrectio pro meritis maturius vel tardius resurgentium, tunc et mundi destructione et iudicii conflagratione commissa demutati in atomo in angelicam substantiam, scilicet per illud incorruptelae superindumentum, transferemur in caeleste regnum, de quo nunc sic ideo retractatur, quasi non praedicato apud creatorem, ac per hoc alterius dei Christum probante, a quo primo et solo sit revelatum. [7] Disce iam hinc illud et praedicatum a creatore et sine praedicatione credendum apud creatorem. Quid tibi videtur? cum Abrahae semen, post primam promissionem qua in multitudinem arenae repromittitur, ad instar quoque stellarum destinatur, nonne et terrenae et caelestis dispositionis auspicia sunt? Cum Isaac benedicens Iacob filium suum, Det ait tibi deus de rore caeli et de opimitate terrae, nonne utriusque indulgentiae exempla sunt? [8] Denique animadvertenda est hic etiam structura benedictionis ipsius. Nam circa Iacob, qui quidem posterioris et praelatoris populi figura est, id est nostri, prima promissio caelestis est roris, secunda terrenae opimitatis. Nos enim primo ad caelestia invitamur, cum a saeculo avellimur, et ita postea invenimur etiam terrena consecuturi. Et evangelium vestrum quoque habet, Quaerite primum regnum dei, et haec adicientur vobis. [9] Ceterum ad Esau promittit benedictionem terrenam et subicit caelestem, De opimitate terrae, dicens, erit inhabitatio tua et a rore caeli. Iudaeorum enim dispositio in Esau, priorum natu et posteriorum affectu filiorum, a terrenis bonis imbuta per legem, postea ad caelestia per evangelium credendo deducitur. Cum vero Iacob somniat scalas obfirmatas in terra ad caelum et angelos alios ascendentes et alios descendentes, innixum desuper dominum, temere, si forte, interpretabimur scalis his iter ad caelum demonstrari, quo alii perveniant, unde alii decidant, domini constitutum esse iudicio. [10] Cur autem, ut evigilavit et primum loci horrore concussus est, convertitur ad interpretationem somnii? Cum enim dixisset, Quam terribilis est locus iste! Non est, inquit, aliud, sed aedes dei, et haec porta caeli. Christum dominum enim viderat, templum dei et portam eundem, per quem aditur caelum. Et utique portam caeli non nominasset, si caelum non aditur apud creatorem. Sed est et porta quae recipit, et <via> quae perducit, strata iam a Christo. De quo Amos: Qui aedificat in caelum ascensum suum, utique non sibi soli, sed et suis, qui cum illo erunt. [11] Et circumdabis enim illos tibi, inquit, tanquam ornamentum sponsae. Ita per illum ascensum ad caelestia regna tendentes miratur spiritus dicens, Volant velut qui sunt milvi, ut nubes volant, et velut pulli columbarum ad me, scilicet simpliciter ut columbae. Auferemur enim in nubes obviam domino, secundum apostolum (illo scilicet filio hominis veniente in nubibus, secundum Danielem), et ita semper cum domino erimus, eatenus dum et in terra et in caelo, qui ob utriusque promissionis ingratos ipsa etiam elementa testatur: Audi caelum et in aures percipe terra. [12] Et ego quidem, etiam si nullam spei caelestis manum mihi totiens scriptura porrigente satis haberem huius quoque promissionis praeiudicium, quod iam terrenam gratiam teneam expectarem aliquid et de caelo, a deo caeli sicut et terrae; ita crederem Christum sublimiora pollicentem eius esse qui et humiliora promiserat, qui et experimenta maiorum de parvulis fecerat, qui hoc inauditi, si forte, regni praeconium soli Christo reservaverat, ut per famulos quidem terrena gloria, caelestis vero per ipsum deum annuntiaretur. [13] At tu hinc quoque alium argumentaris Christum quod regnum novum annuntiet. Prius est aliquod exemplum indulgentiae proferas, ne merito dubitem de fide tantae promissionis quam sperandam dicis; immo ante omnia est ut, quem caelestia praedicas repromittere, aliquod caelum probes eius. At nunc vocas ad coenam, nec domum ostendis; allegas regnum, nec regiam monstras. An quia Christus tuus caeleste regnum repromittit non habens caelum, quomodo et hominem praestitit non habens carnem? O phantasma omne! O praestigia magnae etiam promissionis!

LIBER IV.

1. [1] Omnem sententiam et omnem paraturam impii atque sacrilegi Marcionis ad ipsum iam evangelium eius provocamus quod interpolando suum fecit. Et ut fidem instrueret, dotem quandam commentatus est illi, opus ex contrarietatum oppositionibus Antitheses cognominatum et ad separationem legis et evangelii coactum, qua duos deos dividens, proinde diversos, alterum alterius instrumenti, vel, quod magis usui est dicere, testamenti, ut exinde evangelio quoque secundum Antitheses credendo patrocinaretur. [2] Sed et istas proprio congressu cominus, id est per singulas iniectiones Pontici, cecidissem, si non multo opportunius in ipso et cum ipso evangelio cui procurant retunderentur; quamquam tam facile est praescriptive occurrere, et quidem ut accepto eas faciam, ut rato habeam, ut nobiscum facere dicam, quo magis de caecitate auctoris sui erubescant, nostrae iam antitheses adversus Marcionem. [3] Atque adeo confiteor alium ordinem decucurrisse in veteri dispositione apud creatorem, alium in nova apud Christum. Non nego distare documenta eloquii, praecepta virtutis, legis disciplinas, dum tamen tota diversitas in unum et eundem deum competat, illum scilicet a quo constat eam dispositam sicut et praedicatam. [4] Olim contionatur Esaias prodituram ex Sion legem et sermonem domini ex Hierusalem, aliam utique legem aliumque sermonem. Denique iudicabit, inquit, inter nationes, et traducet populum plurimum, scilicet non unius gentis Iudaeorum, sed nationum quae per novam legem evangelii et novum sermonem apostolorum iudicantur et traducuntur apud semetipsas de pristino errore, simul crediderunt, atque exinde concidunt machaeras suas in aratra, et sibynas, quod genus venabulorum est, in falces, id est feros et saevos quondam animos convertunt in sensus probos et bonae frugis operarios. [5] Et rursus: Audite me, audite me, et populus meus et reges, auribus intendite in me, quoniam lex prodibit a me et iudicium meum in lucem nationum, quo iudicaverat atque decreverat nationes quoque illuminandas per evangelii legem atque sermonem. Haec erit lex et apud David, invituperabilis, qua perfecta, convertens animam, utique ab idolis ad deum. Hic erit et sermo, de quo idem Esaias, Quoniam, inquit, decisum sermonem faciet dominus in terra. [6] Compendiatum est enim novum testamentum et a legis laciniosis oneribus expeditum. Sed quid pluribus, cum manifestius et luce ipsa clarius novatio praedicetur a creatore per eundem? Ne rememineritis priorum, et antiqua ne recogitaveritis: vetera transierunt, nova oriuntur: ecce facio nova, quae nunc orientur. Item per Hieremiam: Novate vobis novamen novum, et ne severitis in spinas, et circumcidimini praeputium cordis vestri. Et alibi: Ecce venient dies, dicit dominus, et perficiam domui Iacob et domui Iudae testamentum novum, non secundum testamentum quod disposui patribus eorum in die qua arripui dispositionem eorum ad educendos eos de terra Aegypti. [7] Adeo pristinum testamentum temporale significat, dum mutabile ostendit, etiam dum aeternum de postero pollicetur. Nam per Esaiam, Audite me et vivetis, et disponam vobis testamentum aeternum, adiciens sancta et fidelia David, ut id testamentum in Christo decursurum demonstraret. Eundem ex genere David, secundum Mariae censem, [8] etiam in virga ex radice Iesse processura figurate praedicabat. Igitur si alias leges aliosque sermones et novas testamentorum dispositiones a creatore dixit futuras, ut etiam ipsorum sacrificiorum alia officia potiora et quidem apud nationes destinarit, dicente Malachia, Non est voluntas mea in vobis, inquit dominus, et sacrificia vestra non excipiam de manibus vestris, quoniam a solis ortu usque ad occasum glorificatum est in nationibus nomen meum, et in omni loco sacrificium nomini meo offertur, et sacrificium mundum scilicet simplex oratio de conscientia pura, necesse est omnis demutatio veniens ex innovatione diversitatem ineat cum his quorum fit, et contrarietatem ex diversitate. [9] Sicut enim nihil demutatum quod non diversum, ita nihil diversum quod non contrarium. Eiusdem ergo deputabitur etiam contrarietas ex diversitate cuius fuerit demutatio ex innovatione. Qui disposuit demutationem, iste instituit et diversitatem; qui praedicavit innovationem, iste praenuntiavit et contrarietatem. [10] Quid differentiam rerum ad distantiam interpretaris potestatum? quid antitheses exemplorum distorques adversus creatorem, quas in ipsis quoque sensibus et affectionibus eius potes recognoscere? Ego, inquit, percutiam, et ego sanabo: Ego, inquit, occidam, et ego vivificabo, condens scilicet mala et faciens pacem; qua etiam soles illum mobilitatis quoque et inconstantiae nomine reprehendere, prohibentem quae iubet et iubentem quae prohibet. Cur ergo non et antitheses ad naturalia reputasti contrarii sibi semper creatoris? Nec mundum saltim recogitare potuisti, nisi fallor, etiam apud Ponticos ex diversitatibus structum aemularum invicem substantiarum. [11] Prius itaque debueras alium deum luminis, alium tenebrarum determinasse, ut ita posses alium legis, alium evangelii asseverasse. Ceterum praeiudicatum est ex manifestis, cuius opera et ingenia per antitheses constant, eadem forma constare etiam sacramenta.

2. [1] Habes nunc ad Antitheses expeditam a nobis responsionem. Transeo nunc ad evangelii, sane non Iudaici sed Pontici, interim adulterati demonstrationem, praestructuram ordinem quem aggredimur. Constituimus inprimis evangelicum instrumentum apostolos auctores habere, quibus hoc munus evangelii promulgandi ab ipso domino sit impositum. Si et apostolicos, non tamen solos, sed cum apostolis et post apostolos, quoniam praedicatio discipulorum suspecta fieri posset de gloriae studio, si non adsistat illi auctoritas magistrorum, immo Christi, quae magistros apostolos fecit. [2] Denique nobis fidem ex apostolis Ioannes et Matthaeus insinuant, ex apostolicis Lucas et Marcus instaurant, isdem regulis exorsi, quantum ad unicum deum attinet creatorem et Christum eius, natum ex virgine, supplementum legis et prophetarum. Viderit enim si narrationum dispositio variavit, dummodo de capite fidei conveniat, de quo cum Marcione non convenit. [3] Contra Marcion evangelio, scilicet suo, nullum adscribit auctorem, quasi non licuerit illi titulum quoque affingere, cui nefas non fuit ipsum corpus evertere. Et possem hic iam gradum figere, non agnoscendum contendens opus quod non erigat frontem, quod nullam constantiam praeferat, nullam fidem repromittat de plenitudine tituli et professione debita auctoris. [4] Sed per omnia congregi malumus, nec dissimulamus quod ex nostro intellegi potest. Nam ex iis commentatoribus quos habemus Lucam videtur Marcion elegerisse quem caederet. Porro Lucas non apostolus sed apostolicus, non magister sed discipulus, utique magistro minor, certe tanto posterior quanto posterioris apostoli sectator, Pauli sine dubio, ut et si sub ipsius Pauli nomine evangelium Marcion intulisset, non sufficeret ad fidem singularitas instrumenti destituta patrocinio antecessorum. [5] Exigeretur enim id quoque evangelium quod Paulus invenit, cui fidem dedit, cui mox suum congruere gestiit, siquidem propterea Hierosolymam ascendit ad cognoscendos apostolos et consultandos, ne forte in vacuura cucurrisset, id est ne non secundum illos credidisset et non secundum illos evangelizaret. Denique ut cum auctoribus contulit, et convenit de regula fidei, dextras miscuere, et exinde officia praedicandi distinxerunt, ut illi in Iudaeos, Paulus in Iudaeos et in nationes. Igitur si ipse illuminator Lucae auctoritatem antecessorum et fidei et praedicationi suae optavit, quanto magis eam evangelio Lucae expostulem, quae evangelio magistri eius fuit necessaria?

3. [1] Aliud est si penes Marcionem a discipulatu Lucae coepit religionis Christianae sacramentum. Ceterum si et retro decucurrit, habuit utique authenticam paraturam, per quam ad Lucam usque pervenit, cuius testimonio adsistente Lucas quoque possit admitti. [2] Sed enim Marcion nactus epistolam Pauli ad Galatas, etiam ipsos apostolos suggillantibus ut non recto pede incedentes ad veritatem evangelii, simul et accusantis pseudapostolos quosdam pervertentes evangelium Christi, connititur ad destruendum statum eorum evangeliorum quae propria et sub apostolorum nomine eduntur, vel etiam apostolicorum, ut scilicet fidem quam illis adimit suo conferat. [3] Porro etsi reprehensus est Petras et Ioannes et Iacobus, qui existimabantur columnae, manifesta causa est. Personarum enim respectu videbantur variare convictum. Et tamen cum ipse Paulus omnibus omnia fieret, ut omnes lucraretur, potuit et Petro hoc in consilio fuisse aliquid aliter agendi quam docebat. [4] Proinde si et pseudapostoli irrepserant, horum quoque qualitas edita est, circumcisionem vindicantium et Iudaicos fastos. Adeo non de praedicatione sed de conversatione a Paulo denotabantur, aequae denotaturo si quid de deo creatore aut Christo eius errassent. Igitur distinguenda erunt singula. Si apostolos praevaricationis et simulationis suspectos Marcion haberi queritur usque ad evangelii depravationem, Christum iam accusat, accusando quos Christus elegit. Si vero apostoli quidem integrum evangelium contulerunt, de sola convictus inaequalitate reprehensi, pseudapostoli autem veritatem eorum interpolaverunt, et inde sunt nostra digesta, quod erit germanum illud apostolorum instrumentum quod adulteros passum est, quod Paulum illuminavit et ab eo Lucam? Aut si tam funditus deletum est, ut cataclysmo quodam, ita inundatione falsariorum oblitteratum, iam ergo nec Marcion habet verum. [5] Aut si ipsum erit verum, id est apostolorum, quod Marcion habet solus (et quomodo nostro consonat quod non apostolorum, sed Lucae refertur?) aut si non statim Lucae deputandum est quo Marcion utitur, quia nostro consonat, scilicet adulterato etiam circa titulum, ceterum apostolorum est. Iam ergo et nostrum, quod illi consonat, aequae apostolorum est, sed adulteratum de titulo quoque.

praescribens auctoritatem quod antiquius reperietur, et ei praeiudicans vitiationem quod posterius revincetur? In quantum enim falsum corruptio est veri, in tantum praecedat necesse est veritas falsum. [2] Prior erit res passione, et materia aemulatione. Alioquin quam absurdum, ut, si nostrum antiquius probaverimus, Marcionis vero posterius, et nostrum ante videatur falsum quam habuerit de veritate materiam, et Marcionis ante credatur aemulationem a nostro expertum quam et editum, et postremo id verius existimetur quod est serius, post tot ac tanta iam opera atque documenta Christianae religionis saeculo edita, quae edi utique non potuissent sine evangelii veritate, id est ante evangelii veritatem. [3] Quod ergo pertinet ad evangelium interim Lucae, quatenus communio eius inter nos et Marcionem de veritate disceptat, adeo antiquius Marcione est quod est secundum nos, ut et ipse illi Marcion aliquando crediderit, cum et pecuniam in primo calore fidei catholicae ecclesiae contulit, proiectam mox cum ipso, posteaquam in haeresim suam a nostra veritate descivit. Quid nunc, si negaverint Marcionitae primam apud nos fidem eius, adversus epistolam quoque ipsius? Quid si nec epistolam agnoverint? [4] Certe Antitheses non modo fatentur Marcionis, sed et praeferunt. Ex his mihi probatio sufficit. Si enim id evangelium quod Lucae refertur penes nos (viderimus an et penes Marcionem) ipsum est quod Marcion per Antitheses suas arguit ut interpolatum a protectoribus Iudaismi ad concorporationem legis et prophetarum, qua etiam Christum inde confingerent, utique non potuisset arguere nisi quod invenerat. [5] Nemo post futura reprehendit quae ignorat futura. Emendatio culpam non antecedit. Emendator sane evangelii a Tiberianis usque ad Antoniniana tempora eversi Marcion solus et primus obvenit, expectatus tamdiu a Christo, paenitente iam quod apostolos praemisisse properasset sine praesidio Marcionis. Nisi quod humanae temeritatis, non divinae auctoritatis, negotium est haeresis, quae sic semper emendat evangelia dum vitiat; cum et si discipulus Marcion, non tamen super magistrum; et si apostolus Marcion, Sive ego, inquit Paulus, sive illi, sic praedicamus; et si prophetae Marcion, et spiritus prophetarum prophetis erunt subditi, non enim eversionis sunt, sed pacis; etiam si angelus Marcion, citius anathema dicendus quam evangelizator, quia aliter evangelizavit. Itaque dum emendat, utrumque confirmat, et nostrum antierius, id emendans quod invenit, et id posterius quod de nostri emendatione constituens suum et novum fecit.

5. [1] In summa, si constat id verius quod prius, id prius quod et ab initio, id ab initio quod ab apostolis, pariter utique constabit id esse ab apostolis traditum quod apud ecclesias apostolorum fuerit sacrosanctum. Videamus quod lac a Paulo Corinthii hauserint, ad quam regulam Galatae sint recorrecti, quid legant Philippenses, Thessalonicenses, Ephesii, quid etiam. Romani de proximo sonent, quibus evangelium et Petrus et Paulus sanguine quoque suo signatum reliquerunt. [2] Habemus et Ioannis alumnas ecclesias. Nam etsi Apocalypsin eius Marcion respuit, ordo tamen episcoporum ad originem recensensus in Ioannem stabit auctorem. Sic et ceterarum generositas recognoscitur. Dico itaque apud illas, nec solas iam apostolicas, sed apud universas quae illis de societate sacramenti confoederantur, id evangelium Lucae ab initio editionis suae stare quod cum maxime tuemur, Marcionis vero plerisque nec notum, nullis autem notum ut non eadem damnatum. [3] Habet plane et illud ecclesias, sed suas, tam posteras quam adulteras, quarum si censum requiras, facilius apostaticum invenias quam apostolicum, Marcione scilicet conditore, vel aliquo de Marcionis examine. Faciunt favos et vespae, faciunt ecclesias et Marcionitae. Eadem auctoritas ecclesiarum apostolicarum ceteris quoque patrocinabitur evangeliis, quae proinde per illas et secundum illas habemus, Ioannis dico et Matthaei, licet et Marcus quod edidit Petri affirmetur, cuius interpretes Marcus. Nam et Lucae digestum Paulo adscribere solent. [4] Capit magistrorum videri quae discipuli promulgarint. Itaque et de his Marcion flagitandus, quod omissis eis Lucae potius institerit, quasi non et haec apud ecclesias a primordio fuerint, quemadmodum et Lucae. Atquin haec magis a primordio fuisse credibile est, ut priora, qua apostolica, ut cum ipsis ecclesiis dedicata. Ceterum quale est, si nihil apostoli ediderunt, ut discipuli potius ediderint, qui nec discipuli existere potuissent sine ulla doctrina magistrorum? [5] Igitur dum constet haec quoque apud ecclesias fuisse, cur non haec quoque Marcion attigit, aut emendanda si adulterata, aut agnoscenda si integra? Nam et competit ut si qui evangelium pervertebant, eorum magis curarent perversionem quorum sciebant auctoritatem receptiorem. Ideo et pseudapostoli, quod per falsum apostolos imitarentur. In quantum ergo emendasset quae fuissent emendanda, si fuissent corrupta, in tantum confirmavit non fuisse corrupta quae non putavit emendanda. [6] Denique emendavit quod corruptum existimavit. Sed nec hoc merito, quia non fuit corruptum. Si enim apostolica integre decucurrerunt, Lucae autem, quod est secundum nos, adeo congruit regulae eorum ut cum illis apud ecclesias maneat, iam et Lucae constat integrum decucurrisse usque ad sacrilegium Marcionis. Denique ubi manus illi Marcion intulit, tunc diversum et aemulum factum est apostolicis. [7] Igitur dabo consilium discipulis eius, ut aut et illa convertant, licet sero, ad formam sui, quo cum apostolicis convenire videantur (nam et cotidie reformant illud, prout a nobis cotidie revincuntur), aut erubescant de magistro utrobique traducto, cum evangelii veritatem nunc ex conscientia tramittit, nunc ex impudentia evertit. His fere compendiis utimur, cum de evangelii fide adversus haereticos expedimur, defendentibus et temporum ordinem posteritati falsariorum praescribentem, et auctoritatem ecclesiarum traditioni apostolorum patrocinantem, quia veritas falsum praecedat necesse est, et ab eis procedat a quibus tradita est.

6. [1] Sed alium iam hinc inimus gradum, ipsum, ut professi sumus, evangelium Marcionis provocantes, sic quoque probaturi adulteratum. Certe enim totum quod elaboravit etiam Antitheses praestruendo in hoc cogit, ut veteris et novi testamenti diversitatem constituat, proinde Christum suum a creatore separatum, ut dei alterius, ut alienum legis et prophetarum. [2] Certe propterea contraria quaeque sententiae suae erasit, conspirantia cum creatore, quasi ab assertoribus eius intexta: competentia autem sententiae suae reservavit. Haec conveniemus, haec amplectemur, si nobiscum magis fuerint, si Marcionis praesumptionem percusserint. Tunc et illa constabit eodem vitio haereticae caecitatis erasa quo et haec reservata. [3] Sic habebit intentio et forma opusculi nostri, sub illa utique condicione quae ex utraque parte conducta sit. Constituit Marcion alium esse Christum qui Tiberianis temporibus a deo quondam ignoto revelatus sit in salutem omnium gentium, alium qui a deo creatore in restitutionem Iudaici status sit destinatus quandoque venturus. Inter hos magnam et omnem differentiam scindit, quantam inter iustum et bonum, quantam inter legem et evangelium, quantam inter Iudaismum et Christianismum. [4] Hinc erit et nostra praescriptio, qua defigimus nihil Christo dei alterius commune esse debere cum creatore, ceterum creatoris pronuntiandum si administraverit dispositiones eius, si impleverit prophetias eius, si adjuverit leges eius, si repraesentaverit promissiones eius, si restauraverit virtutes eius, si sententias reformaverit, si mores, si proprietates expresserit. Huius pacti et huius praescripti, quaeso te, lector, memineris ubique, et incipe recognoscere aut Marcionis Christum aut

7. [1] Anno quintodecimo principatus Tiberiani proponit eum descendisse in civitatem Galilaeae Capharnaum, utique de caelo creatoris, in quod de suo ante descenderat. Ecquid ergo ordinis fuerat ut prius de suo caelo in creatoris descendens describeretur? Cur enim non et ista reprehendam quae non implent fidem ordinariae narrationis, deficientis in mendacio semper? Plane semel dicta sint per quae iam alibi retractavimus an descendens per creatorem, et quidem adversus ipsum, potuerit ab eo admitti et inde tramitti in terram aequae ipsius. [2] Nunc autem et reliquum ordinem descensionis expostulo, tenens descendisse illum. Viderit enim sicubi appamisse positum est. Apparere subitum ex inopinato sapit conspectum, qui semel impegerit oculos in id quod sine mora apparuit. Descendisse autem dum fit, videtur et subit oculos. De facto etiam ordinem facit, atque ita cogit exigere, quali habitu, quali suggestu, quonam impetu vel temperamento, etiam quo in tempore diei noctisque descenderit: praeterea quis viderit descendentem, quis retulerit, quis asseveraverit rem utique nec asseveranti facile credendam. [3] Indignum denique ut Romulus quidem ascensus sui in caelum habuerit Proculum affirmatorem, Christus vero dei descensus de caelo sui non invenerit annuntiatorem, quasi non sic et ille ascenderit iisdem mendacii scalis, sicut et iste descendit. Quid autem illi cum Galilaea, si non erat creatoris, cui ista regio destinabatur ingressuro praedicationem? dicente Esaia, Hoc primum bibito, cito facito, regio Zabulon et terra Nephthalim, et ceteri qui maritimam et Iordanis, Galilaea nationum, populus qui sedetis in tenebris, videte lumen magnum: qui habitatis terram, sedentes in umbra mortis, lumen ortum est super vos. [4] Bene autem quod et deus Marcionis illuminator vindicatur nationum, quo magis debuerit vel de caelo descendere, et, si utique, in Pontum potius descendere quam in Galilaeam. Ceterum et loco et illuminationis opere secundum praedicationem occurrentibus Christo iam eum prophetatum incipimus agnoscere, ostendentem in primo ingressu venisse se non ut legem et prophetas dissolveret, sed ut potius adimpleret. Hoc enim Marcion ut additum erasit. [5] Sed frustra negabit Christum dixisse quod statim fecit ex parte. Prophetiam enim interim de loco adimplevit. De caelo statim ad synagogam. Ut dici solet, ad quod venimus; hoc age, Marcion, aufer etiam illud de evangelio, Non sum missus nisi ad oves perditas domus Israel, et, Non est auferre panem filiis et dare eum canibus, ne scilicet Christus Israelis videretur. [6] Sufficiunt mihi facta pro dictis. Detrahe voces Christi mei, res loquentur. Ecce venit in synagogam; certe ad oves perditas domus Israelis. Ecce doctrinae suae panem prioribus offert Israelitis; certe ut filios praeferat. Ecce aliis eum nondum impertit; certe ut canes praeterit. Quibus autem magis impertisset quam extraneis creatoris, si ipse inprimis non fuisset creatoris? [7] Et tamen quomodo in synagogam potuit admitti tam repentinus, tam ignotus, cuius nemo adhuc certus de tribu, de populo, de domo, de censu denique Augusti, quem testem fidelissimum dominicae nativitatis Romana archiva custodiunt? Meminerant certe, nisi circumcisum scirent, non admittendum in sancta sanctorum. Sed etsi passim synagoga adiretur, non tamen ad docendum nisi ab optime cognito et explorato et probato, iam pridem in hoc ipsum vel aliunde commendato cum hoc munere. Stupebant autem omnes ad doctrinam eius. Plane. Quoniam, inquit, in potestate erat sermo eius, non quoniam adversus legem et prophetas docebat. Utique enim eloquium divinum et vim et gratiam praestabat, magis exstruens quam destruens substantiam legis et prophetarum. [8] Alioquin non stuperent, sed horrerent. Nec mirarentur, sed statim aversarentur destructorem legis et prophetarum, et utique inprimis alterius dei praedictorem, quia nec potuisset adversus legem et prophetas docere et hoc nomine adversus creatorem, non praemissa diversae atque aemulae divinitatis professione. Cum ergo nihil tale scriptura significet, nisi solam vim et potestatem sermonis admirationi fuisse, facilius ostendit secundum creatorem docuisse illum, quia non negavit, quam adversus creatorem, quia non significavit. [9] Atque ita aut eius erit agnoscendus secundum quem docuit, aut praevaricator iudicandus si secundum eum adversus quem venerat docuit. Exclamat ibidem spiritus daemonis, Quid nobis et tibi est Iesu? venisti perdere nos: scio qui sis, sanctus dei. [10] Hic ego non retractabo an et hoc cognomentum competierit ei quem nec Christum vocari oporteret, si non creatoris. Alibi iam de nominibus expostulatum est. At nunc discepto quomodo hoc eum vocari cognoverit daemon, nulla unquam retro emissa praedicatione in illum a deo ignoto et in id temporis muto, cuius nec sanctum eum contestari potuit, ut ignoti etiam ipsi suo creatori. Quid autem iam tale ediderit novae divinitatis per quod posset alterius dei sanctus intellegi? [11] Tantum quod synagogam introgressus, et nec sermone operatus aliquid adversus creatorem? Sicut ergo quem ignorabat nullo modo poterat Iesum et sanctum dei agnoscere, ita quem norat agnovit. Nam et prophetam meminerat sanctum dei praedicasse, et Iesum nomen dei esse in filio Nave. Haec et ab angelo exceperat secundum nostrum evangelium: Propterea quod in te nascetur vocabitur sanctum, filius dei: et, Vocabis nomen eius Iesum. [12] Sed et habebat utique sensum aliquem dominicae dispositionis (licet daemon tamen), magis quam alienae et nondum satis cognitae. Nam et praemisit, Quid nobis et tibi, Iesu? non quasi in extraneum, sed ad quem pertinent spiritus creatoris. Nec enim dixit, Quid tibi et nobis? sed, Quid nobis et tibi? se deplorans et sorti suae exprobrans; quam iam videns adicit, Venisti perdere nos. [13] Adeo iudicis et ultoris et, ut ita dixerim, saevi dei filium agnoverat Iesum, non optimi illius, et perdere et punire nescientis. Quorsum hunc locum praemisimus? Ut Iesum et a daemone non alium doceamus agnitum et a semetipso non alium confirmatum quam creatoris. Atquin, inquis, increpuit illum Iesus. Plane, ut invidiosum, et in ipsa confessione petulantem et male adulantem; quasi haec esset summa gloria Christi, si ad perditionem daemonum venisset et non potius ad hominum salutem, qui nec discipulos de subactione spirituum sed de candida salutis gloriari volebat. [14] Aut cur eum increpuit? Si quasi mentitum in totum, ergo non fuit Iesus, nec dei sanctus omnino: si quasi ex parte mentitum, quod eum Iesum quidem et sanctum dei, sed creatoris, existimasset, iniustissime increpuit hoc sentientem quod sciebat sentiendum, et hoc non existimantem quod ignorabat existimandum, alium Iesum et alterius dei sanctum. [15] Quodsi verisimiliorem statum non habet increpatio nisi quem nos interpretamur, iam ergo et daemon nihil mentitus est, non ob mendacium increpuit; ipse enim erat Iesus, praeter quem alium daemon agnovisse non poterat, et Iesus eum confirmavit quem agnoverat daemon, dum non ob mendacium increpat daemonem.

8. [1] Nazaraeus vocari habebat secundum prophetiam Christus creatoris. Unde et ipso nomine nos Iudaei Nazarenos appellant per eum. Nam et sumus de quibus scriptum est: Nazaraei exalcati sunt super nivem, qui scilicet retro luridati delinquentiae maculis et nigrati ignorantiae tenebris. Christo autem appellatio Nazaraei competitura erat ex infantiae latebris, ad quas apud Nazareth descendit, vitando Archelaum filium Herodis. [2] Hoc propterea non omisi, quia Christum Marcionis oportuerat omne commercium eierasse etiam locorum familiarium Christi creatoris, habentem tanta Iudaeae oppida non ita Christo creatoris per prophetas emancipata. Ceterum prophetarum erit Christus ubicunque secundum prophetas invenitur. Et tamen apud Nazareth.

quoque nihil novi notatur praedicasse, dum alio, merito unius proverbii, eiectus refertur. Hic primum manus ei iniectas animadvertens necesse habeo iam de substantia eius corporali praefinire, quod non possit phantasma credi qui contactum et quidem violentia plenum detentus et captus et ad praecipitium usque protractus admiserit. [3] Nam etsi per medios evasis, sed ante iam vim expertus, et postea dimissus; scilicet soluto, uti assolet, tumultu, vel etiam irrupto, non tamen per caliginem eluso, quae nulli omnino tactui succidisset, si fuisset.

Tangere enim et tangi nisi corpus nulla potest res,

etiam saecularis sapientiae digna sententia est. [4] Ad summam, et ipse mox tetigit alios, quibus manus imponens, utique sentiendas, beneficia medicinarum conferebat, tam vera, tam non imaginaria, quam erant per quas conferebat. Ipse igitur est Christus Esaiae, remediator valetudinum. Hic, inquit, imbecillitates nostras aufert et languores portat. Portare autem Graeci etiam pro eo solent ponere quod est tollere. Sufficit interim mihi generalis repromissio. Quodcunque curaverit Iesus, meus est. Veniemus tamen et ad species curationum. [5] Ceterum et a daemoniis liberare curatio est valetudinis. Itaque spiritus nequam quasi ex forma iam prioris exempli cum testimonio excedebant vociferantes, Tu es filius dei. Cuius dei, vel hic pareat. Sed proinde increpabantur et iuebantur tacere. Proinde enim Christus ab hominibus, non a spiritibus immundis, volebat se filium dei agnosci, ille Christus duntaxat cui hoc congruebat quia praemiserat per quos posset agnosci, et utique digniores praedicatores. [6] Illius erat praeconium immundi spiritus respuere cui sancti abundabant. Porro qui nunquam fuerat annuntiatus (si tamen volebat agnosci, frustra autem venerat si nolebat), non esset aspernatus testimonium alienae et cuiuscunque substantiae, qui propriae non habebat, qui in aliena descenderat. [7] Iam nunc et qua destructor creatoris nihil magis gestisset quam a spiritibus ipsius agnosci et divulgari prae timore; nisi quod Marcion deum suum timeri negat, defendens bonum non timeri, sed iudicem, apud quem sint materiae timoris, ira, saevitia, iudicia, vindicta, damnatio. Sed et daemonia timore utique cedebant. Ergo timendi dei filium confitebantur, occasionem habitura non cedendi, si non timendi: et ille iussu et increpitu ea expellens, non suasu qua bonus, timendum se exhibebat. [8] Aut numquid ideo increpabat quia timebatur, nolens timeri? Et quomodo ea volebat excedere, quod nisi timore non facerent? Cecidit ergo in necessitatem qua disparem se naturae suae ageret, cum posset ut bonus semel eis parcere. Cecidit et in aliam praevaricationis notam, cum se a daemoniis quasi filium creatoris sustineret timeri, ut iam non propria potestate expelleret daemonia, sed per creatoris auctoritatem. [9] In solitudinem procedit. Solemnis et huiusmodi regio creatoris. Oportebat sermonem illic quoque videri in corpore ubi egerat aliquando et in nube. Competebat et evangelio habitus loci qui placuerat et legi. Capiat itaque iocunditatem solitudo: hoc Esaias promiserat. Detentus a turbis, Oportet me, inquit, et aliis civitatibus annuntiare regnum dei. [10] Ostenderat iam alicubi deum suum? Non puto adhuc usque. Sed de his loquebatur qui alium quoque deum noverant? Nec hoc credo. Ergo si nec ille alium deum ediderat nec illi noverant praeter creatorem, eiusdem dei regnum portendebat quem solum sciebat notum eis qui audiebant.

9. [1] De tot generibus operum quid utique ad piscaturam respexit, ut ab illa in apostolos sumeret Simonem et filios Zebedaei (non enim simplex factum videri potest de quo argumentum processurum erat), dicens Petro trepidanti de copiosa indagine piscium, Ne time, abhinc enim homines eris capiens? [2] Hoc enim dicto intellectum illis suggerebat adimpletae prophetiae, se eum esse qui per Hieremiam pronuntiarat, Ecce ego mittam piscatores multos, et piscabuntur illos, homines scilicet. Denique relictis naviculis secuti sunt eum, ipsum intellegentes qui coeperat facere quod edixerat. Aliud est si affectavit de naviculariorum collegio adlegere, habiturus apostolum quandoque nauclerum Marcionem. [3] Praestruximus quidem adversus Antitheses nihil proficere proposito Marcionis quam putat diversitatem legis et evangelii, ut et hanc a creatore dispositam, denique praedicatam in repromissione novae legis et novi sermonis et novi testamenti. Sed quoniam attentius argumentatur apud illum suum nescio quem suntalai/pwron, id est commiseronem, et summisou&menon, id est coodibilem, in leprosi purgationem, non pigebit ei occurrere et inprimis figuratae legis vim ostendere, quae in exemplo leprosi non contingendi, immo ab omni commercio submovendi, communicationem prohibebat hominis delictis commaculati, cum qualibus et apostolus cibum quoque vetat sumere; participari enim stigmata delictorum, quasi ex contagione, si qui se cum peccatore miscuerit. [4] Itaque dominus volens altius intellegi legem per carnalia spiritalia significantem, et hoc nomine non destruens sed magis extruens, quam pertinentius volebat agnosci, tetigit leprosum, a quo etsi homo inquinari potuisset, deus utique non inquinaretur, incontaminabilis scilicet. Ita non praescribetur illi quod debuerit legem observare et non contingere immundum, quem contactus immundi non erat inquinaturus. [5] Hoc magis meo Christo competere sic doceo, dum tuo non competere demonstro. Si enim ut aemulus legis tetigit leprosum, nihili faciens praeceptum legis per contemptum inquinamenti, quomodo posset inquinari, qui corpus non habebat quod inquinaretur? Phantasma enim inquinari non posset. Qui ergo inquinari non poterat ut phantasma, iam non virtute divina incontaminabilis erit sed phantasmatis inanitate; nec contempsisse videri potest inquinamentum, cuius materiam non habebat; ita nec legem destruxisse, qui inquinamentum ex occasione phantasmatis, non ex ostentatione virtutis, evaserat. [6] Si autem Helisaeus prophetae creatoris unicum leprosum Naaman Syrum ex tot leprosis Israelitis emundavit, nec hoc ad diversitatem facit Christi, quasi hoc modo melioris dum Israeliten leprosum emundat extraneus, quem suus dominus emundare non valuerat; Syro facilius emundato, significato per nationes emundationis in Christo lumine earum, quae septem maculis capitalium delictorum inhorrent, idololatria, blasphemia, homicidio, adulterio, stupro, falso testimonio, fraude. [7] Quapropter septies, quasi per singulos titulos, in Iordane lavit, simul et ut totius hebdomadis caneret expiationem, et quia unius lavacri vis et plenitudo Christo soli dicabatur, facturo in terris, sicut sermonem compendiatum, ita et lavacrum. Nam et hoc opponit Marcion, Helisaeum quidem materia eguisse, aquam adhibuisse, et eam septies, Christum vero verbo solo et hoc semel functum curationem statim repraesentasse. Quasi non audeam et verbum ipsum in substantiam creatoris vindicare. Nullius rei non ille potior auctor qui prior. [8] Incredibile plane ut potestas creatoris verbo remedium vitii unius operata sit, quae verbo tantam mundi molem semel protulit. Unde magis dinoscitur Christus creatoris quam ex verbi potestate? Sed ideo alius Christus, quia aliter quam Helisaeus, quia potentior dominus famulo suo. Quid constituis, Marcion, proinde res agi a servis quemadmodum ab ipsis dominis? Non times ne in dedecus tibi vertat, si ideo Christum negas creatoris quia potentior fuerit famulo creatoris, qui ad Helisaei pusillitatem maior agnoscitur, si tamen maior? Par enim curatio, licet distet operatio. Quid amplius praestitit tuus Christus quam meus Helisaeus? Immo quid magnum praestitit tui Christi verbum, cum id praestiterit quod fluvius creatoris? [9] Secundum haec cetera quoque occurrunt. Quantum enim ad gloriae humanae aversionem pertinebat, vetuit eum divulgare, quantum autem ad tutelam legis, iussit ordinem impleri: Vade, ostende te sacerdoti, et offer mvmus quod praecepit Moyses. Argumenta enim figurata utpote prophetatae legis adhuc in suis imaginibus tuebatur, quae significabant hominem quondam peccatorem verbo mox dei emaculatum offerre debere munus deo apud templum, orationem scilicet et actionem gratiarum apud ecclesiam per Christum Iesum, catholicum patris sacerdotem. [10] Itaque adiecit, Ut sit vobis in testimonium, sine dubio quo testabatur se legem non dissolvere sed adimplere, quo testabatur se ipsum esse qui morbos et valetudines eorum suscepturus annuntiabatur. Hanc tam congruentem et debitam interpretationem testimonii adulator Christi sui Marcion sub obtentu mansuetudinis et lenitatis quaerit excludere. Nam et bonus, inquit, praeterea sciens omnem qui lepra esset liberatus solemnia legis executurum, ideo ita praecepit. [11] Quid tum? Perseveravitne in bonitate, id est permissione legis, an non? Si enim bonus perseveravit, nusquam destructor erit legis, nec dei alterius habebitur, cessante legis destructione per quam alterius dei vindicatur. [12] Si non perseveravit bonus, destruendo postea legem, falsum ergo testimonium postea collocavit apud illos in curatione leprosi; deseruit enim bonitatem, dum destruit legem. Malus iam quando legis eversor, si bonus cum legis indultor. Sed et eo quod indulsit legi obsequium, bonam legem confirmavit. Nemo enim malo obsequi patitur. [13] Ergo et sic malus, si obsequium malae legi indulsit, et sic deterior, si bonae legis destructor advenit. Proinde si ut sciens omnem qui lepra liberatus esset ita facturum ideo praecepit munus offerre, potuit et non praecepisse quod sciebat ultro futurum. In vanum ergo descendit quasi legem destructurus, cum cedit obsecutoribus legis. Atquin quasi sciens formam eorum magis ab ea avertendos praevenire debuerat, si in hoc venerat. Cur enim non tacuit, ut homo solo suo arbitrio legi obediret? Tunc enim aliquatenus posset videri patientiae suae praestitisse. [14] Sed adiecit etiam auctoritatem suam exaggeratam testimonii pondere. Cuius iam testimonii, nisi legis assertae? Certe nihil interest quomodo firmaverit legem, sive qua bonus, sive qua supervacuum, sive qua patiens, sive qua inconstans, dum te, Marcion, de gradu pellam. Ecce praecepit legem impleri. [15] Quocunque modo praecepit, eodem potuit etiam illam praemisisse sententiam, Non veni legem dissolvere sed adimplere. Quid ergo tibi fuit de evangelio erasisse quod salvum est? Confessus es enira prae bonitate fecisse illum quod negas dixisse.

Constat ergo dixisse illum, quia et fecit, et te potius vocem domini de evangelio eradicasse quam nostros iniecisse.

10. [1] Curatur et paralyticus, et quidem in coetu, spectante populo. Videbit enim, inquit Esaias, populus sublimitatem domini et gloriam dei. Quam sublimitatem, et quam gloriam? Convalescite manus dimissae et genua dissoluta; hoc erit paralysis. Convalescite, nec timete. Non otiose iterans, Convalescite, nec vane subiungens, Nec timete, quoniam cum redintegratione membrorum virium quoque repraesentationem pollicebatur: Exsurge, et tolle dicturi erant, Quis dimittet peccata nisi solus deus? [2] Habes itaque iam et specialis medicinae dispunctam prophetiam, et eorum quae medicinam sunt secuta. Pariter et dimissorem delictorum Christum recognosce apud eundem prophetam: Quoniam, inquit, in plurimis dimittet delicta eorum, et delicta nostra ipse aufert. Nam et in priore ex ipsius domini persona, Etsi fuerint delicta vestra tanquam roseum, velut nivem exalbabo, etsi tanquam coccinum, velut lanam exalbabo; in roseo sanguinem ostendens prophetarum, in coccino domini, ut clariorem. Etiam Micheas de venia delictorum, Quis deus quomodo tu, eximens iniquitates et praeteriens iniustitias residuis haereditatis tuae? et non tenuit in testimonium iram suam, quia voluit esse misericordiam; avertet, et miserebitur nostri; demerget delicta nostra, et demerget in profundo maris peccata nostra. [3] Sed et si nihil tale in Christum fuisset praedicatum, haberem huius benignitatis exempla in creatore, promittentia mihi et in filio patris affectus. Video Ninivitas scelerum veniam consecutos a creatore, ne dixerim tunc quoque a Christo, quia a primordio egit in patris nomine. Lego et Nathan prophetam agnoscenti David delictum suum in Uriam dixisse, Et dominus circumduxit delictum tuum et non morieris; proinde et Achab regem, maritum Iezabel, reum idololatriae et sanguinis Nabuthae, veniam meruisse paenitentiae nomine; Ionathan, filium Saulis, resignati ieiunii culpam deprecatione delesse. [4] Quid de ipso populo retexam totiens delictorum indulgentia restituto? ab eo scilicet deo qui mavult misericordiam quam sacrificium, et peccatoris paenitentiam quam mortem. Prius est igitur neges creatorem indulsisse aliquando delicta, consequens est ut ostendas nec in Christum suum tale quid eum praedicasse; et ita probabis novam istam Christi novi scilicet benignitatem, si probaveris nec parem creatori nec praedicatam a creatore. [5] Sed et peccata dimittere an eius possit esse qui negetur tenere, et an eius sit absolvere cuius non sit etiam damnare, et an congruat eum ignoscere in quem nihil sit admissum, alibi iam congressi malumus admonere quam retractare. [6] De filio hominis duplex est nostra praescriptio, neque mentiri posse Christum, ut se filium hominis pronuntiaret si non vere erat, neque filium hominis constitui qui non sit natus ex homine, vel patre vel matre, atque ita discutiendum cuius hominis filius accipi debeat, patris an matris. Si ex deo patre est, utique non est ex homine; si non et ex homine, superest ut ex homine sit matre; si ex homine, iam apparet quia ex virgine. Cui enim homo pater non datur, nec vir matri eius deputabitur: porro, cui vir non deputabitur, virgo est. [7] Ceterum duo iam patres habebuntur, deus et homo, si non virgo sit mater. Habebit enim virum, ut virgo non sit, et habendo virum duos patres faciet, deum et hominem, ei qui et dei et hominis esset filius. Talem, si forte, Castori aut Herculi nativitatem tradunt fabulae. Si haec ita distinguuntur, id est si ex matre filius est hominis quia ex patre non est, ex matre autem virgine quia non ex patre homine, hic erit Christus Esaiae quem concepturam virginem praedicat. [8] Qua igitur ratione adnitas filium hominis, Marcion, circumspicere non possum. Si patris hominis, negas dei filium; si et dei, Herculem de fabula facis Christum; si matris tantum hominis, meum concedis; si neque patris hominis <neque matris>, ergo nullius hominis est filius, et necesse est mendacium admiserit, qui se quod non erat dixit. [9] Unum potest angustiis tuis subvenire, si audeas aut deum tuum patrem Christi Hominem quoque cognominare, quod de aeone fecit Valentinus, aut virginem hominem negare, quod nec Valentinus quidem fecit. Quid nunc, si ipso titulo filii hominis censetur Christus apud Daniele? Nonne sufficit ad probationem prophetici Christi? [10] Cum enim id se appellat quod in Christum praedicabatur creatoris, sine dubio ipsum se praestat intellegi in quem praedicabatur. Nominum communio simplex, si forte, videri potest, et tamen nec Christum nec Iesum vocari debuisse defendimus diversitatis condicionem tenentes. Appellatio autem, quod est filius hominis, in quantum ex accidenti obvenit, in tantum difficile est ut et ipsa concurrat super nominis communionem. Ex accidenti enim proprio est, maxime cum causa non convenit eadem per quam deveniat in communionem. [11] Atque adeo si et Christus Marcionis natus ex homine diceretur, tunc et ipse caperet appellationis communionem, et essent duo filii hominis, sicut et duo Christi et duo Iesus. Ergo cum appellatio propria est eius in quo habet causam, si et alii vindicetur in quo est communio nominis, non etiam appellationis, suspecta

iam fit communio nominis quoque in eo cui vindicatur sine causa communio appellationis, et sequitur ut unus idemque credatur qui et nominis et appellationis capacior invenitur, dum alter excluditur, qui non habet appellationis communionem, carens causa. Nec alius erit capacior utriusque quam qui prior et nomen sortitus est Christi et appellationem filii hominis, Iesus scilicet creatoris. [12] Hic erat visus Babylonio regi in fornace cum martyribus suis quartus, tanquam filius hominis. Idem ipsi Danieli revelatus directo filius hominis veniens cum caeli nubibus iudex, sicut et scriptura demonstrat. [13] Hoc dixi sufficere potuisse de nominatione prophetica circa filium hominis. Sed plus mihi scriptura confert, ipsius scilicet domini interpretatione. Nam cum Iudaei solummodo hominem eius intuentes, necdum et deum certi, qua dei quoque filium, merito retractarent non posse hominem delicta dimittere, sed deum solum, cur non secundum intentionem eorum de homine eis respondit habere eum potestatem dimittendi delicta, quando et filium hominis nominans hominem nominaret? nisi quia ideo ipsa voluit eos appellatione filii hominis ex instrumento Danielis repercutere, ut ostenderet deum et hominem qui delicta dimitteret; [14] illum scilicet solum filium hominis apud Danielis prophetiam consecutum iudicandi potestatem, ac per eam utique et dimittendi delicta (qui enim iudicat, et absolvit), ut scandalo isto discusso per scripturae recordationem facilius eum agnoscerent ipsum esse filium hominis ex ipsa peccatorum remissione. Denique nusquam adhuc professus est se filium hominis quam in isto loco primum in quo primum peccata dimisit, id est in quo primum iudicavit, dum absolvit. [15] Ad haec quodcunque diversa pars fuerit argumentata quale sit dispice. Nam in illam necesse est amentiam tendat, ut et filium hominis defendat ne mendacem eum faciat, et ex homine neget natum ne filium virginis concedat. Quodsi et auctoritas divina et rerum natura et communis sapientia non admittunt insaniam haeticam, occasio est et hic interpellandi quam brevissime de substantia corporis adversus phantasmata Marcionis. [16] Si natus ex homine est, ut filius hominis, corpus ex corpore est. Plane facilius invenias hominem natum cor non habere vel cerebrum, sicut ipsum Marcionem, quam corpus, ut Christum Marcionis. Atque adeo inspicere cor Pontici aut cerebrum.

testimonium consecuto agnitionis praestitae a patre. Nusquam legerat lumen et spem et expectationem nationum praedicari Christum. Atquin probavit potius Iudaeos, dicendo medicum sanis non esse necessarium sed male habentibus. [2] Si enim male valentes voluit intellegi ethnicos et publicanos, quos adlegebat, sanos Iudaeos confirmabat, quibus medicum necessarium negabat. Hoc si ita est, male descendit ad legem destruendam, quasi ad malam valetudinem remediandam, in qua qui agebant bene valebant, quibus medicus necessarius non erat. [3] Quale est autem ut similitudinem medici proposuerit, nec impleverit? Nam sicut sanis medicum nemo adhibet, ita nec in tantum extraneis, quantum est homo a deo Marcionis, suum habens et auctorem et protectorem, et ab illo potius medicum Christum. Hoc similitudo praeiudicat, ab eo magis praestari medicum ad quem pertinent qui languent. [4] Unde autem et Ioannes venit in medium? Subito Christus, subito et Ioannes. Sic sunt omnia apud Marcionem, quae suum et plenum habent ordinem apud creatorem. Sed de Ioanne cetera alibi. Ad praesentes enim quosque articulos respondendum est. Nunc illud tuebor, ut demonstrem et Ioannem Christo et Christum Ioanni convenire, utique prophetae creatoris, qua Christum creatoris, atque ita erubescat haereticus, Ioannis ordinem frustra frustratus. [5] Si enim nihil omnino administrasset Ioannes, secundum Esaïam vociferator in solitudinem et praepparator viarum dominicarum per denuntiationem et laudationem paenitentiae, si non etiam ipsum inter ceteros tinxisset, nemo discipulos Christi manducantes et bibentes ad formam discipulorum Ioannis assidue ieiunantium et orantium provocasset, quia, si qua diversitas staret inter Christum et Ioannem et gregem utriusque, nulla esset comparationis exactio, vacaret provocationis intentio. [6] Nemo enim miraretur et nemo torqueretur, si diversae divinitatis aemulae praedicationes de disciplinis quoque inter se non convenirent, non convenientes prius de auctoritatibus disciplinarum. Adeo Ioannis erat Christus et Ioannes Christi, ambo creatoris, et ambo de lege et prophetis praedicatores et magistri. Sed et Christus reiecisset Ioannis disciplinam, ut dei alterius, et discipulos defendisset, ut merito aliter incedentes, aliam scilicet et contrariam initiatos divinitatem. At nunc humiliter reddens rationem quod non possent ieiunare filii sponsi quamdiu cum eis esset sponsus, postea vero ieiunaturos promittens cum ablatus ab eis sponsus esset, nec discipulos defendit, sed potius excusavit, quasi non sine ratione reprehensos, nec Ioannis reiecit disciplinam, sed magis concessit, tempori Ioannis eam praestans, ut tempori suo eam destinans, reiecturus alioquin eam et defensurus aemulos eius, si non ipsius fuisset iam quae erat. [7] Teneo meum Christum etiam in nomine sponsi, de quo psalmus, Ipse tanquam sponsus egrediens de thalamo suo: a summo caeli profectio eius et deversio eius ad summum usque eius. Qui etiam per Esaiam gaudens ad patrem, Exultet, inquit, anima mea in domino, induit enim me indumentum salutaris, et tunicam iocunditatis velut sponso, circumposuit mihi mitram velut sponsae. In se enim et ecclesiam deputat, de qua idem spiritus ad ipsum, Et circumpones tibi omnes eos, velut ornamentum sponsae. [8] Hanc sponsam Christus sibi etiam per Salomonem ex vocatione gentium arcessit: siquidem legisti, Veni sponsa de Libano, eleganter Libani utique montis mentione iniecta, qui turis vocabulo est penes Graecos; de idololatria enim sibi sponsabat ecclesiam. Nega te nunc dementissimum, Marcion. Ecce legem tui quoque dei impugnas. Nuptias non coniungit, coniunctas non admittit, neminem tingit nisi caelibem aut spadonem, morti aut repudio baptisma servat. Quid itaque Christum eius sponsum facis? Illius hoc nomen est qui masculum et feminam coniunxit, non qui separavit. [9] Errasti in illa etiam domini pronuntiatione qua videtur nova et vetera discernere. Inflatu es utribus veteribus et excerebratus es novo vino, atque ita veteri, id est priori evangelio, pannum haereticae novitatis assuisti. In quo alter creator, velim discere. Cum per Hieremiam praecepit, Novate vobis novamen novum, nonne a veteribus avertit? cum per Esaiam edicit, Vetera transierunt, et ecce nova quae ego facio, nonne ad nova convertit? Olim hanc statuimus destinationem pristinorum a creatore potius repromissam a Christo exhiberi, sub unius et eiusdem dei auctoritate, cuius sint et vetera et nova. [10] Nam et vinum novum is non committit in veteres utres qui et veteres utres non habuerit, et novum additamentum nemo inicit veteri vestimento nisi cui non defuerit et vetus vestimentum. Ille non facit quid, si faciendum non est, qui habeat unde faciat, si faciendum esset. Itaque si in hoc dirigebat similitudinem, ut ostenderet se evangelii novitatem separare a legis vetustate, suam demonstrabat et illam a qua separabat alienorum separatione non fuisse notandam, quia nemo alienis sua adiungit ut ab alienis separare possit. [11] Separatio per coniunctionem capit, de qua fit. Ita quae separabat, et in uno ostendebat fuisse, sicut et fuissent si non separaret. Et tamen sic concedimus separationem istam per reformationem, per amplitudinem, per profectum, sicut fructus separatur a semine, cum sit fructus ex semine: sic et evangelium separatur a lege, dum provehitur ex lege, aliud ab illa sed non alienum, diversum sed non contrarium. [12] Nec forma sermonis in Christo nova. Cum similitudines obicit, cum quaestiones refutat, de septuagesimo septimo venit psalmo: Aperiam, inquit, in parabolam os meum, id est similitudinem; eloquar problemata, id est edisseram quaestiones. Si hominem alterius gentis probare voluisses, utique de proprietate loquelae probares.

12. [1] De sabbato quoque illud praemitto, nec hanc quaestionem consistere potuisse si non dominum sabbati circumferret Christus. Nec enim disceptaretur cur destrueret sabbatum, si destruere deberet. Porro destruere deberet, si alterius dei esset, nec quisquam miraretur facientem quod illi congruebat. Mirabantur ergo, quia non congruebat illi deum creatorem circumferre et sabbatum eius impugnare. [2] Et ut prima quaeque decidamus, ne eadem ubique novemus ad omnem argumentationem adversarii ex aliqua nova Christi institutione nitentem, haec iam definitio stabit, ideo de novitate institutionis cuiusque disceptatum, quia de novitate divinitatis nihil erat usque adhuc editum, sicuti nec disceptatum, nec posse retorqueri ex ipsa novitate institutionis cuiusque satis aliam a Christo demonstratam divinitatem, quando et ipsam novitatem pronuntiatam a creatore constiterit in Christo non esse mirandam. Et oportuerit utique prius alium deum exponi, postea disciplinam eius induci, quia deus auctoritatem praestet disciplinae, non deo disciplina; nisi si et Marcion plane tam perversas non per magistrum litteras didicit, sed per litteras magistrum. [3] Cetera de sabbato ita dirigo. Si sabbatum Christus intervertit, secundum exemplum fecit creatoris; siquidem in obsidione civitatis Hierichuntis circumlata per muros arca testamenti octo diebus, etiam sabbato, ex praecepto creatoris sabbatum operatione destruxit, ut putant qui hoc et de Christo existimant, ignorantes neque Christum sabbatum destruxisse neque creatorem, ut mox docebimus. Et tamen per Iesum tunc quoque concussum est sabbatum, ut et hoc in Christum renuntiaretur. [4] Etiam si odio insecutus est sollemnissimum Iudaeorum diem, ut Christus non Iudaeorum, de odio quoque sabbati professus creatorem, ut Christus ipsius, sequebatur exclamantem ore Esaiae, Neomenias et sabbata vestra odit anima mea. Sed et haec quoquo modo dicta sint, scimus adhibendam tamen in hac specie etiam abruptam defensionem adversus abruptam provocationem. [5] Nunc et ad ipsam materiam disceptabo, in qua visa est destruere sabbatum Christi disciplina. Esurierant discipuli ea die; spicas decerptas manibus efflixerant, cibum operati ferias ruperant. Excusat illos Christus, et reus est sabbati laesi; accusant pharisaei, Marcion captat status controversiae (ut aliquid ludam cum mei domini veritate), scripti et voluntatis. De scriptura enim sumitur creatoris et de Christi voluntate color, quasi de exemplo David introgressi sabbatis templum et operati cibum audenter fractis panibus propositionis. [6] Meminerat enim et ille hoc privilegium donatum sabbato a primordio quo dies ipse compertus est, veniam ieiunii dico. Cum enim prohibuisset creator in biduum legi manna, solummodo permisit in parasceue, ut sabbati sequentis ferias pridiana pabuli paratura ieiunio liberaret. [7] Bene igitur quod et causam. eandem secutus est dominus in sabbati, si ita volunt dici, destructione; bene quod et affectum creatoris expressit in sabbato non ieiunandi honore. Denique tunc demum sabbatum destruxisset, etiam ipsum creatorem, si discipulos sabbato ieiunare mandasset adversus statum scripti et voluntatis creatoris. [8] Sed quoniam discipulos non constanter tuebatur, sed excusat, quoniam humanam opponit necessitatem quasi deprecatricem, quoniam potioem honorem sabbati servat non contristandi quam vacandi, quoniam David comitesque eius cum discipulis suis aequat in culpa et in venia, quoniam placet illi quia creator indulset, quoniam de exemplo eius et ipse tam bonus est, ideo alienus est a creatore? [9] Exinde observant pharisaei si medicinas sabbatis ageret, ut accusarent eum, certe qua sabbati destructorem, non qua novi dei professorem; fortasse enim hunc solum articulum ubique ingeram, alium Christum nusquam praedicatum. In totum autem errabant pharisaei circa sabbati legem, non animadvertentes condicionaliter eam indicentem ferias operum, sub certa specie eorum. Nam cum de die sabbati dicit, Omne opus tuum non facies in ea, dicendo Tuum de humano opere definiit, quod quisque ex artificio vel negotio suo exequitur, non de divino. [10] Opus autem salutis et incolumitatis non est hominis, sed dei proprium. Sicut et rursus in lege, Non facies, inquit, omne opus in ea, nisi quod fiet omni animae, id est in causa animae liberandae: quia opus dei etiam per hominem fieri potest in salutem animae, a deo tamen, quod facturus fuerat et Christus homo, quia et deus. In hunc ergo sensum legis inducere volens illos per manus arefactae restitutionem interrogat, Licetne sabbatis benefacere, an non? animam liberare, an perdere? [11] ut id operis permittens quod pro anima facturus esset admoneret eos quae opera sabbati lex prohiberet, humana scilicet, et quae praeciperet, divina scilicet, quae fierent animae omni. Dominus sabbati dictus, quia sabbatum ut rem suam. tuebatur. Quod etiam si destruxisset, merito, quia dominus magis ille qui instituit. [12] Sed non omnino destruxit quia dominus, ut hinc iam apparere possit ne tum quidem in arcae circumlacione apud Hierichuntem sabbatum a creatore destructum. Nam et illud opus dei erat quod ipse praeceperat, et quod propter animas disposuerat hominum suorum in discrimine belli constitutas. [13] Sed et si odium alicubi sabbatorum professus est, Vestra sabbata dicendo, hominum ea deputans, non sua, quae sine dei timore celebrat populus plenus delictis, labiis deum diligens, non corde, suis sabbatis, id est quaecunque disciplina eius agerentur, alium statum fecit, quae per eundem postea propheten vera et delicata et non profananda pronuntiat. [14] Ita nec Christus omnino sabbatum rescindit, cuius legem tenuit et supra in causa discipulorum pro anima operatus (esurientibus enim solatium cibi indulsit), et nunc manum aridam curans, factis ubique ingerens, Non veni dissolvere legem, sed adimplere, si Marcion hac voce os ei obstruxit. Adimplevit enim et hic legem, dum condicionem interpretatur eius, dum operum differentiam illuminat, dum facit quae lex de sabbati feriis excipit, dum ipsum sabbati diem benedictione patris a primordio sanctum benefactione sua efficit sanctiorem, in quo scilicet divina praesidia ministrabat, quod adversarius aliis diebus praestitisset, ne sabbatum creatoris ornaret, ne opera debita sabbato redderet. [15] In quo die si et Helisaeus prophetes Sunamitidis filium mortuum restituit in vitam, vides pharisaei, tuque Marcion, olim creatoris esse sabbatis benefacere, animam liberare, non perdere, nihil Christum novi intulisse quod non sit ex forma, ex lenitate, ex misericordia, ex praedicatione quoque creatoris. Nam et hic specialis medicinae prophetiam repraesentat. Invalescunt manus dissolutae, sicut et genua dissoluta in paralytico.

13. [1] Certe evangelizat Sion et Hierusalem pacem et bona omnia, certe ascendit in montem et illic pernoctat in oratione et utique auditur a patre. Evolve igitur prophetas, et ordinem totum recognosce. In montem excelsum, inquit Esaias, ascende, qui evangelizas Sion, extolle cum vigore vocem tuam, qui evangelizas Hierusalem. Adhuc in vigore obstupescebant in doctrina eius; erat enim docens tanquam virtutem habens. Et rursus: Propterea cognoscet populus nomen meum in illa die. Quod nomen, nisi Christi? Quod ego sum ipse qui loquor. Tunc enim ipse erat qui in prophetis loquebatur, sermo, filius

creatoris. [2] Adsum, dum hora est, in montibus, ut evangelizans auditionem pacis, ut evangelizans bona. Item Naum ex duodecim, Quoniam ecce veloces pedes in monte evangelizantis pacem. De voce autem nocturnae orationis ad patrem manifeste psalmus: Deus meus, clamabo per diem, et exaudies, et nocte, et non in vanitatem mihi. Et alibi de loco et voce cadem psalmus: Voce mea ad dominum exclamavi, et exaudivit me de monte sancto suo. [3] Habes nominis representationem, habes actum evangelizantis, habes locum montis, et tempus noctis, et sonum vocis, et auditum patris, habes Christum prophetarum. Cur autem duodecim apostolos elegit, et non alium quemlibet numerum? Nae et ex hoc meum Christum interpretari possem, non tantum vocibus prophetarum, sed et argumentis rerum praedicatum. [4] Huius enim numeri figuras apud creatorem deprehendo duodecim fontes Elim, et duodecim gemmas in tunica sacerdotali Aaronis, et duodecim lapides ab Iesu de Iordane electos et in arcam testamenti conditos. Totidem enim apostoli portendebantur, proinde ut fontes et amnes rigaturi aridum retro et desertum a notitia orbem nationum (sicut et per Esaiam: Ponam in terra inaquosa flumina), proinde ut gemmae illuminaturi sacram ecclesiae vestem quam induit Christus pontifex patris, proinde ut et lapides solidi fide, quos de lavacro Iordanis Iesus verus elegit et in sacrarium testamenti sui recepit. [5] Quid tale de numeri defensione competit Christo Marcionis? Non potest simpliciter factum ab illo quid videri quod potest videri non simpliciter factum a meo. Eius erit res apud quem invenitur rei praeparatura. Mutat et Petro nomen de Simone, quia et creator Abrahae et Sarae et Auseae nomina reformavit, hunc vocando Iesum, illis syllabas adiciendo. Sed et cur Petrum? [6] Si ob vigorem fidei, multae materiae solidaeque nomen de suo accommodarent. An quia et petra et lapis Christus? Siquidem et legimus positum eum in lapidem offendiculi et in petram scandali. Omitto cetera. Itaque affectavit carissimo discipulorum de figuris suis peculiariter nomen communicare, puto propius quam de non suis. Conveniunt a Tyro et ex aliis regionibus multitudo etiam transmarina. Hoc spectabat psalmus: Et ecce allophyli et Tyrus et populus Aethiopum, isti fuerunt illic: Mater Sion, dicet homo: et homo factus est in illa (quoniam deus homo natus est), et aedificavit eam voluntate patris; ut scias ad eum tunc gentiles convenisse, quia deus homo natus erat aedificaturus ecclesiam ex voluntate patris, ex allophylis quoque. [7] Sic et Esaias: Ecce isti veniunt de longinquo, isti autem veniunt ab aquilone et mari, alii autem de terra Persarum. De quibus et rursus: Attolle per circuitum oculos tuos et vide, omnes congregati sunt. De quibus et infra, videns ignotos et extraneos: Et dices cordi tuo, Quis istos genuit mihi? porro hos quis mihi educavit? at hi mihi ubi fuerunt? Hic erit Christus non prophetarum? et quis erit Christus Marcionitarum? Si perversitas placet, qui non fuerit prophetarum.

14. [1] Venio nunc ad ordinarias sententias eius, per quas proprietatem doctrinae suae inducit, ad edictum, ut ita dixerim, Christi: Beati mendici (sic enim exigit interpretatio vocabuli quod in Graeco est), quoniam illorum est regnum dei. Iam hoc ipsum, quod a benedictionibus coepit, creatoris est, qui universa, prout edidit, nulla alia voce quam benedictionis dedicavit. Eructavit enim, inquit, cor meum sermonem optimum. [2] Hic erit sermo optimus, benedictionis scilicet, qui et novi quoque testamenti initiator agnoscitur de veteri exemplo. Quid ergo mirum est, si et ab affectibus creatoris ingressus est per huiusmodi dictionem, semper mendicos et pauperes et humiles ac viduas et pupillos usque diligentis, consolantis, asserentis, vindicantis? ut hanc Christi quasi privatam benignitatem rivulum credas de fontibus salvatoris. [3] Revera quo dirigam nescio in tanta frequentia eiusmodi vocum, tanquam in silva vel in prato vel in nemore pomorum. Passim prout incidit res petenda est. Inclamat psalmus: Iudicate pupillo et mendico, et humilem et pauperem iuste tractate, liberate pauperem, et mendicum de manu peccatoris eruite. [4] Item psalmus septuagesimus primus: Iustitia iudicabit mendicos populi et faciet salvos filios pauperum. Et in sequentibus de Christo: Omnes nationes servient ei. David autem uni genti Iudaicae praefuit, ne qui in David putet dictum, quia et ille suscepit humiles et necessitatibus laborantes: Quod liberaverit, inquit, a dynasta mendicum, parcat mendico et pauperi, et animas pauperum salvas faciet, ex usura et iniustitia redimet eorum animas, et honoratum nomen eorum in conspectu ipsius. [5] Item: Avertantur peccatores in inferos, omnes nationes quae dei obliviscuntur, quoniam non in finem oblivioni habebitur mendicus, tolerantia pauperum non peribit in finem. Item: Quis sicut deus noster, qui habitat in excelsis et humilia prospectat in caelo et in terra, qui suscitavit mendicum de terra et de stercore exaltavit pauperem, uti sedere eum faciat cum principibus populi, utique in regno suo? [6] Sic et retro in Basiliis Anna, mater Samuelis, spiritu gloriam deo reddens, Qui, inquit, excitavit pauperem de terra et mendicum, uti sedere eum faciat cum dynastis populi, utique in regno suo, et in thronis gloriae, utique regalibus. Per Esaiam vero quomodo invehitur in vexatores egenorum: Vos autem, ad quid incenditis vineam meam, et rapina mendici in domibus vestris? cur vos laeditis populum meum, et faciem mendicorum confunditis? Et rursus: Vae qui scribunt nequitiam, scribentes enim scribunt nequam, vitantes iudicia mendicorum et diripientes iudicata pauperum populi mei. [7] Quae iudicia pupillis quoque et viduis exigit, ut et ipsis egenis solatii: Iudicate pupillo, et iuste tractate viduam, et venite, conciliemur, dicit dominus. Cui tantus affectus in omnem condicionem humilitatis creatoris est, eius erit et regnum quod a Christo repromittitur, ad cuius affectum iam dudum pertinent ii quibus repromittitur. [8] Nam et si putas creatoris quidem terrenas promissiones fuisse, Christi vero caelestes, bene quod caelum nullius alterius usque adhuc dei apparet nisi cuius et terra, bene quod creator vel minora promisit, ut facilius illi et de maioribus credam quam qui nunquam de minoribus prius fidem liberalitatis suae struxit. [9] Beati esurientes, quoniam ipsi saturabuntur. Possem hunc titulum in superiorem transmisisse, quod non alii sunt esurientes quam pauperes et mendici, si non et hanc promissionem creator specialiter in evangelii scilicet sui praestructionem destinasset; siquidem per Esaiam de eis quos vocaturus esset a summo terrae, utique nationes, Ecce, inquit, velociter, leviter advenient; velociter qua properantes sub finibus temporum, leviter qua sine oneribus pristinae legis. Non esurient neque sitient. [10] Ergo saturabuntur, quod utique nisi esurientibus et sitientibus non promittitur. Et rursus, Ecce, inquit, qui serviunt mihi saturabuntur, vos autem esurietis: ecce qui serviunt mihi bibent, vos autem sitiatis. Videbimus et contraria ista, an Christo praeministrentur. Interim quod esurientibus saturitatem repromittit, dei creatoris est. Beati plorantes, quia ridebunt. [11] Decurre sententiam Esaiae: Ecce, qui serviunt mihi exultabunt in iocunditate, vos autem confundemini: ecce qui serviunt mihi oblectabuntur, vos autem clamabitis prae dolore cordis. Et haec contraria apud Christum recognosce. Certe oblectatio et exultatio in iocunditate illis promittitur qui in diversa condicione sunt, maestis et tristibus et anxiis. [12] Scilicet etiam psalmus cxxv, Qui seminant, inquit, in lacrimis, in exultatione metent. Porro tam exultantibus et iocunditatem capientibus risus accedit quam maerentibus et dolentibus fletus. Ita creator materias risus et fletus praedicans risuros plorantes prior dixit. [13] Igitur qui a consolatione pauperum et humilium et esurientium et flentium exorsus est, statim se illum repraesentare gestivit quem demonstraverat per Esaïam: Spiritus domini super me, propter quod unxit me ad evangelizandum pauperibus. Beati mendici, quoniam illorum est regnum caelorum; misit me curare obtritatos corde: Beati qui esuriunt, quoniam saturabuntur; advocare languentes: Beati qui plorant, quoniam ridebunt; dare lugentibus Sionis gloriam, et pro cinere unguenti iocunditatem et gloriae habitum pro spiritu taedii. [14] Haec si statim admissus Christus administravit, aut ipse est qui se ad haec venturum praedicavit, aut si nondum venit qui praedicavit, ridicule sed necessarie dixerim, fortasse mandaverit Christo Marcionis. Beati eritis cum vos odio habebunt homines et exprobrabunt et eicient nomen vestrum velut nequam propter filium hominis. [15] Hac pronuntiatione sine dubio ad tolerantiam exhortatur. Quid minus creator per Esaïam? Ne metueritis ignominiam ab hominibus, et nullificatione eorum ne minuamini. Quae ignominia, quae nullificatio? Quae futura erat propter filium hominis. Quem istum? Qui est secundum creatorem. Unde probabimus? [16] Ex odio in ipsum quoque praedicato; sicut per Esaïam ad auctores odii Iudaeos: Propter vos blasphematur nomen meum in nationibus; et alibi: Sancite eum qui circumscribit animam suam, qui aspernamento habetur a nationibus, famulis et magistratibus. Si enim odium in illum filium hominis praedicabatur qui secundum creatorem est, evangelium autem nomen Christianorum, utique a Christo deductum, odio futurum contestatur propter filium hominis, quod est Christus, eum filium hominis in causa odii constituit qui erat secundum creatorem, in quem odium praedicabatur. [17] Et utique si nondum venisset, non potuisset nominis odium, quod agitur hodie, personam nominis antecessisse. Nam et sancitur penes nos, et animam suam circumscribit propter nos eam ponens, et aspernamento habetur a nationibus. Et qui natus est, ipse erit filius hominis propter quem et nomen nostrum recusatur.

inquis, prophetas tuebatur, si iniquitatem Iudaeorum affirmatam volebat, quod nec cum prophetis suis pie egissent. Atquin nulla hic iniquitas exprobranda erat Iudaeis, laudandis potius et probandis, si eos suggillaverunt ad quorum destructionem post tantum aevi deus optimus motus est. Sed, puto, iam et non optimus, iam aliquid et cum creatore moratus, nec in totum Epicuri deus. [3] Ecce enim demutat in maledictionem, et ostendit eum se esse qui novit offendi et irasci. Vae enim dicit. Sed fit nobis quaestio de verbi istius qualitate, quasi non tam maledictionis sit quam admonitionis. Et quid causae interest, quando et admonitio non fit sine aculeo comminationis, maxime per Vae amarior facta? Et admonitio autem et comminatio eius erunt qui norit irasci. Nemo enim admonebit et nemo comminabitur ne <quis> quid faciat, nisi qui factum vindicabit. Nemo vindicarit nisi qui norit irasci. [4] Alii agnoscunt quidem verbum maledictionis, sed volunt Christum sic Vae pronuntiasse, non quasi ex sententia sua proprie, sed quod Vae a creatore sit, et voluerit illis asperitatem creatoris opponere, quo suam supra in benedictionibus sufferentiam commendaret. Quasi non creatori competat, qua utrumque praestanti, et bonum deum et iudicem, ut quia praemiserat in benedictionibus benignitatem, subiceret etiam in maledictionibus severitatem, amplitudinem disciplinae utriusque instruendae, tam ad benedictionem sectandam quam ad maledictionem praecavendam. [5] Nam et ita praemiserat: Ecce posui ante vos benedictionem et maledictionem: quod etiam in hanc evangelii dispositionem portendebat. Alioquin qualis est ille qui, ut suam insinuaret bonitatem, creatoris opposuit asperitatem? Infirma commendatio est quae de alterius destructione fulcitur. [6] Atquin opponens asperitatem creatoris timendum eum confirmavit. Si timendum, magis utique obaudiendum quam neglegendum, et incipit iam Christus Marcionis creatori docere. Tunc, si Vae creatoris est quod in divites spectat, ergo Christus non est divitibus offensus, sed creator, et ratas habet Christus divitum causas, superbiam dico et gloriam et saeculi studia et dei incuriam, per quae Vae merentur a creatore. [7] Sed quomodo non eiusdem sit divites reprobare qui supra mendicos probavit? Nemo non contrarium eius quod probaverit reprobat. Itaque si creatori deputabitur maledictio in divites, eiusdem defendetur benedictio in mendicos, et totum iam opus Christi creatoris est. Si deo Marcionis adscribetur benedictio in mendicos, eiusdem imponetur et maledictio in divites, et erit par iam creatoris, tam bonus quam et iudex, nec erit iam discrimini locus quo duo dei fiunt, sublatoque discrimine supererit unum deum renuntiari creatorem. [8] Igitur Vae si et vox maledictionis est vel alicuius austerioris inclamationis, et a Christo dirigitur in divites, debeo creatorem divitum quoque aspernatorem probare, sicut probavi mendicorum advocatorem, ut Christum in hac quoque sententia creatoris ostendam. Locupletat is quidem Salomonem, sed quia permissa sibi optione maluit ea postulare quae sciebat deo grata, sapientiam <et intellegentiam,> et meruerat etiam divitias consequi, quas non magis voluit. Quamquam et divitias praestare non incongruens deo sit, per quas et divites solatio iuvantur et multa inde opera iustitiae et dilectionis administrantur. [9] Sed accidentia vitia divitiis illa in evangelio quoque Vae divitibus adscribunt, Quoniam, inquit, recepistis advocationem vestram, utique ex divitiis, de gloria earum et saecularibus fructibus. Itaque in Deuteronomio Moyses, Ne, inquit, cum manducaveris et repletus fueris, et domus magnas aedificaveris, pecoribus et bubus tuis multiplicatis et pecunia et auro, exaltetur cor tuum et obliviscaris domini dei tui. Quemadmodum et Ezechiam regem, thesauris inflatum et de eis potius quam de deo gloriatum, apud illos qui ex Perside advenerant insilit per Esaïam: Ecce dies veniunt, et auferentur omnia quae in domo tua sunt, et quae patres tui congegesserunt in Babylonem transferentur. [10] Sic et per Hieremiam quoque edicit, Ne gloriatur dives in divitiis suis, et qui gloriatur, scilicet in deo gloriatur. Sic et in filias Sionis invehitur per Esaïam, cultu et divitiarum abundantia inflatas, comminabundus et alibi nobilibus et superbis: Dilatavit orcus animam suam et aperuit os suum, et descendent inclyti et magni et divites (hoc erit Christi Vae super divites), et humiliabitur homo, utique exaltatus divitiis, et inhonorabitur vir, utique ob substantiam honorabilis. [11] De quibus et rursus: Ecce dominus virtutum conturbabit gloriosos cum valentia, et elati comminuentur, et ruent gladio sublimes. Qui magis quam divites? quia receperunt scilicet advocationem suam, gloriam et honorem, sublimitatem ex divitiis. A quibus avertens nos et in psalmo XLVIII, Ne timueris, inquit, cum dives factus fuerit homo, et cum abundabit gloria eius, quoniam cum morietur non tollet omnia, nec descendet cum illo gloria sua. Item in LXI, Ne desideraveritis divitias, et si relucet, ne adieceritis cor. [12] Id ipsum postremo verbum Vae olim per Amos in divites affluentes deliciis destinatur. Vae enim, inquit, qui dormiunt in lectis eburneis et deliciis fluunt in toris suis, qui edunt hoedos de gregibus caprarum et vitulos de gregibus boum lactantes, complaudentes ad sonum organorum:

tanquam perseverantia deputaverunt, et non tanquam fugientia : qui bibunt vinum liquatum et unguentis primariis unguntur. [13] Igitur et si tantummodo dehortantem a divitiis ostenderem creatorem, non etiam praedamnantem divites etiam verbo ipso quo et Christus, nemo dubitaret ab eodem adiectam in divites comminationem per Vae Christi a quo ipsarum materialium, id est divitiarum, dehortatio praecucurrisset. Comminatio enim dehortationis accessio est. Ingerit Vae etiam saturatis, quia esurient, etiam ridentibus nunc, quia lugebunt. His respondebunt illa quae supra benedictionibus opposita sunt apud creatorem: Ecce, qui mihi serviunt saturabuntur, vos autem esurietis, utique quia saturati estis: et ecce, qui mihi serviunt oblectabuntur, vos autem confundemini, utique ploraturi, qui nunc ridetis. Sicut enim in psalmo: Qui seminant in lacrimis in laetitia metent; ita in evangelio, qui in risu seminant, scilicet ex laetitia, in lacrimis metent. Haec olim creator simul posuit, Christus solummodo distinguendo, non mutando, renovavit. [14] Vae, cum vobis benedixerint homines. Secundum haec faciebant et pseudoprophetae patres illorum. Aequae creator benedictionis et laudis humanae sectatores incusat per Esaiam: Populus meus, qui vos beatos dicunt, seducunt vos et vias pedum vestrorum disturbant. Prohibet et alias fidere omnino in hominem, sic et in laudem hominis, ut per Hieremiam: Maledictus homo qui spem habet in homine. [15] Nam et in psalmo cxvii: Bonum est confidere in deum quam confidere in homine, et bonum est sperare in deum quam sperare in principes. Ita totum quod ab homine captatur, abdixit creator, nedum benedictionem. Pseudoprophetae autem laudatos sive benedictos a patribus eorum tam eius est exprobrare quam prophetae vexatos et recusatos: sicut iniuriae prophetarum non pertinuisent ad deum ipsorum, ita nec gratiae pseudoprophetarum displicuissent nisi deo prophetarum.

16. [1] Sed vobis dico, inquit, qui auditis (ostendens hoc olim mandatum a creatore, Loquere in aures audientium), diligite inimicos vestros, et benedicite eos qui vos oderunt, et orate pro eis qui vos calumniantur. Haec creator una pronuntiatione clusit per Esaiam: Dicite, fratres nostri estis, eis qui vos oderunt. Si enim qui inimici sunt et oderunt et maledicunt et calumniantur fratres appellandi sunt, utique et benedici odientes et orari pro calumniatoribus iussit, qui eos fratres deputari praecepit. [2] Novam plane patientiam docet Christus, etiam vicem iniuriae cohibens permissam a creatore, oculum exigente pro oculo et dentem pro dente, contra ipse alteram

amplius maxillam offerri iubens, et super tunicam pallio quoque cedi. Plane haec Christus adiecerit ut supplementa consentanea disciplinae creatoris. Atque adeo hoc statim renuntiandum est, an disciplina patientiae praedicatur penes creatorem. [3] Si per Zachariam praecepit ne unusquisque malitiae fratris sui meminerit, sed nec proximi. Nam et rursus, Malitiam, inquit, proximi sui unusquisque ne recogitet. Multo magis patientiam indixit iniuriae qui indixit oblivionem. Sed et cum dicit, Mihi vindictam, et ego vindicabo, proinde patientiam docet vindictae expectatricem. [4] In quantum ergo fidem non capit ut idem videatur et dentem pro dente, oculum pro oculo, in vicem iniuriae exigere qui non modo vicem, sed etiam ultionem, etiam recordationem et recogitationem iniuriae prohibet, in tantum aperitur nobis quomodo oculum pro oculo et dentem pro dente censuerit, non ad secundam iniuriam talionis permittendam, quam prohibuerat interdicta ultione, sed ad primam coercendam, quam prohibuerat talione opposito, ut unusquisque respiciens licentiam secundae iniuriae a prima semetipsum contineret. [5] Facilius enim vim comprimi scit repraesentatione talionis quam repromissione ultionis. Utrumque autem constituendum fuit pro natura et fide hominum, ut qui deo crederet ultionem a deo expectaret, qui minus fideret leges talionis timeret. Hanc legis voluntatem de intellectu laborantem dominus et sabbati et legis et omnium paternarum dispositionum Christus et revelavit et compotem fecit, mandans alterius quoque maxillae oblationem, ut tanto magis vicem iniuriae extingueret quam et lex per talionem voluerat impedisse, certe quam prophetia manifeste coercuerat, et memoriam iniuriae prohibens et ultionem ad deum redigens. [6] Ita si quid Christus intulit, non adversario sed adiutore praecepto, non destruxit disciplinas creatoris. Denique si in ipsam rationem patientiae praecipienda, et quidem tam plenae atque perfectae, considerem, non consistet si non est creatoris, qui vindictam repromittit, qui iudicem praestat. Alioquin si tantum patientiae pondus non modo non reperiendi sed et aliam maxillam praebendi, et non modo non remaledicendi sed etiam benedicendi, et non modo non retinendi tunicam sed et amplius et pallium concedendi, is mihi imponit qui non sit me defensurus, in vacuum patientiam praecepit, non exhibens mihi mercedem praecepti, patientiae dico fructum, quod est ultio, quam mihi permisisse debuerat si ipse non praestat, aut si mihi non permittebat ipse praestare, quoniam et disciplinae interest iniuriam vindicari. [7] Metu enim ultionis omnis iniquitas refrenatur. Ceterum passim emissa libertate dominabitur, utrumque oculum effossura et omnem dentem excitatura prae impunitatis securitate. Sed hoc est dei optimi et tantum boni, patientiae iniuriam facere, violentiae ianuam pandere, probos non defendere, improbos non coercere. [8] Omni petenti te dato, utique indigenti, vel tanto magis indigenti si etiam et abundanti. Ne quis ergo indigeat, datori imperatam habes in Deuteronomio formam creatoris. Non erit, inquit, in te indigeas, uti benedicens benedicat te dominus deus tuus, datorem scilicet, qui fecerit non esse indigentem. [9] Et plus hic. Non enim petenti iubet dari: Sed non sit, inquit, indigens in te, id est cura ultro ne sit; quo magis petenti praeiudicat dandum. Etiam in sequentibus: Si autem fuerit indigens e fratribus tuis, non avertes cor tuum, nec constringes manum tuam a fratre indigente: aperiens aperies illi manum, fenus fenerabis illi, quantum desiderarit. [10] Fenus enim nisi petenti dari non solet. Sed de fenore postmodum. Nunc si qui voluerit argumentari creatorem quidem fratribus dari iussisse, Christum vero omnibus petentibus, ut hoc sit novum atque diversum, immo unum erit ex his per quae lex creatoris erit in Christo. Non enim aliud Christus in omnes praecepit quam quod creator in fratres. Nam etsi maior est bonitas quae operatur in extraneos, sed non prior ea quae ante deberet in proximos. [11] Quis enim poterit diligere extraneos? Quodsi secundus gradus bonitatis est in extraneos qui in proximos primus est, eiusdem erit secundus gradus cuius et primus, facilius quam ut eius sit secundus cuius non extitit primus. Ita creator et secundum naturae ordinem primum in proximos docuit benignitatem, emissurus eam postea in extraneos, et secundum rationem dispositionis suae primo in Iudaeos, postea et in omne hominum genus. [12] Ideoque quamdiu intra Israellem erat sacramentum, merito in solos fratres misericordiam mandabat; at ubi Christo dedit gentes haereditatem et possessionem terminos terrae, et coepit expungi quod dictum est per Osee: Non populus meus populus meus, et non misericordiam consecuta misericordiam consecuta, natio scilicet, exinde Christus in omnes legem paternae benignitatis extendit, neminem excipiens in miseratione, sicut in vocatione. Ita et si quid amplius docuit, hoc quoque in haereditatem gentium accepit. [13] Et sicut vobis fieri vultis ab hominibus, ita et vos facite illis. In isto praecepto utique alia pars eius subauditur: Et sicut vobis non vultis fieri ab hominibus, ita et vos ne faciatis illis. Hoc si novus deus et ignotus retro et nondum plane editus praecepit, qui me nulla antehac institutione formaverit, qua prius scirem quid deberem mihi velle vel nolle atque ita et aliis facere quae et mihi vellem, non facere quae et mihi nollem, passivitate sententiae meae permisit, nec adstrinxit me ad convenientiam voluntatis et facti, ut id aliis faciam quod mihi velim et id nec aliis faciam quod mihi nolim. [14] Non enim definiit quid mihi atque aliis debeam velle vel nolle, ut ad legem voluntatis parem factum, et possim alii non praestare quod ab alio mihi velim praestitum, amorem, obsequium, solatium, praesidium, et eiusmodi bona, proinde et alii facere quod ab alio mihi fieri nolim, vim, iniuriam, contumeliam, fraudem, et eiusmodi mala. Denique hac inconvenientia voluntatis et facti agunt ethnici nondum a deo instructi. [15] Nam etsi natura bonum et malum notum est, non tamen dei disciplina; qua cognita tunc demum convenientia voluntatis et facti ex fide, ut sub metu dei, agitur. Itaque deus Marcionis cum maxime revelatus, si tamen revelatus, non potuit huius praecepti de quo agitur tam strictum et obscurum et caecum adhuc et facilius pro meo potius arbitrio interpretandum compendium emittere, cuius nullam praestruxerat distinctionem. [16] At enim creator meus et olim et ubique praecepit indigentes pauperes et pupillos et viduas protegi, iuvare, refrigerari; sicut et per Esaiam: Infringito panem tuum mendicis, et qui sine tecto sunt, in domum tuam inducito, et nudum si videris, tegito. Item per Ezechielem de viro iusto: Panem suum dabit esurienti, et nudum conteget. Satis ergo iam tunc me docuit ea facere aliis quae mihi velim fieri. [17] Proinde denuntians, Non occides, Non adulterabis, Non furaberis, Non falsum testimonium dices, docuit ne faciam aliis quae fieri mihi nolim; et ideo ipsius erit praeceptum in evangelio qui illud retro et praestruxit et distinxit et ad arbitrium disciplinae suae disposuit et merito iam compendio substrinxit: quoniam et alias recisum sermonem facturus in terris dominus, id est Christus, praedicabatur.

17. [1] Hic nunc de fenore cum interponit, Et si feneraveritis a quibus speratis vos recepturos, quae gratia est vobis? percurrere sequentia Ezechielis de eodem viro iusto: Pecuniam, inquit, suam fenori non dedit, et quod abundaverit non sumet, fenoris scilicet redundantiam, quod est usura. Prius igitur fuit ut fructum fenoris eradicaret, quo facilius adsuefaceret hominem ipsi quoque fenori, si forte, perdendo, cuius fructum didicisset amittere. [2] Hanc etenim dicimus operam legis fuisse procurantis evangelio. Quorundam tunc fidem paulatim ad perfectum disciplinae Christianae nitorem primis quibusque praeceptis balbutientis adhuc benignitatis informabat. Nam et supra, Et pignus, inquit, reddes debentis; utique si non sit solvendo, quia solutori utique pignus restituendum esse utrum homo scriberet? [3] Multo manifestius in Deuteronomio: Non dormies super pignus eius, redditione reddes illi pallium circa solis occasum, et dormiet in pallio suo. Adhuc clarius supra: Dimittes omne debitum quod tibi proximus debet, et fratrem tuum non reposes, quoniam remissio domini dei tui invocata est. [4] Porro cum debitum dimitti iubet, utique non exsoluturo (plus enim est, etsi exsoluturo, cum reposci vetat), quid aliud docet quam non exsoluturo feneremus, qui tantum detrimentum fenori indixit? Et eritis filii dei. Nihil impudentius, si ille nos sibi filios faciet qui nobis filios facere non permisit auferendo connubium. Quomodo in id nomen allecturus est suos quod iam erasit? [5] Filius spadonis esse non possum, maxime cum patrem habeam eundem quem et omnia. Nam tam pater omnium qui conditor universitatis, quam spado qui nullius substantiae conditor. Et si marem ac feminam non miscuisset creator, et si non universis quoque animalibus filios concessisset, hoc eram eius ante paradisum, ante delictum, ante exilium, ante duos unum. Denuo factus filius fui, statim cum me manibus enixus est, cum de suo halitu movit. [6] Ille me nunc rursus filium nuncupat, iam non in animam sed in spiritum pariens. Quia ipse, inquit, suavis est adversus ingratos et malos. Euge, Marcion, satis ingeniose detraxisti illi pluvias et soles, ne creator videretur. Sed quis iste suavis, qui ne cognitus quidem usque adhuc? [7] Quomodo suavis, a quo nulla beneficia praecesserant hoc genus suavitatis qua soles et imbres qui feneraverat, non recepturus ab humano genere? Ut creator, qui pro tanta elementorum liberalitate facilius idolis quam sibi debitum gratiae referentes homines usque adhuc sustinet, vere suavis etiam spiritalibus commodis: Eloquia enim domini dulciora super mel et favos. Ille igitur et ingratos suggillavit qui gratos experiri merebatur, cuius solem et imbres tu quoque Marcion ingratus habuisti. Ceterum tuus non poterat iam queri ingratos, qui non paraverat gratos. [8] Misericordiam quoque praecipiens, Estote, inquit, misericordes, sicut pater vester misertus est vestri. Hoc erit, Panem infringito esurienti, et <qui> sine tecto in domum tuam inducito, et nudum si videris tegito, et, Iudicate pupillo, et iustificate viduam. Agnosco doctrinam eius veterem qui mavult misericordiam quam sacrificium. Aut si alius nunc misericordiam praecepit, quia et ipse misericors sit, cur tanto aevo misericors mihi non fuit? [9] Nolite iudicare, ne iudicemini. Nolite condemnare, ne condemnemini. Dimittite, et dimitemini. Date, et dabitur vobis, mensuram bonam, pressam ac fluentem, dabunt in sinum vestrum. Eadem qua mensi eritis mensura, remetietur vobis. Ut opinor, haec retributionem pro meritis provocatam sonant. A quo ergo retributio? ^[10] Si ab hominibus tantum, ergo humanam docet disciplinam et mercedem, et in totum hominibus obediemus: si a creatore, ut a iudice et dispunctore meritorum, ergo illi nostrum impellit obsequium apud quem constituit retributionem captandam vel timendam, prout quisque iudicaverit aut condemnaverit aut dimiserit aut mensus fuerit: si ab ipso, ergo et ille iam iudicat, quod Marcion negat. ^[11] Eligant itaque Marcionitae ne tanti sit de magistri regula excidere quanti Christum aut hominibus aut creatori docentem habere. Sed caecus caecum ducit in foveam. Credunt aliqui Marcioni. Sed non est discipulus super magistrum. Hoc meminisse debuerat Apelles, Marcionis de discipulo emendator. Eximat et de oculo suo trabem haereticus, tunc in oculo Christiani si quam putat stipulam revincat. Proinde et arbor bona non proferat malum fructum, quia nec veritas haeresim; nec mala bonum, quia nec haeresis veritatem. Sic nec Marcion aliquid boni de thesauro Cerdonis malo protulit, nec Apelles de Marcionis. ^[12] Multo enim haec congruentius in ipsos interpretabimur quae Christus in homines allegorizavit, non in duos deos secundum scandalum Marcionis. Puto me non temere hucusque adhuc lineae insistere, qua definitio nusquam omnino alium deum a Christo revelatum. In hoc solo adulterium Marcionis manus stupuisse miror. Nisi quod etiam latrones timent. Nullum maleficium sine formidine est, quia nec sine conscientia sui. Tam diu ergo et Iudaei non alium deum norant quam praeter quem neminem adhuc norant, nec alium deum appellabant quam quem solum norant. Si ita est, quis videbitur dixisse, Quid vocas, Domine, domine? ^[13] Utrumne qui nunquam hoc fuerat vocatus, ut nusquam adhuc editus, an ille qui semper dominus habebatur, ut a primordio cognitus, deus scilicet Iudaeorum? Quis item adiecisce potuisset, Et non facitis quae dico? Utrumne qui cum maxime edocere temptabat, an qui a primordio ad illos et legis et prophetarum eloquia mandaverat? Qui et inobaudientiam illis exprobrare posset, etiam si nunquam alias exprobrasset? Porro qui ante Christum, Populus iste me labiis diligit, cor autem eorum longe absistit a me, contionatus est, veterem utique illis contumaciam imputabat. Alioquin quam absurdum, ut novus deus, novus Christus, novae tantaeque religionis illuminator, contumaces et inobsequentes pronuntiaret quos non

18. [1] Proinde extollenda fide centurionis incredibile si is professus est talem se fidem nec in Israele invenisse ad quem non pertinebat fides Israelis. Sed nec exinde pertinere poterat, adhuc cruda ut probaretur vel compararetur, ne dixerim adhuc nulla. Sed cur non licuerit illi alienae fidei exemplo uti? Quoniam si ita esset, dixisset talem fidem nec in Israele unquam fuisse: ceterum dicens talem fidem debuisse se invenire in Israele, qui quidem ad hoc venisset ut eam inveniret, deus scilicet et Christus Israelis, quam non suggillasset nisi exactor et sectator eius. [2] Aemulus vero etiam maluisset eam talem inventam, ad quam infirmandam et destruendam magis venerat, non ad comprobendam. Resuscitavit et mortuum filium viduae. Non novum documentum. Hoc et prophetae creatoris ediderant, quanto magis filius? [3] Adeo autem in illud usque momenti nullum alium deum Christus intulerat, ut omnes illic creatori gloriam retulerint dicentes, Magnus prophetae prodiit in nobis, et Respexit deus populum suum. Quis deus? Utique cuius populus, et a quo prophetae. Quodsi illi quidem creatorem glorificabant, Christus vero et audiens et sciens non corripuit, et quidem in tanto documento mortui resuscitati creatorem adhuc honorantes, sine dubio aut non alium circumferebat deum quam quem in suis beneficiis atque virtutibus honorari sustinebat: aut quale est ut illos tam diu errantes sustineret, ad hoc veniens ut errori eorum mederetur? [4] Sed scandalizatur Ioannes auditis virtutibus Christi, ut alterius. At ego rationem scandali prius expediam, quo facilius haeretici scandalum explodam. Ipso iam domino virtutum sermone et spiritu patris operante in terris et praedicante, necesse erat portionem spiritus sancti quae ex forma prophetici moduli in Ioanne egerat praeparaturam viarum dominicarum, abscedere iam ab Ioanne, redactam scilicet in dominum ut in massalem suam summam. [5] Itaque Ioannes communis iam homo, et unus iam de turba, scandalizabatur quidem qua homo, sed non qua alium Christum sperans vel intellegens, qui neque <haberetur> unde speraret, ut nihil novi docentem vel operantem. Nemo haesitabit de aliquo quem dum scit non esse nec sperat nec intellegit; Ioannes autem certus erat neminem deum praeter creatorem, vel qua Iudaeus, etiam prophetae. Plane facilius quasi haesitavit de eo quem cum sciat esse an ipse sit nesciat. [6] Hoc igitur metu et Ioannes, Tu es, inquit, qui venis, an alium expectamus? simpliciter inquirens an ipse venisset quem expectabat. Tu es qui venis, id est qui venturus es, an alium expectamus? id est an alius est quem expectamus, si non tu es quem venturum expectamus? Sperabat enim, sicut omnes opinabantur, ex similitudine documentorum potuisse et prophetam interim missum esse, a quo alius esset, id est maior, ipse scilicet dominus, qui venturus expectabatur. Atque adeo hoc erat Ioannis scandalum quod dubitabat ipsum venisse quem expectabant, quem et praedicatis operationibus agnovisse debuerant, ut dominus per easdem operationes agnoscendum se nuntiaverit Ioanni. [7] Quae cum constant praedicata in Christum creatoris, sicut ad singula ostendimus, satis perversum ut Christum non creatoris per ea renuntiavit intellegendum per quae magis Christum creatoris agnosci compellebat. Multo perversius, si et testimonium Ioanni perhibet non Ioannis Christus, propheten eum confirmans, immo et supra ut angelum, ingerens etiam scriptum super illo: Ecce ego mitto angelum meum ante faciem tuam, qui praeparabit viam tuam; eleganter ad superiorem sensum scandalizati Ioannis commemorans prophetiam, ut confirmans praecursorem Ioannem iam advenisse extingueret scrupulum interrogationis illius: Tu es qui venis, an alium expectamus? Praecursore enim iam functo officium, praeparata via domini, ipse erat intellegendus cui praecursor ministraverat, [8] maior quidem omnibus natis mulierum: sed non ideo subiecto ei qui minor fuerit in regno dei, quasi alterius sit dei regnum in quo modicus quis maior erit Ioanne, alterius Ioannes qui omnibus natis mulierum maior sit. Sive enim de quocunque dicit modico per humilitatem, sive de semetipso quia minor Ioanne habebatur, omnibus scilicet in solitudinem concurrentibus ad Ioannem potius quam ad Christum (Quid existis videre in solitudinem?), tantundem et creatori competit et Ioannem ipsius esse maiorem natis mulierum, et Christum vel quemque modicum, qui maior Ioanne futurus sit in regno aequae creatoris, et qui sit maior tanto propheta, qui non fuerit scandalizatus in Christum, quod tunc Ioannem minuit. [9] Diximus de remissa peccatorum. Illius autem peccatricis feminae argumentum eo pertinebit, ut cum pedes domini osculis figeret, lacrimis inundaret, crinibus detergeret, unguento perduceret, solidi corporis veritatem, non phantasma inane, tractaverit, et ut peccatricis paenitentia secundum creatorem meruerit veniam, praeponere solitum sacrificio. Sed et si paenitentiae stimulus ex fide acciderat, per paenitentiam ex fide iustificatam ab eo audiit, Fides tua te salvam fecit, qui per Abacuc pronuntiavit, luster ex fide sua vivet.

19. [1] Quod divites Christo mulieres adhaerebant, quae et de facultatibus

suis ministrabant ei, inter quas et uxor regis procuratoris, de prophetia est. Has enim vocabat per Esaïam: Mulieres divites, exsurgite et audite vocem meam: ut discipulas primo, dehinc ut operarias et ministras ostenderet: Filiae in spe audite sermones meos: diei anni mementote cum labore in spe; cum labore enim, quo sequebantur, et ob spem ministrabant. [2] Aequè de parabolis semel sufficiat probatum hoc genus eloquii a creatore promissum. At nunc illa quoque pronuntiatio eius ad populum, Aure audietis et non audietis, dedit Christo frequenter inculcare, Qui habet aures audiat: non quasi ex diversitate auditum permetteret Christus quem ademisset creator, sed quia comminationem exhortatio sequebatur. Primo, aure audietis et non audietis; dehinc, qui habet aures audiat. [3] Non enim audiebant ultro qui aures habebant, sed ostendebat aures cordis necessarias, quibus illos audituros negarat creator. Et ideo per Christum adicit: Videte quomodo audiat et non audiat, non corde scilicet audientes sed aure. Si dignum sensum pronuntiationi accommodes pro sensu eius qui auditui suscitabat, etiam dicendo, Videte quomodo audiat, non audituris minabatur. Sane minatur mitissimus deus, quia nec iudicat nec irascitur. [4] Hoc probat etiam subiucens sensus. Ei qui habet dabitur, ab eo autem. qui non habet etiam quod habere se putat auferetur ei. Quid dabitur? Adiectio fidei vel intellectus vel salus ipsa. Quid auferetur? Utique quod dabitur. A quo dabitur et auferetur? Si a creatore auferetur, ab eo et dabitur. Si a deo Marcionis dabitur, ab eo et auferetur. [5] Quoquo tamen nomine comminatur ablationem, non erit eius dei qui nescit comminari quia non novit irasci. Miror autem cum lucernam negat abscondi solere, qui se tanto saeculo absconderat maius et necessarius lumen, cum omnia de occulto in apertum repromittit, qui deum suum usque adhuc obumbrat, expectans, opinor, nasci Marcionem. [6] Venimus ad constantissimum argumentum omnium qui domini nativitatem in controversiam deferunt. Ipse, inquit, contestatur se non esse natum dicendo, Quae mihi mater, et qui mihi fratres? Ita semper haeretici aut nudas et simplices voces coniecturis quo volunt rapiunt, aut rursus condicionales et rationales simplicitatis condicione dissolvunt, ut hoc in loco. [7] Nos contrario dicimus primo non potuisse illi annuntiari quod mater et fratres eius foris starent quaerentes videre eum, si nulla illi mater et fratres nulli fuissent, quos utique norat qui annuntiabat vel retro notos vel tunc ibidem compertos, dum eum videre desiderant, vel dum ipsi nuntium mandant. Ad hanc primam propositionem nostram solet ex diverso responderi: Quid enim si temptandi gratia nuntiatur ei? Sed hoc scriptura non dicit, quae quanto significare solet ex temptatione quid factum (Ecce legis doctor adsurrexit temptans eum: et de tributi consultatione, Et accesserunt ad eum pharisaei temptantes eum), tanto, ubi non facit temptationis mentionem, non admittit temptationis interpretationem. [8] Et tamen ex abundanti causas temptationis expostulo, cui rei temptaverint illum per nominationem matris et fratrum. Si ut scirent natusne esset an non: quando de hoc fuit quaestio quam ex ista temptatione discuterent? [9] Quis autem dubitaret natum, quem videret hominem, quem audisset filium se hominis professum, quem de conspectu omnis humanae qualitatis dubitarent deum aut filium dei credere, propheten facilius existimantes licet magnum aliquem, utique tamen natum? Etiamsi in exploratione nativitatis temptandus fuisset, quodcunque aliud argumentum temptationi competisset quam per earum personarum mentionem quas potuit etiam natus non habere. [10] Dic mihi, omnibus natis mater advivit? omnibus natis adgenerantur et fratres? non licet patres magis et sorores habere, vel et neminem? Sed et census constat actos sub Augusto nunc in Iudaea per Sentium Saturninum, apud quos genus eius inquirere potuissent. Adeo nullo modo constitit ratio temptationis istius, et vere mater et fratres eius foris stabant. Superest et inspicere sensum non simpliciter pronuntiantis, Quae mihi mater aut fratres? quasi ad generis et nativitatis negationem, sed et ex causae necessitate et condicione rationali. [11] Tam proximas enim personas foris stare extraneis intus defixis ad sermones eius, amplius et avocare eum a sollemni opere quaerentes, merito indignatus est. Non tam abnegavit quam abdicavit. Atque adeo cum praemisisset, Quae mihi mater et qui mihi fratres? subiungens, Nisi qui audiunt verba mea et faciunt ea, transtulit sanguinis nomina in alios, quos magis proximos pro fide iudicaret. [12] Nemo autem transfert quid nisi ab eo qui habet id quod transfert. Si ergo matrem et fratres eos fecit qui non erant, quomodo negavit eos qui erant? Meritorum scilicet condicione, non ex proximorum negatione, in semetipso docens qui patrem aut matrem aut fratres praeponeret verbo dei non esse dignum discipulum. Ceterum ex hoc magis matrem et fratres confitebatur quod illos nolebat agnoscere. [13] Quod alios adoptabat, confirmabat quos ex offensa negavit, quibus non ut veriores substituit sed ut digniores. Denique nihil magnum si fidem sanguini praeposuit quem non habebat.

20. [1] Quis autem iste est qui et ventis et mari imperat? nimirum novus dominator atque possessor elementorum subacti iam et exclusi creatoris? Non ita est. Sed agnorant substantiae auctorem suum, quae famulis quoque eius obaudire consueverant. Inspice Exodum, Marcion, aspice mari rubro, vastiori super omnia stagna Iudaeae, virgam Moysi imperantem, ut funditus proscissum et pari utrinque stupore discriminis fixum sicco populum pede intestino itinere transmitteret, rursusque sub eiusdem virgae nutu redeunte natura Aegyptium exercitum undarum concordia obrueret, in quod opus et austri servierunt. [2] Lege ex sorte familiae dirimendae in transitu eius Iordanis machaeram fuisse, cuius impetum atque decursum plane et Iesus docuerat prophetis transmeantibus stare. Quid ad haec? Si tuus Christus est, non erit potentior famulis creatoris. Sed his solis exemplis usus essem, si non etiam praedicatio marinae istius expeditionis Christum antecessisset. [3] Nam cum transfretat, psalmus expungitur: Dominus, inquit, super aquas multas. Cum undas freti discutit, Abacuc adimpletur: Dispargens, inquit, aquas itinere. Cum ad minas eius eliditur mare, Naum quoque absolvitur: Comminans, inquit, mari et arefaciens illud, utique cum ventis quibus inquietabatur. Unde vis meum vindicem Christum? de exemplis an de prophetis creatoris? [4] Age nunc, qui militem et armatum bellatorem praedicari putas, non figurate nec allegorice, qui bellum spiritale adversus spiritales hostes spiritali militia et spiritalibus armis spiritaliter debellaturus esset, cum invenis in uno homine multitudinem daemonum, legionem se professam, utique spiritalem, disce et Christum expugnatorem spiritalium hostium spiritaliter armatum et spiritaliter bellicosum intellegendum, atque ita ipsum esse qui cum legione quoque daemonum erat dimicaturus; ut et de hoc bello psalmus possit videri pronuntiasse, Dominus validus, dominus potens in bello. [5] Nam cum ultimo hoste morte proeliatus per tropaeum crucis triumphavit. Cuius autem dei filium Iesum legio testata est? Sine dubio cuius tormenta et abyssum noverant et timebant. Nec enim videntur posse ignorasse adhuc quod novi et ignoti dei virtus operaretur in terris, quia verisimile non est creatorem ignorasse. Si enim alium supra se deum ignoraverat aliquando, tamen iam infra caelum suum agentem utique compererat. [6] Quod autem dominus comperisset, iam et universae familiae innotuisset in eodem mundo et intra eundem ambitum caeli quo peregrina divinitas conversaretur. In quantum ergo et creator scisset eam, et substantiae eius, si fuisset, in tantum, quia nulla fuit, non alium daemones sciebant quam dei sui Christum. Non enim depetunt ab alio quod meminissent petendum sibi a creatore, veniam scilicet abyssi creatoris. Denique impetraverunt. [7] Quo merito? Quia mentiti erant, quia saevi dei filium eum fecerant? Et qualis erit qui mentitos iuvabat, qui infamantes sustinebat? Sed enim quia mentiti non erant, quia deum abyssi et suum cognoverant, ita eum se et ipse confirmavit quem cognoverunt daemones, Iesum iudicem et ultoris dei filium. Ecce aliquid et de illis pusillitatibus et infirmitatibus creatoris in Christo. Ignorantiam enim et ego adscribere ei volo. Permittite mihi adversus haereticum. Tangitur a femina quae sanguine fluitabat, et nescivit a qua. [8] Quis me, inquit, tetigit? Etiam excusantibus discipulis perseverat in ignorantiae voce: Tetigit me aliquis; idque de argumento affirmat: Sensi enim virtutem ex me profectam. Quid dicit haereticus? Sciebatne personam? Et cur quasi ignorans loquebatur? Ut confessionem certe provocaret, ut timorem probaret. Sic et Adam aliquando quaesierat quasi ignorans, Adam ubi es? Habes et creatorem cum Christo excusatum et Christum creatori adaequatum. [9] Sed et hoc qua adversarius legis, ut quia lex a contactu feminae sanguinantis summovet, idcirco gestierit non tantum contactum eius admittere, sed etiam sanitatem donare. O deum non natura beneficum, sed aemulatione! At enim, si fidem mulieris invenimus ita meruisse, cum dicit, Fides tua te salvam fecit, quis es, ut aemulationem legis interpreteris in isto facto, quod ipse dominus ex fidei remuneratione editum ostendit? [10] Sed hanc vis mulieris fidem constituere qua contempserat legem. Et cui credibile ut mulier nullius adhuc dei conscia, nullius adhuc novae legis initiata, legem inrumperet eam cui adhuc tenebatur? Qua denique fide inrupit? in quem deum credens? quem spernens? Creatorem? Certe enim ex fide tetigit. Si ex fide creatoris, quae alium deum ignorabat, equomodo legem eius inrupit? Tam enim inrupit, si inrupit, quam ex fide creatoris. [11] Quomodo enim utrumque conveniet, ut et inruperit, et ex fide eam inruperit propter quam inrupisse non debuit? Dicam. Fides haec fuit primo, qua deum suum confidebat misericordiam malle quam ipsum sacrificium, qua eum deum certa erat operari in Christo, qua sic eum tetigit, non ut hominem sanctum, nec ut prophetam, quem contaminabilem pro humana substantia sciret, sed ut ipsum deum, quem nulla spurcitia pollui posse praesumpserat. [12] Itaque non ternere interpretata est sibi legem, ea contaminari significantem quae essent contaminabilia, non deum, quem in Christo confidebat. Sed et illud recogitavit, ordinarium et sollemnem menstrui vel partialis sanguinis fluxum in lege taxari, qui veniat ex officio naturae non ex vitio valetudinis. Illa autem ex vitio valetudinis redundabat, cui non modum temporis, sed divinae misericordiae auxilium necessarium sciebat. [13] Atque ita potest videri legem non inrupisse, sed distinxisse. Haec erit fides quae contulerat etiam intellectum: Nisi credideritis, inquit, non intellegetis. Hanc fidem probans Christus eius feminae, quae solum credebat creatorem, eius fidei se deum respondit quam probavit. Nec illud omittam, quod dum tangitur vestimentum eius, utique corpori non phantasmati inditum, corpus quoque demonstrabatur; non quasi iam de hoc retractemus, sed quia ad praesentem conspirat quaestionem. [14] Si enim non erat veritas corporis, phantasma utique contaminari, qua res vacua, non posset. Qui ergo non potest contaminari prae inanitate substantiae, quomodo voluisset? Ut aemulus legis, mentiebatur qui non vere polluebatur.

21. [1] Dimittit discipulos ad praedicandum dei regnum. Numquid vel hic edidit cuius? Prohibet eos victui aut vestitui quid in viam ferre. Quis hoc mandasset, nisi qui et corvos alit et flores agri vestit, qui bovi quoque terenti libertatem oris ad veniam pabuli ex opere summovendi ante praecepit, quia dignus operarius mercede sua? Haec Marcion deleat, dum sensui salva sint. At cum iubet pulverem excutere de pedibus in eos a quibus excepti non fuissent, et hoc in testimonium mandat fieri. [2] Nemo testatur quod non iudicio destinatur; inhumanitatem qui in testationem redigi iubet, iudicem comminatur. Nullum deum novum a Christo probatum illa etiam opinio omnium declaravit, quia Christum Iesum alii Ioannem, alii Heliam, alii unum aliquem ex veteribus prophetis Herodi adseverabant. Ex quibus quicumque fuisset, non utique ob hoc est suscitatus ut alium deum post resurrectionem praedicaret. Pascit populum in solitudine, de pristino scilicet more. [3] Aut si non eadem et maiestas, ergo iam minor est creatore, qui non uno die sed annis quadraginta, nec de inferioribus materiis panis et piscis sed de manna caelesti, nec quinque circiter sed sexcenta milia hominum protelavit. [4] Adeo autem ea fuit maiestas ut et pabuli exiguitatem non tantum sufficere, veram etiam exuberare de pristino voluerit exemplo. Sic enim et in tempore famis sub Helia viduae Sareptensi modica et suprema alimenta ex prophetae benedictione per totum famis tempus redundaverant. Habes tertiam Basiliarum. [5] Si et quartam resolves, invenies totum hunc ordinem Christi circa illum dei hominem qui oblatos sibi decem hordeaceos panes cum populo distribui iussisset, et minister eius proinde comparata multitudine et pabuli mediocritate respondisset, Quid ego hoc dem in conspectu centum hominum? Da, inquit, et manducabunt, quoniam haec dicit dominus, Manducabunt et relinquent reliquias secundum dictum domini. O Christum et in novis veterem! [6] Haec itaque qui viderat Petrus et cum pristinis compararat, et non tantum retro facta, sed et in futurum iam tunc prophetantia recognoverat, interroganti domino quisnam illis videretur, cum pro omnibus responderet, Tu es Christus, non potest novum eum sensisse Christum, nisi quem noverat in scripturis, quem iam recensebat in factis. Hoc et ipse confirmat usque adhuc patiens, immo et silentium indicens. Si enim Petrus quidem non poterat alium eum confiteri quam creatoris, ille autem praecepit ne cui hoc dicerent, utique id noluit provulgari quod Petrus senserat. [7] Immo, inquis, quia non recte senserat, noluit mendacium disseminari. Sed aliam silentii causam edixit, quia oporteret filium hominis multa pati, et reprobari a presbyteris et scribis et sacerdotibus, et interfici, et post tertium diem resurgere. Quae cum praedicata sint et ipsa in Christum creatoris, sicut suis locis implebimus, sic quoque ipsum se ostendit esse in quem praedicabantur. [8] Certe et si non essent praedicata, eam causam indicti silentii protulit quae non Petri errorem demonstraret, obeundarum passionum necessitatem. Qui voluerit, inquit, animam suam salvam facere, perdet illam, et qui perdiderit eam propter me, salvam faciet eam. Certe filius hominis hanc sententiam emisit. Perspice igitur et tu cum rege Babylonio fornacem eius ardentem, et invenies illic tanquam filium hominis (nondum enim vere erat, nondum scilicet natus ex homine) iam tunc istos exitus constituentem. Salvas facit animas trium fratrum, qui eas pro deo perdere conspiraverant, Chaldaeorum vero perdidit, quas illi per idololatriam salvas facere maluerant. Quae est ista nova doctrina cuius vetera documenta sunt? [9] Quamquam et praedicationes martyriorum tam futurorum quam a deo mercedem relatorum decucurrerunt. Vide, inquit Esaias, quomodo perit iustus, et nemo excipit corde, et viri iusti auferuntur, et nemo considerat. Quando magis hoc fit quam in persecutione sanctorum eius? Utique non simplex, nec de naturae lege communis, sed illa insignis et pro fide militaris, in qua qui animam suam propter deum perdit, servat illam, ut et hic tamen iudicem cognoscas, qui malum animae lucrum perditione eius et bonum animae detrimentum salute eius remuneratur. [10] Sed et zeloten deum mihi exhibet, malum malo reddentem: Qui confusus, inquit, mei fuerit, et ego confundar eius. Quando nec confusionis materia conveniat nisi meo Christo, cuius ordo magis pudendus, ut etiam haereticorum conviciis pateat, omnem nativitatis et educationis foeditatem et ipsius etiam carnis indignitatem quanta amaritudine possunt perorantibus. [11] Ceterum quomodo ille erit obnoxius confusionis qui eam non capit? non vulva licet virginis, tamen feminae, coagulatus, et si non semine, tamen ex lege substantiae corporalis, ex feminae humore, non caro habitus ante formam, non pecus dictus post figuram, non decem mensium cruciatu deliberatus, non subita dolorum concussione cum tanti temporis coeno per corporis cloacam effusus ad terram, nec statim lucem lacrimis auspicatus et primo retinaculi sui vulnere, nec mulso ablutus, nec sale ac melle medicatus, nec pannis iam sepulturae involucrum initiatus, nec exinde per immunditias inter sinus volutatus, molestus uberibus, diu infans, vix puer, tarde homo, sed de caelo expositus, semel grandis, semel totus, statim Christus, spiritus et virtus et deus tantum. Ceterum ut non verus, qui non videbatur, ita nec de crucis maledicto erubescendus, cuius carebat veritate, carens corpore. [12] Non poterat itaque dixisse, Qui mei confusus fuerit. Noster hoc debuit pronuntiasse, minoratus a patre modico citra angelos, vermis et non homo, ignominia hominis et nullificamen populi, quatenus ita voluit ut livore eius sanaremur, ut dedecore eius salus nostra constaret. Et merito se pro suo homine deposuit, pro imagine et similitudine sua, non aliena, ut quoniam homo non erubuerat lapidem et lignum adorans, eadem constantia non confusus de Christo, pro impudentia idololatriae satis deo faceret per impudentiam fidei. Quid horum Christo tuo competit, Marcion, ad meritum confusionis? Plane pudere te debet quod illum ipse finxisti.

argumentum est, immo in tenebris creatoris, quibus discutiendis erat missus, longe etiam discreti a claritate Christi, qui voces et litteras ipsas eorum ab evangelio suo erat separaturus. [3] Sicine alienos demonstrat illos, dum secum habet ? Sic relinquendos docet, quos sibi iungit? Sic destruit, quos de radiis suis exstruit? Quid faceret Christus ipsorum? Credo, secundum perversitatem tales eos revelasset quales Christus Marcionis debuisset, aut quoscunque alios secum quam prophetas suos. Sed quid tam Christus creatoris quam secum ostendere praedicatores suos? cum illis videri quibus in revelationibus erat visus? cum illis loqui qui eum fuerant locuti? cum eis gloriam suam communicare a quibus dominus gloriae nuncupabatur? cum principalibus suis, quorum alter populi informator aliquando, alter reformator quandoque, alter initiator veteris testamenti, alter consummator novi. [4] Igitur et Petrus merito contubernium Christi sui agnoscens individuitate eius suggerit consilium: Bonum est nos hic esse (bonum plane ubi Moyses scilicet et Helias), et faciamus hic tria tabernacula, unum tibi, et Moysi unum, et Heliae unum; sed nesciens quid diceret. Quomodo nesciens? Utrumne simplici errore, an ratione qua defendimus in causa novae prophetiae gratiae ecstasin, id est amentiam, convenire? [5] In spiritu enim homo constitutus, praesertim cum gloriam dei conspicit, vel cum per ipsum deus loquitur, necesse est excidat sensu, obumbratus scilicet virtute divina, de quo inter nos et psychicos quaestio est. Interim facile est amentiam Petri probare. Quomodo enim Moysen et Heliam cognovisset, nisi in spiritu (nec enim imagines eorum vel statuas populus habuisset, et similitudines lege prohibente) nisi quia in spiritu viderat? Et ita quod dixisset in spiritu non in sensu constitutus, scire non poterat. [6] Ceterum si sic nescit quasi errans, eo quod putaret illorum esse Christum, ergo iam constat et supra Petrum interrogatum a Christo quem se existimarent, ut de creatoris dixisse, Tu es Christus; quia si tunc alterius dei illum cognovisset, hic quoque non errasset. Quodsi ideo et hic erravit quia et supra, ergo certus es in illum diem quoque nullam novam divinitatem a Christo revelatam, et usque adhuc non errasse Petrum, Christo usque adhuc nihil eiusmodi revelante, et tamdiu non alterius deputandum Christum quam creatoris, cuius omnem et hic ordinem expressit. [7] Tres de discentibus arbitros futurae visionis et vocis assumit. Et hoc creatoris est. In tribus, inquit, testibus stabit omne verbum. In montem secedit. Agnosco formam loci. Nam et pristinum populum apud montem et visione et voce sua creator initiat. Oportebat in eo suggestu consignari novum testamentum in quo conscriptum vetus fuerat, sub eodem etiam ambitu nubis, quam nemo dubitabit de aere creatoris conglobatam: nisi et nubes suas illo deduxerat, quia et ipse per caelum creatoris viam ruperat; aut proinde et nubilo creatoris precario usus est. [8] Itaque nec nunc muta nubes fuit, sed vox solita de caelo, et patris novum testimonium super filio, ut qui in primo psalmo: Filius meus es tu, ego hodie genui te. De quo et per Esaïam: Quis deum metuens audiat vocem filii eius? [9] Itaque iam repraesentans eum, Hic est filius meus, utique subauditur, Quem repromisi. Si enim repromisit aliquando, et postea dicit, Hic est, eius est exhibentis voce uti in demonstratione promissi qui aliquando promisit, non eius cui possit responderi, Ipse enim tu quis es qui dicas, Hic est filius meus, de quo non magis praemisisti quam te ipsum quod prius eras revelasti? [10] Hunc igitur audite quem ab initio edixerat audiendum in nomine prophetae, quoniam et propheta existimari habebat a populo. Prophetam, inquit Moyses, suscitabit vobis deus ex filiis vestris, secundum carnalem scilicet censem, tanquam me audietis illum: omnis autem qui illum non audierit, exterminabitur anima eius de populo suo. Sic et Esaïas: Quis in vobis metuens <deum>? Exaudiat vocem filii eius. Quam et ipse pater commendaturus erat. Sistens enim, inquit, verba filii sui, dicendo scilicet, Hic est filius meus dilectus, hunc audite. [11] Itaque et si facta translatio sit auditionis a Moyse et Helia in Christum, sed non ut ab alio deo, nec ad alium Christum, sed a creatore in Christum eius, secundum decessionem veteris et successionem novi testamenti. Non legatus, inquit Esaïas, nec nuntius, sed ipse deus salvos eos faciet, ipse iam praedicans et implens legem et prophetas. [12] Tradidit igitur pater filio discipulos novos, ostensis prius cum illo Moyse et Helia in claritatis praerogativa, atque ita dimissis, quasi iam et officio et honore dispunctis, ut hoc ipsum confirmaretur propter Marcionem, societatem esse etiam claritatis Christi cum Moyse et Helia. Totum autem habitum visionis istius habemus etiam apud Abacuc, ubi spiritus ex persona interdum apostolorum: Domine, audiavi auditum tuum, et extimui. Quem magis quam vocis caelestis illius: Hic est filius meus dilectus, hunc audite? Consideravi opera tua, et excidi mente. Quando magis quam cum visa claritate eius nesciit quid diceret Petrus? In medio duorum animalium cognosceris, Moysi et Heliae. De quibus et Zacharias vidit in figura duarum olearum et duorum ramulorum oleae. [13] Nam hi sunt de quibus dictum est illi, Duo filii opimitatis adsistunt domino universae terrae. Et rursum idem Abacuc: Operuit caelos virtus, utique nubilo illo, et splendor eius ut lux erit, utique qua etiam vestitus eius refulsit. Et si commemoremur promissionis Moysi, hic invenietur expuncta. [14] Cum enim desiderasset conspectum domini Moyses dicens, Si ergo inveni gratiam coram te, manifesta te mihi, ut cognoscenter videam te, eum conspectum desiderans in quo hominem esset acturus, quod propheta sciebat. Ceterum, Dei faciem, iam audierat, nemo homo videbit et vivet. Et hunc, inquit, sermonem quem dixisti, faciam tibi. [15] Et rursus Moyses: Ostende mihi gloriam tuam. Et dominus similiter de futuro: Ego praecedam in gloria mea, et reliqua. Et in novissimo: Et tunc videbis posteriora mea. Non lumbos, nec suras, sed quam desideraverat gloriam in posterioribus temporibus revelandam. In qua facie ad faciem visibilem se ei repromiserat, etiam ad Aaronem dicens, Et si fuerit propheta in vobis, in visione cognoscat illi, et in visione loquar ad eum, non quomodo ad Moysen: os ad os loquar ad eum in specie (utique hominis, quam erat gestaturus), non in aenigmate. [16] Nam et si Marcion noluit eum colloquentem domino ostensum, sed stantem, tamen et stans os ad os stabat et faciem ad faciem cum illo, inquit, non extra illum, in gloriam ipsius, nedum in conspectu. De qua gloria non aliter illustratus discessit a Christo quam solebat a creatore, proinde tunc oculos percutere filiorum Israelis quemadmodum et nunc excaecati Marcionis, qui hoc quoque argumentum adversus se facere non vidit.

23. [1] Suscipio in me personam Israelis. Stet Christus Marcionis et exclamet: O genitura incredula, quousque ero apud vos? quousque sustinebo vos? Statim a me audire debebit: Quisquis es, e0perxo&mene, prius ede quis sis, et a quo venias, et quod in nobis tibi ius. Usque adhuc creatoris est totum apud te. Plane si ab illo venis et illi agis, admittimus increpationem. [2] Si vero ab alio, dicas velim quid nobis unquam de tuo commisisti quod credere debuissimus, ut exprobres incredulitatem, qui nec te ipsum aliquando nobis revelasti? Quam olim apud nos agere coepisti, ut tempus queraris? In quibus nos sustinuisti, ut patientiam imputes? Asinus de Aesopi puteo modo venis, et iam exclamas. Suscipio adhuc et personam discipulorum, in quos insiliit. O natio incredula, quamdiu ero vobiscum, quamdiu vos sustinebo? Hanc eruptionem eius utique hoc modo iustissime reprecuterem: Quisquis es, e0perxo&mene, prius ede qui sis, a quo venias, quod tibi ius sit in nobis. [3] Usque adhuc, puto, creatoris es, et ideo secuti sumus recognoscentes omnia

illius in te. Quodsi ab illo venis, admittimus increpationem. Si vero alii agis, oro te dicas, quid nobis aliquando commisisti duntaxat de tuo quod iam credidisse debuissimus, ut exprobres incredulitatem, qui nec auctorem tuum usque adhuc edis? Quam olim autem apud nos agere coepisti, ut tempus quoque opponas? In quibus autem nos sustinuisti, ut et patientiam iactes? Asinus de Aesopi puteo modo huc apparuit, et iam exclamat. [4] Quis non ita iniustitiam increpationis retudisset, si eius eum credidisset qui nondum queri debuisset? Nisi quod nec ille eos insilisset, si non olim apud illos in lege, in prophetis, in virtutibus et beneficiis deversatus incredulos semper fuisset expertus. Sed ecce Christus diligit parvulos, tales esse docens debere qui semper maiores velint esse. Creator autem ursos pueris immisit, ulciscens Helisaeum propheten convicia ab eis passum. [5] Satis impudens antithesis, cum tam diversa committit, parvulos et pueros, innocentem adhuc aetatem, et iudicii iam capacem, quae conviciari poterat, ne dicam blasphemare. Qua ergo iustus deus, nec pueris impiis pepercit, exigens maiori aetati honorem, et utique magis a minore; qua vero bonus, adeo diligit parvulos, ut apud Aegyptum benefecerit obstetricibus, protegentibus partus Hebraeos periclitantes edicto Pharaonis. [6] Ita et haec affectio Christi cum creatore est. Iam nunc deus Marcionis, qui connubium adversatur, quomodo videri potest parvulorum dilector, quorum tota causa connubium est? Qui semen odit, fructum quoque exsecretur necesse est. Nae ille saevior habendus Aegyptio rege. [7] Nam Pharaon educari non sinebat infantes, iste nec nasci, auferens vitam illis etiam decem mensium in utero. At enim quanto credibilius ut eius deputetur affectio in parvulos qui benedicendo connubium in propagationem generis humani ipsum quoque fructum connubii benedicendo promisit, qui de infantia primus est? [8] Repraesentat creator ignium plagam Heliam postulante in illo pseudopropheta. Agnosco iudicis severitatem: e contrario Christi <lenitatem, increpantis> eandem animadversionem destinantes discipulos super illum viculum Samaritarum. Agnoscat et haereticus ab eodem severissimo iudice promitti hanc Christi lenitatem. Non contendet, inquit, nec vox eius in platea audietur: harundinem quassatam non comminuet, et linum fumigans non extinguet. [9] Talis utique multo magis homines non erat crematurus. Nam et tunc ad Heliam, Non in igni, inquit, dominus sed in spiritu miti. At enim humanissimus deus cur recusat eum qui se tam individuum illi comitem offert? Si quia superbe vel ex hypocrisi dixerat, Sequar te quocunque ieris, ergo aut superbiam aut hypocrisin recusandam iudicando iudicem gessit. [10] Et utique damnavit quem recusavit, non consecuturum scilicet salutem. Nam sicut ad salutem vocat quem non recusat, vel etiam quem ultro vocat, ita in perditionem damnat quem recusat. Illi autem causato patris sepulturam cum respondet, Sine mortui sepeliant mortuos suos, tu autem vade et annuntia regnum dei, utramque legem creatoris manifeste confirmavit, et de sacerdotio in Levitico prohibentem sacerdotes supremis etiam parentum interesse (Super omnem, inquit, animam defunctam sacerdos non introibit, et super patrem suum non contaminabitur), et de devotione in Arithmis; nam et illic qui se deo voverit inter cetera iubet ne super ullam animam introeat defunctam, ne super patris quidem aut matris aut fratris. [11] Puto autem et devotioni et sacerdotio destinabat quem praedicando regno dei imbuerat. Aut si non ita est, satis impius pronuntiandus qui nulla ratione legis intercedente sepulturas parentum despici a filiis imperabat. Cum vero et tertium illum prius suis valedicere parantem prohibet retro respectare, sectam creatoris exequitur. Hoc et ille noluerat fecisse quos ex Sodomis liberarat.

24. [1] Adlegit et alios septuaginta apostolos super duodecim. Quo enim duodecim secundum totidem fontes in Elim, si non et septuaginta secundum totidem arbusta palmarum? Antitheses plurimum causarum diversitas fecit, non potestatum. Sed qui diversitatem causarum non respexit, facile eam potestatum existimavit. Profectionem filiorum Israelis creator etiam illis spoliis aureorum et argenteorum vasculorum et vestium praeter oneribus consparsionum offarcinatam educit ex Aegypto, Christus autem nec virgam discipulis in viam ferre praescripsit. [2] Illi enim in solitudinem promovebantur, hi autem in civitates mittebantur. Considera causarum offerentiam, et intelleges unam et eandem potestatem quae secundum penuriam et copiam expeditionem suorum disposuit, proinde per civitates abundaturam circumcidens sicut et egituram per solitudinem struxerat. Etiam calciamenta portare vetuit illos. Ipse enim erat sub quo nec in solitudine per tot annos populus calciamenta detriverat. Neminem, inquit, per viam salutaveritis. [3] O Christum destructorem prophetarum, a quibus hoc quoque accepit! Helisaeus, cum Giezin puerum suum mitteret in viam ad filium Sunamitidis resuscitandum de morte, puto sic ei praecepit: Accinge lumbos tuos et sume bacillum meum in manum et vade: quemcunque conveneris in via, ne benedixeris eum, id est ne salutaveris, et qui te benedixerit, ne responderis ei, id est ne resalutaveris. Quae est enim inter vias benedictio nisi ex occurso mutua salutatio? [4] Sic et dominus, in quam introissent domum, pacem ei dicere. Exemplo eodem est. Mandavit enim et hoc Helisaeus, cum introisset ad Sunamitin, diceret ei, Pax viro tuo, pax filio tuo. Haec erunt potius nostrae antitheses, quae comparant, non quae separant Christum. Dignus est autem operarius mercede sua, quis magis pronuntiarit quam deus iudex? quia et hoc ipsum iudicare est, dignum facere mercede operarium. Nulla retributio non ex iudicatione constituit. Iam nunc et hic lex consignatur creatoris, etiam boves operantes dignos operarios mercede iudicantis. Bovi, inquit, terenti os non colligabis. [5] Quis tam praestans in homines nisi qui et in pecudes? Quodsi et Christus dignos pronuntiat mercede operarios, excusavit praeceptum illud creatoris de vasis aureis et argenteis Aegyptiorum auferendis. Qui enim villas et urbes operati fuerant Aegyptiis, digni utique operarii mercede, non ad fraudem sunt instructi sed ad mercedis compensationem, quam alias a dominatoribus exigere non poterant. Regnum dei neque novum neque inauditum sic quoque confirmavit, dum illud iubet annuntiari appropinquasse. Quod enim longe fuerit aliquando, id potest dici appropinquasse. [6] Si autem nunquam retro fuisset antequam appropinquasset, nec dici potuisset appropinquasse quod nunquam longe fuisset. Omne quod novum et incognitum est, subitum est. Omne quod subitum est cum annuntiatur, tunc primum speciem inducens tunc primum accipit tempus. Ceterum nec retro tardasse poterit quamdiu non annuntiabatur, nec ex quo annuntiari coeperit appropinquasse. [7] Etiam adicit, ut eis qui illos non recepissent dicerent, Scitote tamen appropinquasse regnum dei. Si hoc non et comminationis gratia mandat, vanissime mandat. Quid enim ad illos si appropinquaret regnum, nisi quia cum iudicio appropinquat, in salutem scilicet eorum qui annuntiationem eius recepissent? Quomodo, si comminatio non potest sine executione, habes deum executorem in comminatore et iudicem in utroque. Sic et pulverem iubet excuti in illos in testificationem, et haerentia terrae eorum, nedum communicationis reliquae. [8] Si enim inhumanitas et inhospitalitas nullam ab eo relaturae sunt ultionem, cui rei praemittit testificationem, minas utique portendentem? Porro cum etiam creator in Deuteronomio Ammonitas et Moabitas prohibeat recipi in ecclesiam, quod populum Aegypto profectum inhumane et inhospitaliter copiis defraudassent, ergo in Christum inde manasse constabit communicationis interdictum ubi habet formam, Qui vos spernit, me spernit. Hoc et Moysi creator: Non te contempserunt, sed me. Tam enim apostolus Moyses quam et apostoli prophetae. [9] Aequanda erit auctoritas utriusque officii, ab uno eodemque domino apostolorum et prophetarum. Quis nunc dabit potestatem calcandi super colubros et scorpios? Utrumne omnium animalium dominus, an nec unius lacertae deus? Sed bene quod creator hanc potestatem etiam parvulis pueris per Esaiam repromisit, conicere manum in cavernam aspidum et in cubile natorum aspidum, nec omnino laedi. [10] Et utique scimus (salva simplicitate scripturae, nam nec et ipsae bestiae nocere potuerunt ubi fides fuerit) figurate scorpios et colubros portendi spiritualia malitiae, quorum ipse quoque princeps in serpentis et draconis et eminentissimae cuiusque bestiae nomine deputetur penes creatorem, largitum hanc potestatem priori Christo suo, sicut nonagesimus psalmus ad eum: Super aspidem et basiliscum incedes, et conculcabis leonem et draconem. Sicut etiam Esaias: Illa die superducat dominus deus machaeram sanctam, magnam et fortem, Christum scilicet suum, in draconem illum, colubrum magnum et tortuosum, et interficiet eum illa die. [11] Sed cum idem, Via munda et via sancta vocabitur, et non transibit illic immundum, nec erit illic via immunda, qui autem dispersi erunt vadent in ea et non errabunt, et non erit iam illic leo, nec ex bestiis pessimis quicquam ascendet in eam nec invenietur illic, cum via fidem demonstret per quam ad deum perveniemus, iam tunc eidem viae, id est fidei, hanc evacuationem et subiectionem bestiarum pollicetur. [12] Denique et tempora promissionis congruere invenias, si quae antecedunt legas: Invalescite manus dimissae et genua resoluta: tunc patefient oculi caecorum, et aures exaudient surdorum: tunc saliet claudus ut cervus, et clara erit lingua mutorum. Igitur ubi medicinarum edidit beneficia, tunc et scorpios et serpentes sanctis suis subdidit, ille scilicet qui hanc potestatem ut et aliis praestaret prior acceperat a patre, et secundum ordinem praedicationis exhibuit.

25. [1] Quis dominus caeli invocabitur qui non prius factor ostenditur? Gratias enim, inquit, ago, et confiteor, domine caeli, quod ea quae erant abscondita sapientibus et prudentibus, revelaveris parvulis. Quae ista? et cuius? et a quo abscondita? et a quo revelata? Si a deo Marcionis abscondita et revelata, qui omnino nihil praemiserat in quo aliquid absconditum esse potuisset, non prophetias, non parabolas, non visiones, non ulla rerum aut

verborum aut nominum argumenta per allegorias et figuras vel aenigmatum nebulas obumbrata, [2] sed ipsam magnitudinem sui absconderat, quam cum maxime per Christum revelabat, satis inique. Quid enim deliquerant sapientes et prudentes, ut absconderetur illis deus, ad quem cognoscendum non suffecerat sapientia atque prudentia illoruxn? Nulla via data ab ipso per aliquam operum praedicationem, vel vestigia per quae sapientes atque prudentes deducerentur. Quamquam et si in aliquo deliquissent erga deum ignotum, pone nunc notum, non tamen zeloten eum experiri debuissent, qui dissimilis creatoris inducitur. [3] Igitur si nec materias praemiserat in quibus aliquid occultasset, nec reos habuerat a quibus occultasset, nec debuerat occultasse etiam si habuisset, iam nec revelator ipse erit, qui absconditor non fuit, ita nec dominus caeli nec pater Christi; sed ille in quem competunt omnia. Nam et abscondit praemisso obscuritatis propheticae instrumento, cuius intellectum fides mereretur (Nisi enim credideritis, non intellegetis) et reos habuit sapientes atque prudentes ex ipsis operibus tot ac tantis intellegibilem deum non requirentes vel perperam in illum philosophantes et ingenia haereticis subministrantes, et novissime zelotes est. [4] Denique olim hoc per Esaïam contionabatur quod Christus gratulatur: Perdam sapientiam sapientium et prudentiam prudentium celabo. Sicut et alibi tam abscondisse quam revelaturum esse significat: Et dabo illis thesauros absconditos, invisibiles aperiam illis. Et rursus: Quis alius disiciet signa ventriloquorum et divinationes ex corde, avertens in posteriora sapientes et cogitationes eorum infatuans? [5] Si autem et Christum suum illuminatorem nationum designavit: Posui te in lucem nationum, quas interpretamur in nomine parvulorum, sensu scilicet retro parvas et imprudentia infantes, iam vero et humilitate fidei pusillas, facilius utique credemus eundem etiam parvulis revelasse per Christum qui et retro absconderit et per Christum revelationem repromiserit. [6] Aut si deus Marcionis ea quae a creatore abscondita retro fuerant patefecit, ergo iam creatori negotium gessit, res eius edisserens. Sed in destructionem, inquis, uti traduceret eas. Ergo illis traduxisse debuerat quibus creator abscondidit, sapientibus et prudentibus. Si enim benignitate faciebat, illis erat agnitio praestanda quibus fuerat negata, non parvulis quibus nihil creator inviderat. [7] Et tamen usque adhuc, puto, probamus exstructionem potius legis et prophetarum inveniri in Christo quam destructionem. Omnia sibi tradita dicit a patre. Credas, si creatoris est Christus, cuius omnia: quia non minori se tradidit omnia filio creator quae pereum condidit, per sermonem suum scilicet. Ceterum si eŋperxo&menoj ille, quae sunt omnia quae illi a patre sunt tradita? Quae sunt creatoris? [8] Ergo bona sunt quae pater filio tradidit, et bonus iam creator cuius omnia bona sunt, et ille iam non bonus qui in aliena bona invasit, ut filio traderet. Docens alieno abstinere, certe mendicissimus qui nec filium unde ditaret habuit nisi de alieno. Aut si nihil de creatoris traditum est ei a patre, ecquomodo hominem creatoris sibi vindicat? Aut si solus homo ei traditus est, omnia homo non est. Scriptura autem omnium edicit traditionem filio factam. [9] Sed et si omnia ad hominum genera, id est ad omnes nationes, interpretaberis, et has filio tradidisse creatoris est: Dabo tibi gentes haereditatem tuam et possessionem tuam terminos terrae. Aut si habet et ipse aliqua sua quae omnia filio traderet pariter cum homine creatoris, ostende unum aliquod ex omnibus in fidem, in exemplum, ne tam merito non credam eius esse omnia cuius nihil video, quam merito credam etiam quae non video eius esse cuius sunt universa quae video. [10] Sed, Nemo scit qui sit pater, nisi filius, et qui sit filius, nisi pater, et cuicumque filius revelaverit. Atque ita Christus ignotum deum praedicavit. Hinc enim et alii haeretici fulciuntur, opposcentes creatorem omnibus notum, et Israeli secundum familiaritatem et nationibus secundum naturam. Et quomodo ipse testatur nec Israeli cognitum se? Israel autem me non cognovit, et populus me non intellexit; nec nationibus? [11] Ecce enim nec de nationibus, inquit, nemo. Propter quod et illas stillicidium situlae deputavit, et Sionem tanquam speculam in vinea dereliquit. Vide ergo an confirmatio sit prophetae vocis exprobrantis ignorantiam in deum humanam, quae fuerit ad filium usque. Nam et ideo subtexuit ab eo cognosci patrem cui filius revelaverit, quoniam ipse erat qui positus a patre illuminatio nationum annuntiabatur, utique de deo illuminandarum, etiam Israelis, utique per agnitionem dei plenior. [12] Ita non proficient argumenta in fidem dei alterius quae creatori competere possunt, quia quae non competunt creatori, haec poterunt in fidem proficere dei alterius. Si et sequentia inspicias, Beati oculi qui vident quae videtis: dico enim vobis, quia prophetae non viderunt quae vos videtis, de superiori sensu descendunt, adeo neminem ut decuit deum cognovisse, quando nec prophetae vidissent quae sub Christo videbantur. [13] Nam si non meus esset Christus, nec prophetarum hoc in loco mentionem collocasset. Quid enim mirum si non viderant res dei ignoti et tanto post aevo revelati? Quae autem fuisset felicitas eorum qui tunc videbant quae alii merito vidisse non poterant, si non erant consecuti repraesentationem eorum quae nunquam praedicarant, nisi quoniam qui poterant vidisse aequae dei sui res, quas etiam praedicaverant, non tamen viderant? Haec autem felicitas erit aliorum qui videbant quae alii tantum praedicaverant. [14] Denique ostendemus, et iam ostendimus, ea visa in Christo quae fuerant praedicata, abscondita tamen et ab ipsis prophetis, ut absconderentur et a sapientibus et a prudentibus saeculi. In evangelio veritatis legis doctor dominum aggressus, Quid faciens, inquit, vitam aeternam consequar? In haeretico vita solummodo posita est, sine aeternae mentione, ut doctor de ea vita videatur consuluisse quae in lege promittitur a creatore longaeva, et dominus ideo illi secundum legem responsum dedisse, Diliges dominum deum tuum ex toto corde tuo et ex tota anima tua et totis viribus tuis, quoniam de lege vitae sciscitabatur. [15] Sed sciebat utique legis doctor quo pacto vitam legalem consequi posset, ut non de ea interrogasset cuius regulas etiam docebat. Sed quia et mortui iam suscitabantur a Christo, exsuscitatus ad spem aeternae vitae per exempla recidivae, ne plus aliquid observationis exigeret sublimior spes, idcirco consuluit de aeternae vitae consecutione. Itaque dominus, ut nec ipse alius, nec aliud novum inferens praeceptum quam quod principaliter ad omnem salutem et utramque vitam facit, ipsum caput ei legis opponit, omnifariam diligendi dominum deum suum. [16] Denique si de vita longaeva et ille consuluit et Christus respondit, quae sit penes creatorem, non de aeterna quae sit penes Marcionis deum, quomodo consequitur aeternam? Non utique eodem modo quo et longaevam. Pro differentia enim mercedum operarum quoque credenda distantia est. Ergo non ex dilectione dei tui consequetur vitam aeternam Marcionites, sicut longaevam dilector creatoris. [17] Sed quale est ut non magis diligendus sit qui aeternam pollicetur, si diligendus est qui longaevam repromittit? Ergo eiusdem erit utraque vita, cum eadem est utrique vitae captanda disciplina. Quod creator docet, id et Christo opus est diligi ut praestet, interveniente et hic illa praescriptione qua facilius apud eum debeant credi maiora apud quem minora praecedunt quam apud eum cui nullam de maioribus fidem aliqua minora praeparaverunt. [18] Viderit nunc si aeternam nostri addiderunt. Hoc mihi satis est, quod Christus ille aeternae, non longae, vitae invitator de longaeva consultus quam destruebat, non ad aeternam potius exhortatus est hominem quam inferebat. Quid, oro te, fecisset Christus creatoris si qui

26. [1] Cum in quodam loco orasset ad patrem illum superiorem, satis impudentibus et temerariis oculis suspiciens ad caelum creatoris, a quo tam aspero et saevo et grandine et fulmine potuisset elidi, sicut et Hierusalem suffigi ab eo potuit, aggressus eum ex discipulis quidam, Domine, inquit, doce nos orare, sicut et Ioannes discipulos suos docuit, scilicet quia alium deum aliter existimaret orandum. Hoc qui praesumpserit, prius est probet alium deum editum a Christo. [2] Nemo enim ante voluisset orare nosse quam didicisset quem oraret. Igitur si didicerat, proba. Si nusquam usque adhuc probas, scito illum in creatorem formam orationis postulasse, in quem etiam discipuli Ioannis orabant. Sed quia et Ioannes novum aliquem ordinem orationis induxerat, ideo hoc et a Christo discipulus eius expostulandum non immerito praesumpserat, ut et illi de proprio magistri sui instituto non alium, sed aliter, deum orarent. [3] Proinde nec Christus ante orationis notitiam discipulo contulisset quam dei ipsius. Ita et ipse in eum docuit orationem quem discipulus usque adhuc noverat. Denique sensus orationis quem deum sapiant recognosce. Cui dicam, Pater? ei qui me omnino non fecit, a quo originem non traho, an ei qui me faciundo et instruendo generavit? [4] A quo spiritum sanctum postulem? a quo nec mundialis spiritus praestatur, an a quo fiunt etiam angeli spiritus, cuius et in primordio spiritus super aquas ferebatur? Eius regnum optabo venire quem nunquam regem gloriae audiui, an in cuius manu etiam corda sunt regum? Quis dabit mihi panem cotidianum? qui nec milium mihi condit, an qui etiam de caelo panem angelorum cotidianum populo suo praestitit? Quis mihi delicta dimittet? qui ea non iudicando non retinet, an qui, si non dimiserit, retinebit ut iudicet? [5] Quis non sinet nos deduci in temptationem? quem poterit temptator non timere, an qui a primordio temptatorem angelum praedamnavit? Hoc ordine qui alii deo supplicat et non creatori, non orat illum sed infamat. Proinde a quo petam ut accipiam? apud quem quaeram ut inveniam? ad quem pulsabo ut aperiatur mihi? quis habet petenti dare, nisi cuius omnia, cuius sum etiam ipse qui peto? Quid autem perdidit apud deum illum, ut apud eum quaeram et inveniam? [6] Si sapientiam atque prudentiam, has creator abscondit: apud eum ergo quaeram. Si salutem et vitam, et has apud creatorem. Nihil alibi quaeretur ut inveniatur quam ubi latuit ut appareat. Sic nec aliorum pulsabo quam unde sum fugatus. Denique si accipere et invenire et admitti laboris et instantiae fructus est illi qui petiit et quaesivit et pulsavit, intellege haec a creatore mandari et repromitti. [7] Ille enim deus optimus ultro veniens ad praestandum non suo homini, nullum illi laborem nec instantiam indixisset: iam enim non optimus, si non ultro daret non petenti, et invenire praestaret non quaerenti, et aperiret non pulsanti. Creator autem potuit indicare ista per Christum, ut, quia delinquendo homo offenderat deum suum, laboraret, et instantia petendi acciperet, et quaerendi inveniret, et pulsandi introiret. [8] Sic et praemissa similitudo nocturnum panis petito rem amicum facit non alienum, et ad amicum pulsantem, non ad ignotum. Amicus autem, etiam si offendit, magis creatoris est homo quam dei Marcionis. Itaque ad eum pulsatur ad quem ius illi erat, cuius ianuam norat, quem habere panes sciebat, cubantem iam cum infantibus quos nasci voluerat. Etiam quod sero pulsatur, creatoris est tempus. Illius et serum cuius saeculum et saeculi occasus. Ad deum autem novum nemo sero pulsasset, tantum quod lucescentem. Creator est qui et ianuam olim nationibus clausit, quae olim pulsabatur a Iudaeis; [9] is et exsurgit et dat, etsi iam non quasi amico, non tamen quasi extraneo homini, sed quasi molesto, inquit. Molestum autem tam cito deus recens neminem pati potuit. Agnosce igitur et patrem quem etiam appellas creatorem. Ipse est qui scit quid filii postulent. Nam et panem petentibus de caelo dedit manna, et carnem desiderantibus emisit ortygometram; non serpentem pro pisce, nec scorpionem pro ovo. Illius autem erit non dare malum pro bono cuius utrumque sit. Ceterum deus Marcionis non habens scorpionem non poterat id se dicere non daturum quod non habebat, sed ille qui habens et scorpionem non dat. [10] Itaque et spiritum sanctum is dabit apud quem est et non sanctus. Cum surdum daemonium expulisset (ut et in ista specie curationis Esiae occurrisset), in Beelzebub dictus eicere daemonia, Si ego, inquit, in Beelzebub eicio daemonia, filii vestri in quo eiciunt? hac voce quid magis portendit quam in eo eicere se in quo et filii eorum? In virtute scilicet creatoris. Nam si putas sic accipiendum: [11] Si ego in Beelzebub filii vestri in quo, quasi illos suggillaret in Beelzebub eicientes, resistet tibi prior sensus, non posse satanam dividi adversus semetipsum. Adeo nec illi in Beelzebub eiciebant, sed, ut diximus, in virtute creatoris, quam ut intellegi faceret, subiungit: Quodsi ego in digito dei expello daemonia, ergone appropinquavit in vos regnum dei? Apud Pharaonem enim venefici illi adhibiti adversus Moysen virtutem creatoris digitum dei appellaverunt. Digitus dei est hoc quod significaret etiam modicum, validissimum tamen. Hoc et Christus ostendens, commemorator, non obliterator, vetustatum scilicet suarum, virtutem dei digitum dei dixit, non alterius intellegendum quam eius apud quem hoc erat appellata. Ergo et regnum ipsius appropinquaverat cuius et virtus digitus vocabatur. [12] Merito igitur applicuit ad parabolam fortis illius armati, quem validior alius oppressit, principem daemoniorum, quem Beelzebub et satanam supra dixerat, significans digito dei oppressum, non creatorem ab alio deo subactum. Ceterum quomodo adhuc staret regnum eius in suis terminis et legibus et officiis quem, licet integro mundo, vel sic potuisset videri superasse validior ille deus Marcionis, si non secundum legem eius etiam Marcionitae morerentur, in terram defluendo, saepe et a scorpio docti non esse superatum creatorem? [13] Exclamat mulier de turba beatum utrum qui illum portasset, et ubera quae illum educassent. Et dominus, Immo beati qui sermonem dei audiunt et faciunt: quia et retro sic reiecerat matrem aut fratres, dum auditores et obsecutores dei praefert. Nam nec hic mater assistebat illi. Adeo nec retro negaverat natum. Cum id rursus audit, rursus proinde felicitatem ab utero et uberibus matris suae transtulit in discipulos, a qua non transtulisset si eam non haberet.

27. [1] Alibi malo purgare quae reprehendunt Marcionitae in creatore. Hic enim sufficit si ea in Christo reperiuntur. Ecce inaequalis et ipse, inconstans, levis, aliud docens aliud faciens, iubet omni petenti dare, et ipse signum petentibus non dat. Tanto aevo lucem suam ab hominibus abscondit, et negat lucernam abstrudendam, sed confirmat super candelabrum proponendam, ut omnibus luceat. Vetat remaledicere, multo magis utique maledicere, et Vae ingerit pharisaeis et doctoribus legis. Quis est tam similis dei mei Christus nisi ipsius? [2] Saepe iam fiximus nullo modo potuisse illum destructorem legis denotari si alium deum promulgasset. Ideo et tunc phariseus, qui illum vocarat ad prandium, retractabat penes se cur non prius tinctus esset quam recubisset, secundum legem, qui deum legis circumferret. Iesus autem etiam interpretatus est ei legem, dicens illos calicis et catini exteriora emundare, interiora autem ipsorum plena esse rapina et iniquitate, ut significaret vasculorum munditias hominum esse intellegendas apud deum; quia et phariseus de homine, non de calice illoto, apud se tractaverat. Ideo exteriora, inquit, calicis lavatis, id est carnem, interiora autem vestra non emundatis, id est animam; adiciens, Nonne qui exteriora fecit, id est carnem, et interiora fecit, id est animam? [3] quo dicto aperte demonstravit ad eundem deum pertinere munditias hominis exterioris et interioris cuius uterque sit, praeponentis misericordiam non modo lavacro hominis, sed etiam sacrificio. Subiungit enim, Date quae habetis eleemosynam, et omnia munda erunt vobis. Quodsi et alius potest deus misericordiam mandasse, non tamen ante quam cognitus. Porro et hic apparet illos non de deo increpitos, sed de eius disciplina a quo illis et figurate vasculorum munditiae et manifeste misericordiarum opera imperabantur. [4] Sic et holuscula decimantes, vocationem autem et dilectionem dei praetereuntes obiurgat. Cuius dei vocationem et dilectionem, nisi cuius et rutam et mentam ex forma legis de decimis offerebant? Totum enim exprobrationis hoc erat quod modica curabant, ei utique cui maiora non exhibebant, dicenti, Diliges dominum deum tuum, ex toto corde tuo, et ex tota anima tua, et ex totis viribus tuis, qui te vocavit ex Aegypto. Ceterum nec tempus admisisset ut Christus tam praecoquam, immo tam acerbam adhuc dilectionem expostularet novo et recenti deo, ne dixerim nondum palam facto. [5] Primatum quoque captantes locorum et honorem salutationum cum incusat, sectam creatoris administrat, eiusmodi principes Sodomorum archontas appellantis, prohibentis etiam confidere in praepositos, immo et in totum miserrimum hominem pronuntiantis qui spem habet in homine. Quodsi propterea quis affectat principatum, ut de officiis aliorum gloriatur, qui officia vetuit eiusmodi sperandi et confidendi in hominem, idem et affectatores principatum increpuit. [6] Invehitur et in doctores ipsos legis, quod onerarent alios importabilibus oneribus, quae ipsi ne digito quidem aggredi auderent, non legis onera suggillans quasi detestator eius. Quomodo enim detestator, qui cum maxime potiora legis praetereuntes incusabat, eleemosynam et vocationem et dilectionem dei, ne haec quidem gravia, nedum decimas rutarum et munditias catinorum? Ceterum excusandos potius censuisset si importabilia portare non possent. Sed quae onera taxat? [7] quae ipsi de suo exaggerabant, docentes praecepta doctrinas hominum, commodorum suorum causa iungentes domum ad domum, ut quae proximi sunt auferrent, clamantes populum, amantes munera, sectantes retributionem, diripientes iudicata pauperam, uti esset illis vidua in rapinam et pupillus in praedam. De quibus idem Esaias: Vae qui valent in Hierusalem; et rursus: Qui vos postulant, dominantur vestri. Qui magis quam legis doctores? Hi si et Christo displicebant, ut sui displicebant. Alienae enim legis doctores non omnino pulsasset. [8] Cur autem Vae audiunt etiam quod aedificarent prophetis monimenta interemptis a patribus eorum, laude potius digni, qui ex isto opere pietatis testabantur se non consentire factis patrum, si non erat zelotes, qualem arguunt Marcionitae, delicta patrum de filiis exigentem usque in quartam nativitatem? [9] Quam vero clavem habebant legis doctores nisi interpretationem legis? ad cuius intellectum neque psi adibant, non credentes scilicet (Nisi enim credideritis, non intellegetis), neque alios admittebant, utique docentes praecepta potius et doctrinas hominum. Qui ergo nec ipsos introeuntes nec aliis aditum praestantes increpabat, obrectator habendus est legis an fautor? Si obrectator, placere debebant et praeclusores legis; si fautor, iam non et aemulus legis. [10] Sed haec omnia ad infuscandum creatorem ingerebat, ut saevum, erga quem delinquentes Vae habituri essent. Et quis saevum non potius timeret provocare deficiendo ab eo? Tanto magis ergo demerendum docebat quem timendum ingerebat. Sic oportebat Christum creatoris.

28. [1] Merito itaque non placebat illi hypocrisis pharisaeorum, labiis scilicet amantium deum, non corde. Cavete, inquit discipulis, a fermento pharisaeorum, quod est hypocrisis, non praedicatio creatoris. Odit contumaces patris filius, non vult suos tales existere in illum, non in alium, in quem hypocrisis fuisset admissa, cuius exemplum a discipulis caveretur. [2] Ita pharisaeorum prohibet exemplum. In eum prohibebat illud admitti in quem admittebant pharisaei. Igitur quoniam hypocrisim eorum taxarat, utique celantem occulta cordis et incredulitatis secreta superficialibus officiis obumbrantem, quae clavem agnitionis habens ne ipsa introiret nec alios sineret, ideo adicit, Nihil autem opertum, quod non patefiet, et nihil absconditum, quod non dinoscetur; ne quis existimet illum dei ignoti retro et occulti revelationem et adagnitionem intentare, cum subiciat etiam quae inter se mussitarent vel tractarent, scilicet super ipso dicentes, Hic non expellit daemonia nisi in Beelzebub, in apertum processura, et in ore hominum futura, ex evangelii promulgatione. [3] Dehinc conversus ad discipulos, Dico autem, inquit, vobis amicis, nolite terreri ab eis qui vos solummodo occidere possunt, nec post hoc ullam in vobis habent potestatem. Sed iis erit Esaias praedicens: Vide quomodo iustus aufertur, et nemo advrtit. Demonstrabo autem vobis

quem timeatis: Timete eumqui postquam occiderit, potestatem habet mittendi in gehennam; creatorem utique significans: Itaque dico vobis, hunc timeate. Et hoc in loco sufficeret mihi si quem timeri iubet offendi vetat, et quem offendi vetat demereri iubet, et qui haec mandat ipsius est cui timendo et non offendendo et demerendo procurat. [4] Sed habeo et de sequentibus sumere. Dico enim vobis, omnis qui confitebitur in me coram hominibus, confitebor in illo coram deo. Qui confitebuntur autem in Christo, occidi habebunt coram hominibus, nihil utique amplius passuri post occisionem ab illis. Hi ergo erunt quos supra praemonet ne timeant tantummodo occidi; ideo praemittens non timendam occisionem, ut subiungeret sustinendam confessionem: Et omnis qui negaverit me coram hominibus, denegabitur coram deo, ab eo utique qui illum confitentem confessurus fuisset. [5] Si enim confessorem confitebitur, ipse est qui et negatorem negabit. Porro si confessor est cui nihil timendum est post occisionem, negator erit cui timendum est etiam post mortem. Itaque cum creatoris sit quod timendum est post mortem, gehennae scilicet poena, et negator ergo creatoris est. Si autem negator, et confessor, qui post occisionem nihil ab homine passurus est, a deo plane passurus si negaret. Atque ita Christus creatoris est, qui ostendit negatores suos creatoris gehennam timere debere. [6] Post deterritam itaque negationem sequitur et blasphemiae formidandae admonitio: Qui dixerit in filium hominis, remittetur illi, qui autem dixerit in spiritum sanctum, non remittetur ei. Quodsi iam et remissio et retentio delicti iudicem deum sapiunt, huius erit spiritus sanctus non blasphemandus, non remissuri scilicet blasphemiam, sicut et supra non negandus, occisuri scilicet etiam in gehennam. [7] Quodsi et blasphemiam Christus a creatore avertit, quomodo adversarius ei venerit non scio. Aut si et per haec severitatem eius infuscat, non remissuri blasphemiam et occisuri etiam in gehennam, superest ut et illius diversi dei impune et spiritus blasphemetur et Christus negetur, et nihil intersit de cultu eius deve contemptu, et sicut de contemptu nulla poena, ita et de cultu nulla speranda sit merces. Perductos ad potestates prohibet ad interrogationem cogitare de responsione: Sanctus enim, inquit, spiritus docebit vos ipsa hora quid eloqui debeatis. [8] Si eiusmodi documentum creatoris est, eius erit et praeceptum cuius praecessit exemplum. Balaam propheta in Arithmis arcessitus a rege Balach ad maledicendum Israel, cum quo proelium inibat, simul spiritu implebatur, non ad quam venerat maledictionem, sed quam illi ipsa hora spiritus suggerebat benedictionem pronuntiabat, ante professus apud nuntios regis, mox etiam apud ipsum, id se pronuntiaturum quod deus ori eius indidisset. Hae sunt novae doctrinae novi Christi, quas olim famuli creatoris initiaverunt. [9] Ecce plane diversum exemplum Moysi et Christi. Moyses rixantibus fratribus ultro intercedit et iniuriosum increpat: Quid proximum tuum percutis? Et reicitur ab illo: Quis te constituit magistrum aut iudicem super nos? Christus vero postulatus a quodam ut inter illum et fratrem ipsius de dividunda haereditate componeret, operam suam, et quidem tam probae causae, denegavit. Iam ergo melior Moyses meus Christo tuo, fratrum paci studens, iniuriae occurrens. [10] Sed enim optimi et non iudicis dei Christus, Quis me, inquit, iudicem constituit super vos? Aliam vocem excusationis invenire non potuit ne ea uteretur qua improbus vir et impius frater assertorem probitatis atque pietatis excusserat. Denique probavit malam vocem, utendo ea, et malum factum, pacis inter fratres componendae declinatione. Aut numquid indigne tulerit hoc dicto fugatum Moysen, ideoque in causa pari disceptantium fratrum voluit illos commemoratione eiusdem dicti confudisse? Plane ita. Ipse enim tunc fuerat in Moyse, qui talia audierat, spiritus scilicet creatoris. [11] Puto iam alibi satis commendasse nos divitiarum gloriam damnari a deo nostro, ipsos dynastas detrahente de solio, et pauperes allevante de sterquilinio. Ab eo ergo erit et parabola divitis blandientis sibi de proventu agrorum suorum, cui deus dicit, Stulte, hac nocte animam tuam reposcent; quae autem parasti, cuius erunt? Sic denique rex de gavis et apothecis deliciarum suarum apud Persas gloriatus per Esaiam male audivit.

29. [1] Quis nollet curam nos agere animae de victu et corpori de vestitu nisi qui ista homini ante prospexit et exinde praestans merito curam eorum tanquam aemulam liberalitatis suae prohibet? qui et substantiam ipsius animae accommodavit potiores esca, et materiam ipsius corporis figuravit potiores tunica, cuius et corvi non serunt nec metunt nec in apothecas condunt, et tamen aluntur ab ipso, cuius et lilia et foenum non texunt nec nent, et tamen vestiuntur ab ipso, cuius et Salomon gloriosissimus, nec ullo tamen flosculo cultior. [2] Ceterum nihil tam abruptum quam ut alius praestet, alius de praestantia eius secure agere mandet, et quidem derogator ipsius. Denique si quasi derogator creatoris non vult de eiusmodi frivolis cogitari de quibus nec corvi nec lilia laborent, ultro scilicet pro sua vilitate subiectis, paulo post parebit. Interim cur illos modicae fidei incusat, id est cuius fidei? [3] Eiusne

quam nondum poterant perfectam exhibere deo tantum quod revelato, cum maxime discentes eum, an quam hoc ipso titulo debebant creatori, uti crederent haec illum ultro generi humano subministrare, nec de eis cogitarent? Nam et cum subicit, Haec enim nationes mundi quaerunt, non credendo scilicet in deum conditorem omnium et praebitorem, quos pares gentium nolebat, in eundem deum modicos fidei increpabat in quem gentes incredulas notabat. Porro cum et adicit, Scit autem pater opus esse haec vobis, prius quaeram quem patrem intellegi velit Christus. [4] Si ipsorum creatorem demonstrat, et bonum confirmat, qui scit quid filiis opus sit; sin illum alium deum, quomodo scit necessarium esse homini victum atque vestitum, quorum nihil praestitit? Si enim scisset, praestitisset. Ceterum si scit quae sunt homini necessaria, nec tamen praestitit, aut malignitate aut infirmitate non praestitit. Professus autem necessaria haec homini, utique bona confirmavit. Nihil enim mali necessarium. Et non erit iam depretiator operum et indulgentiarum creatoris, ut quod supra distuli expunxerim. [5] Porro si quae necessaria scit homini alius et prospexit et praestat, quomodo haec ipse promittit? An de alieno bonus est? Quaerite enim inquit regnum dei, et haec vobis adicientur. Utique ab ipso. Quodsi ab ipso, qualis est qui aliena praestabit? Si a creatore, cuius et sunt, quis est qui aliena promittat? Ea si regno accedunt, secundo gradu restituenda, eius est secundus gradus cuius et primus, eius victus atque vestitus cuius et regnum. [6] Ita tota promissio creatoris est parabolarum status, similitudinum peraequatio, si nec in alium spectant quam cui per omnia pariaverint. Sumus servi, dominum enim habemus deum. Succingere debemus lumbos, id est expediti esse ab impedimentis laciniosae vitae et implicitae. Item lucernas ardentes habere, id est mentes a fide accensas et operibus veritatis relucentes, atque ita expectare dominum, id est Christum. Unde redeuntem? si a nuptiis, creatoris est, cuius nuptiae; si non creatoris, nec ipse Marcion invitatus ad nuptias isset, deum suum intuens detestatorem nuptiarum. Defecit itaque parabola in persona domini, si non esset cui nuptiae competunt. [7] In sequenti quoque parabola satis errat qui furem illum, cuius horam si pater familiae sciret non sineret suffodi domum suam, in personam disponit creatoris. Fur enim creator quomodo videri potest, dominus totius hominis? Nemo sua furatur aut suffodit, sed ille potius qui in aliena descendit, et hominem a domino eius alienat. Porro cum furem nobis diabolum demonstret, cuius horam etiam in primordio si homo scisset nunquam ab eo suffossus esset, propterea iubet ut parati simus, quia qua non putamus hora filius hominis adveniet, non quasi ipse sit fur, sed iudex scilicet eorum qui se non paraverint, nec caverint furem. [8] Ergo si ipse est filius hominis, iudicem teneo, et in iudice creatorem defendo; si vero Christum creatoris in nomine filii hominis hoc loco ostendit, ut eum furem portendat, qui quando venturus sit ignoremus, habes supra praescriptum nerninem rei suae furem esse, salvo et illo, quod in quantum timendum creatorem ingerit, in tantum illi negotium agens creatoris est. [9] Itaque interroganti Petro in illos an et in omnes parabolam dixisset, ad ipsos et ad universos qui ecclesiis praefuturi essent proponit actorum similitudinem, quorum qui bene tractaverit conservos absentia domini reverso eo omnibus bonis praeponetur; qui vero secus egerit, reverso domino qua die non putaverit, hora qua non scierit, illo scilicet filio hominis, Christo creatoris, non fure sed iudice, segregabitur et pars eius cum infidelibus ponetur. [10] Proinde igitur aut et hic iudicem dominum opponit et illi catechizat, aut si deum optimum, iam et illum iudicem affirmat, licet nolit haereticus. Temperare enim temptant hunc sensum, cum deo eius vindicatur, quasi tranquillitatis sit et mansuetudinis segregare solummodo et partem eius cum infidelibus ponere, ac si non sit vocatus, ut statui suo redditus. Quasi non et hoc ipsum iudicato fiat. Stultitia! Quis erit exitus segregatorum? Nonne amissio salutis? siquidem ab eis segregabuntur qui salutem consequuntur. Quis igitur infidelium status? Nonne damnatio? [11] Aut si nihil patientur segregati et infideles, aequae ex diverso nihil consequuntur retenti et fideles. Si vero consequuntur salutem retenti et fideles, hanc amittant necesse est ex diverso segregati et infideles. Hoc erit iudicium, quod qui intendit creatoris est. Quem alium intellegam caedentem servos paucis aut multis plagis, et prout commisit illis ita et exigentem ab eis, quam retributorem deum? Cui me docet obsequi nisi remuneratori? [12] Proclamat Christus tuus: Ignem veni mittere in terram. Ille optimus, nullius gehennae dominus, qui paulo ante discipulos ne ignem postularent inhumanissimo viculo coercuerat, quando iste Sodomam et Gomorram nimbo igneo exussit, quando cantatum est: Ignis ante ipsum procedet et cremabit inimicos eius, quando et per Osee comminatus est: Ignem emittam in civitates Iudaeae, vel per Esaïam: Ignis exarsit ex indignatione mea. Non mentiatur. Si non est ille qui de rubo quoque ardenti vocem suam emisit, viderit quem ignem intellegendum contendas. [13] Etiam si figura est, hoc ipso quod de meo elemento argumenta sensui suo sumit meus

est qui de meis utitur. Illius erit similitudo ignis cuius et veritas. Ipse melius interpretabitur ignis istius qualitatem, adiciens, Putatis venisse me pacem mittere in terram? non, dico vobis, sed separationem. Machaeram quidem scriptum est. Sed Marcion emendat; [14] quasi non et separatio opus sit machaerae. Igitur et ignem eversionis intendit qui pacem negavit. Quale proelium, tale et incendium. Qualis machaera, talis et flamma; neutra congruens domino. Denique, Dividetur, inquit, pater in filium et filius in patrem, et mater in filiam et filia in matrem, et nurus in socrum et socrus in nurum. Hoc proelium inter parentes si in ipsis verbis tuba cecinit prophetae, vereor ne Michaeas Christo Marcionis praedicarit. [15] Et ideo hypocritas pronuntiabat, caeli quidem et terrae faciem probantes, tempus vero illud non dinoscentes, quo scilicet adimplens omnia quae super ipsos fuerunt praedicata nec aliter docens debuerat agnosci. Ceterum quis posset eius tempora nosse cuius per quae probaret non habebat. Merito exprobrat etiam quod iustum non a semetipsis iudicarent. Olim hoc mandat per Zachariam: Iustum iudicium et pacatorium iudicate; per Hieremiam: Facite iudicium et iustitiam; per Esaia: Iudicate pupillo et iustificate viduam; imputans etiam vineae Sorech quod non iudicium fecisset sed clamorem. [16] Qui ergo docuerat ut facerent ex praecepto, is exigebat ut facerent et ex arbitrio. Qui seminaverat praeceptum, ille et redundantiam eius urgebat. Iam vero quam absurdum ut ille mandaret iuste iudicare qui deum iudicem iustum destruebat? Nam et iudicem, qui mittit in carcerem nec ducit inde nisi soluto etiam novissimo quadrante, in persona creatoris obtrectationis nomine disserunt. Ad quod necesse habeo eodem gradu occurrere. Quotiescunque enim severitas creatoris opponitur, totiens illius est Christus cui per timorem cogit obsequium.

30. [1] Quaestionem rursus de curatione sabbato facta quomodo discussit? Unusquisque vestrum sabbatis non solvit asinum aut bovem suum a praesepe et ducit ad potum? Ergo secundum condicionem legis operatus legem confirmavit, non dissolvit, iubentem nullum opus fieri nisi quod fieret omni animae, quanto potius humanae? Parabolarum congruentiam ubique recognoscor exigere. Simile est regnum dei, inquit, grano sinapis, quod accepit homo et seminavit in horto suo. [2] Quis in persona hominis intellegendus? Utique Christus, quia, licet Marcionis, filius hominis est dictus, qui accepit a patre semen regni, sermonem scilicet evangelii, et seminavit in horto suo, utique in mundo, puta nunc in homine. Sed cum in suo horto

dixerit, nec mundus autem nec homo illius sit, sed creatoris, ergo qui in suum seminarit creator ostenditur. Aut si, ut hunc laqueum evadant, converterint hominis personam a Christo in hominem accipientem semen regni et seminantem in horto cordis sui, nec ipsa materia alii conveniet quam creatori. Quale est enim ut sit lenissimi dei regnum quod etiam iudicii fervor lacrimosa austeritate subsequitur? [3] De sequenti plane similitudine vereor ne forte alterius dei regno portendat. Fermento enim comparavit illud, non azymis quae familiariora sunt creatori. Congruit et haec coniectura mendicantibus argumenta. Itaque et ego vanitatem vanitate depellam, fermentationem quoque congruere dicens regno creatoris, quia post illam clibanus vel furnus gehennae sequatur. [4] Quotiens adhuc se iudicem ostendit et in iudice creatorem? Quotiens utique eiecit et damnat reiciendo? Sicut hic quoque, Cum surrexerit, inquit, pater familiae; quo? nisi quo dixit Esaias, Cum surrexerit comminuere terram? et cluserit ostium; utique excludendis iniquis. Quibus pulsantibus respondebit, Nescio unde sitis: et rursus enumerantibus quod coram illo ederint et biberint et in plateis eorum docuerit, adiciet, Recedite a me omnes operarii iniquitatis. Illic erit fletus et frendor dentium. Ubi? [5] foris scilicet, ubi erunt exclusi, ostio cluso ab eo. Ergo erit poena a quo fit exclusio in poenam, cum videbunt iustos introeuntes in regnum dei, se vero detineri foris. A quo? Si a creatore, quis erit ergo intus recipiens iustos in regnum? Deus bonus? Quid ergo illuc creatori, ut foris detineat in poenam quos adversarius eius exdusit, suscipiendos a se, si utique, magis in adversarii bilem? [6] Sed et ille exclusurus iniquos sciat utique creatorem illos detenturum in poenam aut non sciat oportet. Ergo aut nolente eo detinebuntur, et minor est illo qui detinet, cedens ei nolens; aut si vult ita fieri, ipse ita faciendum iudicavit, et non erit melior creatore ipse auctor infamiae creatoris. Haec si nulla ratione consistunt, ut alius punire alius liberare credatur, unius erit tam iudicium quam et regnum, et dum unius est utrumque, qui et iudicat creatoris est.

31. [1] Ad prandium vel ad coenam quales vocari iubet? Quales ostenderat per Esaiam: Confringe panem tuum esurienti, et mendicos, et qui sine tecto sunt, induc in domum tuam, qui scilicet humanitatis istius vicem retribuere non possint. Hanc si Christus captari vetat, in resurrectione eam repromittens, creatoris est forma, cui non placent amantes munera, sectantes retributionem. Etiam invitatoris parabola cui magis parti occurrat expende. Homo quidam fecit coenam et vocavit multos. [2] Utique coenae paratura vitae aeternae

saturitatem figurat. Dico primo extraneos et nullius iuris adfines invitari ad coenam non solere, certe facilius solere domesticos et familiares. Ergo creatoris est invitasse, ad quem pertinebant qui invitabantur, et per Adam qua homines, et per patres qua Iudaici, non eius ad quem neque natura pertinebant neque praerogativa. [3] Dehinc si is mittit ad convivas qui coenam paravit, sic quoque creatoris est coena, qui misit ad convivas admonendos, ante iam vocatos per patres, admonendos autem per prophetas, non qui neminem miserit ad monendum, nec qui nihil prius egerit ad vocandum, sed ipse descenderit subito, tantum quod innotescens iam invitans, tantum quod invitans iam in convivium cogens, eandem faciens horam coenandi et ad coenam invitandi. Excusant se invitati. [4] Si ab alio deo, merito, quia subito invitati; si non merito, ergo nec subito. Si autem non subito invitati, ergo a creatore, a quo olim, cuius denique declinaverant vocationem, tunc primo dicentes ad Aaronem, Fac nobis deos qui praeceant nobis; atque exinde aure audientes et non audientes, vocationem scilicet dei, qui pertinentissime ad hanc parabolam per Hieremiam, Audite, inquit, vocem meam, et ero vobis in dominum et vos mihi in populum, et ibitis in omnibus viis meis, quascunque mandavero vobis. Ecce invitatio dei. Et non audierunt, inquit, et non adverterunt aurem suam. Ecce recusatio populi. Sed abierunt in iis quae concupiverunt corde suo malo. Agrum emi, et boves mercatus sum, et uxorem duxi. [5] Et adhuc ingerit: Et emisi ad vos omnes famulos meos prophetas (hic erit spiritus sanctus, admonitor convivarum) die et ante lucem. Et non audiit populus meus, et non intendit auribus suis, et obduravit collum suum. Hoc ut patrifamiliae renuntiatum est, motus tunc (bene quod et motus, negat enim Marcion moveri deum suum, ita et hoc meus est) mandat de plateis et vicis civitatis facere sublectionem. Videamus an eo sensu quo rursus per Hieremiam: Numquid solitudo factus sum domui Israelis, aut terra in incultum derelicta? id est, Numquid non habeo quos allegam aut unde allegam? Quoniam dixit populus meus, Non venimus ad te. [6] Itaque misit ad alios vocandos ex eadem adhuc civitate. Dehinc loco abundante praecepit etiam de viis et sepibus colligi, id est nos iam de extraneis gentibus; illa scilicet aemulatione qua in Deuteronomio: Avertam faciem meam ab eis, et monstrabo quid illis in novissimis, id est alios possessuros locum eorum: quoniam genitura perversa est, filii in quibus fides non est. Illi obaemulati sunt me in non deo, et provocaverunt me in iram in idolis suis, et ego obaemulabor eos in non natione, in natione insipienti provocabo eos in iram, in nobis scilicet, quorum spem Iudaei gerunt, de qua illos gustaturos negat dominus, derelicta Sione, tanquam specula in vinea et in cucumerario casula, posteaquam et novissimam in Christum invitationem recusavit. [7] Quid ex hoc ordine secundum dispositionem et praedicationes creatoris recensendo competere potest illi, cuius nec ordinem habet nec dispositionem ad parabolae conspiracy quae totum opus semel fecit? Aut quae erit prima vocatio eius, et quae secundo actu admonitio? Ante debent alii excusare, postea alii convenisse. Nunc autem pariter utramque partem invitare venit, de civitate, de sepibus, adversus speculum parabolae. [8] Nec potest iam fastidiosos iudicare quos nunquam retro invitavit, quos cum maxime aggreditur. Aut si de futuro eos iudicat contempturos vocationem, ergo et sublectionem loco eorum ex gentibus de futuro portendit. Plane ad hoc secundo venturus est ut gentibus praedicet. Etsi venturus est autem, puto, non quasi vocaturus adhuc convivas, sed iam collocaturus. Interea qui coenae istius vocationem in caeleste convivium interpretaris spiritalis saturitatis et iocunditatis, memento et terrenas promissiones vini et olei et frumenti et ipsius civitatis aequae in spiritalia figurari a creatore.

32. [1] Ovem et dragmam perditam quis requirit? nonne qui perdidit? Quis autem perdidit? nonne qui habuit? Quis vero habuit? nonne cuius fuit? Si igitur homo non alterius est res quam creatoris, is eum habuit cuius fuit, is perdidit qui habuit, is requisivit qui perdidit, is invenit qui quaesivit, is exultavit qui invenit. [2] Ita utriusque parabolae argumentum vacat circa eum cuius non est ovis neque dragma, id est homo. Non enim perdidit, quia non habuit; nec requisivit, quia non perdidit; nec invenit, quia nec requisivit; nec exultavit, quia non invenit. Atque adeo exultare illius est de paenitentia peccatoris, id est de perditionis recuperatione, qui se professus est olira malle peccatoris paenitentiam quam mortem.

scilicet de quo et servus ille. [2] Iniustitiae enim auctorem et dominatorem totius saeculi nummum scimus omnes. Cui famulatam videns pharisaeorum cupiditatem amentavit hanc sententiam: Non potestis deo servire et mammonae. Irridebant denique pharisaei pecuniae cupidi, quod intellexissent scilicet mammonam de nummo dictum: ne quis existimet in mammona creatorem intellegendum et Christum a creatoris illos servitute revocasse. Quid? nunc potius ex hoc disce unum a Christo deum ostensum. Duos enim dominos nominavit, deum et mammonam, creatorem et nummum. Denique non potestis deo servire, utique ei cui servire videbantur, et mammonae, cui magis destinabantur. [3] Quodsi ipse alium se ageret, non duos dominos sed tres demonstrasset. Et creator enim dominus, quia deus, et utique magis dominus quam mammonas, magisque observandus, qua magis dominus. Quale est enim ut qui mammonam dominum dixerat, et cum deo iunxerat, vere ipsorum dominum taceret, id est creatorem? Aut numquid tacendo eo concessit serviendum ei esse, si solummodo sibi et mammonae negavit posse servi? Ita cum unum deum ponit, nominaturus et creatorem si alius esset ipse, creatorem nominavit, quem dominum sine alio deo [non] posuit. [4] Et illud itaque relucebit, quomodo dictum, Si in mammona iniusto fideles non extitistis, quod verum est quis vobis credet? in nummo scilicet iniusto, non in creatore, quem et Marcion iustum facit. Et si in alieno fideles inventi non estis, meum quis dabit vobis? alienum enim debet esse a servis dei quod iniustum est. Creator autem quomodo alienus erat pharisaeis, proprius deus Iudaicae gentis? Si ergo haec non cadunt in creatorem, sed in mammonam, Quis vobis credet quod verius est? et, Quis vobis dabit quod meum est? non potest quasi alius dixisse de alterius dei gratia. [5] Tunc enim videretur ita dixisse, si eos in creatorem, non in mammonam, infideles notando per creatoris mentionem distinctiones fecisset dei alterius, non commissuri suam veritatem infidelibus creatoris: quomodo tunc alterius videri potest, si non ad hoc proponatur ut a re de qua agitur separetur. [6] Si autem et iustificantes se coram hominibus pharisaei spem mercedis in homine ponebant, illo eos sensu increpabat quo et propheta Hieremias: Miser homo, qui spem habet in homine. Si et adicit, Scit autem deus corda vestra, illius dei vim commemorabat qui lucernam se pronuntiabat, scrutantem renes et corda. Si superbiam tangit, Quod elatum est apud homines perosum est deo, Esaia ponit ante oculos: Dies enim domini sabaoth, in omnem contumeliosum et superbum, in omnem sublimem et elatum, et humiliabuntur. [7] Possum iam colligere cur tanto aevo deus Marcionis fuerit in occulto. Expectabat, opinor, donec haec omnia disceret a creatore. Didicit ergo usque ad Ioannis tempora, atque ita exinde processit annuntiare regnum dei, dicens, Lex et prophetae usque ad Ioannem, ex quo regnum dei annuntiatur. [8] Quasi non et nos limitein quendam agnoscamus Ioannem constitutum inter vetera et nova, ad quem desineret Iudaismus et a quo inciperet Christianismus, non tamen ut ab alia virtute facta sit sedatio legis et prophetarum, et initiatio evangelii in quo est dei regnum, Christus ipse. Nam et si probavimus et vetera transitura et nova successura praedicari a creatore, si et Ioannes antecursor et praeparator ostenditur viarum domini evangelium superducturi et regnum dei promulgaturi, et ex hoc iam quod Ioannes venit ipse erit Christus qui Ioannem erat subsecuturus ut antecursorem, et si desierunt vetera et coeperunt nova interstite Ioanne, non erit mirum quod ex dispositione est creatoris, ut undeunde magis probetur quam ex legis et prophetarum in Ioannem occasu et exinde ortu regnum dei. [9] Transeat igitur caelum et terra citius, sicut et lex et prophetae, quam unus apex verborum domini. Verbum enim, inquit Esaia, dei nostri manet in aevum. Nam quoniam in Esaia iam tunc Christus, sermo scilicet et spiritus creatoris, Ioannem praedicarat, vocem clamantis in deserto, Parate viam domini, in hoc venturum ut legis et prophetarum ordo exinde cessaret, per adimpletionem non per destructionem, et regnum dei a Christo annuntiaretur, ideo subtexit facilius elementa transitura quam verba sua, confirmans hoc quoque quod de Ioanne dixerat non praeterisse.

34. [1] Sed Christus divortium prohibet dicens, Qui dimiserit uxorem suam et aliam duxerit, adulterium committit; qui dimissam a viro duxerit, aequè adulter est. Ut sic quoque prohibeat divortium, illicitum facit repudiatae matrimonium. Moyses vero pennittit repudium in Deuteronomio: Si sumserit quis uxorem, et habitaverit cum ea, et evenerit non invenire eam apud eum gratiam, eo quod inventum sit in illa impudicum negotium, scribet libellum repudii et dabit in manu eius, et dimittet illam de domo sua. Vides diversitatem legis et evangelii, Moysi et Christi? [2] Plane. Non enim recepisti illud quoque evangelium eiusdem veritatis et eiusdem Christi, in quo prohibens divortium propriam quaestionem eius absolvit: Moyses propter duritiam cordis vestri praecepit libellum repudii dare; a primordio autem non fuit sic; quia scilicet qui marem et feminam fecerat, Erunt duo, dixerat, in carne una: quod deus itaque iunxit, homo disiunxerit? [3] Hoc enim responso et Moysi constitutionem protexit, ut sui, et creatoris institutionem direxit, ut Christus ipsius. Sed quatenus ex his revincendus es quae recepisti, sic tibi occurram ac si meus Christus. Nonne et ipse prohibens divortium, et patrem tamen gestans eum qui marem et feminam iunxit, excusaverit potius quam destruxerit Moysi constitutionem? Sed ecce sic tuus sit iste Christus contrarium docens Moysi et creatori, ut, si non contrarium ostendero, meus sit. [4] Dico enim illum condicionaliter nunc fecisse divortii prohibitionem, si ideo quis dimittat uxorem ut aliam ducat. Qui dimiserit, inquit, uxorem et aliam duxerit, adulterium commisit, et qui a marito dimissam duxerit, aequè adulter est, ex eadem utique causa dimissam qua non licet dimitti, ut alia ducatur; illicite enim dimissam pro indimissa ducens adulter est. [5] Manet enim matrimonium quod non rite diremptum est; manente matrimonio nubere adulterium est. Ita si condicionaliter prohibuit dimittere uxorem, non in totum prohibuit, et quod non prohibuit in totum, permisit alias, ubi causa cessat ob quam prohibuit. Et iam non contrarium Moysi docet, cuius praeceptum alicubi conservat, nondum dico confirmat. Aut si omnino negas permitti divortium a Christo, quomodo tu nuptias dirimis, nec coniungens marem et feminam, nec alibi coniunctos ad sacramentum baptismatis et eucharistiae admittens nisi inter se coniuraverint adversus fructum nuptiarum, ut adversus ipsum creatorem? Certe quid facit apud te maritus si uxor eius commiserit adulterium? Habebitne illam? Scilicet nec tuum apostolum sinere coniungi prostitutae membra Christi. [6] Habet itaque et Christum assertorem iustitiae divortii. Iam hinc confirmatur ab illo Moyses, ex eodem titulo prohibens repudium quo et Christus, nisi inventum fuerit in muliere negotium impudicum. Nam et in evangelio Matthaei, Qui dimiserit, inquit, uxorem suam praeter causam adulterii, facit eam adulterari. Aequè adulter censetur et ille qui dimissam a viro duxerit. Ceterum praeter ex causa adulterii nec creator disiungit, quod ipse scilicet coniunxit, eodem alibi Moyse constituente eum qui ex compressione matrimonium fecerat non posse dimittere uxorem in omne tempus. [7] Quodsi ex violentia coactum matrimonium stabit, quanto magis ex convenientia voluntarium? sicut et prophetiae auctoritate, Uxorem iuventutis tuae non dimittes. Habes itaque Christum ultro vestigia ubique creatoris ineuntem tam in permittendo repudio quam in prohibendo. Habes etiam nuptiarum, quoquo velis latere, prospectorem, quas nec separari vult prohibendo repudium, nec cum macula haberi tunc permittendo divortium. Erubescere non coniungens quos tuos quoque Christus coniunxit. Erubescere etiam disiungens sine eo merito quo disiungi voluit et tuus Christus. [8] Debeo nunc et illud ostendere unde hanc sententiam deduxerit dominus quoque direxerit. Ita enim plenius constabit eum non ad Moysen destruendum spectasse per repudii propositionem subito interpositam, quia nec subito interposita est, habens radicem ex eadem Ioannis mentione. Ioannes enim retundens Herodem quod adversus legem uxorem fratris sui defuncti duxisset, habentis filiam ex illa (non alias hoc permittente, immo et praecipiente lege, quam si frater illiberis decesserit, ut a fratre ipsius et ex costa ipsius supparetur semen illi), coniectus in carcerem fuerat ab eodem Herode, postmodum et occisus. [9] Facta igitur mentione Ioannis dominus, et utique successus exitus eius, illicitorum matrimoniorum et adulterii figura iaculatus est in Herodem, adulterum pronuntians etiam qui dimissam a viro duxerit, quo magis impietatem Herodis oneraret, qui non minus morte quam repudio dimissam a viro duxerat, et hoc fratre habente ex illa filiam, et vel eo nomine illicite, ex libidinis non ex legis instinctu, ac propterea propheten quoque assertorem legis occiderat. [10] Hoc mihi disseruisse proficiet etiam ad subsequens argumentum divitis apud inferos dolentis et pauperis in sinu Abrahae requiescentis. Nam et illud, quantum ad scripturae superficiem, subito propositum est, quantum ad intentionem sensus, et ipsum cohaeret mentioni Ioannis male tractati et suggillati Herodis male maritati, utriusque exitum deformans, Herodis tormenta et Ioannis refrigeria, ut iam audiret Herodes, Habent illic Moysen et prophetas, illos audiant. [11] Sed Marcion aliorum cogit, scilicet ut utramque mercedem creatoris sive tormenti sive refrigerii apud inferos determinet eis positam qui legi et prophetis obedierint, Christi vero et dei sui caelestem definiat sinum et portum. Respondebimus ad haec, ipsa scriptura revincente oculos eius, quae ab inferis discernit Abrahae sinum pauperi. Aliud enim inferi, ut puto, aliud quoque Abrahae sinus. Nam et magnum ait intercidere regiones istas profundum et transitum utrinque prohibere. [12] Sed nec allevasset dives oculos, et quidem de longinquo, nisi in superiora, et de altitudinis longinquo per immensam illam distantiam sublimitatis et profunditatis. Unde apparet sapienti cuique, qui aliquando Elysios audierit, esse aliquam localem determinationem quae sinus dicta sit Abrahae ad recipiendas animas filiorum eius, etiam ex nationibus, patris scilicet multarum nationum in Abrahae censum deputandarum, et ex eadem fide qua et Abraham deo credidit, nullo sub iugo legis nec in signo circumcisionis. [13] Eam itaque regionem sinum dico Abrahae, etsi non caelestem, sublimiorem tamen inferis, interim refrigerium praebituram animabus iustorum, donec consummatio rerum resurrectionem omnium plenitudine mercedis expungat, tunc apparitura caelesti promissione, quam Marcion suo vindicat, quasi non a creatore promulgatam. [14] Ad quam ascensum suum Christus aedificat in caelum, secundum Amos, utique suis, ubi est et locus aeternus, de quo Esaias: Quis annuntiabit vobis locum aeternum, nisi scilicet Christus incedens in iustitia, loquens viam rectam, odio habens iniustitiam et iniquitatem? Quodsi aeternus locus repromittitur et ascensus in caelum aedificatur a creatore, promittente etiam semen Abrahae velut stellas caeli futurum, utique ob caelestem promissionem, salva ea promissione cur non capiat sinum Abrahae dici temporale aliquod animarum. fidelium receptaculum in quo iam delinietur futuri imago ac candida quaedam utriusque iudicii prospiciatur? [15] admonens quoque vos haereticos, dum in vita estis, Moysen et prophetas unum deum praedicantes creatorem, et unum Christum praedicantes eius, et utrumque iudicium poenae et salutis aeternae apud unicum deum positum, qui occidat et vivificet. Immo, inquit, nostri dei monela de caelo non Moysen et prophetas iussit audiri, sed Christum: Hunc audite. Merito. Tunc enim apostoli satis iam audierant Moysen et prophetas, qui secuti erant Christum, credendo Moysi et prophetis. [16] Nec enim accepisset Petrus dicere, Tu es Christus, antequam audisset et credidisset Moysi et prophetis, a quibus solis adhuc Christus annuntiabatur. Haec igitur fides eorum meruerat ut etiam voce caelesti confirmaretur, iubente illum audiri quem agnoverant evangelizantem pacem, evangelizantem bona, annuntiantem locum aeternum, aedificantem illis ascensum suum in caelum. [17] Apud inferos autem de eis dictum est: Habent illic Moysen et prophetas, audiant illos, qui non credebant, vel qui nec omnino sic credebant, esse post mortem superbiae divitiarum et gloriae deliciarum supplicia annuntiata a Moyse et prophetis, decreta autem ab eo deo qui de thronis deponit dynastas, et de sterquilinis elevat inopes. Ita cum utrinque pronuntiationis diversitas competat creatori, non erit divinitatum statuenda distantia, sed ipsarum materiaram.

35. [1] Conversus ibidem ad discipulos Vae dicit auctori scandalorum, expedisce ei si natus non fuisset, aut si molino saxo ad collum deligato praecipitatus esset in profundum, quam unum ex illis modicis utique discipulis eius scandalizasset. Aestima quale supplicium comminetur illi. Nec enim alius ulciscetur scandalum discipulorum eius. [2] Agnosce igitur et iudicem et illo affectu pronuntiantem de cura suorum quo et creator retro: Qui tetigerit vos, ac si pupillam oculi mei tangat. Idem sensus eiusdem est. Peccantem fratrem iubet corripi; quod qui non fecerit, utique deliquit, aut ex odio volens fratrem in delicto perseverare, aut ex acceptione personae parcens ei, habens Leviticum: Non odies fratrem tuum in animo tuo, traductione traduces proximum tuum, utique et fratrem, et non sumes propter illum delictum. [3] Nec mirum si ita docet qui pecora quoque fratris tui, si errantia in via inveneris, prohibet despicias quominus ea reducas fratri, nedum ipsum sibi. Sed et veniam des fratri in te delinquenti iubet, etiam septies. Parum plane. Plus est enim apud creatorem, qui nec modum statuit, in infinitum pronuntians fratris malitiae memor ne sis, nec petenti eam praestes mandat sed et non petenti. Non enim dones offensam vult, sed obliviscaris. [4] Lex leprosum quanta sit interpretationis erga species ipsius vitii et inspectionis summi sacerdotis nostrum erit scire, Marcionis morositatem legis opponere, ut et hic Christum aemulum eius affirmet, praevenientem sollemnia legis etiam in curatione decem leprosum, quos tantummodo ire iussos ut se ostenderent sacerdotibus, in itinere purgavit, sine tactu iam et sine verbo, tacita potestate et sola voluntate; [5] quasi necesse sit semel remediare languorum et vitiorum annuntiato Christo et de effectibus probato, de qualitatibus curationum retractari, aut creatorem in Christo ad legem provocari, si quid aliter quam lege distinxit ipse perfecit; cum aliter utique dominus per semetipsum operetur sive per filium, aliter per prophetas famulos suos, maxime documenta virtutis et potestatis, quae ut clariora et validiora, qua propria, distare a vicariis fas est. Sed eiusmodi et alibi iam dicta sunt in documento superiore. [6] Nunc etsi praefatus est multos tunc fuisse leprosum apud Israel in diebus Helisaei prophetae et neminem eorum purgatum nisi Naaman Syrum, non utique et numerus faciet ad differentiam deorum, in destructionem creatoris unum remediantis et praelationem eius qui decem emundavit. Quis enim dubitabit plures potuisse curari ab eo qui unum curasset quam ab illo decem qui nunquam retro unum? [7] Sed hac cum maxime pronuntiatione diffidentiam Israelis vel superbiam pulsant, quod cum multi essent illic leprosi et prophetae non deesset, etiam edito documento nemo decurrisset ad deum operantem in prophetis. Igitur quoniam ipse erat authenticus pontifex dei patris, inspexit illos secundum legis arcanum, significantis Christum esse verum disceptatorem et elimatorem humanarum macularum. Sed et quod in manifesto fuit legis praecepit, Ite, ostendite vos sacerdotibus. Cur, si illos ante erat emundaturus? An quasi legis illusor, ut in itinere curatis ostenderet nihil esse legem cum ipsis sacerdotibus? [8] Et utique viderit, si cui tam opiniosus videbitur Christus. Immo digniora sunt interpretanda et fidei iustiora: ideo illos remediatis, qua secundum legem iussi abire ad sacerdotes obaudierant; neque enim credibile est emeruisse medicinam a destructore legis observatores legis. Sed cur pristino leproso nihil tale praecepit? Quia nec Helisaeus Syro Naaman; et tamen non idcirco non erat creatoris. Satis respondi; sed qui credidit, intellegit etiam altius aliquid. [9] Disce igitur et causas. In Samariae regionibus res agebatur, unde erat et unus interim ex leprosis. Samaria autem desciverat ab Israele, habens schisma illud ex novem tribubus, quas avulsas per Achiam prophetam collocaverat apud Samariam Hieroboam. Sed et alias semper sibi placentes erant Samaritani de montibus et puteis patrum, sicut in evangelio Ioannis Samaritana illa in colloquio domini apud puteum: Nae tu maior sis, [10] et cetera; et rursus: Patres nostri in isto monte adoraverunt, et vos dicitis quia Hierosolymis oportet adorare. Itaque qui et per Amos Vae dixerit eis qui confident in monte Samariae, iam et ipsam restituere dignatus de industria iubet ostendere se sacerdotibus, utique qui non erant nisi ubi et templum, subiciens Samaritam Iudaeo, quoniam ex Iudaeis salus, licet Israelitae et Samaritae. Tota enim promissio tribui Iudae Christus fuit; ut scirent Hierosolymis esse et sacerdotes et templum et matricem religionis et fontem, non puteum, salutis. [11] Et ideo, ut vidit agnovisse legem illos Hierosolymis expungendam, ex fide iam iustificandos sine legis ordine remediavit. Unde et unum illum solum ex decem memorem divinae gratiae Samariten miratus, non mandat offerre munus ex lege, quia satis iam obtulerat gloriam deo reddens, hoc et domino volente interpretari legem. Et tamen cui deo gratiam reddidit Samarites, quando nec Israelites alium deum usque adhuc didicisset? Cui alii quam cui omnes remediati retro a Christo? Et ideo, Fides tua te salvum fecit, audiit, quia intellexerat veram se deo omnipotenti oblationem, gratiarum scilicet actionem, apud verum templum et verum pontificem eius

Christum facere debere. [12] Sed nec pharisaei possunt videri de alterius dei regno consuluisse dominum quando venturum sit, quamdiu alius a Christo editus deus non erat, nec ille de alterius regno respondisse quam de cuius consulebatur. Non venit, inquit, regnum dei cum observatione, nec dicunt, Ecce hic, ecce illic: ecce enim regnum dei intra vos est. Quis non ita interpretabitur: Intra vos est, id est in manu, in potestate vestra, si audiat, si faciat dei praeceptum? [13] Quodsi in praecepto est dei regnum, propone igitur contra, secundum nostras antitheses, Moysen, et una sententia est. Praeceptum, inquit, excelsum non est, nec longe a te. Non est in caelo, ut dicas, Quis ascendet in caelum et deponet nobis illud, et auditum illud facieraus? nec ultra mare est, ut dicas, Quis transfretabit et sumet illud nobis, et auditum illud faciemus? Prope te est verbum, in ore tuo, et in corde tuo, et in manibus tuis facere illud. Hoc erit, Non hic, nec illic; ecce enim intra vos est regnum dei. [14] Et ne argumentetur audacia haeretica de regno creatoris, de quo consulebatur, non de suo, respondisse eis dominum, sequentia obsistunt. Dicens enim filium hominis ante multa pati et reprobari oportere, ante adventum suum, in quo et regnum substantialiter revelabitur, suum ostendit et regnum de quo responderat, quod passiones et reprobationes ipsius expectabat. Reprobari autem habens, et postea agnosci et assumi et extolli, etiam ipsum verbum reprobari inde decerpsit ubi in lapidis aenigmate utraque revelatio eius apud David caneatur, prima recusabilis, secunda honorabilis. [15] Lapis, inquit, quem reprobaverunt aedificantes, iste factus est in caput anguli: a domino factum est hoc. Vanum enim, si credidimus deum de contumelia aut gloria scilicet alicuius praedicasse, ut non eum portenderet quem et in lapidis et in petrae et in montis figura portenderat. Sed si de suo loquitur adventu, cur eum diebus Noe et Loth comparat tetris et atrocibus, deus et lenis et mitis? Cur admonet meminisse uxoris Loth, quae praeceptum creatoris non impune contempsit, si non cum iudicio venit vindicandorum praeceptomm suorum? [16] Etiam si vindicat ut ille, si iudicat me, non debuit per eius documenta formare quem destruit, ne ille me formare videatur. Si vero et hic non de suo loquitur adventu sed de Iudaei Christi, expectemus etiam nunc ne quid de suo praedicet, illum interim esse credentes quem omni loco praedicat.

36. [1] Nam et orandi perseverantiam et instantiam mandans parabolam iudicis ponit coacti audire viduam instantia et perseverantia interpellationum

eius. Ergo iudicem deum ostendit orandum, non se, si non ipse est iudex. Sed subiunxit facturum deum vindictam electorum suorum. Si ergo ipse erit iudex qui et vindex, creatorem ergo meliorem deum probavit, quem electorum suorum clamantium ad eum die et nocte vindicem ostendit. Et tamen cum templum creatoris inducit, et duos adorantes diversa mente describit, pharisaeum in superbia, publicanum in humilitate, ideoque alterum reprobatum, alterum iustificatum descendisse, utique docendo qua disciplina sit orandum, eum et hic orandum constituit a quo relaturi essent eam orandi disciplinam, sive reprobatricem superbiae sive iustificatricem humilitatis. [2] Alterius dei nec templum nec oratores nec iudicium invenio penes Christum, nisi creatoris. Illum iubet adorare in humilitate, ut allevatorem humilium, non in superbia, ut destructorem superbiorum. Quem alium adorandum mihi ostendit? qua disciplina? qua spe? Neminem, opinor. Nam et quam docuit orationem, creatori probavimus convenire. Aliud est si etiam adorari, qua deus optimus et ultro bonus, non vult. [3] Sed quis optimus, nisi unus, inquit, deus? Non quasi ex duobus diis unum optimum ostenderit, sed unum esse optimum deum solum, qui sic unus sit optimus qua solus deus. Et utique optimus, qui pluit super iustos et iniustos, et solem suum oriri facit super bonos et malos, sustinens et alens et iuvans etiam Marcionitas. [4] Denique interrogatus ab illo quodam, Praeceptor optime, quid faciens vitam aeternam possidebo? de praeceptis creatoris an ea sciret, id est faceret, expostulavit, ad contestandum praeceptis creatoris vitam acquiri sempiternam: cumque ille principaliora quaeque affirmasset observasse se ab adolescentia, Unum, inquit, tibi deest: omnia, quaecunque habes, vende et da pauperibus, et habebis thesaurum in caelo, et veni, sequere me. [5] Age, Marcion, omnesque iam commiserones et coodibiles eius haeretici, quid audebitis dicere? Resciditne Christus priora praecepta, non occidendi, non adulterandi, non furandi, non falsum testandi, diligendi patrem et matrem? an et illa servavit et quod deerat adiecit? Quamquam et hoc praeceptum largitionis in egenos ubique diffusum sit in lege et prophetis, uti gloriosissimus ille observator praeceptorum pecuniam multo cariorum habiturus traduceretur. [6] Salvum est igitur et hoc in evangelio: Non veni dissolvere legem et prophetas, sed potius adimplere. Simul et cetera dubitatione liberavit, manifestando unius esse et dei nomen et optimi, et vitam aeternam et thesaurum in caelo, et semetipsum, cuius praecepta supplendo et conservavit et auxit, secundum Michaeam quoque hoc loco recognoscendus, dicentem, Si annuntiavit tibi, homo, quid bonum, aut quid a te dominus exquirat quam facere iudicium, diligere misericordiam, et paratum esse sequi dominum deum tuum? [7] Et homo enim Christus annuntians quid sit bonum; scientiam legis: Praecepta, inquit, scis; facere iudicium: Vende, inquit, quae habes; diligere misericordiam: Et da, inquit, egenis; paratum esse ire cum domino: Et veni, inquit, sequere me. [8] Tam distincta fuit a primordio Iudaea gens per tribus et populos et familias et domos, ut nemo facile ignorari de genere potuisset, vel de recentibus Augustianis censibus, adhuc tunc fortasse pendentibus. Iesus autem Marcionis (et natus non dubitaretur qui homo videbatur) utique, qua non natus, nullam potuerat generis sui in publico habuisse notitiam, sed erat unus aliqui deputandus ex iis qui quoquo modo ignoti habebantur. [9] Cum igitur praetereuntem illum caecus audisset, cur exclamavit, Iesu, fili David, miserere mei! nisi quia filius David, id est ex familia David, non temere deputabatur per matrem et fratres, qui aliquando ex notitia utique annuntiati ei fuerant? Sed antecedentes increpabant caecum, uti taceret. Merito, quoniam quidem vociferabatur, non quia de David filio mentiebatur. Aut doce increpantes illos scisse quod Iesus non esset filius David, ut idcirco silentium caeco indixisse credantur. [10] Sed et si doceres, facilius illos ignorasse praesumeret quam dominum falsam in se praedicationem sustinere potuisse. Sed patiens dominus. Non tamen confirmator erroris, immo etiam detector creatoris, ut non prius hanc caecitatem hominis illius enubilasset, ne ultra Iesum filium David existimaret. Atquin ne patientiam eius infamaretis, nec ullam rationem dissimulationis illi affigeretis, nec filium David negaretis, manifestissime confirmavit caeci praedicationem et ipsa remuneratione medicinae et testimonio fidei. Fides, inquit, tua te salvum fecit. [11] Quid vis caecum credidisse? Ab illo deo descendisse Iesum ad deiectionem creatoris, ad destructionem legis et prophetarum? non illum esse qui ex radice Iesse et ex fructu lumborum David destinabatur, caecorum quoque remunerator? Sed nondum, puto, eiusmodi tunc caeci erant qualis Marcion, ut haec fuerit caeci illius fides qua crediderit in voce, Iesu fili David. [12] Qui hoc se et cognovit et cognosci ab omnibus voluit, fidem hominis etsi melius oculatam, etsi veri luminis compotem, exteriore quoque visione donavit, ut et nos regulam simulque mercedem fidei disceremus. Qui vult videre Iesum, David filium credat per virginis censem. Qui non ita credet, non audiet ab illo, Fides tua te salvum fecit, atque ita caecus remanebit, ruens in antithesim, ruentem et ipsam antithesim. Sic enim caecus caecum deducere solet. [13] Nam si aliquando Davidem in recuperatione Sionis offenderant caeci resistentes quominus admitteretur (in figuram populi proinde caeci, non admissuri quandoque Christum filium David), ideo Christus ex diverso caeco subvenit, ut hinc se ostenderet non esse filium David, ut ex animi diversitate bonus caecis, quos ille iusserat caedi. Et cur fidei et quidem pravae praestitisse se dixit? Atquin et hoc filius David, antithesim de suo retundam. [14] Nam et qui David offenderant, caeci; nunc vero eiusdem carnis homo supplicem se obtulerat filio David. Idcirco ei satisfaciendi quodammodo placatus filius David restituit lumina, cum testimonio fidei, qua hoc ipsum crediderat, exorandum sibi esse filium David. Et tamen David audacia hominum, puto, offenderit, non valetudo.

37. [1] Consequitur et Zachaei domus salutem. Quo merito? Numquid vel ille crediderat Christum a Marcione venisse? Atquin adhuc in auribus erat omnium vox illa caeci, Miserere mei, Iesu fili David, et omnis populus laudes referebat deo, non Marcionis, sed David. Enimvero Zachaeus etsi allophylus, fortasse tamen aliqua notitia scripturarum ex commercio Iudaico afflatus, plus est autem <si> et ignorans Esaiaem praecepta eius impleverat. Confringito, inquit, panem tuum esurienti, et non habentes tectum in domum tuam inducito: hoc cum maxime agebat, exceptum domo sua pascens dominum. Et nudum si videris, contegito: hoc cum maxime promittebat, in omnia misericordiae opera dimidium substantiae offerens, dissolvens violentiorum contractuum obnexus et dimittens conflictatos in laxamentum, et omnem conscriptionem iniquam dissipans, dicendo, Et si cui quid per calumniam eripui, quadruplum reddo. Itaque dominus, Hodie, inquit, salus huic domui. [2] Testimonium dixit salutaria esse quae praeceperat prophetae creatoris. Cum vero dicit, Venit enim filius hominis salvum facere quod periit, iam non contendo eum venisse ut salvum faceret quod perierat, cuius fuerat et cui perierat quod salvum venerat facere, sed in alterius quaestionis gradum dirigo. De homine agi nulla dubitatio est. [3] Hic cum ex duabus substantiis constet, ex corpore et anima, quaerendum est ex qua substantiae specie periisse videatur. Si ex corpore, ergo corpus perierat, anima non. Quod perierat, salvum facit filius hominis: habet igitur et caro salutem. Si ex anima perierat, animae perditio saluti destinatur: caro, quae non periit, salva est. Si totus homo perierat ex utraque substantia, totus homo salvus fiat necesse est, et elisa est sententia haereticomm negantium carnis salutem. Iam et Christus creatoris confirmatur, qui secundum creatorem totius hominis salutem pollicebatur. [4] Servorum quoque parabola, qui secundum rationem feneratae pecuniae dominicae diiudicantur, iudicem ostendit deum, etiam ex parte severitatis, non tantum honorantem verum et auferentem quod quis videatur habuisse. Aut si et hic creatorem finxerit austerum, tollentem quod non posuerit et metentem quod non severit, hic quoque me ille instruit cuius pecuniam ut fenerem edocet.

38. [1] Sciebat Christus baptismum Ioannis unde esset. Et cur quasi nesciens interrogabat? Sciebat non responsuros sibi pharisaeos. Et cur frustra interrogabat? An ut ex ore ipsorum iudicaret illos, vel ex corde? Refer ergo et haec ad excusationem creatoris et ad comparisonem Christi, et considera iam quid secuturum esset si quid pharisaei ad interrogationem renuntiassent. Puta illos renuntiassent humanum Ioannis baptismum, statim lapidibus elisi fuissent. Existeret aliqui Marcion adversus Marcionem, qui diceret, O deum optimum, o deum diversum a creatoris exemplis! sciens praeceptum ituros homines ipse illos in praerupium imposuit. [2] Sic enim et de creatore in arboris lege tractatur. Sed de caelis fuit baptismum Ioannis. Et quare, inquit Christus, non credidistis ei? Ergo qui credi voluerat Ioanni, increpaturus quod non credidissent, eius erat cuius sacramentum Ioannes administrabat. Certe nolentibus renuntiare quid saperent, cum et ipse vicem opponit, Et ego non dico vobis in qua virtute haec facio, malum malo reddidit. [3] Reddite quae Caesaris Caesari, et quae sunt dei deo. Quae erunt dei? Quae similia sunt denario Caesaris; imago scilicet et similitudo eius. Hominem igitur reddi iubet creatori, in cuius imagine et similitudine et nomine et materia expressus est. Quaerat sibi monetam deus Marcionis, Christus denarium hominis suo Caesari iubet reddi, non alieno; nisi quod necesse est, qui suum denarium non habet. [4] Iusta et digna praescriptio est in omni quaestione ad propositum interrogationis pertinere debere sensum responsionis: ceterum aliud consulenti aliud respondere dementis est. Quo magis absit a Christo quod ne homini quidem convenit. Sadducaei, resurrectionis negatores, de ea habentes interrogationem, proposuerant domino ex lege materiam mulieris quae septem fratribus ex ordine defunctis secundum praeceptum legale nupsisset, cuius viri deputanda esset in resurrectione. [5] Haec fuit materia quaestionis, haec substantia consultationis. Ad hoc respondisse Christum necesse est. Neminem timuit, ut quaestiones aut declinasse videatur, aut per occasionem earum quod alias palam non docebat subostendisse. Respondit igitur huius quidem aevi filios nubere. Vides quam pertinenter ad causam. Quia de aevo venturo quaerebatur, in quo neminem nubere definiturus praestruxit hic quidem nubi ubi sit et mori. Quos vero dignatus sit deus illius aevi possessione et resurrectione a mortuis, neque nubere neque nubi, quia nec morituri iam sint, cum similes angelorum fiant, dei et resurrectionis filii facti. [6] Cum igitur sensus responsionis non ad aliud sit dirigendus quam ad propositum interrogationis, si hoc sensu responsionis propositum absolvitur interrogationis, non aliud responsio domini sapit quam quo quaestio absolvitur. Habes et tempora permissarum et negatarum nuptiarum, non ex sua propria sed ex resurrectionis quaestione. Habes et ipsius resurrectionis confirmationem, et totum quod sadducaei sciscitabantur, non de alio deo interrogantes, nec de proprio nuptiarum iure quaerentes. [7] Quodsi ad ea facis respondere Christum de quibus non est consultus, negas eum de quibus interrogatus est respondere potuisse, sadducaeorum scilicet sapientia captum. Ex abundanti nunc et post praescriptionem retractabo adversus argumentationes cohaerentes. Nacti enim scripturae textum ita in legendo decucurrerunt: Quos autem dignatus est deus illius aevi. Illius aevi deo adiungunt, quo alium deum faciant illius aevi; cum sic legi oporteat: Quos autem dignatus est deus, ut facta hic distinctione post deum ad sequentia pertineat illius aevi, id est, quos dignatus sit deus illius aevi possessione et resurrectione. [8] Non enim de deo, sed de statu illius aevi consulebatur, cuius uxor futura esset post resurrectionem in illo aevo. Sic et de ipsis nuptiis responsum subvertunt, ut, Filii huius aevi nubunt et nubuntur, de hominibus dictum sit creatoris nuptias permittentis, se autem, quos deus illius aevi, alter scilicet, dignatus sit resurrectione, iam et hic non nubere, quia non sint filii huius aevi; quando de nuptiis illius aevi consultus, non de huius, eas negaverat de quibus consulebatur. [9] Itaque qui ipsam vim et vocis et pronuntiationis et distinctionis exceperant, nihil aliud senserunt quam quod ad materiam consultationis pertinebat. Atque adeo scribae, Magister, inquirunt, bene dixisti. Confirmaverat enim resurrectionem, formam eius edendo, adversus sadducaeorum opinionem. Denique testimonium eorum qui ita eum respondisse praesumpserant non recusavit. [10] Si autem scribae Christum filium David existimabant, ipse autem David dominum eum appellat, quid hoc ad Christum? Non David errorem scribarum obtundebat, sed honorem Christo David procurabat, quem dominum Christum magis quam filium David confirmabat, quod non congrueret destructori creatoris. At ex nostra parte quam conveniens interpretatio! Nam qui olim a caeco illo filius David fuerat invocatus, quod tunc reticuit, non habens in praesentia scribas, nunc ultro coram eis de industria protulit, ut se, quem caecus secundum scribarum doctrinam filium tantum David praedicarat, dominum quoque eius ostenderet, remunerata quidem fide caeci, qua filium David crediderat illum, pulsata vero traditione scribarum, qua non et dominum eum norant. Quodcunque ad gloriam spectaret Christi creatoris, sic non alius tueretur quam Christus creatoris.

39. [1] Olim constitit de nominum proprietate ei illam (competere) qui prior et Christum suum in homines annuntiaret et Iesum transnominaret. Constabit itaque et de impudentia eius qui multos dicat venturos in nomine ipsius, quod non sit ipsius, si non Christus et Iesus creatoris est, ad quem proprietates nominum pertinet, amplius et prohibeat eos recipi quorum et ipse par sit, ut qui proinde in nomine venit alieno: si non ipsius erat a mendacio nominis praevenire discipulos, qui per proprietatem nominis possidebat veritatem eius.

[2] Venient denique illi dicentes, Ego sum Christus. Recipies eos, qui consimilem recepisti. Et hic enim in nomine suo venit. Quid nunc, quod et ipse veniet nominum dominus, Christus et Iesus creatoris? Reicies illum? Et quam iniquum, quam iniustum et optimo deo indignum, ut non recipias eum in nomine suo venientem, qui alium in nomine eius recepisti! [3] Videamus et quae signa temporibus imponat. Bella, opinor, et regnum super regnum, et gentem super gentem, et pestem, et fames terraeque motus, et formidines, et prodigia de caelo, quae omnia severo et atroci deo congruunt. Haec cum adicit etiam oportere fieri, quem se praestat? destructorem an probatorem creatoris? Cuius dispositiones confirmat impleri oportere, quas ut optimus tam tristes quam atroces abstulisset potius quam constituisset, si non ipsius fuissent. [4] Ante haec autem persecutiones eis praedicat et passiones venturas, in martyrium utique et in salutem. Accipe praedicatum in Zacharia: Dominus, inquit, omnipotens proteget eos, et consument illos et lapidabunt lapidibus fundae et bibent sanguinem illorum velut vinum et replebunt pateras quasi altaris, et salvos eos faciet dominus illo die velut oves, populum suum, quia lapides sancti volutant. [5] Et ne putes haec in passiones praedicari, quae illos tot bellorum nomine ab allophylis manebant, respice ad species. Nemo in praedicatione bellorum legitimis armis debellandorum lapidationem enumerat popularibus coetibus magis et inermi tumultui familiarem. Nemo tanta in bello sanguinis flumina paterarum capacitate metitur, aut unius altaris cruentationi adaequat. Nemo oves appellat eos qui in bello armati et ipsi ex eadem feritate certantes cadunt, sed qui in sua proprietate atque patientia dedentes potius semetipsos quam vindicantes trucidantur. [6] Denique, Quia lapides, inquit, sancti volutant, non quia milites pugnant. Lapides enim sunt et fundamenta, super quae nos aedificamur, extructi, secundum Paulum, super fundamentum apostolorum, qui lapides sancti oppositi omnium offensui volutabant. Et hic igitur ipse vetat cogitari quid responderi oporteat apud tribunalia, qui et Balaam quod non cogitaverat, immo contra quam cogitaverat, suggessit, et Moysi causato linguae tarditatem os repromisit. Et sapientiam ipsam, cui nemo resisteret, per Esaiam demonstravit: Hic dicet, Ego dei sum, et clamabit in nomine Iacob, et alius inscribetur in nomine Israelis. [7] Quid enim sapientius et incontradicibilius confessione simplici et exserta in martyris nomine cum deo invalescentis, quod est interpretatio Israelis? Nec mirum si is cohibuit praecogitationem qui et ipse a patre excepit pronuntiandi tempestive subministrationem: Dominus mihi dat linguam disciplinae, quando debeam proferre sermonem; nisi Marcion Christum non subiectum patri infert. [8] A proximis quoque persecutiones, et nominis ex odio utique blasphemiam praedicatam, non debeo rursus ostendere. Sed per tolerantiam, inquit, salvos facietis vosmetipsos: de qua scilicet psalmus, Tolerantia, inquit, iustorum non periet in finem. Quia et alibi: Honorabilis mors iustorum; ex tolerantia sine dubio, quia et Zacharias: Corona autem erit eis qui toleraverint. [9] Sed ne audeas argumentari apostolos ut alterius dei praecones a Iudaeis vexatos, memento prophetas quoque eadem a Iudaeis passos, tamen non alterius dei apostolos fuisse quam creatoris. Sed monstrato dehinc tempore excidii, cum coepisset vallari exercitibus Hierusalem, signa iam ultimi finis enarrat, solis et lunae siderumque prodigia, et in terra angustias nationum obstupescientium velut a sonitu maris fluctuantis, pro expectatione imminentium orbi malorum. Quod et ipsae vires caelorum concuti habeant, accipe Ioelem: Et dabo prodigia in caelo, et in terra sanguinem et ignem et fumi vaporem: sol convertetur in tenebras et in sanguinem luna, priusquam adveniat dies magnus et illustris domini. Habes et Abacuc: Fluminibus disrumpetur terra, videbunt te et parturient populi: disperges aquas gressu; dedit abyssus sonum suum, sublimitas timoris eius elata est: sol et luna constitit in suo ordine, in lucem coruscationes tuae ibunt, in fulgorem fulgur scutum tuum : in comminatione tua diminues terram, et in indignatione tua depones nationes. [10] Conveniunt, opinor, et domini pronuntiationes et prophetarum de concussionibus mundi et orbis, elementorum et nationum. Post haec quid dominus? Et tunc videbunt filium hominis venientem de caelis cum plurima virtute. Cum autem haec fient, erigetis vos, et levabitis capita, quoniam appropinquavit redemptio vestra: in tempore scilicet regni, de quo subiecta erit ipsa parabola. [11] Sic et vos cum videritis omnia haec fieri, scitote appropinquasse regnum dei. Hic erit dies magnus domini et illustris, venientis de caelis filii hominis, secundum Danielelem: Ecce cum caeli nubibus tanquam filius hominis adveniens, et cetera; et data est illi regia potestas, quam in parabola postulaturus exierat, relictam pecunia servis qua feneraretur: et universae nationes, quas promiserat ei in psalmo pater: Postula de me, et dabo tibi gentes haereditatem tuam: Et gloria omnis serviens illi, et potestas eius aeterna quae non auferetur, et regnum eius quod non corrumpetur, quia nec morientur in illo nec nubent, sed erunt sicut angeli. [12] De eodem adventu filii hominis et fructu eius apud Abacuc: Existi in salutem populi tui ad salvos faciendos christos tuos; erecturos scilicet se et capita levaturos, in tempore regni redemptos. Igitur cum et haec quae sunt promissionum proinde convenient sicut et illa quae sunt concussionum, ex consonantia prophetarum et dominicarum pronuntiationum, nullam hic poteris interstruere distinctionem, ut concussionem quidem referas ad creatorem, saevitiae scilicet deum, quas nec sinere, nedum expectare deberet deus optimus, promissiones vero deo optimo deputes, quas creator ignorans illum non prophetasset. Aut si suas prophetavit, non distantes a promissionibus Christi, par erit in libertate optimo deo, nec plus videbitur a Christo tuo repromitti quam a meo filio hominis. [13] Ipsum decursum scripturae evangelicae ab interrogatione discipulorum usque ad parabolam fici ita invenies contextu sensus filio hominis hinc atque illinc adhaerere ut in illum compingat et tristitia et laeta et concussionem et promissionem, nec possis separare ab illo alteram partem. [14] Unius enim filii hominis adventu constituto inter duos exitus concussionum et promissionum necesse est ad unum pertineant filium hominis et incommoda nationum et vota sanctorum, qui ita positus est in medio ut communis exitibus ambobus, alterum conclusurus adventu suo, id est incommoda nationum, alterum incipiens, id est vota sanctorum, ut, sive mei Christi concesseris adventum filii hominis, quo mala imminetia ei deputes ^[15] quae adventum eius antecedunt, cogaris etiam bona ei adscribere quae ab adventu eius oriuntur, sive tui malueris, quo bona ei adscribas quae ab adventu eius oriuntur, cogaris mala quoque ei deputare quae adventum eius antecedunt. Tam enim mala cohaerent adventui filii hominis antecedendo quam et bona subsequendo. Quaere igitur quem ex duobus Christis constituas in persona unius filii hominis in quam utraque dispositio referatur. Aut et creatorem optimum aut et deum tuum asperum dedisti natura. ^[16] In summa ipsius parabolae considera exempluna. Aspice ficum et arbores omnes: cum fructum protulerint, intellegunt homines aestatem appropinquasse; sic et vos cum videritis haec fieri, scitote in proximo esse regnum dei. Si enim fructificationes arbuscularum signum aestivo tempori praestant, antecedendo illud, proinde conflictationes orbis signum praenotant regni, praecedendo illud. Omne autem signum eius est <cuius et> res cuius est signum, et omni rei ab eo imponitur signum cuius est res. ^[17] Ita si conflictationes signa sunt regni, sicut fructificationes aestatis, ergo et regnum creatoris est, cuius conflictationes deputantur quae signa sunt regni. Praemiserat oportere haec fieri tam atrocia, tam dira, deus optimus, certe a prophetis et a lege praedicata; adeo legem et prophetas non destruebat, cum quae praedicaverant confirmat perfici oportere. ^[18] Adhuc ingerit non transiturum caelum ac terram, nisi omnia peragantur. Quenam ista? Si quae a creatore sunt, merito sustinebunt elementa domini sui ordinem expungi; si quae a deo optimo, nescio an sustineat caelum et terra perfici quae aemulus statuit. Hoc si patietur creator, zelotes deus non est. Transeat age nunc terra et caelum; sic enim dominus eorum destinavit: dum verbum eius maneat in aevum; sic enim et Esaias praenuntiavit. Admoneantur et discipuli, ne quando graventur corda eorum crapula et ebrietate et saecularibus curis, et insistas eis repentinus dies ille velut laqueus, utique oblitis deum ex plenitudine et cogitatione mundi. Moysi erit admonitio. Adeo is liberabit a laqueo diei illius qui hanc admonitionem retro intulit. ^[19] Erant et loca alia apud Hierusalem ad docendum, erant et extra Hierusalem ad secedendum. Sed enim per diem in templo docebat, ut qui per Osee praedixerat: In templo meo me invenerunt, et illic disputatum est ad eos. Ad noctem vero in elaeonem secedebat. Sic enim Zacharias demonstrat: Et stabunt pedes eius in monte elaeone. Erant horae quoque auditorio competentes. Diluculo conveniendum erat, quia per Esaiam cum dixisset, Dominus dat mihi linguam disciplinae, adiecit, Apposuit mihi mane aurem ad audiendum. Si hoc est prophetias dissolvere, quid erit adimplere?

40. [1] Proinde scit et quando pati oporteret eum cuius passionem lex figurat. Nam ex tot festis Iudaeorum paschae diem elegit. In hoc enim sacramentum pronuntiavit Moyses, Pascha est domini. Ideo et affectum suum ostendit: Concupiscentia concupivi pascha edere vobiscum, antequam patiar. O legis destructorem, qui concupierat etiam pascha servare! Nimirum vervecina illum Iudaica delectaret? An ipse erat qui tanquam ovis ad victimam adduci habens, et tanquam ovis coram tondente sic os non aperturus, figuram sanguinis sui salutaris implere concupiscebat? [2] Poterat et ab extraneo quolibet tradi: ne dicerem et in hoc psalmum expunctum: Qui mecum panem edit, levabit in me plantam. Poterat et sine praemio tradi. Quanta enim opera traditoris circa eum qui populum coram offendens nec tradi magis potuisset quam invadi? Sed hoc alii competisset Christo, non qui prophetias adimplebat. Scriptum est enim: Pro eo quod venumdedere iustum. Nam et quantitatem et exitum pretii, postea Iuda paenitente revocati et in emptionem dati agri figuli, sicut in evangelio Matthaei continetur, Hieremias praecanit: Et acceperunt triginta argenteos, pretium appretiati, vel honorati, et dederunt eos in agrum figuli. [3] Professus itaque se concupiscentia concupisse edere pascha ut suum (indignum enim ut quid alienum concupisceret deus), acceptum panem et distributum discipulis corpus suum illum fecit, Hoc est corpus meum dicendo, id est figura corporis mei. Figura autem non fuisset nisi veritatis esset corpus: ceterum vacua res, quod est phantasma, figuram capere non posset. Aut si propterea panem corpus sibi finxit quia corporis carebat veritate, ergo panem debuit tradere pro nobis. Faciebat ad vanitatem Marcionis, ut panis crucifigeretur. Cur autem panem corpus suum appellat, et non magis peponem, quem Marcion cordis loco habuit? Non intellegens veterem fuisse istam figuram corporis Christi, dicentis per Hieremiam, Adversus me cogitaverunt cogitatum, dicentes, Venite coniciamus lignum in panem eius, scilicet crucem in corpus eius. [4] Itaque illuminator antiquitatum quid tunc voluerit significasse panem satis declaravit corpus suum vocans panem. Sic et in calicis mentione testamentum constituens sanguine suo obsignatum, substantiam corporis confirmavit. Nullius enim corporis sanguis potest esse nisi carnis. Nam et si qua corporis qualitas non carnea opponetur nobis, certe sanguinem nisi carnea non habebit. [5] Ita consistet probatio corporis de testimonio carnis, probatio carnis de testimonio sanguinis. Ut autem et sanguinis veterem figuram in vino recognoscas, aderit Esaias: Quis, inquit, qui advenit ex Edom, rubor vestimentorum eius ex Bosor, sic decorus in stola violenta cum fortitudine? Quare rubra vestimenta tua, et indumenta sicut de foro torcularis pleno conculcato? [6] Spiritus enim propheticus velut iam contemplabundus dominum ad passionem venientem, carne scilicet vestitum, ut in ea passum, cruentum habitum carnis in vestimentorum rubore designat, conculcatae et expressae vi passionis tanquam in foro torcularis; quia exinde quasi cruentati homines de vini rubore descendunt. Multo manifestius Genesis in benedictione Iudae, ex cuius tribu carnis census Christi processurus, iam tunc Christum in Iuda delineabat: Lavabit, inquit, in vino stolam suam et in sanguine uvae amictum suum, stolam et amictum carnem demonstrans et vinum sanguinem. Ita et nunc sanguinem suum in vino consecravit, qui tunc vinum in sanguine figuravit.

41. [1] Vae, ait, per quem traditur filius hominis. Ergo iam Vae constat imprecationis et comminationis inclamationem intellegendam et irato et offenso deputandam; nisi si Iudas impune erat tantum sceleris relaturus. Aut si impune, vacat Vae: si non impune, utique ab eo puniendus in quem scelus traditionis admisit. Porro si sciens passus est hominem quem ipse comitatu suo asciverat in tantum scelus ruere, noli iam de creatore circa Adam retractare quae in tuum quoque deum retorquentur; aut ignorasse illum, qui non ex providentia obstitit peccaturo, aut obsistere non potuisse si ignorabat, aut noluisse si et sciebat et poterat; atque ita malitiosum iudicandum, qui passus sit hominem suum ex delicto perire. [2] Suadeo igitur agnoscas potius et in isto creatorem, quam parem illi deum optimum adversus sententiam tuam facias. Nam et Petrum praesumptorie aliquid elocutum negationi potius destinando, zdoten deum tibi ostendit. Debuit etiam osculo tradi propheticus scilicet Christus, ut eius scilicet filius qui labiis a populo diligebatur. Perductus in consessum an ipse esset Christus interrogatur. De quo Christo Iudaei quaesissent nisi de suo? Cur ergo non vel tunc alium eis prodidit? Ut pati posset, inquis. Id est ut ille optimus ignorantes adhuc in scelus mergeret.

Atquin et si dixisset, passurus esset: [3] Si dixero, enim inquit, vobis non credetis: porro non credituri perseverassent in necem eius. Et cur non magis passurus esset, si alterius dei ac per hoc adversarium creatoris se manifestasset? Ergo non ut pateretur, alium se tunc quoque supersedit ostendere; sed quoniam ex ore eius confessionem extorquere cupiebant, nec confesso tamen credituri, qui eum ex operibus scripturas adimplentibus agnovisse debuerant, ita eius fuit occultasse se cui ultro debebatur agnitio. [4] Et tamen adhuc eis manum porrigens, Abhinc, inquit, erit filius hominis sedens ad dexteram virtutis dei. Suggerebat enim se ex Danielis prophetia filium hominis, et e psalmo David sedentem ad dexteram dei. Itaque ex isto dicto et scripturae comparatione illuminati quem se vellet intellegi, Ergo, inquirunt, tu dei filius es? Cuius dei, nisi quem solum noverant? Cuius dei, nisi quem in psalmo meminerant dixisse filio suo, Sede ad dexteram meam? Sed respondit, Vos dicitis, quasi non ego. [5] Atquin confirmavit id se esse quod illi dixerant, dum rursus interrogant. Unde autem probabis interrogative et non ipsos confirmative pronuntiasse, Ergo tu filius dei es? Ut, quia oblique ostenderat se per scripturas filium dei intellegendum, sic senserunt, Ergo tu dei es filius, quod te non vis aperte dicere, aequae ita et ille, Vos dicitis, confirmative respondit; et adeo sic fuit pronuntiatio eius, ut perseveraverint in eo quod pronuntiatio sapiebat.

42. [1] Perductum enim illum ad Pilatum onerare coeperunt quod se regem diceret Christum, sine dubio dei filium, sessurum ad dei dexteram. Ceterum alio eum titulo gravassent, incerti an filium dei se dixisset, nisi, Vos dicitis, sic pronuntiasset, hoc se esse quod dicerent. Pilato quoque interroganti, Tu es Christus? proinde, Tu dicis, ne metu potestatis videretur amplius respondisse. [2] Constitutus est igitur dominus in iudicio; et statuit in iudicio populum suum. Ipse dominus in iudicium venit cum presbyteris et archontibus populi, secundum Esaïam. Atque exinde omne scriptum passionis suae implevit. Tumultuatae sunt ibidem nationes, et populi meditati sunt inania: astiterunt reges terrae, et archontes congregati sunt in unum adversus dominum et adversus Christum eius. Nationes, Romani qui cum Pilato fuerant; populi, tribus Israelis; reges, in Herode; archontes, in summis sacerdotibus. [3] Nam et Herodi velut munus a Pilato missus Osee vocibus fidem reddidit: de Christo enim prophetaverat, Et vinctum eum ducent xenium regi. Delectatus est denique Herodes viso Iesu, nec vocem ullam ab eo audivit. Tanquam agnus

enim coram tondente, sic non aperuit os suum, quia dominus dederat illi linguam disciplinae, ut sciret quomodo eum oporteret proferre sermonem, illam scilicet linguam quam in psalmo adglutinatam gutturi suo tunc probabat non loquendo. [4] Et Barrabas quidem nocentissimus vita ut bonus donatur, Christus vero iustissimus ut homicida morti expostulatur. Sed et duo scelesti circumfiguntur illi, ut inter iniquos scilicet deputaretur. Vestitum plane eius a militibus divisum, partim sorte concessum, Marcion abstulit, respiciens psalmi prophetiam: Dispartiti sibi sunt vestimenta mea, et in vestitum meum sortem miserunt. Aufer igitur et crucem ipsam. Idem enim psalmus de eo non tacet: Foderunt manus meas et pedes meos. Totus in illo exitus legitur. Circumdederunt me canes, synagoga maleficorum circumvallavit me: omnes qui spectabant me, naso irridebant me: locuti sunt labiis, et capita moverunt: Speravit in deum, liberet eum. Quo iam testimonium vestimentorum? Habe falsi tui praedam; totus psalmus vestimenta sunt Christi. [5] Ecce autem et elementa concutiuntur. Dominus enim patiebatur ipsorum. Ceterum adversario laeso caelum luminibus floruisset, magis sol radiis insultasset, magis dies stetisset, libenter spectans pendentem in patibulo Christum Marcionis. Haec argumenta quoque mihi competissent, et si non fuissent praedicata. Caelum, inquit Esaias, vestiam tenebris. Hic erit dies de quo et Amos: Et erit illa die, dicit dominus, occidet sol meridie (habes et horae sextae significationem), et contenebrabit super terram. Scissum est et templi velum, angeli eruptione, derelinquentis filiam Sionis tanquam in vinea speculam et in cucumerario casulam. [6] O quantum perseveravit etiam tricesimo psalmo Christum ipsum reddere! Vociferatur ad patrem, ut et moriens ultima voce prophetas adimpleret. Hoc dicto expiravit. Quis? spiritus semetipsum, an caro spiritum? Sed spiritus semetipsum expirare non potuit. Alius est qui expirat, alius qui expiratur. Si spiritus expiratur, ab alio expiretur necesse est. Quodsi solus spiritus fuisset, discessisse potius diceretur quam expirasse. Quis igitur expirat spiritum nisi caro, quae et spirat quando illum habet, et ita eum cum amittit expirat? [7] Denique si caro non fuit, sed phantasma carnis, phantasma autem spiritus fuit, spiritus autem semetipsum expiravit et expirando discessit, sine dubio phantasma discessit cum spiritus, qui erat phantasma, discessit, et nusquam comparuit phantasma cum spiritu. Nihil ergo remansit in ligno, nihil pependit etiam post expirationem, nihil de Pilato postulatum, nihil de patibulo detractum, nihil sindone involutum, nihil sepulcro novo conditum. Atquin non nihil. Quid igitur illud fuit? Si phantasma, adhuc ergo inerat et Christus. Si discesserat Christus, ergo abstulerat phantasma. [8] Superest impudentiae haereticæ dicere phantasma illic phantasmatis remansisse. Sed si et Ioseph corpus fuisse noverat quod tota pietate tractavit, ille Ioseph qui non consenserat in scelere Iudæis, Beatus vir qui non abiit in consilio impiorum, et in via peccatorum non stetit, et in cathedra pestium non sedit.

43. [1] Oportuerat etiam sepulcrem domini prophetari ac iam tunc merito benedici, si nec mulierum illarum officium praeterit prophetia quæ ante lucem convenerunt ad sepulcrum cum odorum paratura. De hoc enim per Osee, Ut quaerant, inquit, faciem meam, ante lucem vigilabunt ad me dicentes, Eamus et convertamur ad dominum, quia ipse eripuit et curabit nos, percussit et miserebitur nostri, sanabit nos post biduum, in die tertia resurgemus. [2] Quis enim hæc non credat in recogitatu mulierum illarum volutata inter dolorem præsentis destitutionis, qua percussæ sibi videbantur a domino, et spem resurrectionis ipsius, qua restitui rite arbitrantur? Corpore autem non invento sublata erat sepultura eius de medio, secundum Esaïam. Sed et duo ibidem angeli apparuerunt. Tot fere laterensibus uti solebat in duobus testibus consistens dei sermo. Revertentes quoque a sepulcro mulieres, et ab illa angelorum visione, prospiciebat Esaïas: Mulieres, inquit, venientes a visione, venite, ad renuntiandam scilicet domini resurrectionem. [3] Bene autem quod incredulitas discipulorum perseverabat, ut in finem usque defensio nostra consisteret Christum Iesum non alium se discipulis edidisse quam prophetarum. Nam cum duo ex illis iter agerent et dominus eis adhaesisset, non comparens quod ipse esset, etiam dissimulans de conscientia rei gestæ, Nos autem putabamus, inquiunt, ipsum esse redemptorem Israelis, utique suum Christum, id est creatoris. [4] Adeo nec alium se ediderat illis. Ceterum non existimarent eum creatoris, et cum creatoris existimaretur, non sustinisset hanc de se existimationem, si non is esset qui existimatur. Aut ipse erit auctor erroris et praevaricator veritatis, adversus dei optimi titulum. Sed nec post resurrectionem alium se eis ostendit quam quem existimatum sibi dixerant. Plane invectus est in illos: O insensati et tardi corde in non credendo omnibus quæ locutus est ad vos. Quæ locutus non alterius se dei esse probat, sed eiusdem dei. [5] Nam eadem et angeli ad mulieres: Rememoramini quæ locutus sit vobis in Galilæa, dicens quod oportet tradi filium hominis et crucifigi et tertia die resurgere. Et quare oportebat, nisi quia

ita a deo creatore scriptum? Igitur increpavit illos ut de sola passione scandalizatos, et ut dubios de fide resurrectionis annuntiatae sibi a feminis, per quae non crediderant ipsum fuisse quem existimarent. Itaque quod existimaverant, id volens credi se, eum se confirmabat quem existimaverant, creatoris scilicet Christum, redemptorem Israelis. [6] De corporis autem veritate quid potest clarius? cum haesitantibus eis ne phantasma esset, immo phantasma credentibus, Quid turbati estis? inquit, et quid cogitationes subeunt in corda vestra? Videte manus meas et pedes, quia ego ipse sum, quoniam spiritus ossa non habet, sicut me videtis habere. [7] Et Marcion quaedam contraria sibi illa, credo industria, eradere de evangelio suo noluit, ut ex his quae eradere potuit nec erasit, illa quae erasit aut negetur erasisse aut merito erasisse dicatur. Nec parcit nisi eis quae non minus aliter interpretando quam delendo subvertit. Vult itaque sic dictum quasi, Spiritus ossa non habet sicut me videtis habentem, ad spiritum referatur, sicut me videtis habentem, id est non habentem ossa sicut et spiritus. Et quae ratio tortuositatis istius, cum simpliciter pronuntiare potuisset, Quia spiritus ossa non habet, sicut me videtis non habentem? [8] Cur autem inspectui eorum manus et pedes suos offert, quae membra ex ossibus constant, si ossa non habebat? Cur adicit, Et scitote quia ego sum, quem scilicet corporeum retro noverant? Aut si phantasma erat usquequaque, cur illos phantasma credentes increpabat? Atquin adhuc eis non credentibus propterea cibum desideravit, ut se ostenderet etiam dentes habere. [9] Implevimus, ut opinor, sponsionem. Exhibuimus Iesum Christum prophetarum doctrinis, sententiis, affectibus, sensibus, virtutibus, passionibus, etiam resurrectione, non alium quam creatoris; siquidem et apostolos mittens ad praedicandum universis nationibus, in omnem terram exire sonum eorum et in terminos terrae voces eorum, psalmum adimplendo praecepit. Misereor tui, Marcion, frustra laborasti. Christus enim Iesus in evangelio tuo meus est.

LIBER V.

1. [1] Nihil sine origine nisi deus solus. Quae quantum praecedit in statu omnium rerum, tantum praecedat necesse est etiam in retractatu earum, ut constare de statu possit, quia nec habeas dispicere quid quale sit, nisi certus an sit, cum cognoveris unde sit. Et ideo ex opusculi ordine ad hanc materiam devolutus apostoli quoque originem a Marcione desidero, novus aliqui discipulus nec ullius alterius auditor, qui nihil interim credam nisi nihil temere credendum, temere porro credi quodcunque sine originis agnitione creditur, quique dignissime ad sollicitudinem redigam istam inquisitionem, cum is mihi affirmatur apostolus quem in albo apostolorum apud evangelium non deprehendo. [2] Denique audiens postea eum a domino allectum, iam in caelis quiescente, quasi improvidentiam existimo si non ante scivit illum sibi necessarium Christus, sed iam ordinato officio apostolatus et in sua opera dimisso, ex incursu, non ex prospectu, adiciendum existimavit, necessitate, ut ita dixerim, non voluntate. Quamobrem, Pontice nauclere, si nunquam furtivas merces vel illicitas in acatos tuas recepisti, si nullum omnino onus avertisti vel adulterasti, cautior utique et fidelior in dei rebus, edas velim nobis, quo symbolo susceperis apostolum Paulum, quis illum tituli caractere percusserit, quis transmiserit tibi, quis imposuerit, ut possis eum constanter exponere, ne illius probetur qui omnia apostolatus eius instrumenta protulerit. [3] Ipse se, inquit, apostolum est professus, et quidem non ab hominibus nec per hominem, sed per Iesum Christum. Plane profiteri potest semetipsum quis, verum professio eius alterius auctoritate conficitur. Alius scribit, alius subscribit, alius obsignat, alius actis refert. Nemo sibi et professor et testis est. Praeter haec utique legisti multos venturos qui dicant, Ego sum Christus. [4] Si est qui se Christum mentiatur, quanto magis qui se apostolum praedicet Christi? Adhuc ego in persona discipuli et inquisitoris conversor, ut iam hinc et fidem tuam obtundam, qui unde eam probes non habes, et impudentiam suffundam, qui vindicas, et unde possis vindicare non recipis. Sit Christus, sit apostolus, ut alterius, dum non probantur nisi de instrumento creatoris. [5] Nam mihi Paulum etiam Genesis olim repromisit. Inter illas enim figuras et propheticas super filios suos benedictiones Iacob cum ad Benjamin direxisset, Benjamin, inquit, lupus rapax ad matutinum comedet adhuc, et ad vesperam dabit escam. Ex tribu enim Benjamin oriturum Paulum providebat, lupum

rapacem ad matutinum comedentem, id est prima aetate vastaturum pecora domini ut persecutorem ecclesiarum, dehinc ad vesperam escam daturum, id est devergente iam aetate oves Christi educaturum ut doctorem nationum. [6] Nam et Saulis primo asperitas insectationis erga David, dehinc paenitentia et satisfactio, bona pro malis recipientis, non aliud portendebat quam Paulum in Saule secundum tribus et Iesum in David secundum virginis censum. Haec figurarum sacramenta si tibi displicent, certe Acta Apostolorum hunc mihi ordinem Pauli tradiderunt, a te quoque non negandum. Inde apostolum ostendo persecutorem, non ab hominibus neque per hominem; inde et ipsi credere inducor; inde te a defensione eius expello, nec timeo dicentem, Tu ergo negas apostolum Paulum? Non blasphemio quem tueor. Nego, ut te probare compellam. [7] Nego, ut meum esse convincam. Aut si ad nostram fidem spectas, recipe quae eam faciunt. Si ad tuam provocas, ede quae eam praestruunt. Aut proba esse quae credis; aut si non probas, quomodo credis? Aut qualis es adversus eum credens a quo solo probatur esse quod credis? [8] Habe nunc et apostolum de meo sicut et Christum, tam meum apostolum quam et Christum. Iisdem et hic dimicabimus lineis, in ipso gradu provocabimus praescriptionis, oportere scilicet et apostolum qui creatoris negetur, immo et adversus creatorem proferatur, nihil docere, nihil sapere, nihil velle secundum creatorem, et inprimis tanta constantia alium deum edicere quanta a lege creatoris abruptit. Neque enim verisimile est ut avertens a Iudaismo non pariter ostenderet in cuius dei fidem averteret, quia nemo transire posset a creatore nesciens ad quem transeundum sibi esset. [9] Sive enim Christus iam alium deum revelaverat, sequebatur etiam apostoli testatio, vel ne non eius dei apostolus haberetur quem Christus revelaverat, et quia non licebat abscondi ab apostolo qui iam revelatus fuisset a Christo: sive nihil tale de deo Christus revelaverat, tanto magis ab apostolo debuerat revelari, qui iam non posset ab alio, non credendus sine dubio si nec ab apostolo revelatus. Quod idcirco praestruximus, ut iam hinc profiteamur nos proinde probaturos nullum alium deum ab apostolo circumlatum, sicut probavimus nec a Christo, ex ipsius utique epistulis Pauli, quas proinde mutilatas etiam de numero forma iam haeretici evangelii praeiudicasse debebit.

2. DE EPISTULA AD GALATAS. [1] Principalem adversus Iudaismum epistolam nos quoque confitemur quae Galatas docet. Amplectimur etenim

omnem illam legis veteris abolitionem, ut et ipsam de creatoris venientem dispositione, sicut saepe iam in isto ordine tractavimus de praedicata novatione a prophetis dei nostri. Quodsi creator quidem vetera cessura promisit, novis scilicet orituris, Christus vero tempus distinx<it decess>ionis istius (lex et prophetae usque ad Ioannem), terminum in Ioanne statuens inter utrumque ordinem desinentium exinde veterum et incipientium novorum, necessarie et apostolus in Christo post Ioannem revelato vetera infirmat nova vero confirmat, atque ita non alterius dei fidem curat quam creatoris, apud quem et vetera decessura praedicabantur. [2] Igitur et legis destructio et evangelii aedificatio pro me faciunt in ista quoque epistula ad eam Galatarum praesumptionem pertinentes qua praesumebant Christum, ut puta creatoris, salva creatoris lege credendum, quod adhuc incredibile videretur legem a suo auctore deponi. Porro si omnino alium deum ab apostolo audissent, ultro utique scissent abscedendum sibi esse a lege eius dei quem reliquissent alium secuti. Quis enim expectaret diutius discere quod novam deberet sectari disciplinam, qui novum deum recepisset? [3] Immo quia eadem quidem divinitas praedicabatur in evangelio quae semper nota fuerat in lege, disciplina vero non eadem, hic erat totus quaestionis status, an lex creatoris ab evangelio deberet excludi in Christo creatoris. Denique aufer hunc statum, et vacat quaestio. Vacante autem quaestione ultro omnibus agnoscentibus discedendum sibi esse ab ordine creatoris per fidem dei alterius nulla apostolo materia competisset id tam presse docendi quod ultro fides ipsa dictasset. [4] Igitur tota intentio epistulae istius nihil aliud docet quam legis discessionem venientem de creatoris dispositione, ut adhuc suggeremus. Si item nullius novi dei exserit mentionem, quod nusquam magis fecisset quam in ista materia, ut rationem scilicet ablegandae legis unica hac et sufficientissima definitione proponeret novae divinitatis, apparet quomodo scribat, Miror vos tam cito transferri ab eo qui vos vocavit in gratiam ad aliud evangelium, ex conversatione aliud, non ex religione, ex disciplina, non ex divinitate: quoniam quidem evangelium Christi a lege evocare deberet ad gratiam, non a creatore ad alium deum. [5] Nemo enim illos moverat a creatore, ut viderentur sic ad aliud evangelium transferri quasi dum ad creatorem transferuntur. Nam et adiciens quod aliud evangelium omnino non esset, creatoris confirmat id quod esse defendit. Si enim et creator evangelium repromittit, dicens per Esaiam, Ascende in montem excelsum, qui evangelizas Sioni, extolle vocem

in valentia tua, qui evangelizas Hierusalem; item ad apostolorum personam, Quam tempestivi pedes evangelizantium pacem, evangelizantium bona, utique et nationibus evangelizantium, quoniam et, In nomine eius, inquit, nationes sperabunt, Christi scilicet, cui ait, Posui te in lumen nationum; est autem evangelium etiam dei novi, quod vis tunc ab apostolo defensum; iam ergo duo sunt evangelia apud duos deos, et mentitus erit apostolus dicens quod aliud omnino non est, cum sit et aliud, cum sic suum evangelium defendere potuisset, ut potius demonstraret, non ut unum determinaret. Sed fortasse, ut fugias hinc, Et ideo, dices, subtexit, Licet angelus de caelo aliter evangelizaverit, anathema sit, quia et creatorem sciebat evangelizaturum. [6] Rursus ergo te implicas. Hoc est enim quo adstringeris. Duo enim evangelia confirmare non est eius qui aliud iam negarit. Tamen lucet sensus eius qui suam praemisit personam: Sed et si nos aut angelus de caelo aliter evangelizaverit. Verbi enim gratia dictum est. Ceterum si nec ipse aliter evangelizaturus, utique nec angelus. Ita angelum ad hoc nominavit, quo multo magis hominibus non esset credendum, quando nec angelo nec apostolo, non angelum ad evangelium referret creatoris. [7] Exinde decurrens ordinem conversionis suae de persecutore in apostolum scripturam Apostolicorum confirmat, apud quam ipsa etiam epistulae istius materia recognoscitur, intercessisse quosdam qui dicerent circumcidi oportere et observandam esse Moysi legem, tunc apostolos de ista quaestione consultos ex auctoritate spiritus renuntiasse non esse imponenda onera hominibus quae patres ipsi non potuissent sustinere. Quod si et ex hoc congruunt Paulo Apostolorum Acta, cur ea respuatis iam apparet, ut deum scilicet non alium praedicantia quam creatorem, nec Christum alterius quam creatoris, quando nec promissio spiritus sancti aliunde probetur exhibita quam de instrumento Actorum. Quae utique verisimile non est ex parte quidem apostolo convenire, cum ordinem eius secundum ipsius testimonium ostendunt, ex parte vero dissidere, cum divinitatem in Christo creatoris annuntiant, ut praedicationem quidem apostolorum non sit secutus Paulus, qui formam ab eis dedocendae legis accepit.

constabiliri desiderarat, quos, si quando, vultis Iudaismi magis adfines subintellegi. [2] Cum vero nec Titum dicit circumcislam, iam incipit ostendere solam circumcisionis quaestionem ex defensione adhuc legis concussam ab eis quos propterea falsos et superinducticios fratres appellat, non aliud statuere pergentes quam perseverantiam legis, ex fide sine dubio integra creatoris, atque ita pervertentes evangelium, non interpolatione scripturae qua Christum creatoris effingerent, sed retentione veteris disciplinae ne legem creatoris excluderent. [3] Ergo propter falsos, inquit, superinducticios fratres, qui subintraverant ad speculandam libertatem nostram quam habemus in Christo, ut nos subigerent servituti, nec ad horam cessimus subiectioni. Intendamus enim et sensui ipsi et causae eius, et apparebit vitiatio scripturae. Cum praemittit, Sed nec Titus, qui mecum erat, cum esset Graecus, coactus est circumcidi, dehinc subiungit, Propter superinducticios falsos fratres, et reliqua, contrarii utique facti incipit reddere rationem, ostendens propter quid fecerit quod nec fecisset nec ostendisset si illud propter quod fecit non accidisset. [4] Denique dicas velim, si non subintroissent falsi illi fratres ad speculandam libertatem eorum, cessissent subiectioni? Non opinor. Ergo cesserunt, quia fuerunt propter quos cederetur. Hoc enim rudi fidei et adhuc de legis observatione suspensae competeat, ipso quoque apostolo ne in vacuum cucurrisset aut curreret suspecto. [5] Itaque frustrandi erant falsi fratres, speculantes libertatem Christianam, ne ante eam in servitutem abducerent Iudaismi quam Paulus sciret se non in vacuum cucurrisset, quam dexteris ei darent antecessores, quam ex censu eorum in nationes praedicandi munus subiret. Necessario igitur cessit ad tempus, et sic ei ratio constat Timotheum circumcidendi et rastos introducendi in templum, quae in Actis edicuntur, adeo vera, ut apostolo consonent profitenti factum se Iudaeis Iudaeum ut Iudaeos lucrificeret, et sub lege agentem propter eos qui sub lege agerent, sic et propter superinductos illos, et omnibus novissime omnia factum ut omnes lucraretur. [6] Si haec quoque intellegi ex hoc postulant, id quoque nemo dubitabit, eius dei et Christi praedicatorem Paulum cuius legem quamvis excludens, interim tamen pro temporibus admiserat, statim amoliendam si novum deum protulisset. Bene igitur quod et dexteris Paulo dederunt Petrus et Iacobus et Ioannes, et de officii distributione pepigerunt, ut Paulus in nationes, illi in circumcisionem, tantum ut meminissent egenorum, et hoc secundum legem creatoris, pauperes et egenos fovendis, sicut in evangelii vestri retractatu probatum est. [7] Adeo constat de lege sola fuisse quaestionem, dum ostenditur quid ex lege custodiri convenerit. Sed reprehendit Petrum non recto pede incedentem ad evangelii veritatem. Plane reprehendit, non ob aliud tamen quam ob inconstantiam victus, quem pro personarum qualitate variabat, timens eos qui erant ex circumcisione, non ob aliquam divinitatis perversitatem, de qua et aliis in faciem restitisset, qui de minore causa conversationis ambiguae Petro ipsi non pepercit. Sed quomodo Marcionitae volunt credi? [8] De cetero pergat apostolus, negans ex operibus legis iustificari hominem, sed ex fide. Eiusdem tamen dei cuius et lex. Nec enim laborasset fidem a lege discernere, quam diversitas ipsius divinitatis ultro discrevisset, si fuisset. Merito non reaedificabat quae destruxit. Destruui autem lex habuit ex quo vox Ioannis clamavit in eremo: Parate vias domini, ut fierent rivi et colles et montes repleti et humiliati, et tortuosa et aspera in rectitudinem et in campos, id est legis difficultates in evangelii facilitates. Meminerat iam et psalmi esse tempus: Disrumpamus a nobis vincula eorum, et abiciamus a nobis iugum ipsorum; ex quo tumultuatae sunt gentes et populi meditati sunt inania, astiterunt reges terrae et magistratus congregati sunt in unum adversus dominum et adversus Christum ipsius; ut iam ex fidei libertate iustificetur homo, non ex legis servitute, quia iustus ex fide vivit. [9] Quod si prophetae Abacuc praenuntiavit, habes et apostolum prophetas confirmantem, sicut et Christus. Eius ergo dei erit fides in qua vivet iustus, cuius et lex in qua non iustificatur operarius. Proinde si in lege maledictio est, in fide vero benedictio, utrumque habes propositum apud creatorem: Ecce posui, inquit, ante te maledictionem et benedictionem. Non potes distantiam vindicare, quae etsi rerum est, non ideo auctorum, quae ab uno auctore proponitur. Cur autem Christus factus sit pro nobis maledictio ipso apostolo edocente, manifestum est quam nobiscum faciat, id est secundum fidem creatoris. [10] Neque enim quia creator pronuntiavit, Maledictus omnis in ligno suspensus, ideo videbitur alterius dei esse Christus et idcirco a creatore iam tunc in lege maledictus. Et quomodo praemaledixisset eum creator quem ignorat? Cur autem non magis competat creatori filium suum dedisse maledictioni suae quam illi deo tuo subdidisse maledictioni, et quidem pro homine alieno? Denique si atrox videtur hoc in creatore circa filium, proinde tuo in deo; si vero rationale et in tuo, proinde et in meo, et magis in meo. [11] Facilius enim crederetur eius esse per maledictionem Christi benedictionem prospexisse homini qui et maledictionem aliquando et benedictionem proposuerit ante hominem, quam qui neutrum unquam sit apud te professus. Accepimus igitur benedictionem spiritalem per fidem, inquit, ex qua scilicet vivit iustus, secundum creatorem. Hoc est ergo quod dico, eius dei fidem esse cuius est forma gratiae fidei. Sed et cum adicit: Omnes enim filii estis fidei, ostenditur quid supra haeretica industria eraserit, mentionem scilicet Abrahae, qua nos apostolus filios Abrahae per fidem affirmat, secundum quam mentionem hic quoque filios fidei notavit. Ceterum quomodo filii fidei? et cuius fidei, si non Abrahae? [12] Si enim Abraham deo credidit, et deputatum est iustitiae, atque exinde pater multarum nationum meruit nuncupari, nos autem credendo deo magis proinde iustificamur, sicut Abraham, et vitam proinde consequimur, sicut iustus ex fide vivit: sic fit ut et supra filios nos Abrahae pronuntiarit, qua patris fidei, et hic filios fidei, per quam Abraham pater nationum fuerat repromissus. Ipsum quod fidem a circumcisione revocabat, nonne Abrahae filios constituere quaerebat, qui in carnis integritate crediderat? Denique alterius dei fides ad formam dei alterius non potest admitti, ut credentes iustitiae deputet, ut iustos vivere faciat, ut nationes filios fidei dicat. Totum hoc eius est apud quem ante iam notum est.

4. [1] Sub eadem Abrahae mentione, dum ipso sensu revincatur, Adhuc, inquit, secundum hominem dico: dum essemus parvuli, sub elementis mundi eramus positi, ad deservendum eis. Atquin non est hoc humanitus dictum. Non enim exemplum est, sed veritas. Quis enim parvulus, utique sensu, quod sunt nationes, non elementis subiectus est mundi, quae pro deo suspicit? Illud autem fuit, quod cum Secundum hominem dixisset, tamen testamentum hominis nemo spernit aut superordinat. [2] Exemplo enim humani testamenti permanentis divinum tuebatur. Abrahae dictae sunt promissiones et semini eius: non dixit seminibus, quasi pluribus, sed semini, tanquam uni, quod Christus est. Erubescat spongia Marcionis! Nisi quod ex abundanti retracto quae abstulit, cum validius sit illum ex his revinci quae servavit. Cum autem evenit impleri tempus, misit deus filium suum, utique is qui etiam ipsorum temporum deus est quibus saeculum constat, qui signa quoque temporum ordinavit, soles et lunas et sidera et stellas, qui filii denique sui revelationem in extremitatem temporum et disposuit et praedicavit: In novissimis diebus erit manifestus mons domini, et, In novissimis diebus effundam de spiritu meo in omnem carnem, secundum Ioelem. Ipsius erat sustinuisse tempus impleri cuius erat etiam finis temporis, sicut initium. [3] Ceterum deus ille otiosus, nec operationis nec praedicationis ullius, atque ita nec temporis alicuius, quid omnino egit quod efficeret tempus impleri et iam implendum sustineri? Si nihil, satis vanum est ut creatoris tempora sustinuerit serviens creatori. Cui autem rei misit filium suum? Ut eos qui sub lege erant redimeret, hoc est ut efficeret tortuosa in viam rectam et aspera in vias lenes, secundum Esaïam, ut vetera transirent et nova orirentur, lex nova ex Sion et sermo domini ex Hierusalem, et ut adoptionem filiorum acciperemus, utique nationes, quae filii non eramus. [4] Et ipse enim lux erit nationum, et in nomine eius nationes sperabunt. Itaque ut certum esset nos filios dei esse, misit spiritum suum in corda nostra, clamantem: Abba, pater. In novissimis enim, inquit, diebus effundam de meo spiritu in omnem carnem. Cuius gratia, nisi cuius et promissio gratiae? [5] Quis pater, nisi qui et factor? Post has itaque divitias non erat revertendum ad infirma et mendica elementa. Elementa autem apud Romanos quoque etiam primae litterae solent dici. Non ergo per mundialium elementorum derogationem a deo eorum avertere cupiebat, etsi dicendo supra, Si ergo his qui non natura sunt dei servitis, physicae, id est naturalis, superstitionis elementa pro deo habentis suggillabat errorem, nec sic tamen elementorum deum taxans. Sed quae velit intellegi elementa, primas scilicet litteras legis, ipse declarat. [6] Dies observatis et menses et tempora et annos, et sabbata ut opinor et coenas puras et ieiunia et dies magnos. Cessare enim ab his quoque, sicut et circumcisione, oportebat ex decretis creatoris, qui et per Esaïam, Neomenias vestras et sabbata et diem magnum non sustinebo, ieiunium et ferias et cerimonias vestras odit anima mea; et per Amos, Odi, reieci cerimonias vestras, et non odorabor in frequentiis vestris; item per Osee, Avertam universas iocunditates eius et cerimonias eius et sabbata et neomenias eius et omnes frequentias eius. [7] Quae ipse constituerat, inquis, erasit? Magis quam alius; aut si alius, ergo ille adiuvit sententiam creatoris, auferens quae et ille damnaverat. Sed non huius loci quaestio cur leges suas creator infregerit. Sufficit quod infracturum probavimus, ut confirmetur nihil apostolum adversus creatorem determinasse, cum et ipsa amolitio legis a creatore sit. [8] Sed ut furibus solet aliquid excidere de praeda in indicium, ita credo et Marcionem novissimam Abrahae mentionem dereliquisse, nulla magis auferenda, etsi ex parte convertit. Si enim Abraham duos liberos habuit, unum ex ancilla et alium ex libera, sed qui ex ancilla carnaliter natus est, qui vero ex libera per repromissionem: quae sunt allegorica, id est aliud portendentia: haec sunt enim duo testamenta, sive duae ostensiones, sicut invenimus interpretatum, unum a monte Sina in synagogam Iudaeorum secundum legem generans in servitutem, aliud super omnem principatum generans, vim, dominationem, et omne nomen quod nominatur, non tantum in hoc aevo sed et in futuro, quae est mater nostra, in quam repromisimus sanctam ecclesiam; ideoque adicit, Propter quod, fratres, non sumus ancillae filii sed liberae, utique manifestavit et Christianismi generositatem in filio Abrahae ex libera nato allegoriae habere sacramentum, sicut et Iudaismi servitutem legalem in filio ancillae, atque ita eius dei esse utramque dispositionem apud quem invenimus utriusque dispositionis delineationem. [9] Ipsum quod ait, Qua libertate Christus nos manumisit, nonne eum constituit manumissorem qui fuit dominus? Alienos enim servos nec Galba manumisit, facilius liberos soluturus. Ab eo igitur praestabitur libertas apud quem fuit servitus legis. Et merito. Non decebat manumissos rursus iugo servitutis, id est legis, adstringi, iam psalmo adimpleto: Disrumpamus vincula eorum et abiciamus a nobis iugum ipsorum, postquam archontes congregati sunt in unum adversus dominum et adversus Christum ipsius. [10] De servitute igitur exemptos ipsam servitutis notam eradere perseverabat, circumcisionem, ex praedicationis scilicet propheticae auctoritate, memor dictum per Hieremiam, Et circumcidimini praeputia cordis vestri; quia et Moyses, Circumcidetis duricordiam vestram, id est non carnem. Denique si circumcisionem ab alio deo veniens excludebat, cur etiam praeputationem negat quicquam valere in Christo, sicut et circumcisionem? [11] praeferre enim debebat aemulam eius quam expugnabat, si ab aemulo circumcisionis deo esset. Porro quia et circumcisio et praeputatio uni deo deputabantur, ideo utraque in Christo vacabat propter fidei praelationem, illius fidei de qua erat scriptum: Et in nomine eius nationes credent, illius fidei quam dicendo per dilectionem perfici sic quoque creatoris ostendit. Sive enim dilectionem dicit quae in deum, et hoc creatoris est, Diliges deum ex toto corde tuo, et ex tota anima tua, et ex totis viribus tuis ; sive quae in proximum, Et proximum tuum tanquam te, creatoris est. [12] Qui autem turbat vos, iudicium feret. A quo deo? Ab optimo? Sed ille non iudicat. A creatore? Sed nec ille damnabit assertorem circumcisionis. Quodsi non erit alius qui iudicet nisi creator, iam ergo non damnabit legis defensores nisi qui ipse eam cessare constituit. Quid nunc si et confirmat illam ex parte qua debet? Tota enim, inquit, lex in vobis adimpleta est: Diliges proximum tuum tanquam te. ^[13] Aut si sic vult intellegi, Adimpleta est, quasi iam non adimplenda, ergo non vult ut diligam proximum tanquam me, ut et hoc cum lege cessaverit. Sed perseverandum erit senaper in isto praecepto. Ergo lex creatoris etiam ab adversario probata est, nec dispendium sed compendium ab eo consecuta est, redacta summa in unum iam praeceptum. Sed nec hoc alii magis competit quam auctori. Atque adeo cum dicit, Onera vestra invicem sustinete et sic adimplebitis legem Christi, si hoc non potest fieri nisi quis diligit proximum sibi tanquam se, apparet, Diliges proximum tibi tanquam te, per quod auditur, Invicem onera vestra portate, Christi esse legem, quae sit creatoris, atque ita Christum creatoris esse, dum Christi est lex creatoris. ^[14] Erratis, deus non deridetur. Atquin derideri potest deus Marcionis, qui nec irasci novit nec ulcisci. Quod enim severit homo, hoc et metet. Ergo retributionis et iudicii deus intentat. Bonum autem facientes non fatigemur, et Dum habemus tempus, operemur bonum. Nega creatorem bonum facere praecepisse, et diversa doctrina sit diversae divinitatis. Porro si retributionem praedicat, ab eodem erit et corruptionis messis et vitae. ^[15] Tempore autem suo metemus, quia et Ecclesiasticus, Tempus inquit erit omni rei. Sed et mihi, famulo creatoris, mundus crucifixus est, non tamen deus mundi, et ego mundo, non tamen deo mundi. Mundum enim quantum ad conversationem eius posuit, cui renuntiando mutuo transfigimur et invicem morimur. Persecutores vocat Christi. Cum vero adicit stigmata Christi in corpore suo gestare se (utique corporalia competunt), iam non putativam, sed veram et solidam carnem professus est Christi, cuius stigmata corporalia ostendit.

5. DE EPISTULA AD CORINTHIOS PRIMA. ^[1] Praestructio superioris epistolae ita duxit, ut de titulo eius non retractaverim, certus et alibi retractari eum posse, communem scilicet et eundem in epistulis omnibus. Quod non utique salutem praescribit eis quibus scribit, sed gratiam et pacem, non dico. Quid illi cum Iudaico adhuc more, destructori Iudaismi? Nam et hodie Iudaei in pacis nomine appellant, et retro in scripturis sic salutabant. Sed intellego illum defendisse officio suo praedicationem creatoris: Quam maturi pedes evangelizantium bona, evangelizantium pacem. ^[2] Evangelizator enim bonorum, id est gratiae dei, pacem quam praeferebam sciebat. Haec cum a deo patre nostro et domino Iesu annuntians communibus nominibus utatur, competentibus nostro quoque sacramento, non puto dispici posse quis deus pater et dominus Iesus praedicetur, nisi ex accedentibus cui magis competant.

[3] Primo quidem patrem dominum praescribo non alium agnoscendum quam et hominis et universitatis creatorem et institutorem: porro patri etiam domini nomen accedere ob potestatem, quod et filius per patrem capiat: dehinc gratiam et pacem non solum eius esse a quo praedicabantur, sed eius qui fuerit offensus. Nec gratia enim fit nisi offensae, nec pax nisi belli. [4] Et populus autem per disciplinae transgressionem et omne hominum genus per naturae dissimulationem et deliquerat et rebellaverat adversus creatorem. Deus autem Marcionis, et quia ignotus, non potuit offendi, et quia nescit irasci. Quae ergo gratia a non offenso? quae pax a non rebellato? [5] Ait crucem Christi stultitiam esse perituris, virtutem autem et sapientiam dei salutem consecuturis; et ut ostenderet unde hoc eveniret, adicit: Scriptum est enim, Perdam sapientiam sapientium et prudentiam prudentium irritam faciam. Si haec creatoris sunt, et quae ad causam crucis pertinent stultitiae deputat, ergo et crux et per crucem Christus ad creatorem pertinebit, a quo praedicatum est quod ad crucem pertinet. [6] Aut si creator, qua aemulus, idcirco sapientiam abstulit ut crux Christi scilicet adversarii stultitia deputetur, equomodo potest aliquid ad crucem Christi non sui creator pronuntiasse, quem ignorabat cum praedicabat? Sed et cur apud dominum optimum et profusae misericordiae alii salutem referunt, credentes crucem virtutem et sapientiam dei esse, alii perditionem, quibus Christi crux stultitia reputatur, si non creatoris est aliquam et populi et humani generis offensam detrimento sapientiae atque prudentiae multasse? [7] Hoc sequentia confirmabunt, cum dicit, Nonne infatuavit deus sapientiam mundi? cumque et hic adicit quare: Quoniam in dei sapientia non intellexit mundus per sapientiam dominum, boni duxit deus per stultitiam praedicationis salvos facere credentes. Sed prius de mundo disceptabo, quatenus subtilissimi haeretici hic vel maxime mundum per dominum mundi interpretantur, nos autem hominem qui sit in mundo intellegimus, ex forma simplici loquelaе humanae, qua plerumque id quod continet ponimus pro eo quod continetur. Circus clamavit, et forum locutum est, et basilica fremuit, id est qui in his locis rem egerunt. Igitur quia homo, non deus, mundi in sapientia non cognovit deum, quem cognoscere debuerat, et Iudaeus in sapientia scripturarum et omnis gens in sapientia operum, ideo deus idem qui in sapientia sua non erat agnitus statuit sapientiam hominum

stultitia repercutere, salvos faciendo credentes quosque in stultam crucis praedicationem. [8] Quoniam Iudaei signa desiderant, qui iam de deo certi esse debuerant, et Graeci sapientiam quaerunt, qui suam scilicet, non dei, sapientiam sistunt. Ceterum si novus deus praedicaretur, quid deliquerant Iudaei signa desiderantes quibus crederent, aut Graeci sapientiam sectantes cui magis crederent? Ita et remuneratio ipsa in Iudaeos et Graecos et zeloten deum confirmat et iudicem, qui ex retributione aemula et iudice infatuaverit sapientiam mundi. Quodsi eius sunt et causae cuius adhibentur scripturae, ergo de creatore tractans apostolus non intellecto creatorem utique docet intellegendum. [9] Etiam quod scandalum Iudaeis praedicat Christum, prophetiam super illo consignat creatoris, dicentis per Esaiam, Ecce posui in Sion lapidem offensionis et petram scandali. Petra autem fuit Christus: etiam Marcion servat. Quid est autem stultum dei sapientius hominibus, nisi crux et mors Christi? Quid infirmum dei fortius homine, nisi nativitas et caro dei? Ceterum si nec natus ex virgine Christus nec carne constructus ac per hoc neque crucem neque mortem vere perpessus est, nihil in illo fuit stultum et infirmum; nec iam stulta mundi elegit deus ut confundat sapientiam, nec infirma mundi elegit deus ut confundat fortia, nec inhonesta et minima et contemptibilia, quae non sunt, id est quae non vere sunt, ut confundat quae sunt, id est quae vere sunt. Nihil enim a deo dispositum est vere modicum et ignobile et contemptibile, sed quod ab homine. Apud creatorem autem etiam vetera stultitiae et infirmitati et inhonestati et pusillitati et contemptui deputari possunt. [10] Quid stultius, quid infirmius, quam sacrificiorum cruentorum et holocaustorum nidorosorum a deo exactio? Quid infirmius quam vasculorum et grabatorum purgatio? Quid inhonestius quam carnis iam erubescens alia dedecoratio? Quid tam humile quam talionis indictio? Quid tam contemptibile quam ciborum exceptio? Totum, quod sciam, vetus testamentum omnis haereticus irridet. Stulta enim mundi elegit deus, ut confundat sapientiam (Marcionis deus nihil tale, quia nec aemulatur contraria contrariis redarguere), ne gloriatur omnis caro, ut, quemadmodum scriptum est, Qui gloriatur, in domino gloriatur. In quo? utique in eo qui hoc praecepit: nisi creator praecepit ut in deo Marcionis gloriatur.

6. [1] Igitur per haec omnia ostendit cuius dei sapientiam loquatur inter perfectos, eius scilicet qui sapientiam sapientium abstulerit et prudentiam prudentium irritam fecerit, qui infatuaverit sapientiam mundi, stulta eligens

eius et disponens in salutem. Hanc dicit sapientiam in occulto fuisse quae fuerit in stultis et in pusillis et inhonestis, quae latuerit etiam sub figuris, allegoriis et aenigmatibus, revelanda postmodum in Christo, posito in lumen nationum a creatore promittente per Esaiae vocem patefacturum se thesauros invisibiles et occultos. [2] Nam ut absconderit aliquid is deus qui nihil egit omnino in quod aliquid abscondisse existimaretur, satis incredibile. Ipse si esset, latere non posset, nedum aliqua eius sacramenta. Creator autem tam ipse notus quam et sacramenta eius, palam scilicet decurrentia apud Israel, sed de significantiis obumbrata, in quibus sapientia dei delitescebat, inter perfectos narranda suo in tempore, proposita vero in proposito dei ante saecula. [3] Cuius et saecula, nisi creatoris? Si enim et saecula temporibus structa sunt, tempora autem diebus et mensibus et annis compinguntur, dies porro et menses et anni solibus et lunis et sideribus creatoris signantur in hoc ab eo positus (Et erunt, enim inquit, in signa mensium et annorum), apparet et saecula creatoris esse, et omne quod ante saecula propositum dicatur non alterius esse quam cuius et saecula. [4] Aut probet dei sui saecula Marcion; ostendat et mundum ipsum in quo saecula deputentur, vas quodammodo temporum, et signa aliqua vel ordinem eorum. Si nihil demonstrat, revertor ut et illud dicam, Cur autem ante saecula creatoris proposuit gloriam nostram? Posset videri eam ante saecula proposuisse quam introductione saeculi revelasset. At cum id facit paene iam totis saeculis creatoris productis, vane ante saecula proposuit, et non magis intra saecula, quod revelaturus erat paene post saecula. [5] Non enim eius est festinasse in proponendo cuius et retardasse in revelando. Creatori autem competit utrumque, et ante saecula proposuisse et in fine saeculorum revelasse, quia et quod proposuit et revelavit medio spatio saeculorum in figuris et aenigmatibus et allegoriis praeministravit. Sed quia subicit de gloria nostra, quod eam nemo ex principibus huius aevi scierit, ceterum si scissent nunquam dominum gloriae crucifixissent, argumentatur haereticus quod principes huius aevi dominum, alterius scilicet dei Christum, cruci confixerint, ut et hoc in ipsum recidat creatorem. [6] Porro cui supra ostendimus quibus modis gloria nostra a creatore sit deputanda, praecudicatum esse debet eam quae in occulto fuerit apud creatorem merito ignotam etiam ab omnibus virtutibus et potestatibus creatoris, quia nec famulis liceat consilia nosse dominorum, nedum illis apostatis angelis ipsique principi transgressionis, diabolo, quos magis extraneos fuisse contenderim ob culpam ab omni conscientia dispositionum creatoris. [7] Sed iam nec mihi competit principes huius aevi virtutes et potestates interpretari creatoris, quia ignorantiam illis adscribit apostolus, Iesum autem et secundum nostrum evangelium diabolus quoque in temptatione cognovit, et secundum commune instrumentum spiritus nequam sciebat eum sanctum dei esse et Iesum vocari et in perditionem eorum venisse. Etiam parabola fortis illius armati, quem alius validior oppressit et vasa eius occupavit, si in creatoris accipitur apud Marcionem, iam nec ignorasse ultra potuit creator deum gloriae dum ab eo opprimitur, nec in cruce eum figere adversus quem valere non potuit, et superest ut secundum me quidem credibile sit scientes virtutes et potestates creatoris deum gloriae Christum suum crucifixisse, qua desperatione et malitiae redundantia servi quoque scelestissimi dominos suos interficere non dubitant. Scriptum est enim apud me satanam in Iudam introisse. [8] Secundum autem Marcionem nec apostolus hoc loco patitur ignorantiam adscribi virtutibus creatoris in gloriae dominum, quia scilicet non illas vult intellegi principes huius aevi. Quodsi non videtur de spiritalibus dixisse principibus, ergo de saecularibus dixit, de populo principali, utique non inter nationes, de ipsis archontibus eius, de rege Herode, etiam de Pilato, et quo maior principatus huius aevi Romana dignitas praesidebat. [9] Ita et cum destruuntur argumentationes diversae partis, nostrae expositiones aedificantur. Sed vis adhuc gloriam nostram dei tui esse et apud eum in occulto fuisse. Et quare adhuc eodem et deus instrumento et apostolus nititur? Quid illi cum sententiis prophetarum ubique? Quis enim cognovit sensum domini, et quis illi consiliarius fuit? Esaias est. Quid illi etiam cum exemplis dei nostri? [10] Nam quod architectum se prudentem affirmat, hoc invenimus significari depalatorem disciplinae divinae a creatore per Esaiam: Auferam, enim inquit, a Iudaea inter cetera et sapientem architectum. Et numquid ipse tunc Paulus destinabatur, de Iudaea, id est de Iudaismo, auferri habens in aedificationem Christianismi, positurus unicum fundamentum, quod est Christus? quia et de hoc per eundem prophetam creator, Ecce ego, inquit, inicio in fundamenta Sionis lapidem pretiosum, honorabilem, et qui in eum crediderit non confundetur. [11] Nisi si structorem se terreni operis deus profitebatur, ut non de Christo suo significaret qui futurus esset fundamentum credentium in eum; super quod prout quisque superstruxerit, dignam scilicet vel indignam doctrinam, si opus eius per ignem probabitur, si merces illi per ignem rependetur, creatoris est: quia per ignem iudicatur vestra superaedificatio, utique sui fundamenti, id est sui Christi. Nescitis quod templum dei sitis, et in vobis inhabitet spiritus dei? Si homo et res et opus et imago et similitudo et caro per terram et anima per afflatum creatoris est, totus ergo in alieno habitat deus Marcionis si non creatoris sumus templum. [12] Quodsi templum dei quis vitiaverit, vitiabitur, utique a deo templi. Ultorem intentans, creatorem intentabis. Stulti estote, ut sitis sapientes. Quare? Sapientia enim huius mundi stultitia est penes deum. Penes quem deum? Si nihil nobis et ad hunc sensum pristina praeiudicaverunt, bene quod et hic adstruit: Scriptum est enim, Deprehendens sapientes in nequitia illorum; et rursus, Dominus scit cogitationes sapientium, quod sint supervacuae. [13] In totum enim praescriptum a nobis erit, nulla illum sententia uti potuisse eius dei quem destruere deberet, si non illi doceret. Ergo, inquit, nemo gloriatur in homine. Et hoc secundum creatoris disciplinam: Miserum hominem, qui spem habet in hominem! et, Bonum est fidere in deo quam fidere in hominibus; ita et gloriari.

7. [1] Et occulta tenebrarum ipse illuminabit, utique per Christum, qui Christum illuminationem repromisit, se quoque lucernam pronuntiavit, scrutantem corda et renes. Ab illo erit et laus unicuique a quo et contrarium laudis, ut a iudice. Certe, inquis, vel hic mundum deum mundi interpretatur, dicendo, Spectaculum facti sumus mundo et angelis et hominibus: quia si mundum homines mundi significasset, non etiam homines postmodum nominasset. Immo ne ita argumentareris, providentia spiritus sancti demonstravit quomodo dixisset, Spectaculum facti sumus mundo, dum angelis qui mundo ministrant, et hominibus quibus ministrant. [2] Verebatur nimirum tantae constantiae vir, ne dicam spiritus sanctus, praesertim ad filios scribens, quos in evangelio generaverat, libere deum mundi nominare, adversus quem nisi exserte non posset videri praedicare. Non defendo secundum legem creatoris displicuisse illum qui mulierem patris sui habuit. Communis et publicae religionis secutus sit disciplinam. Sed cum eum damnat dedendum satanae, damnatoris dei praeco est. Viderit et quomodo dixerit, In interitum carnis ut spiritus salvus sit in die domini, dum et de carnis interitu et de salute spiritus iudicavit, et auferri iubens malum de medio creatoris frequentissimam sententiam commemoraverit: [3] Expurgate vetus fermentum, ut sitis nova conspersio, sicut estis azymi. Ergo azymi figurae erant nostrae apud creatorem. Sic et pascha nostrum immolatus est Christus. Quare pascha Christus, si non pascha figura Christi per similitudinem sanguinis salutaris pecoris et Christi? Quid nobis et Christo imagines induit sollemnium creatoris, si non erant nostrae? [4] Avertens autem nos a fornicatione manifestat carnis resurrectionem. Corpus, inquit, non fornicationi sed domino, et dominus corpori, ut templum deo et deus templo. Templum ergo deo peribit, et deus templo? Atquin vides, Qui dominum suscitavit, et nos suscitabit; in corpore quoque suscitabit, quia corpus domino, et dominus corpori. Et bene quod aggerat, Nescitis corpora vestra membra esse Christi? Quid dicet haereticus? Membra Christi non resurgent, quae nostra iam non sunt? Empti enim sumus pretio magno. [5] Plane nullo, si phantasma fuit Christus nec habuit ullam substantiam corporis quam pro nostris corporibus dependeret. Ergo et Christus habuit quo nos redimeret, et si aliquo magno redemit haec corpora, in quae eadem committenda fornicatio non erit, ut in membra iam Christi non nostra, utique sibi salva praestabit quae magno comparavit. Iam nunc quomodo honorabimus, quomodo tollemus deum in corpore perituro? [6] Sequitur de nuptiis congregi, quas Marcion constantior apostolo prohibet. Etenim apostolus, etsi bonum continentiae praefert, tamen coniugium et contrahi permittit et usui esse, et magis retineri quam disiungi suadet. Plane Christus vetat divortium, Moyses vero permittit. Marcion totum concubitus auferens fidelibus (viderint enim catechumeni eius), repudium ante nuptias iubens, cuius sententiam sequitur, Moysi an Christi? [7] Atquin et Christus cum praecipit mulierem a viro non discedere, aut si discesserit manere innuptam aut reconciliari viro, et repudium permisit, quod non in totum prohibuit, et matrimonium confirmavit, quod primo vetuit disiungi, et si forte disiunctum voluit reformari. Sed et continentiae quas ait causas? [8] Quia tempus in collecto est. Putaveram, quia deus alius in Christo; et tamen a quo est collectio temporis, ab eo erit et quod collectioni temporis congruit. Nemo alieno tempori consulit. Pusillum deum affirmas tuum, Marcion, quem in aliquo coangustat tempus creatoris. Gerte praescribens tantum in domino esse nubendum, ne qui fidelis ethnicum matrimonium contrahat, legem tueretur creatoris, allophylosum nuptias ubique prohibentis. [9] Sed, Et si sunt qui dicuntur dei, sive in caelis sive in terris, apparet quomodo dixerit; non quasi vere sint, sed quia sint qui dicantur, quando non sint. De idolis enim coepit de idolothytis disputaturus: Scimus quod idolum nihil sit. Creatorem autem et

Marcion deum non negat; ergo non potest videri apostolus creatorem quoque inter eos posuisse qui dei dicantur et tamen non sint, quando, et si fuissent, nobis tamen unus esset deus pater. Ex quo omnia nobis, nisi cuius omnia? Quanam ista? Habes in praeteritis, Omnia vestra sunt, sive Paulus, sive Apollo, sive Cephas, sive mundus, sive vita, sive mors, sive praesentia, sive futura. [10] Adeo omnium deum creatorem facit, a quo et mundus et vita et mors, quae alterius dei esse non possunt. Ab eo igitur inter omnia et Christus. Ex labore suo unumquemque docens vivere oportere satis exempla praemiseraat militum pastorum rusticorum; sed divina illi auctoritas deerat. Legem igitur opponit creatoris ingratis, quam destruebat; sui enim dei nullam talem habebat. Bovi, inquit, terenti os non obligabis, et adicit, Numquid de bubus pertinet ad dominum? etiam de bubus propter homines benignum? Propter nos enim scriptum est, inquit. [11] Ergo et legem allegoricam secundum nos probavit, et de evangelio viventibus patrocinantem, ac propter hoc non alterius esse evangelizatores quam cuius lex quae prospexit illis, cum dicit, Propter nos enim scriptum est. Sed noluit uti legis potestate, quia maluit gratis laborare. Hoc ad gloriam suam retulit, quam negavit quemquam evacuaturum, non ad legis destructionem qua alium probavit usurum. Ecce enim et in petram offendit caecus Marcion de qua bibebant in solitudine patres nostri. Si enim petra illa Christus fuit, utique creatoris, cuius et populus, cui rei figuram extranei sacramenti interpretatur? An ut hoc ipsum doceret figurata fuisse vetera in Christum ex illis recensendum? Nam et reliquum exitum populi decursurus praemittit, Haec autem exempla nobis sunt facta. [13] Dic mihi, a creatore alterius quidem ignoti dei hominibus exempla sunt facta, an alius deus ab alio mutuatur exempla, et quidem aemulo? De illo me terret sibi a quo fidem meam transfert. Meliorem me illi adversarius faciet? Iam si deliquero eadem quae et populus, eademne passurus sum, an non? Atquin si non eadem, vane mihi timenda proponit quae non sum passurus. Passurus autem a quo ero? Si a creatore, qualia infligere ipsius est? et quale erit ut peccatorem aemuli sui puniat magis quam e contrario foveat deus zelotes? Si ab illo deo, atquin punire non novit. Ita tota ista propositio apostoli nulla ratione consistit, si non ad disciplinam creatoris est. [14] Denique et in clausula praefationi respondet. Haec autem quemadmodum evenerunt illis, scripta sunt ad nos commonendos, in quos fines aevorum decucurrerunt. O creatorem et praescium iam et admonitorem alienorum Christianorum! Praetereo si quando paria eorum quae retractata sunt, quaedam et breviter expungo. Magnum argumentum dei alterius permissio omnium obsoniorum adversus legem. Quasi non et ipsi confiteamur legis onera dimissa, sed ab eo qui imposuit, qui novationem repromisit. Ita et cibos qui abstulit, reddidit quod et a primordio praestitit. Ceterum si quis alius deus fuisset, destructor dei nostri, nihil magis suos prohibuisset quam de copiis adversarii vivere.

8. [1] Caput viri Christus est. Quis Christus? qui non est viri auctor? Caput enim ad auctoritatem posuit, auctoritas autem non alterius erit quam auctoris. Cuius denique viri caput est? Certe de quo subicit, Vir enim non debet caput velare, cum sit dei imago. Igitur si creatoris est imago (ille enim Christum sermonem suum intuens hominem futurum, Faciamus, inquit, hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram), quomodo possum alterum habere caput, non eum cuius imago sum? [2] Cum enim imago sim creatoris, non est in me locus capitis alterius. Sed et quare mulier potestatem super caput habere debebit? Si quia ex viro et propter virum facta est, secundum institutionem creatoris, sic quoque eius disciplinam apostolus curavit de cuius institutione causas disciplinae interpretatur. Adicit etiam, Propter angelos. Quos? id est cuius? Si creatoris apostatas, merito, ut illa facies quae eos scandalizavit notam. quandam referat de habitu humilitatis et obscuracione decoris: si vero propter angelos dei alterius, quid veretur, si nec ipsi Marcionitae feminas appetunt? [3] Saepe iam ostendimus haereses apud apostolum inter mala ut malum poni, et eos probabiles intellegendos qui haereses ut malum fugiant. Proinde panis et calicis sacramento iam in evangelio probavimus corporis et sanguinis dominici veritatem adversus phantasma Marcionis. Sed et omnem iudicii mentionem creatori competere, ut deo iudici, toto paene opere tractatum est. [4] Nunc de spiritualibus dico, haec quoque in Christum a creatore promissa, sub illa praescriptione, iustissima opinor, qua non alterius credenda sit exhibitio quam cuius probata fuerit repromissio. Pronuntiavit Esaias, Prohibet virga de radice Iesse, et flos de radice ascendet, et requiescet super eum spiritus domini. Dehinc species eius enumerat: Spiritus sapientiae et intelligentiae, spiritus consilii et valentiae, et spiritus agnitionis et religionis, spiritus eum replebit timoris dei. Christum enim in floris figura ostendit oriturum ex virga profecta de radice Iesse, id est virgine generis David, filii Iesse, in quo Christo consistere haberet tota substantia spiritus, non quasi postea obventura illi qui semper spiritus dei fuerit, ante carnem quoque, ne ex hoc argumenteris prophetiam ad eum Christum pertinere qui ut homo tantum ex solo censu David postea consecutus sit dei sui spiritum, sed quoniam exinde quo florisset in carne sumpta ex stirpe David, requiescere in illo omnis haberet operatio gratiae spiritalis, et concessare et finem facere, quantum ad Iudaeos; [5] sicut et res ipsa testatur, nihil exinde spirante penes illos spiritu creatoris, ablato a Iudaea sapiente et prudente architecto et consiliario et propheta, ut hoc sit, Lex et prophetae usque ad Ioannem. Accipe nunc quomodo et a Christo in caelum recepto charismata obventura pronuntiavit. Ascendit in sublimitatem, id est in caelum: captivam duxit captivitatem, id est mortem vel humanam servitutem: dedit data filiis hominum, id est donativa quae charismata dicimus. Eleganter Filiis hominum ait, non passim Hominibus, nos ostendens filios hominum, id est vere hominum, apostolorum. [6] In evangelio, enim inquit, ego vos generavi, et, Filii mei quos parturio rursus. Iam nunc et illa promissio spiritus absolute facta per loelem: In novissimis diebus effundam de meo spiritu in omnem carnem, et prophetabunt filii filiaeque eorum, et super servos et ancillas meas de meo spiritu effundam. [7] Et utique si in novissimos dies gratiam spiritus creator repromisit, Christus autem spiritalium dispensator in novissimis diebus apparuit, dicente apostolo, At ubi tempus expletum est misit deus filium suum, et rursus, Quia tempus iam in collecto est, apparet et de temporum ultimum praedicatione hanc gratiam spiritus ad Christum praedicatoris pertinere. Compara denique species apostoli et Esaiae. [8] Alii, inquit, datur per spiritum sermo sapientiae: statim et Esaias spiritum sapientiae posuit. Alii sermo scientiae: hic erit sermo intellegentiae et consilii. Alii fides in eodem spiritu: hic erit spiritus religionis et timoris dei. Alii donum curationum, alii virtutum: hic erit valentiae spiritus. Alii prophetia, alii distinctio spirituum, alii genera linguarum, alii interpretatio linguarum: hic erit agnitionis spiritus. [9] Vide apostolum et in distributione facienda unius spiritus et in specialitate interpretanda prophetae conspirantem, Possum dicere, ipsum quod corporis nostri per multa et diversa membra unitatem charismatum variorum compagini adaequavit, eundem et corporis humani et spiritus sancti dominum ostendit, qui merita charismatum noluerit esse in corpore spiritus quae nec in corpore humano collocavit, qui de dilectione quoque omnibus charismatibus praeponenda apostolum instruxerit principali praecepto, quod probavit et Christus, [10] Diliges dominum de totis praecordiis et totis viribus et tota anima tua et proximum tuum tanquam te ipsum. Et si quod in lege scriptum esset commemorat, in aliis linguis et in aliis labiis locuturum creatorem, cum hac commemoratione charisma linguarum confirmat, nec hic potest videri alienum charisma creatoris praedicatione confirmasse. [11] Aeque praescribens silentium mulieribus in ecclesia, ne quid discendi duntaxat gratia loquantur (ceterum prophetandi ius et illas habere iam ostendit, cum mulieri etiam prophetanti velamen imponit), ex lege accipit subiciendae feminae auctoritatem, quam, ut semel dixerim, nosse non debuit nisi in destructionem. [12] Sed ut iam a spiritualibus recedamus, res ipsae probare debebunt quis nostrum temere deo suo vindicet, et an nostrae parti possit opponi, haec et si creator repromisit in suum Christum nondum revelatum, ut Iudaeis tantum destinatum, suas habitura in suo tempore in suo Christo et in suo populo operationes. Exhibeat itaque Marcion dei sui dona, aliquos prophetas, qui tamen non de humano sensu sed de dei spiritu sint locuti, qui et futura praenuntiarint et cordis occulta traduxerint; edat aliquem psalmum, aliquam visionem, aliquam orationem, duntaxat spiritalem, in ecstasi, id est amentia, si qua linguae interpretatio accessit; probet etiam mihi mulierem apud se prophetasse ex illis suis sanctoribus feminis magnificam: si haec omnia facilius a me proferuntur, et utique conspirantia regulis et dispositionibus et disciplinis creatoris, sine dubio dei mei erit et Christus et spiritus et apostolus. Habet professionem meam qui voluerit eam exigere.

9. [1] Interim Marcionites nihil huiusmodi exhibebit, qui timet iam pronuntiare cuius magis Christus nondum sit revelatus. Sicut meus expectandus est, qui a primordio praedicatus est, illius idcirco non est, quia non a primordio sit. Melius nos credimus in Christum futurum quam haereticus in nullum. [2] Mortuorum resurrectionem quomodo quidam tunc negarint prius dispiciendum est. Utique eodem modo quo et nunc; siquidem semper resurrectio carnis negatur. Ceterum animam et sapientium plures divinam vindicantes salvam repromittunt, et vulgus ipsum ea praesumptione defunctos colit qua animas eorum manere confidit: ceterum corpora aut ignibus statim aut feris aut etiam diligentissime condita temporibus tamen aboleri manifestum est. Si ergo carnis resurrectionem negantes apostolus retundit, utique adversus illos tuetur quod illi negabant, carnis scilicet resurrectionem. Habes compendio responsum. [3] Cetera iam ex abundanti. Nam et ipsum quod mortuorum resurrectio dicitur, exigit defendi proprietates vocabulorum. Ita vocabulum mortuum non est nisi quod amisit animam, de cuius facultate vivebat. Corpus est quod amittit animam et amittendo fit mortuum; ita mortui vocabulum corpori competit. Porro si resurrectio mortui est, mortuum autem non aliud est quam corpus, corporis erit resurrectio. [4] Sic et resurrectionis vocabulum non aliam rem vindicat quam quae cecidit. Surgere enim potest dici et quod omnino non cecidit, quod semper retro iacuit. Resurgere autem non est nisi eius quod cecidit; iterum enim surgendo, quia cecidit, resurgere dicitur. RE enim syllaba iterationi semper adhibetur. Cadere ergo dicimus corpus in terram per mortem, sicut et res ipsa testatur, ex dei lege. Corpori enim dictum est, Terra es et in terram ibis. Ita quod de terra est ibit in terram. Hoc cadit quod in terram abit, hoc resurgit quod cadit. [5] Quia per hominem mors, et per hominem resurrectio. Hic mihi et Christi corpus ostenditur in nomine hominis, qui constat ex corpore, ut saepe iam docuimus. Quodsi sic in Christo vivificamur omnes sicut mortificamur in Adam, quando in Adam corpore mortificemur, sic necesse est in Christo corpore vivificemur. Ceterum similitudo non constat si non in eadem substantia mortificationis in Adam, vivificatio concurret in Christo. Sed interposuit adhuc aliquid de Christo, et propter praesentem disceptationem non omittendum. [6] Tanto magis enim probabitur carnis resurrectio, quanto Christum eius dei ostendero apud quem creditur carnis resurrectio. Cum dicit, Oportet enim regnare eum, donec ponat inimicos eius sub pedes eius, iam quidem et ex hoc ultorem deum edicit, atque exinde ipsum qui hoc Christo repromiserit: Sede ad dexteram meam donec ponam inimicos tuos scabellum pedum tuorum: virgam virtutis tuae emittet dominus ex Sion, et dominabitur in medio inimicorum tuorum tecum. [7] Sed necesse est ad meam sententiam pertinere defendam eas scripturas quas et Iudaei nobis avocare conantur. Dicunt denique hunc psalmum in Ezechiam cecinisse, quia is sederit ad dexteram templi, et hostes eius averterit deus et absumpserit; propterea igitur et cetera, Ante luciferum ex utero generavi te, in Ezechiam convenire et in Ezechiae nativitatem. Nos edimus evangelia (de quorum fide aliquid utique iam in tanto opere istos confirmasse debemus), nocturna nativitate declarantia dominum, ut hoc sit ante luciferum, et ex stella magis intellecta, et ex testimonio angeli qui nocte pastoribus annuntiavit natum esse cum maxime Christum, et ex loco partus, in diversorium enim ad noctem convenitur. [8] Fortassean et mystice factum sit ut nocte Christus nasceretur, lux veritatis futurus ignorantiae tenebris. Sed nec, Generavi te, edixisset deus, nisi filio vero. Nam etsi de toto populo ait, Filios generavi, sed non adiecit Ex utero. Cur autem adiecit Ex utero tam vane, quasi aliqui hominum ex utero natus dubitaretur, nisi quia curiosius voluit intellegi in Christum: Ex utero generavi te, id est ex solo utero, sine viri semine, carni deputans <quod> ex utero, spiritui quod ex ipso. His accedit, Tu es sacerdos in aevum. Nec sacerdos autem Ezechias, nec in aevum, etsi fuisset. Secundum ordinem, inquit, Melchisedec. [9] Quid Ezechias ad Melchisedec altissimi sacerdotem, et quidem non circumcisum, qui Abraham circumcisum iam accepta decimarum oblatione benedixit? At in Christum conveniet ordo Melchisedec, quoniam quidem Christus proprius et legitimus dei antistes, praeputiati sacerdotii pontifex, tum in nationibus constitutus, a quibus magis suscipi habebat, cognituram se quandoque circumcisionem et Abrahae gentem, cum ultimo venerit, acceptatione et benedictione dignabitur. Est et alius psalmus ita incipiens: Deus, iudicium tuum regi da, id est Christo regnato, et iustitiam tuam filio regis, id est populo Christi. [10] Filii enim eius sunt qui in ipso renascuntur. Sed et hic psalmus Salomoni canere dicetur. Quae tamen soli competunt Christo docere non poterunt etiam cetera non ad Salomonem, sed ad Christum pertinere? Descendit, inquit, tanquam imber super vellus, et velut stillae destillantes in terram; placidum descensum eius et insensibilem describens de caelo in carnem. Salomon autem etsi descendit alicunde, non tamen sicut imber, quia non de caelo. Sed simpliciora quaeque proponam. [11] Dominabitur, inquit, a mari ad mare, et a flumine usque ad terminos terrae. Hoc soli datum est Christo; ceterum Salomon uni et modicae Iudaeae imperavit. Adorabunt illum omnes reges. Quem omnes, nisi Christum? Et servient ei omnes nationes. Cui omnes, nisi Christo? Sit nomen eius in aevum. Cuius nomen in aeternum, nisi Christi? Ante solem manebit nomen eius. Ante solem enim sermo dei, id est Christus. [12] Et benedicentur in illo universae gentes. In Salomone nulla natio benedicitur, in Christo vero omnis. Quid nunc, si et deum eum iste psalmus demonstrat? Et beatum eum dicent: quoniam, Benedictus dominus deus Israelis, qui facit mirabilia solus: benedictum nomen gloriae eius, et replebitur universa terra gloria eius. [13] Contra Salomon, audeo dicere, etiam quam habuit in deo gloriam amisit per mulierem in idololatriam usque pertractus. Itaque cum in medio psalmo illud quoque positum sit: Inimici eius pulverem lingent, subiecti utique pedibus ipsius, ad illud pertinebit propter quod hunc psalmum et intuli et ad meam sententiam defendi, ut confirmaverim et regni gloriam et inimicorum subiectionem secundum dispositionem creatoris, consecuturus non alium credendum quam creatoris.

10. [1] Revertamur nunc ad resurrectionem, cui et alias quidem proprio volumine satisfacimus, omnibus haereticis resistentes; sed nec hic desumus, propter eos qui illud opusculum ignorant. Quid, ait, facient qui pro mortuis baptizantur, si mortui non resurgunt? Viderit institutio ista. Kalendae, si forte, Februariae respondebunt illi, pro mortuis petere. Noli ergo apostolum novum statim auctorem aut confirmatorem eius denotare, ut tanto magis sisteret carnis resurrectionem, quanto illi qui vane pro mortuis baptizarentur, fide resurrectionis hoc facerent. [2] Habemus illum alicubi unius baptismi definitorem. Igitur et pro mortuis tingui pro corporibus est tingui; mortuum enim corpus ostendimus. Quid facient qui pro corporibus baptizantur, si corpora non resurgunt? Atque adeo recte hunc gradum figimus, ut et apostolus secundam disceptationem aequae de corpore induxerit. Sed dicent quidam, Quomodo mortui resurgent? quo autem corpore venient? [3] Defensa etenim resurrectione, quae negabatur, consequens erat de qualitate corporis retractare, quae non videbatur. Sed de ista cum aliis congrédi convenit. Marcion enim in totum carnis resurrectionem non admittens et soli animae salutem repromittens, non qualitatis sed substantiae facit quaestionem. Porro et ex his manifestissime obducitur quae apostolus ad qualitatem corporis tractat propter illos qui dicunt, Quomodo resurgent mortui? quo autem corpore venient? Iam enim praedicavit resurrecturum esse corpus, si de corporis qualitate tractavit. [4] Denique si proponit exempla grani tritici, vel alicuius eiusmodi, quibus det corpus deus prout volet, si unicuique seminum proprium ait esse corpus, ut aliam quidem carnem hominum, aliam vero pecudum et volucrum, et corpora caelestia atque terrena, et aliam gloriam solis, et lunae aliam, et stellarum aliam, — nonne carnalem et corporalem portendit resurrectionem, quam per carnalia et corporalia exempla commendat? nonne etiam ab eo deo eam spondet a quo sunt et exempla? Sic et resurrectio, inquit. [5] Quomodo? Sicut et granum, corpus seritur corpus resurgit. Seminationem denique vocavit dissolutionem corporis in terram, quia seritur in corruptela, <in dedecoratione, in infirmitate, resurgit autem in incorruptelam,> in honestatem, in virtutem. Cuius ille ordo in dissolutione, eius et hic in resurrectione corporis, scilicet sicut et granum. Ceterum si auferas corpus resurrectioni quod dedisti dissolutioni, ubi consistet diversitas exitus? Proinde et si seritur animale, resurgit spiritale, etsi habet aliquod proprium corpus anima vel spiritus, ut possit videri corpus animale animam significare et corpus spiritale spiritum, non ideo animam dicit in resurrectione spiritum futuram, sed corpus, quod cum anima nascendo et per animam vivendo animale dici capit, futurum spiritale dum per spiritum surgit in aeternitatem. [6] Denique si non anima, sed caro seminatur in corruptela, dum dissolvitur in terram, iam non anima erit corpus animale, sed caro quae fuit corpus animale, siquidem de animali efficitur spiritale, sicut et infra dicit, Non primum quod spiritale. Ad hoc enim et de ipso Christo praestruit: [7] Factus primus homo Adam in animam vivam, novissimus Adam in spiritum vivificantem; licet stultissimus haereticus noluerit ita esse, dominum enim posuit novissimum pro novissimo Adam, veritus scilicet ne, si et dominum novissimum haberet Adam, et eiusdem Christum defenderemus in Adam novissimo cuius et primum. [8] Sed falsum relucet. Cur enim primus Adam, nisi quia et novissimus Adam? Non habent ordinem inter se nisi paria quaeque et eiusdem vel nominis vel substantiae vel auctoris. Nam etsi potest in diversis quoque esse aliud primum, aliud novissimum, sed unius auctoris. Ceterum si et auctor alius, et ipse quidem potest novissimus dici. Quod tamen intulerit, primum est; novissimum autem, si primo par sit. Par autem primo non est, quia non eiusdem auctoris est. Eodem modo et in nomine hominis revincetur. [9] Primus, inquit, homo de humo terrenus, secundus dominus de caelo. Quare secundus, si non homo, quod et primus? Aut numquid et primus dominus, si et secundus? Sed sufficit si in evangelio filium hominis adhibet Christum, et hominem et in homine Adam eum negare non poterit. [10] Sequentia quoque eum comprimunt. Cum enim dicit apostolus, Qualis qui de terra, homo scilicet, tales et terreni, homines utique, ergo et qualis qui de caelo homo, tales et qui de caelo homines. Non enim poterat hominibus terrenis non homines caelestes opposuisse, ut statum ac spem studiosius distingueret in appellationis societate. Statu enim ac spe dicit terrenos atque caelestes, homines tamen ex pari, qui secundum exitum aut in Adam aut in Christo deputantur. Et ideo iam ad exhortationem spei caelestis, Sicut portavimus, inquit, imaginem terreni, portemus et imaginem caelestis, non ad substantiam ullam referens resurrectionis, sed ad praesentis temporis disciplinam. [11] Portemus enim, inquit, non portabimus, praeceptive, non promissive, volens nos sicut ipse incessit ita incedere, et a terreni, id est veteris, hominis imagine abscedere, quae est carnalis operatio. Denique quid subiungit? Hoc enim dico, fratres, quia caro et sanguis regnum dei non possidebunt, opera scilicet carnis et sanguinis, quibus et ad Galatas scribens abstulit dei regnum, solitus et alias substantiam pro operibus substantiae ponere, ut cum dicit eos qui in carne sunt deo placere non posse. Quando enim placere poterimus deo, nisi dum in carne hac sumus? [12] Aliud tempus operationis nullum opinor est. Sed si in carne quamquam constituti carnis opera fugiamus, tum non erimus in carne, dum non in substantia carnis non sumus, sed in culpa. Quodsi in nomine carnis, opera non substantiam carnis iubemur exponere, operibus ergo carnis, non substantiae carnis, in nomine carnis denegatur dei regnum. [13] Non enim id damnatur in quo male fit, sed id quod fit. Venenum dare scelus est, calix tamen in quo datur reus non est. Ita et corpus carnalium operum vas est, anima est autem quae in illo venenum alicuius mali facti temperat. Quale est autem ut, si anima auctrix operum carnis merebitur dei regnum per expiationem eorum quae in corpore admisit, corpus ministrum solummodo in damnatione permaneat? Venefico absoluto calix erit puniendus? Et tamen non utique carni defendimus dei regnum, sed resurrectionem substantiae suae, quasi ianuam regni, per quam aditur. [14] Ceterum aliud resurrectio, aliud regnum. Primo enim resurrectio, dehinc regnum. Resurgere itaque dicimus carnem, sed mutatam consequi regnum. Resurgent enim mortui incorrupti, illi scilicet qui fuerant corrupti dilapsis corporibus in interitum. Et nos mutabimur, in atomo, in oculi momentaneo motu. Oportet enim corruptivum hoc, tenens utique carnem suam dicebat apostolus, induere incorruptelam, et mortale hoc immortalitatem, ut scilicet habilis substantia efficiatur regno dei. Erimus enim sicut angeli. Haec erit demutatio carnis, sed resuscitatae. Aut si nulla erit, quomodo induet incorruptelam et immortalitatem? [15] Aliud igitur facta per demutationem tunc consequetur dei regnum, iam non caro nec sanguis, sed quod illi corpus deus dederit. Et ideo recte apostolus: Caro et sanguis regnum dei non consequentur, demutationi illud adscribens, quae accedit resurrectioni. [16] Si autem tunc fiet verbum quod scriptum est apud creatorem, Ubi est, mors, victoria tua vel contentio tua? Ubi est, mors, aculeus tuus? (verbum autem hoc creatoris est per prophetam), eius erit et res, id est regnum, cuius et verbum fiet in regno. Nec alii deo gratias dicit quod nobis victoriam utique de morte referre praestiterit, quam illi a quo verbum insultatorium de morte et

11. DE EPISTULA SECUNDA AD CORINTHIOS. [1] Si deus commune vocabulum factum est vitio erroris humani, quatenus plures dei dicuntur atque creduntur in saeculo, benedictus tamen deus domini nostri Iesu Christi non alius quam creator intelletur qui et universa benedixit, habes Genesim; et ab universis benedicitur, habes Danielelem. Proinde si pater potest dici sterilis deus, nullius magis nomine quam creatoris; misericordiarum tamen pater idem erit qui misericors et miserator et misericordiae plurimus est dictus. [2] Habes apud Ionam cum ipso misericordiae exemplo quam Ninivitis exorantibus praestitit: facilis et Ezechiae fletibus flecti, et Achab marito lezabelis deprecanti sanguinem ignoscere Nabuthae, et David agnoscenti delictum Statim indulgere, malens scilicet paenitentiam peccatoris quam mortem, utique ex misericordiae affectu. Si quid tale Marcionis deus edidit vel edixit, agnoscam patrem misericordiarum. [3] Si vero ex eo tempore hunc titulum ei adscribit quo revelatus, quasi exinde sit pater misericordiarum quo liberare instituit genus humanum, atquin et nos ex eo tempore negamus illum ex quo dicitur revelatus. Non potest igitur aliquid ei adscribere quem tunc ostendit cum aliquid ei adscribit. Si enim prius constaret eum esse, tunc et adscribi ei potest. Accidens enim est quod adscribitur, accidentia autem antecedit ipsius rei ostensio cui accidunt, maxime cum iam alterius est quod adscribitur ei qui prius non sit ostensus. Tanto magis negabitur esse, quanto per quod affirmatur esse eius est qui iam ostensus est. [4] Sic et testamentum novum non alterius erit quam qui illud repromisit; etsi non littera, at eius spiritus; hoc erit novitas. Denique qui litteram tabulis lapideis inciderat, idem et de spiritu edixerat, Effundam de meo spiritu in omnem carnem. Et si littera occidit, spiritus vero vivificat, eius utrumque est qui ait, Ego occidam et ego vivificabo, percutiam et sanabo. Olim duplicem vim creatoris vindicavimus, et iudicis et boni, littera occidentis per legem et spiritu vivificantis per evangelium. Non possunt duos deos facere quae, etsi diversa, apud unum recenseri praevenere. [5] Commemorat et de velamine Moysi, quo faciem tegebat incontemplabilem filiis Israel. Si ideo ut claritatem maiorem defenderet novi testamenti quod manet in gloria, quam veteris quod evacuari habebat, hoc et meae convenit fidei praeponenti evangelium legi, et vide ne magis meae. Illic enim erit superponi quid, ubi fuerit et illud cui superponitur. At cum dicit, Sed obtunsi sunt sensus mundi, non utique creatoris, sed populi qui in mundo est. De

Israele enim dicit, Ad hodiernum usque velamen idipsum in corde eorum. Figuram ostendit fuisse velamen faciei in Moyse velaminis cordis in populo, quia nec nunc apud illos perspicitur Moyses corde, sicut nec facie tunc. [6] Quid est ergo adhuc velatum in Moyse quod pertineat ad Paulum, si Christus creatoris a Moyse praedicatus nondum venit? quomodo iam operta et velata adhuc denotantur corda Iudaeorum, nondum exhibitis praedicationibus Moysi, id est de Christo, in quo eum intellegere deberent? Quid ad apostolum Christi alterius, si dei sui sacramenta Iudaei non intellegebant, nisi quia velamen cordis illorum ad caecitatem, qua non perspexerant Christum Moysi, pertinebat? [7] Denique quod sequitur, Cum vero converterit ad deum, auferetur velamen, hoc Iudaeo proprie dicit apud quem et est velamen Moysi, qui cum transierit in fidem Christi, intellegit Moysen de Christo praedicasse. Ceterum quomodo auferetur velamentum creatoris in Christo dei alterius, cuius sacramenta velasse non potuit creator, ignoti videlicet ignota? [8] Dicit ergo nos iam aperta facie, utique cordis, quod velatum est in Iudaeis, contemplantes Christum eadem imagine transfigurari a gloria, qua scilicet et Moyses transfigurabatur a gloria domini, in gloriam. Ita corporalem Moysi illuminationem de congressu domini et corporale velamen de infirmitate populi proponens, et spiritalem revelationem et spiritalem claritatem in Christo superducens, tanquam a domino, inquit, spirituum, totum ordinem Moysi figuram ignorati apud Iudaeos, agniti vero apud nos Christi fuisse testatur. [9] Scimus quosdam sensus ambiguitatem pati posse de sono pronuntiationis aut de modo distinctionis, cum duplicitas earum intercedit. Hanc Marcion captavit sic legendo: In quibus deus aevi huius, ut creatorem ostendens deum huius aevi alium suggerat deum alterius aevi. Nos contra sic distinguendum dicimus: In quibus deus, dehinc: aevi huius excaecavit mentes infidelium; In quibus, Iudaeis infidelibus, in quibus opertum est aliquibus evangelium adhuc sub velamine Moysi. Illis enim deus, labiis diligentibus eum, corde autem longe absistentibus ab eo minatus fuerat: Aure audietis et non audietis, oculis videbitis et non videbitis, et: Nisi credideritis nec intellegetis, et: Auferam sapientiam sapientium et prudentiam prudentium irritam faciam. [10] Haec autem non utique de evangelio dei ignoti abscondendo minabatur. Ita etsi huius aevi deus, sed infidelium huius aevi excaecat cor, quod Christum eius non ultro recognoverint de scripturis intellegendum. Et positum in ambiguitate distinctionis hactenus tractasse, ne

adversario prodesset, contentus victoriae, nae ultro possum et in totum contentionem hanc praeterisse. [11] Simpliciori responso prae manu erit esse huius aevi dominum diabolum interpretari, qui dixerit, propheta referente, Ero similis altissimi, ponam in nubibus thronum meum; sicut et tota huius aevi superstitio illi mancipata est qui excaecet infidelium corda et inprimis apostatae Marcionis. Denique non vidit occurrentem sibi clausulam sensus: Quoniam deus, qui dixit ex tenebris lucem lucescere, relaxit in cordibus nostris ad illuminationem agnitionis suae in persona Christi. [12] Quis dixit, Fiat lux? Et de illuminatione mundi quis Christo ait, Posui te in lumen nationum, sedentium scilicet in tenebris et in umbra mortis? Cui respondet spiritus in psalmo ex providentia futuri: Significatum est, inquit, super nos lumen personae tuae, domine. Persona autem dei Christus dominus. Unde et apostolus supra, Qui est imago, inquit, dei. Igitur si Christus persona creatoris dicentis, Fiat lux, et Christus et apostoli et evangelium et velamen et Moyses et tota series, secundum testimonium clausulae creatoris est, dei huius aevi, certe non eius qui nunquam dixit, Fiat lux. Praetereo hic et de alia epistula, quam nos ad Ephesios praescriptam habemus, haeretici vero ad Laodiceos. [13] Ait enim meminisse nationes quod illo in tempore cum essent sine Christo, alieni ab Israele, sine conversatione et testamentis et spe promissionis, etiam sine deo essent, in mundo utique, etsi de creatore. Ergo si nationes sine deo dixit esse, deus autem illis diabolus est, non creator, apparet dominum aevi huius eum intellegendum quem nationes pro deo receperunt, non creatorem, quem ignorant. [14] Quale est autem ut non eiusdem habeatur thesaurus in fictilibus vasis nostris cuius et vasa sunt? Nam si gloria dei est in fictilibus vasis tantum thesauri haberi, vasa autem fictilia creatoris sunt, ergo et gloria creatoris est, cuius vasa eminentiam virtutis dei sapiunt, et virtus ipsa; quia propterea in vasa fictilia commissa sunt, ut eminentia eius probaretur. [15] Ceterum iam non erit alterius dei gloria ideoque nec virtus, sed magis dedecus et infirmitas, cuius eminentiam fictilia et quidem aliena ceperunt. Quodsi haec sunt fictilia vasa, in quibus tanta nos pati dicit, in quibus etiam mortificationem circumferimus dei, satis ingratus deus et iniustus, si non et hanc substantiam resuscitaturus est, in qua pro fide eius tanta tolerantur, in qua et mors Christi circumfertur, in qua et eminentia virtutis consecratur. Sed enim proponit, Ut et vita Christi manifestetur in corpore nostro, scilicet sicut et mors eius circumfertur in corpore. De qua ergo Christi vita dicit? qua nunc vivimus in illo? [16] Et quomodo in sequentibus non ad visibilia nec ad temporalia, sed ad invisibilia et ad aeterna, id est non ad praesentia, sed ad futura exhortatur? Quodsi de futura vita dicit Christi, in corpore eam dicens apparituram, manifeste carnis resurrectionem praedicavit, exteriorem quidem hominem nostrum corrumpi dicens, et non quasi aeterno interitu post mortem, verum laboribus et incommodis, de quibus praemisit adiciens, Et non deficiemus. Nam et interiorem hominem nostrum renovari de die in diem dicens hic utrumque demonstrat, et corporis corruptionem ex vexatione temptationum et animi renovationem ex contemplatione promissionum.

12. [1] Terreni domicilii nostri non sic ait habere nos domum aeternam, non manu factam, in caelo, quia quae manu facta sit creatoris intreat in totum dissoluta post mortem. Haec enim ad mortis metum et ad ipsius dissolutionis contristationem consolandam retractans etiam per sequentia manifestius, cum subicit ingemere nos de isto tabernaculo corporis terreni, quod de caelo est superindui cupientes; siquidem et despoliati non inveniemur nudi, id est recipiemus quod despoliati sumus, id est corpus. Et rursus: Etenim qui sumus in isto tabernaculo corporis, ingemimus quod gravemur, nolentes exui sed superindui. [2] Hic enim expressit quod in prima epistula strinxit: Et mortui resurgent incorrupti, qui iam obierunt, et nos mutabimur, qui in carne fuerimus deprehensi a deo. Et illi enim resurgent incorrupti, recepto scilicet corpore, et quidem integro, ut ex hoc sint incorrupti; et hi propter temporis ultimum iam momentum et propter merita vexationum antichristi compendium mortis, sed mutati, consequentur superinduti magis quod de caelo est quam exuti corpus. [3] Ita si hi super corpus induent caeleste illud, utique et mortui recipient corpus, super quod et ipsi induant incorruptelam de caelo; quia et de illis ait, Necesse est corruptivum istud induere incorruptelam et mortale istud immortalitatem. Illi induunt cum receperint corpus, isti superinduunt quia non amiserint corpus, et ideo non temere dixit nolentes exui corpore sed superindui, id est nolentes mortem experiri sed vita praeveniri, uti devoretur mortale hoc a vita, dum eripitur morti per superindumentum demutationis. [4] Ideo quia ostendit hoc melius esse, ne contristemur mortis si forte praeventu, et arrabonem nos spiritus dicit a deo habere, quasi pignoratos in eandem spem superindumenti, et abesse a domino, quamdiu in carne sumus, ac propterea debere boni ducere abesse potius a corpore et esse cum domino, ut et mortem libenter excipiamus. Atque adeo omnes ait nos oportere manifestari ante tribunal Christi, ut recipiat unusquisque quae per corpus admisit sive bonum sive malum. [5] Si enim tunc retributio meritorum, quomodo iam aliqui cum deo poterunt deputari? Et tribunal autem nominando et disputationem boni ac mali operis utriusque sententiae iudicem ostendit, et corporum omnium repraesentationem confirmavit. Non enim poterit quod corpore admissum est non corpore iudicari. Iniquus enim deus, si non per id punitur quis aut iuvatur per quod operatus est. [6] Si qua ergo conditio nova in Christo, vetera transierunt, ecce nova facta sunt omnia, impleta est Esaiæ prophetia. Si etiam iubet ut mundemus nos ab inquinamento carnis et sanguinis, non substantiam <negat, sed opera substantiae> capere regnum dei. Si et virginem sanctam destinat ecclesiam adsignare Christo, utique ut sponsam sponso, non potest imago coniungi inimico veritatis rei ipsius. Si et pseudapostolos dicit operarios dolosos transfiguratores sui, per hypocrisin scilicet, conversationis non praedicationis adulteratae reos taxat. [7] Adeo de disciplina, non de divinitate dissidebatur. Si transfiguratur satanas in angelum lucis, non potest hoc dirigi in creatorem. Deus enim non angelus creator; in deum lucis, non in angelum, transfigurare se dictus esset, si non eum satanan significaret quem et nos et Marcion angelum novimus. [8] De paradiso suus stilus est ad omnem quam patitur quaestionem. Hic illud forte mirabor, si proprium potuit habere paradysum deus nullius terrenae dispositionis, nisi si etiam paradiso creatoris precario usus est, sicut et mundo. Et tamen hominem tollere ad caelum creatoris exemplum est in Helia. Magis vero mirabor dominum optimum, percutiendi et saeviendi alienum, nec proprium saltem sed creatoris angelum satanae colaphizando apostolo suo applicuisse, et ter ab eo obsecratum non concessisse. Emendat igitur et deus Marcionis secundum creatorem elatos aemulantem, ut deponentem scilicet de solio dynastas. Aut numquid ipse est qui et in corpus Iob dedit satanae potestatem, ut virtus in infirmitate 9 comprobaretur? Quid et formam legis adhuc tenet Galatarum castigatores, in tribus testibus praeфинiens staturum omne verbum? Quid et non parsurum se peccatoribus comminatur, lenissimi dei praedicator? Immo et ipsam durius agendi in praesentia potestatem a domino datam sibi affirmat. Nega nunc, haeretice, timeri deum tuum, cuius apostolus timebatur!

13. DE EPISTULA AD ROMANOS. [1] Quanto opusculum profligatur, breviter iam retractanda sunt quae rursus occurrunt, quaedam vero tramittenda, quae saepius occurrerunt. Piget de lege adhuc congregari, qui

totiens probaverim concessionem eius nullum argumentum praestare diversi dei in Christo, praedicatam scilicet et repromissam in Christum apud creatorem, quatenus et ipsa epistula legem plurimum videtur excludere. [2] Sed et iudicem deum ab apostolo circumferri saepe iam ostendimus et in iudice ultorem et creatorem in ultore. Itaque et hic, cum dicit, Non enim me pudet evangelii, virtus enim dei est in salutem omni credenti, Iudaeo et Graeco, quia iustitia dei in eo revelatur ex fide in fidem, sine dubio et evangelium et salutem iusto deo deputat, non bono, ut ita dixerim secundum haeretici distinctionem, transferenti ex fide legis in fidem evangelii, suae utique legis et sui evangelii. Quoniam et iram dicit revelari de caelo super impietatem et iniustitiam hominum qui veritatem in iniustitia detineant. [3] Cuius dei ira? Utique creatoris. Ergo et veritas eius erit cuius et ira quae revelari habet in ultionem veritatis. Etiam adiciens, Scimus autem iudicium dei secundum veritatem esse, et iram ipsam probavit, ex qua venit iudicium pro veritate, et veritatem rursus eiusdem dei confirmavit cuius iram probavit probando iudicium. Aliud est si veritatem dei alterius in iniustitia detentam creator iratus ulciscitur. [4] Quantas autem foveas in ista vel maxime epistula Marcion fecerit, auferendo quae voluit, de nostri instrumenti integritate parebit. Mihi sufficit, quae proinde eradenda non vidit, quasi neglegentias et caecitates eius accipere. Si enim iudicabit deus occulta hominum, tam eorum qui in lege deliquerunt quam eorum qui sine lege, quia et hi legem ignorant et natura faciunt quae sunt legis, utique is deus iudicabit cuius sunt et lex et ipsa natura, quae legis est instar ignorantibus legem. Iudicabit autem quomodo? [5] Secundum evangelium, inquit, per Christum. Ergo et evangelium et Christus illius sunt cuius et lex et natura, quae per evangelium et Christum vindicabuntur a deo illo iudicio dei quod et supra, secundum veritatem. Ergo qua defendenda reveletur de caelo ira, non nisi a deo irae, ita et hic sensus pristino cohaerens, in quo iudicium creatoris edicitur, non potest in alium deum referri, qui nec iudicat nec irascitur, sed in illum cuius dum haec sunt, iudicium dico et iram, etiam illa ipsius sint necesse est per quae haec habent transigi, evangelium et Christus. [6] Et ideo vehitur in transgressores legis, docentes non furari et furantes, ut homo dei legis, non ut creatorem ipsum his modis tangens, qui et furari vetans fraudem mandaverit in Aegyptios auri et argenti, quemadmodum et cetera in illum retorquent. Scilicet apostolus verebatur convicium deo palam facere, a quo non verebatur divertisse? [7]

Adeo autem Iudaeos incesserat, ut ingesserit prophetica increpationem: Propter vos nomen dei blasphematur. Quam ergo perversum, ut ipse blasphemaret eum cuius blasphemandi causa malos exprobrat! Praefert et circumcisionem cordis praeputationi; apud deum legis est facta circumcisio cordis, non carnis, spiritu, non littera. Quodsi haec est circumcisio Hieremiae: Et circumcidemini praeputia cordis, sicut et Moyses: Circumcidemini duricordiam vestram, eius erit spiritus circumcidens cor cuius et littera metens carnem, eius et Iudaeus qui in occulto cuius et Iudaeus in aperto, quia nec Iudaeum nominare vellet apostolus non Iudaeorum dei servum. [8] Tunc lex, nunc iustitia dei per fidem Christi. Quae est ista distinctio? Servivit deus tuus dispositioni creatoris, dans ei tempus et legi eius: an eius tunc cuius et nunc? Eius lex cuius et fides Christi; distinctio dispositionum est, non deorum. [9] Monet iustificatos ex fide Christi, non ex lege, pacem ad deum habere. Ad quem? Cuius nusquam fuimus hostes, an cuius legi et naturae rebellavimus? Nam si in eum competit pax cum quo fuit bellum, ei et iustificabimur, et eius erit Christus ex cuius fide iustificabimur, ad cuius pacem competit redigi hostes eius aliquando. [10] Lex autem, inquit, subintroivit, ut abundaret delictum. Quare? ut superabundaret, inquit, gratia. Cuius dei gratia, si non cuius et lex? Nisi si creator ideo legem intercalavit, ut negotium procuraret gratiae dei alterius et quidem aemuli, ne dixerim ignoti, ut, quemadmodum apud ipsum regnaverat peccatum in mortem, ita et gratia regnaret in iustitia in vitam per Iesum Christum, adversarium ipsius. [11] Propter hoc omnia concluderat lex creatoris sub delictum, et totum mundum deduxerat in reatum, et omne os obstruxerat, ne qui gloriaretur per illam, ut gratia servaretur in gloriam Christi, non creatoris, sed Marcionis? [12] Possum et hic de substantia Christi praestruere ex prospectu quaestionis subsecuturæ. Mortuos enim nos inquit legi <per corpus Christi>. Ergo corpus Christi, et potest corpus contendere, non statim caro. Sed et quaecunque substantia sit, cum eius nominat corpus quem subicit ex mortuis surrexisse, non potest aliud corpus intellegi quam carnis, in quam lex mortis est dicta. [13] Ecce autem et testimonium perhibet legi, et causa delicti eam excusat. Quid ergo dicemus? quia lex peccatum? absit. Erubescere, Marcion. Absit. Abominatur apostolus criminationem legis. Sed ego delictum non scio nisi per legem. [14] O summum ex hoc praeconium legis, per quam <non> licuit delictum latere! Non ergo lex seduxit, sed peccatum per praecepti occasionem. Quid deo imputas legis quod legi eius apostolus imputare non audet? Atquin et accumulat: Lex sancta, et praeceptum eius iustum et bonum. [15] Si taliter veneratur legem creatoris, quomodo ipsum destruat nescio. Quis discernit duos deos, iustum alium, bonum alium, cum is utrumque debeat credi cuius praeceptum et bonum et iustum est? Si autem et spiritalem confirmat legem, utique et propheticam, utique et figuratam. Debeo enim et hinc constituere Christum in lege figurate praedicatum, quo nec a Iudaeis omnibus potuerit agnosci.

14. [1] Hunc si pater misit in similitudinem carnis peccati, non ideo phantasma dicitur caro quae in illo videbatur. Peccatum enim carni supra adscripsit, et illam fecit legem peccati habitantem in membris suis et adversantem legi sensus. Ob hoc igitur missum filium in similitudinem carnis peccati, ut peccati carnem simili substantia redimeret, id est carnea, quae peccatrici carni similis esset, cum peccatrix ipsa non esset. Nam et haec erit dei virtus in substantia pari perficere salutem. [2] Non enim magnum, si spiritus dei carnem remediaret, sed si caro consimilis peccatrici, dum caro est, sed non peccati. Ita similitudo ad titulum peccati pertinebit, non ad substantiae mendacium. Nam nec addidisset Peccati, si substantiae similitudinem vellet intellegi, ut negaret veritatem; tantum enim Carnis posuisset, non et Peccati. Cum vero tunc sic struxit, Carnis peccati, et substantiam confirmavit, id est carnem, et similitudinem ad vitium substantiae retulit, id est ad peccatum. [3] Puta nunc similitudinem substantiae dictam, non ideo negabitur substantiae veritas. Cur ergo similis vera? Quia vera quidem sed non ex semine: de statu similis et vera: de censu non vero dissimilis. Ceterum similitudo in contrariis nulla est. Spiritus non diceretur carnis similitudo, quia nec caro similitudinem spiritus caperet; sed phantasma diceretur, si id quod non erat videbatur. Similitudo autem dicitur, cum est quod videtur. Est enim, dum alterius par est. Phantasma autem, qua hoc tantum est, non est similitudo. [4] Et hic autem ipse edisserens quomodo nolit esse nos in carne, cum simus in carne, ut scilicet non simus in operibus carnis, ostendit hac ratione scripsisse, Caro et sanguis regnum dei consequi non possunt, non substantiam damnans sed opera eius; quae quia possunt non admitti a nobis in carne adhuc positae, non ad reatum substantiae sed ad conversationis pertinebunt. Item si corpus quidem mortuum propter delictum, adeo non animae, sed corporis mors est; spiritus autem vita propter iustitiam cui mors obvenit propter delictum, id est corpori. [5] Non enim alicui restituitur nisi qui illud amisit; et ita erit resurrectio mortuorum dum est corporum. Nam subiungit: Qui suscitavit Christum a mortuis, vivificabit et mortalia corpora vestra. Adeo et carnis resurrectionem confirmavit, absque qua nec corpus aliud dici capit nec mortale aliud intellegi, et Christi substantiam corporalem probavit; siquidem proinde vivificabuntur et mortalia corpora nostra, quemadmodum et ille resuscitatus est, non alias proinde nisi quia in corpore. [6] Salio et hic amplissimum abruptum intercisae scripturae, sed apprehendo testimonium perhibentem apostolum Israeli, quod zelum dei habeant, sui utique, non tamen per scientiam. Deum enim, inquit, ignorantes, et suam iustitiam sistere quaerentes, non subiecerunt se iustitiae dei; finis etenim legis Christus in iustitia omni credenti. [7] Hic erit argumentatio haeretici, quasi deum superiorem ignoravcrint Iudaei, qui adversus eum iustitiam suam, id est legis suae, constituerint, non recipientes Christum, finem legis. Cur ergo zelo eorum erga deum proprium testimonium perhibet, si non et inscitiam erga eundem deum eis exprobrat? quod zelo quidem dei agerentur, sed non per scientiam, ignorantes scilicet eum, dum dispositiones eius in Christo ignorant consummationem legi staturo, atque ita suam iustitiam tuentur adversus illum. [8] Atque adeo ipse creator et ignorantiam erga se eorum contestatur: Israel me non agnovit et populus me non intellexit; et quod iustitiam suam magis sisterent, docentes doctrinas praecepta hominum, nec non et congregati essent adversus dominum et adversus Christum ipsius, ex inscitia scilicet. Nihil igitur potest in alium deum exponi quod competit in creatorem, quia et alias immerito apostolus Iudaeos de ignorantia suggillasset erga deum ignotum. [9] Quid enim deliquerant, si iustitiam dei sui adversus eum sistebant quem ignorabant? Atquin exclamat: O profundum divitiarum et sapientiae dei, et investigabiles viae eius! Unde illa eruptio? Ex recordatione scilicet scripturarum quas retro revolverat, ex contemplatione sacramentorum quae supra disseruerat in fidem Christi ex lege venientem. Haec si Marcion de industria erasit, quid apostolus eius exclamat, nullas intuens divitias dei, tam pauperis et egeni quam qui nihil condidit, nihil praedicavit, nihil denique habuit, ut qui in aliena descendit? Sed enim et opes et divitiae creatoris olim absconditae, nunc reseratae. Sic enim repromiserat: Et dabo illis thesauros occultos, invisibiles aperiam eis. [10] Inde ergo exclamatum est: O profundum divitiarum et sapientiae dei! cuius iam thesauri patebant. Id Esaiae: et sequentia de eiusdem prophetae instrumento: Quis enim cognovit sensum domini, aut quis consiliarius eius fuit? quis porrexit ei, et retribuetur illi? Qui tanta de scripturis ademisti, quid ista servasti, quasi non et haec creatoris? ^[11] Plane novi dei praecepta videamus. Odio, inquit, habentes malum, et bono adhaerentes. Aliud est enim apud creatorem, Auferte malum de vobis, et, Declina a malo et fac bonum? Amore fraternitatis invicem affectuosi; non enim id ipsum est, Diliges proximum tanquam te? Spe gaudentes, utique dei; Bonum est enim sperare in dominum, quam sperare in magistratus. Pressuram sustinentes: Exaudiet enim te dominus in die pressurae. Habes psalmum. Benedicite, et nolite maledicere: quis hoc docebit quam qui omnia benedictionibus condidit? ^[12] Non altum sapientes, sed humilibus assentantes, ne sitis apud vos sapientes: Vae enim audiunt per Esaiam. Malum pro malo nemini retribueritis: Et malitiae fratris tui ne memineris. Nec vosmet ipsos ulciscetes: Mihi enim vindictam et ego vindicabo, dicit dominus. ^[13] Pacem cum omnibus hominibus habetote: ergo et legalis talio non retributionem iniuriae permittebat, sed inceptionem metu retributionis comprimebat. Merito itaque totam creatoris disciplinam principali praecepto eius conclusit, Diliges proximum tanquam te. Hoc legis supplementum si ex ipsa lege est, quis sit deus legis iam ignoro. Metuo ne deus Marcionis. Si vero evangelium Christi hoc praecepto adimpletur, Christi autem non est creatoris, quo iam contendimus? ^[14] Dixerit Christus an non, Ego non veni legem dissolvere sed implere, frustra de ista sententia neganda Pontus laboravit. Si evangelium legem non adimplevit, ecce lex evangelium adimplevit. Bene autem quod et in clausula tribunal Christi comminatur, utique iudicis et ultoris, utique creatoris, illum certe constituens promerendum quem intentat timendum, etiamsi alium praedicaret.

15. DE EPISTULA AD THESSALONICENSES PRIMA. ^[1] Brevioribus quoque epistulis non pigebit intendere. Est sapor et in paucis. Occiderant Iudaei prophetas suos. Possum dicere, Quid ad apostolum dei alterius, et quidem optimi, qui nec suorum delicta damnare dicatur, quique et ipse prophetas eosdem destruendo quodammodo perimat? Quid enim mali admisit apud illum Israel, si occidit quos et ille reprobavit, si prior inimicam in eos sententiam statuit? Deliquit autem apud deum ipsorum. Is exprobrabit iniquitatem ad quem pertinet laesus; certe quivis alius quam adversarius laesi. Sed nec onerasset illos imputando etiam domini necem, Qui et dominum interfecerunt, dicendo, et prophetas suos; licet Suos adiectio sit haeretici. ^[2] Quid enim tam acerbum, si alterius dei praedicatorem Christum interemerunt qui sui dei prophetas contrucidaverunt? Status autem exaggerationis, quod et dominum et famulos eius peremissent. Denique si alterius dei Christum, alterius prophetas peremerunt, aequavit impietates, non exaggeravit. Aequanda autem non fuit; ergo exaggerari non potuit nisi in eundem dominum commissa ex utroque titulo. Ergo eiusdem. dei Christus et prophetae. [3] Quam autem sanctitatem nostram voluntatem dei dicat, ex contrariis quae prohibet agnosceres. Abstinere enim, inquit, a stupro, non a matrimonio: scire unumquemque suum vas in honore tractare. Quomodo? dum non in libidine, qua gentes. Libido autem nec apud gentes matrimonio adscribitur, sed extraordinariis et non naturalibus et portentuosis luxuriae . . . <Sanctitas> est turpitudini quoque et immunditiae contraria, quae non matrimonium excludat sed libidinem, quae vas nostrum in honore matrimonii tractet. Hunc autem locum salva alterius, id est plenioris, sanctitatis praelatione tractaverim, continentiam et virginitatem nuptiis anteponens, sed non prohibitis. Destructores enim dei nuptiarum, non sectatores castitatis retundo. [4] Ait eos qui remaneant in adventum Christi cum eis qui mortui in Christo primi resurgent, quod in nubibus auferentur in aerem obviam domino. Agnosco his iam tunc prospectis mirari substantias caelestes ipsam Hierusalem quae sursum est, et per Esaïam pronuntiare, Quinam huc velut nubes volant, tanquam columbae cum pullis ad me? Hunc ascensum si Christus nobis praeparavit, ille erit Christus de quo Amos: Qui ascensum suum aedificat in caelos, utique sibi et suis. Exinde a quo sperabo nunc, nisi a quo haec audiui? [5] Quem spiritum prohibet extinguere, et quas prophetias vetat nihil haberi? Utique non creatoris spiritum, nec creatoris prophetias, secundum Marcionem: quae enim destruit, ipse iam extinxit et nihil fecit, nec potest prohibere quae nihil fecit. Ergo incumbit Marcioni exhibere hodie apud ecclesiam suam exinde spiritum dei sui qui non sit extinguendus, et prophetias quae non sint nihil habendae. Et si exhibuit quod putat, sciat nos quodcunque illud ad formam spiritualis et propheticæ gratiae atque virtutis provocaturos, ut et futura praenuntiet et occulta cordis revelet et sacramenta edisserat. [6] Cum nihil tale protulerit ac probarit, nos proferemus et spiritum et prophetias creatoris secundum ipsum praedicantes. Atque ita constabit apostolus de quibus dixerit, de eis scilicet quae futura erant in ecclesia eius dei qui dum est, spiritus quoque eius operatur et promissio celebratur. [7] Age nunc, qui salutem carnis abnuitis, et si quando corpus in huiusmodi praeominatur, aliud nescio quid interpretamini illud quam substantiam carnis, quomodo apostolus omnes in nobis substantias certis nominibus distinxit et omnes in uno voto constituit salutis, optans ut spiritus noster et corpus et anima sine querela in adventu domini et salutificatoris nostri Christi conserventur? [8] Nam et animam posuit et corpus, tam duas res quam diversas. Licet enim et anima et corpus sit aliquod suae qualitatis, sicut et spiritus, cum tamen et corpus et anima distincte nominantur, habet anima suum vocabulum proprium, non egens communi vocabulo corporis; id relinquitur carni, quae non nominata proprio, communi utatur necesse est. Etenim aliam substantiam in homine non video post spiritum et animam cui vocabulum corporis accommodetur praeter carnem, hanc totiens in corporis nomine intellegens quotiens non nominatur; multo magis hic, cum quae dicitur corpus suo nomine appellatur.

16. DE EPISTULA AD THESSALONIGENSES SECUNDA. [1] Cogimur quaedam identidem iterare, ut cohaerentia eis confirmemus. Dominum et hic retributorem utriusque meriti dicimus circumferri ab apostolo, aut creatorem aut, quod nolit Marcion, parem creatoris, apud quem iustum sit afflictatoribus nostris rependi afflictationem, et nobis qui afflictemur requietem, in revelatione domini Iesu venientis a caelo cum angelis virtutis suae et in flamma ignis. Sed flammam et ignem delendo haereticus extinxit, ne scilicet nostratem deum faceret. Lucet tamen vanitas liturae. [2] Cum enim ad ultionem venturum scribat apostolus dominum exigendam de eis qui deum ignorent et qui non obaudiant evangelio, quos ait poenam luituros exitialem, aeternam, a facie domini et a gloria valentiae eius, sequitur ut flammam ignis inducat, scilicet veniens ad puniendum. Ita et in hoc, nolente Marcione, crematoris dei Christus, et in illo creatoris est, quod etiam de ignorantibus dominum ulciscitur, id est de ethnicis. [3] Seorsum enim posuit, Evangelio non obaudientes, sive Christianos peccatores, sive Iudaeos. Porro de ethnicis exigere poenas, qui evangelium forte non norint, non est dei eius qui naturaliter sit ignotus, nec usquam nisi in evangelio sit revelatus, non omnibus scibilis. Creatori autem etiam naturalis agnitio debetur, ex operibus intellegendo et exinde in plenioram notitiam requirendo. Illius est ergo etiam ignorantes deum plectere, quem non liceat ignorare. Ipsum quod ait, A facie domini et a gloria valentiae eius, verbis usus Esaiiae, ex ipsa causa eundem sapit dominum consurgentem ut comminuat terram. [4] Quis est autem homo delicti, filius perditionis, quem revelari prius oportet ante domini adventum, extollens se super omne quod deus dicitur et omnem religionem, consessurus in templo dei et deum se iactaturus? Secundum nos quidem antichristus, ut docent veteres ac novae prophetiae, ut Ioannes apostolus, qui iam antichristos dicit processisse in mundum praecursores antichristi spiritus, negantes Christum in carne venisse, et solventes Iesum, scilicet in deo creatore: secundum vero Marcionem nescio ne sit Christus creatoris. Nondum venit apud illum. Quisquis est autem ex duobus, quaero cur veniat in omni virtute et signis et ostentis mendacii? [5] Propterea, inquit, quod dilectionem veritatis non susceperint ut salvi essent, et propter hoc erit eis <in> instinctum fallaciae, ut iudicentur omnes qui non crediderunt veritati sed consenserunt iniquitati. Igitur si antichristus, et secundum creatorem, deus erit creator qui eum mittit ad impingendos eos in errorem qui non crediderunt veritati ut salvi fierent, eiusdem erit veritas et salus qui eas summissu erroris ulciscitur, id est creatoris, cui et competit zelus ipse errore decipere quos veritate non cepit. Si vero non est antichristus secundum nos, ergo Christus est creatoris secundum Marcionem. [6] Et quale erit ut ad ulciscendam veritatem suam Christum creatoris summittat? Sed et si de antichristo consentit, proinde dixerim, Quale est ut illi satanas, angelus creatoris, sit necessarius, et occidatur ab eo, habens fallaciae operatione fungi creatori? In summa, si indubitatum est eius esse et angelum et veritatem et salutem cuius et ira et aemulatio et fallaciae immisio adversus contemptores et desultores, etiam adversus ignorantes (ut iam et Marcion de gradu cedat, deum quoque suum zeloten concedens), quis dignius irascetur? [7] Puto, qui a primordio rerum naturam operibus beneficiis plagis praedicationibus, testibus ad agnitionem sui praestruxit, nec tamen agnitus est: an qui semel unico evangelii instrumento, et ipso incerto, nae palam alium deum praedicante, productus est? Ita cui competit vindicta, ei competit materia vindictae, evangelium dico et veritas et salus. Iubere autem operari eum qui velit manducare eius disciplina est qui bovi tritुरanti os liberum iussit.

17. DE EPISTULA AD LAODICENOS. [1] Ecclesiae quidem veritate epistolam istam ad Ephesios habemus emissam, non ad Laodiceos; sed Marcion ei titulum aliquando interpolare gestiit, quasi et in isto diligentissimus explorator. Nihil autem de titulis interest, cum ad omnes apostolus scripserit dum ad quosdam, certe tamen eum deum praedicans in Christo cui competunt quae praedicantur. Cui ergo competit secundum boni

existimationem, quam proposuerit in sacramento voluntatis suae, in dispensationem adimpletionis temporum (ut ita dixerim, sicut verbum illud in Graeco sonat) recapitulare (id est ad initium redigere vel ab initio recensere) omnia in Christum quae in caelis et quae in terris, nisi cuius omnia erunt ab initio, etiam ipsum initium, a quo et tempora et temporum adimpletionis dispensatio, ob quam omnia ad initium recensentur in Christo? [2] Alterius autem dei quod initium, id est unde, cuius opus nullum? quae tempora sine initio? quae adimpletio sine temporibus? quae dispensatio sine adimplerione? Denique quid in terris egit iam olim, ut longa aliqua temporum adimplendorum dispensatio reputetur, ad recensenda omnia in Christo, etiam quae in caelis? [3] Nec in caelis autem res ab altero actas existimabimus, quaecunque sunt, quam ab eo a quo et in terris actas omnibus constat. Quodsi non capit alterius omnia ista deputari ab initio quam creatoris, quis credet ab alio ea recenseri in Christum alium, et non a suo auctore et in suum Christum? Si creatoris sunt, diversa sint necesse est a diverso deo; si diversa, utique contraria. Quomodo ergo contraria recenseantur in eum a quo denique destruuntur? Nam et sequentia quem renuntiant Christum, cum dicit, Ut simus in laudem gloriae nos qui praesperavimus in Christum? Qui enim praesperasse potuerunt, id est ante sperasse in deum quam venisset, nisi Iudaei, quibus Christus praenuntiabatur ab initio? [4] Qui ergo praenuntiabatur, ille et praesperabatur. Atque adeo hoc ad se, id est ad Iudaeos, refert, ut distinctionem faciat conversus ad nationes: In quo et vos, cum audissetis sermonem veritatis, evangelium, in quo credidistis et signati estis spiritu promissionis eius sancto. Cuius promissionis? factae per Ioelem: In novissimis diebus effundam de meo spiritu in omnem carnem, id est et in nationes. Ita et spiritus et evangelium in eo erit Christo qui praesperabatur, dum praedicabatur. [5] Sed et pater gloriae ille est cuius Christus rex gloriae canitur in psalmo ascendens: Quis est iste rex gloriae? dominus virtutum ipse est rex gloriae. Ab illo spiritus sapientiae optatur apud quem haec quoque spiritualium species enumeratur inter septem spiritus per Esaïam. Ille dabit illuminatos cordis oculos qui etiam exteriores oculos luce ditavit, cui displicet caecitas populi: Et quis caecus nisi pueri mei? et, Excaecati sunt famuli dei. [6] Apud illum sunt et divitiae haereditatis in sanctis qui eam haereditatem ex vocatione nationum repromisit: Postula de me, et dabo tibi gentes haereditatem tuam. Ille inoperatus est in Christum valentiam suam, suscitando eum a mortuis, et collocando eum ad dexteram suam, et subiciendo omnia, qui et dixit, Sede ad dexteram meam, donec ponam inimicos tuos scabellum pedum tuorum; quia et alibi spiritus ad patrem de filio, Omnia subiecisti sub pedibus eius. Si ex his alius deus et alius Christus infertur quae recognoscuntur in creatore, quaeramus iam creatorem. [7] Plane puto invenimus, cum dicit illos delictis mortuos in quibus ingressi erant secundum aevum mundi huius, secundum principem potestatis aeris qui operatur in filiis incredulitatis. Sed mundum non potest et hic pro deo mundi Marcion interpretari. Non enim simile est creatum creatori, factum factori, mundus deo. Sed nec princeps potestatis aeris dicitur qui est princeps potestatis saeculorum. [8] Nunquam enim praeses superiorum de inferioribus notatur, licet et inferiora ipsi deputentur. Sed nec incredulitatis operator videri potest, quam ipse potius et a Iudaeis et a nationibus patitur. Sufficit igitur si haec non cadunt in creatorem. Si autem et est in quem magis competant, utique magis hoc apostolus sciit. Quis iste? Sine dubio ille qui ipsi creatori filios incredulitatis obstitit, aere isto potitus, sicut dicere eum propheta refert: Ponam in nubibus thronum meum, ero similis altissimo. [9] Hic erit diabolus, quem et alibi (si tamen ita et apostolum legi volunt) deum aevi huius agnosceremus. Ita enim totum saeculum mendacio divinitatis implevit. Qui plane si non fuisset, tunc haec in creatorem spectasse potuissent. Sed et in Iudaismo conversatus fuerat apostolus. Non quia interposuit de delictis in quibus et nos omnes conversati sumus, ideo delictorum dominum et principem aeris huius creatorem praestat intellegi, sed quia in Iudaismo unus fuerat de filiis incredulitatis, diabolum habens operatorem, cum persequeretur ecclesiam et Christum creatoris, propter quod et, Iracundiae filii fuimus, inquit; [10] sed natura, ne quia filios appellavit Iudaeos creator, argumentetur haereticus dominum irae creatorem. Cum enim dicit, Fuimus natura filii iracundiae, creatoris autem non natura sunt filii Iudaei sed allectione patrum, irae filios ad naturam retulit non ad creatorem, ad summam subiungens, Sicut et ceteri, qui utique filii dei non sunt. Apparet communi naturae omnium hominum et delicta et concupiscentias carnis et incredulitatem et iracundiam reputari, diabolo tamen captante naturam, quam et ipse iam infecit delicti semine illato. [11] Ipsius, inquit, sumus factura, conditi in Christo. Aliud est facere, aliud condere. Sed utrumque uni dedit. Homo autem factura creatoris est. Idem ergo condidit in Christo qui et fecit. Quantum enim ad substantiam, fecit; quantum ad gratiam, condidit. [12] Inspice et cohaerentia. Memores vos aliquando nationes in carne, qui appellamini praeputium ab ea quae dicitur circumcisio in carne manu facta, quod essetis illo in tempore sine Christo, alienati a conversatione Israelis et peregrini testamentorum et promissionis eorum, spem non habentes, et sine deo, in mundo. Sine quo autem deo fuerunt nationes, et sine quo Christo? Utique eo cuius erat conversatio Israelis et testamenta et promissio. At nunc, inquit, in Christo vos qui eratis longe facti estis prope in sanguine eius. A quibus erant retro longe? A quibus supra dicit, a Christo creatoris, a conversatione Israelis, a testamentis, a spe promissionis, a deo ipso. [13] Si haec ita sunt, ergo his prope fiunt nunc nationes in Christo a quibus tunc longe fuerant. Si autem conversationi Israelis, quae est in religione dei creatoris, et testamentis et promissioni et ipsi deo eorum proximi sumus facti in Christo, ridiculum satis si nos alterius dei Christus de longinquo admovit creatori. [14] Meminerat apostolus ita praedicatum de nationum vocatione ex longinquo vocandarum: Qui longe erant a me, appropinquaverunt iustitiae meae. Tam enim iustitia quam et pax creatoris in Christo annuntiabatur, ut saepe iam ostendimus. Itaque ipse est, inquit, pax nostra, qui fecit duo unum, Iudaicum scilicet populum et gentilem, quod prope et quod longe, soluto medio pariete inimicitiae, in carne sua. Sed Marcion abstulit Sua, ut inimicitiae daret carnem, quasi carnali vitio, non Christo aemulae. Sic uti alibi dixi, et hic, non Marrucine sed Pontice, cuius supra sanguinem confessus es hic negas carnem. [15] Si legem praeceptorum sententiis vacuam fecit, adimplendo certe legem (vacat enim iam, Non adulterabis, cum dicitur, Nec videbis ad concupiscendum; vacat, Non occides, cum dicitur, Nec maledices) adversarium legis de adiutore non potes facere. Ut duos conderet in semetipso (qui fecerat idem condens secundum quod et supra: Ipsius enim factura sumus, conditi in Christo) in unum novum hominem, faciens pacem (si vere novum, vere et hominem, non phantasma, novum autem et nove natum ex virgine dei spiritu), ut reconciliet ambos deo, et deo quem utrumque genus offenderat, et Iudaicum et gentilem populum in uno corpore, inquit, cum interfecisset inimicitiam in eo per crucem. Ita et hic caro corpus in Christo, quod crucem pati potuit. [16] Hoc itaque annuntiante pacem eis qui prope et eis qui longe, accessum consecuti simul ad patrem, iam non sumus peregrini nec advenae, sed concives sanctorum, sed domestici dei (utique eius a quo supra ostendimus alienos fuisse nos et longe constitutos), superaedificati super fundamentum apostolorum. Abstulit haereticus, Et prophetarum, oblitus dominum posuisse in ecclesia, sicut apostolos, ita et prophetas. Timuit scilicet ne et super veterum prophetarum fundamenta aedificatio nostra constaret in Christo, cum ipse apostolus ubique nos de prophetis exstruere non cesset. Unde enim accepit summum lapidem angularem dicere Christum, nisi de psalmi significatione: Lapis quem repronaverunt aedificantes, iste factus est in summo anguli?

18. [1] De manibus haeretici praecedentis non miror si syllabas subtrahit, cum paginas totas plerumque subducit. Datam inquit sibi apostolus gratiam novissimo omnium, illuminandi omnes quae dispensatio sacramenti occulti ab aevis in deo qui omnia condidit. Rapuit haereticus In praepositionem, et ita legi facit: Occulti ab aevis deo qui omnia condidit. Sed emicat falsum. [2] Infert enim apostolus, Ut nota fiat principatibus et potestatibus in supercaelestibus per ecclesiam multifaria sapientia dei. Cuius dicit principatibus et potestatibus? Si creatoris, quale est ut principatibus et potestatibus eius ostendi voluerit deus ille sapientiam suam, ipsi autem non, quando nec potestates sine suo principe potuissent quid cognoscere? Aut si ideo deum non nominavit hic, quasi in illis et princeps ipse reputetur, ergo et occultatum sacramentum principatibus et potestatibus eius qui omnia condidit pronuntiasset, proinde in illis deputans ipsum. [3] Quod si illis dicit occultatum, illi debebat dixisse manifestum. Ergo non deo erat occultatum, sed in deo omnium conditore, occultum autem principatibus et potestatibus eius: Quis enim cognovit sensum domini, aut quis consiliarius ei fuit? Hic captus haereticus fortasse mutabit, ut dicat deum suum suis potestatibus et principatibus notam facere voluisse dispensationem sui sacramenti, quam ignorasset deus conditor omnium. Et quo competebat praetendere ignorantiam creatoris extranei et longa separatione discreti, cum domestici quoque superioris dei nescissent? [4] Tamen et creatori notum erat futurum. An non utique notum quod sub caelo et in terra eius habebat revelari? Ergo ex hoc confirmatur quod supra struximus. Si enim creator cogniturus erat quandoque occultum illud dei superioris sacramentum, et ita scriptura habebat: Occulti deo qui omnia condidit; sic inferre debuerat, Ut nota fiat illi multifaria sapientia dei, tunc et potestatibus et principatibus cuiuscunque dei, cum quibus sciturus esset creator. Adeo subtractum constat quod et sic veritati suae salvum est. [5] Volo nunc et ego tibi de allegoriis apostoli controversiam nectere. Quas novus in prophetis habuisset formas? Captivam, inquit, duxit captivitatem. Quibus armis? quibus proeliis? de cuius gentis vastatione? de cuius civitatis eversione? quas feminas quos pueros quosve regulos catenis victor inseruit? Nam et cum apud David Christus canitur succinctus gladio super femur, aut apud Esaïam spolia accipiens Samariae et virtutem Damasci, vere cum et visibilem extundis proeliatorem. [6] Agnosce igitur iam et armaturam et militiam eius spiritalem, si iam didicisti esse captivitatem spiritalem, ut et hanc illius agnoscas, vel quia et captivitatis huius mentionem de prophetis apostolus sumpsit, a quibus et mandata. Deponentes mendacium loquimini veritatem ad proximum quisque, et Irascimini et nolite delinquere (ipsis verbis quibus psalmus exponeret sensus eius), sol ut non occidat super iracundiam vestram. Nolite communicare operibus tenebrarum. Cum iusto enim iustus eris, et cum perverso perverteris, et, Auferte malum de medio vestrum, et, [7] Exite de medio eorum, et, Immundum ne attigeritis; separamini, qui fertis vasa domini. Sic et, Inebriari vino dedecori, inde est ubi sanctorum inebriatores increpantur: Et potum dabatis sanctis meis vinum; quod prohibitus erat potare et Aaron sacerdos et filii eius, cum adirent ad sancta. Et psalmis et hymnis deo canere docere illius est qui cum tympanis potius et psalteriis vinum bibentes incusari a deo norat. Ita cuius invenio praecepta et semina praeceptorum vel augmenta, eius apostolum agnosco. [8] Ceterum mulieres viris subiectas esse debere unde confirmat? Quia vir, inquit, caput est mulieris. Dic mihi, Marcion, de opere creatoris deus tuus legi suae astruit auctoritatem? Hoc iam plane minus est, cum et ipsi Christo suo et ecclesiae eius inde statum sumit: Sicut et Christus caput est ecclesiae. Similiter et cum dicit, Carnem suam diligit qui uxorem suam diligit, sicut et Christus ecclesiam: vides comparari operi creatoris Christum tuum et ecclesiam tuam. Quantum honoris carni datur in ecclesiae nomine! [9] Nemo, inquit, carnem suam odio habet (nisi plane Marcion solus), sed et nutrit et fovet eam, sicut et Christus ecclesiam. At tu solus eam odisti, auferens illi resurrectionem. Odisse debebis et ecclesiam, quia proinde diligitur a Christo. At enim Christus amavit et carnem sicut ecclesiam. Nemo non diligit imaginem quoque sponsae, immo et servabit illam et honorabit et coronabit. Habet similitudo cum veritate honoris consortium. Laborabo ego nunc eundem deum probare masculi et Christi, mulieris et ecclesiae, carnis et spiritus, ipso apostolo sententiam creatoris adhibente, immo et disserente:

Propter hanc relinquet homo patrem et matrem, et erunt duo in carne una: sacramentum hoc magnum est? [10] Sufficit inter ista si creatoris magna sunt apud apostolum sacramenta, minima apud haereticos. Sed ego autem dico, inquit, in Christum et ecclesiam. Habes interpretationem, non separationem, sacramenti. Ostendit figuram sacramenti ab eo praeministratam cuius erat utique sacramentum. Quid videtur Marcioni? Creator quidem ignoto deo figuras praeministrare non potuit, etiam quia adversario, si noto. Deus superior ab inferiore et ad destruendum potius mutuari nihil debuit. [11] Obaudiant et parentibus filii. Nam etsi Marcion abstulit, Hoc est enim primum in promissione praeceptum, lex loquitur, Honora patrem et matrem, et, Parentes enutrite filios in disciplina et correptione donaini. Audisti enim et veteribus dictum, Narrabitis haec in auribus filiorum vestrorum, et filii vestri aequae in auribus filiorum suorum. Quo iam mihi duos deos, si una est disciplina? Etsi duo sunt, illum sequar qui prior docuit. Sed adversus munditenentes luctatio si nobis, o quanti iam dii creatores! [12] Cur enim non et hoc vindicem, unum munditenentem nominari debuisse, si creatorem significabat cuius essent quas praemisit potestates? Porro cum supra quidem induere nos iubeat armaturam in qua stemus ad machinationes diaboli, iam ostendit diaboli esse quae diabolo subiungit, potestates et munditenentes tenebrarum istarum, quae et nos diabolo deputamus. Aut si diabolus creator est, quis erit diabolus apud creatorem? An sicut duo dii, ita et duo diaboli, et pluraliter potestates et munditenentes? [13] Sed quomodo creator et diabolus et deus idem, cum diabolus non idem et deus et diabolus? Aut enim ambo et dei, si ambo iam diaboli, aut qui deus hic et non diabolus, sicut nec diabolus deus. Ipsum vocabulum diaboli quaero ex qua delatura competat creatori. Fortasse detulit aliquam dei superioris intensionem, quod ipse ab archangelo passus est, et quidem mentito: non ideo enim interdixerat illius arbusculae gustum ne dei fierent, sed ne de transgressione morerentur. Nec spiritalia autem nequitiae ideo creatorem significabunt quia adiecit, In caelis: [14] sciebat enim et apostolus in caelis operata esse spiritalia nequitiae, angelorum scandalizantium in filias hominum. Et quale erat ut ambiguitatibus et per aenigmata nescio quae creatorem taxaret, qui in catenis iam constitutus ob libertatem praedicationis constantiam manifestandi sacramenti in apertione oris, quam ibi expostulare a deo mandabat, ecclesiae utique praestabat?

19. DE EPISTULA AD COLOSSENSES. [1] Soleo in praescriptione

adversus haereses omnes de testimonio temporum compendium figere, priorem vindicans regulam nostram omni haeretica posteritate. Hoc nunc probabit et apostolus dicens, De spe reposita in caelis, quam audistis in sermone veritatis evangelii, quod pervenit ad vos, sicut et in totum mundum. Nam si iam tum traditio evangelica ubique manaverat, quanto magis nunc? [2] Porro si nostra est quae ubique manavit, magis quam omnis haeretica, nedum Antoniniani Marcionis, nostra erit apostolica. Marcionis autem cum totum impleverit mundum, ne tunc quidem se defendere poterit de apostolica. Eam enim et sic constabit esse quae prior mundum replevit, illius scilicet dei evangelio qui et haec cecinit de praedicationibus eius: In omnem terram exiit sonus eorum, et in terminos orbis verba eorum. [3] Invisibilis dei imaginem ait Christum. Sed nos enim invisibilem dicimus patrem Christi, scientes filium semper retro visum, si quibus visus est, in dei nomine, ut imaginem ipsius; ne quam et hinc differentiam scindat dei visibilis et invisibilis, cum olim dei nostri sit definitio: Dominum nemo videbit et vivet. [4] Si non est Christus primogenitus conditionis, ut sermo creatoris per quem omnia facta sunt et sine quo nihil factum est, si non in illo condita sunt universa in caelis et in terris, visibilia et invisibilia, sive throni sive dominationes sive principatus sive potestates, si non cuncta per illum et in illo sunt condita (haec enim Marcioni displicere oportebat), non utique tam nude posuisset apostolus, Et ipse est ante omnes. Quomodo enim ante omnes, si non ante omnia? Quomodo ante omnia, si non primogenitus conditionis, si non sermo creatoris? Unde ante omnes probabitur fuisse qui post omnia apparuit? Quis scit priorem fuisse quem esse nesciit? [5] Quomodo item boni duxit omnem plenitudinem in semetipso habitare? Primo enim, quae est ista plenitudo, nisi ex illis quae Marcion detraxit, conditis in Christo, in caelis et in terris, angelis et hominibus, nisi ex illis invisibilibus et visibilibus, nisi ex thronis et dominationibus et principatibus et potestatibus? Aut si haec pseudapostoli nostri et Iudaici evangelizatores de suo intulerint, edat plenitudinem dei sui Marcion, qui nihil condidit. Ceterum quale est ut plenitudinem creatoris aemulus et destructor eius in suo Christo habitare voluerit? Cui denique reconciliat omnia in semetipsum, pacem faciens per crucis suae sanguinem, nisi quem offenderant universa, adversus quem rebellaverant per transgressionem, cuius novissime fuerant? Conciliari enim extraneo possent, reconciliari vero non alii quam suo. [6] Ita et nos quondam alienatos et inimicos sensu in malis operibus creatori redigit in gratiam, cuius admiseramus offensam, colentes conditionem adversus creatorem. Sicubi autem et ecclesiam corpus Christi dicit esse, ut hic ait adimplere se reliqua pressurarum Christi in carne pro corpore eius, quod est ecclesia, non propterea et in totum mentionem corporis transferes a substantia carnis. Nam et supra reconciliari nos ait in corpore eius per mortem; utique in eo corpore, in quo mori potuit per carnem, mortuus est, non per ecclesiam, plane propter ecclesiam, corpus commutando pro corpore, carnale pro spiritali. [7] At cum monet cavendum a subtililoquentia et philosophia, ut inani seductione, quae sit secundum elementa mundi, non secundum caelum aut terram dicens, sed secundum litteras saeculares et secundum traditionem, scilicet hominum subtililoquorum et philosophorum, longum est quidem et alterius operis ostendere hac sententia omnes haereses damnari, quod omnes ex subtililoquentiae viribus et philosophiae regulis constant. Sed Marcion principalem suae fidei terminum de Epicuri schola agnoscat, dominum inferens hebetem, ne timeri dicat eum, collocans et cum deo creatore materiam de porticu Stoicorum, negans carnis resurrectionem, de qua proinde nulla philosophia consentit. [8] Cuius ingeniis tam longe abest veritas nostra, ut et iram dei excitare formidet, et omnia illum ex nihilo protulisse confidat, et carnem eandem restitutum repromittat, et Christum ex vulva virginis natum non erubescat, ridentibus philosophis et haeticis et ethnicis ipsis. Stulta enim mundi elegit deus, ut confundat sapientes, ille sine dubio qui ex respectu huius suae dispositionis perditurum se sapientiam sapientum praeminabatur. Hac simplicitate veritatis contraria subtililoquentiae et philosophiae nihil perversi possumus sapere. [9] Denique si nos deus cum Christo vivificat, donans delicta nobis, non possumus credere ab eo delicta donari in quem admissa non fuerint, ut retro ignotum. Age iam, cum dicit, Nemo vos iudicet in cibo et potu et in parte diei festi et neomeniae et sabbati, quae est umbra futurorum, corpus autem Christi, quid tibi videtur, Marcion? De lege iam non retractamus, nisi quod et hic quemadmodum exclusa sit edocet, dum scilicet de umbra transfertur in corpus, id est de figuris ad veritatem, quod est Christus. Ergo et umbra eius cuius et corpus, id est et lex eius <cuius> et Christus. Segrega alii deo legem, et alii deo Christum, si potes aliquam umbram ab eo corpore cuius umbra est separare. Manifeste legis est Christus, si corpus est umbrae. [10] Si autem et aliquos taxat qui ex visionibus angelicis dicebant cibis abstinendum (ne attigeris ne gustaveris), volentes in humilitate sensus incedere, non tenentes caput, non ideo legem et Moysen pulsant, quasi de angelica superstitione constituerit interdictionem quorundam edulium. [11] Moysen enim a deo accepisse legem constat. Denique hanc disciplinam, Secundum praecepta, inquit, et doctrinam hominum, deputavit in eos qui caput non tenerent, id est ipsum in quo omnia recensentur, in Christum ad initium revocata etiam indifferentia escarum. Cetera praeceptorum, ut eadem, satis sit iam alibi docuisse quam a creatore manarint, qui cum vetera praedicaret transitura, nova facturus universa, mandans etiam, Novate vobis novamen novum, iam tum docebat exponere veterem hominem et novum induere.

20. DE EPISTULA AD PHILIPPENSES. [1] Cum praedicationis enumerat varietatem, quod alii ex fiducia vinculorum eius audentius sermonem enuntiarent, alii per invidiam et contentionem, quidam vero et per sermonis existimationem, plerique ex dilectione, nonnulli ex aemulatione, iam aliqui et ex similitudine Christum praedicarent, erat utique vel hic locus taxandae ipsius praedicationis de diversitate sententiae, quae tantam efficeret etiam animorum varietatem. Sed causas solas animorum, non regulas sacramentorum, in diversitate proponens unum tamen Christum et unum eius deum quocunque consilio praedicatum confirmat, et ideo, Nihil mea, inquit, sive causatione sive veritate Christus annuntietur, quia unus annuntiabatur sive ex causatione sive ex veritate fidei. [2] Ad fidem enim praedicationis retulit mentionem veritatis, non ad regulae ipsius, quia una quidem erat regula, sed fides praedicantium quorundam vera, id est simplex, quorundam nimis docta. Quod cum ita sit, apparet eum Christum praedicatum qui semper annuntiabatur. Nam si alius longe ab apostolo induceretur, fecisset diversitatem novitas rei. Nec enim defuissent qui praedicationem evangelicam nihilominus in Christum creatoris interpretarentur, cum et hodie maior pars sit omnibus in locis sententiae nostrae quam haereticae. Quo nec hic apostolus de diversitatis denotatione et increpatione tacuisset. Ita cum diversitas ne taxatur quidem, novitas non probatur. [3] Plane de substantia Christi putant et hic Marcionitae suffragari apostolum sibi, quod phantasma carnis fuerit in Christo, cum dicit quod in effigie dei constitutus non rapinam existimavit parari deo, sed exhaust semetipsum accepta effigie servi, non veritate, et in similitudine hominis, non in homine, et figura inventus homo, non substantia, id est non carne; [4] quasi non et figura et similitudo et effigies substantiae quoque accedant. Bene

autem quod et alibi Christum imaginem dei invisibilis appellat. Numquid ergo et hic, qua in effigie eum dei collocat, aequè non erit deus Christus vere, si nec homo vere fuit in effigie hominis constitutus? Utrobique enim veritas necesse habebit excludi, si effigies et similitudo et figura phantasmati vindicabitur. Quodsi in effigie et in imagine, qua filius patris, vere deus, praeiudicatum est etiam in effigie et imagine hominis, qua filius hominis, vere hominem inventum. [5] Nam et inventum ratione posuit, id est certissime hominem. Quod enim invenitur, constat esse. Sic et deus inventus est per virtutem, sicut homo per carnem, quia nec morti subditum pronuntiasset non in substantia mortali constitutum. Plus est autem quod adiecit, Et mortem crucis. Non enim exaggeraret atrocitatem extollendo virtutem subiectionis, quam imaginariam phantasmate scisset, frustrato potius eam quam experto, nec virtute functo in passione sed lusu. [6] Quae autem retro lucri duxerat, quae et supra numerat, gloriam carnis, notam circumcisionis, generis Hebraei ex Hebraeo censum, titulum tribus Benjamin, pharisaeae candidae dignitatem, haec modo detrimento sibi deputat, non deum, sed stuporem, Iudaeorum. Haec ac si stercora existimat prae comparatione agnitionis Christi, non prae reiectione dei creatoris, habens iustitiam non suam iam quae ex lege, sed quae per ipsum, scilicet Christum, ex deo. Ergo, inquis, hac distinctione lex non ex deo erat Christi. Subtiliter satis. Accipe itaque subtilius. Cum enim dicit, Non quae ex lege, sed quae per ipsum, non dixisset Per ipsum de alio quam cuius fuit lex. [7] Noster, inquit, municipatus in caelis. Agnosco veterem ad Abraham promissionem creatoris: Et faciam semen tuum tanquam stellas in caelo. Ideo et stella a stella differt in gloria. Quodsi Christus adveniens de caelis transfigurabit corpus humilitatis nostrae conformale corpori gloriae suae, resurget ergo corpus hoc nostrum, quod humiliatur in passionibus, et in ipsa lege mortis in terram deiectum. Quomodo enim transfigurabitur, si nullum erit? Aut si de eis dictum qui in adventu dei deprehensi in carne demutari habebunt, quid facient qui primi resurgent? Non habebunt de quo transfigurentur? Atquin, Cum illis, dicit, simul rapiemur in nubibus obviam domino. Si cum illis sublati, utique cum illis et transfigurati.

numerum epistularum interpolare. [2] Memento, inspector, quod ea quae praetractata sunt retro de apostolo quoque probaverimus, et si qua in hoc opus dilata erant expunxerimus, ne aut hic supervacuam existimes iterationem qua confirmavimus spem pristinam, aut illic suspectam habeas dilationem qua eruimus tempore ista. Si totum opusculum inspexeris, nec hic redundantiam nec illic diffidentiam iudicabis.

De Anima (On the Soul)

Q. SEPTIMII FLORENTIS TERTVLLIANI CARTHAGINENSIS DE ANIMA LIBER. DE IMMORTALITATE ANIMAE. Si substantia animae, et an corporalis, et an effigiata, unum esse animam et spiritum, non separari animam et animum, an sit, ubi sit quod dicitur hegemonicon, de quinque sensibus corporalibus, quod philosophi et haeretici distinguunt inter sensualia et intellectualia. Intellectum semper animae inesse, De caeteris naturalibus animae, Vnde anima aduersus haereticos qui eam de coelis deferunt: Aduersus argumentum Platonis, quod discentias reminiscentias dicat: De contemptu animae aduersus eos qui post partum corpori eam inducunt: Aduersus Platonicum dogma, quod non ex mortuis fiant uiui: Ad Pythagorae et Empedoclis opiniones de metempsychosi et metensomatismo: Aduersus Simonis opinionem et Carpocratis haeticorum: De sexu animae et carnis, quod simul in utero formentur, in eum: De aetate carnis et animae: De cibis, quomodo ad animam pertinere uideantur: Nullam pene animam sine daemonio esse: Quomodo caro peccatrix dicatur: De bono et malo animae: De morte: De somno pertinente ad tractatum mortis: Et de anima Hermotimi: De Hermotimo: De somniis, quomodo ea patiatur anima, et unde eueniant: De ui mortis, et de Menandro haeretico: Nihil animae in corpore manere post mortem, ut uidetur quibusdam: De animae excessu, De receptu, De inferis, et an illuc omnes animae compellentur: An commorentur hic animae post mortem, uel ab inferis commeent, An aliquid interim animae patiantur apud inferos.

I. [1] De solo censu animae congressus Hermogeni, quatenus et istum ex materiae potius suggestu quam ex dei flatu constitisse praesumpsit, nunc ad reliquas conuersus quaestiones plurimum uidebor cum philosophis dimicaturus. [2] Etiam in carcere Socratis de animae statu uelitatum est, nescio iam hoc primum, an oportuno in tempore magistri, etsi nihil de loco interest. Quid enim liquido saperet anima tunc Socratis, iam sacro nauigio regresso, iam cicutis damnationis exhaustis, iam morte praesente utique consternata ad aliquem motum secundum naturam, aut exsternata, si non secundum naturam? Quamuis enim placida atque tranquilla, quam nec coniugis fletus statim uiduae nec liberorum conspectus exinde pupillorum lege pietatis inflexerat, uel in hoc tamen mota, ne moueretur, ipsa constantia concussa est aduersus inconstantiae concussionem. Quid autem aliud saperet uir quilibet iniuria damnatus praeter iniuriae solamen, nedum philosophus, gloriae animal, cui nec consolanda est iniuria, sed potius insultanda? [3] Denique post sententiam obuiam coniugi et muliebriter inclamanti: ‘iniuste damnatus es, Socrates!’ iam et de gratulatione responderat: ‘uolebas autem iuste?’ Quo nihil mirandum, si et in carcere inuiscatas Anyti et Meliti palmas gestiens infringere ipsa morte coram immortalitate uindicat animae necessaria praesumptione ad iniuriae frustrationem. [4] Adeo omnis illa tunc sapientia Socratis de industria uenerat consultae aequanimitatis, non de fiducia compertae ueritatis. Cui enim ueritas comperta sine deo? Cui deus cognitus sine Christo? Cui Christus exploratus sine spiritu sancto? Cui spiritus sanctus accommodatus sine fidei sacramento? Sane Socrates facilius diuerso spiritu agebatur, siquidem aiunt daemonium illi a puero adhaesisse, pessimum reuera paedagogum, etsi post deos et cum deis daemonia deputantur penes poetas et philosophos. [5] Nondum enim Christianae potestatis documenta processerant, quae uim istam perniciosissimam nec unquam bonam, atquin omnis erroris artificem, omnis ueritatis auocatricem sola traducit. Quodsi idcirco sapientissimus Socrates secundum Pythii quoque daemonis suffragium scilicet negotium nauantis socio suo, quanto dignior atque constantior Christianae sapientiae adsertio, cuius adflatui tota uis daemonum cedit? [6] Haec sapientia de schola caeli deos quidem saeculi negare liberior, quae nullum Aesculapio gallinaceum reddi iubens praeuaricetur, nec noua inferens daemonia, sed uetera depellens, nec adulescentiam uitians, sed omni bono pudoris informans, ideoque non unius urbis, sed uniuersi orbis iniquam sententiam sustinens pro nomine ueritatis tanto scilicet et perosioris quanto plenioris, ut et mortem non de poculo per habitum iocunditatis absorbeat, sed de patibulo et uiuicomburio per omne ingenium crudelitatis exhauriat, interea in isto tenebrosiore carcere saeculi inter suos Cebetas et suos Phaedonas, si quid de anima examinandum est, ad dei regulas diriget, certa nullum alium potiolem animae demonstratorem quam auctorem. A deo discat quod a deo habeat, aut nec ab alio, si nec a deo. Quis enim reuelabit quod deus textit? Vnde sciscitandum est? Vnde et ignorare tutissimum est. Praestat per deum nescire, quia non reuelauerit, quam per hominem scire, quia ipse praesumpserit.

II. [1] Plane non negabimus aliquando philosophos iuxta nostra sensisse; testimonium est etiam ueritatis euentus ipsius. Nonnunquam et in procella

confusis uestigiis caeli et freti aliqui portus offenditur prospero errore, nonnunquam et in tenebris aditus quidam et exitus deprehenduntur caeca felicitate, sed et natura pleraque suggeruntur quasi de publico sensu, quo animam deus dotare dignatus est. [2] Hunc nacta philosophia ad gloriam propriae artis inflauit prae studio (non mirum, si istud ita dixerim) eloqui quiduis struere atque destruere eruditi magisque dicendo persuadentis quam docendo. Formas rebus imponit, eas nunc peraequat, nunc priuat, de certis incerta praeiudicat, prouocat ad exempla, quasi comparanda sint omnia, omnia praescribit, proprietatibus etiam inter similia diuersis, nihil diuinae licentiae seruat, leges naturae opiniones suas fecit; ferrem, si naturalis ipsa, ut compos naturae de condicionis consortio probaretur. [3] Visa est quidem sibi et ex sacris, quas putant, litteris hausisse, quia plerosque auctores etiam deos existimauit antiquitas, nedum diuos, ut Mercurium Aegyptium, cui praecipue Plato adsueuit, ut Silenum Phrygem, cui a pastoribus perducto ingentes aures suas Midas tradidit, ut Hermotimum, cui Clazomenii mortuo templum contulerunt, ut Orpheum, ut Musaeum, ut Pherecydem Pythagorae magistrum. Quid autem, si philosophi etiam illa incursauerunt, quae penes nos apocryphorum confessione damnantur, certos nihil recipiendum quod non conspiret germanae et ipso iam aeuo pronatae prophetae paraturae, quando et pseudoprophetarum meminerimus et multo prius apostatarum spirituum, qui huiusmodi quoque ingeniorum calliditate omnem faciem saeculi instruxerint? [4] Postremo si etiam ad ipsos prophetas adisse credibile est indagatorem quemque sapientiae ex negotio curiositatis, tamen plus diuersitatis inuenias inter philosophos quam societatis, cum et in ipsa societate diuersitas eorum deprehendatur, siquidem uera quaeque et consonantia prophetis aut aliunde commendant aut aliorum subornant cum maxima iniuria ueritatis, quam efficiunt aut adiuuari falsis aut patrocinari. [5] Hoc itaque commiserit nos et philosophos in ista praesertim materia, quod interdum communes sententias propriis argumentationibus uestiant, contrariis alicubi regulae nostrae, interdum sententias proprias communibus argumentationibus muniant, consentaneis alicubi regulae illomm, ut prope exclusa sit ueritas a philosophia per ueneficia in illam sua; et ideo utroque titulo societatis aduersario ueritatis urgemur et communes sententias ab argumentationibus philosophorum liberare et communes argumentationes a sentiis eorum separare, reuocando quaestiones ad dei litteras, exceptis plane quae sine laqueo alicuius praeiudicii ad simplex testimonium licebit adsumere, quia et ex aemulis nonnunquam testimonium necessarium, si non aemulis prosit. [6] Nec ignoro, quanta sit silua materiae istius apud philosophos pro numero etiam ipsorum commentatorum, quot uarietates sententiarum, quot palaestrae opinionum, quot propagines quaestionum, quot implicationes expeditionum. Sed et medicinam inspexi, sororem, ut aiunt, philosophiae, sibi quoque hoc negotium uindicantem. Quidni? ad quam magis animae ratio pertinere uideatur per corporis curam. Vnde et plurimum sorori refragatur, quod animam quasi coram in domicilio suo tractando magis norit. Sed uiderit utriusque praestantiae ambitio. Habuit et philosophia libertatem ingenii et medicina necessitatem artificii ad extendendos de anima retractatus: late quaeruntur incerta, latius disputantur praesumpta. Quanta difficultas probandi, tanta operositas suadendi, ut merito Heraclitus ille tenebrosus uastiores caligines animaduertens apud examinatores animae taedio quaestionum pronuntiari terminos animae nequaquam inuenisse omnem uiam ingrediendo. [7] Christiano autem paucis ad scientiam huius rei opus est. Nam et certa semper in paucis, et amplius illi quaerere non licet quam quod inueniri licet; infinitas enim quaestiones apostolus prohibet. Porro non amplius inueniri licet quam quod a deo discitur; quod autem a deo discitur, totum est.

III. [1] Atque utinam nullas haereses oportuisset existere, ut probabiles quique emicarent. Nihil omnino cum philosophis super anima quoque experiremur, patriarchis, ut ita dixerim, haereticorum, siquidem et ab apostolo iam tunc philosophia concussio ueritatis prouidebatur; Athenis enim expertus linguatam ciuitatem cum omnes illic sapientiae atque facundiae caupones degustasset, inde concepit praemonitorium illud edictum. [2] Proinde enim et animae ratio <concussa est> per philosophatas doctrinas hominum miscentes aquas uino: alii immortalem negant animam, alii plus quam immortalem adfirmant, alii de substantia, alii de forma, alii de unaquaque dispositione disceptant; hi statum eius aliunde <de>ducunt, hi exitum aliorum abducunt, prout aut Platonis honor aut Zenonis uigor aut Aristotelis tenor aut Epicuri stupor aut Heracliti maeror aut Empedoclis furor persuaserunt. [3] Deliquit, opinor, diuina doctrina ex Iudaea potius quam ex Graecia oriens. Errauit et Christus piscatores citius quam sophistam ad praeconium emittens. Si qua igitur in hunc modum de nidoribus philosophiae candidum et purum aerem ueritatis infuscant, ea erunt Christianis enubilanda et percutientibus argumentationes originales, id est philosophicas, et opponentibus definitiones caelestes, id est dominicas, ut et illa quibus ethnici a philosophia capiuntur, destruantur, et haec quibus fideles ab haeresi concutiuntur, retundantur. [4] Vna iam congressione decisa aduersus Hermogenen, ut praefati sumus, quia animam ex dei flatu, non ex materia uindicamus, muniti et illic diuinae determinationis inobscurabili regula: et flauit, inquit, deus flatum uitae in faciem hominis, et factus est homo in animam uiuam, utique ex dei flatu, de isto nihil amplius reuoluendum; habet suum titulum et suum haereticum. Ceteris hinc exordium inducam.

IV. DE INNATA. [1] Post definitionem census quaestionem status patitur. Consequens enim est, ut ex dei flatu animam professi initium ei deputaremus. Hoc Plato excludit innatam et infectam animam uolens. Et natam autem docemus et factam ex initii constitutione. Nec statim erramus utrumque dicentes, quia scilicet aliud sit natum, aliud factum utpote <istud inanimalibus>, illud animalibus competens. Differentiae autem sua habendo loca et tempora habent aliquando et passiuitatis commercia. Capit itaque et facturam pro in esse poni, siquidem omne quod quoque modo accipit esse generatur. Nam et factor ipse parens facti potest dici; sic et Plato utitur. Igitur quantum ad fidem nostram factae nataeue animae, depulsa est philosophi opinio, auctoritate prophetiae quoque.

V. [1] Accerseri<n>t Eubulum aliquem et Critolaum et Xenocraten et isto in loco amicum Platonis Aristotelen. Fortassean extruentur magis ad auferendam animae corpulentiam, si non alios e contrario inspexerint, et quidem plures, corpus animae uindicantes. [2] Nec illos dico solos qui eam de manifestis corporalibus effingunt, ut Hipparchus et Heraclitus ex igni, ut Hippon et Thales ex aqua, ut Empedocles et Critias ex sanguine, ut Epicurus ex atomis (si et atomi corpulentias de coitu suo cogunt), ut Critolaus et Peripatetici eius ex quinta nescio qua substantia (si et illa corpus, quia corpora includit), sed etiam Stoicos allego, qui spiritum praedicantes animam paene nobiscum, qua proxima inter se flatus et spiritus, tamen corpus animam facile persuadebunt. [3] Denique Zeno consitum spiritum definiens animam hoc modo instruit. Quo, inquit, digresso animal emoritur, corpus est; consito autem spiritu digresso animal emoritur, ergo consitus spiritus corpus est; ergo corpus est anima. [4] Vult et Cleanthes non solum corporis lineamentis, sed et animae notis similitudinem parentibus in filiis respondere, de speculo scilicet morum et ingeniorum et adfectuum, corporis autem similitudinem et dissimilitudinem capere et animam, <animam> itaque corpus similitudini uel dissimilitudini obnoxium. [5] Item corporalium et incorporalium passiones inter se non communicare; porro et animam compati corpori, cui laeso ictibus uulneribus ulceribus condolescit, et corpus animae, cui afflictæ cura angore amore coaegrescit per detrimentum socii uigoris, cuius pudorem et pauorem rubore atque pallore testetur. Igitur anima corpus ex corporalium passionum communione. [6] Sed et Chrysippus manum ei porrigit constituens corporalia ab incorporalibus derelinqui omnino non posse, quia nec contingantur ab eis (unde et Lucretius: tangere enim et tangi nisi corpus nulla potest res), derelicto autem corpore ab anima affici morte. Igitur corpus anima, quæ nisi corporalis corpus non derelinquet.

VI. [1] Haec Platonici subtilitate potius quam ueritate conturbant. Omne, inquiunt, corpus aut animale sit necesse est aut inanimale. Et si quidem inanimale est, extrinsecus mouebitur, si uero animale, intrinsecus. Anima autem nec extrinsecus mouebitur, ut quæ non sit inanimalis, nec intrinsecus, ut quæ ipsa potius moueat corpus. Itaque non uideri eam corpus, quæ non corporalium forma ex aliqua regione moueatur. [2] Ad hoc nos mirabimur incongruentiam primo definitionis prouocantis ad ea quæ in animam non conueniunt. Non enim potest anima animale corpus dici aut inanimale, cum ipsa sit quæ aut faciat corpus animale, si adsit, aut inanimale, si absit ab illo. Itaque quod facit non potest esse ipsa, ut dicatur animale uel inanimale. Anima enim dicitur substantiæ suæ nomine. (3.) Quodsi non capit animale corpus dici aut inanimale, quod est anima, quomodo prouocabitur ad animalium et inanimalium corporum formam? [3] Dehinc si corporis est moueri extrinsecus ab aliquo, ostendimus autem supra moueri animam et ab alio, cum uaticinatur, cum furit, utique extrinsecus, cum ab alio, merito quod mouebitur extrinsecus ab alio secundum exempli propositionem corpus agnoscam. Enimuero si ab alio moueri corporis est, quanto magis mouere aliud? Anima autem mouet corpus, et conatus eius extrinsecus foris parent. Ab illa est enim impingi et pedes in incessum et manus in contactum et oculos in conspectum et linguam in effatum, uelut sigillario motu superficiem intus agitante. Vnde haec uis incorporalis animæ? Vnde uacuae rei solida propellere? [4] Sed quomodo diuisi uidentur in homine sensus corporales et intellectuales? Corporalium aiunt rerum qualitates, ut terræ, ut ignis, corporalibus sensibus renuntiari, ut tactui, ut uisui, incorporalium uero intellectualibus conueniri, ut benignitatis, ut malignitatis. Itaque incorporalem esse animam constat cuius qualitates non corporalibus, sed intellectualibus sensibus comprehendantur. [5] Plane, si non huius definitionis gradum exclusero. Ecce enim incorporalia ostendo corporalibus sensibus subici, sonum auditui, colorem conspectui, odorem odoratui, quorum exemplo etiam anima corpori accedit, ne dicas idcirco ea per corporales renuntiari sensus, quia corporalibus accedant. Igitur si constat incorporalia quoque a corporalibus comprehendendi, cur non et anima, quae corporalis, ab incorporalibus renuntietur? Certe definitio exclusa sit. [6] De insignioribus argumentationibus erit etiam illa, quod omne corpus corporalibus ali iudicant, animam uero, ut incorporalem, incorporalibus, sapientiae scilicet studiis. Sed nec hic gradus stabit etiam Sorano methodicae medicinae instructissimo auctore respondente animam corporalibus quoque ali, denique deficientem a cibo plerumque fulciri. Quidni? quo adempto in totum dilabitur ex corpore. Ita etiam ipse Soranus plenissime super anima commentatus quattuor uoluminibus et cum omnibus philosophorum sententiis expertus corporalem animae substantiam uindicat, etsi illam immortalitate fraudauit. Non enim omnium est credere quod Christianorum est. [7] Sicut ergo Soranus ipse rebus ostendit animam corporalibus ali, proinde et philosophus exhibeat illam incorporalibus pasci. Sed nemo unquam cunctanti de exitu animae mulsam aquam de eloquio Platonis infudit aut micas de minutiloquio Aristotelis infersit. Quid autem facient tot ac tantae animae rupicum et barbarorum, quibus alimenta sapientiae desunt, et tamen indoctae prudentia pollent, et sine academiis et porticibus Atticis et carceribus Socratis, denique ieiunantes a philosophia, nihilominus uiuunt? Non enim substantiae ipsi alimenta proficiunt studiorum, sed disciplinae, quia nec opimiolem animam efficiunt, sed ornatiorem. Bene autem quod et artes Stoici corporales affirmant. Adeo sic quoque anima corporalis, si et artibus ali creditur. [8] Sed enormis intentio philosophiae solet plerumque nec prospicere pro pedibus (sic Thales in puteum), solet et sententias suas non intellegendo ualetudinis corruptelam suspicari (sic Chrysippus ad elleborum). Tale aliquid, opinor, ei accidit, cum duo in unum corpora negauit, alienata a prospectu et recogitatu praegnantum, quae non singula cotidie corpora, sed et bina et terna in unius uteri ambitu perferunt. Inuenitur etiam in iure ciuili Graeca quaedam quinionem enixa, filiorum semel omnium mater, unici fetus parens multiplex, unici uteri puerpera numerosa, quae tot stipata corporibus, paene dixerim populo, sextum ipsa corpus fuit. [9] Vniuersa conditio testabitur corpora de corporibus processura iam illic esse unde procedunt. Secundum sit necesse est quod ex alio est. Nihil porro ex alio est, nisi, dum gignitur, duo sunt.

VII. [1] Quantum ad philosophos satis haec, quia quantum ad nostros ex abundanti; quibus corporalitas animae in ipso euangelio relucebit. Dolet apud inferos anima cuiusdam et punitur in flamma et cruciatur in lingua et de digito animae felicioris implorat solacium roris. [2] Imaginem existimas exitum illum pauperis laetantis et diuitis maerentis? Et quid illic Eleazari nomen, si non in ueritate res est? Sed et si imago credenda est, testimonium erit ueritatis. Si enim non haberet anima corpus, non caperet imago animae imaginem corporis, nec mentiretur de corporalibus membris scriptura, si non erant. [3] Quid est autem illud quod ad inferna transfertur post diuortium corporis, quod detinetur illic, quod in diem iudicii reseruatur, ad quod et Christus moriendo descendit (puto, ad animas patriarcharum), si nihil anima sub terris? Nihil enim, si non corpus; incorporalitas enim ab omni genere custodiae libera est, immunis et a poena et a fouella. Per quod enim punitur aut fouetur, hoc erit corpus; reddam de isto plenius et oportunius. [4] Igitur si quid tormenti siue solacii anima praecerpit in carcere seu deuersorio inferum, in igni uel in sinu Abrahae, probata erit corporalitas animae. Incorporalitas enim nihil patitur, non habens per quod pati possit; aut si habet, hoc erit corpus. In quantum enim omne corporale passibile est, in tantum quod passibile est corporale est.

VIII. [1] Abruptum alioquin et absurdum idcirco quid de corporalium eximere censu, quia ceteris corporalibus exemplis non adaequet. Et ubi proprietatum priuata discrimina, per quae magnificentia auctoris ex operum eorundem diuersitate signatur, ut sint tam discreta quam paria, tam amica quam et aemula? Siquidem et ipsi philosophi ex contrariis uniuersa constare condicunt secundum amicitiam et inimicitiam Empedoclis. [2] Sic igitur etsi corporalia incorporalibus obiacent, ipsa quoque ita inter se differunt, ut differentia species eorum ampliet, non genus mutet, ut sint corporalia, sic multa in dei gloria, dum uaria, sic uaria, dum diuersa, sic diuersa, dum his alii qualitatum sensus, alii illis, dum his alia alimenta, alia illis, dum haec inuisibilia, illa uisibilia, dum haec graua, illa leuia. [3] Aiunt enim et idcirco animam incorporalem renuntiandam, quia digressa ea grauiora efficiantur corpora defunctorum, cum leuiora esse deberent, unius corporis pondere exempto, si anima corpus. Quid enim, inquit Soranus, si mare negent corpus, quia extra mare immobilis et grauis naus efficitur? Quanto ergo ualidius corpus animae, quod tanti postea ponderis corpus leuissima mobilitate circumfert! [4] Ceterum etsi inuisibilis anima, et pro condicione corporis sui et proprietate substantiae et pro natura etiam eorum quibus inuisibilis esse sortita est. Solem noctuae nesciunt oculis; aquilae ita sustinent, ut natorum suorum generositatem de pupillarum audacia iudicent; alioquin non educabunt, ut degenerem, quem solis radius auerterit. [5] Est adeo alteri quid inuisibile, alteri non, quod non ideo incorporale sit, quia non ex aequo uis ualeat. Sol enim corpus, siquidem ignis; sed quod aquila confiteatur, neget noctua, non tamen praeiudicans aquilae. Tantundem et animae corpus inuisibile carni, si forte, spiritui uero uisibile est. Sic Iohannes in spiritu dei factus animas martyrum conspicit.

IX. DE EFFIGIE. [1] Cum animae corpus adserimus propriae qualitatis et sui generis, iam haec condicio proprietatis de ceteris accidentibus corpulentiae praeiudicabit aut haec adesse, quam corpus ostendimus, sed et ipsa sui generis pro corporis proprietate, aut etsi non adsint, hoc esse proprietatis, non adesse corpori animae quae corporibus ceteris adsint. Et tamen non inconstanter profitebimur sollemniora quaeque et omnimodo debita corpulentiae adesse animae quoque, ut habitum, ut terminum, ut illud trifariam distantium, longitudinem dico et latitudinem et sublimitatem, quibus metantur corpora philosophi. [2] Quid nunc, quod et effigiem animae damus, Platone nolente, quasi periclitetur de animae immortalitate? Omne enim effigiatum compositum et structile affirmat; dissolubile autem omne compositicium et structile; sed animam immortalem, igitur indissolubilem, qua immortalem, et ineffigiatam, qua indissolubilem, ceterum compositiciam et structilem, si effigiatam, tamquam alio eam modo effigians intellectualibus formis, pulchram iustitia et disciplinis philosophiae, deformem uero contrariis artibus. [3] Sed nos corporales quoque illi inscribimus lineas, non tantum ex fiducia corporalitatis per aestimationem, uerum et ex constantia gratiae per reuelationem. Nam quia spiritalia charismata agnoscimus, post Iohannem quoque prophetiam meruimus consequi. [4] Est hodie soror apud nos reuelationum charismata sortita, quas in ecclesia inter dominica sollemnia per ecstasin in spiritu patitur; conuersatur cum angelis, aliquando etiam cum domino, et uidet et audit sacramenta et quorundam corda dinoscit et medicinas desiderantibus sumit. Iam uero prout scripturae leguntur aut psalmi canuntur aut allocutiones proferuntur aut petitiones delegantur, ita inde materiae uisionibus subministrantur. Forte nescio quid de anima disserueramus, cum ea soror in spiritu esset. Post transacta sollemnia dimissa plebe, quo usu solet nobis renuntiare quae uiderit (nam et diligentissime digeruntur, ut etiam probentur), ‘inter cetera’, inquit, ‘ostensa est mihi anima corporaliter, et spiritus uidebatur, sed non inanis et uacuae qualitatis, immo quae etiam teneri repromitteret, tenera et lucida et aerii coloris, et forma per omnia humana. Hoc uisio’. Et deus testis et apostolus charismatum in ecclesia futurorum idoneus sponsor; tunc et si res ipsa de singulis persuaserit, credas. [5] Si enim corpus anima, sine dubio inter illa quae supra sumus professi, proinde et coloris proprietas omni corpori aderit. Quem igitur alium animae aestimabis colorem quam aerium ac lucidum? Non, ut aer sit ipsa substantia eius, etsi hoc Aenesidemo uisum est et Anaximeni, puto secundum quosdam et Heraclito, nec ut lumen, etsi hoc placuit Pontico Heraclidi [6] — nam et cerauniis gemmis non ideo substantia ignita est, quod coruscent rutilato rubore, nec berullis ideo aquosa materia est, quod fluctuent colato nitore (quanta enim et alia color sociat, natura dissociat) — , sed quoniam omne tenue atque perlucidum aeris aemulum est, hoc erit anima, qua flatus et spiritus tradux, siquidem prae ipsa tenuitatis subtilitate de fide corporalitatis periclitatur. [7] Sic et effigiem de sensu iam tuo concipe non aliam animae humanae deputandam praeter humanam, et quidem eius corporis quod unaquaeque circumtulit. Hoc nos sapere interim primordii contemplatio inducat. Recogita enim, cum deus flasset in faciem homini flatum uitae, et factus esset homo in animam uiuam, totus utique, per faciem statim flatum illum in interiora transmissum et per uniuersa corporis spatia diffusum simulque diuina aspiratione densatum omni intus linea expressum esse, quam densatus impleuerat, et uelut in forma gelasse. [8] Inde igitur et corpulentia animae ex densatione solidata est et effigies ex impressione formata. Hic erit homo interior, alius exterior, dupliciter unus, habens et ille oculos et aures suas, quibus populus dominum audire et uidere debuerat, habens et ceteros artus, per quos et in cogitationibus utitur et in somniis fungitur. Sic et diuiti apud inferos lingua est, et pauperi digitus, et sinus Abrahae. Per has lineas et animae martyrum sub altari intelleguntur. A primordio enim in Adam concreta et configurata corpori anima, ut totius substantiae, ita et condicionis istius semen effecit.

X. DE SIMPLICITATE SVBSTANTIAE QVOD ET SPIRITVS IPSA SIT.

[1] Pertinet ad statum fidei simplicem animam determinare secundum Platonem, id est uniformem, dumtaxat substantiae nomine. Viderint artes et disciplinae, uiderint et effigies. [2] Quidam enim uolunt aliam illi substantiam naturalem inesse spiritum, quasi aliud sit uiuere, quod uenit ab anima, aliud spirare, quod fiat a spiritu. Nam et animalibus non omnibus utrumque adesse; pleraque enim uiuere solummodo, non etiam spirare, eo quod non habeant organa spiritus, pulmones et arterias. [3] Quale est autem in examinatione humanae animae culicis atque formicae argumenta respicere, quando et uitalia pro cuiusque generis dispositione omnibus propria animalibus temperauerit artifex deus, ut nulla inde coniectura captanda sit? Nam neque homo, si pulmonibus et arteriis structus est, idcirco aliunde spirabit, aliunde uiuet, neque formica, si membris huiusmodi caret, idcirco negabitur spirare, quasi solummodo uiuens. [4] Cui uero tantum patuit in dei opera, ut alicui haec deesse praesumpserit? Herophilus ille medicus aut Iulianus, qui sexcentos exsecuit, ut naturam scrutaretur, qui hominem odiit, ut nosset, nescio an omnia interna eius liquido explorarit, ipsa morte mutante quae uixerant, et morte non simplici, sed ipsa inter artificia exsectionis errante. [5] Philosophi pro certo renuntiauerunt culicibus et formicis et tineis deesse pulmones et arterias. Dic mihi, inspector curiosissime, oculos habent ad uidendum? Atquin et pergunt quo uolunt, et uitant et appetunt quae uidendo sciunt: designa oculos, denota pupulas. Sed et exedunt tineae: demonstra mandibulas, deprome genuinos. Sed et personant culices, ne in tenebris quidem aurium caeci: tubam pariter et lanceam oris illius ostende. Quoduis animal, unius licet puncti, aliquo alatur necesse est: exhibe pabuli transmittendi decoquendi defaecandique membra. (6.) Quid ergo dicemus? Si per haec uiuitur, erunt haec in omnibus utique quae uiuent, etsi non uidentur, etsi non apprehenduntur pro mediocritate. Hoc magis credas, si deum recogites tantum artificem in modicis quantum et in maximis. [6] Si uero non putas capere tam minuta corpuscula dei ingenium, sic quoque magnificentiam eius agnoscas, quod modicis animalibus sine necessariis membris nihilominus uiuere instruxerit, saluo etiam uisu sine oculis et esu sine denticulis et digestu sine alueis, quemadmodum et incedunt quaedam sine pedibus manante impetu, quod angues, et insurgente conatu, quod uermes, et spumante reptatu, quod

limaces. [7] Ita et spirari cur non putes sine pulmonum follibus et sine fistulis arteriarum, ut pro magno amplectaris argumento idcirco animae humanae spiritum accedere, quia sint quae spiritu careant, et idcirco ea spiritu carere, quia de flaturalibus artibus structa non sint? Viuere sine spiritu existimas aliquid, spirare sine pulmonibus non putas? Quid est, oro te, spirare? Flatum, opinor, ex semetipso agere. Quid est uiuere? Flatum, opinor, ex semetipso non agere. Hoc enim respondere debebo, si non idem est spirare quod uiuere. Sed mortui erit non agere flatum: ergo uiuentis est agere flatum. Sed et spirantis est agere flatum: ergo et spirare uiuentis est. Vtrumque si sine anima decurrere potuisset, non fuisset animae spirare, sed solummodo umere. At enim uiuere spirare est et spirare uiuere est. Ergo totum hoc et spirare et uiuere eius est cuius et uiuere, id est animae. [8] Denique si separas spiritum natura, separa et opera: agant in discreto aliquid ambo, seorsum anima, seorsum spiritus; anima sine spiritu uiuat, spiritus sine anima spiret; alterum relinquat corpora, alterum remaneat, mors et uita conueniant. Si enim duo sunt anima et spiritus, diuidi possunt, ut diuisione eorum alterius discedentis, alterius inmanentis, mortis et uitae concursus eueniat. Sed nullo modo eueniet; ergo duo non erunt, quae diuidi non possunt, quae diuidi possent, si fuissent. [9] ‘Sed licet et duo esse concreta’. Sed non erunt concreta, si aliud est uiuere, aliud spirare: distinguunt substantias opera. Et quanto nunc firmitus est, ut unum credas, cum distantiam non das, ut ipsa sit anima spiritus, dum ipsius est spirare cuius et uiuere? Quid enim, si diem aliud haberi uelis, aliud lucem, quae accedat diei, cum dies ipsa lux sit? Plane erunt et alia genera lucis, ut ex ignium ministerio. Erunt enim et aliae spiritus species, ut ex deo, ut ex diabolo. Ita cum de anima et spiritu agitur, ipsa erit anima spiritus, sicut ipsa dies lux. Ipsum est enim quid, per quod est quid.

XI. [1] Sed ut animam spiritum dicam, praesentis quaestionis ratio compellit, quia spirare alii substantiae adscribitur. Hoc dum animae uindicamus, quam uniformem et simplicem agnoscimus, spiritum necesse est certa condicione dicamus, non status nomine, sed actus, nec substantiae titulo, sed operae, quia spirat, non quia spiritus proprie est. Nam et flare spirare est. Ita et animam, quam flatum ex proprietate defendimus, spiritum nunc ex necessitate pronuntiamus, ceterum aduersus Hermogenen, qui eam ex materia, non ex dei flatu contendit, flatum proprie tuemur. [2] Ille enim aduersus ipsius scripturae fidem flatum in spiritum uertit, ut, dum incredibile

est spiritum dei in delictum et mox in iudicium deuenire, ex materia potius anima credatur quam ex dei spiritu. Idcirco nos et illic flatum eam defendimus, non spiritum, secundum scripturam et secundum spiritus distinctionem, et hic spiritum ingratis pronuntiamus secundum spirandi et flandi communionem. Illic de substantia quaestio est; spirare enim substantiae actus est. [3] Nec diutius de isto, nisi propter haereticos, qui nescio quod spiritale semen infulciunt animae de Sophiae matris occulta liberalitate conlatum ignorante factore, cum scriptura factoris magis dei sui conscia nihil amplius promulgauerit quam deum flantem in faciem hominis flatum uitae et hominem factum in animam uiuam, per quam exinde et uiuat et spiret, satis declarata differentia spiritus et animae in sequentibus instrumentis, ipso deo pronuntiante: spiritus ex me prodiit, et flatum omnem ego feci. Et anima enim flatus factus ex spiritu. Et rursus: qui dedit flatum populo super terram et spiritum calcantibus eam. Prirno enim anima, id est flatus, populo in terra incedenti, id est in carne carnaliter agentis, postea spiritus eis qui terram calcant, id est opera carnis subigunt, quia et apostolus non primum quod spiritale, sed quod animale, postea spiritale. [4] Nam etsi Adam statim prophetauit magnum illud sacramentum in Christum et ecclesiam: hoc nunc os ex ossibus meis et caro ex carne mea; propter hoc relinquet homo patrem et matrem et agglutinabit se mulieri suae, et erunt duo in unam carnem, accidentiam spiritus passus est: cecidit enim ecstasis super illum, sancti spiritus uis operatrix prophetiae. [5] Nam et malus spiritus accidens res est. Denique Saulem tam dei spiritus postea uertit in alium uirum, id est in propheten, cum dictum est: quid hoc filio Cis? an et Saul in prophetis? quam et mali spiritus postea uertit in alium uirum, in apostatam scilicet. Iudam quoque aliquamdiu cum electis deputatum usque ad loculorum officium, etsi iam fraudatorem, traditorem tamen nondum, postea diabolus intrauit. [6] Igitur si neque dei neque diaboli spiritus ex natiuitate conseritur animae, solam eam constat ante euentum spiritus utriusque; si solam, et simplicem et uniformem substantiae nomine, atque ita non aliunde spirantem quam ex substantiae suae sorte.

XII. DE ANIMO. [1] Proinde et animum siue mens est nou-j apud Graecos, non aliud quid intellegimus quam suggestum animae ingenitum et insitum et natiuitus proprium, quo agit, quo sapit, quem secum habens ex semetipsa secum moueat in semetipsa, atque ita moueri uideatur ab illo tamquam substantia alio, ut uolunt qui etiam uniuersitatis motatorem animum decernunt, illum deum Socratis, illum Valentini Vnigenitum ex patre BYΘΩI et matre ΣΙΓΗΙ. [2] Quam Anaxagorae turbata sententia est! Initium enim omnium commentatus animum et uniuersitatis oscillum de illius axe suspendens purumque eum affirmans et simplicem et incommiscibilem, hoc uel maxime titulo segregat ab animae commixtione et tamen eundem alibi animam edicit. [3] Hoc etiam Aristoteles denotauit, nescio an sua paratior implere quam aliena inanire. Denique et ipse definitionem animi cum differret, interim alterum animi genus pronuntiauit, illum diuinum, quem rursus et impassibilem subostendens abstulit et ipse eum a consortio animae. Cum enim animam passibilem constet eorum quae sortita est pati, aut per animum et cum animo patietur, si concreta est animo, non poterit animus impassibilis induci, aut si non per animum nec cum animo patietur anima, non erit concreta illi, cum quo nihil et cui nihil patitur. Porro si nihil per illum et cum illo anima patietur, iam nec sentiet nec sapiet nec mouebitur per illum, ut uolunt. [4] Nam et sensus passiones facit Aristoteles. Quidni? Et sentire enim pati est, quia pati sentire est. Proinde et sapere sentire est et moueri sentire est. Ita totum pati est. Videmus autem nihil istorum animam experiri, ut non et animo deputetur, quia per illum et cum illo transigatur. [5] Iam ergo et commiscibilis est animus aduersus Anaxagoran et passibilis aduersus Aristotelen. Ceterum si discretio admittitur, ut substantia duae res sint animus atque anima, alterius erit et passio et sensus et sapor omnis et actus et motus, alterius autem otium et quies et stupor et nulla iam causa, et aut animus uacabit aut anima. [6] Quodsi constat ambobus haec omnia reputari, ergo unum erunt utrumque et Democritus obtinebit differentiam tollens et quaeretur, quomodo unum utrumque, ex duarum substantiarum confusione, an ex unius dispositione. Nos autem animum ita dicimus animae concretum, non ut substantia alium, sed ut substantiae officium.

XIII. [1] Ad hoc dispicere superest, principalitas ubi sit, id est, quid cui praeest, ut cuius principalitas apparuerit, illa sit substantiae massa, id autem, cui massa substantiae praeerit, in officium naturale substantiae deputetur. Enimuero quis non animae dabit summam omnem, cuius nomine totius hominis mentio titulata est? [2] Quantas animas pasco, ait diues, non ait animos, et animas saluas optat gubernator, non animos, et rusticus in opere et in proelio miles animam se, non animum, ponere affirmat. Cuius nominatiora pericula aut uota sunt, animi an animae? Quid autem agere dicuntur moribundi, animum an animam? Ipsi postremo philosophi ipsique medici, quamuis de animo quoque disputaturi, faciem tamen operis frontemque materiae de anima unusquisque proscripsit. [3] Vt autem et a deo discas, animam semper deus alloquitur, animam compellat atque aduocat, ut animum sibi aduertat. Illam saluam uenit facere Christus, illam perdere in gehennam comminatur, illam pluris fieri uetat, illam et ipse bonus pastor pro pecudibus suis ponit. Habes animae principalitatem, habes in illa et substantiae unionem, cuius intellegas instrumentum esse animum, non patrocinium.

XIV. [1] Singularis alioquin et simplex et de suo tota est, non magis structilis aliunde quam diuisibilis ex se, quia nec dissolubilis. Si enim structilis et dissolubilis, iam non immortalis. Itaque quia non mortalis, neque dissolubilis neque diuisibilis. Nam et diuidi dissolui est et dissolui mori est. [2] Diuiditur autem in partes, nunc in duas a Platone, nunc in tres a Zenone, nunc in quinque ab Aristotele et in sex a Panaetio, in septem a Sorano, etiam in octo penes Chrysippum, etiam in nouem penes Apollophanen, sed et in duodecim apud quosdam Stoicorum, et in duas amplius apud Posidonium, qui a duobus exorsus titulis, principali, quod aiunt h(gemoniko&n, et a rationali, quod aiunt logiko&n, in decem septem exinde prosequit; ita aliae ex aliis species diuidunt animam. [3] Huiusmodi autem non tam partes animae habebuntur quam uires et efficaciae et operae, sicut de quibusdam et Aristoteles iudicauit. Non enim membra sunt substantiae animalis, sed ingenia, ut motorium, ut actorium, ut cogitatorium, et si qua in hunc modum distinguunt, ut et ipsi illi quinque notissimi sensus, uisus auditus gustus tactus odoratus. Quibus omnibus etsi certa singulis domicilia in corpore determinauerunt, non idcirco haec quoque distributio animae ad animae sectiones pertinebit, quando ne ipsum quidem corpus ita diuidatur in membra, ut isti uolunt animam. [4] Atquin ex multitudine membrorum unum corpus efficitur, ut concretio sit potius ipsa diuisio. Specta portentosissimam Archimedis munificentiam, organum hydraulicum dico, tot membra, tot partes, tot compagines, tot itinera uocum, tot compendia sonorum, tot commercia modorum, tot acies tibiarum, et una moles erunt omnia. Sic et spiritus, qui illic de tormento aquae anhelat, non ideo separabitur in partes, quia per partes administratur, substantia quidem solidus, opera uero diuisus. [5] Non longe hoc exemplum est a Stratone et Aenesidemo et Heraclito; nam et ipsi unitatem animae tuentur, quae in totum corpus diffusa et ubique ipsa, uelut flatus in calamo per cauernas, ita per sensualia uariis modis emicet, non tam concisa quam dispensata. Haec omnia quibus titulis nuncupentur et quibus ex se diuisionibus detineantur et quibus in corpore metationibus sequestrentur, medici potius cum philosophis considerabunt; nobis pauca conuenient.

XV. DE HEGEMONICO. [1] Inprimis an sit aliqui summus in anima gradus uitalis et sapientialis, quod h(gemoniko&n appellant, id est principale, quia si negetur, totus animae status periclitatur. Denique qui negant principale, ipsam prius animam nihil censuerunt. [2] Messenius aliqui Dicaearchus, ex medicis autem Andreas et Asclepiades ita abstulerunt principale, dum in animo ipso uolunt esse sensus, quorum uindicatur principale. Asclepiades etiam illa argumentatione uectatur, quod pleraque animalia ademptis eis partibus corporis, in quibus plurimum existimatur principale consistere, et insuper uiuant aliquatenus et sapiant nihilominus, ut muscae et uespae et lucustae, si capita decideris, ut caprae et testudines et anguillae, si corda detraxeris; itaque principale non esse, quo, si fuisset, amisso cum suis sedibus uigor animae non perseueraret. [3] Sed plures et philosophi aduersus Dicaearchum, Plato Strato Epicurus Democritus Empedocles Socrates Aristoteles, et medici aduersus Andream et Asclepiaden, Herophilus Erasistratus Diocles Hippocrates et ipse Soranus, iamque omnibus plures Christiani, qui apud deum de utroque deducimur, et esse principale in anima et certo in corporis recessu consecratum. [4] Si enim scrutatorem et dispectorem cordis deum legimus, si etiam prophetae eius occulta cordis traducendo probatur, si deus ipse recogitatus cordis in populo praeuenit: quid cogitatis in cordibus uestris nequam? si et Dauid: cor mundum conde in me deus, et Paulus corde ait credi in iustitiam, et Iohannes corde ait suo unumquemque reprehendi, si postremo qui uiderit feminam ad concupiscendum, iam adulterauit in corde, simul utrumque dilucet, et esse principale in anima, quod intentio diuina conueniat, id est uim sapientialem atque uitalem (quod enim sapit, uiuidum est), et in eo thesauro corporis haberi, ad quem deus respicit, [5] ut neque extrinsecus agitari putes principale istud secundum Heraclitum, neque per totum corpus uentilari secundum Moschionem, neque in capite concludi secundum Platonem, neque in uertice potius praesidere secundum Xenocraten, neque in cerebro cubare secundum Hippocraten, sed nec circa cerebri fundamentum, ut Herophilus, nec in membranulis, ut Strato et Erasistratus, nec in superciliorum meditullio, ut Strato Physicus, nec in tota lorica pectoris, ut Epicurus, sed quod et Aegyptii renuntiauerunt et qui diuinarum commentatores uidebantur, ut et ille uersus Orphei uel Empedoclis: namque homini sanguis circumcordialis est sensus. [6] Etiam Protagoras, etiam Apollodorus et Chrysippus haec sapiunt, ut uel ab istis retusus Asclepiades capras suas quaerat sine corde balantes et muscas suas abigat sine capite uolitantes, et omnes iam sciant se potius sine corde et cerebro uiuere, qui dispositionem animae humanae de condicione bestiarum praeiudicarint.

XVI. [1] Est et illud ad fidem pertinens, quod Plato bifariam partitur animam, per rationale et inrationale. Cui definitioni et nos quidem applaudimus, sed non ut naturae deputetur utrumque. Naturale enim rationale credendum est, quod animae a primordio sit ingenitum, a rationali uidelicet auctore. Quid enim non rationale, quod deus iussu quoque ediderit, nedum id quod proprie afflatu suo emiseric? Inrationale autem posterius intellegendum est, ut quod acciderit ex serpentis instinctu, ipsum illud transgressionis admissum, atque exinde inoleuerit et coadoleuerit in anima ad instar iam naturalitatis, quia statim in naturae primordio accidit. [2] Ceterum cum idem Plato <naturale> solum rationale dicat, ut in anima dei ipsius, si nos etiam inrationale naturae adscribimus, quam a deo anima nostra sortita est, aequae inrationale de deo erit, utpote naturale, quia naturae deus auctor est. Sed enim a diabolo immissio delicti, inrationale autem omne delictum; igitur a diabolo inrationale, a quo et delictum, extraneum a deo, a quo est inrationale alienum. Proinde delicti diuersitas horum ex distantia auctorum. [3] Proinde cum Plato soli deo segregans rationale duo genera subdiuidit ex inrationali, indignatium, quod appellant gumiko&n, et concupiscentium, quod uocant eOpikumhtiko&n, ut illud quidem commune sit nobis et leonibus, istud uero cum muscis, rationale porro cum deo, uideo et de hoc mihi esse retractandum propter ea quae in Christo deprehenduntur. [4] Ecce enim tota haec trinitas et in domino: et rationale, quo docet, quo disserit, quo salutis uias sternit, et indignatium, quo inuehitur in scribas et Pharisaeos, et concupiscentium, quo pascha cum discipulis suis edere concupiscit. [5] Igitur apud nos non semper ex inrationali censenda sunt indignatium et concupiscentium, quae certi sumus in domino rationaliter decucurrisse. Indignabitur deus rationaliter, quibus scilicet debet, et concupiscet deus rationaliter, quae digna sunt ipso. Nam et malo indignabitur et bono concupiscet salutem. [6] Dat et apostolus nobis concupiscentiam: si quis episcopatum concupiscit, bonum opus concupiscit; et bonum opus dicens rationalem concupiscentiam ostendit. Concedit et indignationem. Quidni, quam et ipse suscepit? Vtinam et praecedantur, inquit, qui uos subuertunt. Rationalis et indignatio quae ex affectu disciplinae est. [7] At cum dicit: fuimus aliquando natura filii irae, irrationale indignatuum suggillat, quod non sit ex ea natura quae a deo est, sed ex illa quam diabolus induxit, dominus et ipse dictus sui ordinis: non potestis duobus dominis seruire, pater et ipse cognominatus: uos ex diabolo patre estis, ne timeas et illi proprietatem naturae alterius adscribere, posterioris et adulterae, quem legis auenarum superseminatorem et frumentariae segetis nocturnum interpolatorem.

XVII. DE QVINQVE SENSIBVS. [1] Contingit nos illorum etiam quinque sensuum quaestio, quos in primis litteris discimus, quoniam et hinc aliquid haereticis procuratur. Visus est et auditus et odoratus et gustus et tactus. [2] Horum fidem Academici durius damnant, secundum quosdam et Heraclitus et Diocles et Empedocles, certe Plato in Timaeo irrationalem pronuntians sensualitatem et opinioni coimplicitam. Itaque mendaciam uisui obicitur, quod remos in aqua inflexos uel infractos adseuerat aduersus conscientiam integritatis, quod turrem quadrangulatam de longinquo rotundam persuadeat, quod aequalissimam porticum angustiores in ultimo infamet, quod caelum tanta sublimitate suspensum mari iungat. [3] Perinde auditus fallaciae reus, ut cum caeleste murmur putamus et plaustrum est, uel tonitru meditante pro certo de plastro credimus sonitum. Sic et odoratus et gustus arguuntur, siquidem eadem unguenta eademque uina posteriore quoque usu depretiantur. Sic et tactus reprehenditur, siquidem eadem pauimenta manibus asperiora, pedibus leuiores creduntur, et in lauacris idem calidae lacus feruentissimus primo, dehinc temperatissimus renuntiatur. [4] Adeo, inquiunt, sic quoque fallimur sensibus, dum sententias uertimus. Moderantius Stoici non omnem sensum, nec semper, de mendacio onerant. Epicurei constantius parem omnibus atque perpetuam defendunt ueritatem, sed alia uia. Non enim sensum mentiri, sed opinionem. Sensum enim pati, non opinari; animam enim opinari. Absciderunt et opinionem a sensu et sensum ab anima. [5] Et unde opinio, si non a sensu? Denique nisi uisus rotundam senserit turrem, nulla opinio rotunditatis. Et unde sensus, si non ab anima? Denique carens anima corpus carebit et sensu. Ita et sensus ex anima est et opinio ex sensu et anima totum. Ceterum optime proponetur esse utique aliquid quod efficiat aliter quid a sensibus renuntiari quam sit in rebus. Porro si potest id renuntiari quod non sit in rebus, cur non perinde possit per id renuntiari quod non sit in sensibus, sed in eis rationibus quae interueniant suo nomine? [6] Atque adeo licebit eas recognosci. Nam ut in aqua remus inflexus uel infractus appareat, aqua in causa est; denique extra aquam integer uisui remus. Teneritas autem substantiae illius, qua speculum ex lumine efficitur, prout icta seu mota est, ita et imaginem uibrans euertit lineam recti. Item ut turris habitus eludat, interualli condicio compellit in aperto; aequalitas enim circumfusi aeris pari luce uestiens angtilos obliterat lineas. Sic et uniformitas porticus acuitur in fine, dum acies in concluso stipata illic tenuatur, quo et extenditur. Sic et caelum mari unitur, ubi uisio absumitur, quae quamdiu uiget, tamdiu diuidit. [7] Auditum uero quid aliud decipiet quam sonorum similitudo? Et si postea minus spirat unguentum et minus sapit uinum et minus lacus feruet, in omnibus ferme prima uis tota est. Ceterum de scabro ac leui merito manus ac pedes tenera scilicet et callosa membra dissentiunt. [8] Igitur hoc modo nulla sensuum frustratio causa carebit. Quodsi causae fallunt sensus et per sensus opiniones, iam nec in sensibus constituenda fallacia est, qui causas sequuntur, nec in opinionibus, quae a sensibus diriguntur sequentibus causas. [9] Qui insaniunt, alios in aliis uident, ut Orestes matrem in sorore et Ajax Vlixen in armento, ut Athamas et Agaue in filiis bestias. Oculisne hoc mendacium exprobrabis, an furiis? Qui redundantia fellis auruginant, amara sunt omnia. Num ergo gustui praeuaricationem exprobrabis, an uoletudini? Omnes itaque sensus euertuntur uel circumueniuntur ad tempus, ut proprietate fallaciae careant. [10] Immo iam ne ipsis quidem causis adscribendum est fallaciae elogium. Si enim ratione haec accidunt, ratio fallacia perhiberi non meretur. Quod sic fieri oportet, mendacium non est. Itaque si et ipsae causae infamia liberantur, quanto magis sensus, quibus iam et causae libere praeunt, cum hinc potissimum et ueritas et fides et integritas sensibus uindicanda sit, quod non aliter renuntient quam quod illa ratio mandauit, quae efficiat aliter quid a sensibus renuntiari quam sit in rebus! [11] Quid agis, Academia procacissima? Totum uitae statum euertis, omnem naturae ordinem turbas, ipsius dei prouidentiam excaecas, qui cunctis operibus suis intellegendis incolendis dispensandis fruendisque fallaces et mendaces dominos praefecerit sensus. An non istis uniuersa conditio subministratur? An non per istos secunda quoque mundo instructio accessit, tot artes, tot ingenia, tot studia negotia officia commercia remedia consilia solacia uictus cultus ornatus, quae omnia totum uitae saporem condierunt, dum per hos sensus solus omnium homo animal rationale dinoscitur intellegentiae et scientiae capax, et ipsius Academiae? [12] Sed enim Plato, ne quod testimonium sensibus signet, propterea et in Phaedro ex Socratis persona negat se cognoscere posse semetipsum, ut monet Delphica inscriptio, et in Theaeteto adimit sibi scire atque sentire et in Phaedro post mortem differt sententiam ueritatis, postumam scilicet; et tamen nondum mortuus philosophabatur. [13] Non licet, non licet nobis in dubium sensus istos deuocare, ne et in Christo de fide eorum deliberetur, ne forte dicatur quod falso satanan prospectarit de caelo praecipitatum aut falso uocem patris audierit de ipso testificatam aut deceptus sit, cum Petri socrum tetigit, aut alium postea unguenti senserit spiritum, quod in sepulturam suam acceptauit, alium postea uini saporem, quod in sanguinis sui memoriam consecrauit. [14] Sic enim et Marcion phantasma eum maluit credere, totius corporis in illo dedignatus ueritatem. Atquin ne in apostolis quidem eius ludificata natura est; fidelis fuit et uisus et auditus in monte, fidelis et gustus uini illius, licet aquae ante, in nuptiis Galilaeae, fidelis et tactus exinde creduli Thomae. Recita Iohannis testationem: quod uidimus, inquit, quod audiuius, oculis nostris uidimus, et manus nostrae contrectauerunt de sermone uitae. Falsa utique testatio, si oculorum et aurium et manuum sensus natura mentitur.

XVIII. DE INTELLECTUALIBVS. [1] Conuertor ad intellectualium partem, quemadmodum illam Plato a corporalibus separatam haereticis commendauerit agnitionem ante mortem consecutus. Ait enim in Phaedone: 'Quid tum erga ipsam prudentiae possessionem? Vtrumne impedimentum erit corpus, an non, si quis illud socium assumpserit in quaestionem? Tale quid dico: habetne ueritatem aliquam uisio et auditio hominibus? An non etiam poetae haec nobis semper obmussant, quod neque audiamus certum neque uideamus?' Meminerat scilicet et Epicharmi Comici: animus cernit, animus audit, reliqua surda et caeca sunt. [2] Itaque rursus illum ergo ait supersapere qui mente maxime sapiat, neque uisionem proponens neque ullum eiusmodi sensum attrahens animo, sed ipsa mente sincera utens in recogitando ad capiendum sincerum quodque rerum, si egressus potissimum ab oculis et auribus et, quod dicendum sit, a toto corpore ut turbante et non permittente animae possidere ueritatem atque prudentiam, quando communicat. [3]

Videmus igitur aduersus sensus corporales aliam portendi paraturam ut multo idoniorum, uires scilicet animae, intellectum operantes eius ueritatis, cuius res non sint coram nec subiaceant corporalibus sensibus, sed absint longe a communi conscientia in arcano et in superioribus et apud ipsum deum. Vult enim Plato esse quasdam substantias inuisibiles incorporeales supermundiales, diuinas et aeternas, quas appellat ideas, id est formas, exempla et causas naturalium istorum manifestorum et subiacentium corporalibus sensibus, et illas quidem esse ueritates, haec autem imagines earum. [4] Relucentne iam haeretica semina Gnosticorum et Valentinianorum? Hinc enim arripiunt differentiam corporalium sensuum et intellectualium uirium, quam etiam parabola decem uirginum adtemperant, ut quinque stultae sensus corporales figurauerint, stultos uidelicet, quia deceptui faciles, sapientes autem intellectualium uirium notam expresserint, sapientium scilicet, quia contingentium ueritatem illam arcanam et supernam et apud pleroma constitutam, haeticarum idearum sacramenta; hoc enim sunt et aones et genealogiae illorum. [5] Itaque et sensum diuidunt et intellectualibus quidem a spiritali suo semine, sensualibus uero ab animali, quia spiritalia nullo modo capiat; et illius quidem esse inuisibilia, huius uero uisibilia et humilia et temporalia, quae sensu conueniantur in imaginibus constituta. Ob haec ergo praestruximus neque animum aliud quid esse quam animae suggestum et structum, neque spiritum extraneum quid quam quod et ipsa per flatum, ceterum accessioni deputandum quod aut deus postea aut diabolus adspiraret. [6] Et nunc ad differentiam sensualium et intellectualium non aliud admittimus quam rerum diuersitates, corporalium et spiritalium, uisibilium et inuisibilium, publicatarum et arcanarum, quod illae sensui, istae intellectui attribuantur, apud animam tamen et istis et illis obsequio deputatis, quae perinde per corpus corporalia sentiat, quemadmodum per animum incorporealia intellegat, saluo eo, ut etiam sentiat, dum intellegit. [7] Non enim et sentire intellegere est et intellegere sentire est? Aut quid erit sensus, nisi eius rei quae sentitur intellectus? Quid erit intellectus, nisi eius rei quae intellegitur sensus? Vnde ista tormenta cruciandae simplicitatis et suspendendae ueritatis? Quis mihi exhibebit sensum non intellegentem quod sentit aut intellectum non sentientem quod intellegit, ut probet alterum sine altero posse? [8] Si corporalia quidem sentiuntur, incorporealia uero intelleguntur, rerum genera diuersa sunt, non domicilia sensus et intellectus, id est, non anima et animus. Denique a quo sentiuntur corporalia? Si ab animo, ergo iam et sensibilis est animus, non tantum intellectualis, nam dum intellegit, sentit, quia si non sentit, nec intellegit; si uero ab anima corporalia sentiuntur, iam ergo et intellectualis est uis animae, non tantum sensibilis, nam dum sentit, intellegit, quia si non intellegit, nec sentit. Proinde a quo intelleguntur incorporalia? Si ab animo, ubi erit anima? Si ab anima, ubi erit animus? Quae enim distant, abesse inuicem debent, cum suis muneribus operantur. [9] Putabis quidem abesse animum ab anima, si quando, nam ita effici, ut nesciamus uidisse quid uel audisse, quia alibi fuerit animus. Adeo contendam immo ipsam animam nec uidisse nec audisse, quia alibi fuerit cum sua ui, id est animo. Nam et cum dementit homo, anima dementit non peregrinante, sed conpatiente tunc animo — ceterum animae principaliter casus est. [10] Hoc unde firmatur? Quod anima digressa nec animus in homine inueniatur; ita illam ubique sequitur, a qua nec in fine subremanet. Cum uero sequitur et addicitur, perinde intellectus animae addicitur quam sequitur animus, cui addicitur intellectus. Sit nunc et potior sensu intellectus et potior cognitor sacramentorum, dummodo et ipse propria uis animae, quod et sensus. Nihil mea interest, nisi cum idcirco praefertur sensui intellectus, ut ex hoc quoque separatio habeatur quo potior affirmatur. Tunc mihi post differentiam etiam praelatio retundenda est peruentura quoque usque ad potioris dei persuasionem. [11] Sed de deo suo quoque campo experiemur cum haereticis. Nunc de anima titulus et de intellectu non insidiosae praeferendo locus. Nam etsi potiora sunt quae intellectu attinguntur ut spiritalia quam quae sensu ut corporalia, rerum erit praelatio, sublimiorum scilicet aduersus humiliores, non intellectus aduersus sensum. Quomodo enim praeferatur sensui intellectus, a quo informatur ad cognitionem ueritatum? [12] Si enim ueritates per imagines apprehenduntur, id est inuisibilia per uisibilia noscuntur, quia et apostolus nobis scribit: inuisibilia enim eius a conditione mundi de factamentis intellecta uisuntur, et Plato haereticis: facies occultorum ea quae apparent, et: necesse est omnino hunc mundum imaginem quandam esse alterius alicuius, ecquid tibi uidetur intellectus duce uti sensu et auctore et principali fundamento nec sine illo ueritates posse contingi? Quomodo ergo potior erit eo per quem est, quo eget, cui debet totum quod attingit? [13] Ita utrumque concluditur, neque praefendum sensui intellectum (per quod enim quid constat, inferius ipso est) neque separandum a sensu (per quod enim quid est,

XIX. INTELLECTVM SEMPER ANIMAE INESSE. [1] Sed ne illi quidem praetereundi qui uel modico temporis uiduant animam intellectu. Proinde enim uiam sternunt postea inducendi eius, sicut et animi, a quo scilicet proueniat intellectus. [2] Volunt infantiam sola anima contineri, qua tantummodo vivat, non ut pariter sapiat, quia nec omnia sapiant quae umant. Denique arbores uiuere nec tamen sapere secundum Aristotelen et si quis alius substantiam animalem in unmersa communicat, quae apud nos in homine priuata res est, non modo ut dei opus, quod et cetera, sed ut dei flatus, quod haec sola, quam dicimus cum omni instructu suo nasci. [3] Et si ad arbores prouocamur, amplexemur exemplum, siquidem et illis necdum arbusculis, sed stipitibus adhuc et surculis etiamnunc, simul de scrobibus oriuntur, inest propria uis animae. Verum pro temporis ratione remoratur coalescens et coadulescens robori suo, donec aetas adimpleat habitum, quo natura fungatur. Aut unde mox illis et frutices inoculantur et folia formantur et germina inflantur et flosculi inornantur et succi condiuntur, si non in ipsis omnis paratura generis quiescit et partibus promota grandescit? [4] Inde igitur et sapiunt unde uiuunt, tam uiuendi quam sapiendi proprietate, et quidem ab infantia et ipsae sua. Video enim et uitem adhuc teneram et inpuberem intellegentem tamen iam opera sua et uolentem alicui adhaerere, cui innixa et innexa proficiat. Denique non expectata rustica disciplina, sine arundine, sine ceruo, si quid attigerit, ultro amabit, et quidem uirosius amplexabitur de suo ingenio quam de tuo arbitrio. Properat esse secura. [5] Video et hederas, quantum uelis premas, statim ad superna conari et nullo praeuente suspendi, quod malint parietibus inuehi textili silua quam humi teri uoluntaria iniuria. Contra quibus de aedificio male est, ut crescendo recedunt, ut refugiunt? Sentias ramos aliorum destinatos, et animationem arboris de diuortio parietis intellegas. Contenta est paruitate quam ex primordio prouidentissimi fructicis edidit, timens etiam ruinam. [6] Has ego sapientias et scientias arborum cur non contendam? Viuant ut philosophi uolunt, sapiant ut philosophi nolunt, intellegat et infantia ligni, quo magis hominis, cuius anima uelut surculus quidam ex matrice Adam in propaginem deducta et genitalibus feminae foueis commendata cum omni sua paratura pullulauit tam intellectu quam et sensu. [7] Mentior, si non statim infans, ut uitam uagitu salutauit, hoc ipsum se testatur sensisse atque intellexisse quod natus est, omnes simul ibidem dedicans sensus, et luce uisum et sono auditum et umore gustum et aere odoratum et terra tactum. Ita prima illa uox de primis sensuum motibus et de primis intellectuum pulsibus cogitur. [8] Plus est quod de prospectu lacrimabilis uitae quidam augurem incommodorum uocem illam flebilem interpretantur, quod etiam praesciens habenda sit ab ingressu natiuitatis, nedum intellegens. Exinde et matrem spiritu probat et nutricem spiritu examinat et gerulam spiritu agnoscit, fugiens extranea ubera et recusans ignota cubilia, neminem appetens nisi ex usu. [9] Vnde illi iudicium nouitatis et moris, si non sapit? Vnde illi et offendi et demulceri, si non intellegit? Mirum satis, ut infantia naturaliter animosa sit non habens animum et naturaliter affectiosa sit non habens intellectum. At enim Christus ex ore lactantium et paruulorum experiendo laudem nec pueritiam nec infantiam hebetes pronuntiauit, quarum altera cum suffragio occurrens testimonium ei potuit offerre, altera pro ipso trucidata utique uim sensit.

XX. DE NATVRALIBVS. [1] Et hic itaque concludimus omnia naturalia animae ut substantia eius ipsi inesse et cum ipsa procedere atque proficere, ex quo ipsa censetur. Sicut et Seneca saepe noster: insita sunt nobis omnium artium et aetatum semina, magisterque ex occulto deus producit ingenia, ex seminibus scilicet insitis et occultis per infantiam, quae sunt et intellectus. Ex his enim producuntur ingenia. [2] Porro et frugum seminibus una generis cuiusque forma est, processus tamen uarii: alia integro statu euadunt, alia etiam meliora respondent, alia degenerant pro condicione caeli et soli, pro ratione operis et curae, pro temporum euentu, pro licentia casuum; ita et animam licebit semine uniformem, fetu multiformem. Nam et hic etiam de locis interest. [3] Thebis hebetes et brutos nasci relatum est, Athenis sapiendi dicendique acutissimos, ubi penes Colyttum pueri mense citius eloquuntur praecoca lingua, siquidem et Plato in Timaeo Mineruam affirmat, cum urbem illam moliretur, nihil aliud quam regionis naturam prospexisse talia ingenia pollicitam; unde et ipse in Legibus Megillo et Cliniae praecipit condendae ciuitati locum procurare. Sed Empedocles causam argutae indolis et obtusae in sanguinis qualitate constituit, perfectum ac profectum de doctrina disciplinaque deducit. Tamen uulgata iam res est gentilium proprietatum. Comici Phrygas timidos inludunt, Sallustius uanos Mauros et feroces Dalmatus pulsatur, mendaces Cretas etiam apostolus inurit. [4] Fortassean et de corpore et uoletudine aliquid accedat. Opimitas sapientiam impedit, exilitas expedit, paralysis mentem prodigit, pthisis seruat. Quanto magis de accidentibus habebuntur quae citra corpulentiam et ualentiam uel acuunt uel obtundunt! Acuunt doctrinae disciplinae artes et experientiae negotia studia; obtundunt inscitiae ignauiae desidiaelibidines inexperientiae otia uitia, super haec, si et aliquae praesunt potestates. [5] Enimuero praesunt, secundum nos quidem deus dominus et diabolus aemulus, secundum communem autem opinionem prouidentia et fatum et necessitas et fortuna et arbitrii libertas. Nam haec et philosophi distinguunt, et nos secundum fidem disserenda suo iam uouimus titulo. [6] Apparet quanta sint quae unam animae naturam uarie collocarint, ut uulgo naturae deputentur, quando non species sint, sed sortes naturae et substantiae unius, illius scilicet quam deus in Adam contulit et matricem omnium fecit; atque adeo sortes erunt, non species substantiae unius, id est uarietas ista moralis, quanta nunc est, tanta non fuerit in ipso principe generis Adam. Debuerant enim fuisse haec omnia in illo ut in fonte naturae atque inde cum tota uarietate manasse, si uarietas naturae fuisset.

XXI. [1] Quodsi uniformis natura animae ab initio in Adam ante tot ingenia, ergo non multiformis, quia uniformis, per tot ingenia, nec triformis, ut adhuc trinitas Valentiniana caedatur, quae nec ipsa in Adam recognoscitur. [2] Quid enim spiritale in illo? Si quia prophetauit magnum illud sacramentum in Christum et ecclesiam: hoc os ex ossibus meis et caro ex carne mea uocabitur mulier; propterea relinquet homo patrem et matrem et agglutinabitur mulieri suae et erunt duo in carnem unam, hoc postea obuenit, cum in illum deus amentiam immisit, spiritalem uim, qua constat prophetia. [3] Si et malum eo in apparuit transgressionis admissum, nec hoc naturale deputandum est, quod instinctu serpentis operatus est, tam non naturale quam nec materiale, quia et materiae fidem iam exclusimus. Quodsi nec spiritale nec quod dicitur materiale proprium in illo fuit (etsi ex materia fuisset mali semen), superest, ut solum in illo et unicum fuerit naturale quod censetur animale, quod statu simplex et uniforme defendimus. [4] De hoc plane relinquitur quaeri, an demutabile debeat credi, quod naturale dicatur. Idem enim conuertibilem negant naturam, ut trinitatem suam in singulis proprietatibus figant, quia arbor bona malos non ferat fructus nec mala bonos, et nemo de spinis metat ficus et de tribulis uuas. Ergo si ita est, neque de lapidibus filios Abrahae suscitare poterit deus nec genimina uiperarum facere paenitentiae fructus et errauit apostolus scribens: eratis et uos aliquando tenebrae et: fuimus et nos aliquando natura filii irae et: in his uos quoque fuistis, sed abluti estis. [5] Sed nunquam discordabunt sententiae sanctae. Non dabit enim arbor mala bonos fructus, si non inseratur, et bona malos dabit, si non colatur, et lapides filii Abrahae fient, si in fidem Abrahae formentur, et genimina uiperarum fructum paenitentiae facient, si uenena malignitatis expuerint. [6] Haec erit uis diuinæ gratiae, potentior utique natura, habens in nobis subiacentem sibi liberam arbitrii potestatem quod au)tecou&sion dicitur, quae cum sit et ipsa naturalis atque mutabilis, quoquo uertitur, natura conuertitur. Inesse autem nobis to au)tecou&sion naturaliter iam et Marcioni ostendimus et Hermogeni. [7] Quid nunc, si et naturae condicio sic erit definienda, ut duplex determinetur, natorum et innatorum, factorum et infectorum? Atque ita quod natum factumque constiterit, eius natura capiet demutationem: et renasci enim poterit et refici. Innatum autem et infectum immobile stabit. Quod cum soli deo conpetat, ut soli innato et infecto et idcirco immortalis et inconuertibili, absolutum est ceterorum omnium natorum atque factorum conuertibilem et demutabilem esse naturam, ut, etsi trinitas animae adscribenda esset. ex mutatione accidentiae, non ex institutione naturae deputaretur.

XXII. [1] Cetera animae naturalia iam a nobis audiit Hermogenes cum ipsorum defensione et probatione, per quae dei potius quam materiae propinqua cognoscitur. Hic solummodo nominabuntur, ne praeterita uideantur. Dedimus enim illi et libertatem arbitrii, ut supra scripsimus, et dominationem rerum et diuinationem interdum, seposita quae per dei gratiam obuenit ex prophetia. Itaque iam ab isto dispositionis retractatu recedam, ut ordinem eius expungam. [2] Definimus animam dei flatu natam, immortalem, corporalem, effigiatam, substantia simplicem, de suo sapientem, uarie procedentem, liberam arbitrii, accidentis obnoxiam, per ingenia mutabilem, rationalem, dominatricem, diuinatricem, ex una redundantem. Sequitur nunc ut quomodo ex una redundet consideremus, id est, unde et quando et qua ratione sumatur.

XXIII. VNDE ANIMA. [1] Quidam de caelis deuenisse se credunt tanta persuasionem quanta et illuc indubitate regressuros repromittunt, ut Saturninus Menandri Simoniani discipulus induxit, hominem affirmans ab angelis factum primoque opus futile et inualidum et instabile in terra uermis instar palpitasse, quod consistendi uires deessent, dehinc ex misericordia summae potestatis, ad cuius effigiem, nec tamen plene perspectam, temere structus fuisset, scintillulam uitae consecutum, quae illud exsuscitarit et erexerit et constantius animarit et post decessum uitae ad matricem relatura sit. [2] Sed et Carpocrates tantundem sibi de superioribus uindicat, ut discipuli eius animas suas iam et Christo, nedum apostolis, et peraequent et cum uolunt praeferant, quas perinde de sublimi uirtute conceperint despectrices mundipotentium principatuum. [3] Apelles sollicitas refert animas terrenis escis de supercaelestibus sedibus ab igneo angelo, deo Israelis et nostro, qui exinde illis peccatricem circumfinxit carnem. [4] Examen Valentini semen Sophiae infulcit animae, per quod historias atque milesias aeonum suorum ex imaginibus uisibilium recognoscunt. [5] Doleo bona fide Platonem omnium haereticorum condimentarium factum. Illius est enim et in Phaedone, quod animae hinc euntes sint illuc, et inde huc ; item in Timaeo, quod genimina dei delegata sibi mortalium genitura accepto initio animae immortalis mortale ei circumgelauerint corpus; tum, quod mundus hic imago sit alterius alicuius. [6] Quae omnia ut fidei commendet, et animam retro in superioribus cum deo egisse in commercio idearum et inde huc transuenire et hic quae retro norit de exemplaribus recensere, nouum elaborauit argumentum, maq̃h&seij a)namnh&seij, id est discentias reminiscentias esse; uenientes enim inde huc animas obliuisci eorum in quibus prius fuerint, dehinc ex his uisibilibus edoctas recordari. Cum igitur huiusmodi argumento illa insinuentur a Platone quae haeretici mutantur, satis haeticos reprecutiam, si argumentum Platonis elidam.

XXIV. ADVERSVS PLATONIS maq̃h&seij kai\ a)namnh&seij. [1] Primo quidem obliuionis capacem animam non cedam, quia tantam illi concessit diuinitatem, ut deo adaequetur. Innatam eam facit, quod et solum armare potuissem ad testimonium plenae diuinitatis; adicit immortalem, incorruptibilem, incorporalem, quia hoc et deum credidit, inuisibilem, ineffigibilem, uniformem, principalem, rationalem, intellectualem. Quid amplius proscriberet animam, si eam deum nuncuparet? [2] Nos autem, qui nihil deo adpendimus, hoc ipso animam longe infra deum expendimus, quod natam eam agnoscimus ac per hoc dilutioris diuinitatis et exilioris felicitatis, ut flatum, non ut spiritum; et si immortalem, ut hoc sit diuinitatis, tamen passibilem, ut hoc sit natiuitatis, ideoque et a primordio exorbitationis capacem et inde etiam obliuionis affinem. Satis de isto cum Hermogene. [3] Ceterum quae, ut haberi merito possit ex peraequatione omnium proprietatum deus, nulli passioni subiacebit, ita nec obliuioni, cum tanta sit iniuria obliuio

quanta est gloria eius cuius iniuria est, memoria scilicet, quam et ipse Plato sensuum et intellectuum salutem et Cicero thesaurum omnium studiorum praedicauit. Nec hoc iam in dubium deducetur, an tam diuina anima memoriam potuerit amittere, sed an quam amiserit recuperare denuo possit. Quae enim non debuit obliuisci, si oblita sit, nescio an ualeat recordari. Ita utrumque meae animae, non Platonicae congruet. [4] Secundo gradu opponam: natura compotem animam facis idearum illarum, an non? ‘Immo natura’, inquis. Nemo ergo concedet naturalem scientiam naturalium excidere; artium excidet, studiorum; excidet doctrinarum, disciplinarum; excidet fortasse et ingeniorum et affectuum, quae naturae uidentur, non tamen sunt, quia, ut praemisimus, et pro locis et pro institutionibus et pro corpulentis ac uoletudinibus et pro potestatibus dominatricibus et pro libertatibus arbitrii ex accidentibus constant. [5] Naturalium uero scientia ne in bestiis quidem deficit. Plane obliuiscetur feritatis leo mansuetudinis eruditione praeuentus et cum toto suggestu iubarum delictum fiet Berenices alicuius reginae lingua genas eius emaculans. Mores bestiam relinquent, scientia naturalium permanebit. Non obliuiscetur idem naturalium pabulorum, naturalium remediorum, naturalium terrorum; et si de piscibus et si de placentis regina ei obtulerit, carnem desiderabit, et si languenti theriacam composuerit, simiam leo requirit, et si nullum illi uenabulum obfirmabit, gallum tamen formidabit. [6] Perinde et homini omnium forsitan obliuiosissimo inoblitterata perseuerabit sola scientia naturalium, ut sola scilicet naturalis, memor semper manducandi in esurie et bibendi in siti, et oculis uidendum et auribus audiendum et naribus odorandum et ore gustandum et manu contrectandum. Hi sunt certe sensus, quos philosophia depretiat intellectualium praelatione. [7] Igitur si naturalis scientia sensualium permanet, quomodo intellectualium, quae potior habetur, interciderit? Vnde nunc ipsa uis obliuionis antecedentis recordationem? ‘Ex multitudine’, ait, ‘temporis’. Satis improspecte! Quantitas enim temporis non pertinebit ad eam rem quae innata dicatur ac per hoc potissimum aeterna credatur. Quod enim aeternum est, eo quia et innatum est, neque initium neque finem temporis admittendo nullum modum temporis patitur; cui temporis modus nullus est, nec ulla demutatione temporis subest nec ea de multitudine temporis uis est. [8] Si tempus in causa est obliuionis, cur ex quo anima corpori inducitur, memoria delabatur, quasi exinde tempus anima sustineat, quae sine dubio prior corpore non fuit utique sine tempore? Ingressa uero corpus statimne obliuiscitur, an aliquanto post? Si statim, et quae erit temporis nondum subputandi multitudo? [Infantia scilicet.] Si aliquanto post, ergo illo in spatio ante tempora obliuionis memor adhuc aget anima. Et quale est, ut postea obliuiscatur et rursus postea recordetur? Quoque autem tempore illam obliuio inruerit, quantus hic etiam habebitur modus temporis? Tota, opinor, uitae decursio satis non erit ad euertendam memoriam tanti ante corpus aevi. [9] Sed rursus Plato causam demutat in corpus, quasi et hoc fide dignum, ut nata substantia innatae uim extinguat. Magnae autem ac multae differentiae corporum pro gentilitate, pro magnitudine, pro habitudine, pro aetate, pro ualetudine. Num ergo et obliuionum differentiae aestimabuntur? Sed uniformis obliuio est; ergo non erit corporalitas multiformis in causa exitus uniformis. [10] Multa item documenta teste ipso Platone diuinationem animae probauerunt, quae proposuimus iam Hermogeni. Sed nec quisquam hominum non et ipse aliquando praesagam animam suam sentit, aut ominis aut periculi aut gaudii augurem. Si diuinationi non obstreperet corpus, nec memoriae, opinor, officiet. In eodem certe corpore et obliuiscuntur animae et recordantur. Si qua corporis ratio incutit obliuionem, quomodo contrariam eius admittet recordationem (quia et ipsa post obliuionem recordatio memoria recidiua est)? Quod primae memoriae aduersatur, cur non et secundae refragatur? [11] Postremo, qui magis reminiscerentur quam pueruli, ut recentiores animae, ut nondum immersae domesticis ac publicis curis, ut ipsis solis debitae studiis, quorum discentiae reminiscentiae fiunt? Immo cur non ex aequo omnes recordamur, cum ex aequo omnes obliuiscamur? Sed tantummodo philosophi; ne hi quidem omnes. Plato scilicet solus in tanta gentium silua, in tanto sapientium prato, idearum et oblitus et recordatus est. [12] Igitur et si nullo modo consistit argumentatio ista praecipua, totum illud pariter euersum est, cui accommodata est, ut animae et innatae et in caelestibus conuersatae et consciae diuinorum illic et inde delatae et hic recordatae crederentur, ad occasiones plane haereticis subministrandas.

XXV. ANIMAM ET CARNEM SIMVL CONCIPI. [1] Iam nunc regrediar ad causam huius excessus, uti reddam, quomodo animae ex una redundant, quando et ubi et qua ratione sumantur; de qua specie nihil refert, a philosopho an ab haeretico an a uulgo quaestio occurrat. [2] Nulla interest professoribus ueritatis de aduersariis eius, maxime tam audacibus quam sunt primo isti, qui praesumunt non in utero concipi animam nec cum carnis figulatione compingi

atque produci, sed et effuso iam partu nondum uiuo infanti extrinsecus inprimi; ceteram semen ex concubitu muliebribus locis sequestratum motuque naturali uegetatum compingescere in solam substantiam carnis; eam editam et de uteri fornace fumantem et calore solutam, ut ferrum ignitum et ibidem frigidae immersum, ita aeris rigore percussam et uim animalem rapere et uocalem sonum reddere. Hoc Stoici cum Aenesidemo et ipse interdum Plato, cum dicit perinde animam extraneam alias et extorrem uteri prima adspiratione nascentis infantis adduci, sicut expiratione nouissima educi. Videbimus an ex sententia finxerit. Ne ex medicis quidem defuit Hicesius, et naturae et artis suae praeuaricator. [3] Pudit, opinor, illos id statuere quod feminae agnoscerent. Et quanto ruborator exitus a feminis reuinci quam probari! In ista namque specie nemo tam idoneus magister arbiter testis quam sexus ipsius. Respondete, matres, uos quae praegnantes, uos quae puerperae, steriles et masculi taceant, uestrae naturae ueritas quaeritur, uestrae passionis fides conuenitur, an aliquam in fetu sentiatis uiuacitatem alienam de uestro, de quo palpitent ilia, micent latera, tota uentris ambitio pulsetur, ubique ponderis regio mutetur; an hi motus gaudia uestra sint et certa securitas, quod ita infantem et uiuere confidatis et ludere; an si desierit iniquies eius, illi prius pertimescatis; an et audiat iam in uobis, cum ad nouum sonum excutitur; an et ciborum uanitates illi desideretis, illi etiam fastidiatis; an et ualetudinibus inuicem communicetis, ille quidem usque et contusionibus uestris, quibus et ipse intus per eadem membra signatur, rapiens sibi iniurias matris. [4] Si liuor ac rubor sanguinis passio est, sine anima non erit sanguis; si ualetudo omnis accessio est, sine anima non erit ualetudo; si alimonia inedia crementa decrementa pauor motus tractatio est animae, his qui fungitur uiuet. Denique desinit uiuere qui desinit fungi. Denique et mortui eduntur; quomodo, nisi et uiui? Qui autem et mortui, nisi qui prius uiui? Atquin et in ipso adhuc utero infans trucidatur necessaria crudelitate, cum in exitu obliquatus denegat partum, matricida, ni moriturus. [5] Itaque est inter arma medicorum et cum organo, ex quo prius patescere secreta coguntur tortili temperamento, cum anulocultro, quo intus membra caeduntur anxio arbitrio, cum hebetate unco, quo totum facinus extrahitur uiolento puerperio. Est etiam aeneum spiculum, quo iugulatio ipsa dirigitur caeco latrocinio; e0mbruosfa&kthn appellant de infanticidii officio, utique uiuentis infantis peremptorium. Hoc et Hippocrates habuit et Asclepiades et Erasistratus et maiorum quoque prosector Herophilus et mitior ipse Soranus, certi animal esse conceptum atque ita miserti infelicissimae huiusmodi infantiae, ut prius occidatur, ne uiua lanietur. [6] De qua sceleris necessitate nec dubitabat, credo, Hicesius, iam natis animam superducens ex aeris frigidi pulsu, quia et ipsum uocabulum animae penes Graecos de refrigeratione respondens. Num ergo barbarae Romanaeque gentes aliter animantur, quia animam aliud quid quam yuxh&n cognominauerunt? Quantae uero nationes sub feruentissimo axe censentur colorem quoque excoctae? Vnde illis animam, quibus aeris rigor nullus? Taceo cubiculares aestus et omnem illic caloris paraturam enitentibus necessariam, quas afflari uel maxime periculum est. In ipsis paene balneis fetus elabitur, et statim uagitus auditur. [7] Ceterum si aeris rigor thesaurus est animae, extra Germanias et Scythias et Alpes et Argaeos nemo debuit nasci. Atquin et populi frequentiores apud orientalem et meridiam temperaturam et ingenia expeditiora, omnibus Sarmatis etiam mente torpentibus. Et animi enim de rigoribus scitiores prouenirent, si animae de frigusculis euenirent; cum substantia enim et uis. [8] His ita praestructis possumus illos quoque recogitare qui exsecto matris utero uiui aerem hauserunt, Liberi aliqui et Scipiones. Quodsi qui, ut Plato, perinde non putat duas animas in unum conuenire, sicut nec corpora, ego illi non modo duas animas in unum congestas ostendissem, sicut et corpora, in fetibus, uerum et alia multa cum anima conserta, daemonis scilicet <substantiam>, nec unius, ut in Socrate ipso, uerum et septenarii spiritus, ut in Magdalena, et legionarii numeri, ut in Geraseno, quo facilius anima cum anima conseretur ex societate substantiae quam spiritus nequam ex diuersitate naturae. [9] At idem in sexto Legum monens cauere, ne uitatio seminis ex aliqua uilitate concubitus labem corpori et animae supparet, nescio de pristina magis an de ista sententia sibi exciderit. Ostendit enim animam de semine induci, quod curari monet, non de prima aspiratione nascentis. Vnde, oro, similitudine animae quoque parentibus de ingeniis respondemus secundum Cleanthis testimonium, si non et ex animae semine educimur? Cur autem et ueteres astrologi genituram hominis ab initio conceptus dirigebant, si non exinde et anima est, ad quam aeque pertinet, si quid est, flatus?

XXVI. [1] Sed omnis inaequalitas sententiae humanae usque ad dei terminos. In nostras iam lineas gradum colligam, ut quod philosophis medicisque respondi, Christiano probem. De tuo, frater, fundamento fidem aedifica; aspice uiuentes uteros sanctissimarum feminarum nec modo

spirantes iam illic infantes, uerum etiam prophetantes. [2] Ecce uiscera Rebeckae inquietantur et longe adhuc partus et aeris nullus impulsus. Ecce duplex fetus in locis matris tumultuatur et nusquam adhuc populi duo. Portentosa forsitan petulantia infantiae ante certantis quam umentis, ante animosae quam animatae, si tantummodo matrem subsultando turbasset. At cum partus aperitus et numerus inspicitur et auguratus recognoscitur, puto, iam non animae solummodo probantur infantum, sed et pugnae. [3] Detinebatur qui praeuenerat nasci a praeuento necdum plenius edito, tantum manu nato. Et si ipse animam de prima aspiratione potabat Platonico more aut de aeris rigore carpebat Stoica forma, quid ille qui expectabatur, qui adhuc intus detinebatur et foris iam detinebat? Nondum, opinor, spirans plantam fratris inuaserat, etiamnunc calens matre se priorem prodisse cupiebat. O infantem et aemulum et ualidum et olim contentiosum, credo, quia uiuum. [4] Aspice etiam singulares conceptus et quidem monstrosiores, sterilis et uirginis, quae uel hoc ipso imperfectos edere potuissent pro euersione naturae, ut altera seminis stupida, altera intacta. Decebat, si forte, sine anima nasci, qui fuerant non rite concepti, sed et illi uiuunt in suo quisque utero. Exsultat Elizabeth, Johannes intus impulerat; glorificat dominum Maria. Christus intus instinxerat. Agnoscunt matres suos inuicem fetus, agnitae mutuo ab ipsis utique uiuentibus, qui non tantum animae erant, uenim et spiritus. [5] Sic et ad Hieremiam legis dei uocem: priusquam te in utero fingerem, noui te. Si fingit deus in utero, et afflat ex primordii forma: et finxit deus hominem et flauit in eum flatum uitae. Nec nosset autem hominem deus in utero nisi totum: et priusquam exires de uulua, sanctificaui te. Et mortuum adhuc corpus? Vtique nequaquam: deus enim uiuorum, non mortuorum.

XXVII. [1] Quomodo igitur animal conceptum? Simulne conflata utriusque substantia corporis animaeque an altera earum praecedente? Immo simul ambas et concipi et confici, perfici dicimus, sicut et promi, nec ullum interuenire momentum in conceptu quo locus ordinetur. [2] Recogita enim de nouissimis prima: si mors non aliud determinatur quam disiunctio corporis animaeque, contrarium morti uita non aliud definietur quam coniunctio corporis animaeque; si disiunctio simul utrique substantiae accidit per mortem, hoc debet coniunctionis forma mandasse pariter obuientis per uitam utrique substantiae. [3] Porro uitam a conceptu agnoscimus, quia animam a conceptu uindicamus; exinde enim uita, quo anima. Pariter ergo in uitam compinguntur quae pariter in mortem separantur. Tunc si alteri primatum damus, alteri secundatum, seminis quoque discernenda sunt tempora pro statu ordinis. Et quando collocabitur corporis semen, quando animae? [4] Immo si tempora seminum diuidentur, et materiae diuersae habebuntur ex distantia temporum. Nam etsi duas species confitebimur seminis, corporalem et animalem, indiscretas tamen uindicamus et hoc modo contemporales eiusdemque momenti. Ne itaque pudeat necessariae interpretationis. Natura ueneranda est, non erubescenda. Concubitum libido, non condicio foedauit. Excessus, non status est impudicus, siquidem benedictus status apud deum: crescite et in multitudinem proficite, excessus uero maledictus, adulteria et stupra et lupanaria. [5] In hoc itaque sollemni sexuum officio quod marem ac feminam miscet, in concubitu dico communi, scimus et animam et carnem simul fungi, animam concupiscentia, carnem opera, animam instinctu, carnem actu. Vnico igitur impetu utriusque toto homine concusso despumatur semen totius hominis habens ex corporali substantia humorem, ex animali calorem. Et si frigidum nomen est anima Graecorum, quare corpus exempta ea friget? [6] Denique ut adhuc uerecundia magis pericliter quam probatione, in illo ipso uoluptatis ultimae aestu quo genitale uinis expellitur, nonne aliquid de anima quoque sentimus exire atque adeo marcescimus et deuigescimus cum lucis detrimento? Hoc erit semen animale, protinus ex animae destillatione, sicut et uirus illud corporale semen ex carnis defaecatione. [7] Fidelissima primordii exempla. De limo caro in Adam. Quid aliud limus quam liquor optimus? Inde erit genitale uirus. Ex afflatu dei anima. Quid aliud afflatus dei quam uapor spiritus? Inde erit quod per uirus illud efflamus. [8] Cum igitur in primordio duo diuersa atque diuisa, limus et flatus, unum hominem coegissent, confusae substantiae ambae iam in uno semina quoque sua miscuerunt atque exinde generi propagando formam tradiderunt, ut et nunc duo, licet diuersa, etiam unita pariter effluent pariterque insinuata sulco et aruo suo pariter hominem ex utraque substantia effruticent, in quo rursus semen suum insit secundum genus, sicut omni condicioni genitali praestitutum est. [9] Igitur ex uno homine tota haec animarum redundantia, obseruante scilicet natura dei edictum: crescite et in multitudinem proficite. Nam et in ipsa praefatione operis unius, faciamus hominem, uniuersa posteritas pluraliter praedicata est: et praesint piscibus maris. Nihil mirum repromissio segetis in semine.

XXVIII. ADVERSVS PLATONEM, NON EX MORTVIS FIERI VIVOS.

[1] Quis ille nunc uetus sermo apud memoriam Platonis de animarum reciproco discursu, quod hinc abeuntes sint illuc et rursus huc ueniant et fiant et dehinc ita habeat rursus ex mortuis effici umos? Pythagoricus, ut uolunt quidam; diuinum Albinus existimat, Mercurii forsitan Aegyptii. Sed nullus sermo diuinus nisi dei unius, quo prophetae, quo apostoli, quo ipse Christus intonuit. Multo antiquior Moyses etiam Saturno, nongentis circiter annis, nedum pronepotibus eius, certe diuinior multo, qui decursus generis humani ab exordio mundi quoque per singulas natiuitates nominatim temporatimque digessit, satis probatus diuinitatem operis ex diuinatione uocis. [2] Si uero Samius sophista Platoni auctor est de animarum recidiuatu reuolubili semper ex alterna mortuorum atque uiuentium suffectione, certe ille Pythagoras, etsi bonus cetera, tamen ut hanc sententiam exstrueret, non turpi modo, uerum etiam temerario mendacio incubuit. Cognosce, qui nescis, et crede nobiscum. Mortem simulat, subterraneo latitat, septennio illic patientiam damnat; interea quae de posteris defunctis ad fidem rerum esset relaturus ab unica conscia et ministra matre cognoscit. Vt satis sibi uisus est corpulentiam interpolasse ad omnem mortui ueteris horrorem, de adytis fallaciae emergit ut ab inferis redditus. [3] Quis non crederet reuixisse quem crediderat obisse, audiens praesertim ab eo, quae de posteris mortuis nisi apud inferos non uideretur cognoscere potuisse? Sic ex mortuis uiuos effici senior sermo est. Quid enim, si et iunior? Neque ueritas desiderat uetustatem neque mendacium deuitat nouellitatem. Teneo plane falsum, antiquitate generosum; quidni falsum, cuius testimonium quoque ex falso est? Quomodo credam non mentiri Pythagoran, qui mentitur, ut credam? Quomodo mihi persuadebit Aethalidem et Euphorbum et Pyrrhum piscatorem et Hermotimum se retro ante Pythagoran fuisse, ut persuadeat uiuos ex mortuis effici, qui iterum se Pythagoran peierauit? Quanto enim credibilius ipse ex semetipso semel redisset in uitam quam totiens alius atque alius, tanto et in durioribus fefellit, qui molliora mentitus est. [4] ‘Sed clipeum Euphorbi olim Delphis consecratum recognouit et suum dixit et de signis uulgo ignotis probauit’. Respice ad hypogeum eius et, si capit, crede. Nam qui talem commentus est stropham, cum iniuria bonae uoletudinis, cum fraude (uitae septennio excruciatæ infra terram inedia ignauia umbra, cui tanti fuit fastidium caeli, quam non accesserit temeritatem, quam non temptauerit curiositatem, ut ad notam clipei illius perueniret? [5] Quid autem, si in historiis aliquibus occultioribus repperit? Quid, si defectae iam traditionis superstites aliquas famae aurulas hausit? Quid, si ab aedituo redempta clam inspectione cognouit? Scimus etiam magiae licere explorandis occultis per catabolicos et paredros et pythonicos spiritus. Non enim et Pherecydes, Pythagorae magister, his forsitan artibus diuinabat, ne dicam somniabat? Quid, si idem daemon in illo fuit qui et in Euphorbo res sanguinis gessit? Denique qui se Euphorbum ex argnmento clipei probarat, cur neminem Troianorum commilitonum aequae recognouit? Nam et illi iam reuixissent, si uiui ex mortuis fierent.

XXIX. [1] Mortuos quidem ex uiuis effici constat, non ideo tamen et ex mortuis uiuos. Ab initio enim uiui priores, unde ab initio aequae mortui posteriores, non aliunde quam ex uiuis. Illi habuerunt unde potius orirentur, dum ne ex mortuis. Isti non habuerunt unde magis deducerentur, nisi ex uiuis. [2] Igitur si ab initio uiui non ex mortuis, cur postea ex mortuis? Defecerat ille, quicumque est origini fons? An formae paenituit? Et quomodo in mortuis salua est? Non, quia ab initio mortui ex uiuis, idcirco semper ex uiuis? Aut enim in utraque parte forma initii perseuerasset aut in utraque mutasset, ut si uiuos ex mortuis postea fieri oportuerat, perinde oporteret etiam non ex uiuis effici mortuos. [3] Si non peraequare deberet fides institutionis, (3.) non usquequaque contraria ex contrariis reformari alternant. Et nos enim opponemus contrarietates nati et innati, uisualitatis et caecitatis, iuuentae et senectae, sapientiae et insipientiae; nec tamen ideo innatum de nato prouenire, quia contrarium ex contrario fiat, nec uisualitatem iterum ex caecitate, quia de uisualitate caecitas accadat, nec iuuentam rursus de senecta reuiuescere, quia ex iuuenta senecta marcescat, nec insipientiam ex sapientia denuo obtundi, quia de insipientia sapientia acuatur. [4] Haec et Albinus Platoni suo ueritus subtiliter quaerit contrarietatum genera distinguere, quasi non et haec tam absolute in contrarietatibus posita sint quam et illa quae ad sententiam magistri sui interpretatur, uitam dico et mortem. Nec tamen ex morte uita reddatur, quia ex uita mors deferatur.

XXX. [1] Quid autem ad cetera respondebimus? Primo enim, si ex mortuis uiui, sicut mortui ex uiuis, unus omnino et idem numerus semper haesisset omnium hominum, ille scilicet numerus qui primus uitam introisset. Priores enim mortuis uiui, dehinc mortui ex uiuis et rursus ex mortuis uiui. Et dum hoc semper ex iisdem, ita totidem semper, qui ex iisdem. Nam neque plures aut pauciores exissent quam redirent. [2] Inuenimus autem apud commentarios etiam humanarum antiquitatum paulatim humanum genus exuberasse, dum Aborigines uel uagi uel extorres uel gloriosi quique occupant terras, ut Scythae Parthicas, ut Temenidae Peloponnesum, ut Athenienses Asiam, ut Phryges Italiam, ut Phoenices Africam, dum sollemnes etiam amigrationes, quas a)poiki/aj uocant, consilio exonerandae popularitatis in alios fines examina gentis eractant. Nam et origines nunc in suis sedibus permanent et alibi amplius gentilitatem fenerauerunt. [3] Certe quidem ipse orbis in promptu est cultior de die et instructor pristino. Omnia iam peruia, omnia nota, omnia negotiosa, solitudines famosas retro fundi amoenissimi oblitterauerunt, siluas arua domuerunt, feras pecora fugauerunt, harenae seruntur, saxa panguntur, paludes eliquantur, tantae urbes quantae non casae quondam. Iam nec insulae horrent nec scopuli terrent; ubique domus, ubique populus, ubique respublica, ubique uita. [4] Summum testimonium frequentiae humanae: onerosi sumus mundo, uix nobis elementa sufficiunt, et necessitates artiores, et querellae apud omnes, dum iam nos natura non sustinet. Reuera lues et fames et bella et uoragines ciuitatum pro remedio deputanda, tamquam tonsura insolescentis generis humani; et tamen, cum eiusmodi secures maximam mortalium uim semel caedant, nunquam restitutionem eius uiuos ex mortuis reducentem post mille annos semel orbis expauit. Et hoc enim sensibile fecisset aequa uis amissionis et restitutionis, si uiui ex mortuis fierent. [5] Cur autem mille annis post et non statim ex mortuis uiui, cum, si non statim supparetur quod erogatum, in totum absumi periclitetur praeueniente restitutionem defectione, quia nec pariasset commeatus hic uitae miliario tempori longe scilicet breuior et idcirco facilior ante extinguere quam redaccendi? Igitur quae hoc modo intercidisset, si uiui ex mortuis fierent, quando non intercidit, non erit credendum uiuos ex mortuis fieri.

XXXI. [1] Iam uero si ex mortuis uiui, utique singuli ex singulis. Singulorum ergo corporum animas ut singulas in singula corpora reuerti oportuerat. Porro si et binae et trinae et quinae usque uno utero resumuntur, non erunt ex mortuis uiui, quia non singuli ex singulis. Et hoc autem modo primordii forma signatur, cum et nunc plures animae de una proferuntur. [2] Item cum uaria aetate discedant animae, cur una reuertuntur? Omnes enim ab infantia imbuuntur, qua infans reuertatur. Quale est autem, ut senex defunctus infans reuertatur? Si decrescit foris anima retrograda aetate, quanto magis erat ut progressior reuerteretur mille post annis, certe uel coaetanea suae mortis, ut aeuum quod reliquisset iterum recepisset? [3] Sed etsi eadem semper reuoluerentur, licet non corporum quoque formas easdem, licet non factorum quoque sortes easdem, tamen uel ingeniorum et studiorum et affectionum pristinas proprietates secum referre deberent, quoniam temere eadem haberentur carentes his per quae eadem probarentur. Vnde scias, inquis, an ita quidem fiat occulte, sed condicio miliarii aeui interimat facultatem recensendi, quia ignotae tibi reuertuntur? Atquin scio non ita fieri, cum Pythagoran Euphorbum mihi opponis. [4] Ecce enim Euphorbum militarem et bellicam animam satis constat uel de ipsa gloria clipeorum consecratorum. Pythagoran uero tam residem et inbellem, ut proelia tunc Graeciae uitans Italiae maluerit quietem geometriae et astrologiae et musicae deuotus, alienus studio et affectu Euphorbi. Sed et Pyrrhus ille fallendis piscibus agebat, Pythagoras contra nec edendis, ut animalibus abstinens. Aethalides autem et Hermotimus fabam quoque in pabulis communibus inruerat, Pythagoras uero ne per fabalia quidem transeundum discipulis suis tradidit. [5] Quomodo ergo eadem animae recuperantur, quae nec ingeniis nec institutis iam nec uictibus eadem probantur? Iam nunc de tanto Graeciae censu quattuor solae animae recensentur. Sed et quid utique de solo Graeciae censu, ut non ex omni gente et ex omni aetate ac dignitate, ex omni denique sexu, et metempsychosis et metensomatosis cotidie existant, cur solus Pythagoras alium atque alium se recognoscat, non et ego? [6] Aut si priuilegium philosophorum est, et utique Graecorum, quasi non et Scythae et Indi philosophentur, cur neminem se retro meminit Epicurus, neminem Chrysippus, neminem Zeno, ne ipse quidem Plato, quem forsitan Nestorem credidissemus ob mella facundiae?

XXXII. AD METEMPSYCHOSIS ET METENSOMATOSIS. [1] Sed enim Empedocles, quia se deum delirarat, idcirco, opinor, dedignatus aliquem se heroum recordari, thamnus et piscis fui, inquit. Cur non magis et pepo, tam insulsus, et chamaeleon, tam inflatus? Plane ut piscis, ne aliqua sepultura conditiore putesceret, assum se maluit in Aetnam praecipitando. Atque exinde in illo finita est metensomatosis, ut aestiua cena post assum. [2] Perinde igitur et hic dimicemus necesse est aduersus portentosiorem praesumptionem bestias ex hominibus et homines ex bestiis reuoluentem. Viderint thamni, licebit et lapathi, ne plus ridere quam docere cogamur. Dicimus animam humanam nullo modo in bestias posse transferri, etiamsi secundum philosophos ex elementiciis substantiis censetur. [3] Siue enim ignis anima, siue aqua, siue

sanguis, siue spiritus, siue aer, siue lumen, recogitare debemus contraria quaeque singulis speciebus animalia; igni quidem ea quae rigent, colubros stelliones salamandras, etiam quaecumque de aemulo producentur elemento, de aqua scilicet; perinde contraria aquae illa quae arida et exsuccida: denique siccitatibus gaudent lucustae papiliunculi chamaeleontes; item contraria sanguini quae carent purpura eius, cochleas uermiculos et maiorem piscium censuum; spiritui uero contraria quae spirare non uidentur, carentia pulmonibus et arteriis, culices formicas tineas et hoc genus minutalia; item aeri contraria quae semper subterraneum et subaquaneum uiuentia carent haustu eius (res magis quam nomina noueris); item contraria lumini quae caeca in totum uel solis tenebris habent oculos, talpas uesperugines noctuas. Haec ut ex apparentibus et manifestis substantiis doceam. [4] Ceterum si et atomos Epicuri tenerem et numeros Pythagorae uiderem et ideas Platonis offenderem et entelechias Aristotelis occuparem, inuenirem fors his quoque speciebus animalia quae nomine contrarietatis opponerem. Contendo enim ex quacumque substantia supra dicta constitisset humana anima, non potuisse eam in tam contraria unicuique substantiae animalia reformari et censum eis de sua translatione conferre, a quibus excludi ac respui magis haberet quam admitti et capi nomine huius primae contrarietatis, quae substantiui status diuersitatem committit, tunc et reliquae per consequentem ordinem cuiusque naturae. [5] Nam et sedes alias humana anima sortita est et uictus et instructus et sensus et affectus et concubitus et fetus, item ingenia, tum opera gaudia taedia uitia cupides uoluptates uoletudines medicinas, suos postremo et uitae modos et exitus mortis. [6] Quomodo igitur illa anima quae terris inhaerebat, nullius sublimitatis, nullius profunditatis intrepida, ascensu etiam scalarum fatigabilis, submersu etiam piscinarum strangulabilis, aeri postea insultabit in aquila aut mari postea desultabit in anguilla? Quomodo item pabulis liberalibus et delicatis atque curatis educata, non dico paleas, sed spinas et agrestes amaritudines frondium et bestias sterquilinioram [uermium], etiam uenena ruminabit, si in capram transierit uel in coturnicem, immo et cadauerinam, immo et humanam, sui utique memor, in urso et leone? Sic et cetera ad incongruentiam rediges. Ne singulis perorandis immoremur, ipsius animae humanae quisquis modus, quaecumque mensura, quid faciet in amplioribus longe uel minutoribus animalibus? Necesse est enim et corpus omne anima compleri et animam omnem corpore obduci. Quomodo ergo

anima hominis complebit elephantum? Quomodo item obducetur in culice? Si tantum extendetur aut contrahetur, profecto periclitabitur. [7] Et ideo adicio: si nulla ratione capax est huiusmodi translationis in animalia nec modulis corporum nec ceteris naturae suae legibus adaequantia, numquid ergo demutabitur secundum qualitates generum et uitam eorum contrariam humanae uitae, facta et ipsa contraria humanae per demutationem? Enimvero si demutationem capit amittens quod fuit, non erit quae fuit; et si quae fuit non erit, soluta est metensomatosi, non adscribenda scilicet ei animae quae, si demutabitur, non erit. Illius enim metensomatosi dicitur quaecumque eam in suo statu permanendo pateretur. [8] Igitur si nec mutari potest, ne non sit ipsa, nec permanere in statu, quia contraria non capit, quaero adhuc causam aliquam fide dignam huiusmodi translationis. Nam etsi quidam homines bestiis adaequantur pro qualitatibus morum et ingeniorum et affectuum, quia et deus: assimilatus est, inquit, homo irrationalibus iumentis, non ideo milui ex rapacibus fient et canes ex spurcis et pantherae ex acerbis aut oues ex probis et hirundines ex garrulis et columbae ex pudicis, quasi eadem substantia animae ubique naturam suam in animalium proprietatibus repetat. Aliud est autem substantia, aliud natura substantiae, siquidem substantia propria est rei cumsque, natura uero potest esse communis. [9] Suscipe exemplum. Substantia est lapis, ferrum; duritia lapidis et ferri natura substantiae est. Duritia communicat, substantia discordat. Mollitia lanae, mollitia plumae: pariant naturalia earum, substantia non pariant. Sic et, si saeua bestia uel proba uocetur homo, sed non eadem anima: nam et tunc naturae similitudo notatur, cum substantiae dissimilitudo conspicitur. Ipsum enim quod hominem similem bestiae iudicas, confiteris animam non eandem, similem dicendo, non ipsam. [10] Sic et diuina pronuntiatio sapit, pecudibus adaequans hominem natura, non substantia. Ceterum nec deus hominem hoc modo notasset et ipse, si pecudem de substantia nosset.

XXXIII. [1] Etiam cum iudicii nomine uindicatur hoc dogma, quod animae humanae pro uita et meritis genera animalium sortiantur, iugulandae quaeque in occisoriis et subigendae quaeque in famulatoriis et fatigandae in operariis et foedandae in immundis, perinde honorandae et diligendae et curandae et appetendae in speciosissimis et probissimis et utilissimis et delicatissimis, et hic dicam: si demutantur, non ipsae dispungentur quae merebuntur. [2] Euacuabitur ratio iudicii, si meritorum deerit sensus. Deerit autem sensus

meritorum, si status uerterit animarum. Vertit autem status animarum, si non eadem perseuerauerint. Aequae si perseuerauerint in iudicium, quod et Mercurius Aegyptius nouit, dicens animam digressam a corpore non refundi in animam uniuersi, sed manere determinatam, uti rationem, inquit, patri reddat eorum quae in corpore gesserit, uolo iudicii utique diuini iustitiam grauitatem maiestatem dignitatem recensere, si non sublimiore fastigio praesidet humana censura, pleniorutriusque sententiae honore, poenarum et gratiarum, seuerior in ulciscendo et liberalior in largiendo. [3] Quid putas futuram animam homicidae? Aliquod, credo, pecus lanienae et macello destinatum, ut perinde iuguletur, quia et ipsa iugulauerit, perinde decorietur, quia et ipsa despoliauerit, perinde in pabulum proponatur, quia et ipsa bestiis fecerit eos quos in siluis et auis trucidauerit. [4] Si ita iudicabitur, nonne illa anima plus solacii quam supplicii relatura est, quod funus inter cocos pretiosissimos inuenit, quod condimentis Apicianis et Lurconianis humatur, quod mensis Ciceronianis infertur, quod lancibus splendidissimis Sullanis effertur, quod exsequias conuiuium patitur, quod a coaequalibus deuoratur potius quam a miluis et lupis, ut in hominis corpore tumultata et in suum genus regressa resurrexisse uideatur, exultans aduersus humana iudicia, si ea experta est? [5] Namque illa sicarium uariis et exquisitis et iam praeter naturam eruditis feris dissipant, et quidem uiuentem, immo facile nec morientem curata mora finis ad plenitudinem poenae. Sed et si anima praefugerit ultimo gladio, ne corpus quoque euaserit ferrum, nihilominus iugulo utroque confossis costisque transfixis compensatio proprii facinoris exigitur. Inde in ignem datur, ut et sepultura puniatur. Aliter denique non licet. Nec tamen tanta est rogi cura, ut reliquias aliae bestiae inueniant; certe nec ossibus parcitur nec cineribus indulgetur nuditate plectendis. [6] Tanta est apud homines homicidii uindicta quanta ipsa quae uindicatur natura. Quis non praeferat saeculi iustitiam, quam et apostolus non frustra gladio armatam contestatur, quae pro homine saeuendo religiosa est? Si ceterorum quoque scelerum mercedem cogitemus, patibula et uiuicomburia et culleos et uncas et scopulos, cui non expediat apud Pythagoran et Empedoclen sententiam pati? [7] Nam et qui laboribus atque seruitiis puniendi in asinos utique et mulos recorporabuntur, quantum sibi de pistrinis et aquilegis rotis gratulabuntur, si metallorum et ergastulorum et operum publicorum ipsorumque carcerum, licet otiosorum, recordentur! Perinde qui integre morati commendauerint iudici uitam, quaero praemia, sed potius inuenio supplicia. Nimirum magna merces bonis in animalia quaecumque restitui. [8] Pauum se meminit Homerus Ennio somniantes; sed poetis nec uigilantibus credam. Et si pulcherrimus pauus et quo uelit colore cultissimus, sed tacent pennae, sed displicet uox, et poetae nihil aliud quam cantare malunt. Damnatus est igitur Homerus in pauum, non honoratus. Plus de saeculi remuneratione gaudebit, pater habitus liberalium disciplinarum, ut malit famae suae ornamenta quam caudae. [9] Age nunc, ut poetae in pauos uel in cynos transeant, si uel cynis decora uox est, quod animal indues uiro iusto Aeaco? Quam bestiam integrae feminae Didoni? Quam uolucrum patientia, quam pecudem sanctimonia, quem piscem innocentia sortientur? Omnia famula sunt hominis, omnia subiecta, omnia mancipata. Si quid horum futurus est, diminoratur illic ille cui ob merita uitae imagines, statuae et tituli, honores publici, priuilegia rependuntur, cui curia, cui populus suffragiis immolat. [10] O iudicia diuina post mortem humanis mendaciora, contemptibilia de poenis, fastidibilia de gratiis, quae nec pessimi metuant nec optimi cupiant, ad quae magis scelesti quam sancti quique properabunt, illi, ut iustitiam saeculi citius euadant, isti, ut tardius eam capiant! Bene philosophi docetis, utiliter suadetis leuiora post mortem supplicia uel praemia, cum, si quod iudicium animas manet, grauius debet credi in dispunctione uitae quam in administratione, quia nihil plenius quam quod extremius, nihil autem extremius quam quod diuinius. [11] Deus itaque iudicabit plenius, quia extremius, per sententiam aeternam tam supplicii quam refrigerii nec in bestias, sed in sua corpora reuertentibus animabus, et hoc semel et in eum diem quem solus pater nouit, ut pendula expectatione sollicitudo fidei probetur, semper diem obseruans, dum semper ignorat, cotidie timens, quod cotidie sperat.

XXXIV. ADVERSVS OPINIONEM SIMONIS HERETICI. [1] Nulla quidem in hodiernum dementiae huiusmodi sententia erupit sub nomine haeretico, quae humanas animas refingat in bestias, sed necessarie hanc quoque speciem intulimus et exclusimus ut superioribus cohaerentem, quo perinde in pauo retunderetur Homerus sicut in Pythagora Euphorbus atque ita hac etiam metempsychosi siue metensomatosi repercussa illa rursus caederetur quae aliquid haeticis sumministravit. [2] Nam et Simon Samaritanus in actis apostolorum redemptor spiritus sancti, posteaquam damnatus ab ipso cum pecunia sua in interitum frustra fleuit, conuersus ad ueritatis

expugnationem quasi pro solacio ultionis, fultus etiam artis suae uiribus, ad praestrigias uirtutis alicuius Helenam quandam Tyriam de loco libidinis publicae eadem pecunia redemit, dignam sibi mercedem pro spiritu sancto; [3] et se quidem fingit summum patrem, illam uero iniectionem suam primam, qua iniecerat angelos et archangelos condere; huius eam propositi compotem exilisse de patre et in inferiora desultasse atque illic praeuento patris proposito angelicas potestates genuisse ignaras patris, artifices mundi huius; ab his non perinde animo retentam, ne digressa ea alterius genimina uiderentur, et idcirco omni contumeliae addictam, ut nusquam discedere depretiatam liberet, humanae quoque formae succidisse uelut uinculis carnis coercendam; [4] ita multis aeuis per alios atque alios habitus femininos uolutatam etiam illam Helenam fuisse exitiosissimam Priamo et Stesichori postea oculis, quem excaecasset ob conuicium carminis, dehinc reluminasset ob satisfactionem laudis; proinde migrantem eam de corporibus in corpora postrema dedecoratione sub titulo prostitisse Helenam uiuiorem. Hanc igitur esse ouem perditam, ad quam descenderit pater summus, Simon scilicet, et primum recuperata ea et reuecta, nescio umeris an feminibus, exinde ad hominum respexerit salutem quasi per uindicatam liberandorum ex illis angelicis potestatibus, quibus fallendis et ipse configuratus aequae et hominibus hominem ementitus in Iudaea quidem filium, in Samaria uero patrem gesserit. [5] O Helenam inter poetas et haereticos laborantem, tunc adulterio, nunc stupro infamen, nisi quod de Troia gloriosius eruitur quam de lupanari, mille nauibus de Troia, nec mille denariis forsitan de lupanari. Erubescere, Simon, tardior in requirendo, inconstantior in retrahendo. At Menelaus statim insequitur amissam, statim repetit ereptam, decenni proelio extorquet, non latens, non fallens, non cauillabundus. Vereor, ne ille magis pater fuerit qui circa Helenae recuperationem et uigilantius et audentius et diutius laborauerit.

XXXV. AD CARPOCRATIS OPINIONEM. [1] Sed non tibi soli metempsychosis hanc fabulam instruxit: inde etiam Carpocrates utitur, pariter magus, pariter fornicarius, etsi Helena minus. Quidni? cum propter omnimodam diuinae et humanae disciplinae euersionem constituendam reincorporari animas asseuerauerit; nulli enim uitam istam rato fieri, nisi uniuersis quae arguunt eam expunctis, quia non natura quid malum habeatur, sed opinione. Itaque metempsychosin necessarie imminere, si non in primo quoque uitae huius commeatu omnibus illicitis satisfiat (scilicet facinora tributa sunt uitae!), ceterum totiens animam reuocari habere quotiens minus quid intulerit, reliquatricem delictorum, donec exsoluat nouissimum quadrantem detrusa identidem in carcerem corporis. [2] Huc enim temperat totam illam allegoriam domini certis interpretationibus relucens et primo quidem simpliciter intellegendam. Nam et ethnicus homo aduersarius noster est, incedens in eadem uia uitae communis. Ceterum oportebat nos de mundo exire, si cum illis conuersari non liceret. Huic ergo boni animi praestes iubet (diligite enim inimicos uestros, inquit, et orate pro maledicentibus uos), ne aliquo commercio negotiorum iniuria prouocatus abstrahat te ad suum iudicem, et ad custodiam delegatus ad exsolutionem totius debiti arteris. [3] Tum si in diabolum transfertur aduersarii mentio ex obseruatione comitante, cum illo quoque moneris eam inire concordiam quae deputetur ex fidei conuentione; pactus es enim renuntiasse ipsi et pompae et angelis eius. Conuenit inter uos de isto. Haec erit amicitia obseruatione sponsionis, ne quid eius postea resumas ex his quae eierasti, quae illi reddidisti, ne te ut fraudatorem, ut pacti transgressorem iudici deo obiciat, sicut eum legimus alibi sanctorum criminatorem et de ipso etiam nomine diaboli delatorem, et iudex te tradat angelo executionis, et ille te in carcerem mandet infernum, unde non dimittaris nisi modico quoque delicto mora resurrectionis expenso. Quid his sensibus aptius? Quid his interpretationibus uerius? [4] Ceterum ad Carpocraten: si omnium facinorum debetrix anima est, quis erit inimicus et aduersarius eius intellegendus? Credo, mens melior, quae illam in aliquid innocentiae inieperit adigendam rursus ac rursus in corpus, donec in nullo rea deprehendatur bonae uitae. Hoc est ex malis fructibus bonam arborem intellegi, id est, ex pessimis praeceptis doctrinam ueritatis agnosci. [5] Spero huiusmodi haereticos Heliae quoque inuadere exemplum, tamquam in Iohanne sic repraesentati, ut metempsychosi patrocinetur pronuntiatio domini: Helias iam uenit, et non cognouerunt eum, et alibi: et si uultis audire, hic est Helias, qui uenturus est. Numquid ergo et Iudaei ex opinione Pythagorica consulebant Iohannem: tu es Helias? et non ex praedicatione diuina: et ecce mittam uobis Helian Thesbiten? [6] Sed enim metempsychosis illorum reuocatio est animae iam pridem morte functae et in aliud corpus iteratae, (6) Helias autem non ex decessione uitae, sed ex translatione uenturus est, nec corpori restituendus, de quo non est exemptus, sed mundo reddendus, de quo est translatus, non ex postliminio uitae, sed ex supplemento prophetiae, idem et ipse, et sui nominis et sui hominis. Sed quomodo Helias Johannes? Habes angeli uocem: et ipse, inquit, praecedet coram populo in uirtute et in spiritu Heliae, non in anima eius nec in carne. Hae enim substantiae sui cuiusque sunt hominis, spiritus uero et uirtus extrinsecus conferuntur ex dei gratia; ita et transferri in alteram possunt ex dei uoluntate, ut factum est retro de Mosei spiritu.

XXXVI. DE SEXU ANIMAE ET CARNIS PARITER ORIENTE. [1] In has quaestiones inde, opinor, excessimus quo nunc reuertendum est. Constitueramus animam in ipso et ex ipso seri homine et unum esse a primordio semen, sicut et carnis, in totum generis examen, propter aemulas scilicet opiniones philosophorum et haereticorum et illum sermonem Platonis ueternosum. Nunc ordinem sequentium exinde tractatum teximus. [2] Anima in utero seminata pariter cum carne pariter cum ipsa sortitur et sexum, ita pariter, ut in causa sexus neutra substantia teneatur. Si enim in seminibus utriusque substantiae aliquam intercapedinem eorum conceptus admitteret, ut aut caro aut anima prior seminaretur, esset etiam sexus proprietatem alteri substantiae adscribere per temporalem intercapedinem seminum, ut aut caro animae aut anima carni insculperet sexum, [3] quoniam et Apelles, non pictor, sed haereticus, ante corpora constituens animas uiriles ac muliebres, sicut a Philumena didicit, utique carnem ut posteriorem ab anima facit accipere sexum. Et qui animam post partum carni superducunt utique ante formatae, marem aut feminam de carne sexum praeiudicant animae. [4] Vtriusque autem substantiae indiscreta semina et unita suffusio eorum communem subeunt generis euentum, qua lineas duxerit quaecumque illa est ratio naturae. Certe et hic se primordiorum forma testatur, cum masculus temperius effingitur (prior enim Adam), femina aliquanto serius (posterior enim Eua). Ita diu caro informis est, qualis ex Adae latere decerpta est, animal tamen et ipsa iam, quia et illam tunc Adae portionem animam agnoscam. Ceterum et ipsam dei afflatus animasset, si non ut carnis, ita et animae ex Adam tradux fuisset in femina.

XXXVII. DE AETATE ANIMAE. [1] Omnem autem hominis in utero serendi struendi fingendi paraturam aliqua utique potestas diuinae uoluntatis ministra modulatur, quamcumque illam rationem agitare sortita. Haec aestimando etiam superstitio Romana deam finxit Alemonam alendi in utero fetus et Nonam et Decimam a sollicitioribus mensibus et Partulam, quae partum gubernet, et Lucinam, quae producat in lucem. Nos officia diuina angelos credimus. [2] Ex eo igitur fetus in utero homo, a quo forma completa est. Nam et Mosei lex tunc aborsus reum talionibus iudicat, cum iam hominis est causa, cum iam illi uitae et mortis status deputatur, cum et fato iam inscribitur, etsi adhuc in matre uiuendo cum matre plurimum communicat sortem. [3] Dicam aliquid et de temporibus animae nascentis, ut ordinem decurram. Legitima natiuitas ferme decimi mensis ingressus est. Qui numeros ratiocinantur, et decuriam numerum ut exinde reliquorum parentem colunt, denique perfectorem natiuitatis humanae. [4] Ego ad deum potius argumentabor hunc modum temporis, ut decem menses decalogo magis inaugurent hominem, ut tanto temporis numero nascamur quanto disciplinae numero renascimur. Sed et cum septimo mense natiuitas plena est facilius quam octauo, honorem sabbati agnoscam, ut quo die dedicata est dei conditio, eo mense interdum producatur dei imago. Concessum est properare natiuitati et tamen idonee occurrere in hebdomadem, in auspicia resurrectionis et requietis et regni. Ideo ogdoas nos non creat; tunc enim nuptiae non erunt. [5] Societatem carnis atque animae iamdudum commendauimus a congregatione seminum ipsorum usque ad figmenti perfectionem; perinde nunc et a natiuitate defendimus, imprimis quod simul crescunt, sed diuisa ratione pro generum condicione, caro modulo, anima ingenio, caro habitu, anima sensu. Ceterum animam substantia crescere negandum est, ne etiam decrescere substantia dicatur atque ita et defectura credatur; sed uis eius, in qua naturalia peculia consita retinentur, saluo substantiae modulo, quo a primordio inflata est, paulatim cum carne producit. [6] Constitue certum pondus auri uel argenti, rudem adhuc massam: collectus habitus est illi et futuro interim minor, tamen continens intra lineam moduli totum quod natura est auri uel argenti. Dehinc cum in laminam massa laxatur, maior efficitur initio suo per dilatationem ponderis certi, non per adiectionem, dum extenditur, non, dum augetur; etsi sic quoque augetur, dum extenditur: licet enim habitu augeri, cum statu non licet. [7] Tunc et splendor ipse prouehitur auri uel argenti, qui fuerat quidem et in massa, sed obscurior, non tamen nullus. Tunc et alii atque alii habitus accedunt pro facilitate materiae, qua duxerit eam qui aget, nihil conferens modulo nisi effigiem. Ita et animae crementa reputanda, non substantiua, sed prouocatiua.

Quamquam autem et retro praestruxerimus, omnia naturalia animae ipsi substantiae inesse pertinentia ad sensum et intellectum ex ingenito animae censu, sed paulatim per aetatis spatia procedere et uarie per accidentia euadere pro artibus, pro institutis, pro locis, pro dominatricibus potestatibus, quod tamen faciat ad carnis animaeque propositam nunc societatem, pubertatem quoque animalem cum carnali dicimus conuenire pariterque et illam suggestu sensuum et istam processu membrorum exsurgere a quarto decimo fere anno, non quia Asclepiades inde sapientiam supputat, nec quia iura ciuilia abhinc agendis rebus attemperant, sed quoniam et haec a primordio ratio est. [2] Si enim Adam et Eua ex agnitione boni et mali pudenda tegere senserunt, ex quo id ipsum sentimus, agnitionem boni et mali profiteamur. Ab his autem annis et suffusior et uestitior sexus est, et concupiscentia oculis arbitris utitur et communicat placitum et intellegit quae sint et fines suos ad instar ficulneae contagionis prurigine accingit et hominem de paradiso integritatis educit, exinde scabida etiam in ceteras culpas et delinquendi non naturales, cum iam non ex instituto naturae, sed ex uitio. [3] Ceterum proprie naturalis concupiscentia unica est alimentorum solummodo, quam deus et in primordio contulit: ex omni ligno, inquit, edetis, et secundae post diluuium geniturae supermensus est: ecce dedi uobis omnia in escam tamquam olera faeni, prospectam non tam animae quam carni, etsi propter animam. Auferenda est enim argumentatoris occasio, qui quod anima desiderare uideatur alimenta, hinc quoque mortalem eam intellegi cupit, quae cibis sustineatur, denique derogatis eis euigescat, postremo subtractis intercitat. [4] Porro non solum proponendum est quisnam ea desideret, sed et cui; et si propter se, sed et cur et quando et quonam usque; tum quod aliud natura desideret, aliud necessitate, aliud secundum proprietatem, aliud in causam. Desiderabit igitur cibos anima sibi quidem ex causa necessitatis, carni uero ex natura proprietatis. Certe enim domus animae caro est, et inquilinus carnis anima. [5] Desiderabit itaque inquilinus ex causa et necessitate huius nominis profutura domui toto inquilinatus sui tempore, non ut ipse substruendus nec ut ipse loricandus nec ut ipse tibicinandus, sed tantummodo continendus, quia non aliter contineri possit quam domo fulta. [6] Alioquin licebit animae dilapsa domo ex destitutione priorum subsidiorum incolumi abire, habenti sua firmamenta et propriae condicionis alimenta, immortalitatem rationalitatem sensualitatem intellectualitatem arbitrii

XXXIX. [1] Quae omnia natiuitus animae conlata idem, qui in primordio inuidit, nunc quoque obumbrat atque deprauat, quominus aut ultro prospiciantur aut qua oportet administrentur. [NVLLAM FERE ANIMAM SINE DAEMONIO ESSE.] Cui enim hominum non adhaerebit spiritus nequam ab ipsa etiam ianua natiuitatis animas aucupabundus, uel qua inuitatus tota illa puerperii superstitione? [2] Ita omnes idololatria obstetrice nascuntur, dum ipsi adhuc uteri infulis apud idola confectis redimiti genimina sua daemoniorum candidata profitentur, dum in partu Lucinae et Dianae eiulatur, dum per totam hebdomadem Iunoni mensa proponitur, dum ultima die Fata Scribunda aduocantur, dum prima etiam constitutio infantis super terram Statinae deae sacrum est. [3] Quis non exinde aut totum filii caput reatui uouet aut aliquem excipit crinem aut totum nouacula prosecat aut sacrificio obligat aut sacro obsignat, pro gentica, pro auita, pro publica aut priuata deuotione? Sic igitur et Socraten puerum adhuc spiritus daemonicus inuenit; sic et omnibus genii deputantur, quod daemonum nomen est. Adeo nulla ferme natiuitas munda est, utique ethnicorum. [4] Hinc enim et apostolus ex sanctificato alterutro sexu sanctos procreari ait, tam ex seminis praerogatiua quam ex institutionis disciplina. Ceterum, inquit, immundi nascerentur, quasi designatos tamen sanctitatis ac per hoc etiam salutis intellegi uolens fidelium filios, ut huius spei pignore matrimoniis, quae retinenda censuerat, patrocineretur. Alioquin meminerat dominicae definitionis: nisi quis nascetur ex aqua et spiritu, non inibit in regnum dei, id est, non erit sanctus.

XL. QVOMODO CARO PECCATRIX DICATVR. [1] Ita omnis anima eo usque in Adam censetur, donec in Christo recenseatur, tamdiu immunda, quamdiu recenseatur, peccatrix autem, quia immunda, recipiens ignominiam et carnis ex societate. [2] Nam etsi caro peccatrix, secundum quam incedere prohibemur, cuius opera damnantur concupiscentis aduersus spiritum, ob quam carnales notantur, non tamen suo nomine caro infamis. Neque enim de proprio sapit quid aut sentit ad suadendam uel imperandam peccatellam. Quidni? quae ministerium est, et ministerium non quale seruus uel minor amicus, animalia nomina, sed quale calix uel quid aliud eiusmodi corpus, non anima. Nam et calix ministerium sitientis est; nisi tamen qui sitit calicem sibi accommodarit, nihil calix ministrabit. [3] Adeo nulla proprietas hominis in choico, nec ita caro homo tamquam alia uis animae et alia persona, sed res est alterius plane substantiae et alterius condicionis, addicta tamen animae ut suppellex, ut instrumentum in officia uitae. Caro igitur increpatur in scripturis, quia nihil anima sine carne in operatione libidinis gulae uinulentiae saeuitiae idololatriae ceterisque carnalibus non sensibus, sed effectibus. [4] Denique sensus delictorum etiam sine effectibus imputari solent animae. Qui uiderit ad concupiscentiam, iam adulterauit in corde. Ceterum quid caro sine anima perinde in operatione probitatis iustitiae tolerantiae pudicitiae? Porro quale est, ut cui nec bona documenta propria subscribas, ei crimina adpingas? Sed ea per quam delinquitur conuenitur, ut illa a qua delinquitur oneretur, etiam in ministerii accusationem. Grauior inuidia est in praesidem, cum officia pulsantur; plus caeditur qui iubet, quando nec qui obsequitur excusatur.

XLI. DE MALO ET BONO ANIMAE. [1] Malum igitur animae, praeter quod ex obuentu spiritus nequam superstruitur, ex originis uitio antecedit, naturale quodammodo. Nam, ut diximus, naturae corruptio alia natura est, habens suum deum et patrem, ipsum scilicet corruptionis auctorem, ut tamen insit et bonum animae, illud principale, illud diuinum atque germanum et proprie naturale. [2] Quod enim a deo est, non tam extinguitur quam obumbratur. Potest enim obumbrari, quia non est deus, extinguere non potest, quia a deo est. Itaque sicut lumen aliquo obstaculo impeditum manet, sed non comparet, si tanta densitas obstaculi fuerit, ita et bonum in anima a malo oppressum pro qualitate eius aut in totum uacat occulta salute aut qua datur radiat inuenta libertate. [3] Sic pessimi et optimi quidam, et nihilominus unum omnes animae genus; sic et in pessimis aliquid boni et in optimis nonnihil pessimi. Solus enim deus sine peccato et solus homo sine peccato Christus, quia et deus Christus. Sic et diuinitas animae in praesagia erumpit ex bono priore et conscientia dei in testimonium prodit: ‘deus bonus’ et ‘deus uidet’ et ‘deo commendo’. Propterea nulla anima sine crimine, quia nulla sine boni semine. [4] Proinde cum ad fidem peruenit reformata per secundam natiuitatem ex aqua et superna uirtute, detracto corruptionis pristinae aulaeo totam lucem suam conspicit. Excipitur etiam a spiritu sancto, sicut in pristina natiuitate a spiritu profano. Sequitur animam nubentem spiritui caro, ut dotale mancipium, et iam non animae famula, sed spiritus. O beatum conubium, si non admiserit adulterium!

XLII. DE MORTE. [1] De morte iam superest, ut illic materia ponat, ubi ipsa anima consummat. Quamquam Epicurus uulgari satis opinione negarit mortem ad nos pertinere. Quod enim dissoluitur, inquit, sensu caret; quod sensu caret, nihil ad nos. Dissoluitur autem et caret sensu non ipsa mors, sed homo qui eam patitur. At ille ei dedit passionem, cuius est actio. Quodsi hominis est pati mortem dissolutricem corporis et perempricem sensus, quam ineptum, ut tanta uis ad hominem non pertinere dicatur! [2] Multo coactius Seneca post mortem, ait, omnia finiuntur, etiam ipsa. Hoc si ita est, iam et mors ad semetipsam pertinebit, si et ipsa finitur; eo magis ad hominem, in quo inter omnia finiendo et ipsa finitur. Mors nihil ad nos, ergo et uita nihil ad nos. Si enim quo dissoluimur praeter nos, etiam quo compingimur extra nos. Si ademptio sensus nihil ad nos, nec adeptio sensus quicquam ad nos. [3] Sed mortem quoque interimat qui et animam; a nobis ut de postuma uita et de alia prouincia animae, ita de morte tractabitur, ad quam uel ipsi pertinemus, si ad nos illa non pertinet. Denique nec speculum eius somnus aliena materia est.

XLIII. DE SOMNO. [1] De somno prius disputemus, post, mortem qualiter anima decurrat. Non utique extranaturale est somnus, ut quibusdam philosophis placet, cum ex his eum deputant causis quae praeter naturam haberi uidentur. [2] Stoici somnum resolutionem sensualis uigoris affirmant, Epicurei deminutionem spiritus animalis, Anaxagoras cum Xenophane defetiscentiam, Empedocles et Parmenides refrigerationem, Strato segregationem consati spiritus, Democritus indigentiam spiritus, Aristoteles marcorem circumcordialis caloris. Ego me nunquam ita dormisse praesumo, ut ex his aliquid agnoscam. Neque enim credendum est defetiscentiam esse somnum, contrarium potius defetiscentiae, quam scilicet tollit, siquidem homo somno magis reficitur quam fatigatur. Porro nec semper ex fatigatione concipitur somnus, et tamen cum ex illa est, illa iam non est. [3] Sed nec refrigerationem admittam aut marcorem aliquem caloris, cum adeo corpora somno concalescant et dispensatio ciborum per somnum non facile procederet calore properabili et rigore tardabili, si somno refrigeraremur. Plus est, quod etiam sudor digestionis aestuantis est index. Denique concoquere dicimur, quod caloris, non frigoris operatio est. [4] Perinde deminutionem animalis spiritus aut indigentiam spiritus aut segregationem consati spiritus immortalitas animae non sinit credi. Perit anima, si minoratur. [5] Superest, si forte, cum Stoicis resolutionem sensualis uigoris somnum determinemus, quia corporis solius quietem procuret, non et animae. Animam enim ut semper mobilem et semper exercitam nunquam succidere quieti, alienae scilicet a statu immortalitatis; nihil enim immortale finem operis sui admittit, somnus autem finis est operis. Denique corpori, cui mortalitas competit, ei soli quies finem operis adulator. [6] Qui ergo de somni naturalitate dubitabit, habet quidem dialecticos in dubium deducentes totam naturalium et extranaturalium discretionem, ut et quae putauerit citra naturam esse naturae uindicari sciat posse, a qua ita esse sortita sunt, ut citra eam haberi uideantur, et utique aut natura omnia aut nulla natura; apud nos autem id poterit audiri quod dei contemplatio suggerit, auctoris omnium de quibus quaeritur. [7] Credimus enim, si quid est natura, rationale aliquod opus dei esse. Porro somnum ratio praeit, tam aptum, tam utilem, tam necessarium, ut absque illo nulla anima sufficiat, recreatorem corporum, redintegratorem uirium, probatorem uoletudinum, pacatorem operum, medicum laborum, cui legitime fruendo dies cedit, nox legem facit auferens rerum etiam colorem. Quodsi uitale salutare auxiliare somnus, nihil eiusmodi non rationale, nihil non naturale, quod rationale. [8] Sic et medici omne contrarium uitali salutare auxiliari extra naturales cardines relegant. Nam et aemulas somno uoletudines, phreneticam atque cardiacam, praeter naturam iudicando naturalem somnum praeiudicauerint; etiam in lethargo non naturalem notantes testimonio naturali respondent, cum in suo temperamento est. Omnis enim natura aut defraudatione aut enormitate rescinditur, proprietate mensurae conseruatur. Ita naturale erit statu, quod non naturale effici potest decessu uel excessu. [9] Quid, si et esum et potum de naturae sortibus eximas? Nam et in his plurima somni praeparatura est. Certe his a primordio naturae suae homo inbutus est. Si apud deum discas, ille fons generis, Adam, ante ebibit soporem quam sitiit quietem, ante dormiit quam laborauit, immo quam et edit, immo quam et profatus est, ut uideant naturalem indicem somnum omnibus naturalibus principaliozem. [10] Inde deducimur etiam imaginem mortis iam tunc eum recensere. Si enim Adam de Christo figuram dabat, somnus Adae mors erat Christi dormituri in mortem, ut de iniuria perinde lateris eius uera mater uiuentium figuraretur ecclesia. Ideo et somnus tam salutaris, tam rationalis etiam in publicae et communis iam mortis effingitur exemplar. [11] Voluit enim deus, et alias nihil sine exemplaribus in sua dispositione molitus, paradigmate Platonico plenius humani uel maxime initii ac finis lineas cotidie agere nobiscum, manum porrigens fidei facilius adiuuandae per imagines et parabolas sicut sermonum, ita et rerum. Proponit igitur tibi corpus amica ui soporis elisum, blanda quietis necessitate prostratum, immobile situ, quale ante uitam iacuit et quale post uitam iacebit, ut testationem plasticae et sepulturae, expectans animam quasi nondum conlatam et quasi iam ereptam. [12] Sed et illa sic patitur, ut alibi agere uideatur, dissimulatione praesentiae futuram absentiam ediscens (de Hermotimo sciemus), et tamen interim somniat: unde tunc somnia? Nec quiescit nec ignauescit omnino nec naturam immortalitatis seruam soporis addicit. Probat se mobilem semper; terra mari peregrinatur negotiatur agitur laborat ludit dolet gaudet, licita atque illicita persequitur, ostendit quod sine corpore etiam plurimum possit, quod et suis instructa sit membris, sed nihilominus necessitatem habeat rursus corporis agitandi. Ita cum euigilauerit corpus, redditum officiis eius resurrectionem mortuorum tibi affirmat. Haec erit somni et ratio naturalis et natura rationalis. Etiam per imaginem mortis fidem initiaris, spem meditaris, discis mori et uiuere, discis uigilare, dum dormis.

XLIV. DE HERMOTIMO. [1] Ceterum de Hermotimo. Anima, ut aiunt, in somno carebat, quasi per occasionem uacaturi hominis proficiscente de corpore. Vxor hoc prodidit. Inimici dormientem nacti pro defuncto cremauerunt. Regressa anima tardius, credo, homicidium sibi imputauit. Ciues Clazomenii Hermotimum templo consolantur. Mulier non adit ob notam uxoris. [2] Quorsum istud? Ne, quia facile est uulgo existimare secessionem animae esse somnum, hoc quoque Hermotimi argumento credulitas subornetur. Genus fuerat grauioris aliquanto soporis, ut de incubone praesumptio est uel de ea ualetudinis labe quam Soranus opponit excludens incubonem, aut tale quid uitii quod etiam Epimeniden in fabulam impegit quinquaginta paene annos somniculosum. Sed et Neronem Suetonius et Thrasymeden Theopompus negant unquam somniasse, nisi uix Neronem in ultimo exitu post pauores suos. [3] Quid, si et Hermotimus ita fuit, ut otium animae nihil operantis in somnis diuortium crederetur? Omnia magis coniectes quam istam licentiam animae sine morte fugitiuae, et quidem ex forma continuam. Si enim tale quid semel accidere dicatur, ut deliquium solis aut lunae, ita et animae, sane persuaderer deuinitus factum; congruere enim hominem seu moneri seu terreri a deo, uelut fulgure rapido, momentaneae mortis ictu — si non magis [in proximo esset somnium credi, quod uigilanti potius accidere deberet, si non somnium magis credi oporteret.

XLV. DE SOMNIS. [1] Tenemur hic de somniis quoque Christianam

sententiam expromere, ut de accidentibus somni et non modicis iactationibus animae, quam ediximus negotiosam et exercitam semper ex perpetuitate motationis, quod diuinitatis et immortalitatis est ratio. Igitur cum quies corporibus euenit, quorum solacium proprium est, uacans illa a solacio alieno non quiescit et, si caret opera membrorum corporalium, suis utitur. [2] Concipe gladiatorem sine armis uel aurigam sine curriculis, gesticulantes omnem habitum artis suae atque conatum: pugnatur, certatur, sed uacua iactatio est. Nihilominus tamen fieri uidentur quae fieri tamen non uidentur; actu enim fiunt, effectu uero non fiunt. [3] Hanc uim ecstasin dicimus, excessum sensus et amentiae instar. Sic et in primordio somnus cum ecstasi dedicatus: et misit deus ecstasin in Adam et dormiit. Somnus enim corpori prouenit in quietem, ecstasis animae accessit aduersus quietem, et inde iam forma somnum ecstasi miscens et natura de forma. [4] Denique et oblectamur et contristamur et conterremur in somniis, quam affecte et anxie, passibiliter, cum in nullo permoueremur, a uacuis scilicet imaginibus, si compotes somniaremus. Denique et bona facta gratuita sunt in somnis et delicta secura; non magis enim ob stupri uisionem damnabimur quam ob martyrii coronabimur. [5] Et quomodo, inquis, memor est somniorum anima, scilicet quam compotem esse non licet? Hoc erit proprietas amentiae huius, quia non fit ex corruptela bonae ualetudinis, sed ex ratione naturae; nec enim exterminat, sed auocat mentem. Aliud est concutere, aliud mouere, aliud euertere, aliud agitare. [6] Igitur quod memoria suppetit, sanitas mentis est; quod sanitas mentis salua memoria stupet, amentiae genus est. Ideoque non dicimur furere, sed somniare; ideo et prudentes, si quando, sumus. Sapere enim nostnim licet obumbretur, non tamen extinguitur, nisi quod et ipsum potest uideri uacare tunc, ecstasin autem hoc quoque operari de suo proprio, ut sic nobis sapientiae imagines inferat, quemadmodum et erroris.

XLVI. [1] Ecce rursus urgemur etiam de ipsorum somniorum retractatu quibus anima iactatur exprimere. Et quando perueniemus ad mortem? Et hic dixerim: cum deus dederit; nullae longae morae eius quod eueniet. [2] Vana in totum somnia Epicurus iudicauit liberans a negotiis diuinitatem et dissoluens ordinem rerum et in passiuitate omnia spargens, ut euentui exposita et fortuita. Porro si ita est, ergo erit aliquis et ueritatis euentus, quia non capit solam eam euentui omnibus debito eximi. Homerus duas portas diuisit somniis, corneam ueritatis, fallaciae eburneam; respicere est enim, inquiunt, per cornu, ebur autem caecum est. [3] Aristoteles maiorem partem mendacio reputans agnoscit et uerum. Telmessenses nulla somnia euacuant, imbecillitatem coniectationis incusant. Quis autem tam extraneus humanitatis, ut non aliquam aliquando uisionem fidelem senserit? Pauca de insignioribus perstringens Epicuro pudorem imperabo. [4] Astyages Medorum regnator quod filiae Mandanae adhuc uirginis uesicam in diluuium Asiae fluxisse somnio uiderit, Herodotus refert; item anno post nuptias eius ex isdem locis uitem exortam toti Asiae incubasse. Hoc etiam Charon Lampsacenus Herodoto prior tradit. Qui filium eius tanto operi interpretati sunt, non fefellerunt, siquidem Asiam Cyrus et mersit et pressit. [5] Philippus Macedo nondum pater Olympiadis uxoris naturam obsignasse uiderat anulo: leo erat signum; crediderat praeclusam genituram, opinor, quia leo semel pater est. Aristodemus uel Aristophon coniectans immo nihil uacuum obsignari, filium, et quidem maximi impetus, portendi. Alexandrum qui sciunt, leonem anuli recognoscunt. Ephorus scribit. [6] Sed et Dionysii Siciliae tyrannidem Himeraea quaedam somniauit. Heraclides prodidit. Et Seleuco regnum Asiae Laodice mater nondum eum enixa praeuidit. Euphorion pro mulgauit. Mithridaten quoque ex somnio Ponti potitum a Strabone cognosco, et Baraliren Illyricum a Molossis usque Macedoniam ex somnio dominatum de Callisthene disco. [7] Nouerunt et Romani ueritatis huiusmodi somnia. Reformatorem imperii, puerulum adhuc et priuatum loci, et Iulium Octauium tantum et sibi ignotum Marcus Tullius iam et Augustum et ciuiliu turbinum sepulcrem de somnio norat. In Vitelliis commentariis conditum est. [8] Nec haec sola species erit summarum praedicatrix potestatum, sed et periculorum et exitiorum: ut cum Caesar in praelio perduellium Bruti et Cassii Philippis aeger, alias maius tamen discrimen ab hostibus relaturus, de Artorii uisione destituto tabernaculo euadit; ut cum Polycrati Samio filia crucem prospicit de solis unguine et lauacro Iouis. [9] Reuelantur et honores et ingenia per quietem, praestantur et medellae, produntur et furta, conferuntur et thesauri. Ciceronis denique dignitatem paruuli etiamnunc gerula iam sua inspexerat. Cynus de sinu Socratis demulcens homines discipulus Plato est. Leonymus pycetes ab Achille curatur in somniis. Coronam auream cum ex arce Athenae perdidissent, Sophocles tragicus somniando redinuenit. Neoptolemus tragoedus apud Rhoeteum Troiae sepulcrum Aiakis monitus in somnis ab ipso ruina liberat, et cum lapidum senia deponit, diues inde auro redit. [10] Quanti autem commentatores et affirmatores in hanc rem? Artemon Antiphon Strato Philochorus Epicharmus Serapion Cratippus Dionysius Rhodius Hermippus, tota saeculi litteratura. Solum, si forte, ridebo qui se existimauit persuasurum, quod prior omnibus Saturnus somniarit, nisi si et prior omnibus uixit. Aristoteles, ignosce ridenti. [11] Ceterum Epicharmus etiam summum apicem inter diuinationes somniis extulit cum Philochoro Atheniensi. Nam et oraculis hoc genus stipatus est orbis, ut Amphiarai apud Oropum, Amphilochoi apud Mallum, Sarpedonis in Troade, Trophonii in Boeotia, Mopsi in Cilicia, Hermionae in Macedonia, Pasiphae in Laconica. Cetera cum suis et originibus et ritibus et relatoribus, cum omni deinceps historia somniorum, Hermippus Berytensis quinione uoluminum satiatissime exhibebit. Sed et Stoici deum malunt prouidentissimum humanae institutioni inter cetera praesidia diuinatricum artium et disciplinarum somnia quoque magis indidisse, peculiare solacium naturalis oraculi. [12] Haec quantum ad fidem somniorum a nobis quoque consignandam et aliter interpretandam. Nam de oraculis etiam ceteris, apud quae nemo dormitat, quid aliud pronuntiabimus quam daemonicam esse rationem eorum spirituum qui iam tunc in ipsis hominibus habitauerint uel memorias eorum affectauerint ad omnem malitiae suae scenam, in ista aequae speciei diuinitatem mentientes eademque industria etiam per beneficia fallentes medicinarum et admonitionum, praenuntiationum, quo magis laedant iuuando, dum per ea quae iuuant ab inquisitione uerae diuinitatis abducunt ex insinuatione falsae? [13] Et utique non clausa uis est nec sacrariorum circumscribitur terminis; uaga et peruoluta et interim libera est. Quo nemo dubitauerit domus quoque daemoniis patere nec tantum in adytis, sed in cubiculis homines imaginibus circumueniri.

XLVII. [1] Definimus enim a daemoniis plurimum incuti somnia, etsi interdum uera et gratiosa, sed, de qua industria diximus, affectantia atque captantia, quanto magis uana et frustratoria et turbida et ludibriosa et immunda. Nec mirum, si eorum sunt imagines quorum et res. [2] A deo autem, pollicito scilicet et gratiam spiritus sancti in omnem carnem et sicut prophetaturos, ita et somniaturos seruos suos et ancillas suas, ea deputabuntur quae ipsi gratiae comparabuntur, si qua honesta sancta prophetica reuelatoria aedificatoria uocatoria, quorum liberalitas soleat et in profanos destillare, imbres etiam et soles suos peraequante deo iustis et iniustis, siquidem et Nabuchodonosor diuinitus somniat et maior paene uis hominum ex uisionibus deum discunt. Sicut ergo dignatio dei et in ethnicos, ita et temptatio mali et in sanctos, a quibus nec interdiu absistit, ut uel dormientibus obrepat qua potest, si uigilantibus non potest. [3] Tertia species erunt somnia quae sibimet ipsa anima uidetur inducere ex intentione circumstantiarum. Porro quam non est ex arbitrio somniare (nam et Epicharmus ita sentit), quomodo ipsa erit sibi causa alicuius uisionis? Num ergo haec species naturali formae relinquenda est seruans animae etiam in ecstasi res suas perpeti? [4] Ea autem, quae neque a deo neque a daemone neque ab anima uidebuntur accidere, et praeter opinionem et praeter interpretationem et praeter enarrationem facultatis, ipsi proprie ecstasi et rationi eius separabuntur.

XLVIII. [1] Certiora et colatiora somnari affirmant sub extimis noctibus, quasi iam emergente animarum uigore prodacto sopore. Ex temporibus autem anni uerno magis quieta, quod aestas dissoluat animas et hiems quodammodo obduret et autumnus, temptator alias uoletudinum, succis pomorum uinosissimis diluat. [2] Item ex ipsius quietis situ, si neque resupina neque dextero latere decumbat neque conresupinatis internis, quasi refusis oculis, statio sensuum fluitet aut compressa iecoris sagina <sedes turbata> sit mentis. Sed haec ingeniose aestimari potius quam constanter probari putem, etsi Plato est qui ea aestimauit; et fortasse casu procedant. Alioquin ex arbitrio erunt somnia, si dirigi poterunt. [3] Nam quod et de cibis distinguendis uel derogandis nunc praesumptio nunc superstitio disciplinam somniis praescribit, examinandum est: superstitio, ut cum apud oracula incubaturis ieiunium indicitur, ut castimoniam inducat, praesumptio, ut cum Pythagorici ob hanc quoque speciem fabam respuunt onerosum et inflatui pabulum. Atquin trina illa cum Daniele fraternitas legumine solo contenti, ne regiis ferculis contaminarentur, praeter sapientiam reliquam somniorum praecipue gratiam a deo redemerunt et impetrandorum et disserendorum. [4] Ieiunus autem nescio an ego solus plurimum ita somniem, ut me somniasse non sentiam. Nihil ergo sobrietas, inquis, ad hanc partem? Immo tanto magis ad hanc, quantum et ad omnem; si et ad superstitionem, multo amplius ad religionem. Sic enim et daemones expostulant eam a suis somniatoribus ad lenocinium scilicet diuinitatis, quia familiarem dei norunt, quia et Daniel rursus trium hebdomadam statione aruit uictu, sed ut deum inliceret humiliationis officiis, non ut animae somniaturae sensum et sapientiam strueret, quasi non in ecstasi acturae. Ita non ad ecstasin summouendam sobrietas proficiet, sed ad ipsam ecstasin commendandam, ut in deo fiat.

XLIX. [1] Infantes qui non putant somniare, cum omnia animae pro modo aetatis expungantur in uita, animaduertant succussus et nutus et reidentias eorum per quietem, ut ex re comprehendant motus animae somniantis facile per carnis teneritatem erumpere in superficiem. [2] Sed et quod Libyca gens Atlantes caeco somno transigere dicuntur, animae utique natura taxantur. Porro aut Herodoto fama mentita est nonnunquam in barbaros calumniosa aut magna uis eiusmodi daemonum in illo climate dominatur. Si enim et Aristoteles heroem quendam Sardiniae notat incubatores fani sui uisionibus priuantem, erit et hoc in daemonum libidinibus, tam auferre somnia quam inferre, ut Neronis quoque seri somniatoris et Thrasymedis insigne inde processerit. [3] Sed et a deo deducimus somnia. Quid ergo nec a deo Atlantes somniant, uel quia nulla iam gens dei extranea est in omnem terram et in terminos orbis euangelio coruscante? Num ergo aut fama mentita est Aristoteli aut daemonum adhuc ratio est? Dum ne animae aliqua natura credatur immunis somniorum.

L. DE MORTIS VI ET DE MENANDRO HAERETICO. [1] Satis de speculo mortis, id est de somno, cum etiam de negotiis somni, id est de somniis; nunc ad originem huius excessus, id est ad ordinem mortis, quia nec ipsam sine quaestionibus, licet finem omnium quaestionum. [2] Publica totius generis humani sententia mortem naturae debitum pronuntiamus. Hoc stipulata est dei uox, hoc spondit omne quod nascitur, ut iam hinc non Epicuri stupor suffundatur negantis debitum istud ad nos pertinere, sed haeretici magi Menandri Samaritani furor conspuatur dicentis mortem ad suos non modo non pertinere, uerum nec peruenire: in hoc scilicet se a superna et arcana potestate legatum, ut immortales et incorruptibiles et statim resurrectionis compotes fiant, qui baptismus eius induerint. [3] Legimus quidem pleraque aquarum genera miranda, sed aut ebriosos reddit Lyncestarum uena uinosa aut lymphaticos efficit Colophonis scaturigo daemonica aut Alexandrum occidit Nonacris Arcadiae uenenata. Fuit et Iudaeae lacus medicus ante Christum. Plane Stygias paludes poeta tradidit mortem diluentes, sed et Thetis filium planxit. Quamquam si et Menander in Stygem mergit, moriendum erit nihilominus, ut ad Stygem uenias; apud inferos enim dicitur. [4] Quenam et ubinam ista felicitas aquarum, quas nec Iohannes baptizator praeministravit nec Christus ipse discipulis demonstravit? Quod hoc Menandri balneum? Comicum credo. Sed cur tam infrequens, tam occultum, quo paucissimi lauant? Suspectam enim faciam tantam raritatem securissimi atque tutissimi sacramenti, apud quod nec pro deo ipso mori lex est, cum contra omnes iam nationes ascendant in montem domini et in aedem dei Iacob mortem per martyrium quoque flagitantis, quam de Christo etiam suo exegit. Nec magiae tantum dabit quisquam, ut eximat mortem aut repastinet uitis modo uitam aetate renouata. Hoc enim ne Medae quidem licuit in hominem, etsi licuit in ueruecem. [5] Translatus est Enoch et Helias nec mors eorum reperta est, dilata scilicet; ceterum morituri reseruantur, ut antichristum sanguine suo extinguant. Obiit et Iohannes, quem in aduentum domini remansurum frustra fuerat spes. Fere enim haereses ad nostra exempla prosiliunt inde sumentes praesidia quo pugnant. Postremo compendium est: ubi sunt illi quos Menander ipse perfudit, quos in Stygem suam mersit? Apostoli perennes ueniant, adsistant; uideat illos meus Thomas, audiat contrectet et credidit.

LI. NIHIL ANIMAE IN CORPORE SVBREMNERE. [1] Opus autem mortis in medio est, discretio corporis animaeque. Sed quidam ad immortalitatem animae, quam quidem non a deo edocti infirme tuentur, ita argumentationes emendicant, ut uelint credi etiam post mortem quasdam animas adhaerere corporibus. [2] Ad hoc enim et Plato, etsi quas uult animas ad caelum statim expedit, in Politia tamen cuiusdam insepulti cadauer opponit longo tempore sine ulla labe prae animae scilicet indiuiduitate seruatum. Ad hoc et Democritus crementa unguium et comarum in sepulturis aliquanti temporis denotat. [3] Porro et aeris qualitas corpori illi potuit tutela fuisse. Quid enim, si aridior aer et solum salsius? Quid, si et ipsius corporis substantia exsuccior? Quid, si et genus mortis ante iam corruptelae materias erogarat? Vngues autem cum exodia neruorum sint, merito neruis resolutione porrectis prouectiores et cotidie deficiente carne expelli uidentur. Comae quoque alimenta de cerebro, quod aliquamdiu durare praestat secreta munitio. Denique in uiuentibus etiam pro cerebri ubertate uel affluit capillago uel deserit. Habes medicos. [4] Sed nec modicum quid animae subsidere in corpore est decessurum quandoque et ipsum, cum totam corporis scenam tempus aboleuerit. Et hoc enim in opinione quorundam est; propterea nec ignibus funerandum aiunt parcentes superfluo animae. Alia est autem ratio pietatis istius, non reliquiis animae adulatrix, sed crudelitatis etiam corporis nomine auersatrix, quod et ipsum homo non utique mereatur poenali exitu impendi. [5] Ceterum anima indiuisibilis, ut immortalis, etiam mortem indiuisibilem exigit credi, non quasi immortalis, sed quasi indiuisibili animae indiuisibiliter accidentem. Diuidetur autem et mors, si et anima, superfluo scilicet animae quandoque morituro; ita portio mortis cum animae portione remanebit. [6] Nec ignoro aliquod esse uestigium opinionis istius. De meo didici. Scio feminam quandam uernaculam ecclesiae, forma et aetate integra functam, post unicum et breue matrimonium cum in pace dormisset et morante adhuc sepultura interim oratione presbyteri componeretur, ad primum halitum orationis manus a lateribus dimotas in habitum supplicem conformasse rursumque condita pace situi suo reddidisse. [7] Est et illa relatio apud nostros, in coemeterio corpus corpori iuxta collocando spatium accessui communicasse. Si et apud ethnicos tale quid traditur, ubique deus potestatis suae signa proponit, suis in solacium, extraneis in testimonium. Magis enim credam in testimonium ex deo factum quam ex ullis animae reliquiis, quae si inessent, alia quoque membra mouissent, et si manus tantum, sed non in causam orationis. Corpus etiam illud non modo fratri cessisset, uerum et alias mutatione situs sibimet ipsi refrigerasset. [8] Certe undeunde sunt ista, signis potius et ostentis deputanda, naturam facere non possunt. Mors, si non semel tota est, non est; si quid animae remanserit, uita est; non magis uitae miscebitur mors quam diei et nox.

LII. [1] Hoc igitur opus mortis: separatio carnis atque animae; seposita quaestione factorum et fortuitorum bifariam distinxit humanus affectus, in ordinariam et extraordinariam formam, ordinariam quidem naturae deputans, placidae cuiusque mortis, extraordinariam uero praeter naturam iudicans, uiolenti cuiusque finis. [2] Qui autem primordia hominis nouimus, audenter determinamus mortem non ex natura secutam hominem, sed ex culpa, ne ipsa quidem naturali; facile autem usurpari naturae nomen in ea quae uidentur a natiuitate ex accidentia adhaesisse. Nam si homo in mortem directo institutus fuisset, tunc demum mors naturae adscriberetur. Porro non in mortem institutum eum probat ipsa lex condicionali comminatione suspendens et arbitrio hominis addicens mortis euentum. Denique si non deliquisset, nequaquam obisset. Ita non erit natura quod ex oblationis potestate accidit per uoluntatem, non ex instituti auctoritate per necessitatem. [3] Proinde etsi uarii exitus mortis, ut est multimoda condicio causarum, nullum ita dicimus lenem, ut non ui agatur. Ipsa illa ratio operatrix mortis, simplex licet, uis est. Quid enim? quae tantam animae et carnis societatem, tantam a conceptu concretionem sororum substantiarum diuellit ac dirimit. Nam etsi prae gaudio quis spiritum exhalet, ut Chilon Spartanus, dum uictorem Olympiae filium amplectitur, etsi prae gloria, ut Clidemus Atheniensis, dum ob historici stili praestantiam auro coronatur, etsi per somnium, ut Plato, etsi per risum, ut P. Crassus, multo uiolentior mors quae per aliena grassatur, quae animam per commoda expellit, quae tunc mori affert, cum iocundius uiuere est in exultatione in honore in requie in uoluptate. [4] Vis est et illa nauigiis, cum longe a Caphereis saxis, nullis depugnata turbinibus, nullis quassata decumanis, adulante flatu, labente cursu, laetante comitatu, intestino repente percussu cum tota securitate desidunt. Non secus naufragia sunt uitae etiam tranquillae mortis euentus. Nihilo refert integram abire corporis nauem an dissipatam, dum animae nauigatio euertatur.

LIII. DE ANIMARVM EXCESSV. [1] Sed quo deinde anima nuda et explosa deuertit, sine dubio prosequemur ex ordine; prius tamen quod est loci huius explebimus, ne, quia uarios exitus mortis ediximus, expectet quis a nobis rationes singulorum medicis potras relinquendas, propriis arbitris omnium letalium rerum siue causarum et ipsarum corporalium condicionum. [2] Plane ad immortalitatem animae hic quoque protegendam in mentione mortis aliquid de eiusmodi exitu interstruam, in quo paulatim ac minutatim anima dilabitur; habitum enim sustinens defectionis abducitur, dum absumi uidetur, et coniecturam praestat interitus de excessus temperatura. Tota autem in corpore et ex corpore est ratio. Nam quisquis ille exitus mortis, sine dubio aut materialium aut regionum aut uiarum uitalium euersio est: materialium, ut fellis, ut sanguinis; regionum, ut cordis, ut iecoris; uiarum, ut uenarum, ut arteriarum. [3] Dum igitur haec ex propria quaque iniuriae causa uastantur in corpore ad usque ultimam euersionem et rescissionem uitalium, id est naturalium, finium situum officiorum, necessario et anima dilabentibus paulatim instrumentis et domiciliis et spatiis suis paulatim et ipsa migrare compulsa deducitur in deminutionis effigiem, non alio modo quam quo et aurigam ipsum quoque defecisse praesumitur, cum uires equorum defatigatio denegauit, quantum de dispositione destituti hominis, non de passionis ueritate. Perinde auriga corporis, spiritus animalis, deficiens uectaculi nomine, non suo deficit, opere decedens, non uigore, actu elanguens, non statu, constantiam, non substantiam decoquens, quia comparere cessat, non quia esse. [4] Sic et rapida quaeque mors, ut ceruicum messis, semel ac tantam ianuam pandens, ut ruinae uis semel omnia uitalia elidens, ut apoplexis, interior ruina, nullam animae moram praestat nec discessum eius in momenta discruciat, at ubi longa mors, prout deseritur anima, ita et deserit; non tamen conciditur hac facie, sed extrahitur, et dum extrahitur, postremitatem suam partem uideri facit. Non omnis autem pars statim et abscisa est, quia postera est, nec quia exigua est, statim et ipsa peritura est. Sequitur seriem suus finis et mediocritas trahitur a summa et reliquiae uniuersitati cohaerentes expectantur ab illa, non derelinquuntur. Atque ita ausim dicere: totius ultimum totum est, quia, licet minus atque posterius sit, ipsius est. [5] Hinc denique euenit saepe animam in ipso diuortio potentius agitari sollicitiore obtutu, extraordinaria loquacitate, dum ex maiore suggestu iam in libero constituta per superfluum quod adhuc cunctatur in corpore enuntiat quae uidet, quae audit, quae incipit nosse. Si enim corpus istud Platonica sententia carcer, ceterum apostolica dei templum, cum in Christo est, sed interim animam consepito suo obstruit et obscurat et concretionem carnis infaecat, unde illi, uelut per corneum specular, obsoletior lux rerum est. [6] Procul dubio cum ui mortis exprimitur de concretionem carnis et ipsa expressione colatur, certe de oppanso corporis erumpit in apertum ad meram et puram et suam lucem, statim semetipsam in expeditione substantiae recognoscit et in diuinitatem ipsa libertate respiscit, ut de somnio emergens ab imaginibus ad ueritates. Tunc et enuntiat et uidet, tunc exultat aut trepidat, prout paraturam deorsum sui sentit, de ipsius statim angeli facie, euocatoris animarum, Mercurii poetarum.

LIV. DE RECEPTV. [1] Quo igitur deducetur anima, iam hinc reddimus. Omnes ferme philosophi, qui immortalitatem animae, qualiterqualiter uolunt, tamen uindicant, ut Pythagoras, ut Empedocles, ut Plato, quique aliquod illi tempus indulgent ab excessu usque in conflagrationem uniuersitatis, ut Stoici, suas solas, id est sapientium, animas in supernis mansionibus collocant. [2] Plato quidem non temere philosophorum animabus hoc praestat, sed eorum qui philosophiam scilicet exornauerint amore puerorum. Adeo etiam inter philosophos magnum habet priuilegium impuritas. Itaque apud illum in aetherem sublimantur animae sapientes, apud Arium in aerem, apud Stoicos sub lunam. [3] Quos quidem miror, quod imprudentes animas circa terram prosternant, cum illas a sapientibus multo superioribus erudiri affirmant. Vbi erit scholae regio in tanta distantia deuersiorum? Qua ratione discipulae ad magistras conuentabunt tanto discrimine absentes? Quis autem illis postumae eruditionis usus ac fructus iamiam conflagratione perituris? [4] Reliquas animas ad inferos deiciunt. Hos Plato uelut gremium terrae describit in Phaedone, quo omnes labe mundialium sordium confluendo et ibi desidendo exhalent et quasi caeno immunditiarum suarum grossiorem haustum et priuatum illic aerem stipent.

LV. [1] Nobis inferi non nuda cauositas nec subdualis aliqua mundi sentina creduntur, sed in fossa terrae et in alto uastitas et in ipsis uisceribus eius abstrusa profunditas, siquidem Christo in corde terrae triduum mortis legimus expunctum, id est in recessu intimo et interno et in ipsa terra operto et intra ipsam clauso et inferioribus adhuc abyssis superstructo. [2] Quodsi Christus deus, quia et homo, mortuus secundum scripturas et sepultus secundum easdem, huic quoque legi satisfecit forma humanae mortis apud inferos functus, nec ante ascendit in sublimiora caelorum quam descendit in inferiora terrarum, ut illic patriarchas et prophetas compotes sui faceret, habes et regionem inferum subterraneam credere et illos cubito pellere qui satis superbe non putent animas fidelium inferis dignas, serui super dominum et discipuli super magistrum, aspernati, si forte, in Abrahae sinu expectandae resurrectionis solacium capere. [3] ‘Sed in hoc’, inquiunt, ‘Christus inferos adiit, ne nos adiremus. Ceterum quod discrimen ethnicorum et Christianorum, si carcer mortuis idem?’ Quo ergo animam exhalabis in caelum Christo illic adhuc sedente ad dexteram patris, nondum dei iussu per tubam archangeli audito, nondum illis quos domini aduentus in saeculo inuenerit, obuiam ei ereptis in aerem, cum his qui mortui in Christo primi resurgent? Nulli patet caelum terra adhuc salua, ne dixerim clausa. Cum transactione enim mundi reserabuntur regna caelorum. [4] Sed in aethere dormitio nostra cum puerariis Platonis aut in aere cum Ario aut circa lunam cum Endymionibus Stoicorum? Immo, inquis, in paradiso, quo iam tunc et patriarchae et prophetae appendices dominicae resurrectionis ab inferis migrauerint. Et quomodo Iohanni in spiritu paradisi regio reuelata, quae subicitur altari, nullas alias animas apud se praeter martyrum ostendit? Quomodo Perpetua, fortissima martyr, sub die passionis in reuelatione paradisi solos illic martyras uidit, nisi quia nullis romphaea paradisi ianitrix cedit nisi qui in Christo decesserint, non in Adam? [5] Noua mors pro deo et extraordinaria pro Christo alio et priuato excipitur hospitio. Agnosce itaque differentiam ethnici et fidelis in morte, si pro deo occumbas, ut paracletus monet, non in mollibus febribus et in lectulis, sed in martyriis, si crucem tuam tollas et sequaris dominum, ut ipse praecepit. Tota paradisi clauis tuus sanguis est. Habes etiam de paradiso a nobis libellum, quo constituimus omnem animam apud inferos sequestrari in diem domini.

LVI. AN COMMORENTVR HIC ANIMAE POST MORTEM. [1] Occurrit disceptatio, an hoc ab excessu statim fiat, an quasdam animas aliqua ratio detineat hic interim, an etiam receptas liceat postea ab inferis ex arbitrio uel ex imperio interuenire. [2] Nec harum enim opinionum suasoriae desunt. Creditum est insepultos non ad inferos redigi quam iusta perceperint, secundum Homericum Patroclum funus in somniis de Achille flagitantem, quod non alias adire portas inferum posset arcentibus eum longe animabus sepulorum. Nouimus autem praeter poeticae iura pietatis quoque Homericae industriam. Tanto magis enim curam sepulturae collocauit, quanto etiam moram eius iniuriosam animabus incusauit, simul et ne quis defunctum domi detinens ipse amplius cum illo maceretur enormitate solacii dolore nutriti. Ita querellas animae insepultae ad utrumque confinxit, ut instantia funeris et honor corporum seruetur et memoria affectuum temperetur. [3] Ceterum quam uanum, ut anima corporis iusta sustineat, quasi aliquid ex illis ad inferos auehat? Multo uanius, si iniuria deputabitur animae cessatio sepulturae, quam pro gratia deberet amplecti. Vtique enim tardius ad inferos abstrahi malet, quae nec mori uoluit: amabit impium heredem, per quem adhuc pascitur luce. Aut si qua pro certo iniuria est tardius sub terram detrudi, titulus autem iniuriae cessatio est sepulturae, perquam iniquum eam iniuria affici, cui non imputabitur cessatio sepulturae ad proximos scilicet pertinens. [4] Aiunt et immatura morte praeuentas eo usque uagari istic, donec reliquatio compleatur aetatum, quacum peruixissent, si non intempestiue obissent. Porro aut constituta sunt tempora unicuique, et constituta praeripi posse non credam, aut si constituta sunt quidem, dei tamen uoluntate uel aliqua potestate mutilantur, frustra mutilantur, si iam impleri sustinentur, aut si non sunt constituta, nulla erit reliquatio temporum non constitutorum. [5] Adhuc addam: ecce obiit uerbi gratia infans sub uberum fontibus, puta nunc puer inuestis, puta uesticeps, qui tamen octoginta annos uicturus fuisset. Hos praereptos ut anima eius hic post mortem transigat, quale est? Aetatem enim non potest capere sine corpore, quia per corpora operantur aetates. Nostri autem illud quoque recogitent, corpora eadem recepturas in resurrectione animas in quibus discesserunt. [6] Idem ergo sperabuntur et corporum modi et eadem aetates, quae corporum modos faciunt. Quo ergo pacto potest infantis anima hic transigere praerepta tempora, ut octogenaria resurgat in corpore mensis unius? Aut si hic necesse erit ea tempora impleri quae fuerant destinata, num et ordinem uitae, quem sortita sunt tempora pariter cum illis hic destinatum, pariter hic anima decurret, ut et studeat ab infantia pueritiae delegata et militet ab adolescentia iuuentae excitata et censeat a iuuenta senectae ponderata, et fenus exprimat et agrum urgeat, nauiget litiget nubat laboret aegritudines obeat et quaecumque illam cum temporibus manebant tristitia ac laeta? [7] Sed haec sine corpore quomodo transigentur? Vita sine uita? Sed uacua erunt tempora solo decursu adimplenda. Quid ergo prohibet apud inferos ea impleri, ubi perinde nullus est usus illorum? Ita dicimus omnem animam quaquā aetate decesserit, in ea stare ad eum diem usque, quo perfectum illud repromittitur ad angelicae plenitudinis mensuram temperatum. [8] Proinde extorres inferum habebuntur quas uī ereptas arbitrantur, praecipue per atrocitates suppliciorum, crucis dico et securis et gladii et ferae; nec isti porro exitus uiolenti quos iustitia decernit, uiolentiae uindex. Et ideo, inquires, scelestae quaeque animae inferis exulant. Alteram ergo constituas, compello, aut bonos aut malos inferos: si malos placet, etiam praecipitari illuc animae pessimae debent; si bonos, cur idem animas immaturas et innuptas et pro condicione aetatis puras et innocuas interim indignas inferis iudicas?

LVII. [1] Aut optimum est hic retineri secundum ahoros aut pessimum secundum biaethanatos, ut ipsis iam uocabulis utar quibus auctrix opinionum istarum magia sonat, Ostanes et Typhon et Dardanus et Damigeron et Nectabis et Berenice. [2] Publica iam litteratura est quae animas etiam iusta aetate sopitas, etiam proba morte disiunctas, etiam prompta humatione dispunctas euocaturam se ab inferum incolatu pollicetur. Quid ergo dicemus magian? Quod omnes paene, fallaciam. Sed ratio fallaciae solos non fugit Christianos, qui spiritalia nequitiae, non quidem socia conscientia, sed inimica scientia nouimus, nec inuitatoria operatione, sed expugnatoria dominatione tractamus multiformem luem mentis humanae, totius erroris artificem, salutis pariter animaeque uastatorem; sic etiam magiae, secundae scilicet idololatriae, in qua se daemones perinde mortuos fingunt, quemadmodum in illa deos. Quidni? cum et dii mortui. [3] Itaque inuocantur quidem ahoi et biaeoathanati sub illo fidei argumento, quod credibile uideatur eas potissimum animas ad uim et iniuriam facere quas per uim et iniuriam saeuus et immaturus finis extorsit, quasi ad uicem offensae. [4] Sed daemones operantur sub ostentu earum, et hi uel maxime qui in ipsis tunc fuerunt, cum adiuuerent, quique illas in huiusmodi impegerant exitus. Nam et suggessimus nullum paene hominem carere daemonio, et pluribus notum est daemoniorum quoque opera et immaturas et atroces effici mortes, quas incursibus deputant. [5] Hanc quoque fallaciam spiritus nequam sub personis defunctorum delitescens, nisi fallor, etiam rebus probamus, cum in exorcismis interdum aliquem se ex parentibus hominis sui affirmat, interdum gladiatorem uel bestiarium, sicut et alibi deum, nihil magis curans quam hoc ipsum excludere quod praedicamus, ne facile credamus animas uniuersas ad inferos redigi, ut et iudicii et resurrectionis fidem turbent. Et tamen ille daemon, postquam circumstantes circumuenire temptauit, instantia diuinae gratiae uictus id quod in uero est inuitus confitetur. [6] Sic et in illa alia specie magiae, quae iam quiescentes animas euellere ab inferis creditur et conspectui exhibere, non alia fallaciae uis est: operatior plane, quia et phantasma praestatur, quia et corpus affingitur; nec magnum illi exteriores oculos circumscribere, cui interiorem mentis aciem excaecare perfacile est. [7] Corpora denique uidebantur Pharaoni et Aegyptiis magicarum uirgarum dracones; sed Mosei ueritas mendacium deuorat. Multa utique et aduersus apostolos Simon et Elymas magi; sed plaga caecitatis de praestigiis non fuit. Quid noui aemulatio ueritatis a spiritu immundo? Ecce hodie eiusdem Simonis haeretici tanta praesumptio se artis extollit, ut etiam prophetarum animas ab inferis mouere se spondeant. [8] Et credo, quia mendacio possunt; nec enim pythonico tunc spiritui minus licuit animam Samuelis effingere post deum mortuos consulente Saule. Absit alioquin, ut animam cuiuslibet sancti, nedum prophetae, a daemonio credamus extractam, edocti quod ipse satanas transfiguretur in angelum lucis, nedum in hominem lucis, etiam deum se asseueraturus in fine signaque portentosiora editurus ad euertendos, si fieri possit, electos. Dubitauit, si forte, tunc prophetam se dei asseuerare et utique Sauli, in quo iam ipse morabatur, [9] ne putes alium fuisse qui phantasma administrabat, alium qui commendabat, sed eundem spiritum et in pseudoprophetide et in apostata facile mentiri quod fecerat credi, per quem Sauli thesaurus illic erat ubi et cor ipsius, ubi scilicet deus non erat. Et ideo per quem uisurum se credidit uidit, quia per quem uidit et credidit. [10] Si et de nocturnis imaginibus opponitur saepe non frustra mortuos uisos (nam et Nasamonas propria oracula apud parentum sepulcra mansitando captare, ut Heraclides scribit uel Nymphodorus uel Herodotus, et Celtas apud uirorum fortium busta eadem de causa abnoctare, ut Nicander affirmat), non magis mortuos uere patimur in somnis quam uiuos, sed eadem ratione mortuos quae et uiuos et omnia quae uidentur. Non enim quia uidentur uera sunt, sed quia adimplentur. Fides somniorum de effectu, non de conspectu renuntiatur. [11] Nulli autem animae omnino inferos patere satis dominus in argumento illo pauperis requiescentis et diuitis ingemiscentis ex persona Abrahae sanxit, non posse inde relegari renunziatorem dispositionis infernae, quod uel tunc licere potuisset, ut Moysi et prophetis crederetur. [12] Sed etsi quasdam reuocauit in corpora dei uirtus in documenta iuris sui, non idcirco communicabitur fidei et audaciae magorum et fallaciae somniorum et licentiae poetarum. Atquin in resurrectionis exemplis, cum dei uirtus siue per prophetas siue per Christum siue per apostolos in corpora animas repraesentat, solida et contrectabili et satiata ueritate praeiudicatum est hanc esse formam ueritatis, ut omnem mortuorum exhibitionem incorporalem praestrigias iudices.

LVIII. AN PVNIANTVR APVD INFEROS ANIMAE. [1] Omnis ergo anima penes inferos? inquis. Velis ac nolis, et supplicia iam illic et refrigeria: habes pauperem et diuitem. Et quia distuli nescio quid ad hanc partem, iam oportune in clausula reddam. [2] Cur enim non putes animam et puniri et foueri in inferis interim sub expectatione utriusque iudicii in quadam usurpatione et candida eius? Quia saluum debet esse, inquis, in iudicio diuino negotium suum sine ulla praelibatione sententiae; tum quia et carnis opperienda est restitutio ut consortis operarum atque mercedum. [3] Quid ergo fiet in tempore isto? Dormiemus? At enim animae nec in uiuentibus dormiunt; corporum enim est somnus, quorum et ipsa mors cum speculo suo somno. Aut nihil uis agi illic, quo uniuersa humanitas trahitur, quo spes omnis sequestratur? Delibari putas iudicium an incipi? Praecipitari an praeministrari? Iam uero quam iniquissimum otium apud inferos, si et nocentibus adhuc illic bene est et innocentibus nondum! Quid amplius uis esse post, mortem confusa spe et incerta expectatione ludentem an uitae recensum iam et ordinationem iudicii inhorrentem? [4] Semper autem expectat anima corpus, ut doleat aut gaudeat?

Nonne et de suo sufficit sibi ad utrumque titulum passionis? Quotiens inlaeso corpore anima sola torquetur bile ira taedio plerumque nec sibi noto? Quotiens item corpore afflicto furtiuum sibi anima gaudium exquirat et a corporis tunc importuna societate secedit? [5] Mentior, si non de ipsis cruciatibus corporis et gloriari et gaudere sola consuevit. Respice ad Mucii animam, cum dexteram suam ignibus soluit; respice ad Zenonis, cum illam Dionysii tormenta praetereunt. Morsus ferarum ornamenta sunt iuuentutis, ut in Cyro ursi cicatrices. Adeo nouit et apud inferos anima et gaudere et dolere sine carne, quia et in carne et inlaesa si uelit dolet et laesa si uelit gaudet. Hoc si ex arbitrio suo in uita, quanto magis ex iudicio dei post mortem? [6] Sed nec omnia opera [optima] cum carnis ministerio anima partitur; nam et solos cogitatus et nudas uoluntates censura diuina persequitur. Qui uiderit ad concupiscendum, iam adulterauit in corde. Ergo uel propter haec congruentissimum est animam, licet non expectata carne, puniri, quod non sociata carne commisit. Sic et ob cogitatus pios et beniuolos, in quibus carne non eguit, sine carne recreabitur. [7] Quid nunc, si et in carnalibus prior est quae concipit, quae disponit, quae mandat, quae impellit? Et si quando inuita, prior tamen tractat quod per corpus actura est; nunquam denique conscientia posterior erit facto. Ita huic quoque ordini competit eam priorem pensare mercedes cui priori debeantur. [8] In summa, cum carcerem illum, quem euangelium demonstrat, inferos intellegimus et nouissimum quadrantem modicum quoque delictum mora resurrectionis illic luendum interpretamur, nemo dubitabit animam aliquid pensare penes inferos salua resurrectionis plenitudine per carnem quoque. Hoc etiam paracletus frequentissime commendauit, si qui sermones eius ex agnitione promissorum charismatum admiserit. [9] Ad omnem, ut arbitror, humanam super anima opinionem ex doctrina fidei congressi iustae dumtaxat ac necessariae curiositati satisfacimus; enormi autem et otiosae tantum deerit discere quantum libuerit inquirere.

De Carne Christi (On the Flesh of Christ)

I. [1] Qui fidem resurrectionis ante istos Sadducaeorum propinquos sine controversia moratam ita student inquietare ut eam spem negent etiam ad carnem pertinere, merito Christi quoque carnem quaestionibus distrahunt, tanquam aut nullam omnino aut quoquo modo aliam praeter humanam, ne si humanam constiterit fuisse praeiudicatum sit adversus illos eam resurgere omni modo, quae in Christo resurrexerit. igitur unde illi destruunt carnis vota, inde nobis erunt praestruenda. [2] examinemus corporalem substantiam domini: de spiritali enim certum est. caro quaeritur: veritas et qualitas eius retractatur, an fuerit et unde et cuiusmodi fuerit. renuntiatio eius dabit legem nostrae resurrectioni. Marcion ut carnem Christi negaret negavit etiam nativitatem, aut ut nativitatem negaret negavit et carnem, scilicet ne invicem sibi testimonium responderent nativitas et caro, quia nec nativitas sine carne nec caro sine nativitate: [3] quasi non eadem licentia haeretica et ipse potuisset aut admissa carne nativitatem negare ut Apelles discipulus et postea desertor ipsius, aut et carnem et nativitatem confessus aliter illas interpretari ut condiscipulus et condesertor eius Valentinus. [4] sed et, qui carnem Christi putativam introduxit, aequè potuit nativitatem quoque phantasma confingere, ut et conceptus et praegnatus et partus virginis, et ipsius exinde infantis ordo, tw~| dokei=n haberentur: eosdem oculos eosdemque sensus fefellissent quos carnis opinio elusit.

II. [1] Plane nativitas a Gabriele adnuntiatur: quid illi cum angelo creatoris? et in virginis utero conceptus inducitur: quid illi cum [Esaia] propheta creatoris? odit moras, qui subito Christum de caelo deferebat. aufer hinc, inquit, molestos semper Caesaris census et diversoria angusta et sordidos pannos et dura praesepia: viderit angelica multitudo deum suum noctibus honorans: servent potius pecora pastores, et magi ne fatigentur de longinquo: dono illis aurum suum: [2] melior sit et Herodes ne Hieremias gloriatur: sed nec circumcidatur infans, ne doleat, nec ad templum deferatur, ne parentes suos oneret sumptu oblationis, nec in manus tradatur Simeoni, ne senem moriturum exinde contristet: taceat et anus illa, ne fascinet puerum. his opinor consiliis tot originalia instrumenta Christi delere, Marcion, ausus es, ne caro eius probaretur. [3] ex quo, oro te: exhibe auctoritatem: si propheta es praenuntia aliquid, si apostolus praedica publice, si apostolicus cum. apostolis senti, si tantum Christianus es crede quod traditum est: si nihil istorum es, merito dixerim, morere. [4] nam et mortuus es, qui non es Christianus, non credendo quod creditum Christianos facit: et eo magis mortuus es quo magis non es Christianus qui cum fuisses excidisti rescindendo quod retro credidisti, sicut et ipse confiteris in quadam epistula et tui non negant et nostri probant. [5] igitur rescindens quod credidisti iam non credens rescidisti: non tamen quia credere desisti recte rescidisti, atquin rescindendo quod credidisti probas ante quam rescinderes aliter fuisse: quod credidisti aliter, illud ita erat traditum. porro quod traditum erat id erat verum, ut ab eis traditum quorum fuit tradere: ergo quod erat traditum rescindens, quod erat verum rescidisti. nullo iure fecisti. [6] sed plenius eiusmodi praescriptionibus adversus omnes haereses alibi iam usi sumus: post quas nunc ex abundanti retractamus, desiderantes rationem qua non putaveris natum esse Christum.

III. [1] Necesse est, quatenus hoc putas arbitrio tuo licuisse, ut aut impossibilem aut inconvenientem deo existimaveris nativitatem. sed deo nihil impossibile nisi quod non vult. an ergo voluerit nasci (quia si voluit, et potuit et natus est) consideremus. ad compendium decurro. si enim nasci se deus noluisset, quacunque de causa, nec hominem se videri praestitisset: nam quis, hominem videns eum, negaret natum? ita quod noluisset esse nec videri omnino voluisset. [2] omnis rei displicentis etiam opinio reprobat, quia nihil interest utrum sit quid an non sit, si cum non sit esse praesumitur: plane interest illud ut falsum non patiatur quod vere non est. ‘Sed satis erat illi, inquis, conscientia sua: viderint homines si natum putabant quia hominem videbant.’ [3] quanto ergo dignius, quo constantius, humanam sustinuisset existimationem vere natus, eandem existimationem etiam non natus subiturus cum iniuria conscientiae suae. quantum ad fiduciam reputas ut non natus adversus conscientiam suam natum se existimari sustineret? quid tanti fuit, edoce, quod sciens Christus quid esset id se quod non erat exhiberet? [4] non potes dicere, ‘Ne si natus fuisset et hominem vere induisset deus esse desisset, amittens quod erat dum fit quod non erat’: periculum enim status sui deo nullum est. ‘Sed ideo, inquis, nego deum in hominem vere conversum, ita ut et nasceretur et carne corporaretur, quia qui sine fine est etiam inconvertibilis sit necesse est: converti enim in aliud finis est pristini: [5] non competit ergo conversio cui non competit finis.’ plane natura convertibilium ea lege est ne permaneant in eo quod convertitur in eis, et ita non permanendo pereant dum perdunt convertendo quod fuerunt. sed nihil deo par est: natura eius ab omnium rerum conditione distat. si ergo quae a deo distant, a quibus et deus distat, cum convertuntur amittunt quod fuerunt, ubi erit diversitas divinitatis a ceteris rebus nisi ut contrarium obtineat, id est ut deus et in omnia converti possit et qualis est perseverare? [6] alioquin par erit eorum quae conversa amittunt quod fuerunt, quorum utique deus in omnibus par non est: sic nec in exitu conversionis. angelos creatoris conversos in effigiem humanam aliquando legisti et credidisti, et tantam corporis gestasse veritatem ut et pedes eis laverit Abraham et manibus ipsorum ereptus sit Sodomitis Loth, conluctatus quoque homini angelus toto corporis pondere dimitti desideraverit, adeo detinebatur. [7] quod ergo angelis inferioris dei licuit conversis in corpulentiam humanam, ut angeli nihilominus permanerent, hoc tu potentiori deo auferes, quasi non valuerit Christus eius vere hominem indutus deus perseverare? aut numquid et angeli illi phantasma carnis apparuerunt? sed non audebis hoc dicere: nam si sic apud te angeli creatoris sicut et Christus, eius dei erit Christus cuius angeli tales qualis et Christus. [8] si scripturas opinioni tuae resistentes non de industria alias reiecisses alias corrupisses, confudisset te in hac specie evangelium Iohannis praedicans spiritum columbae corpore lapsum desedis super dominum. qui spiritus cum [hoc] esset, tam vere erat et columba quam et spiritus, nec interfecerat substantiam propriam assumpta substantia extranea. [9] sed quaeris corpus columbae ubi sit, resumpto spiritu in caelum. aequae et angelorum, eadem ratione interceptum est qua et editum fuerat. si vidisses cum de nihilo proferebatur, scisses et cum in nihilum subducebatur. si non fuit initium visibile, nec finis. tamen corporis soliditas erat quoquo momento corpus videbatur: non potest non fuisse quod scriptum est.

IV. [1] Igitur si neque ut impossibilem neque ut periculosam deo repudias corporationem, superest ut quasi indignam reicias et accuses. ab ipsa quidem exorsus odio habita nativitate perora, age iam spurcitas genitalium in utero elementorum, humoris et sanguinis foeda coagula, carnis ex eodem caeno alendae per novem menses. describe uterum de die in diem insolescentem, gravem, anxium, nec somno tutum, incertum libidinibus fastidii et gulae. invehere iam et in ipsum mulieris enitentis pudorem, vel pro periculo honorandum, vel pro natura religiosum. [2] horres utique et infantem cum suis impedimentis profusum, utique et oblitum. dedignaris quod pannis dirigitur, quod unctionibus formatur, quod blanditiis deridetur. hanc venerationem naturae, Marcion, despis, et quomodo natus es? odisti nascentem hominem, et quomodo diligis aliquem? te quidem plane non amasti cum ab ecclesia et fide Christi recessisti. sed videris si tibi displices aut si aliter es natus: [3] certe Christus dilexit hominem illum in immunditiis in utero coagulatum, illum per pudenda prolatum, illum per ludibria nutritum. propter eum descendit, propter eum praedicavit, propter eum omni se humilitate deiecit usque ad mortem, et mortem crucis. amavit utique quem magno redemit. si Christus creatoris est, suum merito amavit: si ab alio deo est, magis adamavit, quando alienum redemit. amavit ergo cum homine etiam nativitatem, etiam carnem eius: nihil amari potest sine eo per quod est id quod est. [4] aut aufer nativitatem et exhibe hominem, adime carnem et praesta quem deus redemit. si haec sunt homo quem deus redemit, tu haec erubescenda illi facis qui redemit, et indigna, quae nisi dilexisset non redemisset? nativitatem reformat a morte regeneratione caelesti, carnem ab omni vexatione restituit: leprosam emaculat, caecam reluminat, paralyticam redintegrat, demoniacam expiat, mortuam resuscitat: et nasci in illam erubescit? [5] si revera de lupa aut suae aut vaccae prodire voluisset, et ferae aut pecoris corpore indutus regnum caelorum praedicaret, tua opinor illi censura praescriberet turpe hoc deo et indignum hoc dei filio, et stultum propterea qui ita credat. sit plane stultum: de nostro sensu iudicemus deum. sed circumspice, Marcion, si tamen non delesti: Stulta mundi elegit deus, ut confundat sapientia. [6] quaenam haec stulta sunt? conversio hominum ad culturam veri dei, reiectio erroris, disciplina iustitiae pudicitiae misericordiae patientiae, innocentiae omnis? haec quidem stulta non sunt. quaere ergo de quibus dixerit: et si te praesumpseris invenisse, num erit tam stultum quam credere in deum natum, et quidem ex virgine, et quidem carneum, qui per illas naturae contumelias volutatus sit? [7] dicat haec aliquis stulta non esse, et alia sint quae deus in aemulationem elegerit sapientiae saecularis: et tamen apud illam facilius creditur Iuppiter taurus factus aut cygnus, quam vere homo Christus penes Marcionem.

V. [1] Sunt plane et alia tam stulta, quae pertinent ad contumelias et passiones dei: aut prudentiam dicant deum crucifixum. aufer hoc quoque, Marcion, immo hoc potius. quid enim indignius deo, quid magis erubescendum, nasci an mori, carnem gestare an crucem, circumcidi an suffigi, educari an sepeliri, in praesepe deponi an in monumento recondi?

sapientior eris si nec ista credideris. sed non eris sapiens nisi stultus in saeculo fueris, dei stulta credendo. [2] an ideo passiones a Christo non rescidisti quia ut phantasma vacabat a sensu earum? diximus retro aequae illum et nativitatis et infantiae imaginariae vacua ludibria subire potuisse. sed iam hic responde, interfector veritatis: nonne vere crucifixus est deus? nonne vere mortuus est ut vere crucifixus? nonne vere resuscitatus ut vere scilicet mortuus? [3] falso statuit inter nos scire Paulus tantum Iesum crucifixum, falso sepultum ingessit, falso resuscitatum inculcavit? falsa est igitur et fides nostra, et phantasma erit totum quod speramus a Christo, scelestissime hominum, qui interemptores excusas dei: nihil enim ab eis passus est Christus, si nihil vere est passus. parce unicae spei totius orbis: quid destruis necessarium dedecus fidei? quodcunque deo indignum est mihi expedit: salvus sum si non confundar de domino meo: Qui me, inquit, confusus fuerit, confundar et ego eius. [4] alias non invenio materias confusionis quae me per contemptum ruboris probent bene impudentem et feliciter stultum. crucifixus est dei filius: non pudet, quia pudendum est. et mortuus est dei filius: prorsus credibile est, quia ineptum est. et sepultus resurrexit: certum est, quia impossibile. [5] sed haec quomodo vera in illo erunt si ipse non fuit verus, si non vere habuit in se quod figeretur quod moreretur quod sepeliretur et resuscitaretur, carnem scilicet hanc sanguine suffusam ossibus substructam nervis intextam venis implexam, quae nasci et mori novit, humanam sine dubio ut natam de homine? ideoque mortalis haec erit in Christo quia Christus homo et filius hominis. [6] aut cur homo Christus et hominis filius si nihil hominis et nili ex homine, nisi si aut aliud est homo quam caro, aut aliunde caro hominis quam ex homine, aut aliud est Maria quam homo, aut homo deus Marcionis? aliter non diceretur homo Christus sine carne, nec hominis filius sine aliquo parente homine, sicut nec deus sine spiritu dei nec dei filius sine deo patre. [7] ita utriusque substantiae census hominem et deum exhibuit, hinc natum inde non natum, hinc carneum inde spiritalem, hinc infirmum inde praefortem, hinc morientem inde viventem. quae proprietas conditionum, divinae et humanae, aequa utique naturae cuiusque veritate dispuncta est, eadem fide et spiritus et carnis: virtutes spiritus dei deum, passiones carnem hominis probaverunt. [8] si virtutes non sine spiritu, perinde et passiones non sine carne: si caro cum passionibus ficta, et spiritus ergo cum virtutibus falsus. quid dimidias mendacio Christum? totus veritas fuit. [9] maluit, credo, nasci quam ex aliqua parte mentiri, et quidem in semetipsum, ut carnem gestaret sine ossibus duram, sine musculis solidam, sine sanguine cruentam, sine tunica vestitam, sine fame esurientem, sine dentibus edentem, sine lingua loquentem, ut phantasma auribus fuerit sermo eius per imaginem vocis. fuit itaque phantasma etiam post resurrectionem cum manus et pedes suos discipulis inspiciendos offert, Aspicite, dicens, quod ego sum, quia spiritus ossa non habet sicut me habentem videtis — ^[10] sine dubio manus et pedes et ossa quae spiritus non habet, sed caro. quomodo hanc vocem interpretaris, Marcion, qui a deo optimo et simplici et bono tantum infers Iesum? ecce fallit et decipit et circumvenit omnium oculos, omnium sensus, omnium accessus et contactus. ergo iam Christum non de caelo deferre debueras sed de aliquo circulatorio coetu, nec deum praeter hominem sed magum hominem, nec salutis pontificem sed spectaculi artificem, nec mortuorum resuscitorem sed vivorum advocatorem: nisi quod et si magus fuit, natus est.

VI. ^[1] Sed quidam iam discentes Pontici illius, supra magistrum sapere compulsi, concedunt Christo carnis veritatem, sine praeiudicio tamen renuendae nativitatis: ‘Habuerit, inquit, carnem, dum omnino non natam.’ pervenimus igitur de calcaria quod dici solet in carbonariam, a Marcione ad Apellen, qui posteaquam a disciplina Marcionis in mulierem carne lapsus et dehinc in virginem Philumenen spiritu eversus est, solidum Christi corpus sed sine nativitate suscepit ab ea praedicare. ^[2] et angelo quidem illi Philumenes eadem voce apostolus respondebit qua ipsum illum iam tunc praecinebat dicens, Etiamsi angelus de caelis aliter evangelizaverit vobis quam nos evangelizavimus, anathema sit: his vero quae insuper argumentantur, nos resistemus. ^[3] confitentur vere corpus habuisse Christum. unde materia si non ex ea qualitate in qua videbatur? unde corpus si non caro corpus? unde caro si non nata? quia nasci haberet, ea futura quae nascitur. De sideribus, inquit, et de substantiis superioris mundi mutuatus est carnem: et utique proponunt non esse mirandum corpus sine nativitate, cum et apud nos angelis licuerit nulla uteri opera in carne processisse. ^[4] agnoscimus quidem ita relatum: sed tamen quale est ut alterius regulae fides ab ea fide quam impugnat instrumentum argumentationibus suis mutuetur? quid illi cum Moyse qui deum Moysi reicit? si alius deus est, aliter sint res eius. sed utantur haeretici omnes scripturis eius cuius utuntur etiam mundo — erit illis hoc quoque in testimonium iudicii quod de exemplis ipsius blasphemias suas instruunt — facile est veritati etiam

nihil tale adversus eos praescribenti obtinere. [5] igitur qui carnem Christi ad exemplum. proponunt angelorum, non natam dicentes licet carnem, comparent velim et causas tam Christi quam et angelorum ob quas in carne processerint. nullus unquam angelus ideo descendit ut crucifigeretur, ut mortem experiretur, ut a morte suscitaretur. si nunquam eiusmodi fuit causa angelorum corporandorum, habes causam cur non nascendo acceperint carnem: non venerant mori, ideo nec nasci. [6] at vero Christus mori missus nasci quoque necessario habuit ut mori posset. non enim mori solet nisi quod nascitur: mutuum debitum est nativitati cum mortalitate: forma moriendi causa nascendi est. [7] si propter id quod moritur mortuus est Christus, id autem moritur quod et nascitur, consequens erat, immo praecedens, ut aequae nasceretur propter id quod nascitur, quia propter id ipsum mori habebat quod quia nascitur moritur: non competebat non nasci pro quo mori competebat. atquin tunc quoque inter angelos illos ipse dominus apparuit Abrahae sine nativitate, cum carne scilicet, pro eadem causae diversitate: [8] sed vos hoc non recipitis, non eum Christum recipientes qui iam tunc et adloqui et liberare et iudicare humanum genus ediscebat in carnis habitu, non natae adhuc quia nondum moriturae nisi prius et nativitas eius et mortalitas annuntiarentur. igitur probent angelos illos carnem de sideribus concepisse: [9] si non probant, quia nec scriptum est, nec Christi caro inde erit, cui angelorum accommodant exemplum. constat angelos carnem non propriam gestasse utpote naturae substantiae spiritalis — etsi corporis alicuius, sui tamen generis — in carnem autem humanam transfigurabiles ad tempus videri et congregari cum hominibus posse. [10] igitur cum relatum non sit unde sumpserint carnem, relinquitur intellectui nostro non dubitare hoc esse proprium angelicae potestatis, ex nulla materia corpus sibi sumere. Quanto magis, inquis, ex aliqua. certum est: sed nihil de hoc constat, quia scriptura non exhibet. [11] ceterum qui valent facere semetipsos quod natura non sunt, cur non valeant ex nulla substantia facere? si fiunt quod non sunt, cur non ex eo fiant quod non est? quod autem non est, cum fit, ex nihilo est. propterea nec requiritur nec ostenditur quid postea factum sit corporibus illorum: quod de nihilo fuit, nihil factum est. possunt nihil ipsum convertere in carnem qui semetipsos potuerunt convertere in carnem: plus est naturam demutare quam facere materiam. [12] sed et si de materia necesse fuit angelos sumpsisse carnem, credibilis utique est de terrena materia quam de ullo genere caelestium substantiarum, cum adeo terrenae qualitatibus extiterit ut terrenis pabulis pasta sit. fuerit: sit nunc quoque siderea eodem modo terrenis pabulis pasta quando terrena non esset, quo terrena caelestibus pasta est quando caelestis non esset — legimus enim manna esui populo fuisse: Panem, inquit, angelorum edit homo — non tamen infringitur semel separata condicio dominicae carnis ex causa alterius dispositionis. [13] homo vere futurus usque ad mortem, eam carnem oportebat indueret cuius et mors: eam porro carnem cuius est mors nativitas antecedit.

VII. [1] Sed quotiens de nativitate contenditur omnes qui respuunt eam ut praeiudicantem de carnis in Christo veritate ipsum dominum volunt negare esse <se> natum quia dixerit, Quae mihi mater et qui mihi fratres? audiat igitur et Apelles quid iam responsum sit a nobis Marcioni eo libello quo ad evangelium ipsius provocavimus, considerandam scilicet materiam pronuntiationis istius. [2] primo quidem nunquam quisquam adnuntiasset illi matrem et fratres eius foris stantes qui non certus esset et habere illum matrem et fratres et ipsos esse quos tunc nuntiabat, vel retro cognitos vel tunc ibidem compertos: licet propterea abstulerint haereses ista de evangelio quod et creditum patrem eius Ioseph fabrum et matrem Mariam et fratres et sorores eius optime notos sibi esse dicebant qui mirabantur doctrinam eius. [3] ‘Sed temptandi gratia nuntiaverant ei matrem et fratres quos non habebat.’ hoc quidem scriptura non dicit, alias non tacens cum quid temptationis gratia factum est erga eum: Ecce, inquit, surrexit legis doctor temptans eum: et alibi, Et accesserunt ad eum pharisaei temptantes eum: quod nemo prohibebat hic quoque significari temptandi gratia factum. non recipio quod extra scripturam de tuo infers. [4] dehinc materia temptationis debet subesse. quid temptandum putaverint in illo? ‘ Utique natusne esset annon: si enim hoc negavit responsio eius, hoc captavit nuntiatio temptatoris.’ sed nulla temptatio tendens ad agnitionem eius de quo dubitando temptat ita subito procedit ut non ante praecedat quaestio quae dubitationem inferens cogat temptationem. [5] porro si nusquam de nativitate Christi volutatum est, quid tu argumentaris voluisse illos per temptationem sciscitari quod nunquam produxerunt in quaestionem? eo adicimus, etiam si temptandus esset de nativitate, non utique hoc modo temptaretur, earum personarum adnuntiatione quae poterant etiam nato Christo non fuisse. omnes nascimur, et tamen non omnes aut fratres habemus aut matrem: [6] adhuc potest <quis> et patrem magis habere quam matrem et avunculos magis quam fratres. adeo non competit temptatio nativitatis, quam

licebat et sine matris et sine fratrum nominatione constare. facilius plane est ut certi illum et matrem et fratres habere divinitatem potius temptaverint eius quam nativitatem, an intus agens sciret quid foris esset mendacio petitus praesentiae adnuntiatae eorum qui in praesentia non erant. nisi quod et sic vacuisset temptationis ingenium: [7] poterat enim evenire ut quos illi nuntiabant foris stare, ille eos sciret absentes esse vel valetudinis vel negotii vel peregrinationis nota ei iam necessitate. nemo temptat eo modo quo sciat posse se ruborem temptationis referre. [8] nulla igitur materia temptationis competente liberatur simplicitas nuntiatoris, quod vere mater et fratres eius supervenissent. sed quae ratio responsi matrem et fratres ad praesens negantis discat etiam Apelles. [9] fratres domini non crediderant in illum, sicut et in evangelio ante Marcionem edito continetur: mater aequae non demonstratur adhaesisse illi, cum Martha et Mariae aliae in commercio eius frequententur. hoc denique in loco apparet incredulitas eorum: cum Iesus doceret viam vitae, cum dei regnum praedicaret, cum languoribus et vitiis medendis operaretur, extraneis defixis in illum tam proximi aberant: [10] denique superveniunt et foris subsistunt nec introeunt, non computantes scilicet quid intus ageretur, nec sustinent saltem, quasi necessarius aliquid afferrent eo quod ille cum maxime agebat, sed amplius interpellant et a tanto opere revocatum volunt. oro te Apelle, vel tu Marcion, si forte tabula ludens vel de histrionibus aut aurigis contendens tali nuntio avocareris nonne dixisses, Quae mihi mater aut qui fratres? [11] deum praedicans et probans Christus, legem et prophetas adimplens, tanti retro aevi caliginem dispergens, indigne usus est hoc dicto ad percutiendam incredulitatem foris stantium vel ad excutiendam importunitatem ab opere revocantium? ceterum ad negandam nativitatem alius fuisset ei locus et tempus et ordo sermonis, non eius qui possit pronuntiari etiam ab eo cui et mater esset et fratres: cum indignatio parentes negat, non negat sed obiurgat. [12] denique potiores fecit alios, et meritum praelationis ostendens, audientiam scilicet verbi, demonstrat qua condicione negaverit matrem et fratres: qua enim alios sibi adoptavit qui ei adhaerebant, ea abnegavit illos qui ab eo absistebant. solet etiam adimplere Christus quod alios docet. [13] quale ergo erat si docens non tanti facere matrem aut patrem aut fratres quanti dei verbum ipse dei verbum adnuntiata matre et fraternitate desereret? negavit itaque parentes quomodo docuit negandos, pro dei opere. sed et alias figura est synagogae in matre abiuncta, et Iudaeorum in fratribus incredulis. foris erat in illis Israel: discipuli autem novi, intus audientes et credentes, cohaerentes Christo ecclesiam deliniabant, quam potiore matrem et digniorem fraternitatem recusato carnali genere nuncupavit. eodem sensu denique et illi exclamationi respondit, non matris uterum et ubera negans sed feliciores designans qui verbum dei audiunt.

VIII. [1] Solis istis capitulis quibus maxime instructi sibi videntur Marcion et Apelles secundum veritatem integri et incorrupti evangelii interpretatis, satis esse debuerat ad probationem carnis humanae in Christo per defensionem nativitatis. [2] sed quoniam et isti Apelleiaci carnis ignominiam praetendunt maxime, quam volunt ab igneo illo praeside mali sollicitatis animabus adstructam et idcirco indignam Christo et idcirco de sideribus illi substantiam competisse, debeo eos de sua paratura repercutere. angelum quendam inclitum nominant qui mundum hunc instituerit et instituto eo paenitentiam admiserit. [3] et hoc suo loco tractavimus — nam est nobis et ad illos libellus — an qui spiritum et voluntatem et virtutem Christi habuerit ad ea opera dignum aliquid paenitentia fecerit. eum angelum etiam de figura erratae ovis interpretantur. teste igitur paenitentia institutoris sui peccatum erit mundus, siquidem omnis paenitentia confessio est delicti quia locum non habet nisi in delicto. [4] si mundus delictum est, qua corpus et membra delictum erit perinde et caelum et caelestia cum caelo: si caelestia, et quicquid inde conceptum prolatumque est. mala arbor malos fructus edat necesse est. caro igitur Christi de caelestibus structa de peccati constat elementis, peccatrix de peccatorio censu, et pars iam erit eius substantiae, id est nostrae, quam ut peccatricem Christo dedignantur inducere. [5] ita si nihil de ignominia interest, aut aliquam purioris notae materiam excogitent Christo quibus displicet nostra, aut eam agnoscant qua etiam caelestis melior esse non potuit. legimus plane, Primus homo de terrae limo, secundus homo de caelo: [6] non tamen ad materiae differentiam spectat, sed tantum terrenae retro substantiae carnis primi hominis, id est Adae, caelestem de spiritu substantiam opponit secundi hominis, id est Christi. et adeo ad spiritum, non ad carnem, caelestem hominem refert, ut quos ei comparat constet in hac carne terrenae caelestes fieri, spiritu scilicet: [7] quodsi secundum carnem quoque caelestis Christus, non compararentur illi non secundum carnem caelestes. si ergo qui fiunt caelestes, qualis et Christus, terrenam carnis substantiam gestant, hinc quoque confirmatur ipsum etiam Christum in carne terrena fuisse caelestem sicut ii

IX. [1] Praetendimus adhuc nihil quod ex alio acceptum sit, ut aliud sit quam id de quo sit acceptum, ita aliud esse ut non suggerat unde sit acceptum. omnis materia sine testimonio originis suae non est, etsi demutetur in novam proprietatem. [2] ipsum certe corpus hoc nostrum, quod de limo figulatum etiam ad fabulas nationum veritas transmisit, utrumque originis elementum confitetur, carne terram, sanguine aquam. nam licet alia sit species qualitatis, hoc est quod ex alio aliud fit. ceterum quid est sanguis quam rubens humor, quid caro quam terra conversa in figuras suas? [3] considera singulas qualitates, musculos ut glebas, ossa ut saxa, etiam circum papillas calculos quosdam: aspice nervorum tenaces conexus ut traduces radicum et venarum ramosos discursus ut ambages rivorum et lanugines ut muscos et comam ut caespitem et ipsos medullarum in abdito thesauros ut metalla carnis. [4] haec omnia terrenae originis signa et in Christo fuerunt, et haec sunt quae illum dei filium celaverunt, non alias tantummodo hominem existimatum quam humana extantem substantia corporis. aut edite aliquid in illo caeleste de Septentrionibus et Virgiliis et Suculis emendicatum: nam quae enumeravimus adeo terrenae testimonia carnis sunt ut et nostrae. sed nihil novum nihilque peregrinum deprehendo. [5] denique verbis et factis tantum, doctrina et virtute sola, Christum hominem obstupescebant: notaretur autem etiam carnis in illo novitas miraculo habita. sed carnis terrenae non mira condicio ipsa erat quae cetera eius miranda faciebat cum dicerent, Unde huic doctrina et signa ista? [6] etiam despicientium formam eius haec erat vox: adeo nec humanae honestatis corpus fuit, nedum caelestis claritatis. tacentibus apud vos quoque prophetis de ignobili aspectu eius, ipsae passiones ipsaeque contumeliae loquuntur: passiones quidem humanam carnem, contumeliae vero inhonestam probaverunt. [7] an ausus esset aliqui ungue summo perstringere corpus novum, sputaminibus contaminare faciem nisi merentem? quid dicis caelestem carnem quam unde caelestem intellegas non habes, quid terrenam negas quam unde terrenam agnoscas habes? esurit sub diabolo, sitit sub Samaritide, lacrimatur super Lazarum, trepidat ad mortem — Caro enim inquit infirma — sanguinem fundit postremo: [8] haec sunt opinor signa caelestia. sed quomodo, inquam, contemni et pati posset sicut et dixit, si quid in illa carne de caelesti generositate radiasset? ex hoc ergo convincimus nihil in illa de caelis fuisse, propterea ut contemni et pati posset.

X. [1] Converter ad alios aequē sibi prudentes qui carnem Christi animalem adfirmant, quod anima caro sit facta: ergo et caro anima, et sicut caro animalis ita et anima carnalis. et hic itaque causas requiro. si ut animam salvam faceret in semetipso suscepit animam Christus, quia salva non esset nisi per ipsum dum in ipso, non video cur eam carnem fecerit animalem induendo carnem, quasi aliter animam salvam facere non posset nisi carnem factam. [2] cum enim nostras animas non tantum non carneas sed etiam a carne disiunctas salvas praestet, quanto magis illam quam ipse suscepit etiam non carneam redigere potuit in salutem. item cum praesumant non carnis sed animae nostrae solius liberandae causa processisse Christum, primo quam absurdum est ut animam solam liberaturus id genus corporis eam fecerit quod non erat liberaturus. [3] deinde si animas nostras per illam quam gestavit liberare suscepit, illam quoque quam gestavit nostram gestasse debuerat, id est nostrae formae, cuiuscunque formae est in occulto anima nostra, non tamen carnae. ceterum non nostram animam liberavit si carneam habuit: nostra enim carnea non est. [4] porro si non nostram liberavit quia carneam liberavit, nihil ad nos, quia non nostram liberavit. sed nec liberanda erat quae non erat nostra, ut scilicet carnea: non enim periclitabatur si non erat nostra, id est non carnea. sed liberatam constat illam. ergo non fuit carnea, et fuit nostra, si ea fuit quae liberaretur, quoniam periclitabatur. iam ergo si anima non fuit carnalis in Christo, nec caro potest animalis fuisse.

XI. [1] Sed aliam argumentationem eorum convenimus, exigentes cur animalem carnem subeundo Christus animam carnalem videatur habuisse. ‘Deus enim inquit gestivit animam visibilem hominibus exhibere faciendo eam corpus quae retro invisibilis extiterit, natura nihil sed nec semetipsam videns prae impedimento carnis huius, ut etiam disceptaretur nata sit anima an non, mortalis an non: itaque animam corpus effectam in Christo ut eam nascentem et morientem et, quod sit amplius, resurgentem videremus.’ [2] et hoc autem quale erit, ut per carnem demonstraretur anima sibi aut nobis, quae per carnem non poterat agnosci, ut sic ostenderetur dum id fit cui latebat, id est caro? tenebras videlicet accepit ut lucere possit. denique ad hoc prius retractemus an isto modo ostendenda fuerit anima, dehinc an in totum invisibilem eam retro allegent, utrum quasi incorporealem an etiam habentem aliquod genus corporis proprii. [3] et tamen cum invisibilem dicant corporealem constituunt, habentem quod invisibile sit: nihil enim habens invisibile quomodo potest invisibilis dici? sed nec esse quidem potest, nihil habens per quod sit: cum autem sit, habeat necesse est aliquid per quod est. [4] si habet aliquid per quod est, hoc erit corpus eius. omne quod est corpus est sui generis: nihil est incorporale nisi quod non est. habente igitur anima invisibile corpus, qui visibilem eam facere suscepit utique dignius id eius visibile fecisset quod invisibile habebatur, quia nec hic mendacium aut infirmitas deo competit, mendacium si aliud animam quam quod erat demonstravit, infirmitas si id quod erat demonstrare non valuit. [5] nemo ostendere volens hominem cassidem aut personam ei inducit: hoc autem factum est animae si in carne conversa alienam induit superficiem. sed et si incorporealis anima deputetur, ut aliqua vi rationis occulta sit quidem anima, corpus tamen non sit quicquid est anima, proinde et impossibile deo non erat, et proposito eius congruentius competeat, nova aliqua corporis specie eam demonstrare quam ista communi omnium, alterius iam notitiae, ne sine causa visibilem ex invisibili facere gestisset animam, istis scilicet quaestionibus opportunam per carnis in illam humanae defensionem. [6] ‘Sed non poterat Christus inter homines nisi homo videri.’ redde igitur Christo fidem suam, ut qui homo voluit incedere animam quoque humanae condicionis ostenderit, non faciens eam carnem sed induens eam carne.

XII. [1] Ostensa sit nunc anima per carnem, si constiterit illam ostendendam quoquo modo fuisse, id est incognitam sibi et nobis: quanquam in hoc vana distinctio est, quasi nos seorsum ab anima simus, cum totum quod sumus anima sit. denique sine anima nihil sumus, ne hominis quidem sed cadaveris nomen. si ergo ignoramus animam, ipsa se ignorat. [2] ita superest hoc solummodo inspicere, an se anima sic ignorarit ut nota quoquo modo fieret. opinor sensualis est animae natura: adeo nihil animale sine sensu, nihil sensuale sine anima, et ut impressius dixerim animae anima sensus est. [3] igitur cum omnibus anima sentire praestet et ipsa sentiat omnium etiam sensus, nedum qualitates, cui verisimile est ut ipsa sensum sui ab initio sortita non sit? unde illi scire quod interdum sibi sit necessarium ex naturalium necessitate, si non scit suam qualitatem, cui quid necessarium est? hoc quidem in omni anima recognoscere est, notitiam sui dico, sine qua notitia sui nulla anima se ministrare potuisset. [4] puto autem magis hominem, animal solum rationale, compotem et animam esse sortitum quae illum faciat animal rationale, ipsa in primis rationalis. porro quomodo rationalis quae efficit hominem rationale animal, si ipsa rationem suam nescit ignorans semetipsam? sed adeo non ignorat, ut auctorem et arbitrum et statum suum norit. [5] nihil adhuc de deo discens deum nominat: nihil adhuc de iudicio eius admittens deo commendare se dicit: nihil magis audiens quam spem nullam esse post mortem et bene et male defuncto cuique imprecatur. plenius haec prosequitur libellus quem scripsimus DE TESTIMONIO ANIMAE. [6] alioquin si anima semetipsam ignorans erat ab initio, nihil a Christo cognovisse debuerat nisi qualis esset. nunc autem non effigiem suam didicit a Christo sed salutem. propterea filius dei descendit et animam subiit, non ut ipsa se anima cognosceret in Christo sed Christum in semetipsa: non enim se ignorando de salute periclitabatur sed dei verbum. [7] Vita inquit manifestata est, non anima: et Veni inquit animam salvam facere, non dixit ostendere. ignorabamus nimirum animam, licet invisibilem, nasci et mori, nisi corporaliter exhiberetur. ignoravimus plane resurrectionem cum carne. hoc erit quod Christus manifestavit: sed et hoc non aliter in se quam in Lazaro aliquo, cuius caro non erat animalis, ita nec anima carnalis. quid ergo amplius innotuit nobis de animae ignoratae retro dispositione? quid invisibile eius fuit quod visibilitatem per carnem desideraret?

XIII. [1] ‘Caro facta est anima ut anima ostenderetur.’ numquid ergo et caro anima facta est ut caro manifestaretur? si caro anima est, iam non anima est sed caro: si anima caro est, iam non caro est sed anima. ubi ergo caro, et ubi anima, si alterutro alterutrum facta sunt, immo si neutrum sunt dum alterutro alterutrum fiunt? certe perversissimum ut carnem nominantes animam intellegamus et animam significantes carnem interpretemur. [2] omnia periclitabuntur aliter accipi quam sunt, et amittere quod sunt dum aliter accipiuntur, si aliter quam sunt cognominantur. fides nominum salus est proprietatum. etiam cum demutantur qualitates accipiunt vocabulorum possessiones. verbi gratia, argilla excocta testae vocabulum suscipit, nec communicat cum vocabulo pristini generis quia nec cum ipso genere. [3] proinde et anima Christi caro facta non potest non id esse quod facta est et id non esse quod fuerat, aliud scilicet facta. et quoniam proximum adhibuimus exemplum plenius eo utemur. certe enim testa ex argilla unum est corpus, unumque vocabulum unius scilicet corporis: [4] nec potest testa dici et argilla, quia quod fuit non est, quod autem non est et [nomen] non adhaeret. ergo et anima caro facta uniformis soliditas et singularitas tota est, et indiscreta substantia. in Christo vero invenimus animam et carnem simplicibus et nudis vocabulis editas, id est animam animam et carnem carnem, nusquam animam-carnem aut carnem-animam, quando ita nominari debuissent si ita fuissent, sed etiam sibi quamque substantiam divise pronuntiatas ab ipso, utique pro duarum qualitatum distinctione, seorsum animam et seorsum carnem. [5] quid? Anxia est, inquit, anima mea usque ad mortem: et, Panis quem ego dedero pro salute mundi caro mea est. porro si anima caro fuisset, unum esset in Christo carnea anima aut caro animalis: at cum dividit species, carnem et animam, duo ostendit. [6] si duo, iam non unum: si non unum, iam nec anima carnalis nec caro animalis: unum enim est anima-caro aut caro-anima. nisi si et seorsum aliam gestabat animam praeter eam quae caro erat, et aliam circumferebat carnem praeter illam quae anima erat. quodsi una caro et una anima, illa tristis usque ad mortem et illa panis pro mundi salute, salvus est numerus duarum substantiarum in suo genere distantium, excludens carnea animae unicam speciem.

XIV. [1] ‘Sed et angelum,’ aiunt, ‘gestavit Christus.’ qua ratione? ‘Qua et hominem.’ eadem ergo est et causa. ut hominem gestaret Christus salus hominis fuit causa, scilicet ad restituendum quod perierat. homo perierat, hominem restitui oportuerat. ut angelum gestaret Christus nihil tale de causa est. [2] nam etsi angelis perditio reputatur in ignem praeparatum diabolo et angelis eius, nunquam tamen illis restitutio repromissa est: nullum mandatum de salute angelorum suscepit Christus a patre. quod pater neque repromisit neque mandavit, Christus administrare non potuit. cui igitur rei angelum quoque gestavit nisi ut satellitem forte cum quo salutem hominis operaretur? [3] idoneus enim non erat dei filius qui solus hominem liberaret, a solo et singulari serpente deiectum? ergo iam non unus deus nec unus salustificator, sed duo salutis artifices, et utique alter altero indigens. an vero ut per angelum liberaret hominem? cur ergo ipse descendit, ad id quod per angelum erat expediturus? si per angelum, quid et ipse? si per se, quid et angelus? dictus est quidem magni consilii angelus, id est nuntius, officii non naturae vocabulo: magnum enim cogitatum patris, super hominis scilicet restitutionem, adnuntiaturus saeculo erat. non ideo tamen sic angelus intellegendus ut aliqui Gabriel aut Michael. [4] nam et filius a domino vineae mittitur ad vinitores, sicut et famuli, de fructibus petito: sed non propterea unus ex famulis deputabitur filius quia famulorum successit officio. facilius ergo dicam, si forte, ipsum filium angelum (id est nuntium) patris, quam angelum in filio. sed cum de [filio] ipso sit pronuntiatum, Minuisti eum modicum quid citra angelos, quomodo videbitur angelum induisse, sic infra angelos deminutus dum homo fit, qua caro et anima, et filius hominis? [5] qua autem spiritus dei et virtus altissimi non potest infra angelos haberi, deus scilicet et dei filius. quanto ergo, dum hominem gestat, minor angelis factus est, tanto non, dum angelum gestat. poterit haec opinio Hebioni convenire qui nudum hominem et tantum ex semine David, id est non et dei filium, constituit Iesum — plane prophetis aliquo gloriosiore — ut ita in illo angelum fuisse dicatur quemadmodum in aliquo Zacharia: [6] nisi quod a Christo nunquam est dictum, Et ait mihi angelus qui in me loquebatur. sed nec quotidianum illud omnium prophetarum, Haec dicit dominus: ipse enim erat dominus, coram et ex sua auctoritate pronuntians, Ego autem dico vobis. quid ultra ad haec? Esaiam exclamantem audi, Non angelus neque legatus sed ipse dominus salvos eos fecit.

XV. [1] Licuit et Valentino ex privilegio haeretico carnem Christi spiritalem comminisci. quidvis eam fingere potuit quisquis humanam credere noluit, quando, quod ad omnes dictum sit, si humana non fuit nec ex homine non video ex qua substantia ipse Christus et hominem se et filium hominis pronuntiarit: Nunc autem vultis occidere hominem veritatem ad vos locutum: et, Dominus est sabbati filius hominis. de ipso enim Esaias, Homo in plaga et sciens ferre imbecillitatem: et Hieremias, Et homo est et quis cognovit illum? et Daniel, Et ecce super nubes tanquam filius hominis: etiam. Paulus apostolus, Mediator dei et hominum homo Christus Iesus: item Petrus in actis apostolorum, Iesum Nazarenum virum vobis a deo destinatum, utique hominem. [2] haec sola sufficere vice praescriptionis debuerunt ad testimonium carnis humanae et ex homine sumptae et non spiritalis sicut nec animalis nec sidereae nec imaginariae, si sine studio et artificio contentionis haereses esse potuissent. [3] nam, ut penes quendam ex Valentini factiuncula legi, primo non putant terrenamet humanam Christo substantiam informatam ne deterior angelis dominus deprehendatur qui non terrena carnis extiterunt, dehinc quod oporteret similem nostrae carnem similiter nasci, non de spiritu nec de deo, sed ex viri voluntate. ‘Et cur, Non de corruptela sed de incorruptela? et quare non, sicut et illa resurrexit et in caelo resumpta est, ita et nostra par eius statim adsumitur? aut cur illa par nostrae non aequae in terram dissoluta est?’ [4] talia et ethnici volutabant: ‘Ergo dei filius in tantum humilitatis exhaustus?’ et, ‘Si resurrexit in exemplum spei nostrae cur niliil tale de nobis probatum est?’ merito ethnici talia: sed merito et haeretici. numquid enim inter illos distat nisi quod ethnici non credendo credunt at haeretici credendo non credunt? [5] legunt denique, Minorasti eum modico citra angelos, et negant inferiorem substantiam Christi nec hominem se sed vermem pronuntiantis, qui nec formam habuit nec speciem, sed forma eius ignobilis, defecta citra omnes homines, homo in plaga et sciens ferre imbecillitatem. [6] agnoscunt hominem deo mixtum, et negant hominem: mortuum credunt, et quod est mortuum ex incorruptela natum esse contendunt, quasi corruptela aliud sit a morte. ‘Sed et nostra caro statim resurgere debebat.’ exspecta: nondum inimicos suos Christus oppressit, ut cum amicis de inimicis triumphet.

XVI. [1] Insuper argumentandi libidine ex forma ingenii haeretici locum sibi fecit Alexander ille quasi nos affirmemus idcirco Christum terreni census induisse carnem ut evacuaret in semetipso carnem peccati. quod etsi diceremus, quacunque ratione muniremus sententiam nostram, dum ne tanta amentia qua putavit tanquam ipsam carnem Christi opiriemur ut peccatricem evacuatam in ipso, cum illam et ad dexteram patris in caelis praesidere meminerimus et venturam inde in suggestu paternae claritatis praedicemus. [2] adeo, ut evacuatam non possumus dicere <quae in caelis est>, ita nec peccatricem in qua dolus non fuit. defendimus autem non carnem peccati evacuatam esse in Christo sed peccatum carnis, non materiam sed naturam, nec substantiam sed culpam, secundum apostoli auctoritatem dicentis, Evacuavit peccatum in carne. [3] nam et alibi in similitudine inquit carnis peccati fuisse Christum, non quod similitudinem carnis acceperit quasi imaginem corporis et non veritatem, sed similitudinem peccatricis carnis vult intellegi quod ipsa non peccatrix caro Christi eius fuit par cuius erat peccatum, genere non vitio Adae aequanda. [4] hinc etiam confirmamus eam fuisse carnem in Christo cuius natura est in homine peccatrix, et sic in illa peccatum evacuatum, dum in Christo sine peccato habetur quae in homine sine peccato non habebatur. at neque ad propositum Christi faceret evacuantis peccatum carnis non in ea carne evacuare illud in qua erat natura peccati, neque ad gloriam: quid enim magnum si in carne meliore et alterius (id est non peccatricis) naturae naevum peccati peremit? ‘Ergo, inquires, si nostram induit, peccatrix fuit caro Christi.’ [5] noli constringere explicabilem sensum:

nostram enim induens suam fecit, suam faciens non peccatricem eam fecit. ceterum, quod ad omnes dictum sit qui ideo non putant carnem nostram in Christo fuisse quia non fuit ex viri semine, recordentur Adam ipsum in hanc carnem non ex semine viri factum: sicut terra conversa est in hanc carnem sine viri semine, ita et dei verbum potuit sine coagulo in eiusdem carnis transire materiam.

XVII. [1] Sed remisso Alexandro cum suis syllogismis quos in argumentationibus torquet, etiam cum psalmis Valentini quos magna impudentia quasi idonei alicuius auctoris interserit, ad unam iam lineam congressionem dirigamus an carnem Christus ex virgine acceperit, ut hoc praecipue modo humanam eam constet si ex humana matrice substantiam traxit: quanquam licuit iam et de nomine hominis et de statu qualitatis et de sensu tractationis et de exitu passionis humanam constituisse. [2] ante omnia autem commendanda erit ratio quae praefuit ut dei filius de virgine nasceretur: nove nasci debebat novae nativitatis dedicator de qua signum daturus dominus ab Esaia praedicabatur. quod est istud signum? Ecce virgo concipiet in utero et pariet filium. concepit igitur virgo et peperit Emmanuelem, nobiscum deum. [3] haec est nativitas nova, dum homo nascitur in deo, ex quo in homine deus natus est carne antiqui seminis suscepta sine semine antiquo, ut illam novo semine, id est spiritali, reformaret exclusis antiquitatis sordibus expiatam. sed tota novitas ista, sicut et in omnibus, de veteri figurata est, rationali per virginem dispositione homine domino nascente. virgo erat adhuc terra, nondum opere compressa, nondum sementi subacta: ex ea hominem factum accipimus a deo in animam vivam. [4] igitur si primus Adam ita traditur, merito sequens vel novissimus Adam, ut apostolus dixit, proinde de terra (id est carne) nondum generationi resignata in spiritum vivificantem a deo est prolatus. et tamen ne mihi vacet incursus nominis Adae, unde Christus Adam ab apostolo dictus est si terreni non fuit census homo eius? sed et hic ratio defendit, quod deus imaginem et similitudinem suam a diabolo captam aemula operatione recuperavit. [5] in virginem enim adhuc Evam irreperat verbum aedificatorium mortis: in virginem aequae introducendum erat dei verbum exstructorium vitae, ut quod per eiusmodi sexum abierat in perditionem per eundem sexum redigeretur in salutem. crediderat Eva serpenti, credidit Maria Gabrieli: quod illa credendo deliquit haec credendo delevit. ‘Sed Eva nihil tunc concepit in utero ex diaboli verbo.’ [6] immo concepit. nam exinde ut abiecta pareret et in doloribus pareret verbum diaboli semen illi fuit: enixa est denique diabolum fratricidam. contra Maria eum edidit qui carnalem fratrem Israel interemptorem suum salvum quandoque praestaret. in vulvam ergo deus verbum suum detulit bonum fratrem, ut memoriam mali fratris eraderet: inde prodeundum fuit Christo ad salutem hominis quo homo iam damnatus intraverat.

XVIII. [1] Nunc et simplicius respondeamus. non competebat ex semine humano dei filium nasci, ne si totus esset filius hominis non esset et dei filius nihilque haberet amplius Salomone et amplius Iona, ut de Hebionis opinione credendus erat. ergo iam dei filius ex patris dei semine, id est spiritu, [2] ut esset et hominis filius caro ei sola erat ex hominis carne sumenda sine viri semine: vacabat enim semen viri apud habentem dei semen. itaque sicut nondum natus ex virgine patrem deum habere potuit sine homine matre, aequè cum de virgine nasceretur potuit matrem habere hominem sine homine patre: [3] sic denique homo cum deo dum caro hominis cum spiritu dei, caro sine semine ex homine, spiritus cum semine ex deo. igitur si fuit dispositio rationis super filium dei ex virgine proferendum, cur non ex virgine acceperit corpus quod de virgine protulit, quia aliud est quod a deo sumpsit? ‘Quoniam, inquiunt, verbum caro factum est.’ [4] vox ista quid caro sit factum contestatur et declarat, nec tamen periclitatur quasi statim aliud sit factum caro et non verbum, si ex carne factum est verbum caro: aut si ex semetipso factum est, scriptura dicat. cum scriptura non dicat nisi quod sit factum, non et unde sit factum, ergo ex alio, non ex semetipso, suggerit factum. [5] si non ex semetipso sed ex alio, iam hinc tracta ex quo magis credere congruat carnem factum verbum nisi ex carne in qua et factum est, vel quia ipse dominus sententialiter et definitive pronuntiavit, Quod in carne natum est caro est quia ex carne natum est. sed si de homine tantummodo dixit, non et de semetipso, plane nega hominem Christum et ita defende non et in ipsum competisse. ‘Atquin subicit, Et quod de spiritu natum est spiritus est, quia Deus spiritus est, et De deo natus est: [6] hoc utique vel eo magis in ipsum tendit si et in credentes eius.’ si ergo et hoc ad ipsum, cur non et illud supra? neque enim dividere potes, hoc ad ipsum, illud supra ad ceteros homines, qui utramque substantiam Christi et carnis et spiritus non negas. [7] ceterum si tam carnem habuit quam spiritum, cum de duarum substantiarum pronuntiat conditione quas in semetipso gestabat non potest videri de spiritu quidem suo de carne vero non sua determinasse. ita cum sit ipse de spiritu dei (et spiritus deus est) ex deo natus, ipse est et ex carne hominis et homo in carne generatus.

XIX. [1] ‘Quid est ergo, Non ex sanguine nec ex voluntate carnis nec ex voluntate viri sed ex deo natus est?’ hoc quidem capitulo ego potius utar, cum adulteratores eius obduxero: sic enim scriptum esse contendunt, Non ex sanguine nec ex carnis voluntate nec ex viri sed ex deo nati sunt, quasi supradictos credentes in nomine eius designet, ut ostendant esse semen illud arcanum electorum et spiritalium quod sibi imbuunt. [2] quomodo autem ita erit, cum omnes qui credunt in nomine domini pro communi lege generis humani ex sanguine et ex carnis et ex viri voluntate nascantur, etiam Valentinus ipse? adeo singulariter ut de domino scriptum est, Sed ex deo natus est. merito, quia verbum dei, et cum verbo dei spiritus, et in spiritu dei virtus, et quicquid dei est Christus. qua caro autem, non ex sanguine nec ex carnis et viri voluntate, quia ex dei voluntate verbum caro factum est: [3] ad carnem enim, non ad verbum, pertinet negatio formalis nostrae nativitatis, quia caro sic habebat nasci, non verbum. ‘Negans autem ex carnis quoque voluntate natum, cur non negavit etiam ex substantia carnis?’ neque enim quia ex sanguine negavit substantiam carnis renuit, sed materiam seminis quam constat sanguinis esse calorem ut despumatione mutatum in coagulum sanguinis feminae: [4] nam ex coagulo in caseo eius <vis> est substantiae quam medicando constringit, id est lactis. intellegimus ergo ex concubitu nativitatem domini negatam, quod sapit voluntas viri et carnis, non ex vulvae participatione. et quid utique tam exaggeranter inculcavit non ex sanguine nec ex carnis aut viri voluntate natum, nisi quia ea erat caro quam ex concubitu natam nemo dubitaret? negans porro ex concubitu non negavit ex carne, immo confirmavit ex carne, quia non perinde negavit ex carne sicut ex concubitu negavit. [5] oro vos, si dei spiritus non de vulva carnem participaturus descendit in vulvam, cur descendit in vulvam? potuit enim extra eam fieri caro spiritalis simplicius multo quam intra vulvam [fieret extra vulvam]. sine causa eo se intulit unde nihil extulit. sed non sine causa descendit in vulvam. ergo ex illa accepit, quia si non ex illa accepit sine causa in illam descendit, maxime eius qualitatis caro futurus quae non erat vulvae, id est spiritalis.

XX. [1] Qualis est autem tortuositas vestra, ut ipsam EX syllabam praepositionis officio adscriptam auferre quaeratis et alia magis uti quae in hac specie non invenitur penes scripturas sanctas? per virginem dicitis natum, non ex virgine, et in vulva, non ex vulva, quia. et angelus in somnis ad Ioseph — Nam quod in ea natum est, inquit, de spiritu sancto est — non dixit ex ea. [2] nempe tamen etsi ex ea dixisset in ea dixerat: in ea enim erat quod ex ea erat. tantundem ergo et cum dicit in ea, ex ea consonat, quia ex ea erat quod in ea erat. sed bene quod idem dicit Matthaeus originem domini decurrens ab Abraham usque ad Mariam, Iacob autem generavit, inquit, Ioseph virum Mariae ex qua nascitur Christus. sed et Paulus grammaticis istis silentium imponit: Misit, inquit, deus filium suum factum ex muliere. numquid per mulierem aut in muliere? [3] hoc quidem impressius, quod factum potius dicit quam natum. simplicius enim enuntiasset natum: factum autem dicendo, et Verbum caro factum est consignavit et carnis veritatem ex virgine factae adseveravit. nobis quoque ad hanc speciem psalmi patrocinantur, non quidem apostatae et haeretici et platonici Valentini sed sanctissimi et receptissimi prophetae David: ille apud nos canit Christum, per quem se cecinit ipse Christus. [4] accipe vicesimum primum et audi dominum patri deo colloquentem: Quia tu es qui avulsisti me ex utero matris meae: ecce unum. Et spes mea ab uberibus matris meae, super te sum proiectus ex vulva: ecce aliud. Et ab utero matris meae deus meus es tu: ecce aliter. nunc et ad sensus ipsos decertemus. [5] Avulsisti, inquit, ex utero. quid avellitur nisi quod inhaeret, quod infixum, quod innexum est ei a quo ut auferatur avellitur? si non adhaesit utero, quomodo avulsus est? si adhaesit qui avulsus est, quomodo adhaesisset nisi dum ex utero est per illum nervum umbilicarem quasi folliculi sui traducem adnexus origini vulvae? etiam cum quid extraneum extraneo adglutinator, ita concarnatur et convisceratur cum eo cui adglutinator ut cum avellitur rapiat secum ex corpore [aliquid] a quo avellitur [quasi] sequelam quandam abruptae unitatis et producem mutui coitus. [6] ceterum cum et ubera matris suae nominat — sine dubio quae hausit — respondeant obstetrices et medici et physici de uberum natura, an aliter manare soleant sine vulvae genitali passione, suspendentibus inde venis sentinam illam inferni sanguinis in mamillam et ipsa translatione decoquentibus in materiam lactis laetiolem: inde adeo fit ut uberum tempore menses sanguinum vacent. quodsi verbum caro ex se factum est, non ex vulvae communicatione, nihil operata vulva, nihil functa, nihil passa, quomodo fontem suum transfudit in ubera quae nisi pariendo non mutat? habere autem sanguinem non potuit lacti subministrando si non haberet et causas sanguinis ipsius, avulsionem scilicet suae carnis. [7] quid fuerit novitatis in Christo ex virgine nascendi palam est: solum hoc scilicet, quod ex virgine secundum rationem quam edidimus, et uti virgo esset regeneratio nostra spiritualiter, ab omnibus inquinamentis sanctificata per Christum virginem et ipsum etiam carnaliter ut ex virginis carne.

XXI. [1] Si ergo contendunt hoc competisse novitati ut quemadmodum non ex viri semine ita nec ex virginis carne caro fieret dei verbum, quare non hoc sit tota novitas, ut caro non ex semine nata ex carne <semine nata> processerit? [2] accedant adhuc comminius ad congressum. Ecce, inquit, virgo concipiet in utero. quidnam? utique dei verbum, non viri semen. certe ut pareret filium: nam Et pariet, inquit, filium. ergo ut ipsius fuit parere, quia ipsius fuit concepisse, ita ipsius est quod peperit, licet non ipsius fuerit quod concepit. contra si verbum ex se caro factum est, iam ipsum se concepit et peperit, et vacat prophetia: [3] non enim virgo concepit neque peperit, si non quod peperit ex verbi conceptu caro ipsius est. sola haec autem prophetae vox evacuabitur? an et angeli conceptum et partum virginis annuntiantis? an et omnis iam scriptura quaecunque matrem pronuntiat Christi? quomodo enim mater nisi quia in utero eius fuit? <ut quid in utero> si nihil ex utero eius accepit quod matrem eam faceret in cuius utero fuit? hoc nomen non debet caro extranea: matris uterum non appellat nisi filia uteri caro; filia porro uteri non est, si sibi nata est. [4] tacebit igitur et Elisabeth, prophetam portans iam domini sui conscium infantem et insuper spiritu sancto adimpleta: sine causa enim dicit, Et unde mihi ut mater domini mei veniat ad me? si Maria non filium sed hospitem in utero gestabat Iesum, quomodo dicit, Benedictus fructus uteri tui? quis hic fructus uteri qui non ex utero germinavit, qui non in utero radicem egit, qui non eius est cuius est uterus? et qui utique fructus uteri Christus? [5] an quia ipse est flos de virga profecta ex radice Iesse, radix autem Iesse genus David, virga ex radice Maria ex David, flos ex virga filius Mariae qui dicitur Iesus Christus, ipse erit et fructus? [6] flos enim fructus, quia per florem et ex flore omnis fructus eruditur in fructum. quid ergo? negant et fructui suum florem et flori suam virgam et virgae suam radicem, quominus suam radicem sibi vindicet per virgam proprietatem eius quod ex virga est, floris et fructus: [7] siquidem omnis gradus generis ab ultimo ad principalem recensetur, ut iam nunc carnem Christi non tantum Mariae sed et David per Mariam et Iesse per David sciant adhaerere. adeo hunc fructum ex lumbis

XXII. [1] Deleant igitur et testimonia daemonum filium David proclamantia ad Iesum, sed testimonia apostolorum delere non poterunt, si daemonum indigna sunt. ipse imprimis Matthaeus, fidelissimus evangelii commentator ut comes domini, non aliam ob causam quam ut nos originis Christi carnalis compotes faceret ita exorsus est: Liber generaturae Iesu Christi filii David filii Abrahae. [2] his originis fontibus genere manante cum gradatim ordo deducitur ad Christi nativitatem, quid aliud quam caro ipsa Abrahae et David per singulos traducem sui faciens in virginem usque describitur inferens Christum — immo ipse Christus prodit — de virgine? [3] sed et Paulus, utpote eiusdem evangelii et discipulus et magister et testis, quia eiusdem apostolus Christi, confirmat Christum ex semine David secundum carnem, utique ipsius. ergo ex semine David caro Christi. sed secundum Mariae carnem ex semine David: ergo ex Mariae carne est dum ex semine est David. [4] quocumque detorseris dictum, aut ex carne est Mariae quod ex semine est David, aut ex David semine est quod ex carne est Mariae. totam hanc controversiam dirimit idem apostolus ipsum definiens esse Abrahae semen: cum Abrahae, utique multo magis David, quasi recentioris. [5] retexens enim promissionem benedictionis nationum in semine Abrahae, Et in semine tuo benedicentur omnes nationes, Non, inquit, dixit seminibus tanquam de pluribus, sed semine, de uno, quod est Christus. [6] qui haec nihilominus legimus et credimus, quam debemus et possumus agnoscere in Christo carnis qualitatem? utique non aliam quam Abrahae, siquidem semen Abrahae Christus: nec aliam quam Iesse, siquidem ex radice Iesse flos Christus: nec aliam quam David, siquidem fructus ex lumbis David Christus: nec aliam quam Mariae, siquidem ex Mariae utero Christus: et adhuc superius nec aliam quam Adae, siquidem secundus Adam Christus. consequens ergo est ut aut illos spiritalem carnem habuisse contendat, quo eadem conditio substantiae deducatur in Christum, aut concedant carnem Christi spiritalem non fuisse, quae non de spiritali stirpe censetur.

signum enim nativitatis Christi secundum Esaïam: Propterea dabit vobis dominus ipse signum: ecce virgo concipiet in utero et pariet filium. [2] agnoscimus ergo signum contradicibile conceptum et partum virginis Mariae, de quo Academici isti, ‘Peperit et non peperit virgo et non virgo.’ quasi non, et si ita dicendum esset, a nobis magis dici conveniret: peperit enim quae ex sua carne, et non peperit quae non ex viri semine, et virgo quantum a viro, non virgo quantum a partu — [3] non tamen, ut ideo non peperit quae peperit quia non ex sua carne, et ideo virgo quae non virgo quia non de visceribus suis mater. sed apud nos nihil dubium, nec retortum in ancipitem defensionem: lux lux et tenebrae tenebrae et est est et non non: quod amplius hoc a malo est. peperit quae peperit, et si virgo concepit in partu suo nupsit: [4] nam nupsit ipsa patefacti corporis lege, in quo nihil interfuit de vi masculi admissi an emissi: idem illud sexus resignavit. haec denique vulva est propter quam et de aliis scriptum est, Omne masculinum adaperiens vulvam sanctum vocabitur domino. quis vere sanctus quam sanctus ille dei filius? quis proprie vulvam adaperuit quam qui clausam patefecit? [5] ceteris omnibus nuptiae patefaciunt. itaque magis patefacta est quia magis erat clausa. utique magis non virgo dicenda est quam virgo, saltu quodam mater antequam nupta. et quid ultra de hoc retractandum est? cum hac ratione apostolus non ex virgine sed ex muliere editum filium dei pronuntiavit agnovit adaptatae vulvae nuptialem passionem. [6] legimus quidem apud Ezechielem de vacca illa quae peperit et non peperit: sed videte ne vos iam tunc providens spiritus sanctus notarit hac voce disceptaturos super uterum Mariae. ceterum non contra illam suam simplicitatem pronuntiasset dubitative, Esaia dicente Concipiet et pariet.

XXIV. [1] Quod enim et alias [Esaïas] iaculatur in suggillatione haereticorum ipsorum, et imprimis Vae qui faciunt dulce amarum et tenebras lucem, istos scilicet notat qui nec vocabula ipsa in luce proprietatum suarum conservant ut anima non alia sit quam quae vocatur et caro non alia quam quae videtur et deus non alius quam qui praedicatur. [2] ideo etiam Marcionem prospiciens, Ego sum, inquit, deus, et alius absque me non est. et cum alio idipsum modo dicit, Ante me deus non fuit, nescioquas illas Valentinianorum aeonum genealogias pulsat. et Non ex sanguine neque ex carnis aut viri voluntate sed ex deo natus est, Hebioni respondit. aequè Etiamsi angelus de caelis aliter evangelizaverit vobis quam nos anathema sit, ad energema Apelleiacae virginis Philumenes [filium] dirigit. [3] certe Qui negat Christum in carne venisse hic antichristus est, nudam et absolutam et simplici nomine naturae suae pronuntians carnem, omnes disceptatores eius ferit, sicut et definiens ipsum quoque Christum unum multiformis Christi argumentatores quatit, qui alium faciunt Christum alium Iesum, alium elapsam de mediis turbis alium detentum, alium in secessu montis in ambitu nubis sub tribus arbitris clarum alium ceteris passivum, <alium nobilem alium> ignobilem, alium magnanimum alium vero trepidantem, novissime alium passum alium resuscitatum, per quod suam quoque in aliam carnem resurrectionem adseverant. [4] sed bene quod idem veniet de caelis qui est passus, idem omnibus apparebit qui est resuscitatus, et videbunt et agnoscent qui eum confixerunt, utique ipsam carnem in quam saevierunt, sine qua nec ipse esse poterit nec agnosci: ut et illi erubescant qui adfirmant carnem in caelis vacuum sensu ut vaginam exempto Christo sedere, aut qui carnem et animam tantundem, aut tantummodo animam carnem vero non iam.

XXV. [1] Sed hactenus de materia praesenti. satis iam enim arbitror instructam esse carnis in Christo et ex virgine natae et humanae probationem. quod et solum discussum sufficere potuisset — citra singularum ex diverso opinionum congressionem quam et argumentationibus earum et scripturis quibus utuntur provocavimus ex abundanti — uti cum eo quod probavimus quid et unde fuerit Christi caro, quid non fuerit adversus omnes praeiudicaverimus. [2] ut autem clausula de praefatione commonefaciat, resurrectio nostrae carnis alio libello defendenda hic habebit praestructionem, manifesto iam inde quale fuerit quod in Christo resurrexerit.

De Resurrectione Carnis (On the Resurrection of Flesh)

I. [1] Fiducia Christianorum resurrectio mortuorum: illam credentes hoc sumus. Hoc credere veritas cogit: veritatem deus aperit. [2] Sed vulgus inridet, existimans nihil superesse post mortem: et tamen defunctis parentat, et quidem impensissimo officio pro moribus eorum, pro temporibus esculentorum, ut quos negant sentire quidquam etiam desiderare praesumant. [3] At ego magis ridebo vulgus tunc quoque cum ipsos defunctos atrocissime exurit, quos postmodum gulosissime nutrit, isdem ignibus et promerens et offendens. O pietatem de crudelitate ludentem! sacrificat an insultat cum crematis cremat? [4] Plane cum vulgo interdum et sapientes sententiam suam iungunt. Nihil esse post mortem Epicuri schola est: ait et Seneca omnia post mortem finiri, etiam ipsam. [5] Satis est autem si non minor sententia Pythagorae, et Empedocles et Platonici, immortalem animam e contrario reclamant, immo adhuc proxime etiam in corpora remeabilem adfirmant, etsi non in eadem, etsi non in humana tantummodo, ut Euphorbus in Pythagoram, ut Homerus in pavum recenseantur. [6] Certe recidivatum animae corporalem pronuntiaverunt, tolerabilius mutata quam negata qualitate, pulsata saltem licet non adita veritate. Ita saeculum resurrectionem mortuorum nec cum errat ignorat.

II. [1] Si vero et apud deum aliqua secta est Epicureis magis adfinis quam prophetis, sciemus quid audiant a Christo Sadducaei. Christo enim servabatur omnia retro occulta nudare, dubitata dirigere, praelibata supplere, praedicata repraesentare, mortuorum certe resurrectionem non modo per semetipsum verum etiam in semetipso probare. [2] Nunc autem ad alios Sadducaeos praeparamur, partiaris sententiae illorum: dimidiam agnoscunt resurrectionem, solius scilicet animae, ita aspernati carnem sicut et ipsum dominum carnis. Nulli denique alii salutem corporali substantiae invident quam alterius divinitatis haeretici. [3] Ideoque et Christum aliter disponere coacti, ne creatoris habeatur, in ipsa prius carne eius erraverunt, aut nullius veritatis contendentes eam secundum Marcionem et Basiliden, aut propriae qualitatis secundum heredes Valentini et Apellen. [4] Atque ita sequitur ut salutem eius substantiae excludant cuius Christum consortem negant, certi illam summo praeiudicio resurrectionis instructam si iam in Christo resurrexerit caro. [5] Propterea et nos volumen praemisimus de carne Christi, quo eam et solidam probamus adversum phantasmatis vanitatem et humanam vindicamus adversus qualitatis proprietatem, cuius condicio Christum et hominem et filium hominis inscripserit. [6] Carneum enim atque corporeum probantes eum, proinde et obducimus praescribendo nullum alium credendum deum praeter creatorem, dum talem ostendimus Christum in quo dinoscitur deus, qualis promittitur a creatore. Obducti dehinc de deo carnis auctore et de Christo carnis redemptore, iam et de resurrectione carnis revincentur, congruente scilicet et deo carnis auctori et Christo carnis redemptori. [7] Hoc ferme modo dicimus ineundam cum haereticis disceptationem: nam et ordo semper a principalibus deduci exposcit, ut de ipso prius constet a quo dicatur dispositum esse quod quaeritur. [8] Atque adeo et haeretici ex conscientia infirmitatis nunquam ordinarie tractant. Certi enim quam laborent in alterius divinitatis insinuatione adversum deum mundi omnibus naturaliter notum de testimoniis operum, certe et in sacramentis priorem et in praedicationibus manifestatiorem, sub obtentu quasi urgentioris causae, id est ipsius humanae salutis ante omnia requirendae, a quaestionibus resurrectionis incipiunt, quia durius creditur resurrectio carnis quam una divinitas. [9] Atque ita tractatum viribus ordinis sui destitutum et scrupulis potius oneratum depretiantibus carnem paulatim ad alterius divinitatis temperant sensum ex ipsa spei concussione et demutatione. [10] Deiectus enim unusquisque vel motus de gradu eius spei quam suscepit apud creatorem, facile iam declinatur ad alterius spei auctorem etiam ultro suspicandum: per diversitatem enim promissionum diversitas insinuat deorum. Sic multos inretitos videmus, dum ante de resurrectione carnis eliduntur quam de unionem divinitatis elidunt. [11] Igitur quantum ad haereticos demonstravimus quo cuneo <oc>currentum sit a nobis. Et occursum est iam suo quoque titulo: de deo quidem unico et Christo eius adversus Marcionem: de carne vero domini adversus quattuor haereses ad hanc maxime quaestionem praestruendam: uti nunc de sola carnis resurrectione ita et digerendum sit tanquam penes nos quoque incerta, id est penes creatorem — nam et multi rudes, et plerique sua fide dubii, et simplices plures, quos instrui dirigi muniri oportebit — quia ex hoc latere unio divinitatis defenditur: sicut enim negata carnis resurrectione concutitur, ita vindicata constabillitur. [12] Animae autem salutem credo retractatu carere: omnes enim fere haeretici eam, quoquo modo volunt, tamen non negant. Viderit unus aliqui Lucanus ne huic quidem substantiae parcens, quam secundum Aristotelem dissolvens aliud quid pro ea subicit, tertium quiddam resurrecturus, neque anima neque caro, id est non homo, sed ursus forsitan qua Lucanus. [13] Habet et iste a nobis plenissimum de omni statu animae stilum: quam imprimis immortalem tuentes, solius carnis et defectionem agnoscimus et refectionem cum maxime adserimus, redactis in ordinarium materiae corpus si quae et alibi pro causarum incursione praestrieta distulimus. [14] Nam ut quaedam praelibari sollemne est, ita et differri necesse est, dummodo et praelibata suppleantur suo corpore et dilata reddantur suo nomine.

III. [1] Est quidem et de communibus sensibus sapere in dei rebus, sed in testimonium veri, non in adiutorium falsi, quod sit secundum divinam, non contra divinam dispositionem. Quaedam enim et naturaliter nota sunt, ut immortalitas animae penes plures, ut deus noster penes omnes. [2] Vtar ergo et sententia Platonis alicuius pronuntiantis, ‘Omnis anima immortalis’: utar et conscientia populi contestantis deum deorum: utar et reliquis communibus sensibus qui deum iudicem praedicant, ‘Deus videt’ et ‘Deo commendo’. [3] At cum aiunt ‘Mortuum quod mortuum’ et ‘Vive dum vivis’ et ‘Post mortem omnia finiuntur, etiam ipsa’, tunc meminero et cor vulgi cinerem a deo deputatum et ipsam sapientiam saeculi stultitiam pronuntiatam, tunc si haereticus ad vulgi vitia vel saeculi ingenia confugerit, ‘Discede dicam ab ethnico, haeretice: etsi unum estis omnes qui deum fingitis, dum tamen hoc in Christi nomine facis, dum Christianus tibi videris, alius ab ethnico es: redde illi suos sensus, quia nec ille de tuis instruitur: [4] quid caeco duce niteris si vides? Quid vestiris a nudo si Christum induisti? Quid alieno uteris clipeo si ab apostolo armatus es? Ille a te potius discat carnis resurrectionem confiteri quam tu ab illo diffiteri: quia si et a Christianis negari eam oporteret sufficeret illis de sua scientia non de vulgi ignorantia instrui.’ [5] Adeo non erit Christianus qui eam negabit quam confitentur Christiani, et his argumentis negabit quibus utuntur non Christiani. [6] Aufer denique haereticis quae cum ethnicis sapiunt, ut de scripturis solis quaestiones suas sistant, et stare non poterunt. Communes enim sensus simplicitas ipsa commendat et compassio sententiarum et familiaritas opinionum, eoque fideiiores existimantur quia nuda et aperta et omnibus nota definiunt: ratio autem divina in medulla est, non in superficie, et plerumque aemula manifestis.

IV. [1] Itaque haeretici inde statim incipiunt et inde praestruunt, dehinc et interstruunt, unde sciunt facile capi mentes de communione favorabili sensuum. [2] An aliud prius vel magis audias < tam > ab haeretico quam ab ethnico, et non protenus et non ubique convicium carnis, in originem in materiam in casum, in omnem exitum eius, immundae a primordio ex faecibus terrae, immundioris deinceps ex seminis sui limo, frivolae infirmae criminosaе molestae onerosae, et post totum ignobilitatis elogium caducae in originem terrae et cadaveris nomen, et de isto quoque nomine periturae in nullum inde iam nomen, in omnis iam vocabuli mortem? [3] ‘Hancne ergo, vir sapiens, et visui et contactui et recordatui tuo ereptam persuadere vis quod se receptura quandoque sit in integrum de corrupto, in solidum de casso, in plenum de inanito, in aliquid omnino de nihilo, et utique redhibentibus eam ignibus et undis et alvis ferarum et rumis alitum et lactibus piscium et ipsorum temporum propria gula? [4] Adeone autem eadem sperabitur quae intercidit ut claudus et luscus et caecus et leprosus et paralyticus revertantur, ut redisse non libeat, ad pristinum: an integri, ut iterum talia pati timeant? [5] Quid tum de consequentiis carnis? rursusne omnia necessaria illi, et imprimis pabula atque potacula? Et pulmonibus natandum et intestinis aestuandum et pudendis non pudendum et omnibus membris laborandum? [6] Rursus ulcera et vulnera et febris et podagra et mors readoptanda? nimirum haec erunt vota carnis recuperandae, iterum cupere de ea evadere.’ [7] Et nos quidem haec aliquanto honestius pro stili pudore: ceterum quantum etiam spurciloquio liceat, illorum < est > in congressibus experiri tam ethnicorum quam haeticorum.

V. [1] Igitur quoniam et rudes quique de communibus adhuc sensibus sapiunt, et dubii et simplices per eosdem sensus denuo inquietantur, et ubique primus iste in nos aries temperatur quo carnis condicio quassatur, necessario et a nobis carnis primum condicio muniatur, vituperatione laudatione depulsa: ita nos rhetoricari quoque provocant haeretici, sicut etiam philosophari philosophi. [2] Futtile et frivolum istud corpusculum, quod malum denique appellare non horrent, etsi angelorum fuisset operatio ut Menandro et Marco placet, etsi ignei alicuius extractio aequae angeli ut Apelles docet, sufficeret ad auctoritatem carnis secundae divinitatis patrocinium: angelos post deum novimus. [3] Iam nunc quisquis ille summus deus haeretici cuiusque est, non immerito ab ipso quoque deducere carnis dignitatem a quo voluntas producendae eius adfuisset: utique enim prohibuisset fieri quam fieri scisset, si fieri noluisset. Itaque et secundum illos aequae caro dei res: nihil operis non eius est qui passus est esse. [4] Bene autem quod et plures et duriores quaeque doctrinae totam hominis figurationem deo nostro cedunt. Quantus hic sit satis nosti qui unicum credidisti. Incipiat iam tibi caro placere cuius artifex tantus est. [5] ‘Sed et mundus iste, inquis, dei opus est, et tamen praeterit habitus mundi huius, apostolo quoque auctore, nec ideo restitutio mundi praeiudicabitur quia dei opus est: et utique si universitas inreformabilis post decessum, quid portio?’ Plane, si portio universitati adaequatur. [6] Ad distantias enim provocamus. Primo quidem, quod omnia sermone dei facta sunt et sine illo nihil, caro autem et sermone dei constitit propter formam, ne quid sine sermone — Faciamus enim hominem ante praemisit — et amplius manu propter praelationem, ne universitati compararetur — Et finxit inquit deus hominem — [7] magnae sine dubio differentiae ratio, pro condicione scilicet rerum: minora enim quae fiebant eo cui fiebant, siquidem homini fiebant cui mox a deo addicta sunt. Merito igitur, ut famula, iussu et imperio et sola vocali potestate universa processerant; contra homo, ut dominus eorum, in hoc ab ipso deo extractus est ut dominus esse possit dum fit a domino. [8] Hominem autem memento carnem proprie dici, quae prior vocabulum hominis occupavit. Et finxit deus hominem limum de terra: iam homo qui adhuc limus: Et insufflavit in faciem eius flatum vitae et factus est homo, id est limus, in animam vivam, et posuit deus hominem quem finxit in paradiso. Adeo homo figmentum primo, dehinc totus. [9] Hoc eo commendarim uti quidquid omnino homini a deo prospectum atque promissum est non soli animae verum et carni scias debitum, ut si non ex consortio generis certe vel ex privilegio nominis.

VI. [1] Persequar itaque propositum, si tamen tantum possim carni vindicare quantum contulit ille qui eam fecit, iam tunc gloriantem quod illa pusillitas limus in manus dei, quaecumque sunt, pervenit, satis beatus etsi solummodo contactus. [2] Quid enim si nullo amplius opere statim figmentum de contactu dei constitisset? Adeo magna res agebatur quod ista materia extruebatur. Itaque totiens honoratur quotiens manus dei patitur, dum tangitur, dum decerpitur, dum deducitur, dum effingitur. [3] Recogita totum illi deum occupatum ac deditum, manu sensu opere consilio sapientia providentia, et ipsa imprimis adfectione quae liniamenta dictabat: quodcumque enim limus exprimebatur, Christus cogitabatur homo futurus quod et limus, et sermo caro quod et terra tunc. [4] Sic enim praefatio patris ad filium, Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram: et fecit hominem deus, id utique quod finxit: ad imaginem dei fecit illum, scilicet Christi. Et sermo enim deus, qui in effigie dei constitutus non rapinam existimavit parari deo. [5] Ita limus ille iam tunc imaginem induens Christi futuri in carne non tantum dei opus erat sed et pignus. Quo nunc facit ad infuscandam originem carnis nomen terrae ventilare ut sordentis ut iacentis elementi, cum et si alia materia excudendo homini competisset artificis fastigium recogitari oporteret qui illam et eligendo dignam iudicasset et tractando fecisset? [6] Phidiae manus Iovem. Olympium ex ebore molitae adorantur: nec iam bestiae et quidem insulsissimae dens est sed summum saeculi numen, non quia elephantus sed quia Phidias tantus: deus vivus et deus verus quamcunque materiae vilitatem nonne de sua operatione purgasset et ab omni infirmitate sanasset? An hoc supererit, ut honestius homo deum quam hominem deus finxerit? [7] Nunc et si scandalum limus, alia iam res est. Carnem iam teneo, non terram: licet et caro audiat, Terra es et in terram redibis, origo recensetur, non substantia revocatur. [8] Datum est esse aliquid origine generosius et demutatione felicius: nam et aurum terra quia de terra, hactenus tamen terra est ex quo aurum, longe alia materia, splendidior atque nobilior, de obsoletiore matrice. Ita et deo licuit carnis aurum de limi quibus putas sordibus excusato censu eliquasse.

VII. [1] Sed ne dilutior videatur auctoritas carnis quia non et ipsam proprie manus divina tractavit sicut limum, quando in hoc tractaverit limum ut postmodum caro fieret ex limo carni utique negotium gessit. [2] Sed adhuc velim discas quando et quomodo caro floruerit ex limo. Neque enim, ut quidam volunt, illae pelliciae tunicae quas Adam et Eva paradysum exuti induerunt, ipsae erunt carnis ex limo reformatio, cum aliquanto prius et Adam substantiae suae traducem in feminae iam carne recognoverit — Hoc nunc os ex ossibus meis et caro ex carne mea — et ipsa delibatio masculi in feminam carne suppleta sit, limo opinor supplenda si Adam adhuc limus. [3] Obliteratus igitur et devoratus est limus in carnem. Quando? Cum factus est homo in animam vivam de dei flatu, vaporeo scilicet et idoneo torrere quodammodo limum in aliam qualitatem, quasi in testam ita et in carnem. [4] Sic et figulo licet argillam temperato ignis adflatu in materiam robustiorem recorporare et aliam ex alia stringere speciem, aptiorem pristina et sui iam generis ac nominis. [5] Nam etsi scriptum est, Numquid argilla dicet figulo, id est homo deo; et si apostolus In testaceis ait vasculis: tamen et argilla homo quia limus ante, et testa caro quia ex limo per adflatus divini vaporem. [6] Quam postea pelliciae tunicae, id est cutes, superductae vestierunt: usque adeo, si detraxeris cutem nudaveris carnem. Ita quod hodie spoliū efficitur si detrahatur, hoc fuit indumentum cum superstruebatur. Hinc et apostolus circumcisionem despoliationem carnis appellans tunicam cutem confirmavit. [7] Haec cum ita sint, habes et limum de manu dei gloriosum, et carnem de adflatu dei gloriosiore, quo pariter caro et limi rudimenta deposuit et animae ornamenta suscepit. [8] Non es diligentior deo, uti tu quidem Scythicas et Indicas gemmas et rubentis maris grana candentia non plumbo non aere non ferro neque argento quoque oblaquees sed delectissimo et insuper operosissimo de scrobibus auro, vinis item et unguentis pretiosissimis quibusque vasculorum prius congruentiam cures, proinde perspectae ferruginis gladiis vaginarum adaeques dignitatem, deus vero animae suae umbram, spiritus sui auram, oris sui operam, vilissimo alicui commiserit capulo et indigne collocando utique damnaverit. [9] Collocavit autem, an potius inseruit et inmiscuit carni? Tanta quidem concretione ut incertum haberi possit utrumne caro animam an carnem anima circumferat, utrumne animae caro an anima adpareat carni. [10] Sed etsi magis animam invehī atque dominari credendum est ut magis deo proximam, hoc quoque ad gloriam carnis exuberat quod proximam deo et continet et ipsius dominationis compotem praestat. [11] Quem enim naturae usum, quem mundi fructum, quem elementorum saporem non per carnem anima depascitur? Quidni? Per quam omni instrumento sensuum fulta est, visu auditu gustu odoratu contactu: per quam divina potestate respersa est, nihil non sermone prospiciens vel tacite praemisso. Et sermo enim de organo carnis est. [12] Artes per carnem, studia ingenia per carnem, opera negotia officia per carnem, atque adeo vivere totum animae carnis est ut non vivere aliud non sit animae quam a carne divertere. Sic etiam ipsum mori carnis est, cuius et vivere. [13] Porro si universa per carnem subiacent animae, carni quoque subiacent: per quod utaris, cum eo utaris necesse est. Ita caro, dum ministra et famula animae deputatur, consors et coheres invenitur: si temporalium, cur non et aeternorum?

VIII. [1] Et haec quidem velut de publica forma humanae condicionis in suffragium carnis procuraverim. Videamus nunc de propria etiam Christiani nominis forma, quanta huic substantiae frivola ac sordida apud deum praerogativa sit. [2] Etsi sufficeret illi quod nulla omnino anima salutem possit adipisci nisi dum est in carne crediderit: adeo caro salutis est cardo, de qua cum anima deo alligatur ipsa est quae efficit ut anima eligi possit a deo. [3] Sed et caro abluitur ut anima emaculetur, caro unguitur ut anima consecratur, caro signatur ut et anima muniatur, caro manus impositione adumbratur ut et anima spiritu illuminetur, caro corpore et sanguine Christi vescitur ut et anima de deo saginetur. Non possunt ergo separari in mercede quas opera coniungit. [4] Nam et sacrificia deo grata, conflictationes dico animae, ieiunia et seras et aridas escas et adpendices huius officii sordes, caro de proprio suo incommodo instaurat. Virginitas quoque et viduitas et modesta in occulto matrimonii dissimulatio et una notitia eius de bonis carnis deo adulantur. [5] Age iam, quid de ea sentis cum pro nominis fide in medium extracta et odio publico exposita decertat, cum in carceribus maceratur taeterrimo lucis exilio penuria mundi squalore paedore contumelia victus, ne somno quidem libera, quippe ipsis etiam cubilibus vincta ipsisque stramentis lancinata, cum iam et in luce omni tormentorum machinatione laniatur, cum denique suppliciis erogatur, enisa reddere Christo vicem moriendo pro ipso, et quidem per eandem crucem saepe, nedum per atrociora quoque ingenia poenarum? [6] Ne illa beatissima et gloriosissima, quae potest apud Christum dominum parere debito tanto, ut hoc solum debeat ei quod ei debere desierit, hoc magis vincta quo absoluta.

IX. [1] Igitur, ut retexam, quam deus manibus suis ad imaginem dei struxit, quam de suo adflatu ad similitudinem suae vivacitatis animavit, quam incolatui fructui dominatui totius suae operationis praeposuit, quam sacramentis suis disciplinisque vestivit, cuius munditias amat, cuius castigationes probat, cuius passiones sibi adpretiat, haecine non resurget, totiens dei res? [2] Absit, absit, ut deus manuum suarum operam, ingenii sui curam, adflatus sui vaginam, molitionis suae reginam, liberalitatis suae heredem, religionis suae sacerdotem, testimonii sui militem, Christi sui sororem, in aeternum destituat interitum. [3] Bonum deum novimus: solum optimum a Christo eius addiscimus. Qui dilectionem mandat post suam in proximum, facit et ipse quod praecipit: diligit carnem tot modis sibi proximam; [4] etsi infirmam, sed virtus in infirmitate perficitur; etsi imbecillam, sed medicum non desiderant nisi male habentes; etsi inhonestam, sed inhonestioribus maiorem circumdamus honorem; etsi perditam, sed Ego inquit veni ut quod periit salvum faciam; etsi peccatricem, sed Malo mihi inquit salutem peccatoris quam mortem; etsi damnatam, sed Ego inquit percutiam et sanabo. [5] Quid ea exprobras carni quae deum expectant, quae in deum sperant? Honorantur ab illo quibus subvenit. Ausim dicere, si haec carni non accidissent, benignitas gratia misericordia, omnis vis dei benefica, vacuisset.

X. [1] Tenes scripturas quibus caro infuscatur: tene etiam quibus illustratur. Legis cum quando deprimitur: adige oculos et cum quando relevatur. [2] Omnis caro foenum: non hoc solum pronuntiavit Esaias, sed et Omnis caro videbit salutare dei. Notatur in Genesi dicens dominus, Non manebit spiritus meus super ipsos homines, quia caro sunt: sed et auditur per Ioelem, Effundam de spiritu meo in omnem carnem. [3] Apostolum quoque ne de uno stilo noris quo carnem plerumque compungit: nam etsi negat habitare quidquam boni in carne sua, etsi adfirmat eos qui in carne sint deo placere non posse, quia caro concupiscat adversum spiritum, et si qua alia ita ponit ut carnis non tamen substantia sed actus oneretur, dicemus quidem alibi nihil proprie carni exprobari oportere nisi in animae suggillationem quae carnem ministerio sibi subigit. [4] Verum interim et in illis litteris Paulus est cum stigmata Christi in corpore suo portat, cum corpus nostrum ut dei templum vitari vetat, cum corpora nostra membra Christi facit, cum monet tollere et magnificare deum in corpore nostro. [5] Itaque si ignominiae carnis resurrectionem eius expellunt, cur non dignitates potius inducent? Quoniam deo magis congruit in salutem redigere quod reprobavit interdum, quam in perditionem dedere quod etiam probavit.

XI. [1] Hucusque de praeconio carnis adversus inimicos et nihilominus amicissimos eius. Nemo enim tam carnaliter vivit quam qui negant carnis resurrectionem: negantes enim et poenam despiciunt et disciplinam. [2] De quibus luculenter et paracletus per prophetidem Priscam ‘Carnes sunt et carnem oderunt’. [3] Quam si tanta auctoritas munit quanta illi ad meritum salutis patrocinari possit, numquid etiam dei ipsius potentiam et potestatem et licentiam recensere debemus, an tantus sit qui valeat dilapsum et devoratum et quibuscumque modis ereptum tabernaculum carnis reaedificare atque restituere? [4] An et aliqua nobis exempla huiusmodi sui iuris in publico naturae promulgavit, ne qui forte adhuc sitiunt deum nosse, qui non alia lege credendus est quam ut omnia posse credatur? [5] Plane apud philosophos habes qui mundum hunc innatum infectumque defendant. Sed multo melius quod omnes fere haereses natum et factum mundum adnuentes conditionem deo nostro adscribunt. [6] Igitur confide illum totum hoc ex nihilo protulisse, et deum nosti fidendo quod tantum deus valeat. Nam et quidam, infirmiores hoc prius credere, de materia potius subiacenti volunt ab illo universitatem dedicatam secundum philosophos. [7] Porro et si ita in vero haberetur, cum tamen longe alias substantias longeque alias species ex reformatione materiae diceretur protulisse quam fuisset ipsa materia, non minus defenderem ex nihilo eum protulisse si ea protulerat quae omnino non fuerant. [8] Quo enim interest ex nihilo quid proferri an ex aliquo dum quod non fuit fiat, quando etiam non fuisse nihil sit fuisse? sic et fuisse e contrario nonnihil est fuisse. [9] Nunc etsi interest tamen utrumque mihi adplaudit. Sive enim ex nihilo deus molitus est cuncta, poterit et carnem in nihilum productam exprimere de nihilo: sive de materia modulatus est alia, poterit et carnem quocumque dehaustam evocare de alio. [10] Et utique idoneus est reficere qui fecit, quanto plus est fecisse quam refecisse, initium dedisse quam reddidisse. Ita restitutionem carnis faciliorem credas institutione.

XII. [1] Aspice nunc ad ipsa quoque exempla divinae potestatis. Dies moritur in noctem et tenebris usquequaque sepelitur; funestatur mundi honor, omnis substantia denigratur: sordent silent stupent cuncta: ubique iustitium est, quies rerum: ita lux amissa lugetur. [2] Et tamen rursus cum suo cultu cum dote cum sole eadem et integra et tota universo orbi revivescit, interficiens mortem suam noctem, rescindens sepulturam suam tenebras, heres sibimet existens, donec et nox revivescat cum suo et illa suggestu. [3] Redaccenduntur enim et stellarum radii quos matutina succensio extinxerat, reducuntur et siderum absentiae quas temporalis distinctio exemerat, redornantur et specula lunae quae menstruus numerus adtriverat. [4] Revolvuntur hiemes et aestates, verna et autumnus, cum suis viribus moribus fructibus. Quippe etiam terrae de caelo disciplina est, arbores vestire post spolia, flores denuo colorare, herbas rursus imponere, exhibere eadem quae absumpta sunt semina, nec prius exhibere quam absumpta. [5] Mira ratio: de fraudatrice servatrix, ut reddat intercipit, ut custodiat perdit, interficit ut vivificet, ut integret vitiat, ut etiam ampliet prius decoquit, siquidem et uberiora et cultiora restituit quam exterminavit, re vera fenore interitu et iniuria usura et lucro damno. [6] Semel dixerim, universa conditio recidiva est: quodcumque conveneris fuit, quodcumque amiseris erit: nihil non iterum est: omnia in statum redeunt cum abscesserint, omnia incipiunt cum desierint: ideo finiuntur ut fiant: nihil deperit nisi in salutem. [7] Totus igitur hic ordo revolubilis rerum testatio est resurrectionis mortuorum: operibus eam praescrispsit deus ante quam litteris, viribus praedicavit ante quam vocibus. [8] Praemisit tibi naturam magistram, submissurus et prophetiam, quo facilius credas prophetiae discipulus ante naturae, quo statim admittas cum audieris quod ubique iam videris, nec dubites deum carnis etiam resuscitatore[m] quem omnium noveris restitutorem. [9] Et utique si omnia homini resurgunt cui procurata sunt, porro non homini nisi et carni, quale est ut ipsa depereat in totum propter quam et cui nihil deperit?

XIII. [1] Si parum universitas resurrectionem figurat, si nihil tale conditio signat, quia singula eius non tam mori quam desinere dicantur, nec redanimari sed reformari existimentur, accipe plenissimum atque firmissimum huius spei specimen, siquidem animalis est res, et vitae obnoxia et morti. [2] Illum dico alitem orientis peculiarem, de singularitate famosum, de posteritate monstruosum, qui semetipsum libenter funerans renovat, natali fine decedens atque succedens, iterum phoenix ubi nemo iam, iterum ipse qui non iam, alius idem. [3] Quid expressius atques signatius in hanc causam, aut cui alii rei tale documentum? Deus etiam in scripturis suis, Et florebis enim inquit velut phoenix, id est de morte, de funere, uti credas de ignibus quoque substantiam corporis exigi posse. [4] Multis passeribus antestare nos dominus pronuntiavit: si non et phoenicibus, nihil magnum. Sed homines semel interibunt, avibus Arabiae de resurrectione securis?

XIV. [1] Talia interim divinarum virium liniamenta non minus parabolis operato deo quam locuto, veniamus et ad ipsa edicta atque decreta eius, quo cum maxime divisionem istam materiae ordinamus. [2] Exorsi enim ab auctoritate carnis, an ea sit cui dilapsae salus competat, dehinc prosecuti de potentia dei, an tanta sit quae salutem conferre dilapsae rei soleat, [3] nunc si probavimus utrumque velim etiam de causa requiras, an sit aliqua taten digna quae resurrectionem carnis necessariam et rationi certe omni modo debitam vindicet: quia subest dicere, etsi caro capax restitui, etsi divinitas idonea restituendi, sed causa restitutionis praeesse debebit. [4] Accipe igitur et causam, qui apud deum discis tam optimum quam et iustum, de suo optimum, de nostro iustum. Nisi enim homo deliquisset, optimum solummodo deum nosset ex naturae proprietate: at nunc etiam iustum eum patitur ex causae suae necessitate, tamen et hoc ipso optimum dum et iustum. [5] Et bono enim iuvando et malo puniendo iustitiam exhibens utramque sententiam bono praestat, hinc vindicans istud inde remunerans illud. [6] Sed cum Marcione plenius discas an hoc sit dei totum. Interim talis est noster, merito iudex quia dominus, merito dominus quia auctor, merito auctor quia deus. [7] Hinc et ille nescio quis haereticorum merito non iudex, non enim dominus: merito non dominus, non enim auctor: nescio iam si deus, qui nec auctor quod deus, nec dominus quod auctor. [8] Igitur si deo et domino et auctori congruentissimum est iudicium in hominem destinare de hoc ipso an dominum et auctorem suum agnoscere et observare curarit an non, idque iudicium resurrectio expunget, haec erit tota causa immo necessitas resurrectionis, congruentissima scilicet deo destinatio iudicii. [9] De cuius dispositione dispicias an utrique substantiae humanae diiudicandae censura divina praesideat, tam animae quam et carni: quod enim congruet iudicari, hoc competet etiam resuscitari. [10] Dicimus plenum primo perfectumque credendum iudicium dei, ut ultimum iam atque exinde perpetuum, ut sic quoque iustum dum non in aliquo minus, ut sic quoque deo dignum dum pro tanta eius patientia plenum atque perfectum: itaque plenitudinem perfectionemque iudicii nonnisi de totius hominis repraesentatione constare: [11] totum porro hominem ex utriusque substantiae congregatione parere, idcircoque in utraque exhibendum quem totum oporteat iudicari, qui nisi totus non vixerit: qualis ergo vixerit talem iudicatum iri, quia de eo quod vixerit habeat iudicari. Vita est enim causa iudicii, per tot substantias dispungenda per quot et functa est.

XV. [1] Age iam scindant adversarii nostri carnis animaeque contextum prius in vitae administratione ut ita audeant scindere illud etiam in vitae remuneratione: negent operarum societatem, ut merito possint etiam mercedum negare. [2] Non sit particeps in sententia caro si non fuerat et in causa: sola anima revocetur si sola decedit. At enim non magis sola decedit quam sola decucurrit illud unde decedit, vitam hanc dico. [3] Adeo autem non sola anima transigit vitam ut nec cogitatus, licet solos, licet non ad effectum per carnem deductos, auferamus a collegio carnis, siquidem in carne et cum carne et per carnem agitur ab anima quod agitur in corde. [4] Hanc denique carnis speciem, arcem animae, etiam dominus in suggillatione cogitatum taxat: Quid cogitatis in cordibus vestris nequam? et, Qui conspexerit ad concupiscendum iam adulteravit in corde: adeo et sine opere et sine effectum cogitatus carnis est actus. [5] Sed etsi in cerebro vel in medio superciliorum discrimine vel ubi ubi philosophis placet principalitas sensuum consecrata est, quod h(gemoniko&n appellatur, caro erit omne animae cogitatorium. Nunquam anima sine carne est quamdiu in carne est: nihil non cum illa agit sine qua non est. [6] Quaere adhuc an cogitatus quoque per carnem administrantur qui per carnem dinoscuntur extrinsecus: volutet aliquid anima, vultus operatur indicium; facies intentionum omnium speculum est. Negent factorum societatem cui negare non possunt cogitatorum. [7] Et illi quidem delinquentias carnis enumerant: ergo peccatrix tenebitur supplicio: nos vero etiam virtutes carnis opponimus: ergo et bene operata tenebitur praemio. Et si anima est quae agit et impellit in omnia, carnis obsequium est. [8] Sed deum non licet aut iniustum iudicem credi aut inertem — iniustum si sociam bonorum operum a praemiis arceat, inertem si sociam malorum a suppliciis secernat — cum humana censura eo perfectior habeatur quo etiam ministros facti cuiusque deposcit, nec parcens nec invidens illis quominus cum auctoribus aut poenae aut gratiae communicent fructum.

XVI. [1] Sed cum imperium animae obsequium carni distribuimus, prospiciendum est ne et hoc alia argumentatione subvertant, ut velint carnem sic in officio animae conlocare, non quasi ministram ne et sociam cogantur agnoscere. [2] Dicent enim ministros et socios habere arbitrium ministrandi atque sociandi, et potestatem suae voluntatis in utrumque, homines scilicet et ipsos: idcirco cum auctoribus merita communicare quibus operam sponte accommodarint: [3] carnem autem nihil sapientem nihil sentientem per semetipsam, non velle non nolle de suo habentem, vice potius vasculi adparere animae, ut instrumentum non ut ministerium: [4] itaque animae solius iudicium praesidere, qualiter usa sit vasculo carnis, vasculum vero ipsum non esse sententiae obnoxium: quia nec calicem damnari si quis eum veneno temperarit, nec gladium ad bestias pronuntiari si quis eo latrocinium fuerit operatus. [5] Iam ergo innocens caro ex ea parte qua non reputabuntur illi operae malae, et nihil prohibet innocentiae nomine salvam eam fieri. Licet enim nec bona opera deputentur illi sicut nec mala, divinae tamen benignitati magis competit innocentes liberare: beneficos enim debet: optimi est autem etiam quod non debetur offerre. [6] Et tamen calicem, non dico venenarium in quem mors aliqua ructuarit, sed frictricis vel archigalli vel gladiatoris aut carnificis spiritu infectum, quaero an minus damnes quam oscula ipsorum.

Nostris quoque sordibus nubilum vel non pro animo temperatum elidere solemus quo magis puero irascamur: [7] gladium vero latrocinii ebrium quis non a domo tota, nedum a cubiculo, nedum a capitis sui officio relegabit, praesumens scilicet nihil aliud se quam invidiam animarum somniaturum urgulentium et inquietantium sanguinis sui concubinum? [8] At enim et calix bene sibi conscius et de diligentia ministri commendatus de coronis quoque potatoris sui inornabitur aut aspergine florum honorabitur, et gladius bene de bello cruentus et melior homicida laudem suam consecratione pensabit. [9] ‘Estne ergo et in vascula et in instrumenta sententiam figere, ut dominorum et auctorum meritis et ipsa communicent?’ [10] Et huic quoque argumentationi satisfecerim, licet ab exemplo vacet diversitas rerum. Omne enim vas vel instrumentum aliunde in usus venit, extranea omnino materia a substantia hominis: caro autem, ab exordio uteri consata conformata congenita animae, etiam in omni operatione miscetur illi. [11] Nam etsi vas vocatur apud apostolum, quod iubet in honore tractari, eadem tamen ab eodem homo exterior appellatur, ille scilicet limus qui prior titulo hominis incisus est, non calicis aut gladii aut vasculi ullius. [12] Vas enim capacitatis nomine dicta est qua animam capit et continet, homo vero de communione naturae quae eam non instrumentum in operationibus praestat sed ministerium. Ita et ministerium tenebitur iudicio, etsi de suo nihil sapiat, quia portio est eius quae sapit, non supellex. [13] Hoc et apostolus sciens, nihil carnem agere per semetipsam quod non animae deputetur, nihilominus peccatricem iudicat carnem, ne eo quod ab anima videatur impelli, iudicio liberata credatur. [14] Sic et cum aliquas laudis operas carni indicit — Glorificate, tollite deum in corpore vestro — certus et hos conatus ab anima agi, idcirco tamen et carni eos mandat quia et illi fructum repromittit. [15] Alioquin nec exprobratio competisset in alienam culpae nec adhortatio in extraneam gloriae: et exprobratio enim et exhortatio vacarent erga carnem si vacaret et merces quae in resurrectione captatur.

XVII. [1] Simplicior quisque fautor sententiae nostrae putabit carnem etiam idcirco repraesentandam esse iudicio quia aliter anima non capiat passionem tormenti seu refrigerii, utpote incorporalis: hoc enim vulgus existimat. [2] Nos autem animam corporalem et hic profiteamur et in suo volumine probavimus, habentem proprium genus substantiae <ac> soliditatis per quam quid et sentire et pati possit: nam et nunc animas torqueri foverique penes inferos, licet

nudas, licet adhuc exules carnis, probabit Lazari exemplum. [3] Dedi igitur adversario dicere, 'Ergo, quae habet corpulentiam propriam, de suo sufficiet ad facultatem passionis et sensus, ut non egeat repraesentatione carnis'. Immo et eatenus egebit, non qua sentire quid sine carne non possit sed qua necesse est illam etiam cum carne sentire: [4] quantum enim ad agendum de suo sufficit, tantum et ad patiendum. Ad agendum autem minus de suo sufficit: habet enim de suo solummodo cogitare velle cupere disponere, ad perficiendum autem operam carnis expectat. [5] Sic itaque ad patiendum societatem carnis expostulat, ut tam plene per eam pati possit quam sine ea plene agere non potuit. Et ideo in quae de suo sufficit, eorum interim sententiam pendit, concupiscentiae et cogitatus et voluntatis. [6] Porro si haec satis essent ad plenitudinem meritorum, ut non requirerentur et facta, sufficeret anima ad perfectionem iudicii, de istis iudicanda in quae agenda sola suffecerat. [7] Cum vero etiam facta devincta sint meritis, facta autem per carnem administrentur, iam non sufficit animam sine carne foveri sive cruciari pro operibus etiam carnis, etsi habet corpus, etsi habet membra, quae proinde illi non sufficiunt ad sentiendum plene quemadmodum nec ad agendum perfecte. [8] Idcirco pro quo modo egit, pro eo et patitur apud inferos, prior degustans iudicium sicut prior induxit admissum, expectans tamen et carnem ut per illam etiam facta compenset cui cogitata mandavit. [9] Denique haec erit ratio in ultimum finem destinati iudicii, ut exhibitione carnis omnis divina censura perfici possit: alioquin non sustineretur in finem quod et nunc animae decerpunt apud inferos, si solis animabus destinaretur.

XVIII. [1] Hucusque praestructionibus egerim ad muniendos sensus omnium scripturarum quae carnis recidivatum pollicentur. Cui cum tot auctoritates iustorum patrocinatorum procurent — honores dico substantiae ipsius, tum vires dei, tum exempla earum, tum rationes iudicii et necessitates ipsius — utique secundum praeiudicia tot auctoritatum scripturas intellegi oportebit, non secundum ingenia haereticorum de sola incredulitate venientia, quia incredibile habeatur restitui substantiam interitu subductam, non quia aut substantiae ipsi inemeribile sit aut deo impossibile aut iudicio inhabile. [2] Plane incredibile, si nec praedicatum divinitus fuerit: nisi quod etsi praedicatum id a deo non fuisset ultro praesumi debuisset, ut propterea non praedicatum quia tot auctoritatibus praeiudicatum. [3] At cum divinis quoque vocibus personat, tanto abest ut aliter intellegatur quam desiderant illa a quibus etiam sine divinis vocibus persuadetur. [4] Videamus igitur hoc primum, quonam titulo spes ista proscripta sit. Unum opinor apud omnes edictum dei pendet, RESURRECTIO MORTUORUM: duo verba expedita decisa detersa. Ipsa conveniam, ipsa discutiam, cui se substantiae addicant. [5] Cum audio resurrectionem homini imminere, quaeram necesse est quid eius cadere sortitum sit, siquidem nihil resurgere expectabit nisi quod ante succiderit. Qui ignorat carnem cadere per mortem potest eam nec stantem nosse per vitam. [6] Sententiam dei natura pronuntiat, Terra es et in terram ibis: et qui non audit videt: nulla mors non ruina membrorum est. Hanc corporis sortem dominus quoque expressit cum ipsa substantia indutus, Diruite inquit templum istud et ego illud triduo resuscitabo: [7] ostendit enim cuius sit dirui, cuius elidi, cuius et relevari et resuscitari — quanquam et animam circumferret trepidantem usque ad mortem sed non cadentem per mortem — quia et scriptura, De corpore inquit suo dixerat. [8] Atque adeo caro est quae morte subruitur, ut exinde a cadendo cadaver enuntietur. Anima porro nec vocabulo cadit, quia nec habitu ruit: atquin ipsa est quae ruinam corpori infert cum efflata est, sicut ipsa est quae illud de terra suscitavit cum inflata est. Non potest cadere quae suscitavit ingressa: non potest ruere quae elidit egressa. [9] Artius dicam: ne in somnum quidem cadit anima cum corpore, ne tum quidem sternitur cum carne, sedenim agitur in somnis et iactitur: quiesceret autem si iaceret, et iaceret si caderet: ita nec in veritate mortis cadit quae nec in imagine eius ruit. [10] Sequens nunc vocabulum ‘mortuorum’ aequè dispice cui substantiae insideat. Quanquam in hac materia admittamus interdum mortalitatem animae adsignari ab haereticis, ut si anima mortalis resurrectionem consecutura est praeiudicium sit et carni non minus mortali resurrectionem communicaturae, sed nunc proprietas vocabuli vindicanda est suae sorti. [11] Iam quidem eo ipso quod resurrectio caducae rei est, id est carnis, eadem erit et in nomine mortui: quia caducae rei est resurrectio quae dicitur mortuorum. [12] Sic et per Abraham patrem fidei, divinae familiaritatis virum, discimus: postulans enim Sarrae humanae locum de filiis Heth, Date ergo inquit mihi possessionem sepulchri vobiscum et humabo mortuum meum, carnem scilicet: neque enim animae humanae spatium desiderasset, etsi anima mortalis crederetur, etsi ‘mortuus’ dici mereretur. Quodsi ‘mortuus’ corpus est, corporum erit proprie resurrectio, cum dicitur ‘mortuorum’.

XIX. [1] Et haec itaque dispectio tituli et praeconii ipsius, fidem utique

defendens vocabulorum, illuc proficere debebit ut si quid diversa pars turbat obtentu figurarum et aenigmatum manifestiora quaeque praevaleant et de incertis certiora praescribant. [2] Nacti enim quidam sollemnissimam eloquii prophetici formam, allegorici et figurati plerumque, non tamen semper, resurrectionem quoque mortuorum, manifeste adnuntiatam, in imaginariam significationem distorquent, adserentes ipsam etiam mortem spiritaliter intellegendam: [3] non enim hanc esse in vero quae sit in medio, discidium carnis atque animae, sed ignorantiam dei per quam homo mortuus deo non minus in errore iacuerit quam in sepulchro: [4] itaque et resurrectionem eam vindicandam qua quis adita veritate redanimatus et revivificatus deo, ignorantiae morte discussa, velut de sepulchro veteris hominis eruperit, quia et dominus scribas et pharisaeos sepulchris dealbatis adaequaverit: [5] exinde ergo, resurrectionem fide consecutos, cum domino esse quem in baptismo induerint. [6] Hoc denique ingenio etiam in colloquiis saepe nostros decipere consueverunt quasi et ipsi resurrectionem carnis admittant: ‘Vae, inquit, qui non in hac carne surrexerit’, ne statim illos percutiant si resurrectionem statim abnuerint. Tacite autem secundum conscientiam suam hoc sentiunt, ‘Vae qui non, dum in hac carne est, cognoverit arcana haeretica’: hoc est enim apud illos resurrectio. [7] Sed et plerique, ab excessu animae resurrectionem vindicantes, de sepulchro exire de saeculo evadere interpretantur, quia et saeculum mortuorum sit habitaculum, id est ignorantium deum, vel etiam de ipso corpore, quia et corpus vice sepulchri conclusam animam in saecularis vitae morte detineat.

XX. [1] Ob huiusmodi igitur coniecturas primam praestruktionem eorum depellam, qua volunt omnia prophetas per imagines contionatos: quando, si ita esset, ne ipsae quidem imagines distinguere potuissent, si non et veritates praedicatae fuissent ex quibus imagines deliniarentur. [2] Atque adeo si omnia figurae, quid erit illud cuius figurae? Quomodo speculum obtendes si nusquam est facies? Adeo autem non omnia imagines sed et veritates, nec omnia umbrae sed et corpora, ut in ipsum quoque dominum insigniora quaeque luce clarius praedicarentur. [3] Nam et virgo concepit in utero non figurate, et peperit Emmanuelem, nobiscum deum [Iesum], non oblique: etsi oblique accepturam virtutem Damasci et spolia Samariae, sed manifeste venturum in iudicium cum presbyteris et archontibus populi. [4] Nam et tumultuatae sunt gentes in persona Pilati, et populi meditati sunt inania in persona Israelis: adstiterunt reges terrae, Herodes, et archontes congregati sunt in unum, Annas et Caiaphas, adversus dominum et adversus Christum eius: [5] qui et tanquam ovis ad iugulationem adductus est, et tanquam agnus ante tondentem, scilicet Herodem, sine voce, sic non aperuit os suum, dorsum suum ponens ad flagella et maxillas ad palmas, et faciem non avertens a sputaminum iaculis: deputatus etiam inter iniquos, perfossus manus et pedes, sortem passus in vestimento et potus amarus et caput inidentium nutus, triginta argenteis adpretiatus a proditore. [6] Quae hic figurae apud Esaiam, quae imagines apud David, quae aenigmata apud Hieremiam, ne virtutes quidem eius per parabolas profatos? Aut numquid nec oculi patefacti sunt caecorum, nec inclaruit lingua mutorum, nec manus aridae et genua dissoluta revaluerunt, nec claudi salierunt ut cervus? [7] Quae etsi spiritualiter quoque interpretari solemus secundum comparisonem animalium vitiorum a domino remediatorum, cum tamen et carnaliter adimpleta sunt ostendunt prophetas in utramque speciem praedicasse, salvo eo quod plures voces eorum nudae et simplices et ab omni allegoriae nubilo purae defendi possunt: [8] ut cum exitus gentium et urbium resonant, Tyri et Aegypti et Babylonis et Idumaeae et Carthaginensium navium, et cum ipsius Israelis plagas aut venias, captivitates restitutiones, ultimaeque dispersionis exitum perorant. [9] Quis haec interpretabitur magis quam recognoscet? res in litteris tenentur, litterae in rebus leguntur. Ita non semper nec in omnibus allegorica forma est prophetici eloquii, sed interdum et in quibusdam.

XXI. [1] Si ergo interdum et in quibusdam, inquires, cur non et in edicto resurrectionis spiritualiter intellegendae? Quoniam quidem plurima ratio intercedit. Primo enim quid facient tot alia instrumenta divina, ita aperte corporalem contestantia resurrectionem ut nullam admittant figuratae significantiae suspicionem? [2] Et utique aequum sit, quod et supra demandavimus, incerta de certis et obscura de manifestis praeiudicari, vel ne inter discordiam certorum et incertorum, manifestorum et obscurorum, fides dissipetur, veritas periclitetur, ipsa divinitas ut inconstans denotetur. [3] Tunc quod verisimile non est ut ea species sacramenti in quam fides tota committitur, in quam disciplina tota conitur, ambigue adnuntiata et obscure proposita videatur, quando spes resurrectionis, nisi manifesta de periculo et praemio, neminem ad huiusmodi praesertim religionem publico odio et hostili elogio obnoxiam persuaderet. [4] Nullum opus certum est mercedis incertae, nullus timor iustus est periculi dubii: et merces autem et periculum in resurrectionis pendet eventu. [5] Sed et si temporalia et localia et personalia dei decreta atque iudicia in urbes et gentes et reges tam aperta prophetia iaculata est, quale est ut aeternae dispositiones eius et universales in omne hominum genus lucem sui fugerint? Quae quanto maiora, tanto clariora esse deberent, ut maiora crederentur. [6] Et puto deo nec livorem nec dolum nec inconstantiam nec lenocinium adscribi posse, per quae fere promulgatio maiorum cavillatur.

XXII. [1] Post haec ad illas etiam scripturas respiciendum esse dicemus quae non sinunt resurrectionem, secundum animales istos, ne dixerim spiritales, aut hic iam in veritatis agnitione praesumi aut ab excessu statim vitae vindicari. [2] Cum enim et tempora totius spei fixa sint sacrosancto stilo, nec liceat eam ante constitui, aequae non licebit ita scripturas interpretari super illam ut possit ante constitui. In adventum opinor Christi vota nostra suspirant, in saeculi huius occasum, ad diem domini magnum, diem irae et retributionis, diem ultimum et occultum nec ulli praeter patri notum, et tamen signis atque portentis et concussionibus elementorum et conflictationibus nationum praenotatum. [3] Evolverem prophetias si dominus ipse tacuisset — nisi quod et prophetiae vox erant domini — sed plus est quod illas suo ore consignat. Interrogatus a discipulis quando eventura essent quae interim de templi exitu eruperat, ordinem temporum primo Iudaicorum usque ad excidium Hierusalem, dehinc communium usque ad conclusionem saeculi dirigit. [4] Nam posteaquam edixit, Et tunc erit Hierusalem conculcata in nationibus donec adimpleantur tempora nationum — adlegendarum scilicet a deo et congregandarum cum reliquiis Israelis — [5] inde iam in orbem et in saeculum praedicat secundum Ioelem et Danielelem et universum concilium prophetarum futura signa in sole et luna et in stellis, conclusionem nationum cum stupore sonitus maris, et motus refrigescientium hominum prae metu et expectatione eorum quae immineant orbi terrae. [6] Virtutes enim inquit caelorum commovebuntur, et tunc videbunt filium hominis venientem in nubibus caeli cum plurimo potentatu et gloria: ubi autem coeperint ista fieri emergetis et elevabitis capita vestra, quod redemptio vestra adpropinquaverit. [7] Et tamen adpropinquare eam dixit, non adesse iam, et ‘cum coeperint ista fieri’, non ‘cum facta fuerint’, quia cum facta fuerint tunc aderit redemptio nostra, quae eousque adpropinquare dicetur, erigens interim et excitans animos ad proximum iam spei fructum. [8] Cuius etiam parabola subtextitur tenerescentium arborum in caulem, floris et dehinc frugis antecursorem. Ita et vos, cum videritis omnia ista fieri, scitote in proximo esse regnum dei: vigilate ergo omni in tempore, ut digni sitis effugere omnia ista, et stetis ante filium hominis — utique per resurrectionem, omnibus ante transactis. Ita etsi in agnitione sacramenti fruticat, sed in domini repraesentatione florescit atque frugescit. [9] Quis ergo dominum tam intempestive tam acerbe excitavit iam a dextera dei ad confringendam terram secundum Esaïam, quae puto adhuc integra est? Quis inimicos Christi iam subiecit pedibus eius secundum David, qua velocior patre, omni adhuc popularium coetu reclamante Christianos ad leonem? Quis caelo descendentem Iesum talem conspexit qualem ascendentem apostoli viderunt, secundum angelorum constitutum? [10] Nulla ad hodiernum tribus ad tribum pectora ceciderunt agnoscentes quem pupugerunt, nemo adhuc excepit Heliam, nemo adhuc fugit antichristum, nemo adhuc Babylonis exitum flevit: [11] et est iam qui resurrexit, nisi haereticus? exiit plane iam de corporis sepulchro etiam nunc febribus et ulceribus obnoxius, et conculcavit iam inimicos etiam nunc luctari habens cum mundi potentibus, et utique iam regnat etiam nunc Caesari quae sunt Caesaris debens.

XXIII. [1] Docet quidem apostolus Colossensibus scribens mortuos fuisse nos aliquando, alienatos et inimicos sensus domini, cum in operibus pessimis agebamus, dehinc consepultos Christo in baptisinate, et conresuscitados in eo per fidem efficaciae dei qui illum suscitavit a mortuis: [2] Et vos, cum mortui essetis in delictis et praeputatione carnis vestrae, vivificavit cum eo, donatis vobis omnibus delictis: et rursus, Si cum Christo mortui essetis ab elementis mundi, quomodo quidam quasi viventes in mundo sententiam fertis? [3] Sed cum ita nos mortuos faciat spiritaliter ut tamen et corporaliter quandoque morituros agnoscat, utique et resuscitados proinde spiritaliter deputans aequae non negat etiam corporaliter resurrecturos. [4] Denique, Si conresurrexistis, inquit, cum Christo, ea quae sursum sunt quaerite, ubi Christus est in dextera dei residens: ea quae sursum sunt sapite, non quae deorsum. Ita animo ostendit resurgere, quo solo adhuc possumus caelestia adtingere, quae non quaereremus nec saperemus si possideremus. [5] Subiecit etiam, Mortui enim estis — scilicet delictis, non vobis — et vita vestra abscondita est cum Christo in deo. Nondum ergo adprehensa est quae abscondita est: [6] sic et Iohannes, Et nondum, ait, manifestatum est quid futuri sumus: scimus quia si manifestatus erit similes ei erimus. Tanto abest ut simus iam quod nescimus, utique scituri si iam essemus. [7] Adeo contemplatio est spei in hoc spatio per fidem, non repraesentatio, nec possessio sed expectatio. De qua spe et expectatione Paulus ad Galatas, Nos enim spiritu ex fide spem iustitiae expectamus: non ait ‘tenemus’: iustitiam autem dei dicit ex iudicio quo iudicabimur de mercede. [8] Ad quam pendens et ipse, cum Philippensibus scribit, Si qua inquit concurram in resurrectionem quae est a mortuis, non quia iam accepi aut consummatus sum. Et utique crediderat, et omnia sacramenta cognoverat, vas electionis, doctor nationum: et tamen adicit, Persequor autem, si adprehendam in quo sum adprehensus a Christo. [9] Eo amplius, Ego me, fratres, nondum puto adprehendisse: unum tamen, oblitus posteriorum in priora me extendens secundum scopum persequor ad palmam incriminationis per quam concurrerem — utique in resurrectionem a mortuis, suo tamen tempore: [10] sicut ad Galatas, Bene autem facientes ne taedeat, tempore enim suo metemus: sicut et ad Timotheum de Onesiphoro, Det illi dominus invenire misericordiam in illo die. [11] In quem diem ac tempus et ipsi praecipit custodire mandatum immaculatum inreprehensibile in adparentiam domini Iesu Christi, quam suis temporibus ostendet beatus et solus potentator et rex regnantium, de deo dicens. [12] De quibus temporibus et Petrus in Actis, Paeniteat itaque vos et respicite, ad abolenda delicta vestra, uti tempora vobis superveniant refrigerii ex persona dei, et mittat praedesignatum vobis Christum, quem oportet accipere caelos adusque tempora exhibitionis omnium quae locutus est deus de ore sanctorum prophetarum.

XXIV. [1] Quae haec tempora, cum Thessalonicensibus disce. Legimus enim, Qualiter conversi sitis ab idolis ad serviendum vivo et vero deo et ad expectandum a caelis filium eius, quem suscitavit a mortuis Iesum: [2] et rursus, Quae enim spes nostra vel gaudium vel exultationis corona quam ut et vos coram domino nostro Iesu Christo in adventu ipsius? Item, Coram deo et patre nostro in adventu domini nostri Iesu Christi cum universis sanctis eius. [3] De quorum dormitione minus maerenda docens, simul et tempora resurrectionis exponit: Si enim credimus quod Iesus mortuus sit et resurrexerit, sic et deus eos qui dormierunt per Iesum adducet cum ipso: [4] hoc enim dicimus vobis in sermone dei, quod nos qui vivimus, qui remanemus in adventum domini nostri, non praeveniemus eos qui dormierunt: [5] quoniam

ipse dominus in iussu et in voce archangeli et in tuba dei descendet de caelo, et mortui in Christo primi resurgent: [6] deinde nos qui vivimus, qui <reliquimur,> simul cum illis tollemur in nubibus obviam domino Christo in aerem, et ita semper cum domino erimus. [7] Quae vox archangeli, quae tuba dei audita iam, nisi forte in cubiculis haereticorum? nam etsi tuba dei evangelicus sermo dici potest qui illos iam vocarit, sed aut mortui erunt iam corporaliter ut resurrexerint, et quomodo vivunt? aut in nubibus erepti, et quomodo hic sunt? [8] Miserrimi revera, ut apostolus pronuntiavit, qui in ista tantum vita sperantes habebuntur, excludendo, dum praeripiunt, quod post illam repromittitur, frustrati circa veritatem non minus quam Phygellus et Hermogenes. [9] Et ideo maiestas spiritus sancti, perspicax eiusmodi sensuum, et in ipsa ad Thessalonicenses epistula suggerit, De temporibus autem et temporum spatiis, fratres, non est necessitas scribendi vobis: [10] ipsi enim certissime scitis quod dies domini sicut fur in nocte ita adveniat: [11] cum dicent ‘Pax’ et ‘Tuta sunt omnia’, tunc et illis repentinus insidet interitus. [12] Et in secunda pleniore sollicitudine ad eosdem, Obsecro autem vos, fratres, per adventum domini nostri Iesu Christi et congregationem nostram ad illum, [13] ne cito commoveamini animo neque turbemini neque per spiritum neque per sermonem — scilicet pseudoprophetarum — neque per epistolam — scilicet pseudoapostolorum — acsi per nostram, quasi insistat dies domini: [14] ne quis vos seducat ullo modo, quoniam nisi veniat abscessio primum — huius utique regni — et reveletur delinquentiae homo — id est antichristus — filius perditionis, [15] qui adversatur et superextollitur in omne quod dicitur deus vel religio, uti sedeat in templo dei adfirmans deum se: [16] nonne meministis quod cum apud vos essem haec dicebam vobis? [17] Et nunc quid teneat scitis, ad revelandum eum in suo tempore: [18] iam enim arcanum iniquitatis agitur: tantum qui nunc tenet teneat, donec de medio fiat — quis, nisi Romanus status, cuius abscessio in decem reges dispersa antichristum superducat? — [19] et tunc revelabitur iniquus, quem dominus Iesus interficiet spiritu oris sui et evacuabit apparentia adventus sui: [20] cuius est adventus secundum operationem satanae in omni virtute et signis atque portentis mendacii et in omni seductione iniustitiae his qui pereunt.

XXV. [1] Etiam in Apocalypsi Iohannis ordo temporum sternitur, quem martyr quoque animae sub altari ultionem et iudicium flagitantes sustinere didicerunt, ut prius et orbis de pateris angelorum plagas suas ebibat, et prostituta illa civitas a decem regibus dignos exitus referat, et bestia antichristus cum suo pseudopropheta certamen ecclesiae inferat, [2] atque ita diabolo in abyssum interim religato primae resurrectionis praerogativa de soliis ordinetur, dehinc et igni dato universalis resurrectionis censura de libris iudicetur. [3] Cum igitur et status temporum ultimarum scripturae notent et totam Christianae spei frugem in exodio saeculi collocent, adparet aut tunc adimpleri totum quodcumque nobis a deo repromittitur, et vacat quod hic iam ab haereticis vindicatur, aut, si et agnitio sacramenti resurrectio est, salva utique illa creditur quae in ultimo praedicatur: [4] et sequitur ut eo ipso quod haec spiritalis vindicetur, illa corporalis praeiudicetur: quia, si nulla tunc adnuntiaretur, merito sola haec et tantummodo spiritalis vindicaretur: cum vero et in ultimum tempus edicatur corporalis agnoscitur, quia non et tunc spiritalis <adnuntiatur. [5] Cur enim iterum> adnuntiaretur resurrectio eiusdem condicionis, id est spiritalis, cum aut nunc eam deceret expungi sine ulla differentia temporum aut tunc sub omni clausula temporum? [6] Ita nobis magis competit etiam spiritalem defendere resurrectionem ab ingressu fidei qui plenitudinem eius agnoscimus in exitu saeculi.

XXVI. [1] Unum adhuc respondebo ad propositionem priorem allegaticarum scripturarum, licere et nobis corporalem resurrectionem de patrocinio figurati proinde eloquii prophetici vindicare. [2] Ecce enim divina in primordio sententia terram hominem pronuntiando — Terra es et in terram ibis, secundum substantiam scilicet carnis quae de terra erat sumpta et quae prior homo fuerat appellata, sicut ostendimus — dat mihi disciplinam in carnem quoque interpretandi si quid irae vel gratiae in terram deus statuit, quia nec proprie terra iudicio eius obnoxia est, quae nihil boni seu mali admisit, maledicta quidem quod hauserit sanguinem, sed et hoc ipsum in figuram carnis homicidae. [3] Nam et si iuvari seu laedi habet terra, id quoque propter hominem, uti ille iuvetur sive laedatur per consistorii sui exitus, quo magis ipse pensabit quae propter illum etiam terra patietur. [4] Itaque et cum comminatur terrae deus carni potius comminari eum dicam, et cum quid terrae pollicetur carni potius polliceri eum intellegam, ut apud David, Dominus regnavit, exultabit terra — id est caro sanctorum, ad quam pertinet regni divini fructus — : [5] dehinc subiungit, Vidit et concussa est terra, montes velut cera liquefacti sunt a facie domini — caro scilicet profanorum — : Et videbunt enim eum qui confixerunt. [6] Atque adeo, si simpliciter de terrae elemento utrumque existimabitur pronuntiatum, quomodo congruet et concuti et liquefieri eam a facie domini, quo supra regnante exultavit? [7] Sic et apud Esaiam, Bona terrae edetis, bona carnis intellegentur, quae illam manent in regno dei reformatam et angelificatam et consecuturam quae nec oculus vidit nec auris audivit nec in cor hominis ascenderunt. [8] Alioquin satis vanum ut ad obsequium deus fructibus agri et cibariis vitae huius invitet, quae etiam inreligiosis et blasphemis semel homini addicta conditione communicat, pluens super bonos et malos et solem suum emittens super iustos et iniustos. [9] Felix nimirum fides, si ea consecutura est quibus hostes dei et Christi non modo utuntur verum etiam abutuntur, ipsam conditionem colentes adversus conditorem. Bulbos et tubera in terrae bonis deputabis, domino pronuntiante ne in pane quidem victurum hominem? [10] Sic Iudaei terrena solummodo sperando caelestia amittunt, ignorantes et panem de caelesti repromissum et oleum divinae unctionis et aquam spiritus et vinum animae vigorantis ex vite Christo: [11] sicut et ipsam terram sanctam Iudaicum proprie solum reputant, carnem potius domini interpretandam quae exinde et in omnibus Christum indutis sancta sit terra, vere sancta per incolatum spiritus sancti, vere lac et mel manans per suavitatem spei ipsius, vere Iudaea per dei familiaritatem: Non enim qui in manifesto Iudaeus, sed qui in occulto: [12] ut et templum dei eadem sit, et Hierusalem, audiens ab Esaia, Exsurge, exsurge, Hierusalem, indue fortitudinem brachii tui, exsurge sicut in primordio diei, scilicet in illa integritate qua fuerat ante delictum transgressionis. [13] Qui enim in eam Hierusalem voces eiusmodi competent exhortationis et advocacy, quae occidit prophetas et lapidavit missos ad se et ipsum postremo dominum suum confecit? Sed nec ulli omnino terrae salus repromittitur, quam oportet cum totius mundi habitu praeterire. [14] Etiam si quis audebit terram sanctam paradisum potius argumentari, quam et patrum dici capiat, Adae scilicet et Evae, proinde et in paradisum restitutio carni videbitur repromissa, quae eum incolare et custodire sortita est, ut talis illuc homo revocetur qualis inde depulsus est.

XXVII. [1] Habemus etiam vestimentorum in scripturis mentionem ad spem carnis allegorizare, quia et Apocalypsis Iohannis, Hi sunt, ait, qui vestimenta sua non coinquinaverunt cum mulieribus, virgines scilicet significans et qui semetipsos castraverunt propter regna caelorum. [2] Itaque in albis erunt vestibus, id est in claritate innubae carnis. Et in evangelio indumentum nuptiale sanctitas carnis agnosci potest. [3] Itaque Esaias, docens quale ieiunium dominus elegerit, cum subicit de mercede bonitatis, Tunc, inquit, lumen tuum temporaneum erumpet et vestimenta tua citius orientur: non subsericam utique nec pallium sed carnem volens accipi, ortum carnis resurrectionis de mortis occasu praedicavit. [4] Adeo nobis quoque suppetit allegorice defensio corporalis resurrectionis. Nam et cum legimus, Populus meus, introite in cellas promas quantum donec ira mea praetereat, sepulchra erunt cellae promae, in quibus paulisper requiescere habebunt qui in finibus saeculi sub ultima ira per antichristi vim excesserint. [5] Aut cur cellarum promarum potius vocabulo usus est et non alicuius loci receptorii, nisi quia in cellis promis caro salita et usui reposita servatur, depromenda illinc suo tempore? Proinde enim et corpora medicata condimentis sepulturae mausoleis et monumentis sequestrantur, processura inde cum iusserit dominus. [6] Quod cum ita intellegi congruat — ecquae enim ab ira dei cellariorum nos refugia servabunt? — hoc ipso quod ait, Donec ira praetereat, quae extinguet antichristum, post iram ostendit processuram carnem de sepulchro in quo ante iram fuerit inlata: nam et de cellariis non aliud effertur quam quod infertur, et post antichristi eradicationem agitabitur resurrectio.

XXVIII. [1] Scimus autem sicut et vocibus ita et rebus prophetatum: tam dictis quam et factis praedicatur resurrectio. Cum Moyses manum in sinum condit et emortuam profert, et rursus insinuat et vividam explicat, nonne hoc de toto homine portendit? [2] Siquidem trina virtus dei per illa trina signa denotabatur cum suo ordine, primo diabolus serpentem quamquam formidabilem subactura homini, dehinc carnem de sinu mortis retractura, atque ita omnem sanguinem exsecutura iudicio. [3] De quo apud eundem propheten, Quoniam et vestrum, inquit deus, sanguinem exquiram de omnibus bestiis, et de manu hominis et de manu fratris exquiram eum. [4] Porro nihil exquiratur nisi quod reposcitur, nihil reposcitur nisi quod et reddetur, et utique reddetur quod ultionis nomine reposcetur et exquiretur. Neque enim vindicari poterit quod omnino non fuerit: erit autem dum restituitur, uti vindicetur. In carnem itaque dirigitur quicquid in sanguinem praedicatur, sine qua non erit sanguis. Caro suscitabitur, ut sanguis vindicetur. [5] Sunt et quaedam ita pronuntiata ut allegoriae quidem nubilo careant, nihilominus tamen ipsius simplicitatis suae sitiant interpretationem, quale est apud Esaiam, Ego occidam et vivificabo. Certe postea quam occiderit vivificabit: ergo per mortem occidens per resurrectionem vivificabit. [6] Caro est autem quae occiditur per mortem: caro itaque et vivificabitur per resurrectionem. [7] Certe si occidere carni animam eripere est, vivificare, contrarium eius, carni animam referre est, caro resurgat necesse est, cui anima per occisionem erepta referenda est per vivificationem.

XXIX. [1] Igitur si et allegoricae scripturae et argumenta rerum et simplices voces resurrectionem carnis quanquam sine nominatione ipsius substantiae obradiant, quanto magis quae hanc spem in ipsas substantias corporales speciali mentione determinant non erunt ducendae in quaestionem? [2] Accipe Ezechielem: Et facta est, inquit, super me manus domini et extulit me in spiritu dominus et posuit me in medio campi: is erat ossibus refertus. [3] Et circumduxit me super ea per circuitum et ecce multa super faciem campi et ecce arida satis. Et ait ad me, Fili hominis, si vivent ossa ista? [4] Et dixi, Adonai domine tu scis. [5] Et ait ad me, Propheta in ossa haec et dices, Ossa arida audite sermonem domini: [6] haec dicit dominus Adonai ossibus istis, Ecce ego adfero in vos spiritum et vivetis, [7] et dabo in vos nervos et reducam in vos carnes et circumdabo in vobis cutem et dabo in vobis spiritum, et vivetis et cognoscetis quod ego dominus. [8] Et prophetavi secundum praeceptum, et ecce vox dum propheto et ecce motus, et accedebant ossa ad ossa: [9] et vidi et ecce super ossa nervi et caro ascendit et circumpositae sunt eis carnes, et spiritus in eis non erat. [10] Et ait ad me, Propheta ad spiritum, fili hominis, propheta et dices ad spiritum, Haec dicit dominus Adonai, A quattuor ventis veni, spiritus, et spira in istis interemptis et vivant. [11] Et prophetavi ad spiritum sicut praecepit mihi, et introivit in ea spiritus et vixerunt et constiterunt super pedes suos, valentia magna satis. [12] Et ait ad me, Fili hominis, ossa ista omnis domus Israelis est: ipsi dicunt, Exaruerunt ossa nostra et periit spes nostra, avulsi sumus in eis: [13] propterea propheta ad eos, Ecce ego patefacio sepulchra vestra et eveham vos de sepulchris vestris, populus meus, et inducam vos in terram Israelis, [14] et cognoscetis quod ego dominus aperuerim sepulchra vestra et eduxerim vos de sepulchris vestris, populus meus, [15] et dabo in vobis spiritum et vivetis et requiescetis in terra vestra, et cognoscetis quod ego dominus locutus sum et fecerim, dicit dominus.

XXX. [1] Hanc quoque praedicationem scio qualiter concutiant in allegoriae argumentationem, quia dicendo, Ossa ista omnis domus Israel est, imaginem ea fecerit Israelis et a propria condicione transtulit, atque ita figuratam esse, non veram, resurrectionis praedicationem: statum enim Iudaeorum deformari quodammodo emortuum et exaridum et dispersum in campo orbis: [2] itaque et imaginem resurrectionis in illum allegorizari, quia recolligi habeat et recompingi os ad os, id est tribus ad tribum et populus ad populum, et recorporari carnibus facultatum et nervis regni, atque ita de sepulchris, id est de habitaculis captivitatis tristissimis atque teterrimis, educi et refrigerii nomine respirari et vivere exinde in terra sua Iudaea. Et quid post haec? [3] Morientur sine dubio. Et quid post mortem? Nulla opinor resurrectio si non haec erit ipsa quae Ezechieli revelatur. Sed enim et alias praedicatur resurrectio: ergo et haec erit, et temere eam in statum Iudaicarum rerum convertunt: aut si alia est illa quam defendimus, nihil mea interest dum sit et corporum resurrectio sicut et rerum Iudaicarum. [4] Denique hoc ipso quod recidivatus Iudaici status de recorporatione et redanimatione ossuum figuratur, id quoque eventurum ossibus probatur: non enim posset de ossibus figura componi si non id ipsum ossibus eventurum esset. [5] Nam etsi figmentum veritatis in imagine est, imago ipsa in veritate est sui: necesse est esse prius sibi id quod alii configuretur. De vacuo similitudo non competit: de nullo parabola non convenit. [6] Ita oportebit ossuum quoque credi reviscerationem et respirationem qualis et dicitur, de qua possit exprimi Iudaicarum rerum reformatio qualis adfingitur. [7] Sed magis religiosum est veritatem de sua auctoritate et simplicitate defendi, quam sensus divinae propositionis expostulat. Si enim ad res Iudaicas spectaret haec visio, statim revelato situ ossuum subiecisset, Ossa ista omnis domus Israelis est, et cetera deinceps. [8] At cum ostensis ossibus de propria spe eorum quid obloquitur, nondum nominato Israele, et fidem temptat prophetae, Fili hominis si vivent ossa haec?, ut et ille responderet, Domine tu scis, non utique deus prophetae fidem de ea re temptasset quae futura non esset, quam nunquam Israel audisset, quam credi non oporteret. [9] Sed quoniam praedicabatur quidem resurrectio mortuorum, Israel vero pro sua incredulitate diffidens scandalizabatur, et aspiciens habitum senescentis sepulturae desperabat resurrectionem, vel non in eam potius animum dirigebat sed in circumstantias suas, idcirco deus et prophetam qua et ipsum dubium praestruxit ad constantiam praedicationis revelato ordine resurrectionis, et populo id credendum mandavit quod prophetae revelavit, ipsos dicens esse ossa quae erant resurrectura qui non credebant resurrectura. [10] Denique in clausula, Et cognoscetis, inquit, quod ego dominus locutus sum et fecerim, id utique facturus quod fuerat locutus, ceterum non id facturus quod locutus si aliter facturus quam locutus.

XXXI. [1] Plane si et populus allegorice mussitaret ossa sua arefacta et spem suam perditam, dispersionis exitum querulus, merito videretur et deus figuratam desperationem figurata promissione consolatus. [2] Sed cum dispersionis quidem iniuria nondum populo accidisset, resurrectionis vero spes apud illum saepissime cecidisset, manifestus est de corporum interitu labefactans fiduciam resurrectionis: ita et deus eam restruebat fidem quam populus destruebat. [3] Quanquam etsi aliqua praesentium rerum tunc conflictatione maerebat Israel, non idcirco in parabola accipienda esset revelationis intentio sed in testationem resurrectionis, ut in illam spem erigeret illos, aeternae scilicet salutis et necessarioris restitutionis, et averteret a respectu praesentium rerum. [4] Ad hoc enim et alibi prophetae, Exhibitis — de sepulchris — velut vituli de vinculis soluti et conculcabitis inimicos: et rursus, Gaudebit cor vestrum et ossa vestra velut herba orientur — quia et herba de dissolutione et corruptela seminis reformatur. [5] in summa, si proprie in Israelis statum resurgentium ossuum imago contenditur, cur etiam non Israeli tantummodo verum et omnibus gentibus eadem spes adnuntiatur et recorporandarum et redanimandarum reliquiarum et de sepulchris exsuscitandorum mortuorum? [6] De omnibus enim dictum est, Vivent mortui et exsurgent de sepulchris: ros enim qui a te, medela est ossibus eorum. [7] Item alibi, Veniet adorare omnis caro in conspectu meo, dicit dominus. Quando? Cum praeterire coeperit habitus mundi huius: [8] supra enim, Quemadmodum caelum novum et terra nova quae ego facio, in conspectu meo, dicit dominus, ita stabit semen vestrum. [9] Tunc ergo et quod subiecit implebitur, Et exhibent — utique de sepulchris — et videbunt artus eorum qui impie egerunt, quoniam vermis eorum non decidet et ignis eorum non extinguetur, et erit satis conspectui omni carni — scilicet quae resuscitata et egressa de sepulchris dominum pro hac gratia adorabit.

XXXII. [1] Sed ne solummodo eorum corporum resurrectio videatur praedicari quae sepulchris demandantur, habes scriptum, Et mandabo piscibus maris et eructuabunt ossa quae sunt comesta, et faciam compaginem ad compaginem et os ad os. [2] Ergo, inquis, et pisces resuscitabuntur et ceterae

bestiae et alites carnivorae ut revomant quos comederunt, quia et apud Moysen legis exquiri sanguinem de omnibus bestiis? Non utique: sed idcirco nominantur bestiae et pisces in redhibitionem carnis et sanguinis quo magis exprimatur resurrectio etiam devoratorum corporum cum de ipsis devoratoribus exactio edicitur — [3] puto autem huius quoque divinae potestatis documentum idoneum Ionam, cum incorruptus utramque substantiam, carnem atque animam, de alvo bestiae piscis evolvitur, et utique triduum concoquendae carni viscera ceti suffecissent quam capulum quam sepulchrum quam senium requietae atque conditae alicuius sepulturae — [4] salvo eo quod et bestia feros in Christianum vel maxime nomen homines vel ipsos etiam iniquitatis angelos figuravit, de quibus sanguis exigitur per ultionem pensandam. [5] Quis ergo discendi magis adfinis quam praesumendi, et credendi diligentior quam contendendi, et divinae potius sapientiae religiosus quam suae libidinosus, audiens aliquid a deo destinatum et in carnes et cutes et nervos et ossa, aliud quid haec commentabitur, quasi non in hominem destinetur quod in istas substantias praedicatur? Aut enim nihil in hominem destinatur, non liberalitas regni, non severitas iudicii, non quodcunque est resurrectio, aut, si in hominem destinatur, necesse est in eas substantias destinetur ex quibus homo instructus est in quem destinatur. Illud etiam de argutissimis istis demutatoribus ossuum et carniū et nervorum et sepulchrorum requiro, cur si quando in animam quid pronuntiatur nihil aliud animam interpretantur nec transfigunt eam in alterius rei argumentum, cum vero in aliquam speciem corporalem quid edicitur omnia potius adseverant quam quod nominatur. [6] Si corporalia parabolae, ergo et animalia: si non et animalia, ergo nec corporalia. Tam enim corpus homo quam et anima, ut non possit altera species admittere aenigmata, altera excludere.

XXXIII. [1] Satis haec de prophetico instrumento. Ad evangelicum nunc provoco, hic quoque occursurus prius eidem astutiae eorum qui proinde et dominum omnia in parabolis pronuntiasse contendunt quia scriptum sit, Haec omnia locutus est Iesus in parabolis et sine parabola non loquebatur ad illos, scilicet ad Iudaeos: [2] nam et discipuli, Quare aiunt in parabolis loqueris illis?, et dominus, Propterea in parabolis loquor ad eos ut videntes non videant et audientes non audiant, secundum Esaïam. [3] Quodsi ad Iudaeos in parabolis, iam non ad omnes: si <non> ad omnes in parabolis, iam non semper nec omnia parabolae, sed quaedam cum ad quosdam, ad quosdam autem dum ad Iudaeos: nonnunquam plane et ad discipulos. [4] Sed quomodo referat scriptura considera: Dicebat autem et parabolam ad eos. Ergo et non parabolam dicebat: quia non notaretur cum parabolam loquebatur si ita semper loquebatur. [5] Etiam et nullam parabolam non aut ab ipso invenies edissertatam, ut de seminatore in verbi administrationem, aut a commentatore evangelii praeluminatam, ut iudicis superbi et viduae instantis ad perseverantiam orationis, aut ultra coniectandam, ut arboris fici dilatae in spem ad instar Iudaicae infructuositatis. [6] Quodsi nec parabola obumbrant evangelii lucem, tanto abest ut sententiae et definitiones, quarum aperta natura est, aliter quam sonant sapiant. Definitionibus autem et sententiis dominus edicit sive iudicium sive regnum dei sive resurrectionem. [7] Tolerabilius erit, inquit, Tyro et Sidoni in die iudicii: et, Dicite illis quod adpropinquaverit regnum dei: et, Retribuetur tibi in resurrectione iustorum. [8] Si nomina absoluta sunt rerum, id est iudicii et regni dei et resurrectionis, ut nihil eorum in parabolam comprimi possit, nec ea in parabolas compellentur quae ad dispositionem et transactionem et passionem regni Iudaici et resurrectionem praedicantur, atque ita corporalia defendentur ut corporalibus destinata, id est non spiritalia quia non figurata. [9] Nam et ideo praestruximus tam corpus animae quam et carnis obnoxium esse mercedibus pro communi operatione pensandis, ne corporalitas animae occasionem subministrans figurarum corporalitatem carnis excludat, cum utramque participem et regni et iudicii et resurrectionis oporteat credi. [10] Et nunc eo pergitur uti corporalitatem carnalem proprie demonstramus a domino significari in omni resurrectionis mentione, salva animali quam et ipsam pauci receperunt.

XXXIV. [1] In primis cum ad hoc venisse se dicit ut quod periit salvum faciat, quid dicis perisse? Hominem sine dubio. Totumne an ex parte? Utique totum, siquidem transgressio, quae perditionis humanae causa est, tam animae instinctu ex concupiscentia quam et carnis actu ex degustatione commissa, totum hominem elogio transgressionis inscripsit atque exinde merito perditionis implevit. [2] Totus itaque salvus fiet qui periit totus delinquendo, nisi si et ovis illa sine corpore amittitur et sine corpore revocatur. Nam si caro quoque eius cum anima, quod pecus totum est, humeris boni pastoris advehitur, ex utraque utique substantia restituendi hominis exemplum est. [3] Aut quam indignum deo dimidium hominem redigere in salutem, paene minus facere <quam faciat homo>, cum etiam saecularium principum plena

semper indulgentia vindicetur. Diabolus validior in hominis iniuriam intellegitur totum eum elidens, deus infirmior renuntiabitur non totum eum relevans? Atquin et apostolus suggerit, ubi delictum abundaverit illic gratiam superabundasse. [4] Quomodo denique salvus habebitur qui poterit et perditus dici? carne scilicet perditus, anima vero salvus, nisi quod iam et anima in perduto constituatur necesse est ut salva effici possit: id enim salvum effici oportebit quod perditum fuerit. [5] Porro aut recipimus animae immortalitatem, ut perdita non in interitum credatur sed in supplicium, id est in gehennam: et si ita est, iam non animam spectabit salus, salvam scilicet suapte natura per immortalitatem, sed carnem potius quam interibilem constat apud omnes: [6] aut si et anima interibilis, id est non immortalis, quod et caro, iam et carni forma illa ex aequo proficere debet proinde mortali et interibili qua id quod perit salvum facturus est dominus. [7] Nolo nunc contentioso fune deducere hac an illac hominem perditio depostulet, dum utrimque eum salus destinet in ambas substantias peraequata. Ecce enim, ex quacunque substantia hominem perisse praesumpseris, ex altera non perit: salvus ergo erit iam ex qua non perit, et salvus nihilominus fiet ex qua perit. [8] Habes totius hominis restitutionem, dum et quodcunque eius perit salvum facturus est dominus et quodcunque non perit utique non erit perditurus. [9] Quid ultra de utriusque substantiae securitate dubitas, cum altera salutem consecutura sit, altera amissura non sit? Et tamen adhuc sensum rei exprimit dominus, Ego dicens veni non ut meam sed ut patris qui me misit faciam voluntatem. Quam? Oro te. Ut omne quod dedit mihi, non perdam ex eo quidquam sed resuscitem illud in novissimo die. [10] Quid a patre Christus acceperat nisi quod et induerat? Hominem sine dubio, carnis animaeque texturam. Neutrum ergo eorum quae accepit perire patietur, immo nec quidquam utriusque, immo nec modicum: quodsi modicum caro, ergo nec carnem quia nec modicum, nec quidquam quia nec quidquam. Atquin si non et carnem resuscitabit novissima die, iam non modicum patietur perire de homine, sed pro tanta dixerim parte prope totum. [11] Ingerens amplius, Hoc est patris voluntas, ut omnis qui aspicit filium et credit in eum habeat vitam aeternam, et suscitem illum novissimo die, plenitudinem exstruit resurrectionis: tribuit enim utrique substantiae per officia propriam mercedem salutis, et carni per quam filius aspiciebatur, et animae per quam credebatur. [12] Ergo, dices, illis erit promissa res a quibus Christus videbatur. Sit plane ita, ut et ad nos eadem spes inde manaverit: nam si videntibus et idcirco credentibus fructuosa tunc fuerunt opera carnis atque animae, multo magis nobis: feliciores enim qui non vident et credent: quando et si illis negaretur carnis resurrectio, certe felicioribus competisset: quomodo enim felices si ex parte perituri?

XXXV. [1] Sed et praecipit eum potius timendum qui et corpus et animam occidat in gehennam, id est dominum solum, non qui corpus occidant animae autem nihil nocere possint, id est humanas potestates. [2] Adeo hic et anima immortalis natura recognoscitur, quae non possit occidi ab hominibus, et carnis esse mortalitatem, cuius sit occisio, atque ita resurrectionem quoque mortuorum carnis esse, quae in gehennam nisi resuscitata non poterit occidi. [3] Sed quoniam et hic de interpretatione corporis quaestio cavillatur, ego corpus humanum non aliud intellegam quam omnem istam struem carnis, quoquo genere materiarum concinnatur atque variatur, quod videtur, quod tenetur, quod denique ab hominibus occiditur. [4] Sic et parietis corpus non aliud admittam quam caementa, quam saxa, quam lateres. Si quis arcanum aliquod corpus inducit, ostendat revelet probet ipsum etiam esse quod occidatur ab homine, et de illo erit dictum. [5] Item si animae corpus opponitur vacabit astutia: cum enim utrumque proponitur, corpus atque animam, occidi in gehennam, distinguitur corpus ab anima, et relinquitur intellegi corpus id quod in promptu est, caro scilicet, quae sicut occidetur in gehennam si non magis a deo timuerit occidi, ita et vivificabitur in vitam aeternam si maluerit ab hominibus potius interfici. [6] Proinde si quis occisionem carnis atque animae in gehennam ad interitum et finem utriusque substantiae adripiet et non ad supplicium, quasi consumendarum non quasi puniendarum, recordetur ignem gehennae aeternum praedicari in poenam aeternam, et inde aeternitatem occisionis propterea humanae ut temporali praetimendam: [7] tunc et aeternas substantias credet quarum aeterna sit occisio in poenam. Certe cum post resurrectionem corpus cum anima occidi habeat a deo in gehennam, satis de utroque constabit, et de carnali resurrectione et de aeterna occisione. [8] Absurdissimum alioquin si idcirco resuscitata caro occidetur in gehennam ut finiatur, quod et non resuscitata pateretur: in hoc scilicet reficietur ne sit, cui non esse iam evenit. [9] Eidem nos spei fulciens passerum quoque subiungit exemplum, quod ex duobus non cadat alter in terram sine dei voluntate, ut et carnem quae ceciderit in terram proinde credas resurgere posse per eiusdem dei voluntatem. [10] Nam et si passeribus hoc non licet, sed nos multis passeribus antistamus eo quod cadentes resurgamus, quorum denique capillos capitis omnes numeratos adfirmans salvos utique repromittit. [11] Perituros enim quae ratio in numerum redegisset? Nisi quia hoc est, Ut omne quod pater mihi dedit non perdam ex eo quidquam, id est nec capillum, sicut nec oculum nec deitem. [12] Ceterum unde erit fletus et dentium frendor nisi ex oculis et ex dentibus, occiso scilicet etiam corpore in gehennam et detruso in tenebras exteriores, quae oculorum propria tormenta sunt? — si quis in nuptiis minus dignis operibus fuerit indutus, constringendus statim manibus et pedibus, utpote qui cum corpore resurrexerit. [13] Sic ergo et recumbere ipsum in dei regno et sedere in thronis duodecim et adsistere ad dexteram tunc vel sinistram et edere de ligno vitae corporalis dispositionis fidelissima indicia sunt.

XXXVI. [1] Videamus nunc an et Sadducaeorum versutiam elidens nostram magis sententiam erexerit. Causa opinor quaestionis fuit destructio resurrectionis, siquidem Sadducaei neque animae neque carnis admittunt salutem et ideo, ex qua vel maxime specie resurrectionis fides labefactatur, ex ea argumentum problemati suo accommodaverunt, de carnis scilicet obtentu nupturae necne post resurrectionem, sub eius mulieris persona quae septem fratribus nupta in dubio habebatur cui eorum restitueretur. [2] Porro servantur sensus tam quaestionis quam responsionis, et controversiae occursum est. Si enim Sadducaei quidem respuebant resurrectionem, dominus autem eam confirmabat, et scripturarum ignaros increpans, earum scilicet quae resurrectionem praedicassent, et virtutis dei incredulos, idoneae utique mortuis resuscitandis, [3] postremo subiciens Quoniam autem mortui resurgunt, sine dubio et confirmando esse quod negabatur, id est resurrectionem mortuorum apud deum vivorum, talem quoque eam confirmabat esse qualis negabatur, utriusque scilicet substantiae humanae. [4] Neque enim si nupturos tunc negavit ideo nec resurrecturos demonstravit: atquin filios resurrectionis appellavit, per eam quodammodo nasci habentes post quam non nubent sed resuscitati [5] similes [enim] erunt angelis, qua non nupturi quia nec morituri sed qua transituri in statum angelicum per indumentum illud incorruptibilitatis per substantiae, resuscitatae tamen, demutationem. [6] Ceterum nec quaereretur nupturi sive morituri necne rursus essemus si non eius vel maxime substantiae restitutio in dubium vocaretur quae proprie et morte et nuptiis fungitur, id est carnis. [7] Habes igitur

XXXVII. [1] Sic et si carnem ait nihil prodesse, ex materia dicti dirigendus est sensus. Nam quia durum et intolerabilem existimaverunt sermonem eius, quasi vere carnem suam illis edendam determinasset, et ut in spiritum disponeret statum salutis, praemisit Spiritus est qui vivificat, atque ita subiunxit, Caro nihil prodest, sed ad vivificandum scilicet. [2] Exsequitur etiam quid velit intellegi spiritum, Verba quae locutus sum vobis spiritus sunt, vita sunt: sicut et supra, Qui audit sermones meos et credit in eum qui me misit habet vitam aeternam et in iudicium non veniet sed transiet de morte in vitam.

[5] Igitur conversus ad recogitatus illorum, quia senserat dispargendos, Caro ait nihil prodest. Quid hoc ad destruendam carnis resurrectionem? Quasi non liceat esse aliquid, quod etsi nihil prodest aliud tamen ei prodesse possit. Spiritus prodest, vivificat enim: caro nihil prodest, mortificatur enim. [6] Itaque secundum nos magis conlocavit utriusque propositionem. Ostendens enim quid prosit et quid non prosit, pariter illuminavit quid cui prosit, spiritum scilicet carni, mortificatae vivificatorem:

[7] Veniet enim inquit hora cum mortui audient vocem filii dei et qui audierint vivent. Quid mortuum nisi caro? Et quid vox dei nisi sermo? Et quid sermo nisi spiritus, merito carnem resuscitaturus quod factus est ipse, et ex morte quam passus est ipse, et ex sepulchro quo inlatus est ipse? [8] Denique cum dicit, Ne miremini, quod veniet hora in qua omnes qui in monumentis sunt audient filii dei vocem, et procedent qui bona fecerunt in vitae resurrectionem, qui mala in resurrectionem iudicii, nemo iam poterit aliud mortuos interpretari qui sunt in monumentis nisi corpora et carnem, quia nec ipsa monumenta aliud quam cadaverum stabula: [9] siquidem et ipsi homines veteres, id est peccatores, id est mortui per ignorantiam dei, quos monumenta intellegendos argumentantur haetici, de monumentis processuri in iudicium aperte praedicantur. [10] Ceterum quomodo de monumentis monumenta procedent?

XXXVIII. [1] Post dicta domini etiam facta eius quid sapere credamus, de capulis, de sepulchris, mortuos resuscitantis? Cui rei istud? Si ad simplicem ostentationem potestatis aut ad praesentem gratiam redanimationis, non adeo magnum aliquid illi denuo morituros suscitare. [2] Enimvero si ad fidem potius sequestrandam futurae resurrectionis, ergo et illa corporalis praescribitur de documentis sui forma. [3] Nec sustinebo dicentes idcirco tunc resurrectionem animae soli destinata in carne quoque decucurrisse quia non potuisset aliter ostendi resurrectio animae invisibilis nisi per visibilis substantiae resuscitationem. [4] Male deum norunt qui non putant illum posse quod non putant. Et tamen sciunt potuisse, si instrumentum Iohannis norunt: qui enim animas adhuc solas martyrum sub altari quiescentes conspectui subdidit, posset utique et resurgentes oculis exhibere sine carne. [5] At ego deum malo decipere non posse, de fallacia solummodo infirmum, ne aliter documenta praemisisse quam rem disposuisse videatur — immo ne, si exemplum resurrectionis sine carne non valuit inducere, multo magis plenitudinem exempli sine eadem substantia exhibere non possit. [6] Nullum vero exemplum maius est eo cuius exemplum est. Maius est autem si animae cum corporibus resuscitabuntur in documentum sine corpore resurgendi, ut tota hominis salus dimidia patrocineretur, quando exemplorum condicio illud potius expeteret quod minus haberetur, animae dico solius resurrectionem, velut gustum carnis etiam resurrecturae suo in tempore. [7] Atque adeo, secundum nostram veritatem, exempla illa mortuorum a domino suscitatorum commendabant quidem et carnis et animae resuscitationem, ne cui substantiae negaretur hoc donum. Qua tamen exempla, eo minus aliquid edebant: non enim in gloriam nec in incorruptibilitatem sed in mortem aliam suscitabantur.

XXXIX. [1] Quam Christus ediderit resurrectionem apostolica quoque instrumenta testantur: nam et apostolis nullum aliud negotium fuit, dumtaxat apud Israel, quam veteris testamenti resignandi et novi consignandi et potius iam dei in Christo contionandi. [2] Ita et de resurrectione nihil novi intulerant, nisi quod et ipsam in gloriam Christi adnuntiabant, de cetero simplici et nota iam fide receptam sine ulla qualitatis quaestione, solis refragantibus Sadducaeis: adeo facilius fuit negari in totum mortuorum resurrectionem quam aliter intellegi. [3] Habes Paulum apud summos sacerdotes sub tribuno inter Sadducaeos et Pharisaeos fidei suae professorem: Viri, inquit, fratres ego Pharisaeus sum, filius Pharisaeorum, de spe nunc et de resurrectione iudicor apud vos — utique communi, ne, quia iam transgressor legis videbatur, de praecipuo fidei totius articulo, id est de resurrectione, ad Sadducaeos sapere existimaretur. Ita quam nolebat videri rescindere fidem resurrectionis utique confirmabat secundum Pharisaeos, respuens negatores eius Sadducaeos. [4] Proinde et apud Agrippam nihil se ait proferre citra quam prophetae adnuntiassent. Ergo servabat resurrectionem quoque qualem prophetae adnuntiaverant. [5] Nam et de resurrectione mortuorum apud Moysen scriptum commemorans corporalem eam norat, in qua scilicet sanguis hominis exquiri habebit. [6] Itaque talem praedicabat qualem et Pharisei susceperant et dominus ipse defenderat et Sadducaei, ne talem quoque crederent, in totum esse noluerant. [7] Sed nec Atheninses aliam intellexerant a Paulo portendi: denique inriserant, non inrisuri omnino si animae solius restitutionem ab eo audissent: suscepissent enim vernaculae suae philosophiae frequentiore praesumptionem. [8] At ubi iam nationes praeconium resurrectionis inauditae retro ipsa novitate concussit, et digna incredulitas rei tantae quaestionibus fidem torquere coepit, tunc et apostolus per totum paene instrumentum fidem huius spei corroborare curavit, et esse eam ostendens et nondum transactam et, de quo magis quaerebatur, corporalem et, quod insuper dubitabatur, non aliter corporalem.

XL. [1] Nihil autem mirum si et ex ipsius instrumento argumenta captantur, cum oporteat haereses esse: quae esse non possent si non et perperam scripturae intellegi possent. [2] Nactae denique haereses duos homines ab apostolo editos, interiorem, id est animam, et exteriorem, id est carnem, salutem quidem animae, id est interiori homini, exitium vero carni, id est exteriori, adiudicaverunt, quia scriptum est Corinthiis, Nam etsi homo noster exterior corrumpitur, sed interior renovatur die et die. [3] Porro nec anima per semetipsam homo, quae figmento iam homini appellato postea inserta est, nec caro sine anima homo, quae post exilium animae cadaver inscribitur. Ita vocabulum homo consertarum substantiarum duarum quodammodo fibula est, sub quo vocabulo non possunt esse nisi cohaerentes. [4] Porro apostolus interiorem hominem non tam animam quam mentem atque animum intellegi mavult, id est non substantiam ipsam sed substantiae saporem, siquidem Ephesiis scribens in interiorem hominem habitare Christum, sensibus utique intimandum dominum significavit. [5] Denique adiunxit, Per fidem, et In cordibus vestris, et In dilectione, fidem quidem et dilectionem non substantiva animae ponens sed conceptiva: In cordibus autem dicens, quae substantiva sunt carnis, iam et ipsum interiorem hominem carni deputavit quem in corde constituit. [6] Inspice nunc quomodo exteriorem quidem hominem corrumpi allegarit, interiorem vero renovari die ac die, ne illam corruptelam carnis adfirmes quam ex die mortis in perpetuum defectura patiatur, sed quam in istius vitae spatio ante mortem vexationibus et pressuris, tormentis atque suppliciis, nominis causa experitur. [7] Nam et homo interior hic utique renovari habebit, per suggestum spiritus proficiens fide et disciplina die ac die, non illic, id est non post resurrectionem, ubi non utique die ac die renovari habebit sed semel ad summam. [8] De sequentibus disce: Quod enim ad praesens est, inquit, temporale et leve pressurae nostrae, per supergressum in supergressum aeternum gloriae pondus perficit nobis, non intuentibus quae videntur — id est passiones — sed quae non videntur — id est mercedes — : quae enim videntur temporalia sunt, quae vero non videntur aeterna sunt. [9] Pressuras enim et laesuras, quibus corrumpitur homo exterior, ut leves et temporales idcirco contemnendas adfirmat, praeferens mercedum aeternarum et invisibilium et gloriae pondus in compensationem laborum quos hic caro patiendo corrumpitur. [10] Adeo non illa est corruptio quam in perpetuum carnis interitum ad resurrectionem expellendam exteriori homini adscribunt. [11] Sic et alibi, Siquidem ait compatimur uti et conglorificemur: reputo enim non esse dignas passiones huius temporis ad futuram gloriam quae in nos habet revelari. Et hic minora ostendit incommoda praemiis suis. [12] Porro si per carnem compatimur cuius est proprie passionibus corrumpi, eiusdem erit et quod pro compassione promittitur. Atque adeo carni adscripturus pressurarum proprietatem, ut et supra, dicit, Cum venissemus autem in Macedoniam nullam remissionem habuit caro nostra: [13] dehinc, ut et animae daret compassionem, In omnibus inquit compressi, extrinsecus pugnae — debellantes scilicet carnem — intrinsecus timor — afflictae scilicet animae. [14] Adeo etsi corrumpitur homo exterior, non ut amittens resurrectionem sed ut sustinens vexationem corrumpi intellegitur, et hoc non sine interiore. Ita amborum erit etiam conglorificari sicut et compati: secundum collegia laborum consortia quoque decurrant necesse est praemiorum.

XLI. [1] Eandem adhuc sententiam exsequitur remunerationes vexationibus praeferens: Scimus enim, inquit, quoniam etsi terrena domus nostri

tabernaculi dissolvatur, habemus domum non manu factam aeternam in caelis: id est, pro hoc quod dissolvetur caro nostra per passiones, domicilium consecuturi sumus in caelis. [2] Meminerat evangelicae definitionis, Beati qui persecutionem passi fuerint propter iustitiam, quia illorum est regnum caelorum. Non tamen carnis restitutionem negavit si compensationem mercedis opposuit, cum ipsi compensatio debeatur cui dissolutio reputatur, scilicet carni: [3] sed quia domum dixerat carnem, eleganter voluit et in mercedis comparatione vocabulo domus uti, ipsi domui quae dissolvetur per passionem meliorem domum repromittens per resurrectionem. Nam et dominus multas mansiones quasi domos apud patrem repromittit. [4] Quanquam et de domicilio mundi potest intellegi, quo dissoluto aeterna sedes repromittatur in caelis, quia et quae sequuntur ad carnem manifeste pertinentia ostendunt priora non ad carnem pertinere: [5] divisionem enim facit apostolus cum subicit, Nam et in hoc gemimus, domicilium nostrum quod de caelo est superinduere desiderantes, siquidem et exuti non nudi inveniemur: id est, ante volumus superinduere virtutem caelestem aeternitatis quam carne exuamur. [6] Huius enim gratiae privilegium illos manet qui ab adventu domini deprehenduntur in carne et propter duritias temporum antichristi merebuntur compendio mortis per demutationem expunctae concurrere cum resurgentibus, sicut Thessalonicensibus scribit: [7] Hoc enim dicimus vobis in sermone domini, quod nos qui vivimus, qui remanemus in adventum domini, non praeveniemus eos qui dormierunt: quoniam ipse dominus in iussu et voce et tuba dei descendet de caelo: et mortui in Christo resurgent primi, dehinc nos cum ipsis simul rapiemur in nubibus obviam Christo et ita semper cum domino erimus.

XLII. [1] Horum demutationem ad Corinthios reddit dicens, Omnes quidem resurgemus, non autem omnes demutabimur, in atomo, in momentaneo motu oculi, in novissima tuba: sed illi scilicet soli qui invenientur in carne: Et mortui, inquit, resurgent et nos demutabimur. [2] Hac ergo prius dispositione prospecta reliqua revocabis ad superiorem sensum. Nam cum adicit, Oportet etenim corruptivum istud induere incorruptelam et mortale istud induere immortalitatem, hoc erit illud domicilium de caelo quod gementes in hac carne superinduere desideramus, utique super carnem in qua deprehendemur, quia gravari nos ait qui simus in tabernaculo, quod nolimus exui sed potius superindui, uti devoretur mortale a vita, scilicet dum demutatur superinduendo quod est de caelis. [3] Quis enim non desiderabit dum in carne est superinduere immortalitatem, et continuare vitam lucrifacta morte per vicariam demutationem, ne inferos experiatur usque novissimum quadrantem exacturos? ceterum demutationem etiam post resurrectionem consecuturus est inferos iam expertus. [4] Abhinc enim iam definimus carnem omnimodo quidem resurrecturam, atque illam ex demutatione superventura habitum angelicum suscepturam: [5] aut si in his solis qui inveniuntur in carne demutari eam oportebit ut devoretur mortale a vita, id est caro ab illo superindumento caelesti et aeterno, ergo qui mortui deprehenduntur vitam non consequuntur, privati iam materia et ut ita dixerim esca vitae, id est carne: aut necesse est recipiant eam et illi, ut et in ipsis mortale devorari possit a vita, si vitam sunt consecuturi. [6] Sed in mortuis, inquis, iam devoratum erit mortale istud. Non utique in omnibus: quantos enim licebit vel pridianos inveniri, tam recentia cadavera ut nihil in illis devoratum videri possit? [7] Utique enim devoratum non aliud existimas quam interceptum, quam abolitum, quam omni sensui ereptum, quod comparere omni genere cessaverit. Nec gigantum autem antiquissima cadavera devorata constabit quorum crates adhuc vivunt: diximus iam de isto alibi. [8] Sed et proxime in ista civitate cum odei fundamenta tot veterum sepulchrorum sacrilega collocarentur, quingentorum fere annorum ossa adhuc succida et capillos olentes populus exhorruit. Constat non tantum ossa durare verum et dentes incorruptos perennare, quae ut semina retinentur fructificaturi corporis in resurrectione. [9] Postremo etsi tunc devoratum invenietur mortale in omnibus mortuis, certe a morte, certe ab aevo, certe per aetatem, numquid a vita, numquid a superindumento, numquid ab immortalitatis ingestu? [10] Porro qui <ab> his ait devoratum iri mortale, ab aliis negavit: et utique hoc a divinis viribus, non a naturalibus legibus perfici praestarique conveniet. [11] Ergo cum a vita habeat devorari quod mortale est, id exhiberi omnifariam necesse est ut devoretur, et devorari ut demutetur: si ignem dicas accendi oportere, non potes id per quod accenditur alibi necessarium adfirmare alibi non. [12] Sic et cum infulcit, Siquidem exuti non inveniuntur nudi, de eis scilicet qui non in vita nec in carne deprehenduntur a die domini, non alias negavit nudos quos praedixit exutos nisi quia et revestitos voluit intellegi eadem substantia qua fuerant spoliati: [13] ut nudi enim inveniuntur carne deposita vel ex parte discissa sive detrita — et hoc enim nuditas potest dici: dehinc recipient eam, ut reinduti carne fieri possint

XLIII. [1] Proinde cum dicit, Itaque confisi semper, et scientes quod cum immoramur in corpore peregrinamur a domino: per fidem enim ambulamus, non per speciem: manifestum est hoc quoque non pertinere ad offuscationem carnis quasi separantis nos a domino: [2] et hic enim exhortatio fastidiendae vitae huius obvertitur, siquidem peregrinamur a domino quamdiu vivimus, per fidem incedentes non per speciem, id est spe non re. [3] Et ideo subiungit, Fidentes autem et boni ducentes magis peregrinari a corpore et immorari ad dominum, scilicet ut per speciem magis incedamus quam per fidem, per rem potius quam per spem. [4] Vides quam et hic corporum contemptum ad martyriorum praestantiam referat: nemo enim peregrinatus a corpore statim immoratur penes dominum nisi ex martyrii praerogativa, paradiso scilicet, non inferis, deversurus. [5] Defecerant autem apostolo verba ad significandum de corpore excessum, an ratione etiam nove loquitur? Temporalem enim absentiam a corpore volens significare peregrinari nos ab eo dixit, quoniam qui peregrinatur etiam revertetur in domicilium. [6] Exinde iam ad omnes, Gestimus, inquit, sive peregrinantes sive immorantes placibiles esse deo: omnes enim manifestari nos oportet pro tribunali Christi Iesu. Si omnes, et totos: si omnes, et interiores et exteriores, id est tam animas quam et corpora. Ut unusquisque, inquit, reportet quae per corpus secundum quae gessit, bonum sive malum. [7] Hoc iam quomodo legas quaero: quasi turbate enim per hyperbaton struxit: utrumne ‘quae per corpus reportanda erunt’ an ‘quae per corpus gesta sunt’? [8] Sed et si ‘quae per corpus reportanda sunt’, corporalis indubitate resurrectio est: et si ‘quae per corpus gesta sunt’, per corpus utique pensanda sunt per quod et gesta sunt. [9] Ita totus hic a capite tractatus apostoli, tali clausula detextus qua carnis resurrectio ostenditur, secundum haec erit intellegendus quae cum clausula consonant.

XLIV. [1] Si enim adhuc ad superiora respectes unde mentio hominis exterioris et interioris inducta est, nonne et dignitatem et spem carnis integram invenies? [2] Cum enim de lumine quod illuxerit deus in cordibus nostris ad illuminationem agnitionis gloriae suae in persona Christi, dicit habere nos thesaurum istum in testaceis vasis, scilicet in carne, utrumne quia testacea est secundum originem ex limo destruetur, an quia divini thesauri conditorium est extolletur? [3] Atquin si lumen ipsum dei illud verum quod est in persona

Christi vitam in se continet, eaque vita committitur cum lumine in carnem, peritura est in quam vita committitur? Plane, si periturus et ipse thesaurus: perituris enim peritura creduntur, sicut veteribus utribus novum vinum. [4] Cum item subicit, Semper mortificationem Christi Iesu circumferentes in corpore nostro, qualis ista res est, quae post dei templum iam et sepulchrum Christi potest dici? [5] Cur autem mortificationem domini circumferimus in corpore? Ut et vita, inquit, manifestetur. Ubi? In corpore. In quo? In mortali. Ergo in carne, plane mortali secundum culpam sed et vitali secundum gratiam — vide quantam, ut in illa vita Christi manifestetur. [6] In re ergo aliena salutis, in substantia perpetuae dissolutionis, manifestabitur vita Christi aeterna iugis incorrupta, iam et dei vita? Aut cuius temporis vita domini manifestabitur in corpore nostro? [7] Illa quidem quam vixit usque in passionem, non modo apud Iudaeos in manifesto fuit verum etiam omnibus nunc gentibus prodita est. Adeo eam significat quae portas adamantinas mortis et aeneas seras inferorum infregit, quae exinde iam nostra est. [8] Denique manifestabitur in corpore. Quando? Post mortem. Quomodo? Dum resurgimus in corpore, sicut et Christus. Ne enim quis argumentetur nunc habere manifestari vitam Iesu in corpore nostro per disciplinam sanctitatis et patientiae et iustitiae et sapientiae quibus domini vita floruit, providentissima apostoli intentio suggerit, [9] Si enim nos qui vivimus in mortem tradimur propter Iesum, ut et vita eius manifestetur in corpore nostro mortali: adeo defunctis nobis hoc ait futurum in corpore nostro. Quodsi tunc, quomodo nisi resuscitato eo? [10] Proinde et in clausula, Scientes ait quod qui suscitavit Iesum, et nos suscitabit cum ipso: quia iam resurrexit a mortuis: nisi quia ‘cum ipso’ ‘sicut ipsum’ sapit. Si vero sicut ipsum, non utique sine carne.

XLV. [1] Sed et rursus alia caecitate in duos homines impingunt, in veterem et in novum, monente apostolo deponere nos veterem hominem qui corruptitur per concupiscentias seductionis, renovari autem spiritu sensus et induere novum hominem qui secundum deum conditus est in iustitia et religione veritatis, ut et hic ad duas substantias distinguendo, vetustatem ad carnem, novitatem ad animam, corruptionem perpetuam veteri defendant, id est carni. [2] Porro si secundum substantias, nec anima novus homo quia posterior, nec caro ideo vetus quia prior: quantum enim temporis inter manum dei et adflatum? [3] Ausim dicere, etiam si multo prior anima caro, eo ipso quod anima impleri se expectavit priorem eam fecit: omnis enim consummatio atque perfectio, etsi ordine postumat, effectu anticipat: magis illud prius est sine quo priora non possunt. [4] Si caro vetus homo, quando istud? A primordio? atquin Adam novus totus, et ex novo vetus nemo. Nam et exinde a benedictione geniturae caro atque anima simul fiunt sine calculo temporis, ut quae simul in utero seminantur, quod docuimus in commentario animae: [5] contemporant fetu, coetant natu: duos istos homines, sane ex substantia duplici, non tamen et aetate, sic unum edunt dum prior neutra est. Citius est totos nos aut veteres aut novos esse: qua enim alterum possumus esse, nescimus. [6] Sed apostolus veterem hominem manifeste notat: Expone, enim inquit, secundum pristinam conversationem veterem hominem, non secundum alicuius substantiae senium. Neque enim carnem praecipit deponamus, sed quae et alibi carnalia ostendit, opera non corpora accusans. [7] De quibus et hic subicit, Deponentes mendacium loquimini veritatem unusquisque ad proximum suum, quoniam membra alterutrum sumus. [8] Irascimini autem et nolite delinquere: sol non occidat super iracundiam vestram, neque dederitis diabolo locum. [9] Qui furabatur iam non furetur, immo potius laboret operando manibus, ut habeat impertire indigenti. [10] Omnis sermo turpis non procedat ex ore vestro, sed qui sit optimus ad aedificationem fidei, ut gratiam audientibus praestet. [11] Et nolite contristare spiritum dei sanctum, in quo signati estis in redemptionis diem. [12] Omnis amaritudo et ira et clamor et blasphemia auferatur a vobis cum omni malitia: [13] estote autem in alterutrum benigni misericordes, donantes invicem sicut et deus vobis donavit in Christo. [14] Igitur, qui carnem veterem hominem existimant cur non mortem sibi properant ut vetere homine deposito praeceptis apostoli occurrant? [15] Nos enim, qui totam fidem in carne administrandam credimus, immo et per carnem, cuius est et os ad proferendum optimum quemque sermonem et lingua ad non blasphemandum et cor ad non indignandum et manus ad operandum et largiendum, tam vetustatem hominis quam novitatem ad moralem non ad substantialem differentiam defendimus. [16] Atque ita pariter agnoscimus hominem qui secundum pristinam conversationem vetus fuerit, eundem et corrumpi ita dictum secundum concupiscentias seductionis quemadmodum et veterem secundum pristinam conversationem, non secundum carnem per interitum perpetuum, ceterum salva carne tam salvum quam eundem, utpote vitiosam disciplinam, non corpulentiam, exutum.

XLVI. [1] Talem ubique apostolum recognoscas, ita carnis opera damnantem ut carnem damnare videatur, sed ne ita quis existimet ex aliorum vel cohaerentium sensuum suggestu procurantem. [2] Nam et dicens eos qui in carne sunt deo placere non posse, statim de pravo intellectu ad integrum revocat adiciens, Vos autem non estis in carne sed in spiritu. [3] Eos enim quos in carne esse constabat negando in carne esse, in operibus carnis non esse monstrabat, atque ita illos demum deo placere non posse, non qui in carne essent sed qui carnaliter viverent, placere autem illos deo qui in carne positi secundum spiritum incederent. [4] Et rursus corpus quidem ait mortuum, sed propter delinquentiam, sicut spiritum vitam propter iustitiam: vitam autem morti opponens in carne constitutae, sine dubio illic et vitam repromisit ex iustitia ubi mortem determinavit ex delinquentia. [5] Ceterum frustra opposuit vitam morti <si> non est illic ubi est ipsa cui eam opposuit, excludendae utique de corpore. Porro si vita mortem de corpore excludit, non potest id perficere nisi illud penetret ubi est quod excludit. [6] Et quid ego nodosius, cum apostolus absolutius? Si enim, inquit, spiritus eius qui suscitavit Iesum habitat in vobis, qui suscitavit Iesum a mortuis suscitabit et mortalia corpora vestra propter inhabitantem spiritum eius in vobis: [7] ut et si animam quis corpus mortale praesumpserit, cum hoc et carnem negare non possit carnis quoque resuscitationem cogatur agnoscere secundum eiusdem status communionem. [8] Ex sequentibus adhuc discas opera carnis damnari, non ipsam: Itaque, fratres, ait, debitores sumus non carni ad vivendum <secundum carnem>: si enim secundum carnem vixeritis futurum est ut moriamini, si vero spiritu carnis actus mortificaveritis vivetis. [9] Porro, ut ad singula quaeque respondeam, si in carne constitutis secundum spiritum tamen degentibus salus repromittitur, iam non caro adversatur saluti sed operatio carnis: operatione autem carnis exclusa, quae causa est mortis, salva iam caro ostenditur, causa carens mortis. [10] Lex enim, inquit, spiritus vitae in Christo Iesu manumisit me a lege delinquentiae et mortis — certe quam praemisit habitare in membris nostris. Ergo iam membra nostra legi mortis non tenebuntur, quia nec delinquentiae, a quibus manumissa sunt. [11] Quod enim invalidum erat legis, in quo infirmabatur per carnem, misso deus filio suo in simulacro carnis delinquentiae et per delinquentiam, damnavit delinquentiam in carne — non carnem in delinquentia: neque enim domus cum habitatore damnabitur: habitare enim peccatum dixit in corpore nostro. [12] Damnata autem delinquentia caro absoluta est, sicut indemnata ea legi mortis et delinquentiae obstricta est. Sic etsi sensum carnis mortem appellavit, dehinc et inimicitiam ad deum, sed non carnem ipsam. [13] Cui ergo, dices, reputabitur sensus carnis si non substantiae ipsi? Plane, si probaveris aliquid carnem de suo sapere. Si vero sine anima nullius est sensus, intelleges sensum carnis ad animam esse referendum, carni interdum deputatum quia propter carnem et per carnem administratur. [14] Et ideo habitare ait delinquentiam in carne, quia et anima a qua delinquentia inducitur inquilina est carnis, mortificatae quidem, sed non suo verum delinquentiae nomine. [15] Nam et alibi, Quomodo, inquit, etiam nunc velut viventes in mundo sententiam fertis? — non ad mortuos scribens sed ad eos qui desinere deberent mundialiter vivere.

XLVII. [1] Haec enim erit vita mundialis quam veterem hominem dicit confixum esse Christo, non corporalitatem sed moralitatem. Ceterum si non ita accipimus, non est corporalitas nostra confixa, nec crucem Christi caro nostra perpressa est, sed quemadmodum adiecit, Ut evacuetur corpus delinquentiae, per emendationem vitae, non per interitum substantiae: sicut ait, Uti hactenus delinquentiae serviamus, ut et hac ratione commortui in Christo credamus quod etiam convivemus illi. [2] Sic, enim inquit, et vos reputate mortuos quidem vos. Cuinam? Carni? Non, sed delinquentiae. Ergo salvi erunt carni, viventes autem deo in Christo Iesu, per carnem utique cui mortui non erunt, delinquentiae scilicet mortui, non carni. [3] Nam et adhuc ingerit, Ne ergos regnaverit in corpore vestro mortali delinquentia ad obaudiendum illi et ad exhibendum membra vestra arma iniustitiae delinquentiae: sed exhibete vosmetipsos deo velut ex mortuis vivos — non velut vivos sed velut ex mortuis vivos — et membra vestra arma iustitiae. [4] Et rursus: Sicut exhibuistis membra vestra famula immunditiae et iniquitatis ad iniquitatem, ita et nunc exhibete membra vestra famula iustitiae in sanctificium: cum enim servi essetis delinquentiae liberi eratis iustitiae: [5] quem ergo fructum habebatis super his de quibus nunc confundimini? [6] Finis enim illorum mors. Nunc vero liberi facti a delinquentia, famulati autem deo, habetis fructum vestrum in sanctificium, finem autem vitam aeternam: [7] stipendia enim delinquentiae mors, donativum autem dei vita aeterna in Christo Iesu domino nostro. [8] Ita per totam hanc sensuum seriem ab iniustitia et delinquentia membra nostra divellens, et iustitiae et sanctimoniae adiungens, et transferens eadem a stipendio mortis ad donativum vitae aeternae, carni utique compensationem salutis repromittit: [9] cui nullam omnino competisset imperari propriam sanctimoniae et iustitiae disciplinam si non ipsius esset et praemium disciplinae, sed nec ipsum baptisma committi si per regenerationem non etiam restitutioni inauguraretur, [10] hoc quoque apostolo ingerente: An ignoratis quod quicumque in Iesum tincti sumus in mortem eius tincti sumus? Consepulti ergo illi sumus per baptisma in mortem, uti quemadmodum surrexit Christus a mortuis ita et nos in novitate vitae incedamus. [11] Ac ne de ista tantum vita putes dictum quae ex fide post baptisma in novitate vivenda est, providentissime adstruit, Si enim consati sumus simulacro mortis Christi, sed et resurrectionis erimus: [12] per simulacrum enim morimur in baptisate, sed per veritatem resurgimus in carne, sicut et Christus: Ut sicut regnavit in morte delictum, ita et gratia regnet per iustitiam in vitam sempiternam per Iesum Christum dominum nostrum. Quomodo ‘ita’, si non aequae in carne? [13] Ubi enim mors, ibi et vita post mortem, quia et vita ibi ante ubi postea mors. Nam si regnum mortis nihil operatur quam carnis dissolutionem, proinde vitam contrariam morti contrarium oportet operari, id est carnis redintegrationem, ut sicut devoraverat mors invalescendo, ita et mortali devorato ab immortalitate audire possit, Ubi est mors aculeus tuus, ubi est mors contentio tua? [14] Sic enim et gratia illic superabundabit ubi et iniquitas abundavit: sic et virtus in infirmitate perficietur, quod periit salvum faciens, quod mortuum est vivificans, quod percutsum est sanans, quod languit medicans, quod ereptum est redimens, quod famulatum est liberans, quod seductum est revocans, quod elisum est suscitans, [15] et quidem de terra in caelum, ubi nostrum municipatum Philippenses quoque ab apostolo discunt, unde et salutificatorem nostrum expectamus Iesum Christum, qui transfigurabit corpus nostrae humilitatis conformale corpori gloriae suae — sine dubio post resurrectionem, quia nec ipse Christus glorificatus est ante passionem. [16] Haec erunt corpora nostra quae Romanos obsecrat exhibere hostiam vivam sanctam placibilem deo. Quomodo ‘vivam’ si peritura sunt? quomodo ‘sanctam’ si profana sunt? Quomodo ‘placibilem’ si damnata sunt? [17] Age nunc, quod ad Thessalonicenses ut ipsius solis radio putem scriptum, ita claret, qualiter accipient lucifugae isti scripturarum? Ipse autem deus pacis sanctificet vos totos. Non sufficit? [18] Sed et exsequitur, Et integrum corpus vestrum et anima et spiritus sine querela conserventur in praesentia domini. Habes omnem substantiam hominis saluti destinata, nec alio tempore quam in adventu domini qui clavis est resurrectionis.

XLVIII. [1] Sed caro, inquis, et sanguis regnum dei hereditate possidere non possunt. Scimus hoc quoque scriptum, sed de industria distulimus hucusque, ut quod adversarii in prima statim acie obstruunt in ultima congressione prosterneremus, omnibus quaestionibus quasi auxiliis eius ante disiectis. [2] Sed et nunc expetent praecedentia recognosci, ut et huic sensui sua origo praeiudicet. Ut opinor, apostolus disposita ad Corinthios omni distinctione ecclesiasticae disciplinae, summam et sui evangelii et fidei illorum in dominicae mortis et resurrectionis demandatione concluderat, ut et nostrae spei regulam inde deduceret unde constaret. [3] Itaque subicit: Si autem Christus praedicatur quod a mortuis resurrexit, quomodo quidam dicunt in vobis resurrectionem mortuorum non esse? [4] Quae si non est, nec Christus resurrexit. Si Christus non resurrexit, inanis est praedicatio nostra, inanis est et fides vestra. Inveniemur etiam falsi testes dei, qui testimonium dixerimus quod resuscitaverit Christum quem non resuscitavit. [5] Nam si mortui non resurgunt nec Christus resurrexit: si Christus non resurrexit vana est fides vestra, quia adhuc in delictis vestris estis, et qui in Christo dormierunt perierunt. [6] Per haec cui nos rei credendae videtur extruere? Resurrectioni, inquis, mortuorum quae negabatur. Certe sub exemplo dominicae resurrectionis volens eam credi? Certe, inquis. Exemplum porro ex diversitate an ex paritate componitur? [7] Utique, inquis, ex paritate. Quomodo autem Christus resurrexit, in carne an non? Sine dubio si mortuum, si sepultum audis secundum scripturas, non alias quam in carne, aequae resuscitatum in carne concedis: ipsum enim quod cecidit in morte, quod iacuit in sepultura, hoc et resurrexit, non tam Christus in carne quam caro in Christo. [8] Igitur si ad exemplum Christi resurgemus qui resurrexit in carne, iam non ad exemplum Christi resurgemus si non in carne et ipsi resurgemus. Quia per hominem, inquit, mors, et per hominem resurrectio: ut separaret quidem auctores, mortis Adam Christum resurrectionis, eiusdem autem constitueret substantiae resurrectionem cuius et mortem per ipsorum auctorum in nomine hominis comparisonem: [9] si enim sicut in Adam omnes moriuntur ita et in Christo omnes vivificabuntur, carne vivificabuntur in Christo sicut in Adam carne moriuntur: [10] unusquisque autem in suo ordine, scilicet quia et in suo corpore. Ordo enim meritorum dispositorum nomine disponetur. Merita autem cum corpori quoque adscribantur, ordo quoque corporum disponatur necesse est, ut possit esse meritorium. [11] Si autem et baptizantur quidam pro mortuis, videbimus an ratione. Certe illa praesumptione hoc eos instituisse portendit qua alii etiam carni ut vicarium baptisma profuturum existimarent ad spem resurrectionis, quae nisi corporalis non alias in baptismo corporali obligaretur. Quid et ipsos baptizari ait <si mortui non resurgunt>, id est si non quae baptizantur corpora resurgent: anima enim non lavatione sed responsione sancitur. [12] Quid et nos, inquit, omni hora periclitamur? — utique per carnem. Cotidie morior — utique periculis carnis, per quam et depugnavit ad bestias Ephesi, illas scilicet bestias Asiaticae pressurae de qua in secunda ad eosdem, Nolumus enim vos ignorare, fratres, de pressura nostra apud Asiam, quod super quam supra gravati sumus citra vires, uti et de vita haesitaremus. [13] Omnia haec, nisi fallor, eo enumerat ut nolens vanam credi carnis conflictationem indubitate velit credi carnis resurrectionem: vana enim habenda est conflictatio eius cuius nulla erit resurrectio. [14] Sed dicet quis, quomodo resurgent mortui? Quo autem corpore venient? Iam hic de qualitatibus corporum disserit, an eadem ipsa an alia resumantur: sed cum eiusmodi quaestio posterior habeatur, sufficiet interim ex hoc quoque genere corporalem definiri resurrectionem, cum de qualitate corporum quaeritur.

XLIX. [1] Ventum est nunc ad carnem et sanguinem, <cardinem> revera totius quaestionis: quas substantias quali condicione exheredaverit apostolus a dei regno aequae de antecedentibus discere est. [2] Primus, inquit, homo de terra choicus — id est limaceus, id est Adam: Secundus homo de caelo — id est sermo dei, id est Christus, non alias tamen homo, licet de caelo, nisi quia et ipse caro atque anima, quod homo, quod Adam. [3] Nam et supra novissimus Adam dictus, de consortio substantiae commercium nominis traxit, quia nec Adam ex semine caro, quod et Christus. [4] Qualis ergo choicus tales et choici, et qualis caelestis tales et caelestes. Substantia tales? An primo disciplina, dehinc et dignitate quam disciplina captavit? atquin substantia nullo modo separabuntur choici atque caelestes, semel ab apostolo homines dicti. [5] Si enim et Christus, solus vere caelestis, immo et supercaelestis, homo tamen qua caro atque anima, nihilo ex ista substantiarum condicione a choica qualitate discernitur, proinde et qui caelestes secundum illum non de substantia praesenti sed de futura claritate caelestes praedicati intelleguntur:

quia et retro, unde distinctio ista manavit, de dignitatis differentia ostensa est alia supercaelestium gloria, alia superterrenorum, et alia solis, alia lunae, alia stellarum, quia et stella a stella differt in gloria, non tamen in substantia. [6] Denique praemissa differentia dignitatis in eadem substantia et nunc sectandae et tunc capessendae, subiungit etiam exhortationem ut et hic habitum Christi sectemur ex disciplina, et illic fastigium consequamur ex gloria: Sicut portavimus imaginem choici, portemus etiam imaginem supercaelestis: portavimus enim imaginem choici per collegium transgressionis, per consortium mortis, per exilium paradisi. [7] Nam si et in carne hic portatur imago Adae, sed non carnem monemur exponere: si non carnem, ergo conversationem, ut proinde et caelestis imaginem gestemus in nobis, non iam dei, nec iam in caelo constituti, sed secundum liniamenta Christi incedentes in sanctitate et iustitia et veritate. [8] Atque adeo ad disciplinam totum hoc dirigit ut hic dicat portandam imaginem Christi in ista carne et in isto tempore disciplinae: ‘portemus’ enim praeceptivo modo dicens huic tempori loquitur in quo homo nulla alia substantia est quam caro et anima, ut etsi quam aliam, id est caelestem, substantiam haec fides spectat, huic tamen repromissa sit cui ad illam elaborare mandatur. [9] Cum igitur imaginem et choici et caelestis in conversatione constituat, illam eierandam hanc vero sectandam, dehinc adiungat Hoc enim dico (id est ‘propter ea quae supra dixi’: — coniunctio est ‘enim’, sensus supplementum antecedentibus reddens) quod caro et sanguis regnum dei hereditate possidere non possunt, [10] nihil aliud intellegi mandat carnem et sanguinem quam supradictam imaginem choici: quae si in conversatione censetur vetustatis, conversatio autem vetustatis non capit dei regnum, proinde caro et sanguis non capiendi dei regnum ad conversationem rediguntur vetustatis. [11] Plane si nunquam apostolus pro operibus substantiam posuit, nec hic ita utatur: si vero in carne adhuc constitutos negavit esse in carne, in operibus carnis negans esse, formam eius subruere non debes non substantiam sed opera substantiae alienantis a dei regno. [12] Quibus etiam ad Galatas manifestatis praedicere se et praedixisse profitetur quod qui talia agant regnum dei non sint in hereditate consecuturi, non portantes scilicet imaginem caelestis sicut portaverant choici, ideoque ex vetere conversatione nihil aliud deputandi quam caro et sanguis. [13] Nam et si subito in hanc definitionem erupisset apostolus eliminandi carnem et sanguinem a dei regno, sine ullius supra sensus praestruccione, nonne duas istas substantias proinde veterem hominem interpretaremur carni et sanguini deditum, id est esui et potui, cuius sit dicere adversus fidem resurrectionis, Manducemus et bibamus, cras enim moriemur? Et hoc enim infulciens apostolus carnem et sanguinem de fructibus ipsorum manducandi et bibendi suggillavit.

L. [1] Sed et omissis huiusmodi interpretationibus carnis et sanguinis opera taxantibus, ipsas quoque substantias non aliter quam sunt intellectas licebit resurrectioni vindicare. [2] Non enim resurrectio carni et sanguini directo negatur, sed dei regnum quod obvenit resurrectioni: est autem et in iudicium resurrectio. Immo et confirmatur carnis resurrectio generalis cum specialis excipitur: dum enim in quem statum non resurgat edicitur, in quem resurgat subauditur. [3] Atque ita dum pro meritis distinctionem resurrectionis opus substantiae non genus patitur, apparet hinc quoque carnem et sanguinem nomine culpaе non substantiae arceri a dei regno, nomine tamen formae resurgere in iudicium quia non resurgant in regnum. [4] Adhuc dicam, Caro et sanguis regnum dei hereditate possidere non possunt: merito sola et per semetipsa, ut ostenderet adhuc spiritum in illis necessarium. Spiritus enim est qui vivificat in regnum dei, caro nihil prodest: prodesse tamen illi aliud potest, id est spiritus, et per spiritum opera quoque spiritus. [5] Resurgunt itaque ex aequo omnis caro et sanguis in qualitate sua: sed quorum est adire regnum dei induere oportebit vim incorruptibilitatis et immortalitatis, sine qua regnum dei adire non possunt, antequam consequi eam possint. Merito ergo caro et sanguis, ut diximus, sola regnum dei capere deficiunt. [6] Iam vero cum devorari habeat corruptivum istud ab incorruptibilitate, id est caro, et mortale istud ab immortalitate, id est sanguis, post resurrectionem ex demutatione, merito demutata ac devorata caro et sanguis regnum dei hereditate possidere possunt, non tamen non resuscitata. [7] Sunt qui carnem et sanguinem Iudaismum velint accipi propter circumcisionem, alienum et ipsum a dei regno, quia et ille vetustati deputetur et hoc titulo iam et alibi ab apostolo denotetur, qui post revelatum in se filium dei ad evangelizandum eum in nationibus statim non rettulerit ad carnem et sanguinem, id est ad circumcisionem, id est ad Iudaismum, sicut ad Galatas scribit.

LI. [1] Sed pro omnibus iam stabit quod in clausulam reservavimus, etiam pro apostolo ipso, revera maximae inconsiderantiae revincendo si tam abrupte, ut quidam volunt, clausis quod aiunt oculis, sine distinctione, sine

condicione, omnem passim carnem et sanguinem a regno dei extrusit, utique ab ipsa regia caelorum, cum illic adhuc sedeat Iesus ad dexteram patris, homo etsi deus, Adam novissimus etsi sermo primarius, caro et sanguis etsi nostris puriora, idem tamen et substantia et forma qua ascendit, talis etiam descendurus, ut angeli adfirmant, agnoscendus scilicet et eis qui illum convulneraverunt. [2] Hic sequester dei atque hominum appellatus ex utriusque partis deposito commissio sibi, carnis quoque depositum servat in semetipso, arrabonem summae totius. Quemadmodum enim nobis arrabonem spiritus reliquit, ita et a nobis arrabonem carnis accepit et vexit in caelum, pignus totius summae illuc quandoque redigendae. [3] Securae estote, caro et sanguis: usurpastis et caelum et regnum dei in Christo: aut si negent vos in Christo, negent et in caelo Christum qui vobis caelum negaverunt. [4] Ita Nec corruptela, inquit, incorruptelam hereditati habebit: non ut carnem et sanguinem existimes corruptelam, quando ipsa sint potius obnoxia corruptelae, per mortem scilicet, siquidem mors est quae carnem et sanguinem non modo corrumpit verum etiam consumit: [5] sed quoniam opera carnis et sanguinis non posse consequi regnum dei edixerat, quo magis hoc exaggeraret ipsi quoque corruptelae, id est morti cui carnis et sanguinis opera proficiunt, hereditatem incorruptelae ademittit. [6] Nam et paulo post ipsius mortis quodammodo mortem expressit, Devorata est, dicens, mors in contentione: ubi est mors aculeus tuus? ubi est mors potentia tua? Aculeus autem mortis delinquentia — haec erit corruptela: virtus autem delinquentiae lex — illa alia sine dubio quam constituit in membris suis militantem adversus legem animi sui, ipsam scilicet vim delinquendi contra voluntatem. [7] Nam et si supra novissimum inimicum mortem evacuari ait, hoc modo nec corruptela hereditatem incorruptelae consequetur, id est, nec mors perseverabit. [8] Quando et quomodo defectura? Cum in atomo, in momentaneo oculi motu, in novissima tuba, et mortui resurgent incorrupti — qui hi nisi qui ante corrupti, id est corpora, id est caro et sanguis? Et nos demutabimur — de qua habitudine nisi in qua deprehendemur? Oportet enim corruptivum istud induere incorruptelam et mortale istud induere immortalitatem — quid mortale nisi caro? Quid corruptivum nisi sanguis? [9] Ac ne putes aliud sentire apostolum, providentem sibi et ut de carne intellegas laborantem, cum dicit ‘istud corruptivum’ et ‘istud mortale’ cutem ipsam tenens dicit: certe ‘istud’ nisi de subiecto, nisi de comparenti, pronuntiasset non potuit: demonstrationis corporalis est verbum. [10] Aliud autem erit corruptivum aliud corruptela, et aliud mortale aliud mortalitas: aliud enim quod patitur, aliud quod pati efficit. Ita quae patiuntur corruptelam et mortalitatem, caro scilicet et sanguis, ea necesse est patiantur et incorruptelam et immortalitatem.

LII. [1] Videamus iam nunc quo corpore venturos mortuos disputet. Et bene quod erupit statim ostendere, quasi quis eiusmodi quaerat. Stulte, inquit, tu quod seminas non vivificatur nisi mortuum fuerit. [2] Hoc ergo iam de exemplo seminis constet, non aliam vivificari carnem quam ipsam quae erit mortua, et ita sequentia relucebunt. [3] Nihil enim adversus regulam exempli licebit intellegi, ne, quia sequitur, Et quod seminas non corpus quod futurum est seminas, idcirco aliud resurrecturum corpus quam quod moriendo seminatur existimes. [4] Ceterum excidisti ab exemplo: nunquam enim frumento seminato et in terra dissoluto hordeum erumpit, et non idipsum genus grani eademque natura et qualitas et forma. Denique unde, si non idipsum? Et corruptela enim ipsum est, dum ipsius est. [5] Non enim et suggerit quomodo non quod futurum est corpus seminetur, dicens Sed nudum granum, si forte frumenti vel alicuius eiusmodi: deus autem dat ei corpus prout vult — certe ei grano quod nudum seminari ait? Certe, inquis. [6] Ergo salvum est cui dare habet deus corpus. Quomodo autem salvum est si nusquam est, si non resurgit, si non idipsum resurgit? Si non resurgit salvum non est: si non est salvum accipere corpus a deo non potest. [7] Sed enim salvum omni modo constat. Ad quid ergo dabit illi deus prout vult corpus, habenti utique proprium corpus illud nudum, nisi ut iam non nudum resurgat? Ergo additiciu erit corpus quod corpori superstruitur, nec exterminatur illud cui superstruitur, sed augetur. [8] Salvum est autem quod augetur. Seritur enim solummodo granum, sine folliculi veste, sine fundamento spicae, sine munimento aristae, sine superbia culmi: exsurgit autem copia feneratum, compagine aedificatum, ordine structum, cultu munitum, et usquequaque vestitum. [9] Haec sunt ei corpus a deo aliud, in quod non abolitione sed ampliatione mutatur: et unicuique seminum suum corpus deputavit non suum, id est non pristinum, ut tunc et illud suum sit quod extrinsecus a deo acquirit. [10] Servi igitur exemplo et conserva speculum eius carni, eandem credens fructificaturam quae sit seminata, ipsam etsi plenior, non aliam etsi aliter revertentem: accipiet enim et ipsa suggestum et ornatum qualem et illi deus voluerit superducere

secundum merita. [11] Sine dubio ad hoc dirigit, Non omnis caro eadem caro, non ad denegandam substantiae communionem sed praerogativae peraequationem, corpus honoris non generis in differentiam redigens. [12] In hoc et figurata subicit exempla animalium et elementorum: Alia caro hominis, id est servi dei qui vere homo est: Alia iumentis, id est ethnici de quo et propheta Adsimilatus est, inquit, homo irrationabilibus iumentis: Alia caro volatilium, id est martyrum qui ad superiora conantur: Alia piscium, id est quibus aqua baptismatis sufficit. [13] Sic et de supercaelestibus corporibus argumenta committit: Alia gloria solis, id est Christi: Et alia lunae, id est ecclesiae: Et alia stellarum, id est seminis Abrahae: et Stella enim a stella differt in gloria . . . et corpora terrena et caelestia, Iudaeos scilicet et Christianos. [14] Ceterum si non figurate, satis vane mulorum et milvorum carnes et corpora caelestium luminum apposit humanis, non pertinentia ad condicionis comparisonem sicut nec ad resurrectionis consecutionem. [15] Postremo, cum per haec differentiam gloriae non substantiae conclusisset, Sic inquit et resurrectio mortuorum. Quomodo? Non de alio aliquo sed de sola gloria differens. [16] Rursus enim resurrectionem ad eandem substantiam revocans, et ad granum denuo spectans, Seminatur inquit in corruptela resurgit in incorruptela, seminatur in dedecoratione resurgit in gloria, seminatur in infirmitate resurgit in virtute, seminatur corpus animale resurgit spiritale. [17] Certe non aliud resurgit quam quod seminatur, nec aliud seminatur quam quod dissolvitur humi, nec aliud dissolvitur humi quam caro: hanc enim sententia dei elisit, Terra es et in terram ibis, quia et de terra erat sumpta. [18] Hinc et apostolus concepit seminari eam dicere cum redhibetur in terram, quia et seminibus sequestratorium terra est illic deponendis et inde repetendis: ideoque et reconsignat imprimens, Sic enim scriptum est, ne aliud existimes seminari quam, In terram ibis ex qua es sumptus. Sic nec alterius quam carnis: sic enim scriptum est.

LIII. [1] Sed corpus animale animam quidam argumentantur, ut illum a carne avocent recidivatum. Porro cum constet fixumque sit illud resurrecturum corpus quod fuerit seminatum, ad ipsius rei exhibitionem provocabuntur. [2] Aut ostendant animam seminatam post mortem, id est mortuam, id est humi elisam disiectam dissolutam, quod in illam decretum a deo non est: proponant corruptelam eius et dedecorationem, infirmitatem, ut ipsius sit etiam exurgere in incorruptelam et in gloriam et in virtutem. [3] Sed enim in Lazaro, praecipuo resurrectionis exemplo, caro iacuit in infirmitate, caro paene computruit in dedecorationem, caro interim putuit in corruptionem, et tamen Lazarus caro resurrexit, cum anima quidem, sed incorrupta, quam nemo vinculis lineis strinxerat, nemo in sepulchro collocarat, nemo foetere iam senserat, nemo quadriduo viderat seminatam. [4] Totum habitum, totum exitum Lazari omnium quoque caro hodie experitur, anima vero nullius. In qua ergo stilus apostoli comparet, de qua eum loqui constat, ea erit et corpus animale cum seminatur, et spiritale cum suscitatur. [5] Nam ut ita intellegas manum adhuc porrigit, aequae de eiusdem scripturae auctoritate factum retexens primum hominem Adam in animam vivam. [6] Si Adam homo primus, caro autem homo ante animam, sine dubio caro erit facta in animam: facta porro in animam, cum esset corpus, utique animale corpus est facta. [7] Quid eam appellari velint quam quod per animam facta est, quam quod ante animam non fuit, quam quod post animam non erit nisi cum resurgit? Recepta enim anima rursus animale corpus efficitur, ut fiat spiritale: non enim resurgit nisi quod fuit. [8] Ita unde carni competit corpus animale dici, inde animae nullo modo competit. Caro enim ante corpus quam animale corpus: animata enim postea, facta est corpus animale. [9] Anima vero etsi corpus, tamen quia ipsa est corpus non animatum sed animans potius, animale corpus non potest dici, nec fieri quod facit. [10] Alii enim accedens facit illud animale: non accedens autem alii quomodo se facit animale? Sicut ergo ante animale corpus caro recipiens animam, ita et postea spiritale induens spiritum. [11] Hunc ordinem apostolus disponens, in Adam quoque et in Christo eum merito distinguit ut in capitibus distinctionis ipsius. [12] Sed cum et Christum novissimum Adam appellat, hinc eum recognosce ad carnis, non ad animae, resurrectionem omnibus doctrinae viribus operatum. Si enim et primus homo Adam caro non anima, qui denique in animam vivam factus est, et novissimus Adam Christus ideo Adam quia homo, ideo homo quia caro non quia anima, [13] atque ita subiungit, Non primum quod spiritale sed quod animale, postea quod spiritale, secundum utrumque Adam, ecquid tibi videtur corpus animale et corpus spiritale in eadem carne distinguere, cuius distinctionem in utroque Adam, id est in utroque homine, praestruxit? [14] Ex qua enim substantia pariant inter se Christus et Adam — scilicet ex carne, licet et ex anima: sed carnis nomine homo uterque sunt: prior enim caro homo — ex illa et ordinem admittere potuerunt ut alter primus alter novissimus homo, id est Adam, deputarentur. [15] Ceterum diversa in ordinem disponi non possunt, de substantia dumtaxat: de loco enim aut tempore aut condicione forsitan possint. Hic autem de substantia carnis primus et novissimus dicti sunt, sicut et rursus primus homo de terra et secundus de caelo: quia etsi de caelo secundum spiritum, sed homo secundum carnem. [16] Itaque cum carni conveniat ordo in utroque Adam, non animae, ut primus homo in animam vivam novissimus in spiritum vivificantem distincti sunt, aequae distinctio eorum carni distinctionem praeiudicavit, ut de carne sit dictum, Non primum quod spiritale sed quod animale, postea quod spiritale, [17] atque ita eadem sit et supra intellegenda, et quae seminetur corpus animale et quae resurgat corpus spiritale, quia non primum quod spiritale sed quod animale, quia primus Adam in animam novissimus Adam in spiritum: totum de homine, totum de carne quando de homine. [18] Quid ergo dicemus? Nonne et nunc habet caro spiritum ex fide, ut quaerendum sit quomodo corpus animale dicatur seminari? Plane accepit hic spiritum caro, sed arrabonem, animae autem non arrabonem sed plenitudinem. Itaque etiam propterea, substantiae nomine animale corpus nuncupata est in qua seminetur, futura proinde per plenitudinem spiritus insuper spiritale, in qua resuscitatur. Quid mirum si magis inde vocata est unde conferta est quam unde respersa est?

LIV. [1] Ita de vocabulorum occasionibus plurimum quaestiones subornantur, sicut et de verborum communionibus. Nam quia et illud apud apostolum positum est, Uti devoretur mortale a vita, caro scilicet, devorationem quoque ad perditionem scilicet carnis adripiunt, quasi non et bilem et dolorem devorare dicamur, id est abscondere et tegere et intra nosmetipsos continere. [2] Denique cum et illud scriptum sit, Oportet mortale hoc induere immortalitatem, ostenditur quomodo mortale devoretur a vita, dum indutum immortalitate absconditur et tegitur et intus continetur, non dum assumitur et amittitur. [3] Ergo et mors, inquis, salva erit cum fuerit devorata. Ideo discerne pro sensibus communionem verborum, et integre intelleges. Aliud enim mors et aliud mortale: aliter itaque devorabitur mors et aliter mortale. Mors non capit immortalitatem, mortale autem capit. [4] Denique et scriptum est quod necesse est mortale hoc induere immortalitatem. Quomodo ergo capit? Dum devoratur a vita. Quomodo devoratur a vita? Dum recipitur et redigitur et includitur in ipsam. Ceterum mors merito in interitum devoratur quia et ipsa in hoc devorat. [5] Devoravit, inquit, mors invalescendo:

et ideo devorata est in contentionem: Ubi est mors aculeus tuus? Ubi est mors contentio tua? Proinde et vita, mortis scilicet aemula, per contentionem devorabit in salutem quod per contentionem suam devoraverat mors in interitum.

LV. [1] Quanquam igitur resurrecturam carnem probantes hoc ipso non aliam resurrecturam probemus quam de qua agitur, tamen singulae quaestiones et causae earum proprios quoque flagitant congressus, licet aliunde iam caesae. [2] Interpretabimur itaque plenius et vim et rationem demutationis, quae ferme subministrat alterius carnis resurrecturae praesumptionem, quasi demutari desinere sit in totum et de pristino perire. [3] Discernenda est autem demutatio ab omni argumento perditionis: aliud enim demutatio aliud perditio. Porro non aliud, si ita demutabitur caro ut pereat. Peribit autem demutata, si non ipsa permanserit in demutatione quae exhibita fuerit in resurrectione. [4] Quemadmodum enim perit si non resurgit, ita et si resurgit quidem verum in demutatione subducitur, aequae perit: aequae enim non erit ac si non surrexerit. Et quam ineptum si in hoc resurgit ut non sit, quae potuit non surrexisse ne esset, quia non esse iam coeperat. [5] Non miscebuntur omnino diversa, mutatio atque perditio, operibus utique diversa: perdit haec, illa mutat. Quomodo ergo quod perditum est mutatum non est, ita quod mutatum est perditum non est. [6] Perisse enim est in totum non esse quod fuerit: mutatum esse aliter esse est. Porro dum aliter est, idipsum potest esse. Habet enim esse quod non omnino perit: mutationem enim passum est, non perditionem. [7] Atque adeo potest et demutari quid et ipsum esse nihilominus, ut et totus homo in hoc aevo substantia quidem ipse sit multifariam tamen demutetur, et habitu et ipsa corpulentia et valetudine et condicione et dignitate et aetate, studio negotio artificio, facultatibus sedibus legibus moribus, nec quicquam tamen amittat hominis, nec ita alius efficiatur ut cesset idem esse, immo nec alius efficiatur sed aliud. [8] Hanc formam demutationis divina etiam documenta testantur. Mutatur Moysi manus, et quidem ad instar emortuae exsanguis et exalbida et frigida: sed et recepto calore et refuso colore eadem caro et sanguis est. Mutatur postea et facies eiusdem incontemplabili claritate: sed Moyses erat proinde qui non videbatur. [9] Sic et Stephanus angelicum iam fastigium induerat: sed non alia genua in lapidatione succiderant. [10] Dominus quoque in secessu montis etiam vestimenta luce mutaverat, sed liniamenta Petro agnoscibilia servaverat: ubi etiam Moyses et Helias, alter in imagine carnis nondum receptae, alter in veritate nondum defunctae, eandem tamen habitudinem corporis etiam in gloria perseverare docuerant. [11] De quo exemplo instructus et Paulus, Qui transfigurabit, inquit, corpus humilitatis nostrae conformale corpori gloriae suae. Quodsi et transfigurationem et conversionem in transitum substantiae cuiusque defendis, ergo et Saul in alium virum conversus de corpore suo excessit, [12] et ipse Satanas, cum in angelum lucis transfiguratur, qualitatem suam amittit. Non opinor. Ita et in resurrectionis eventu mutari converti reformari licebit cum salute substantiae.

LVI. [1] Etenim quam absurdum, quam vero et iniquum, utrumque autem quam deo indignum, aliam substantiam operari aliam mercede dispungi, ut haec quidem caro per martyria lanietur, alia vero coronetur, item e contrario haec quidem caro in spurcitiis volutetur, alia vero damnetur. [2] Nonne praestat omnem semel fidem a spe resurrectionis abducere quam de gravitate atque iustitia dei ludere — Marcionem pro Valentino resuscitari — [3] quando neque mentem neque memoriam neque conscientiam hominis hodierni credibile sit aboleri per indumentum illud mutatorium immortalitatis et incorruptelae, vacaturo scilicet emolumento et fructu resurrectionis et statu divini utrobique iudicii? [4] Si non meminerim me esse qui merui, quomodo gloriam deo dicam? Quomodo canam illi novum canticum, nesciens me esse qui gratiam debeam? Cur autem solius carnis demutatio excipitur, non et animae simul, quae in omnibus praefuit carni? [5] Quale est ut eadem anima quae in hac carne totum vitae ordinem decucurrit, quae in hac carne deum didicit et Christum induit et spem salutis seminavit, in alia nescioqua metat fructum? Nae illa gratiosissima caro, cui gratis vita constabit. Quodsi non et anima mutabitur, iam nec animae resurrectio est: nec ipsa enim resurrexisse credetur si non alia resurrexerit.

LVII. [1] Hinc iam illa vulgaris incredulitatis argutia est. Si, inquiunt, ipsa eademque substantia revocatur cum sua forma linea qualitate, ergo et cum insignibus suis reliquis: itaque et caeci et claudi et paralytici, et ut quis insignis excesserit ita et revertetur. [2] Quid nunc et si ita? Dedignaris tantam gratiam qualiscumque a deo consequi? Non enim et nunc animae solius admittens salutem dimidiatis hominibus eam adscribis? Quid est credere resurrectionem, nisi integram credere? Si enim caro de dissolutione reparabitur, multo magis de vexatione revocabitur. [3] Minoribus maiora praescribunt. Cuiuscumque membri detruncatio vel obtusio nonne mors membri est? Si universalis mors resurrectione rescinditur, quid portionalis? Si demutamur in gloriam, quanto magis in incolumitatem? [4] Vitiatio corporum accidens res est, integritas propria est. In hac nascimur. Etiam si in utero vitemur, iam hominis est passio: prius est genus quam casus. [5] Quomodo vita confertur a deo, ita et refertur: quales eam accipimus, tales et recipimus. Naturae non iniuriae reddimur: quod nascimur, non quod laedimur, revivescimus. [6] Si non integros deus suscitatur, non suscitatur mortuos. Quis enim mortuus integer, etsi integer moritur? Quis incolumis qui exanimis? Quod corpus inlaesum cum interemptum, cum frigidum, cum expallidum, cum edurum, cum cadaver? Quando magis homo debilis, nisi cum totus? Quando magis paralyticus, nisi cum immobilis? Ita nihil aliud est mortuum resuscitari quam integrum fieri, ne ex ea parte mortuus adhuc sit ex qua non resurrexerit. [7] Idoneus deus reficere quod fecit. Hanc suam et potestatem et liberalitatem satis iam in Christo spondit: immo et ostendit non tantum resuscitorem carnis verum etiam redintegratorem. [8] Atque adeo et apostolus, Et mortui, inquit, resurgent incorrupti: quomodo, nisi integri qui retro corrupti tam vitio valetudinis quam et senio sepulturae? [9] Nam et supra utrumque proponens, oportere et corruptivum istud induere incorruptelam et mortale istud immortalitatem, non iteravit sententiam sed differentiam demandavit: immortalitatem enim ad rescissionem mortis, incorruptelam ad obliterationem corruptelae dividendo, alteram ad resurrectionem alteram ad redintegrationem temperavit. Puto autem et Thessalonicensibus omnis substantiae integritatem repromisit. [10] Itaque nec in posterum timebuntur corporum labes: nihil poterit admittere integritas vel conservata vel restituta, ex quo illi etiam si quid amiserat redditur. [11] Praescribens enim adhuc easdem passiones obituram carnem si eadem resurrectura dicatur, naturam adversus dominum suum temere defendis, legem adversus gratiam impie adseris, quasi deo minus liceat et mutare naturam et sine lege servare. Quo ergo legimus, Quae impossibilia apud homines possibilia apud deum: et, Stulta mundi elegit deus ut sapientia mundi confundat? [12] Oro te, si famulum tuum libertate mutaveris, quia eadem caro atque anima permanebunt quae flagellis et compedibus et stigmatibus obnoxiae retro fuerant, idcircone illas eadem pati oportebit? Non opinor: atquin et vestis albae nitore et anuli aurei honore et patroni nomine ac tribu mensaque honoratur. [13] Permite hanc et deo potestatem per vim illius demutationis condicionem non naturam reformandi, dum et passiones auferuntur et munitiones conferuntur. Ita manebit quidem caro etiam post resurrectionem eatenus passibilis qua ipsa, qua eadem, et tamen impassibilis quia in hoc ipsum manumissa a domino ne ultra pati possit.

LVIII. [1] Iocunditas, inquit Esaias, aeterna super caput eorum: nihil aeternum nisi post resurrectionem: Aufugit, inquit, dolor et maeror et gemitus ab illis. [2] Proinde et Iohanni angelus, Et delebit deus omnem lacrimam ab oculis eorum: utique ex isdem oculis qui retro fleverant quique adhuc flere potuissent si non omnem lacrimae imbrem indulgentia divina siccasset. [3] Et rursus, Deus enim delebit omnem lacrimam ab oculis eorum, et mors hactenus: igitur et corruptela hactenus, proinde per incorruptelam fugata quemadmodum mors per immortalitatem. [4] Si dolor et maeror et gemitus ipsaque mors ex laesuris et animae et carnis obveniunt, quomodo auferentur nisi cessaverint causae, scilicet laesurae carnis atque animae? [5] Ubi casus adversi apud deum, ubi incursus infesti apud Christum? Ubi daemonici impetus apud spiritum sanctum, iam et ipso diabolo cum angelis suis ignibus merso? Ubi necessitas, aut quod dicitur fortuna vel fatum? Quae resuscitatis plaga post veniam, quae reconciliatis ira post gratiam? Quae infirmitas post virtutem, quae imbecillitas post salutem? [6] Quod vestimenta et calciamenta filiorum Israelis quadraginta illis annis indetrita et inobsoleta manserunt, quod et in ipsis corporibus unguium et capillorum facilia crementa habilitatis et dignitatis iustitia defixit ne etiam enormitas corruptelae deputeretur, [7] quod Babylonii ignes trium fratrum nec tiaras nec sarabara quanquam Iudaeis aliena laeserunt, [8] quod Ionas devoratus a belua maris in cuius alvo naufragia de die digerebantur triduo post incolumis exspuitur, [9] quod hodie Enoch et Helias, nondum resurrectione dispuncti quia nec morte functi, qua tamen de orbe translati et hoc ipso iam aeternitatis candidati, ab omni vitio et ab omni damno et ab omni iniuria et contumelia immunitatem carnis ediscunt: cuinam fidei testimonium signant nisi qua credi oportet haec futurae integritatis esse documenta? [10] Figurae enim nostrae fuerunt, apostolo auctore, quae scripta sunt ut et deum potentioorem credamus omni corporum lege, et carnis magis utique et conservatorem cuius etiam vestimenta etiam calciamenta protexit.

LIX. [1] Sed futurum inquis aevum alterius est dispositionis et aeternae: igitur huius aevi substantiam non aeternam diversa possidere non posse.

Plane, si homo propter dispositionem futuram, et non dispositio propter hominem. [2] Sedenim apostolus scribens, Sive mundus sive vita sive mors sive futura sive praesentia, omnia vestra sunt, eosdem constituit heredes etiam futurorum. Nihil tibi largitur Esaias dicens Omnis caro foenum, et alibi Et videbit omnis caro salutare dei: exitus, non substantias, distinxit. [3] Quis enim iudicium dei non in sententia duplici statuit salutis et poenae? Omnis igitur caro foenum quae igni destinatur, et omnis caro videbit salutare domini quae saluti ordinatur. Ego me scio neque alia carne adulteria commisisse, neque nunc alia carne ad continentiam eniti. [4] Si quis est bina pudenda circumferens, potest iam et demere foenum carnis immundae et solam sibi reservare quae visura sit domini salutare. [5] Sed cum idem propheta etiam nationes ostendat nunc deputatas velut pulverem et salivam, nunc speraturas et credituras in nomen et in brachium domini, numquid et de nationibus fallimur, et aliae quidem sunt crediturae aliae in pulverem deputatae, ex diversitate substantiae? [6] Sed et Christus intra oceanum, et de isto caelo quod nobis incubat, verum lumen nationibus obfulsit: et ipsi Valentiniani hic errare didicerunt: nec alia erit forma nationum credentium nisi quae et non credentium, de carne de anima. [7] Sicut ergo easdem nationes non genere sed sorte distinxit, ita et carnes, quae in ipsis nationibus una substantia est, non materia sed mercede disiungit.

LX. [1] Ecce autem, ut adhuc controversiam exaggerent carni, maxime eidem, de officiis quoque membrorum argumentantur, aut et ipsa dicentes permanere debere cum suis operibus et fructibus, ut eidem corpulentiae adscripta, aut quia constet decessura esse officia membrorum corpulentiam quoque eradunt, cuius scilicet perseverantia credenda non sit utique sine membris, quia nec membra credenda sint sine officiis. [2] Quo enim iam, inquiunt, spelunca haec oris et dentium statio et gulae lapsus et compitum stomachi et alvei gurgis et intestinorum perplexa proceritas, cum esui et potui locus non erit? Quo huiusmodi membra admittunt subigunt devolvunt dividunt digerunt egerunt, quo manus ipsae et pedes et operarii quique artus, cum victus etiam cura cessabit? [3] Quo renes conscii seminum, et reliqua genitalium utriusque sexus, et conceptuum stabula et uberum fontes, decessuro concubitu et fetu et educatu? Postremo quo totum corpus, totum scilicet vacaturum? [4] Ad haec ergo praestruximus non oportere committi futurorum atque praesentium dispositiones, intercessura tunc demutatione: et nunc superstruimus officia ista membrorum necessitatibus vitae huius eo usque consistere donec et ipsa vita transferatur a temporalitate in aeternitatem, sicut animale corpus in spiritale, dum mortale istud induit immortalitatem et corruptivum istud incorruptelam. [5] Et ipsa autem liberata tunc vita a necessitatibus, liberabuntur et membra ab officiis: nec ideo non erunt necessaria: licet enim officiis liberentur, sed iudiciis detinentur ut quis referat per corpus prout gessit. [6] Salvum enim hominem tribunal dei exigit: salvum vero sine membris non licet, etenim ex quorum non officiis sed substantiis constat, nisi forte et navem sine carina sine prora sine puppi sine compaginis totius incolumitate salvam adseverabis. [7] Et tamen navem, procella dissipatam vel carie dissolutam, redactis et recuratis omnibus membris eandem saepe conspeximus etiam titulo restitutionis gloriantem: de dei artificio et arbitrio et iure torquebimur? [8] Porro si dives dominus et liberalis, adfectui aut gloriae suae praestans solam navis restitutionem, hactenus eam voluerit operari, idcirco tu negabis necessariam illi compaginem pristinam ut exinde iam vacaturam, cum soli saluti navis sine operatione conveniat? [9] Igitur hoc tantummodo discere sufficit, an deus hominem saluti destinando carnem destinavit, an eandem velit denuo esse. Quam non debebis ex futura membrorum vacatione praescribere denuo esse non posse: licet enim esse quid denuo et nihilominus vacare. Nec potest autem dici vacare si non sit. Atenim si sit, poterit et non vacare: nihil enim apud deum vacabit.

LXI. [1] Sed accepisti, homo, os ad vorandum atque potandum: cur non potius ad eloquendum, ut a ceteris animalibus distes? Cur non potius ad praedicandum deum, et etiam hominibus antistes? Denique Adam ante nomina animalibus enuntiavit quam de arbore decerpsit, ante etiam prophetavit quam voravit. [2] Sed accepisti dentes ad macellum corrodendum: cur non potius ad omnem hiatum et rictum tuum coronandum, cur non potius ad pulsus linguae temperandos, ad vocis articulos offensione signandos? Denique et edentulos et audi et vide, ut honorem oris et organum dentium quaeras. [3] Forata sunt inferna in viro et in femina, nimirum qua libidines fluent: cur non magis qua potuum defluxus colentur? Est adhuc feminis intus quo semina congerantur: an quo sanguinis onera secedant quem pigrior sexus discutere non sufficit? [4] Dicenda enim et haec, quatenus quae volunt et quorum volunt et qualiter volunt officia membrorum ludibriose de industria suffundendae resurrectionis oblatrant, non recogitantes ipsas prius causas necessitatis tunc vacaturas, cibi famem et potus sitim et concubitus genituram et operationis victum. Sublata enim morte neque victus fulcimenta ad subsidia vitae neque generis subparatura gravis erit membris. [5] Ceterum et hodie vacare intestinis et pudendis licebit: quadraginta diebus Moyses et Helias ieiunio functi solo deo alebantur: iam tunc enim dedicabatur, Non in pane vivet homo sed in dei verbo. ecce virtutis futurae liniamenta. [6] Nos quoque, ut possumus, os  cibo excusamus, etiam sexum a congressione subducimus. Quot spadones voluntarii, quot virgines Christi maritae, quot steriles utriusque naturae infructuosis genitalibus structi! [7] Nam si et hic iam vacare est et officia et emolumenta membrorum temporali vacatione, ut in temporali dispositione, nec homo tamen minus salvus est, proinde homine salvo, et quidem magis tunc ut in aeterna dispositione, magis non desiderabimus quae iam hic non desiderare consuevimus.

LXII. [1] Sed huic disceptationi finem dominica pronuntiatio imponet: Erunt, inquit, tanquam angeli: si non nubendo quia nec moriendo, utique nec ulli simili necessitati succidendo corporalis condicionis, quia et angeli aliquando tanquam homines fuerunt edendo et bibendo et pedes lavacro porrigendo: humanam enim induerant superficiem salva intus substantia propria. [2] Igitur si angeli, facti tanquam homines, in eadem substantia spiritus carnalem tractationem susceperunt, cur non et homines, facti tanquam angeli, in eadem substantia carnis spiritalem subeant dispositionem, [3] non magis sollemnibus carnis obnoxii sub angelico indumento quam angeli sollemnibus spiritus sub humano, nec ideo non permansuri in carne quia non in sollemnibus carnis, cum nec angeli ideo non et in spiritu permanserint quia non et in sollemnibus spiritus? [4] Denique non dixit, ‘erunt angeli’, ne homines negaret, sed ‘tanquam angeli’, ut homines conservaret: non abstulit substantiam, cui similitudinem attribuit.

LXIII. [1] Resurget igitur caro, et quidem omnis, et quidem ipsa, et quidem integra. In deposito est ubicunque apud deum per fidelissimum sequestrem dei et hominum Iesum Christum, qui et homini deum et hominem deo reddet, carni spiritum et spiritui carnem, qui utrumque iam in semetipso foederavit, sponsam sponso et sponsum sponsae comparavit. [2] Nam et si animam quis contenderit sponsam, vel dotis nomine sequetur animam caro: non erit anima prostituta, ut nuda suscipiatur a sponso: habet instrumentum, habet cultum, habet mancipium suum carnem: ut collactanea comitabitur. [3] Sed caro est

sponsa, quae in Christo Iesu spiritum sponsum per sanguinem passa est. Huius interitum quem putas, secessum scias esse. Non sola anima seponitur: habet et caro secessus suos interim, in aquis in ignibus in alitibus in bestiis. [4] Cum in haec dissolvi videtur, velut in vasa transfunditur. Si etiam ipsa vasa defecerint, cum de illis quoque effluxerit in suam matricem terram, quasi per ambages resorbebitur, ut rursus ex illa repraesentetur Adam auditurus a domino: Ecce Adam factus est tanquam unus ex nobis: vere tunc compos mali quod evasit, et boni quod invasit. Quid, anima, invides carni? [5] Nemo tam proximus tibi, quem post deum diligas: nemo magis frater tuus quam quae tecum etiam in deo nascitur. [6] Tu potius illi exorare debueras resurrectionem: per te, si forte, deliquit. Sed nihil mirum si odisti cuius auctorem quoque respuisti, quam et in Christo aut negare aut mutare consuevisti, proinde et ipsum sermonem dei qui caro factus est vel stilo vel interpretatione corrumpens, arcana etiam apocryphorum superducens, blasphemiae fabulas. [7] Atenim deus omnipotens, adversus haec incredulitatis et perversitatis ingenia providentissima gratia sua effundens in novissimis diebus de suo spiritu in omnem carnem, in servos suos et ancillas, et fidem laborantem resurrectionis carnalis animavit et pristina instrumenta manifestis verborum et sensuum luminibus ab omni ambiguitatis obscuritate purgavit. [8] Nam quia haereses esse oportuerat ut probabiles quique manifestentur, hae autem sine aliquibus occasionibus scripturarum audere non poterant, idcirco pristina instrumenta quasdam materias illis videntur subministrasse, et ipsas quidem isdem litteris revincibiles. [9] Sed quoniam nec dissimulare spiritum sanctum oportebat quominus et huiusmodi eloquiis superinundaret quae nullis haeticorum versutiis semina subspargerent, immo et veteres eorum caespites vellerent, idcirco iam omnes retro ambiguitates et quantas volunt parabolas aperta atque perspicua totius sacramenti praedicatione discussit per novam prophetiam de paraceto inundantem. [10] Cuius si hauseris fontem, nullam poteris sitire doctrinam, nullus te ardor exuret quaestionum: resurrectionem quoque carnis usquequaque potando refrigeraberis.

Adversus Praxean (Against Praxeas)

CAPUT 1. [1] Varie diabolus aemulatus est veritatem. adfectavit illam aliquando defendendo concutere. unicum dominum vindicat, omnipotentem mundi conditorem, ut et de unico haeresim faciat. ipsum dicit patrem descendisse in virginem, ipsum ex ea natum, ipsum passum, denique ipsum esse Iesum Christum. excidit sibi coluber, quia Iesum Christum post baptisma Ioannis temptans ut filium dei adgressus est, certus filium deum habere vel ex ipsis scripturas de quibus tunc temptationem struebat: [2] Si tu es filius dei, dic ut lapides isti panes fiant ; item, Si tu es filius dei, deice te hinc; scriptum est enim quod mandavit angelis suis super te, utique pater, ut te manibus suis tollant necubi ad lapidem pedem tuum offendas. [3] aut numquid mendacium evangeliis exprobrabit dicens, Viderit Matthaeus et Lucas; ceterum ego ad ipsum deum accessi, ipsum omnipotentem cominus temptavi ideo et accessi, ideo et temptavi ; ceterum si filius dei esset nunquam illum fortasse dignarer? sed enim ipse potius a primordio mendax est, et si quem hominem de suo subornavit, ut Praxean. [4] nam iste primus ex Asia hoc genus perversitatis intulit Romam, homo et alias inquietus, insuper de iactatione martyrii inflatus ob solum et simplex et breve carceris taedium, quando etsi corpus suum tradidisset exurendum nihil profecisset, dilectionem dei non habens cuius charismata quoque expugnavit. [5] nam idem tunc episcopum romanum, agnoscentem iam prophetias Montani, Priscæ, Maximillæ, et ex ea agnitione pacem ecclesiis Asiae et Phrygiae inferentem, falsa de ipsis prophetis et ecclesiis eorum adseverando et praecessorum eius auctoritates defendendo coegit et litteras pacis revocare iam emissas et a proposito recipiendorum charismatum concessare. ita duo negotia diaboli Praxeas Romae procuravit, prophetiam expulit et haeresim intulit, paracletum fugavit et patrem crucifixit. [6] fruticaverant avenae Praxeanae hic quoque superseminatae, dormientibus multis in simplicitate doctrinae: traductae dehinc per quem deus voluit, etiam evulsae videbantur. denique caverat pristinum doctor de emendatione sua, et manet chirographum apud psychicos apud quos tunc gesta res est. [7] exinde silentium. et nos quidem postea agnitio paracleti atque defensio disiunxit a psychicis. avenae vero illae ubique tunc semen excusserant: ita aliquamdiu per hypocrisin subdola vivacitate latitavit et nunc denuo erupit. sed et denuo eradicabitur, si voluerit dominus, in isto commeatu: si quo minus, die suo colligentur omnes adulterae fruges et cum ceteris scandalis igni inextinguibili cremabuntur.

CAPUT 2. [1] Itaque post tempus pater natus et pater passus, ipse deus dominus omnipotens, Iesus Christus praedicatur. nos vero et semper, et nunc magis ut instructiores per paracletum, deductorem scilicet omnis veritatis, unicum quidem deum credimus, sub hac tamen dispensatione, quam oikonomi/an dicimus, ut unici dei sit et filius, sermo ipsius qui ex ipso processerit, per quem omnia facta sunt et sine quo factum est nihil: hunc missum a patre in virginem et ex ea natum hominem et deum, filium hominis et filium dei, et cognominatum Iesum Christum: hunc passum, hunc mortuum et sepultum secundum scripturas, et resuscitatum a patre et in caelo resumptum sedere ad dexteram patris venturum iudicare vivos et mortuos: qui exinde miserit, secundum promissionem suam, a patre spiritum sanctum paracletum, sanctificatorem fidei eorum qui credunt in patrem et filium et spiritum sanctum. [2] hanc regulam ab initio evangelii decucurrisse, etiam ante priores quosque haereticos nedum ante Praxean hesternum, probabit tam ipsa posteritas omnium haereticorum quam ipsa novellitas Praxeae hesterni. quo peraeque adversus universas haereses iam hinc praeiudicatum sit id esse, verum quodcunque primum, id esse adulterum quodcunque posterius. [3] sed salva ista praescriptione ubique tamen propter instructionem et munitionem quorundam dandus est etiam retractatibus locus, vel ne videatur unaquaeque perversitas non examinata sed praeiudicata damnari, maxime haec quae se existimat meram veritatem possidere dum unicum deum non alias putat credendum quam si ipsum eundemque et patrem et filium et spiritum sanctum dicat: [4] quasi non sic quoque unus sit omnia dum ex uno omnia, per substantiae scilicet unitatem, et nihilo minus custodiatur oikonomi/aj sacramentum quae unitatem in trinitatem disponit, tres dirigens patrem et filium et spiritum, tres autem non statu sed gradu, nec substantia sed forma, nec potestate sed specie, unius autem substantiae et unius status et unius potestatis, quia unus deus ex quo et gradus isti et formae et species in nomine patris et filii et spiritus sancti deputantur. quomodo numerum sine divisione patiuntur procedentes tractatus demonstrabunt.

CAPUT 3. [1] Simples enim quique, ne dixerim imprudentes et idiotae, quae maior semper credentium pars est, quoniam et ipsa regula fidei a pluribus diis saeculi ad unicum et verum deum transfert, non intellegentes

unicum quidem sed cum sua oeconomia esse credendum, expavescunt ad oeconomiam. numerum et dispositionem trinitatis divisionem praesumunt unitatis, quando unitas ex semetipsa derivans trinitatem non destruat ab illa sed administretur. itaque duos et tres iam iactitant a nobis praedicari, se vero unius dei cultores praesumunt, quasi non et unitas irrationaliter collecta haeresim faciat et trinitas rationaliter expensa veritatem constituat. [2] Monarchiam, inquiunt, tenemus et ita sonum ipsum vocaliter exprimunt etiam Latini, et tam opifice ut putes illos tam bene intellegere monarchiam quam enuntiant; sed monarchiam sonare student Latini, oikonomi/an intellegere nolunt etiam Graeci. at ego, si quid utriusque linguae praecepsi, monarchiam nihil aliud significare scio quam singulare et unicum imperium: non tamen praescribere monarchiam ideo quia unius sit eum cuius sit aut filium non habere aut ipsum se sibi filium fecisse aut monarchiam suam non per quos velit administrare. atquin nullam dico dominationem ita unius sui esse, ita singularem, ita monarchiam, ut non etiam per alias proximas personas administretur quas ipsa prospexerit officiales sibi: [3] si vero et filius fuerit ei cuius monarchia sit, non statim dividi eam et monarchiam esse desinere si particeps eius adsumatur et filius, sed proinde illius esse principaliter a quo communicatur in filium, et dum illius est proinde monarchiam esse quae a duobus tam unitis continetur. [4] igitur si et monarchia divina per tot legiones et exercitus angelorum administratur sicut scriptum est, Milies centies centena milia adsistebant ei et milies centena milia apparebant ei, nec ideo unius esse desiit, ut desinat monarchia esse quia per tanta milia virtutum procuratur, [5] quale est ut deus divisionem et dispersionem pati videatur in filio et in spiritu sancto secundum et tertium sortitis locum, tam consortibus substantiae patris, quas non patitur in tot angelorum numero et quidem tam <alienorum> a substantia patris? membra et pignora et instrumenta et ipsam vim ac totum censum monarchiae eversionem deputas eius? non recte. [6] malo te ad sensum rei quam ad sonum vocabuli exerceas. eversio enim monarchiae illa est tibi intellegenda cum alia dominatio suae condicionis et proprii status ac per hoc aemula superducitur, cum alius deus infertur adversus creatorem cum Marcione, cum plures secundum Valentinus et Prodicos: tunc in monarchiae eversionem cum in creatoris destructionem.

CAPUT 4. [1] Ceterum qui filium non aliunde deduco, sed de substantia patris, nihil facientem sine patris voluntate, omnem a patre consecutum potestatem, quomodo possum de fide destruere monarchiam quam a patre filio traditam in filio servo? hoc mihi et in tertium gradum dictum sit, quia spiritum non aliunde puto quam a patre per filium. [2] vide ergo ne tu potius monarchiam destruas, qui dispositionem et dispensationem eius evertis in tot nominibus constitutam in quot deus voluit. adeo autem manet in suo statu, licet trinitas inferatur, ut etiam restitui habeat patri a filio, siquidem apostolus scribit de ultimo fine, Cum tradiderit regnum deo et patri. oportet enim eum regnare usque dum ponat inimicos eius deus sub pedes ipsius, scilicet secundum psalmum, Sede ad dexteram meam donec ponam inimicos tuos scabellum pedum tuorum. cum autem subiecta erunt illi omnia absque eo qui ei subiecit omnia, tunc et ipse subicietur illi qui ei subiecit omnia, ut sit deus omnia in omnibus. [3] videmus igitur non obesse monarchiae filium, etsi hodie apud filium est, quia et in suo statu est apud filium et cum suo state restituetur patri a filio. ita eam nemo hoc nomine destruet <si> filium admittat cui et traditam eam a patre et a quo quandoque restituendam patri constat. [4] hoc uno capitulo epistolae apostolicae potuimus iam et patrem et filium ostendisse duos esse, praeterquam ex nominibus patris et filii, etiam ex eo quod qui tradidit regnum et cui tradidit, item qui subiecit <et cui subiecit>, duo sint necesse est.

CAPUT 5. [1] Sed quia duos unum volant esse, ut idem pater et filius habeatur, oportet et totum de filio examinari, an sit et qui sit et quomodo sit, et ita res ipsa formam suam scripturis et interpretationibus earum patrocinantibus vindicabit. aiunt quidam et Genesim in Hebraico ita incipere, In principio deus fecit sibi filium. hoc ut firmum non sit alia me argumenta deducunt ab ipsa dei dispositione qua fuit ante mundi constitutionem ad usque filii generationem. [2] ante omnia enim deus erat solus, ipse sibi et mundus et locus et omnia. solus autem quia nihil aliud extrinsecus praeter illum. ceterum ne tunc quidem solus: habebat enim secum quam habebat in semetipso rationem, suam scilicet. rationalis enim deus, et ratio in ipso prius, et ita ab ipso omnia: quae ratio sensus ipsius est. [3] hanc Graeci λόγον dicunt, quo vocabolo etiam sermonem appellamus: ideoque iam in usu est nostrorum per simplicitatem interpretationis sermonem dicere in primordio apud deum fuisse, cum magis rationem competat antiquiorem haberi, quia [non] sermonalis a principio sed rationalis deus etiam ante principium, et quia ipse quoque sermo ratione consistens priorem eam ut substantiam suam ostendat.

CAPUT 6. [1] Haec vis et haec divini sensus dispositio apud scripturas etiam in sophiae nomine ostenditur. quid enim sapientius ratione dei sive sermone? itaque sophiam quoque exaudi, ut secundam personam conditam: primo, Dominus creavit me initium viarum in opera sua, priusquam terram faceret, priusquam montes collocarentur; ante omnes autem colles generavit me — in sensu suo scilicet condens et generans. [2] dehinc adsistentem eam ipsa separatione cognosce: Cum pararet, inquit, caelum aderam illi simul; et quomodo fortia faciebat super ventos quae sursum nubila, et quomodo tutos ponebat fontes eius quae sub caelo, ego eram cum illo compingens, ego eram ad quam gaudebat; cottidie autem oblectabar in persona ipsius. [3] nam ut primum deus voluit ea quae cum sophia et ratione et sermone disposuerat intra se in substantias et species suas edere, ipsum primum protulit sermonem habentem in se individuas suas rationem et sophiam, ut per ipsum fierent universa per quem erant cogitata atque disposita, immo et facta iam quantum in dei sensu: hoc enim eis deerat, ut coram quoque in suis speciebus atque

CAPUT 7. [1] Tunc igitur etiam ipse sermo speciem et ornatum suum sumit, sonum et vocem, cum dicit deus, Fiat lux. haec est nativitas perfecta sermonis, dum ex deo procedit; conditus ab eo primum ad cogitatum in nomine sophiae — Dominus condidit me initium viarum; dehinc generatus ad effectum — Cum pararet caelum aderam illi; exinde eum patrem sibi faciens de quo procedendo filius factus est primogenitus, ut ante omnia genitus, et unigenitus, ut solus ex deo genitus, proprie de vulva cordis ipsius secundum quod et pater ipse testatur, Eructavit cor meum sermonem optimum; [2] ad quem deinceps gaudens proinde gaudentem in persona illius, Filius meus es tu, ego hodie genui te, et, Ante luciferum genui te. [3] sic et filius ex sua persona profitetur patrem in nomine sophiae, Dominus condidit me initium viarum in opera sua, ante omnes autem colles generavit me. nam si hic quidem sophia videtur dicere conditam se a domino in opera et vias eius, alibi autem per sermonem ostenditur omnia facta esse et sine illo nihil factum, sicut et rursum, Sermone eius caeli confirmati sunt et spiritu eius omnes vires eorum — utique eo spiritu qui sermoni inerat — apparet unam eandemque vim esse, nunc in nomine sophiae, nunc in appellatione sermonis, quae initium accepit viarum in dei opera, et quae caelum confirmavit, per quam omnia facta sunt et sine qua nihil factum est. [4] nec diutius de isto, quasi non ipse sit sermo et in sophiae et in rationis et in omnis divini animi et spiritus nomine, qui filius factus est dei, de quo prodeundo generatus est. [5] ergo, inquis, das aliquam substantiam esse sermonem, spirito et sophia et ratione constructam? plane. non vis enim eum substantivum habere in re per substantiae proprietatem, ut res et persona quaedam videri possit et ita capiat secundus a deo constitutus duos efficere, patrem et filium, deum et sermonem: [6] quid est enim, dices, sermo nisi vox et sonus oris, et sicut grammatici tradunt aer offensus intellegibilis auditu, ceterum vacuum nescio quid et inane et incorporale? at ego nihil dico de deo inane et vacuum prodire potuisse, ut non de inani et vacuo prolatum, nec carere substantia quod de tanta substantia processit et tantas substantias fecit; [7] fecit enim et ipse quae facta sunt per illum. quale est ut nihil sit ipse sine quo nihil factum est, ut inanis solida et vacuus plena et incorporalis corporalia sit operatus? nam etsi potest aliquando quid fieri diversum eius per quod fit, nihil tamen potest fieri per id quod vacuum et inane est. [8] vacua et inanis res est sermo dei qui filius dictus est, qui ipse deus cognominatus est, Et sermo erat apud deum et deus erat sermo? scriptum est, Non sumes nomen dei in vanum. hic certe est qui in effigie dei constitutus non rapinam existimavit esse se aequalem deo. in qua effigie dei? utique in aliqua, non tamen in nulla: quis enim negabit deum corpus esse, etsi deus spiritus est? spiritus enim corpus sui generis in sua effigie. [9] sed et si invisibilia illa, quaecunque sunt, habent apud deum et suum corpus et suam formam per quae sali deo visibilia sunt, quanto magis quod ex ipsius substantia emissum est sine substantia non erit. quaecunque ergo substantia sermonis fuit, illam dico personam et illi nomen filii vindico, et dam filium agnosco secundum a patre defendo.

CAPUT 8. [1] Hoc si qui putaverit me probolhn aliquam introducere, id est prolotionem rei alterius ex altera, quod facit Valentinus alium atque alium aeonem de aeone producens, primo quidem dicam tibi, non ideo non utitur et veritas vocabulo isto et re ac censu eius quia et haeresis utatur: immo haeresis potius ex veritate accepit quod ad mendacium suum strueret. [2] prolatus est sermo dei an non? hic mecum gradum fige. si prolatus est, cognosce probolhn veritatis, et viderit haeresis si quid de veritate imitata est. iam nunc quaeritur quis quomodo utatur aliqua re et vocabulo eius. Valentinus probolaj suas discernit et separat ab auctore, et ita longe ab eo ponit ut aeon patrem nesciat; denique desiderat nosse nec potest, immo et paene devoratur et dissolvitur in reliquam substantiam. [3] apud nos autem solus filius patrem novit, et sinum patris ipse exposuit, et omnia apud patrem audivit et vidit, et quae mandatus est a patre ea et loquitur, nec suam sed patris perfecit voluntatem, quam de proximo immo de initio noverat. [4] quis enim scit quae sint in deo nisi spiritus qui in ipso, est? sermo autem spiritu structus est, et ut ita dixerim sermonis corpus est spiritus. sermo ergo et in patre semper, sicut dicit, Ego in patre: et apud deum semper, sicut scriptum est, Et sermo erat apud deum: et nunquam separatus a patre aut alias a patre quia Ego et pater unum sumus. [5] haec erit probolhn veritatis, custos unitatis, qua prolatum dicimus filium a patre sed non separatum. protulit enim deus sermonem, quemadmodum etiam paracletus docet, sicut radix fruticem et fons fluvium et sol radium: nam et istae species probolhai\ sunt earum substantiarum ex quibus prodeunt. nec dubitaverim filium licere et radicis fruticem et fontis fluvium et solis radium, quia omnis origo parens est et omne quod ex origine profertur progenies est, multo magis sermo dei qui etiam proprie nomen filii accepit: nec frutex tamen a radice nec fluvius a fonte nec radius a sole discernitur, sicut nec a deo sermo. [6] igitur secundum horum exemplorum formam profiteor me duos licere deum et sermonem eius, patrem et filium ipsius: nam et radix et frutex duae res sunt sed coniunctae, et fons et flumen duae species sunt sed indivisae, et sol et radius duae formae sunt sed cohaerentes. [7] omne quod prodit ex aliquo secundum sit eius necesse est de quo prodit, nec ideo tamen est separatum. secundus autem ubi est, duo sunt, et tertius ubi est, tres sunt. tertius enim est spiritus a deo et filio, sicut tertius a radice fructus ex frutice et tertius a fonte rivus ex flumine et tertius a sole apex ex radio: nihil tamen a matrice alienatur a qua proprietates suas ducit. ita trinitas per consertos et connexos gradus a patre decurrens et monarchiae nihil obstreperit et oeconomiae statum protegit.

CAPUT 9. [1] Hanc me regulam professum, qua inseparatos ab alterutro patrem et filium et spiritum testor, tene ubique, et ita quid quomodo dicatur agnosces. ecce enim dico alium esse patrem et alium filium et alium spiritum (male accepit idiotae quisque aut perversus hoc dictum, quasi diversitatem sonet et ex diversitate separationem protendat patris et filii et spiritus: necessitate autem hoc dico cum eundem patrem et filium et spiritum contendunt, adversus oeconomiam monarchiae adulantes) non tamen diversitate alium filium a patre sed distributione, nec divisione alium sed distinctione, quia non sit idem pater et filius, vel modulo alias ab alio. [2] pater enim tota substantia est, filius vero, derivatio totius et portio, sicut ipse profitetur, Quia pater maior me est: a quo et minoratus canitur in psalmo, Modicum quid citra angelos. sic et pater alias a filio, dum filio maior, dum alias qui generat alius qui generatur, dum alius qui mittit alius qui mittitur, dum alius qui facit alius per quem fit. [3] bene quod et dominus usus hoc verbo in persona paracleti non divisionem significavit sed dispositionem: Rogabo enim, inquit, patrem et alium advocatum mittet vobis, spiritum veritatis. sic alium a se paracletum, quomodo et nos a patre alium filium, ut tertium gradum ostenderet in paracleto, sicut nos secundum in filio, propter oeconomiae observationem. [4] ipsum quod pater et filius dicuntur nonne aliud ab alio est? utique omnia quod vocantur hoc erunt, et quod erunt hoc vocabuntur, et permiscere se diversitas vocabulorum non potest omnino, quia nec rerum quarum erunt vocabula. Est est, non non: nam quod amplius est hoc a malo est.

CAPUT 10. [1] Ita aut pater aut filius est, et neque dies eadem et nox neque

pater idem et filius, ut sint ambo unus et utrumque alter, quod vanissimi isti monarchiani volunt. ipse se, inquiunt, filium sibi fecit. [2] atquin pater filium facit et patrem filius: et qui ex alterutro fiunt a semetipsis sibi fieri nullo modo possunt, ut pater se sibi filium faciat et filius se sibi patrem praestet. [3] quae instituit deus etiam ipse custodit. habeat necesse est pater filium ut pater sit, et filius patrem ut filius sit. aliud est autem habere, aliud esse: verbi gratia, ut maritus sim habeam oportet uxorem, non ipse mihi ero uxor. sic etiam ut pater sim filium habeo, non ipse mihi ero filius: et ut filius sim patrem habeo, non ipse mihi ero pater. [4] ero enim me faciunt si habuero tunc ero, pater si filium habeam, filius ero si patrem. porro si ipse ero quid eorum, iam non habeo quod ipse ero, nec patrem quia ipse ero pater, nec filium quia ipse ero filius. in quantum autem alterum ex his habere me oportet, alterum esse, in tantum, si utrumque fuero, alterum non ero dum alterum non habeo. si enim ipse ero filius qui et pater, iam non habeo filium sed ipse sum filius. non habendo autem filium dum ipse sum filius, quomodo pater ero? habere enim filium debeo ut pater sim: non sum ergo filius, quia patrem non habeo qui facit filium. [5] aequae si ipse sum pater qui et filius, iam non habeo patrem sed ipse sum pater. non habendo autem patrem dum ipse sum pater, quomodo filius ero? habere enim patrem debeo ut filius sim: non ergo ero pater, quia filium non habeo qui facit patrem. [6] hoc erit totum ingenium diaboli, alterum ex altero excludere dum utrumque in unum sub monarchiae favore concludens neutrum haberi facit, ut et pater non sit qui scilicet filium non habet, et filius non sit qui aequae patrem non habet: dum enim pater est filius non erit. sic monarchiam tenent qui nec patrem nec filium continent. [7] sed nihil deo difficile. quis hoc nesciat? et impossibilia apud saeculum possibilia apud deum quis ignoret? et Stulta mundi elegit deus, ut confundat sapientia. legimus omnia. ergo, inquiunt, difficile non fuit deo ipsum se et patrem et filium facere adversus traditam formam rebus humanis: nam et sterilem parere contra naturam difficile deo non fuit, sicut nec virginem. [8] plane nihil deo difficile: sed si tam abrupte in praesumptionibus nostris hac sententia utamur, quidvis de deo confingere poterimus quasi fecerit, quia facere potuerit. non autem, quia omnia potest facere, ideoque credendum est illum fecisse etiam quod non fecerit, sed an fecerit requirendum. potuit, si voluisset, deus pennis hominem ad volandum instruxisse, quod et milvis praestitit: non tamen quia potuit statim et fecit. potuit et Praxean et omnes pariter haereticos statini extinxisse: non tamen quia potuit extinxit. oportebat enim et milvos esse et haereticos, oportebat et patrem crucifigi. hac ratione erit aliquid et difficile deo, id scilicet quodcunque non fecerit non quia non potuerit sed quia noluerit. [9] dei enim posse velle est, et non posse nolle: quod autem voluit, et potuit et ostendit. ergo quia si voluit semetipsum sibi filium facere potuit, et quia si potuit fecit, font probabis illum et potuisse et voluisse si probaveris illum fecisse.

CAPUT 11. [1] Probare autem tam aperte debebis ex scripturis, quam nos probamus illum sibi filium fecisse sermonem suum. si enim filium nominat, filius autem non alius erit quam qui ex ipso prodiit, sermo autem prodiit ex ipso, hic erit filius, non ipse de quo prodiit: non enim ipse prodiit ex semetipso. porro qui eundem patrem dicis et filium, eundem et protulisse ex semetipso facis et prodisse quod deus est. si potuit fecisse, non tamen fecit. [2] aut exhibe probationem quam expostulo meae similem, id est sic scripturas eundem filium et patrem ostendere quemadmodum apud nos distincte pater et filius demonstrantur: distincte inquam, non divise. sicut ego profero dictum a deo, Eructavit cor meum sermonem optimum, haec tu contra opponas alicubi dixisse deum, Eructavit me cor meum sermonem optimum, ut ipse sit qui et eructavit et quod eructavit, et ipse qui protulerit et qui prolatus sit, si ipse est et sermo et deus. [3] ecce ego propono patrem filio dixisse, Filius meus es tu, ego hodie generavi te: si velis ut credam ipsum esse patrem et filium, ostende sic pronuntiatum alibi, Dominus dixit ad se, Filius meus sum ego, ego hodie generavi me; proinde et, Ante luciferum generavi me; et, Dominus condidi me initium viarum in opera mea, ante omnes autem colles generavi me; et si qua alia in hunc modum sunt. quem autem verebatur deus dominus universitatis ita pronuntiare, si ita res erat? an verebatur ne non crederetur si simpliciter se et patrem et filium pronuntiasset? [4] unum tamen veritus est, mentiri veritatis auctorem semetipsum et suam veritatem. et ideo veracem deum credens, scio illum non aliter quam disposuit pronuntiasse nec aliter disposuisse quam pronuntiavit. tu porro eum mendacem efficias et fallacem, et deceptorem fidei huius, si cum ipse esset sibi filius alii dabat filii personam, quando scripturae omnes et demonstrationem et distinctionem trinitatis ostendant a quibus et praescriptio nostra deducitur, non posse unum atque eundem videri qui loquitur et de quo loquitur et ad quem loquitur, quia neque perversitas neque fallacia deo congruat, ut cum ipse esset ad quem loquebatur, ad alium potius et non ad semetipsum loquatur. [5] accipe igitur et alias voces patris de filio per Esaïam: Ecce filius meus quem elegi, dilectus meus in quem bene sensi; ponam spiritum meum super ipsum et iudicium nationibus annuntiabit. accipe et ad ipsum: Magnum tibi est ut voceris filius meus ad statuendas tribus Iacob et ad convertendam dispersionem Israelis; posui te in lucem nationum, ut sis salus in extremum terrae. [6] accipe nunc et filii voces de patre: Spiritus domini super me, quapropter unxit me ad evangelizandum hominibus. item in psalmo ad patrem de eodem: Ne dereliqueris me, donec annuntiem brachium tuum nativitati universae venturae. item in alio: Domine quid multiplicati sunt qui comprimunt me? [7] sed et omnes paene psalmi qui Christi personam sustinent filium ad patrem, id est Christum ad deum, verba facientem repraesentant. animadvertite etiam spiritum loquentem ex tertia persona de patre et filio: Dixit dominus domino meo, Sede ad dexteram meam donec ponam inimicos tuos scabellum peditum tuorum. [8] item per Esaïam: Haec dicit dominus domino meo Christo. item per eundem ad patrem de filio: Domine, quis credidit auditui nostro et brachium domini cui revelatum est? annuntiavimus de illo sicut puerulus, sicut radix in terra sitiens, et non erat forma eius nec gloria. [9] haec pauca de multis: nec enim affectamus universas scripturas evolvere, cum et in singulis capitulis plenam maiestatem et auctoritatem contestantes maiorem congressum in retractatibus habeamus. his itaque paucis tamen manifeste distinctio trinitatis exponitur: [10] est enim ipse qui pronuntiat spiritus, et pater ad quem pronuntiat, et filius de quo pronuntiat. sic et cetera, quae nunc a patre de filio vel ad filium, nunc a filio de patre vel ad patrem, nunc a spiritu pronuntiantur, unamquamque personam in sua proprietate constituunt.

CAPUT 12. [1] Si te adhuc numerus scandalizat trinitatis quasi non connexae in unitate simplici, interrogo quomodo unicus et singularis pluraliter loquitur, Faciam hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram, cum debuerit dixisse, Faciam hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem meam, utpote unicus et singularis. [2] sed et in sequentibus, Ecce Adam factus est tanquam unus ex nobis, fallit aut ludit, ut cum unus et solus et singularis esset numerose loqueretur. aut numquid angelis loquebatur, ut Iudaei interpretantur, quia nec ipsi filium agnoscunt? an quia ipse erat pater filius spiritus, ideo pluralem se praestans pluraliter sibi loquebatur? [3] immo quia iam adhaerebat illi filius, secunda persona, sermo ipsius, et tertia, spiritus in sermone, ideo

pluraliter pronuntiavit Faciamus et Nostrani et Nobis. cum quibus enim faciebat hominem, et quibus faciebat similem? filio quidem qui erat induturus hominem, spiritu vero qui erat sanctificaturus hominem, quasi cum ministris et arbitris ex unitate trinitatis loquebatur. [4] denique sequens scriptura distinguit inter personas: <Et fecit> deus hominem, ad imaginem dei fecit illum. cur non suam, si unus qui faciebat et non erat ad cuius faciebat? erat autem ad cuius imaginem faciebat, ad filii scilicet, qui homo futurus certior et verior imaginem suam fecerat dici hominem qui tunc de limo formari habebat, imago veri et similitudo. [5] sed et in antecedentibus operibus mundi quomodo scriptum est? primum quidem, nondum filio apparente Et dixit deus Fiat lux, et facta est. ipse statim sermo lux vera quae illuminat hominem venientem in hunc mundum, et per illum mundialis quoque lux. exinde autem in sermone, Christo adsistente et administrante, deus voluit fieri et deus fecit: Et dixit deus Fiat firmamentum, et fecit deus firmamentum; Et dixit deus Fiant luminaria, et fecit deus luminare maius et minus. sed et cetera utique idem fecit qui et priora, id est sermo dei per quem omnia facta sunt et sine quo factum est nihil. [6] qui si ipse deus est secundum Ioannem — Deus erat sermo — habes duos, alium dicentem ut fiat, alium facientem. alium autem quomodo accipere debeas iam professus sum, personae non substantiae nomine, ad distinctionem non ad divisionem. [7] ceterum <etsi> ubique teneo unam substantiam in tribus cohaerentibus, tamen alium dicam oportet ex necessitate sensus eum qui iubet et eum qui facit. nam nec iuberet, si ipse faceret dum iuberet fieri. per eum tamen iubebat, haud sibi iussurus si unus esset, aut sine iussu factururus; quia non expectasset ut sibi iuberet.

CAPUT 13. [1] Ergo, inquis, si deus dixit et deus fecit, si alius deus dixit et alius fecit, duo dii praedicantur. si tam durus es, puta interim. et ut adhuc amplius hoc putes, accipe et in psalmo duos deos dictos: Thronus tuus, deus, in aevum, <virga directionis> virga regni tui; dilexisti iustitiam et odisti iniquitatem, propterea unxit te deus, deus tuus. [2] si ad deum loquitur, et unctum deum a deo, affirmat et hic duos deos +pro virga regni tui+. inde et Esaias ad personam Christi, Et Seboin, inquit, viri elati, ad te transibunt et post te sequentur vincti manibus et te adorabunt, quia in te deus est; tu enim es deus noster et nesciebamus, deus Israelis. et hic enim dicendo Deus in te, et Tu deus, duos proponit, qui erat in Christo et Christum ipsum. [3] plus est quod in evangelio totidem invenies: In principio erat sermo et sermo erat apud

deum et deus erat sermo: unus qui erat, et alius penes quem erat. sed et nomen domini in duobus lego: Dixit dominus domino meo, Sede ad dexteram meam. et Esaias haec dicit Domine, quis credidit auditui nostro, et brachium domini cui revelatum est? brachium enim tuum non <domini> dixisset, si non dominum patrem et dominum filium intellegi vellet. [4] etiam adhuc antiquior Genesis: Et pluit dominus super Sodomam et Gomorram sulphur et ignem de caelo a domino. haec aut nega scripta, aut quis es ut non putes accipienda quemadmodum scripta sunt, maxime quae non in allegoriis et parabolis sed in definitionibus certis et simplicibus habent sensum? quodsi ex illis es qui tunc dominum non sustinebant dei se filium ostendentem ne eum dominum crederent, recordare tu cum illis scriptum esse, Ego dixi, Vos dii estis et filii altissimi; et, Stetit deus in ecclesia deorum: ut si homines per fidem filios dei factos deos scriptura pronuntiare non timuit, scias illam multo magis vero et unico dei filio <dei> et domini nomen iure contulisse. [5] ergo, inquis, provocabo te ut hodie quoque ex auctoritate istarum scripturarum constanter duos deos et duos dominos praedices. absit. nos enim, qui et tempora et causas, scripturarum per dei gratiam inspicimus, maxime paracleti non hominum discipuli, duos quidem definimus, patrem et filium, et iam tres cum spiritu sancto, secundum rationem oeconomiae quae facit numerum, ne, ut vestra perversitas infert, pater ipse credatur natus et passus, quod non licet credi quoniam non ita traditum est. [6] duos tamen deos et duos dominos nunquam ex ore nostro proferimus: non quasi non et pater deus et filius deus et spiritus sanctus deus, et deus unusquisque, sed quoniam retro et duo dii et duo domini praedicabantur, ut, ubi venisset Christus, et deus agnosceretur et dominus vocaretur quia filius dei et domini. si enim una persona et dei et domini in scripturis inveniretur, merito Christus non esset admissus ad nomen dei et domini — nemo enim alius praeter unus deus et unus dominus praedicabatur — et futurum erat ut ipse pater descendisse videretur quia unus deus et unus dominus legebatur, et tota oeconomia eius obumbraretur quae in materiam fidei prospecta atque dispensata est. [7] at ubi venit Christus et cognitus est a nobis quod ipse <sit> qui numerum retro fecerat factus secundus a patre et cum spiritu tertius, etiam pater per ipsum plenius manifestatus, redactum est iam nomen dei et domini in unionem: ut, quia nationes a multitudine idolorum transirent ad unicum deum, et differentia constitueretur inter cultores unius et plurimae divinitatis. [8] nam et lacere in mundo Christianos oportebat ut filios lucis, lumen mundi unum et deum et dominum colentes et nominantes. ceterum si ex conscientia qua scimus dei nomen et domini et patri et filio et spiritui convenire deos et dominos nominaremus, extinxissemus faces nostras etiam ad martyria timidiore, quibus evadendi quaque pateret occasio iurantibus statim per deos et dominos, ut quidam haeretici quorum dei plures. [9] itaque deos omnino non dicam nec dominos, sed apostolum sequar ut si pariter nominandi fuerint pater et filius deum patrem appellem et Iesum Christum dominum nominem. solum autem Christum potero deum dicere, sicut idem apostolus: Ex quibus Christus, qui est, inquit, deus super omnia, benedictus in aevum omne. [10] nam et radium solis seorsum solem vocabo: solem autem nominans cuius est radius, non statim et radium solem appellabo. nam etsi soles duos faciam, tamen et solem et radium eius tam duas res et duas species unius et indivisae substantiae numerabo quam deum et sermonem eius, quam patrem et filium.

CAPUT 14. [1] Adhuc et illa nobis regula adsistit duos vindicantibus patrem et filium, quae invisibilem deum determinavit. cum enim Moyses in Aegypto desiderasset domini conspectum dicens, Si ergo inveni gratiam coram te, manifesta mihi te ut cognoscenter videam te: Non potes videre, inquit, faciem meam ; non enim videbit homo faciem meam et vivet — id est morietur qui viderit. [2] invenimus enim et a multis deum visum et neminem tamen eorum qui eum viderant mortuum: visum quidem deum secundum hominum capacitates, non secundum plenitudinem divinitatis. nam patriarchae deum vidisse referuntur ut Abraham et Iacob, et prophetae ut Esaias, ut Ezechiel, et tamen mortui non sunt. igitur aut mori debuerant si eum viderant — deum enim nemo videbit et vivet; aut si deum viderunt et mortui non sunt, scriptura mentitur deum dixisse, Faciem meam homo si viderit non vivet; aut scriptura mentitur [cum invisum aut] cum visum deum profert. [3] iam ergo alius erit qui videbatur, quia non potest idem invisibilis definiri qui videbatur: et consequens erit ut invisibilem patrem intellegamus pro plenitudine maiestatis, visibilem vero filium agnoscamus pro modulo derivationis, sicut nec solem nobis contemplari licet quantum ad ipsam substantiae summam quae est in caelis, radium autem eius toleramus oculis pro temperatura portionis quae in terram inde porrigitur. [4] hic ex diverso volet aliquis etiam filium invisibilem contendere, ut sermonem, ut spiritum, et dum unam condicionem patris et filii vindicat unum potius atque eundem confirmare patrem et filium. [5] sed

diximus scripturam differentiae patrocinari per visibilis et invisibilis distinctionem. nam et illud adiciunt ad argumentationem, quod si filius tunc ad Moysen loquebatur, ipse faciem suam nemini visibilem pronuntiaret, quia scilicet ipse invisibilis pater fuerit in filii nomine. ac per hoc sic eundem volunt accipi et visibilem et invisibilem, quomodo eundem patrem et filium, quoniam et paulo supra, antequam faciem Moysi negasset, scriptum sit dominum ad Moysen locutum coram velut si quis loquatur ad amicum suum, non minus quam et Iacob, Ego vidi, inquit, dominum facie ad faciem: [6] ergo visibilis et invisibilis idem: et quia idem utrumque, ideo et ipse pater invisibilis, qua et filius, visibilis. quasi non expositio scripturae quae fit a nobis filio competat, patre seposito, in sua visibilitate. dicimus enim . et filium suo nomine eatenus invisibilem, qua sermo et spiritus dei, ex substantiae condicione iam nunc, [et qua deus et sermo et spiritus dei] visibilem autem fuisse ante carnem eo modo quo dicit ad Aaron et Mariam, Etsi fuerit propheta in vobis, in visione cognoscat illi et in somnio loquar illi, non quomodo Moysi os ad os loquar illi in specie (id est in veritate) et non in aenigmate (id est non in imagine): sicut et apostolus, Nunc videmus tanquam per speculum in aenigmate, tunc autem facie ad faciem. [7] igitur cum Moysi servat conspectum suum et colloquium facie ad faciem in futurum (nam hoc postea adimpletum est in montis secessu, sicut legimus in evangelio visoni cum illo Moysen colloquentem), apparet retro semper in speculo et aenigmate et visione et somnio deum (id est filium dei) visum tam prophetis et patriarchis quam et ipsi adhuc Moysi: [8] et ipse quidem dominus si forte coram ad faciem loquebatur, non tamen ut est homo faciem eius videret, nisi forte in speculo et in aenigmate. denique si sic Moysi locutus est dominus ut et Moyses faciem eius cominus sciret, quomodo statim atque ibidem desiderat faciem eius videre, quam quia viderat non desideraret? quomodo aequae et dominus negat videri faciem suam posse, quam ostenderat, si tamen ostenderat? aut quae est facies dei cuius conspectus negatur? si erat quae visa est — Vidi, inquit Iacob, deum facie ad faciem et salva facta est anima mea — alia debet esse facies quae si videatur occidit. [9] aut numquid filius quidem videbatur — etsi facie, sed ipsum hoc in visione et somnio et speculo et aenigmate, quia sermo et spiritus nisi imaginaria forma videri non potest — faciem autem suam dicit invisibilem patrem? quis enim pater? num facies erit filii, nomine auctoritatis quam genitus a patre consequitur? non enim et de aliqua maiore persona congruit dicere, Facies mea est ille homo, et, Faciem mihi praestat? [10] Pater, inquit, maior me est: ergo facies erit filii pater. nam et scriptura quid dicit? Spiritus personae eius Christus dominus. ergo si Christus personae paternae spiritus est, merito spiritus cuius persona erat, id est patris eius, faciem suam ex unitate scilicet pronuntiavit. mira res plane an facies filii pater accipi possit qui est caput eius: caput enim Christi deus.

CAPUT 15. [1] Si hunc articulum quaestionibus scripturae veteris non expediam, de novo testamento sumam confirmationem nostrae interpretationis, ne, quodcunque in filium reputo in patrem proinde defendas. ecce enim et in evangeliiis et in apostolis visibilem et invisibilem deum deprehendo sub manifesta et personali distinctione condicionis utriusque. [2] exclamat quodammodo Ioannes, Deum nemo vidit unquam: utique nec retro: ademit enim temporis quaestionem dicendo deum nunquam visum. confirmat et apostolus de deo Quem nemo vidit hominum, sed nec videri potest: scilicet quia morietur qui videbit. idem ipsi apostoli et vidisse se Christum et contrectasse testantur. [3] porro si ipse est Christus et pater et filius, quomodo et visus est et invisus? ad hanc diversitatem visi et invisus in unum conferendam qui ex diverso nobis argumentabitur recte utrumque dictum, visibilem quidem in carne, invisibilem vero ante carnem, ut idem sit pater invisibilis ante carnem qui et filius visibilis in carne. [4] atquin si idem ante carnem invisibilis, quomodo visus etiam retro invenitur ante carnem? aequè si idem post carnem visibilis, quomodo et nunc invisibilis pronuntiatur ab apostolis, nisi quia alias quem et retro visum in aenigmate plenius visibilem caro effecit, sermo scilicet qui et caro factus est, alius quem nunquam quisquam vidit, [nisi] pater scilicet cuius est sermo? [5] denique inspiciamus quem apostoli viderint. Quod vidimus, inquit Ioannes, quod audivimus, oculis nostris vidimus, et manus nostrae contrectaverunt de sermone vitae. sermo enim vitae caro factus, et auditus et visus et contrectatus quia caro, qui ante carnem sermo tantum in primordio apud deum patrem, non pater apud semetipsum. nam etsi deus sermo, sed apud deum, quia ex deo deus, quia cum patre apud patrem. [6] Et vidimus gloriam eius tanquam unigeniti a patre, utique filii scilicet visibilis, glorificati a patre invisibili. et ideo, quoniam sermonem dei deum dixerat, ne adiuvaret adversariorum praesumptionem quasi patrem ipsum vidisset, ad distinguendum inter invisibilem patrem et filium visibilem superdicit ex abundanti, Deum nemo vidit unquam. quem deum? sermonem? atquin, Vidimus et audivimus et contrectavimus de sermone vitae, praedictum est. sed quem deum? scilicet patrem, apud quem deus erat sermo unigenitus filius, qui sinum patris ipse disseruit. [7] ipse et auditus et visus, et ne phantasma crederetur etiam contrectatus. hunc et Paulus conspexit, nec tamen patrem vidit: Nonne, inquit, vidi Iesum? Christum autem et ipse deum cognominavit: Quorum patres, et ex quibus Christus secundum carnem, qui est super omnia deus, benedictus in aevum. ostendit et ipse visibilem dei filium, id est sermonem dei, quia qui caro factus est Christus dictus est. [8] de patre autem ad Timotheum: Quem nemo vidit hominum, sed nec videre potest; exaggerans amplius: Qui solus habet immortalitatem et lucem habitat inaccessibilem ; de quo et supra dixerat: Regi autem saeculorum immortalis invisibili soli deo; ut et contraria ipsi filio adscriberemus, mortalitatem accessibilitatem. quem mortuum contestatur secundum scripturas et a se novissime visum, per accessibilem utique lucem: quanquam et illam neque ipse sine periculo luminis expertus est, neque Petrus et Ioannes et Iacobus sine rationis et amentia, qui si non passuri filii gloriam sed patrem vidissent <essent> credo morituri ibidem: deum enim nemo videbit et vivet. [9] si haec ita sunt, constat eum semper visum ab initio qui visus fuerit in fine, et eum nec in fine visum qui nec ab initio fuit visus, et ita duos esse, visum et invisum. filius ergo visus est semper et filius conversatus est semper et filius operatus est semper, ex auctoritate patris et voluntate, quia Filius nihil a semetipso potest facere nisi viderit patrem facientem - in sensu scilicet facientem. pater enim sensu agit, filius vero quod in patris sensu est videns perficit. sic omnia per filium facta sunt et sine illo factum est nihil.

CAPUT 16. [1] Nec putes sola opera mundi per filium facta sed et quae a deo exinde gesta sunt. pater enim qui diligit filium et omnia tradidit in sinu eius, utique a primordio diligit et a primordio tradidit. ex quo a primordio sermo erat apud deum et deus erat sermo, cui data est omnis potestas a patre in caelis et in terra, non iudicat pater quemquam sed omne iudicium tradidit filio, a primordio tamen: [2] omnem enim dicens potestatem, et omne iudicium, et omnia per eum facta, et omnia tradita in manu eius, nullam exceptionem temporis permittit, quia omnia non erunt si non omnis temporis fuerint. filius itaque est qui ab initio iudicavit, turrem superbissimam elidens linguasque disperdens, orbem totum aquarum violentia puniens, pluens super Sodomam et Gomorram ignem et sulphurem dominus a domino. [3] ipse enim et ad

humana semper colloquia descendit, ab Adam usque ad patriarchas et prophetas, in visione in somnio in speculo in aenigmate ordinem suum praestruens ab initio semper quem erat persecuturus in finem. ita semper ediscebat et deus in terris cum hominibus conversari, non alius quam sermo qui caro erat futurus. ediscebat autem ut nobis fidem sterneret, ut facilius crederemus filium dei descendisse in saeculum <si> et retro tale quid gestum cognosceremus. [4] propter nos enim sicut scripta sunt ita et gesta sunt in quos aevorum fines decucurrerunt. sic etiam adfectus humanos sciebat iam tunc, suscepturus etiam ipsas substantias hominis carnem et animam, interrogans Adam quasi nesciens, Ubi es, Adam? paenitens quod hominem fecisset quasi non praesciens, temptans Abraham quasi ignorans quid sit in homine, offensus reconciliatus eisdem, et si qua haeretici adprehendunt quasi deo indigna ad destructionem creatoris, ignorantes haec in filium competisse qui etiam passiones humanas et sitim et esuriem et lacrimas et ipsam nativitatem ipsamque mortem erat subiturus, propter hoc minoratus a patre modicum citra angelos. [5] sed haeretici quidem nec filio dei deputabunt convenire quae tu ipsi patri inducis quasi ipse se deminoraverit propter nos, cum scriptura alium dicat ab alio minoratum, non ipsum a semetipso. quid si et alius qui coronabatur gloriam et honorem, alius qui coronabat, utique filium pater? [6] ceterum quale est ut deus omnipotens ille invisibilis quem nemo vidit hominum nec videre potest, ille qui inaccessibilem lucem habitat, ille qui non habitat in manu factis, a cuius conspectu terra contremiscit montes liquescunt ut cera, qui totum orbem manu adprehendit velut nidum, cui caelum thronus et terra scabellum, in quo omnis locus, non ipse in loco, qui universitatis extrema linea est, ille altissimus, in paradiso ad vesperam deambulaverit quaerens Adam, et arcam post introitum Noe clauserit, et apud Abraham sub quercu refrigeraverit, et Moysen de rubo ardenti vocarit, et in fornace Babylonii regis quartus apparuerit — quanquam filius hominis est dictus? +et in imagine et speculo et aenigmate+ scilicet et haec nec de filio dei credenda fuissent si scripta non essent, fortasse non credenda de patre licet scripta, quem isti in vulvam Mariae deducunt et in Pilati tribunal imponunt et in monumento Ioseph recludunt. [7] hinc igitur apparet error illorum. ignorantes enim a primordio omnem ordinem divinae dispositionis per filium decucurrisse, ipsum credunt patrem et visum et congressum et operatum, et sitim et esuriem passum, adversus prophetam dicentem, Deus aeternus non sitiet nec esuriet omnino - quanto magis nec morietur nec sepelietur — et ita unum deum semper egisse, id est patrem, quae per filium gesta sunt. filium in patris, dicente ipso domino, Ego veni in patris mei nomine; item ad ipsum patrem, Nomen tuum manifestavi hominibus; condicente etiam scriptura, Benedictus qui venit in nomine domini — utique filius in patris nomine. [2] et nomen patris Deus omnipotens, Altissimus, Dominus virtutum, Rex Israelis, Qui est. quatenus ita scripturae docent, haec dicimus et in filium compatisse, et in his filium venisse et in his semper egisse et sic ea in se hominibus manifestasse. [3] Omnia, inquit, patris mea sunt: cur non et nomina? cum ergo legis Deum omnipotentem et Altissimum et Deum virtutum et Regem Israelis et Qui est, vide ne per haec filius etiam demonstretur suo iure Deus <omnipotens> qua sermo Dei omnipotentis quaque omnium accepit potestatem, Altissimus qua dextera dei exaltatus sicut Petrus in Actis contionatur, Dominus virtutum quia omnia subiecta sunt illi a patre, Rex Israelis quia illi proprie excidit sors gentis istius, item Qui est quoniam multi filii dicuntur et non sunt. [4] si autem volunt et Christi nomen patris esse, audient suo loco. interim hic mihi promptum sit responsum adversus id quod et de Apocalypsi Ioannis proferunt, Ego dominus qui est et qui fuit et venit, omnipotens, et sicubi alibi dei omnipotentis appellationem non putant etiam filio convenire: quasi qui venturus sit <non sit> omnipotens, cum et filius omnipotentis tam omnipotens sit quam deus dei filius.

CAPUT 18. [1] Sed hanc societatem nominum paternorum in filio ne facile perspiciant perturbat illos scriptura si quando unicum deum statuit, quasi non eadem et deos et dominos duos proposuerit, ut supra ostendimus. ergo quia duos et unum, inquiunt, invenimus, ideo ambo unus, atque idem et filius et pater. [2] porro non periclitatur scriptura ut illi de tua argumentatione succurras ne sibi contraria videatur: habet rationem et cum unicum deum statuit et cum duos patrem et filium ostendit, et sufficit sibi. filium nominari ab ea constat: salvo enim filio recte unicum deum potest determinasse cuius est filius. non enim desinit esse qui habet filium ipse unicus, suo scilicet nomine quotiens sine filio nominatur. sine filio autem nominatur cum principaliter determinatur ut prima persona, quae ante filii nomen erat proponenda, quia pater ante cognoscitur et post patrem filius nominatur. [3] igitur unus deus pater, et absque eo alius non est: quod ipse inferens non filium negat sed alium deum: ceterum alius a patre filius non est. denique inspicere sequentia huiusmodi pronuntiationum, et invenies fere ad idolorum factitatores atque cultores definitionem earum pertinere ut multitudinem falsorum deorum unio divinitatis expellat, habens tamen filium, quanto individuum et inseparatum a patre, tanto in patre reputandum etsi non nominatum. [4] atquin si nominasset illum separasset, ita dicens, Alius praeter me non est visi filius meus: alium enim etiam filium fecisset quem de aliis excepisset. puta solem dicere, Ego sol, et alius praeter me non est nisi radius meus: nonne denotasses vanitatem, quasi non et radius in sole deputetur? itaque praeter semetipsum non esse alium deum, hoc propter idololatriam tam nationum quam Israelis: etiam propter haereticos, qui sicut nationes manibus ita et ipsi verbis idola fabricantur, id est alium deum et alium Christum. [5] igitur et cum se unum pronuntiabat filio pater procurabat, ne ab alio deo Christus venisse credatur sed ab illo qui praedixerat, Ego deus et alius absque me non est, qui se unicum sed cum filio ostendit cum quo caelum solus extendit.

CAPUT 19. [1] Quin et hoc dictum eius in argumentum singularitatis arripient: Extendi, inquit, caelum solus: quantum ad ceteras virtutes, solus, praestruens adversus coniecturas haereticorum, qui mundum ab angelis et potestatibus diversis volunt structum, qui et ipsum creatorem aut angelum faciunt aut ad alia quae extrinsecus, ut opera mundi, ignorantem quoque subornatum. [2] aut si sic solus caelum extendit, quomodo isti praesumunt in perversum haeretici quasi singularis non admittatur sophia illa dicens, Cum pararet caelum ego aderam illi? et si dixit, Quis cognovit sensum domini et quis illi consilio fuit? utique praeter sophiam ait quae illi aderat. in ipso tamen et cum illo universa compingebat non ignorante quid faceret. Praeter sophiam autem Praeter filium dicit, qui est Christus sophia et virtus dei, secundum apostolum, solus sciens sensum patris: quis enim scit quae sunt in deo nisi spiritus qui in ipso est? — non qui extra ipsum. erat ergo qui non solum deum faceret, nisi a ceteris solum. [3] sed et evangelium recusetur quod dicat omnia per sermonem a deo facta esse et sine eo nihil factum. nisi enim fallor et alibi scriptum est: Sermone eius caeli firmati sunt, et spiritu eius omnes virtutes eorum. et sermo autem, virtus et sophia, ipse erit dei filius. [4] ita si per filium omnia, caelum quoque per filium extendens non solus extendit, nisi illa ratione qua a ceteris solus. atque adeo statim de filio loquitur: Quis alius deiecit signa ventriloquorum et divinationes a corde, avertens sapientes retrorsum et consilium eorum infatuans, sistens verba filii sui? — dicendo scilicet, Hic est filius meus dilectus, hunc audite. [5] ita filium subiungens ipse interpretator est quomodo caelum solus extenderit, scilicet cum filio solus, sicut cum filio unum. proinde et filii erit vox, Extendi caelum solus, quia sermone caeli confirmati sunt. quia sophia in sermone adsistente paratum est caelum, et omnia per sermonem sunt facta, competit et filium solum extendisse caelum quia solus operationi patris ministravit. [6] idem erit dicens, Ego primus, et in superventura ego sum, primum scilicet omnium sermo: In principio erat sermo, in quo principio prolatus a patre est. ceterum pater, non habens initium, ut a nullo prolatus, ut innatus, <primus> non potest videri: qui solus fuit semper, ordinem habere non potuit. [7] igitur si propterea eundem et patrem et filium credendum putaverunt ut unum deum vindicent, salva est unio eius qui, cum sit unus habet et filium, aequae et ipsum eisdem scripturis comprehensum. si filium nolunt secundum a patre reputari ne secundus duos faciat deos dici, ostendimus etiam duos deos in scriptura relatos et duos dominos: [8] et tamen ne de isto scandalizentur, rationem reddimus qua dei non duo dicantur nec domini sed qua pater et filius duo, et hoc non ex separatione substantiae sed ex dispositione, cum individuum et inseparatum filium a patre pronuntiamus, nec statu sed gradu alium, qui etsi deus dicatur quando nominatur singularis, non ideo duos deos faciat sed unum, hoc ipso quod et deus ex unitate patris vocari habeat.

CAPUT 20. [1] Sed argumentationibus eorum adhuc retundendis opera praebebenda est si quid de scripturis ad sententiam suam excerpent, cetera nolentes intueri quae et ipsa regulam servant, et quidem salva unione divinitatis et monarchiae sonitu. nam sicut in veteribus nihil aliud tenent quam, Ego deus et alias praeter me non est, ita in evangelio responsionem domini ad Philippum tuentur, Ego et pater unum sumus, et Qui me viderit vidit et patrem, et Ego in patre et pater in me. [2] his tribus capitulis totum instrumentum utriusque testamenti volant cedere, cum oporteat secundum plura intellegi pauciora. [3] sed proprium hoc est omnium haereticorum. nam quia pauca sunt quae in silva inveniri possunt, pauca adversus plura defendunt et posteriora adversus priora suscipiunt. regula autem omni rei semper ab initio constituta in prioribus et in posteriora praescribit, utique et in paucioribus.

CAPUT 21. [1] Aspice itaque quanta praescribant tibi etiam in evangelio ante Philippi consultationem et ante omnem argumentationem tuam. et in

primis ipsa statim praefatio Ioannis evangelizatoris demonstrat quid retro fuerit qui caro fieri habebat: In principio erat sermo et sermo erat apud deum et deus erat sermo ; hic erat in principio apud deum; omnia per ipsum facta sunt et sine ipso factum est nihil. [2] nam si haec non aliter accipi licet quam quomodo scripta sunt, indubitanter alias ostenditur qui fuerit a principio, alias apud quem fuit: alium sermonem dei, alium deum — licet et deus sermo, sed qua dei filius non qua pater — alium per quem omnia, alium a quo omnia. [3] alium autem quomodo dicamus saepe iam edidimus. quo alium dicamus, necesse est non eundem <non eundem> autem non quasi separatum, dispositione alium non divisione. hic ergo factus est caro, non ipse cuius erat sermo. huius gloria visa est tanquam unici a patre, non tanquam patris. hic unicus sinum patris disseruit, non sinum suum pater: praecedit enim, Deum nemo vidit unquam. [4] inde et si agnus dei ab Ioanne designatur, non ipse cuius est dilectus. certe filius dei semper, sed non ipse cuius est filius. hoc eum Nathanael statim sensit, sicut et alibi Petrus: Tu es filius dei. hoc et ipse recte sensisse illos confirmat, Nathanaeli quidem respondens, Quia dixi Vidi te sub ficu, ideo credis; Petram vero beatum adfirmans cui non caro neque sanguis revelasset quod et patrem senserat, sed pater qui in caelis est. [5] quo dicto utriusque personae constituit distinctionem, et filii in terris, quem Petrus agnoverat dei filium, et patris qui in caelis, qui Petro revelaverat quod Petrus agnoverat, dei filium Christum. [6] cum in templum introiit, aedem patris appellat, ut filius. cum ad Nicodemum dicit, Ita, inquit, dilexit deus mundum ut filium suum unicum dederit, in quem omnis qui crediderit non pereat sed habeat vitam sempiternam: et rursus, Non enim misit deus filium suum in mundum ut iudicet mundum, sed ut salvus sit mundus per eum; qui crediderit in illum non iudicatur; qui non crediderit in illum iam iudicatus est, quia non credidit in nomine unici filii dei. [7] Ioannes autem cum interrogaretur quid de Iesu cum tingeret, Pater, inquit, dilexit filium et omnia tradidit in manu eius; qui credidit in filium habet vitam aeternam; qui non credidit in filio dei non videbit deum sed ira dei manebit super eum. [8] quem vero Samaritidi ostendit? si Messiam qui dicitur Christus, filium utique se, non patrem, demonstravit, quia et alibi Christus dei filius, non pater, dictus est. [9] exinde discipulis, Meum est, inquit, ut faciam voluntatem eius qui me misit, ut consummem opus eius. et ad Iudaeos de paralytici sanitate, Pater meus usque modo operatur et ego operor: Pater et ego, filius dicit. denique propter hoc magis

Iudaei illum interficere volebant, non tantum quod solveret sabbatum sed quod patrem suum deum diceret, aequans se deo. [10] tunc ergo dicebat ad eos, Nihil filius facere potest a semetipso nisi videat patrem facientem; quae enim ille facit eadem et filius facit: pater enim diligit filium, et omnia demonstravit illi quae ille fecit, et maiora istis opera demonstrabit illi, ut vos miremini; quomodo enim <pater> suscitatur mortuos et vivificat, ita et filius quos vult vivificat. neque enim pater iudicat, sed omne iudicium dedit filio, uti omnes honorent filium sicut honorant patrem: qui non honorat filium, non honorat patrem qui filium misit. [11] amen amen dico vobis, quod qui audit sermones meos et credit ei qui me misit habet vitam aeternam, et in iudicium non veniet sed transit de morte in vitam. [12] amen dico vobis, quod veniet hora qua mortui audient vocem filii dei et cum audierint vivant: sicut enim pater habet vitam aeternam a semetipso, ita et filio dedit vitam aeternam habere in semetipso, et iudicium dedit illi facere in potestate quia filius hominis est — per carnera scilicet, sicut et filius dei per spiritum eius. [13] adhuc adicit, Ego autem habeo maius quam Ioannis testimonium; cum tingeret opera enim quae pater mihi dedit consummare, illa ipsa de me testimonium perhibent quod me pater miserit; et qui me misit pater, ipse testimonium dixit de me. [14] subiungens autem, Neque vocem eius audistis unquam neque formam eius vidistis, confirmat retro non patrem sed filium fuisse qui videbatur et audiebatur. [15] denique dicit, Ego veni in patris mei nomine et non me recepistis — adeo semper filius erat in dei et regis et domini omnipotentis et altissimi nomine. [16] interrogantibus autem quid facere debeant respondit, Ut credatis in eum quem deus misit. [17] panem quoque se adfirmat quem pater praestaret de caelo; ergo omne quod ei daret pater ad se venire, nec reiecturum se, quia de caelo descendisset non ut suam sed ut patris faceret voluntatem; voluntatem autem patris esse uti qui viderit filium et crediderit in eum vitam et resurrectionem consequatur; neminem porro ad se venire posse nisi quem pater adducat; omnem qui a patre audisset et didicisset, venire ad se: Non quasi patrem aliquis viderit, adiciens et hic, ut ostenderet patris esse sermonem per quem docti fiant. [18] at cum discedunt ab eo multi et apostolis suis offert si velint discedere et ipsi, quid respondit Simon Petrus? Quo discedimus? verba vitae habes, et nos credimus quod tu sis Christus: patrem illum esse an patris Christum?

CAPUT 22. [1] Cuius autem doctrinam dicit ad quam mirabantur? suam an

patris? aequae ambigentibus inter se ne ipse esset Christus, utique non pater sed filius, Meque scitis, inquit, <et scitis> unde sim, et non veni a me ipso, sed est verus qui me misit, quem vos non nostis; ego novi illum, quia apud illum sum. [2] non dixit, Quia ipse sum, et, Ipse me misi, sed, Ille me misit. item cum misissent ad invadendum eum pharisaei, Modicum adhuc tempus, ait, vobiscum sum, et vado ad eum qui me misit. at ubi se negat esse solum — Sed ego, inquit, et qui me misit pater — nonne duos demonstrat, tam duos quam inseparatos? immo totum erat hoc quod docebat, inseparatos duos esse: [3] siquidem et legem proponens duorum hominum testimonium confirmantem, subiungit, Ego testimonium dico de me, et testimonium dicit de me qui me misit pater. quodsi unus esset, dum idem est et filius et pater, non citeretur legis patrocinio fidem imponentis non unius testimonio sed duorum. [4] item interrogatus ubi esset pater, neque se neque patrem notum esse illis respondens, duos dixit ignotos, quod si ipsum nossent patrem nossent: non quidem quasi ipse esset pater et filius, sed quia per individuitatem neque agnosci neque ignorari alter sine altero potest. [5] Qui me, ait, misit verax est, et ego quae ab eo audiui ea et loquor in mundum: interpretante extrinsecus scriptura non cognovisse illos quod de patre dixisset, cum scilicet cognoscere debuissent sermones patris in filio esse, legendo apud Hieremiam, Et dixit mihi dominus, Ecce dedi sermones meos in os tuum ; et apud Esaiam, Dominus dat mihi linguam disciplinae ad cognoscendum quando oporteat dicere sermonem; sicut ipse rursus, Tunc, inquit, cognoscetis quod ego sim, et a memetipso nihil loquar, sed sicut me docuit ita et loquor, quia et qui me misit mecum est. et hoc ad testimonium individuorum duorum. [6] item in altercatione Iudaeorum, exprobrans quod occidere eum vellent, Ego, inquit, quae vidi penes patrem meum loquor, et vos quod vidistis penes patrem vestrum id facitis; et nunc vultis occidere hominem veritatem vobis locutum quam audivit a deo: et, Si deus esset pater vester dilexissetis me; ego enim ex deo exivi et veni (et tamen non separantur, licet exisse dixerit, ut quidam arripiunt huius dicti occasionem exivit autem a patre ut radius ex sole, ut rivus ex fonte, ut frutex ex semine): <et>, Ego daemonium non habeo, sed honoro patrem meum: et, Si ego me ipse glorificem, nihil est gloria mea; est qui me glorificet pater, quem vos dicitis deum esse vestrum nec nostis illum; est ego novi eum, et si dicam Non novi, ero similis vestri mendax; sed novi illum et sermonem eius servo. [7] at cum subiungit, Abraham diem meum vidit et laetatus est, nempe demonstrat filium Abrahae retro visum, non patrem. item super caecum illum patris opera dicit se facere oportere: cui post restitutionem luminum, Tu, inquit, credis in filium dei? et interroganti quis esset iste, ipse se demonstrans utique filium demonstravit quem credendum esse dixerat. [8] dehinc cognosci se profitetur a patre et patrem a se, et ideo se diligi a patre quod animam suam ponat, quia hoc praeceptum accepisset a patre. [9] et interrogatus a Iudaeis si ipse esset Christus (utique dei, nam usque in hodiernum Iudaei Christum dei, non ipsum patrem, sperant, quia nunquam Christus pater scriptus est venturus), Loquor, inquit, vobis et non ereditis; opera quae ego facio in nomine patris, ipsa de me testimonium dicunt. quod testimonium? ipsum scilicet esse de quo interrogabant, id est Christum dei. [10] de ovibus etiam suis, quod nemo illas de manu eius eriperet, Pater enim, <inquit>, quod mihi dedit maius est omnibus; et, Ego et pater unum sumus. hic ergo iam gradum volunt figere stulti, immo caeci, qui non videant, primo, Ego et pater, duorum esse significationem; dehinc in novissimo, Sumus, non ex unius esse persona, quod pluraliter dictum est; tum quod Unum sumus, non Unus sumus <dicit>. [11] si enim dixisset Unus sumus, potuisset adiuvere sententiam illorum: unus enim singularis numeri significatio videtur. adhuc cum duo masculini generis unum dicit neutrali verbo — quod non pertinet ad singularitatem, sed ad unitatem, ad similitudinem, ad coniunctionem, ad dilectionem patris qui filium diligit, et ad obsequium filii qui voluntati patris obsequitur — Unum sumus, dicens, ego et pater, ostendit duos esse quos aequat et iungit. [12] adeo addit etiam multa se opera a patre ostendisse, quorum nihil lapidari mereretur. et ne putarent ideo se illum lapidare debere quasi se deum ipsum, id est patrem, voluisset intellegi quia dixerat Ego et pater unum sumus, qua filium dei deum ostendens, non qua ipsum deum, Si in lege, inquit, scriptum est, Ego dixi Vos dii estis, et non potest solei scriptura, quem pater sanctificavit et misit in mundum vos eum blasphemare dicitis quia dixerat, Filius dei sum? si non facio opera patris mei, nolite credere; si vero facio et mini credere non vultis, vel propter opera credite, et scitote quod ego in patre sim et pater in me. [13] per opera ergo erit pater in filio et filius in patre, et ita per opera intellegimus unum esse patrem <et filium>, adeo totum hoc perseverabat inducere, ut duo tamen crederentur in una virtute, quia aliter filius credi non posset nisi duo crederentur.

erravit quam Petrus et Nathanael: quanquam et si errasset statim didicisset. ecce enim ad suscitandum fratrem eius a mortuis ad caelum et ad patrem dominus suspiciens, Pater, inquit utique filius, gratias ago tibi quod me semper exaudias; propter istas turbas circumstantes dixi, ut credant quod tu me miseris. [2] sed et in conturbatione animae: Et quid dicam? pater, salvum me fac de ista hora? atquin propter hoc veni in istam horam ; verum, pater, glorifica nomen tuum. in quo erat filius: Ego, inquit, veni in patris mei nomine. [3] inde — scilicet suffecerat filii ad patrem vox — ecce ex abundantia respondet de caelo pater filio contestatus, Hic est filius meus dilectus in quo bene sensi, audite illum: ita et in isto, Glorificavi, et glorificabo rursus. [4] quot personae tibi videntur, perversissime Praxeas, nisi quot et voces? habes filium in terris, habes patrem in caelis. non est separatio ista, sed dispositio divina. ceterum scimus deum etiam intra abyssos esse et ubique consistere, sed vi et potestate filium quoque, ut individuum, cum ipso ubique. tamen in ipsa oeconomia pater voluit filium in terris haberi, se vero in caelis. quo et ipse filius suspiciens et orabat et postulabat a patre quo et nos erectos docebat orare, Pater poster qui es in caelis, cum sit et ubique. hanc sedem suam voluit pater: <Caelum, inquit, mihi thronus. hinc et> [5] minoravit filium modico citra angelos ad terram dimittendo, gloria tamen et honore coronaturus illum in caelos resumendo. haec iam praestabat illi dicens, Et glorificavi et glorificabo. [6] postulat filius de terris, pater promittit a caelis. quid mendacem facis et patrem et filium? si aut pater de caelis loquebatur ad filium cum ipse esset filius apud terras, aut filius ad patrem precabatur cum ipse esset pater apud caelos, quale est ut filius item postularet a semetipso postulando a patre si filius erat pater, iterum pater sibi ipse promitteret promittendo filio si pater erat? [7] ut sic duos divisos diceremus quomodo iactitatis, tolerabilius erat duos divisos quam unum deum versipellem praedicare. itaque ad istos nunc dominus pronuntiavit, Non propter me ista vox venit sed propter vos, ut credant et hi et patrem et filium in suis, quemque nominibus et personis et locis, [8] sed adhuc exclamat Iesus et dicit, Qui credit in me, non in me credit sed in eum credit qui me misit, quia per filium in patrem creditur et auctoritas credendi filio pater est: Et qui conspicit me conspicit eum qui me misit: [9] quomodo? quoniam scilicet, A memetipso non sum locutus, sed qui me misit pater ipse mihi mandatum dedit quid dicam et quid loquar — Dominus enim dat mihi linguam disciplinae ad cognoscendum quando oporteat dicere —

sermonem quem ego loquor, sicut mihi pater dixit ita et loquor. [10] haec quomodo dicta sunt, evangelizator et utique tam carus discipulus Ioannes magis quam, Praxeas noverat: ideoque ipse de suo sensu, Ante autem sollemnitatem paschae, inquit, sciens Iesus omnia sibi tradita a patre esse, et se ex deo esse et ad deum vadere. [11] sed Praxeas ipsum vult patrem de semetipso exisse et ad semetipsum abisse, ut diabolus in cor Iudae non filii traditionem sed patris ipsius inmiserit: nec diabolo bene nec haeretico, quia nec in filio bono suo diabolus operatus est traditionem. filius enim traditus est dei qui erat in filio hominis, sicut scriptura subiungit: Nunc glorificatus est filius hominis et deus glorificatus est in illo. [12] quis deus? utique non pater, sed sermo patris qui erat in filio hominis, id est in carne: in qua et glorificatus iam, virtute vero et sermone, et ante Iesus, Et deus, inquit, glorificabit illum in semetipso — id est pater filium, quem in semetipso habens etsi porrectum ad terram, mox per resurrectionem <glorificavit> morte devicta.

CAPUT 24. [1] Erant plane qui et tunc non intellegerent: quoniam et Thomas aliquamdiu incredulus, Domine, inquit, non scimus quo eas, et quomodo viam novimus? et Iesus, Ego sum via, veritas et vita; nemo venit ad patrem nisi per me; si cognovissetis me cognovissetis et patrem; sed abhinc nostis illum et vidistis illum. [2] et pervenimus iam ad Philippum, qui spe excitatus videndi patris nec intellegens quomodo visum patrem audisset, Ostende, inquit, nobis patrem, et sufficit nobis: et dominus, Philippe, tanto tempore vobiscum sum et non cognovistis me? quem dicit cognosci ab illis debuisse <se>? hoc enim solum discuti oportet. quasi patrem an quasi filium? si quasi patrem, doceat Praxeas tanto tempore Christum cum eis conversatum patrem aliquando non dico intellegi verum vel aestimari potuisse. [3] nobis omnes scripturae et veteres Christum dei et novae filium dei praefiniunt. hoc et retro praedicabatur, hoc et ab ipso Christo pronuntiabatur, immo iam et ab ipso patre coram de caelis filium profitente et filium glorificante: Hic est filius meus ; et, Glorificavi et glorificabo. hoc et a discipulis credebatur, hoc et a Iudaeis non credebatur: hoc se volens credi ab illis omni hora patrem nominabat et patrem praeferebat et patrem honorabat, [4] si ita est, ergo non patrem tanto tempore secum conversatum ignoraverant sed filium: et dominus, eum se ignorati exprobrans quem ignoraverant, eum utique agnosci volebat quem tanto non agnosci tempore exprobraverat, id est filium. et apparere iam potest quomodo dictum sit, Qui me videt videt et patrem: scilicet quo et supra, Ego et pater unum sumus. [5] quare? quia, Ego ex deo exivi et veni; et, Ego sum via, nemo ad patrem venit nisi per me; et, Nemo ad me venit nisi pater eum adduxerit; et, Omnia mihi pater tradidit; et, Sicut pater vivificat, ita et filius; et, Si me cognovistis et patrem cognovistis. [6] secundum haec enim vicarium se patris ostenderat, per quem pater et videretur in factis et audiretur in verbis et cognosceretur in filio facta et verba patris administrante: quia invisibilis pater, quod et Philippus didicerat in lege et meminisse debuerat — Deum nemo videbit et vivet. et ideo suggillatur patrem videre desiderans quasi visibilem, et instruitur visibilem eum in filio fieri ex virtutibus non ex personae repraesentatione, [7] denique si patrem eundem filium vellet intellegi dicendo, Qui me videt patrem videt, quomodo subicit, Non credis quia ego in patre et pater in me? debuerat enim subiunxisse, Non credis quia ego sum pater? aut quo exaggeravit, si non illud manifestavit quod voluerat intellegi, se scilicet filium esse? porro dicendo, Non credis quia ego in patre et pater in me, propterea potius exaggeravit ne, quia dixerat, Qui me vidit et patrem vidit, pater existimaretur: quod nunquam existimari se voluit, qui semper se filium et a patre venisse profitebatur. [8] igitur et manifestam fecit duarum personarum coniunctionem, ne pater seorsum quasi visibilis in conspectu desideraretur et ut filius repraesentator patris haberetur. et nihilominus hoc quoque interpretatus est, quomodo pater esset in filio et filius in patre: Verba, inquit, quae ego loquor vobis non sunt mea — utique quia patris — pater autem manens in me facit opera, [9] per opera ergo virtutum et verba doctrinae manens in filio pater, per ea videtur per quae manet et per eum in quo manet, ex hoc ipso apparente proprietate utriusque personae dum dicit, Ego sum in patre et pater in me. atque adeo Credite ait. quid? me patrem esse? non puto scriptum esse, sed, Quia ego in patre et pater in me, si quo minus vel propter opera credite, ea utique opera per quae pater in filio non visu sed sensu videbatur.

CAPUT 25. [1] Post Philippum et totam substantiam quaestionis istius, quae in finem evangelii perseverant in eodem genere sermonis, quo pater et filius in sua proprietate distinguuntur. paracletum quoque a patre se postulaturum, cum ascendisset ad patrem, et missurum repromittit, et quidem alium. sed iam praemisimus quomodo alium. ceterum, De meo sumet, inquit, sicut ipse de patris. ita connexus patris in filio et filii in paracleto tres efficit cohaerentes alterum ex altero. qui tres unum sunt, non unus, quomodo dictum est, Ego et pater unum sumus, ad substantiae unitatem non ad numeri singularitatem. [2] percurre adhuc, et invenies quem patrem credis vitem patris dictum et patrem agricolam, usi quem in terra tu putas fuisse hunc rursus in caelis a filio agnoscere cum illuc respiciens discipulos suos patri tradidit. sed etsi in isto evangelio non est revelatum, Deus meus ad quid me dereliquisti? et, Pater in tuis manibus depono spiritum meum, tamen post resurrectionem et devictae gloriae mortis, exposita necessitate omnis humilitatis, cum iam patrem se posset ostendere tam fideli feminae, ex dilectione non ex curiositate nec ex incredulitate Thomae tangere eum adgressae, Ne, inquit, contigeris me, nondum ascendi ad patrem meum, vade autem ad fratres meos (quin et in hoc filium ostendit, filios enim appellasset illos si pater fuisset) et dices eis, Ascendo ad patrem meum et patrem vestrum, deum meum et deum vestrum. [3] pater ad patrem et deus ad deum? an filius ad patrem et sermo ad deum? [4] ipsa quoque clausula evangelii propter quid consignat haec scripta nisi, Ut credatis, inquit, Iesum Christum filium dei? igitur quaecumque ex his putaveris ad demonstrationem eiusdem patris et filii proficere tibi posse, adversus definitivam evangelii sententiam niteris: non ideo enim scripta sunt ut patrem credas Iesum, Christum, sed ut filium.

CAPUT 26. [1] Propter unum Philippi sermonem et domini responsionem ad eum videmur Ioannis evangelium decucurrisse; ne tot manifeste pronuntiata et ante et postea unus sermo subvertat, secundum omnia potius quam adversus omnia, etiam adversus suos sensus, interpretandus. [2] ceterum ut alia evangelia non interponam quae nativitate dominica fidem confirmant, sufficit eum qui nasci habebat ex virgine ab ipso annuntiari angelo filium dei determinatum: Spiritus dei superveniet in te et virtus altissimi obumbrabit te, propterea quod nascetur ex te sanctum vocabitur filius dei. [3] volent quidem et hic argumentari, sed veritas praevalebit. nempe, inquiunt, filius dei deus est, et virtus altissimi altissimus est: nec pudet illos inicere quod, si esset, scriptum fuisset. quem enim verebatur ut non aperte pronuntiaret, Deus superveniet et altissimus obumbrabit te? dicens autem, Spiritus dei, etsi spiritus deus, tamen non directo deum nominans portionem totius intellegi voluit quae cessura erat in filii nomen. [4] hic spiritus dei idem erit sermo. sicut enim Ioanne dicente, Sermo caro factus est, spiritum quoque intellegimus in mentione sermonis, ita et hic sermonem quoque agnoscimus in nomine spiritus. nam et spiritus substantia est sermonis et sermo operatio spiritus, et duo unum sunt. [5]

ceterum alium Ioannes profitebitur carnem factum, alium angelus carnem futurum, si non et spiritus sermo est et sermo spiritus. sicut ergo sermo dei non est ipse cuius est, ita nec spiritus, etsi deus dictus est, non tamen ipse est cuius est dictus. nulla res alicuius ipsa est cuius est. plane cum quid ex ipso est, et sic eius est dum ex ipso sit, potest tale quid esse quale et ipse ex quo est et cuius est: [6] et ideo spiritus deus et sermo deus, quia ex deo, non tamen ipse ex quo est. quodsi spiritus dei, tamquam substantiva res, non erit ipse deus sed hactenus deus qua ex ipsius dei substantia, qua et substantiva res est et ut portio aliqua totius, multo magis virtus altissimi non erit ipse altissimus, quia nec substantiva res est quod est spiritus, sicut nec sapientia nec providentia: et haec enim substantiae non sunt sed accidentia uniuscuiusque substantiae. [7] virtus spiritui accidit, nec ipsa erit spiritus. his itaque rebus, quodcumque sunt, spiritu dei et sermone et virtute, conlatis in virginem, quod de ea nascitur filius dei est. [8] hoc se et in istis evangeliis ipse testatur statim a puero Non scitis, inquit, quod in patria mei me esse oportet? hoc et satanas cum in temptationibus novit: Si filius dei es. hoc et exinde daemonia confitentur: Scimus qui sis, filius dei. patrem et ipse adorat. Christum se dei a Petro agnitum non negat. insultans in spiritu ad patrem, Confiteor, inquit, tibi pater quod absconderis haec a sapientibus. [9] hic quoque patrem nemini notum nisi filio affirmat, et patris filium confessurum confessores et negaturum negatores suos apud patrem, inducens parabolam filii, non patris, in vineam missi post aliquot servos et occisi a malis rusticis et a patre defensi, ignorans et ipse diem et horam ultimam soli patri notam, disponens regnum discipulis quomodo et sibi dispositum dicit a patre, habens potestatem legiones angelorum postulandi ad auxilium a patre si vellet, exclamans quod se deus reliquisset, in patris manibus spiritum ponens, et post resurrectionem spondens missurum se discipulis promissionem patris, et novissime mandans ut tingerent in patrem et filium et spiritum sanctum, non in unum: nam nec semel sed ter, ad singula nomina in personas singulas, tinguimur.

CAPUT 27. [1] Et quid ego in tam manifestis morabor, cum ea aggredi debeam de quibus manifesta obumbrare quaerunt? undique enim obducti distinctione patris et filii, quam manente coniunctione disponimus ut solis et radii et fontis et fluvii, per individuum tamen numerum duorum et trium, aliter eam ad suam nihilominus sententiam interpretari conantur, ut aequae in una persona utrumque distinguant, patrem et filium, dicentes filium carnem esse, id est hominem id est Iesum, patrem autem spiritum, id est deum id est Christum. [2] et qui unum eundemque contendunt patrem et filium iam incipiunt dividere illos potius quam unare. si enim alius est Iesus alius Christus, alius erit filius alius pater, quia filius Iesus et pater Christus. talem monarchiam apud Valentinum fortasse didicerunt, duos facere Iesum et Christum. [3] sed et haec iniectio eorum ex praetractatis iam retusa est, quod sermo dei vel spiritus dei et virtus altissimi dictus sit quem patrem faciunt: non enim ipse sunt cuius dicuntur, sed ex ipso et ipsius. [4] et aliter tamen in isto capitulo revincentur. ecce, inquit; ab angelo praedicatum est, Propterea quod nascetur sanctum vocabitur filius dei: caro itaque nata est, caro itaque erit filius dei. immo de spiritu dei dictum est. [5] certe enim de spiritu sancto virgo concepit, et quod concepit id peperit. id ergo nasci habebat quod erat conceptum et pariundum, id est spiritus, cuius et vocabitur nomen Emmanuel, quod est interpretatum Nobiscum deus. caro autem deus non est ut de illa dictum sit, Vocabitur sanctum filius dei, sed ille qui in ea natus est deus, de quo et psalmus, Quoniam deus homo natus est in illa et aedificavit eam voluntate patris. [6] quis deus in ea natus? sermo et spiritus qui cum sermone de patris voluntate natus est. igitur sermo in carne: dum et de hoc quaerendum, quomodo sermo caro sit factus, utrumne quasi transfiguratus in carne an indutus carnem. immo indutus. ceterum deum inmutabilem et informabilem credi necesse est, ut aeternum. [7] transfiguratio autem interemptio est pristini: omne enim quodcumque transfiguratur in aliud desinit esse quod fuerat et incipit esse quod non erat. deus autem neque desinit esse neque aliud potest esse. sermo autem deus, et sermo domini manet in aevum, perseverando scilicet in sua forma. quem si non capit configurari, consequens est ut sic caro factus intellegatur dum fit in carne et manifestatur et videtur et contrectatur per carnem, quia et cetera sic accipi exigunt. [8] si enim sermo ex transfiguratione et demutatione substantiae caro factus est, una iam erit substantia Iesus ex duabus, ex carne et spiritu, mixtura quaedam, ut electrum ex auro et argento, et incipit nec aurum esse, id est spiritus, neque argentum, id est caro, dum alterum altero mutatur et tertium quid efficitur. [9] neque ergo deus erit Iesus; sermo enim desiit esse, qui caro factus est: neque homo caro; caro enim non proprie est, quia sermo fuit. ita ex utroque neutrum est: aliud longe tertium est quam utrumque. [10] sed enim invenimus illum directo et deum et hominem expositum, ipso hoc psalmo suggerente, Quoniam deus homo natus est in illa aedificavit eam voluntate patris: certe usquequaque filium dei et filium hominis, cum deum et hominem sine dubio secundum utramque substantiam in sua proprietate distantem, quia neque sermo aliud quam deus neque caro aliud quam homo. [11] sic et apostolus de utraque eius substantia docet: Qui factus est; inquit, ex semine David — hic erit homo et filius hominis; Qui definitus est filius dei secundum spiritum — hic erit deus, et sermo dei filius: videmus duplicem statum, non confusum sed coniunctum, in una persona deum et hominem Iesum. de Christo autem differo. et adeo salva est utriusque proprietas substantiae, ut et spiritus res suas egerit in illo, id est virtutes et opera et signa, et caro passiones suas functa sit, esuriens sub diabolo, sitiens sub Samaritide, flens Lazarum, anxia usque ad mortem, denique et mortua est. [12] quodsi tertium quid esset ex utroque confusum, ut electrum, non tam distincta documenta parerent utriusque substantiae; sed et spiritus carnalia et caro spiritalia egisset ex translatione, aut neque carnalia neque spiritalia sed tertiae alicuius formae ex confusione: [13] immo aut sermo mortuus esset aut caro mortua non esset, si sermo conversus esset in carnem; aut caro enim immortalis fuisset aut sermo mortalis. sed quia substantiae ambae in statu suo quaeque distincte agebant, ideo illis et operae et exitus sui occurrerunt. [14] disce igitur cum Nicodemo quia quod in carne natum est caro est, et quod de spiritu spiritus est. neque caro spiritus fit neque spiritus caro: in uno plane esse possunt. ex his Iesus constitit, ex carne homo ex spiritu deus, quem tunc angelus ex ea parte qua spiritus erat dei filium pronuntiavit, servans carni filium hominis dici. [15] sic et apostolus etiam dei et hominum appellans sequestrem utriusque substantiae confirmavit. novissime, qui filium dei carnem interpretaris, exhibe qui sit filius hominis: aut numquid spiritus erit? sed spiritum patrem ipsum vis haberi, quia deus spiritus: quasi non et dei spiritus, sicut et sermo deus, et dei sermo..

CAPUT 28. [1] Itaque Christum facis patrem, stultissime, qui nec ipsam vim inspicias nominis huius, si tamen nomen est Christus et non appellatio potius: unctus enim significatur. unctus autem non magis nomen est quam vestitus, quam calceatus, accidens nomini res. an tu, si ex aliquo argumento vestitus quoque vocaretur Iesus, quomodo Christus ab unctionis sacramento, aequae Iesum filium dei diceres, vestitum vero patrem crederes? [2] nunc de Christo. si pater Christus est pater unctus est, et utique ab alio: aut si a semetipso, proba. sed non ita docent Acta Apostolorum in illa exclamatione ecclesiae ad deum,

Convenerunt enim universi in ista civitate adversus sanctum filium tuum quem unxisti; Herodes et Pilatus cum nationibus. [3] ita et filium dei Iesum contestati sunt et filium a patre unctum: ergo Iesus idem erit Christus qui a patre unctus est, non pater qui filium unxit. [4] sic et Petrus: Firmissime itaque cognoscat omnis domus Israel quod et dominum et Christum, id est unctum, fecerit eum deus, hunc Iesum quem vos crucifixistis. [5] Ioannes autem etiam mendacem notat eum qui negaverit Iesum esse Christum, contra de deo natura omnem qui crediderit Iesum esse Christum: propter quod et hortatur ut credamus nomini filii eius Iesu Christi, ut scilicet communio sit nobis cum patre et filio eius Iesu Christo. [6] sic et Paulus ubique deum patrem ponit et dominum nostrum Iesum Christum: cum ad Romanos scribit, gratias agit deo per dominum nostrum Iesum Christum; cum ad Galatas, non ab hominibus se apostolum praefert nec per hominem, sed per Iesum Christum et deum patrem. [7] et habes <per> totum instrumentum eius quae in hunc modum pronuntiant et duos proponunt deum patrem et dominum nostrum Iesum Christum filium patris, et Iesum ipsum esse Christum, in altero quoque nomine dei filium. [8] nam exinde eo iure quo utrumque nomen unius est, id est dei filii, etiam alterum sine altero eiusdem est: et sive Iesus tantummodo positum est, intellegitur et Christus quia Iesus unctus est, sive solummodo Christus, idem est et Iesus quia unctus est Iesus. quorum nominum alterum est proprium quod ab angelo impositum est, alterum accidens quod ab unctione convenit, dum tamen Christus filius sit, non pater. [9] postremo quam caecus est qui nec in Christi nomine intellegit alium deum portendi si Christi nomen patri adscribat. si enim Christus pater deus est qui dicit, Ascendo ad patrem meum et patrem vestrum et deum meum et deum vestrum, utique alium patrem super se et deum ostendit. si item pater Christus est, alius est qui solidat tonitruum et condit spiritum et adnuntiat in homines Christum suum. [10] et si Adstiterunt reges terrae et archontes congregati sunt in unum adversus <dominum et adversus> Christum ipsius, alius erit dominus contra cuius Christum congregati sunt reges et archontes. [11] et si Haec dicit dominus domino meo Christo, alius erit dominus qui loquitur ad patrem Christum, [12] et cum apostolus scribit, Ut deus domini nostri Iesu Christi det vobis spiritum sapientiae et agnitionis, alius erit deus Christi Iesu, charismatum spiritualium largitor. [13] certe, ne per omnia evagemur, qui suscitavit Christum, suscitaturus [est] et mortalia corpora nostra, tanquam alius erit suscitator quam pater mortuus et pater suscitatus, si Christus qui est mortuus pater est.

CAPUT 29. [1] Obmutescat, obmutescat ista blasphemia. sufficiat Christum filium dei mortuum dici, et hoc quia ita scriptum est. nam et apostolus, non sine onere pronuntians Christum mortuum, adicit Secundum scripturas, ut duritiam pronuntiationis scripturarum auctoritate molliret et scandalum auditori everteret. [2] quanquam cum duae substantiae censeantur in Christo Iesu, divina et humana, constet autem immortalem esse divinam, ut mortalem quae humana sit, apparet quatenus eum mortuum dicat, id est qua carnem et hominem et filium hominis, non qua spiritum et sermonem et dei filium. dicendo denique, Christus mortuus est — id est unctus — id quod unctum est mortuum ostendit, id est carnem. [3] ergo, inquis, et nos eadem ratione dicentes qua vos filium non blasphemamus in dominum deum; non enim ex divina sed ex humana substantia mortuum dicimus. atquin blasphematis, non tantum quia mortuum dicitis patrem sed et quia crucifixum. maledictione enim crucifixi quae ex lege in filium competit, quia Christus pro nobis maledictio factus est, non pater, Christum in patrem convertentes in patrem blasphematis. [4] nos autem, dicentes Christum crucifixum, non maledicimus illum sed maledictum legis referimus, quia nec apostolus hoc dicens blasphemavit. sicut autem de quo quid capit dici sine blasphemia dicitur, ita quod non capit blasphemia est si dicatur. [5] ergo nec compassus est pater filio. scilicet directam blasphemiam in patrem veriti, diminui eam hoc modo sperant, concedentes iam patrem et filium duos esse, si filius sic quidem patitur pater vero compatitur. stulti et in hoc. quid est enim compati quam cum alio pati? porro si impassibilis pater utique et incompassibilis; aut si compassibilis utique passibilis. nihil ei vel hoc timore tuo praestas. [6] times dicere passibilem quem dicis compassibilem. tam autem incompassibilis pater est quam impassibilis etiam filius ex ea condicione qua deus est. sed quomodo filius passus est si non compassus est et pater? separatur a filio, non a deo. nam et fluvius si aliqua turbulentia contaminatur, quanquam una substantia de fonte decurrat nec secernatur a fonte, tamen fluvii iniuria non pertinebit ad fontem; et licet aqua fontis sit quae patiatur in fluvio, dum non in fonte patitur sed in fluvio non fons patitur sed fluvius qui ex fonte est. [7] ita et spiritus dei qui pati possit in filio? quia non in patre pateretur sed in filio, pater passus non videretur? sed sufficit nihil spiritum dei passum suo nomine: quia si quid passus est in filio <possibile> quidem erat ut pater cum filio pateretur in carne. quin hoc retractatum, nec quisquam negabit: quando nec nos pati pro deo possumus nisi spiritus dei sit in nobis, qui et loquitur de nobis quae sunt confessionis, non ipse tamen patiens sed pati posse praestans.

CAPUT 30. [1] Alioquin si ultra perges, potero tibi durius respondere et te cum ipsius domini pronuntiatione committere, uti dicam, quid de isto quaeris? habes ipsum exclamantem in passione, Deus meus, deus meus, ut quid me dereliquisti? ergo aut filius patiebatur a patre derelictus, et pater passus non est qui filium dereliquit: aut si pater erat qui patiebatur, ad quem deum exclamabat? [2] sed haec vox carnis et animae, id est hominis, non sermonis nec spiritus, id est non dei, propterea emissa est ut impassibilem deum ostenderet qui sic filium dereliquit dum hominem eius tradidit in mortem. [3] hoc et apostolus sensit scribens, Si pater filio non pepercit. hoc et Esaias prior pronuntiavit: Et dominus cum tradidit pro delictis nostris. sic reliquit dum non parcit, sic reliquit dum tradit. [4] ceterum non reliquit pater filium, in cuius manibus filius spiritum suum posuit. denique posuit, et statim obiit: spirito enim manente in carne caro omnino mori non potest. ita relinqui a patre mori fuit filio. filius igitur et moritur et resuscitatur a patre secundum scripturas. filius ascendit in superiora caelorum, qui et descendit in interiora terrae. [5] hic sedet ad dexteram patris, non pater ad suam. hunc videt Stephanus, cum lapidatur, adhuc stantem ad dexteram dei, ut exinde sessurum donec ponat illi pater omnes inimicos sub pedibus suis. hic et venturus est rursus super nubes caeli talis qualis et ascendit. hic interim acceptum a patre munus effudit spiritum sanctum, tertium nomen divinitatis et tertium gradum maiestatis, unius praedicatorem monarchiae sed et oeconomiae interpretatorem si quis sermones novae prophetiae eius admiserit, et deductorem omnis veritatis quae est in patre et filio et spiritu sancto secundum Christianum sacramentum.

CAPUT 31. [1] Ceterum Iudaicae fidei ista res, sic unum deum credere ut filium adnumerare ei nolis et post filium spiritum. quid enim erit inter nos et illos nisi differentia ista? quod opus evangelii, quae est substantia novi testamenti statuens legem et prophetas usque ad Ioannem, si non exinde pater et filius et spiritus, tres crediti, unum deum sistunt? [2] sic deus voluit novare sacramentum ut nove unus crederetur per filium et spiritum, ut coram iam deus in suis propriis nominibus et personis cognosceretur qui et retro per filium et spiritum praedicatus non intellegebatur. [3] viderint igitur antichristi, qui negant patrem et filium: negant enim patrem dum eundem filium dicunt, et negant filium dum eundem patrem credunt, dando illis quae non sunt, auferendo quae sunt. qui vero confessus fuerit Christum filium dei, non patrem, deus in illo manet et ipse in deo. nos credimus testimonio dei quo testatus est de filio suo: Qui filium non habet, nec vitam habet. non habet autem filium qui eum alium quam filium credit.

Scorpiace (Antidote to Scorpion's Bite)

[1] Magnum de modico malum scorpio terra suppurat. Tot uenena quot et genera, tot pernicies quot et species, tot dolores quot et colores. Nicander scribit et pingit. Et tamen unus omnium uiolentiae gestus de cauda, non ore; quae cauda erit, quodcumque de postumo corporis propagatur et uerberat. * * * perinde scorpii: series illa nodorum uenenata intrinsecus uenula subtilis arcuato impetu insurgens hamatile spiculum in summo tormenti ratione stringit. [2] Vnde et bellicam machinam retractu tela uegetantem de scorpio nominant. Id spiculum et fistula est patula tenuitate et uirus, qua figit, in uulnus effundit. Familiare periculi tempus aestas; Austro et Africo saeuitia uelificat. In remediis naturalia plurimum; aliquid et magia circumligat; medicina cum ferro et poculo occurrit. [3] Nam et praebibunt quidam festinando tutelam; sed concubitus exhaurit, et denuo sitiunt. Nobis fides praesidium, si non et ipsa percutitur diffidentia signandi statim et adiurandi et iniciendi bestiae calcem. [4] Hoc denique modo etiam ethnicis saepe subuenimus, donati a deo ea potestate, quam apostolus dedicauit, cum morsum uiperæ spreuit. Quid ergo promittit stilus iste, si fides de suo tuta est? Vt et alias de suo tuta sit, cum suos scorprios patitur. Acerba mediocritas et istis et genus uarium et uno modo armantur et certo tempore subornantur nec alio quam ardoris. [5] Hoc apud Christianos persecutio est. Cum igitur fides aestuat et ecclesia exurit de figura rubi, tunc Gnostici erumpunt, tunc Valentiniani proserpunt, tunc omnes martyriorum refragatores ebulliunt calentes et ipsi offendere, figere, occidere. Nam quod sciant multos simplices ac rudes tum infirmos, plerosque uero in uentum et si placuerit Christianos, numquam magis adeundos sapiunt, quam cum aditus animae formido laxauit, praesertim cum aliqua iam atrocitas fidem martyrum coronauit. [6] Itaque primo trahentes adhuc caudam de affectibus applicant aut quasi in uacuum flagellant: haecine pati homines innocentes? Vt putes fratrem aut de melioribus ethnicum. [7] Siccine tractari sectam nemini molestam? Dehinc adigunt: perire homines sine causa. Perire enim, et sine causa, prima fixura. Exinde iam caedunt: sed nesciunt simplices animae, quid quomodo scriptum sit, ubi et quando et coram quibus confitendum, nisi quod nec simplicitas ista, sed uanitas, immo dementia pro deo mori, ut qui me saluum faciat. [8] Sic is occidet, qui saluum facere debebit? Semel Christus pro nobis obiit, semel occisus est, ne occideremur. Si uicem repetit, num et ille salutem de mea nece expectat? An deus hominum sanguinem flagitat, maxime si taurorum et hircorum recusat? Certe peccatoris paenitentiam manuult quam mortem. Et quomodo non peccatorum desiderat mortem? [9] Haec et si qua alia adinuenta haereticorum uenenorum quem non uel in scrupulum figant, si non in exitium, uel in bilem, si non in mortem? At tu, si fides uigilat, ibidem scorpio pro solea anathema inlidito et relinquito in suo pure morientem. [10] Ceterum, si plagam satiauerit, intimatur uirus et properat in uiscera; statim omnes pristini sensus retorpescent, sanguis animi gelascit, caro spiritus exolescit, nausea nominis inacrescit. Iam et ipsa mens sibi, quo uomat, quaerit, atque ita infirmitas, semel quae percussa est, sauciatam fidem uel in haeresin uel in saeculum expirat. Et nunc in praesentia rerum est medius ardor, ipsa canicula persecutionis, ab ipso scilicet cynocephalo. [11] Alios ignis, alios gladius, alios bestiae Christianos probauerunt, alii fustibus interim et ungulis insuper degustato martyrio in carcere esuriunt. Nos ipsi ut lepores, destinata uenatio, de longinquo obsedimur, et haeretici ex more grassantur. [12] Itaque tempus admonuit aduersus nostrates bestiolas nostratem [mederi] theriacam stilo temperare. Qui legeris, biberis. Nec amarum potio. Si eloquia domini dulcia super mella et fauos, inde pigmenta sunt. Si lacte et melle promissio dei manat, hoc sapiunt quae illuc faciunt. Vae autem qui dulce in amarum et lumen in tenebras conuertunt! [13] Perinde enim et qui martyriis refragantur salutem perditionem interpretantes tam dulce in amarum quam luceni in tenebras reformant atque ita miserrimam hanc uitam illi beatissimae praeuertendo tam amarum pro dulce quam tenebras pro luce supponunt.

II. [1] Sed nondum de bono martyri, nisi de debito primum, nec ante de utilitate eius, quam de necessitate discendum. Auctoritas diuina praecedat, an tale quid uoluerit atque mandauerit deus, ut qui negant bonum non suadeantur accommodum, nisi cum subacti fuerint. Ad officium haeticos compelli non inlici dignum est. Duritia uincenda est, non suadenda. [2] Et utique satis optimum praeiudicabitur quod probabitur a deo constitutum atque praeceptum. Sustineant euangelia paulisper, dum radicem eorum exprimo legem, dum inde elicio dei uoluntatem unde et ipsum recognosco: ego sum, inquit, deus deus tuus, qui te eduxi de terra Aegypti. Non erunt tibi dii alii praeter me. Non facies tibi simulacrum eorum quae in caelo et quae in terra deorsum et quae in mari infra terram. Non adorabis ea, neque famulaberis eis. Ego enim dominus deus tuus. Item in eadem Exodo: ipsi uidistis, quod de caelo locutus ad uos sim. Non facietis uobis deos argenteos, et deos aureos non facietis uobis. [3] Secundum haec et in Deuteronomio: audi Israel, dominus deus tuus unus est, et diliges dominum deum tuum ex toto corde tuo et totis uiribus tuis et ex tota anima tua. Et rursus: nec obliuiscaris domini dei tui, qui te eduxit de terra Aegypti ex domo seruitutis. Dominum deum tuum timebis et illi famulaberis soli et illi adglutinaberis et in nomine eius deierabis. [4] Non ibitis post deos alienos ex deis nationum, quae circum uos, quia aemulatur deus deus tuus in te, et ne iratus indignetur et exterminet te a facie terrae. [5] Sed et proponens benedictiones et maledictiones: benedictiones, inquit, si audieritis praecepta domini dei uestri, quaecumque ego praecipio uobis hodie, et non erraueritis de uia quam mandauī uobis, ut abeuntes semiatis deis aliis, quos non scitis. [6] De quibus omnifariam extirpandis: perditione perdetis, inquit, omnia loca, in quibus seruierunt nationes deis suis, quas uos possidebitis hereditate, super montes et colles et sub arbores densas, quasque effodietis aras eorum, euertetis et comminuetis staticula eorum et excidetis lucos eorum et sculptilia ipsorum deorum concremabitis igni et disperdetis nomen eorum de loco illo. [7] Adhuc ingerit, cum introissent terram promissionis et exterminassent nationes eius: caue tibi, ne sequaris eas posteaquam exterminatae fuerint a facie tua, ne requisieris deos illarum dicens, quemadmodum faciunt nationes deis suis, ut et ego ita faciam. [8] Sed et, si ipse propheta, inquit, exsurrexerit in te aut somnium somnians et dederit tibi signum uel ostentum et uenerit et dixerit, eamus et seruiamus diis aliis, quos non scitis, ne audiat sermonem prophetae aut somniatoris illius, quia temptat uos dominus deus uester, an ex toto corde uestro et ex tota anima uestra timeatis deum. Post dominum deum uestrum abibitis et hunc timebitis et praecepta eius custodietis et uocem eius audietis et illi seruietis et illi adiciemini. Prophetes autem uel somniator ille morietur; locutus enim est ad seducendum te a domino deo tuo. [9] Sed et alio titulo: si autem rogauerit te frater tuus ex patre uel matre aut filius tuus aut filia tua aut mulier quae in gremio tuo est aut amicus qui animae tuae par est clam dicens, eamus et seruiamus diis aliis, quos non scis, nec patres tui, ex deis nationum, quae circum te proxime aut longe, ne uelis ire cum illo, et ne audieris eum. [10] Non parcet oculus tuus super eum nec desiderabis nec saluabis eum; adnuntians adnuntiabis de eo. Manus tuae erunt in eum in primis ad occidendum, et manus populi tui in nouissimis, et lapidabitis illum, et morietur, quoniam quaesiuit auertere te a domino deo tuo. [11] Subicit etiam de ciuitatibus, si quam ex his constitisset suasu iniquorum hominum transisse ad deos alios, ut interficerentur omnes incolentes eam, et deuotamenta fierent uniuersa eius, et colligerentur omnia spolia eius in omnes exitus eius et igni cremarentur cum omnibus uasibus suis et cum omni populo in conspectu domini dei, et non erit habitabilis, inquit, in aeternum, non reaedicabitur amplius nec adhaerebit quicquam manibus tuis ex deuotamento eius, uti auertatur dominus ab indignatione irae suae. [12] Maledictionum quoque ordinem ab idolorum execratione commisit: maledictus homo qui fecerit sculptile aut fusile aspernamentum, opus manuum artificis, et collocauerit illud in abscondito. In Leuitico uero: ne sequimini, inquit, idola et deos fusiles non facietis uobis. Ego dominus deus uester. Et alibi: filii Israel famuli pueri mei. Hi sunt quos eduxi de terra Aegypti. Ego dominus deus uester. Non facietis uobis manu facta nec sculptile staticulum statuētis uobis. Nec lapidem scopum ponetis in terra uestra. Ego dominus deus uester. [13] Et haec quidem prima per Moysen dicta sunt ad omnes utique pertinentia, quoscumque dominus deus Israelis perinde de Aegypto superstitiosissimi saeculi et de domo humanae seruitutis eduxerit. [14] Sed et deinceps omne os prophetarum eiusdem dei uocibus sonat eandem legem suam eorundem praeceptorum instauratione cumulantis nec aliud primum tam principaliter denuntiantis, quam ab omni factura atque cultura idolorum cauere; ut per Daud: dii nationum argentum et aurum, oculos habent nec uident, aures habent nec audiunt, nares habent nec odorantur, os nec locuntur, manus nec contrectant, pedes nec ingrediuntur. Similes erunt illis, qui ea faciunt et qui fidunt in illis.

III. [1] Nec putem disceptandum, an digne deus prohibeat nomen et honorem suum mendacio addici, an digne quos ab errore superstitionis auulserit rursus in Aegyptum regredi nolit, an digne a se non patiaturs absistere quos sibi adlegit. Ita nec illud expectabitur retractari a nobis, an obseruari uoluerit disciplinam quam uoluit instituere et an merito ulciscatur desertam quam uoluit obseruatam, quando frustra instituisset, si obseruari eam noluisset, et frustra obseruari uoluisset, si uindicare noluisset. [2] Sequitur enim, ut has definitiones dei aduersus superstitiones tam euictas quam etiam uindicatas probem, quoniam ex his tota martyriorum ratio constabit. Aberat apud deum in monte Moyses, cum populus tam necessariam absentiam eius impatiens deos sibi producere quaerit, quo se potius ipse perdiderit. [3] Vrgetur Aaron, et iubet inaures feminarum suarum in ignem conferri. Amissuri enim erant in iudicium sibi uera ornamenta aurium, dei uoces. Sapiens ignis effigiem uituli defundit illis suggillans illic cor habentes ubi et thesaurum, apud Aegyptum scilicet, inter cetera animalia bouis etiam cuiusdam consecratricem. [4] Itaque tria milia hominum a parentibus proximis caesa, quia tam proximum parentem deum offenderant, transgressionis et primordia et merita dedicauerunt. In Arithmis cum diuertisset Israel apud Sethim, abeunt libidinum ad filias Moab, inuitantur ad idola, ut et spiritu fornicarentur, edunt denique de pollutis eorum, dehinc et adorant deos gentis et Beelphegor initiantur. [5] Ob hanc quoque idololatriam moechiae sororem uiginti tria milia domesticis obtruncata gladiis diuinae irae litauerunt. Defuncto Iesu Naue derelincunt deum patrum suorum et seruiunt idolis Baalim et Astartis, et iratus dominus tradidit eos in manibus diripientium, et diripiebantur ab illis et uenumdabantur inimicis, nec poterant omnino subsistere a facie inimicorum suorum. [6] Quocumque processerant, manus erat super illos in mala, et compressati sunt ualde. Post quae instituit super illos deus Critas, quos Censores intellegimus. Sed nec istis obaudire perseuerauerunt. Vt quis critarum obierat, illi ad delinquendum supra quam patres eorum, abeundo post deos aliorum et seruiendo et adorando eos. [7] Itaque dominus iratus, quoniam quidem, ait, transgressi sunt gens ista pactum meum, quod disposui patribus eorum, et non audierunt uocem meam, et ego non aduertam ad auferendum uirum a facie eorum ex nationibus, quas reliquit decedens Iesus. Atque ita per omnes paene annales critarum et deinceps regum reseruatis gentium circumcolarum uiribus bello et captiuitate et iugo allophylosum iram dei pensauit Israel, quotienscumque ab illo maxime in idololatriam exorbitauerunt.

IV. [1] Hanc igitur si a primordio constat et prohibitam de tot tantisque praeceptis et numquam inpune commissam de tot tantisque documentis nec ullum tam superbum crimen deputari apud deum, quam huiusmodi transgressionem, ultro intellegere debemus diuinarum et denuntiationum et executionum intentionem iam tunc martyriis patrocيناتam non modo non dubitandis, uerum etiam sustinendis, quibus scilicet locum fecerat prohibendo idololatriam. Aliter enim martyria non euenirent. Et utique auctoritatem suam praestruxerat uolens ea euenire quibus locum fecerat. [2] Nunc enim de dei uoluntate conpungimur, et ingeminat scorpius plagam, hanc negans, hanc accusans uoluntatem, ut aut alium deum insinuet, cuius haec non sit uoluntas, aut nostrum nihilominus destruat, cuius talis sit uoluntas, aut omnino neget uoluntatem dei, si ipsum negare non poterit. [3] Nos autem de deo alibi dimicantes et de reliquo corpore haereticae cuiusque doctrinae nunc in unam speciem congressionis certas praeducimus lineas, non alterius dei quam Israelis eam defendentes uoluntatem quae martyriis locum fecerit, tam ex praeceptis prohibitaе semper quam ex iudiciis punitae idololatriae. Si enim praeceptum obseruando uim patior, hoc erit quodammodo obseruandi praecepti praeceptum, ut id patiar per quod potero obseruare praeceptum, uim scilicet, quaecumque mihi imminet cauenda ab idololatria. [4] Et utique qui inponit praeceptum, extorquet obsequium. Non potuit ergo noluisse ea euenire per quae constabit obsequium. Praescribitur mihi, ne quem alium deum dicam, ne uel dicendo, non minus lingua quam manu, deum fingam neque alium adorem aut quo modo uenerer praeter unicum illum, qui ita mandat, quem et iubeor timere, ne ab eo deserar, et de omni substantia diligere, ut pro eo moriar. [5] Huic sacramento militans ab hostibus prouocor. Par sum illis, nisi illis manus dederō. Hoc defendendo depugno in acie, uulneror, concidor, occidor. Quis hunc militi suo exitum uoluit, nisi qui tali sacramento eum consignauit?

V. [1] Habes igitur dei mei uoluntatem. Occursum est huic plagae. Iam alium ictum consideremus de uoluntatis qualitate. Longum est, ut deum meum bonum ostendam, quod iam a nobis didicerunt Marcionitae. Deum interim sufficit dici, ut necesse sit bonum credi. [2] Malum enim deum qui praesumpserit, constare in utroque non poterit: aut deum negare debebit quem malum existimarit, aut bonum dicere quem deum pronuntiauerit. Bona igitur erit et uoluntas eius qui nisi bonus non erit deus. [3] Probabit hoc etiam ipsius rei bonitas quam deus uoluit, martyrii dico, quia bonum non nisi bonus uoluit. Bonum contendo martyrium apud eundem deum, a quo et prohibetur et punitur idololatria. Obnitiur enim et aduersatur idololatriae martyrium. Malo autem obniti et aduersari nisi bonum non potest. [4] Non quasi negem esse aemulationem tam malorum inter se quam et bonorum, sed alia condicio est huius tituli. Martyrium enim non de communi aliqua militia certat cum idololatria, sed de sua gratia; liberat enim ab idololatria. Quod a malo liberat, quis non bonum pronuntiabit? Quid aliud est aduersatio idololatriae atque martyrii quam mortis et uitae? [5] In tantum uita martyrio deputabitur, quantum morti idololatria. Vitam qui malum dixerit, habet mortem, quam bonum dicat. Est et haec peruersitas hominum salutaria excutere, exitiosa suscipere, periculosa conquirere, medicamina deuitare, aut mori denique citius quam curari desiderare. [6] Nam et medicinae praesidium plures qui refugiunt: plures enim stulti, plures timidi et male uerecundi. Et est plane quasi saeuitia medicinae de scalpello deque cauterio, de sinapis incendio; non tamen secari et inuri et extendi morderique idcirco malum, quia dolores utiles affert, nec quia tantummodo contristat, recusabitur, sed quia necessario contristat, adhibebitur. [7] Horrorem operis fructus excusat. Vlulans denique ille et gemens et mugiens inter manus medici postmodum easdem mercede cumulabit et artifices optimas praedicabit et saeuas iam negabit. Sic et martyria desaeuiunt, sed in salutem. Licebit et deo in uitam aeternam per ignes et gladios et acerba quaeque curare. [8] Sed medicum quidem miraberis etiam in illo, quod ferme pares adhibet qualitates medellarum aduersus qualitates querellarum, cum quasi de peruerso auxiliatur per ea subueniens per quae laboratur. Nam et calores caloribus amplius onerando compescit et ardores siti potius macerando restinguit et fellis excessus amarum quibusque potiunculis colligit et sanguinis fluxus defusa insuper uenula reuocat. [9] Deum uero et quidem zeloten culpandum existimabis, si uoluit certare cum causa et iniuriae aemulando prodesse, mortem morte dissoluere, occisionem occisione dispargere, tormentis tormenta discutere, supplicia suppliciis euaporare, uitam auferendo conferre, carnem laedendo iuuare, animam eripiendo seruare. [10] Peruersitas, quam putas, ratio est; quod saeuitiam existimas, gratia est. Ita deo de momentaneis aeterna medicante magnifica bono tuo deum tuum; incidisti in manus eius, sed feliciter incidisti. Incidit et ille in aegritudines tuas. Homo semper prior negotium medico facit, denique sibimet ipse periculum mortis attraxit. [11] Acceperat a domino suo ut a medico satis utilem disciplinam secundum legem uiuendi, ut omnia quidem ederet, ab una solummodo arbuscula temperaret, quam ipse medicus inportunam interim nouerat. [12] Audiit ille quem maluit et abstinentiam rupit. Edit illicitum et transgressione saturatus in mortem cruditauit, dignissimus bona fide in totum perire quia uoluit. Sed dominus sustentata feruura delicti, donec tempore medicina temperaretur, paulatim remedia composuit, omnes fidei disciplinas et ipsas aemulas uitio, uerbum mortis uerbo uitae rescindentes, auditum transgressionis auditu deuotionis limantes. Ita, et cum mori praecipit medicus ille, ueternum mortis excludit. [13] Quid grauatur nunc pati homo ex remedio quod non est tunc grauatus pati ex uitio? Displicet occidi in salutem cui non displicuit occidi in perditionem? Nausiabit ad antidotum qui hiauit ad uenenum?

VI. [1] Sed si certaminis nomine deus nobis matyria proposuisset, per quae cum aduersario experiremur, ut, a quo libenter homo elisus est, eum iam constanter elidat, hic quoque liberalitas magis quam acerbitas dei praeest. Euulsum enim hominem de diaboli gula per fidem iam et per uirtutem inculcatorem eius uoluit efficere, ne solummodo euasisset, uerum etiam euicisset inimicum. [2] Amauit, qui uocauerat in salutem, inuitare et ad gloriam, ut, qui gaudeamus liberati, exultemus etiam coronati. Agonas istos, contentiosa sollemnia et superstitiosa certamina Graecorum et religionum et uoluptatum, quanta gratia saeculum celebret iam et Africae licuit. Adhuc Carthaginem singulae ciuitates gratulando inquietant donatam Pythico agone post stadii senectutem. [3] Ita ab aeuo dignissimum creditum est studiorum experimentum committere, artes corporum et uocum de praestantia expendere, praemio indice, spectaculo iudice, sententia uoluptate. Qua nuda sunt praelia, non nulla sunt uulnera; pugni quassant, calces arietant, caestus dilaniant, flagella dilacerant. [4] Nemo tamen agonis praesidem suggillans erit, quod homines uiolentiae obiecat. Iniuriarum actiones extra stadium. Sed, quantum liuores illi et cruores et uibices negotiantur, intende: coronas scilicet et gloriam et dotem, priuilegia publica, stipendia ciuica, imagines, statuas et, qualem potest praestare saeculum, de fama aeternitatem, de memoria resurrectionem. [5] Pyctes ipse non queritur dolere se, nam uult; corona premit uulnera, palma sanguinem obscurat; plus uictoria tumet quam iniuria. Hunc tu laesum existimabis, quem uides laetum? Sed nec uictus ipse de agonothea casum suum exprobrabit. [6] Deum dedecebit artes et disciplinas suas educere in medium, in hoc saeculi spatium, in spectaculum hominibus et angelis et uniuersis potestatibus? Carnem atque animam probare de constantia atque tolerantia? Dare huic palmam, huic honorem, illi ciuitatem, illi stipendia? etiam quosdam reprobare et castigatos cum ignominia submouere? Nimirum praescribis deo, quibus temporibus aut modis aut locis de familia sua iudicet, quasi non et praeiudicare iudici congruat. [7] Quid nunc, si non certaminis nomine in martyria fidem exposuisset, sed et proprii profeCtus, nonne oportebat illam habere aliquem spei cumulum, cui studium suum cogeret uotumque suspenderet, quo eniteretur ascendere, cum terrena quoque officia in gradus aestuent? Aut quomodo multae mansiones apud patrem, si non pro uarietate meritorum? Quomodo et stella ab stella distabit in gloria, nisi pro diuersitate radiorum? [8] Porro et si fidei propterea congruebat sublimitati et claritatis aliqua prolatio, tale quid esse oportuerat illud emolumenti, quod magno constaret: labore, cruciatu, tormento, morte. Sed respice compensationem, cum Caro et anima dependitur — quibus in homine carius nihil est, alterum manus dei, alterum flatus, — ipsa dependi in profectum quorum est profectus, ipsa erogari quae lucri fiant, eadem pretia quae et merces. [9] Prospexerat et alias deus inbecillitates condicionis humanae, aduersarii insidias, rerum tallacias, saeculi retia, etiam post lauacrum periclitaturam fidem, perituros plerosque rursum post salutem, qui uestitum obsoletassent nuptialem, qui faculis oleum non praeparassent, qui requirendi per montes et saltus et umeris essent reportandi. Posuit igitur secunda solacia et extrema praesidia, dimicationem martyrii et lauacrum sanguinis exinde secuturum. [10] De cuius felicitate Daud: beati quorum dimissae sunt iniquitates et quorum tecta sunt peccata. Beatus cui non inputauerit deus delictum. Proprie enim martyribus nihil iam reputari potest, quibus in lauacro ipsa uita deponitur. [11] Sic dilectio operit multitudinem peccatorum, quae deum scilicet diligens ex totis uiribus suis, quibus in martyrio decertat, ex tota anima sua, quam pro deo ponit, hominem martyrem excudit. Haec tu remedia, consilia, iudicia, spectacula etiam dei atrocitatem uocabis? Sanguinem hominis deus concupiscit? et tamen ausim dicere, si et homo regnum dei, si et homo certam salutem, si et homo secundam regenerationem. Nulla compensatio inuidiosa est in qua aut gratiae aut iniuriae communis est ratio.

VII. [1] Incutiat adhuc scorpius homicidam deum uentilans, horrebo plane spurcum blasphemiae flatum de haeretico ore foetentem, sed et talem deum de fiducia rationis amplectar, qua ratione etiam ipse se plus quam homicidam pronuntiauit ex sophiae suae persona, uoce Solomonis. Sophia, inquit, iugulauit filios suos. Sophia sapientia est. Sapienter utique iugulauit, dum in uitam, et rationaliter, dum in gloriam. [2] O parricidii ingenium! O sceleris artificium! O argumentum crudelitatis, quae idcirco occidit, ne moriatur quem occiderit! Et ideo quid sequitur? Sophia in exitibus cantatur hymnis; cantatur enim et exitus martyrum. Sophia in plateis de constantia agit; bene enim filios suos iugulat. [3] Super summos autem muros confisa dicit, cum quidem secundum Eseiam hic exclamat: ego dei sum; et hic uociferatur: in nomine Iacob; et alius inscribit: in nomine Israelis. O bonam matrem! opto et ipse in filios eius redigi, ut ab ea occidar; opto occidi, ut filius fiam. Solum autem iugulat filios suos, an et torquet? Audio enim et alibi dicentem deum: uram illos sicut uritur aurum, et probabo illos sicuti probatur argentum. [4] Vtique per tormenta ignium et suppliciorum, per martyria fidei examinatoria. Scit et apostolus qualem deum adscripserit, cum scribit: si deus filio suo non pepercit, sed pro nobis tradidit illum, quomodo non et cum illo omnia condonauit nobis? Vides, quomodo etiam proprium suum filium primogenitum et unigenitum sophia diuina iugulauerit, utique uicturum, immo et ceteros in uitam redacturum. [5] Possum dicere cum sophia dei: Christus est qui se tradidit pro delictis nostris. Iam et semetipsam sophia trucidauit. Verbo non sono solo sapiunt, sed et sensu, nec auribus tantummodo audienda sunt, sed et mentibus. Crudelem deum, qui non intellegit, credit. Quamquam et non intellegenti posita sententia est, quae temeritatem cohibeat aliter intellegendi. [6] Quis enim, inquit, cognouit sensum domini? aut quis illi consiliarius fuit, qui eum instruat, aut uiam intellegentiae quis demonstrauit illi? Sed enim Scytharum Dianam aut Gallorum Mercurium aut Afrorum Saturnum hominum uictima placari apud saeculum licuit, et Latio ad hodiernum Ioui media in urbe humanus sanguis ingustatur, nec quisquam retractat aut non rationem praesumit aliquam aut inaestimabilem dei sui uoluntatem. [7] Si noster quoque deus propriae hostiae nomine martyria sibi depostulasset, quis illi exprobrasset funestam religionem et lugubres ritus et aram rogum et pollinctorem sacerdotem, et non beatum amplius reputasset quem deus comedisset?

VIII. [1] Vnum igitur gradum insistimus et in hoc solum prouocamus, an praecepta sint a deo martyria, ut credas ratione praecepta, si praecepta cognoueris, quia nihil deus non ratione praeceperit. Siquidem honorata est apud illum mors religiosorum ipsius, ut canit Dauid, non, opinor, ista communis et omnium debitum — atquin ista etiam ignominiosa est ex elogio transgressionis et merito damnationis — sed illa quae in ipso aditur ex testimonio religionis et proelio confessionis pro iustitia et sacramento. [2] Sicut Eseias, uidete inquit, quomodo perit iustus, et nemo excipit corde, et uiri iusti auferuntur, et nemo animaduertit; a facie enim iniustitiae perit iustus et erit honor sepulturae eius. Habes hic quoque et praedicationem et remunerationem martyriorum. A primordio enim iustitia uim patitur. [3] Statim ut coli deus coepit, inuidiam religio sortita est. Qui deo placuerat, occiditur, et quidem a fratre. Quo procliuius impietas alienum sanguinem insectaretur, a suo auspicata insectata est denique non modo iustorum, uerum etiam et prophetarum. Daudid exagitur, Helias fugatur, Hieremias lapidatur, Eseias secatur, Zacharias inter altare et aedem trucidatur perennes cruoris sui maculas silicibus assignans. Ipse clausula legis et prophetarum nec propheta, sed angelus dictus contumeliosa caede truncatur in puellae salticae lucar. [4] Et utique qui spiritu dei agebantur, ab ipso in martyria dirigebantur etiam patiendo quae et praedicassent. Proinde et trina fraternitas, cum dedicatio imaginis regiae turbam urgeret officii, non ignorauerunt, quid fides, quae sola in illis captiua non fuerat, exigeret, moriendum scilicet aduersus idololatriam. [5] Meminerant enim et Hieremiae scribentis ad eos, quibus illa captiuitas imminabat: et nunc uidebitis deos Babyloniorum aureos et argenteos et ligneos portari super umeros ostentantes nationibus timorem. Cauete igitur, ne et uos consimiles sitis allophyllis et timore capiamini, dum aspicitis turbas adorantes retro eos et ante, sed dicite in animo uestro: te domine adorare debemus. [6] Itaque dixerunt a deo concepta fiducia, quanto uigore animi condicionales illas minas regis excutiunt: non habemus necessitatem respondendi huic tuo imperio. Est enim deus noster, quem colimus, potens eruere nos de fornace ignis et ex manibus tuis, et tunc manifestum fiet tibi, quod neque idolo tuo famulabimur nec imaginem tuam auream, quam statuisti, adorabimus. [7] O martyrium et sine passione perfectum! Satis passi, satis exusti sunt, quos propterea deus texit, ne potestatem eius mentiti uiderentur. Nam et Danielum, nullius praeter dei supplicem et idcirco a Chaldaeis delatum ac depostulatum, statim utique conclusa et usitata feritas leonum deuorasset, si Darii digna praesumptio de deo falli debuisset. [8] Ceterum pati oportebat omnem dei praedicatorem atque cultorem, qui ad idololatriam prouocatus negasset obsequium, secundum illius quoque rationis statum, qua et praesentibus tunc et posteris deinceps commendari ueritatem oportebat, pro qua fidem diceret passio ipsorum defensorum eius, quia nemo uoluisset frustra occidi, nisi compos ueritatis. Talia a primordio et praecepta et exempla debitricem martyrii fidem ostendunt.

Christianam recensere, quasi et de deo aliam ac proinde de disciplina quoque aemulam, cuius sophia filios suos iugulare non norit. Plane, alia in Christo et diuinitas et uoluntas et schola, qui martyria aut milla in totum aut aliter intellegenda mandarit, qui neminem ad huiusmodi discrimen hortetur, qui pro eo passis nihil repromittat, quia pati eos nolit, et ideo praeceptorum principia deducens, beati, inquit, qui persecutionem patiuntur ob iustitiam, quoniam ipsorum est regnum caelorum? [2] Hoc quidem absolute ad omnes; dehinc proprie ad apostolis ipsos: beati eritis, cum uos dedecorauerint et persecuti fuerint et dixerint aduersus uos omnia mala propter me: gaudete et exultate, quoniam merces uestra plurima in caelo: sic enim faciebant et prophetis patres illorum: ut etiam prophetaret, quod et ipsi occidi haberent ad exemplum prophetarum. [3] Quamquam etsi omnem hanc persecutionem condicionalem in solos tunc apostolos destinasset, utique per illos cum toto sacramento, cum propagine nominis, cum traduce spiritus sancti in nos quoque spectasset etiam persecutionis obeundae disciplina ut in hereditarios discipulos et apostolici seminis frutices. [4] Nam et si rursus ad apostolos dirigit: ecce ego mittam uos tamquam oues in medio luporum, et: cauete ab hominibus; tradent enim uos in concessus et in synagogis suis flagellabunt uos et ad praesides et ad reges perducemini mei causa in testimonium illis et nationibus et cetera, tum autem subicit: tradet autem frater fratrem et pater filium in mortem et insurgent filii in parentes et mortificabunt eos, manifeste iniquitatem istam in ceteros pronuntiauit, quam in apostolis non inuenimus. [5] Nemo enim eorum aut fratrum aut patrem passus est traditorem, quod plerique iam nostri dehinc ad apostolos reuocat: et eritis odio omnibus propter nomen meum. Quanto magis nos, quos a parentibus quoque tradi oportet? Ita ipsa hac permixtione nunc ad apostolos, nunc ad omnes disponendo eundem in uniuersos nominis exitum effundit, in quibus consederit nomen cum odii sui lege. Qui autem sustinuerit usque in finem, iste saluus fiet. Quid sustinendo, nisi persecutionem, nisi traditionem, nisi occisionem? Nec enim aliud est sustinere in finem quam pati finem. [6] Et ideo: non est discipulus super magistrum, statim sequitur, nec seruus super dominum suum, quia cum magister et dominus ipse perpassus sit persecutionem et traditionem et occisionem, multo magis serui et discipuli eadem expendere debebunt, ne quasi superiores exempti de iniquitate uideantur, quando hoc ipsum sufficere eis ad gloriam debeat, aequari passionibus domini et magistri; ad quarum tolerantiam aedificans monet non eos timendos, qui solum corpus occidant, animam autem interficere non ualeant, sed illi potius metum consecrandum, qui et corpus et animam occidere et perdere possit in gehennam. [7] Quinam hi solius corporis interemptores, nisi praesides et reges supra dicti, homines opinor? Quis etiam animae dominator, nisi deus solus? Quis iste ignium comminator, nisi is, sine cuius uoluntate nec passerum alter in terram cadit, idest nec altera ex duabus substantiis hominis, caro aut anima? Quia et capillorum apud eum regestus est numerus. [8] Nolite ergo metuere, cum insuper dicit, multis passeribus antistatis, non frustra, id est non sine emolumento casuros in terram repromittit, si magis ab hominibus quam a deo occidi deligamus. Omnis igitur, qui in me confessus fuerit coram hominibus, et ego confitebor in illo coram patre meo, qui in caelis est. Et omnis, qui me negauerit coram hominibus, et ego negabo illum coram patre meo, qui in caelis est. Manifesta, ut opinor, definitio et ratio est tam confessionis quam negationis, etsi dispositio diuersa est. [9] Qui se Christianum confitetur, Christi se esse testatur, qui Christi est, in Christo sit necesse est. Si in Christo est, in Christo utique confitetur, cum se Christianum confitetur. Hoc enim non potest esse, nisi sit in Christo. Porro in Christo confitendo Christum quoque confitetur, qui sit in ipso, dum et ipse in illo est, utpote Christianus. Nam et si diem dixeris, lucis rem ostendisti, quae diem praestat, licet non dixeris lucem. Ita etsi non directo pronuntiauit qui me confessus fuerit, non est diuersus actus quotidianae confessionis a sensu dominicae pronuntiationis. [10] Quod enim est qui se confitetur, id est Christianum, etiam id, per quod est, confitetur, id est Christum. Proinde qui se negauit Christianum, in Christo negauit, negando se esse in Christo, dum negat se Christianum; et Christum autem in se negando, dum se in Christo negat, Christum quoque negabit. Ita et qui in Christo negauerit, Christum negabit et qui in Christo confessus fuerit, Christum confitebitur. Suffecisset igitur, etsi de confitendo tantummodo dominus pronuntiasset. [11] Ex forma enim confessionis contrario quoque eius praeiudicaretur, id est negationi, perinde negationem negatione rependi a domino, quemadmodum confessione confessionem. Et ideo cum in forma confessionis etiam negationis condicio intellegatur, apparet non ad alium modum negationis pertinere, quod de ea aliter dominus pronuntiauit, quam de confessione dicendo, qui me negauerit, non, qui in me. [12] Prospexerat enim et hanc uim plerumque in expugnatione nominis subsecuturam, ut qui se Christianum negasset, ipsum quoque Christum compelleretur blasphemando negare. Sicut non olim + pro auspice cum tota fide quorundam colluctatum hoc modo horruimus. Itaque frustra erit dicere: etsi me negauero Christianum, non negabor a Christo, non enim ipsum negauit. [13] Ex illa enim negatione tantundem tenebitur, quia se Christianum negando Christum in se negans etiam ipsum negauit. Plus est autem quod et confusioni confusionem comminatur: qui me confusus fuerit coram hominibus, et ego confundar eum coram patre meo, qui est in caelis. Sciebat enim a confusione uel maxime formari negationem, mentis statum in fronte consistere, priorem esse pudoris quam corporis plagam.

X. [1] Qui uero non hic, id est non intra hunc ambitum terrae nec per hunc commeatum uitae nec apud homines huius communis naturae confessionem putant constitutam, quanta praesumptio est aduersus omnem ordinem rerum in terris istis et in uita ista et sub humanis potestatibus experiundarum? Nimirum cum animae de corporibus excesserint et per singula tabulata caelorum de receptu dispici coeperint et interrogari arcana illa haereticorum sacramenta, tunc confitendum apud ueras potestates et ueros homines, Teletos scilicet et Acinetos et Abascantos Valentini. [2] Nostrates enim, inquit, nec ipse Demiurgus constanter homines probabat, quos stillicidium situlae et puluerem areae et sputamen et locustas deputauit, etiam inrationalibus iumentis adaequauit. Plane, ita scriptum. Non tamen idcirco aliud hominis genus intellegendum praeter nos, quos, quia constat esse, comparatione potuit induere salua et proprietate generis et singularitate. [3] Neque enim si uita uitata est, ut despectui iudicata despectis compararetur, statim natura sublata est, ut alia in nomine eius deputaretur. Atquin seruatur natura, etsi suffunditur uita, nec alios nouit Christus homines quam de quibus dicit: Quem me aiunt esse homines? Et: Quomodo uultis ut faciant uobis homines, ita et uos facite illis. [4] Vide an seruauerit genus, a quibus et testimonium sui expectet et in quos iustitiae uicem mandat. Illos autem caelestes homines si expostulem mihi ostendi, facilius Aratus Persea et Cephea et Erigonam et Ariadnam inter sidera deliniabit. Quis autem prohibuit dominum illic etiam confessionem hominum faciendam manifeste determinare, ubi suam futuram aperte pronuntiauit, ut ita esset positum: qui in me confessus fuerit coram hominibus in caelis, et ego in illo confitebor coram patre meo, qui in caelis est? [5] Eripere me debuit ex isto terrenae confessionis errore, quam suscipi noluisset, si caelestem praecipisset, quia nullos alios homines noueram praeter incolas terrae, ne ipso quidem adhuc tunc in caelis homine conspecto. Quae porro fides rerum, ut post excessum ad superna subleuatus illic probarer, quo non nisi iam probatus inponerer, illic de receptu examinerer, quo nisi admittendus peruenire non possem? [6] Christiano caelum ante patet quam uia; quia nulla uia in caelum, nisi cui patet caelum; quod qui attigerit, intrabit. Quas mihi potestates ianitrices adfirmas | iuxta Romanam superstitionem, + Barnum quendam et Forculum et Limentinum? Quas a cancellis ordinas potestates? [7] Si umquam legisti apud Daud: Auferte portas, principes, uestri, et subleuentur portae aeternae, et intrabit rex gloriae, si item audisti apud Amos: qui ascensum suum aedificat in caelos, et profusionem suam fundat in terras, scito et ascensum illum exinde conplanatum uestigiis domini et introitum exinde reseratum uiribus Christi, nec ullam moram aut quaestionem in limine Christianis occurruram, qui non dinosci habeant illic, sed agnosci, nec interrogari, sed admitti. [8] Nam etsi adhuc clausum putas caelum, memento clauas eius hic dominum Petro et per eum ecclesiae reliquisse, quas hic unusquisque interrogatus atque confessus feret secum. Sed asseuerat diabolus illic confitendum, ut suadeat hic negandum. Pulchra uidelicet documenta praemittam, bonas mecum clauas feram, timorem eorum, qui solum corpus occidunt, animae autem nihil faciunt: commendatus ero huius praecepti desertione, honeste in caelestibus stabo, qui in terrenis stare non potui, sustinebo maiores potestates, qui minoribus cessi, merebor utique admitti iam exclusus. [9] Suppetit adhuc dicere: si in caelestibus confitendum, et hic negandum est. Nam ubi alterum, ibi utrumque. Aemula enim quaeque concurrunt. Etiam persecutionem in caelis agitari oportebit, quae confessionis negationisue materia est. Quid itaque cessas, audacissime haeretice, totum ordinem Christianae concussionis in superna transferre et inprimis ipsum nominis odium illic collocare, ubi ad patris dexteram praesidet Christus? [10] Illic constitues et synagogas Iudaeorum, fontes persecutionum, apud quas apostoli flagella perpassi sunt, et populos nationum cum suo quidem circo, ubi facile conclamant: usque quo genus tertium? [11] Sed et fratres nostros et patres et filios et socrus et nurus et domesticos nostros ibidem exhibere debetis, per quos traditio disposita est; item reges et praesides et armatas potestates, apud quas causa pugnanda est. Erit certe etiam carcer in caelo carens sole aut ingratis luminosus et uincula fortasse de zonis et eculeus axis ipse qui torquet.

[12] Tum si lapidandus Christianus, grandines aderunt, si urendus, fulmina prae manu sunt, si trucidandus, Orionis armati manus operabitur, si bestiis finiendus, ursas septentrio emittet, zodiacus tauros et leones. Haec qui sustinuerit in finem, iste erit saluus. [13] Ergone et finis in caelis et passio et occisio et prima confessio? Et ubi caro omnibus istis necessaria? Vbi corpus, quod solum ab hominibus habet occidi? Haec nobis etiam ludicrum in modum certa ratio mandauit nec ullus obicem praescriptionis istius extrudet, ut non omnem ordinem persecutionis, omnem eius causam formam paraturam illuc transferre cogatur, ubi confessioni forum dederit. [14] Siquidem confessio a persecutione deducitur et persecutio in confessione finitur nec possunt non una sequi quae et aditum et exitum, id est initium finemque disponunt. Porro et odium nominis hic erit et persecutio hic erumpit et traditio hic producit et interrogatio hic compellit et carnificina hic desaeuit; at totum hunc ordinem in terris confessio uel negatio expungit. [15] Igitur si cetera hic, nec confessio alibi; si confessio alibi, nec cetera hic. Enimuero non alibi cetera, itaque nec confessio in caelo. Aut si aliam uolunt esse rationem interrogationis et confessionis caelestis, utique et ordinem suum illi struere debebunt alium longe et ab ista dispositione diuersum, quae scripturis notatur. [16] Et possumus dicere: uiderint, dum hic ordo terrenae interrogationis et confessionis ex materia decurrens persecutionis et discordiae publicae omnino saluus sit, sua e fide ut ita credendum sit, sicut et scribitur, ita intellegendum sit, sicuti auditur. Hic omnem ordinem sustinemus ipso domino non aliam regionem mundi destinante. Quid enim post confessionis et negationis terminum subiungit? [17] Ne putaueritis uenisse me, uti pacem mittam in terram, sed machaeram, certe in terram. Veni enim diuidere hominem aduersus patrem suum et filiam aduersus matrem suam et socrum aduersus nurum suam, et inimici hominis domestici sui. Sic enim efficitur, ut tradat frater fratrem in mortem et pater filium et insurgant filii in parentes et mori eos faciant. Et qui sustinuerit in finem, iste sit saluus. Adeo totus hic ordo dominicae macherae non in caelum missae, sed in terram, illic constituit etiam confessionem, quae in finem sustinendo passura est mortem.

XI. [1] Eadem igitur forma cetera quoque ad martyrii statum pertinere defendimus. Qui pluris, inquit, fecerit etiam animam suam quam me, non est me dignus, id est qui maluerit uiuere me negando quam mori confitendo, et, qui animam suam inuenerit, perdet illam, qui uero perdiderit mei causa, inueniet illam. [2] Perinde enim inuenit eam qui negat lucri faciendo uitam, ut perdet in gehennam qui se putat negando lucri facere eam. Perdet autem eam ad praeSens qui confessus occiditur, sed et inuenturus eam in uitam aeternam.

[3] Ipsi denique praesides cum cohortantur negationi, serua animam tuam! Dicunt, et, noli animam tuam perdere! Quomodo loqueretur Christus, nisi quomodo tractaretur Christianus? Sed cum prohibet meditari responsionem ad tribunal, famulos suos instruit, Spiritum sanctum responsurum repromittit, et cum in carcere fratrem uult uisitari, confessoris imperat curam, et cum deum uindictam facturum electorum suorum affirmat, passiones consolatur illorum, etiam in parabola seminis post cespitem arefacti persecutionum figurat ardorem. [4] Haec si non ita accipiuntur, quemadmodum pronuntiantur, sine dubio praeter quam sonant sapiunt, et aliud in uocibus erit, aliud in sensibus, ut allegoriae, ut parabolae, ut aenigmata. Quemcumque igitur conceperint uentum argumentationis scorpii isti, quocumque se acumine ineperint, una iam linea est, ad ipsas res prouocabuntur, an secundum scripturas transigantur.

[5] Siquidem tunc aliud significabitur in scripturis, si non id ipsum reperiatur in rebus. Quod enim scriptum est, hoc euenire oportebit. Porro tunc eueniet quod est scriptum, si non aliter eueniet. Ecce autem et odio habemur ab omnibus hominibus nominis causa, quomodo et scriptum est, et tradimur etiam a proximis, quomodo et scriptum est, et perducimur ad potestates et interrogamur et torquemur et confitemur et trucidamur, quomodo et scriptum est. Sic dominus edixit. [6] Si aliter edixit haec, cur non aliter eueniunt quae edixit, id est quemadmodum edixit? Atquin non aliter eueniunt quam edixit; ergo sicut eueniunt, ita edixit et sicut edixit, ita eueniunt. Nam nec licuisset aliter euenire quam edixit nec ipse aliter edixisset quam euenire uoluisset. [7] Ita non aliud significabunt scripturae istae quam in rebus recognoscimus: aut, si nondum aguntur illa quae praedicantur, quomodo haec quae aguntur praedicata non sunt? Non sunt enim haec praedicata quae aguntur, si alia sunt quae praedicantur et non haec quae aguntur. At nunc quia ipsa sunt in rebus quae in uocibus aliter dicta creduntur, quid fieret, si aliter facta inuenirentur?

[8] Sed haec erit peruersitas fidei, probata non credere, non probata praesumere. Cui peruersitati illud quoque opponam, ut, si haec, quae sic aguntur quemadmodum scripta sunt, non erunt ipsa quae praedicantur, alia quoque non debeant sic agi quemadmodum scripta sunt, ne et ipsa horum exemplo periclitentur excludi, siquidem aliud in uocibus, aliud in rebus est, et relinquitur nec praedicata uideri, cum euenerint, si aliter praedicantur, quam euenire habent. Et quomodo credentur quae non erunt praedicata <quia non ita sunt praedicata> quomodo eueniunt? Ita haeretici quae praedicantur non ut probata sunt credendo ea quae nec praedicata sunt credunt.

XII. [1] Quis nunc medullam scripturarum magis nosset, quam ipsa Christi schola? Quos et sibi discipulos dominus adoptauit omnia utique edocendos et nobis magistros adordinauit omnia utique docturos. Cui potius figuram uocis suae declarasset, quam cui effigiem gloriae suae reuelauit, Petro Iohanni Iacobo et postea Paulo, quem paradisi quoque conpotem fecit ante martyrium? An et illi aliter, quam sentiunt, scribunt, fallaciae magistri, non ueritatis? [2] Petrus quidem ad Ponticos, quanta enim, inquit, gloria, si non delinquentes ut puniamini sustinetis? Haec enim gratia est, in hoc et uocati estis, quoniam et Christus passus est pro nobis, relinquens uobis exemplum semetipsum, uti adsequamini uestigia ipsius. [3] Et rursus: dilecti, ne epauescatis unctionem, quae agitur in uobis in temptationem, quasi nouum accidat uobis. Etenim secundum quod communicatis passionibus Christi, gaudete, Uti et in reuelatione gloriae eius gaudeatis exultantes. Si dedecoramini in nomine Christi, beati estis, quod gloria et dei spiritus requiescit in uobis, dum ne quis uestrum patiatur ut homicida aut fur aut maleficus aut alieni speculator, si autem ut Christianus, ne erubescat, glorificet autem dominum in nomine isto. [4] Iohannes uero, ut etiam pro fratribus nostris animas ponamus, hortatur negans timorem esse in dilectione. Perfecta enim dilectio foras abicit timorem, quoniam timor poenam habet, et qui timet non est perfectus in dilectione. [5] Quem timorem intellegi praestet, nisi negationis auctorem? Quam dilectionem perfectam adfirmat, nisi fugatricem timoris et animatricem confessionis? Qua poena timorem puniat, nisi quam negator relaturus est cum corpore et anima occidendus in gehenna? Quodsi pro fratribus, quanto magis pro domino moriendum docet, satis de apocalypsi quoque sua instructus haec suadere? [6] Mandauerat etenim spiritus ad angelum ecclesiae Smyrnaeorum: Ecce diabolus ex numero tuo coniciet in carcerem, ut temptemini diebus decem. Esto fidelis ad mortem usque, et dabo tibi uitae coronam. [7] Item ad Pergamenorum de Antipa, fidelissimo martyre, interfecto in habitatione satanae. Item ad Philadelphenorum, quod a temptatione ultima liberaretur, qui domini nomen non negarat. [8] Exinde uictoribus quibusque promittit nunc arborem uitae et mortis ueniam secundae, nunc latens manna cum calculo candido et nomine ignoto, nunc ferreae uirgae potestatem et stellae matutinae claritatem, nunc albam uestiri nec deleri de libro uitae et columnam fieri in dei templo in nomine dei et domini et Hierusalem caelestis inscriptam, nunc residere cum domino in throno eius, quod aliquando Zebedaei filiis negabatur.

[9] Quinam isti tam beati uictores, nisi proprie martyres? Illorum etenim uictoriae, quorum et pugnae, eorum uero pugnae, quorum et sanguis. Sed et interim sub altari martyrum animae placidum quiescunt et fiducia ultionis patientiam pascunt et indutae stolis candidam claritatis usurpant, donec et alii consortium illorum gloriae impleant. [10] Nam et rursus innumera multitudo albat i et palmis uictoriae insignes reuelantur, scilicet de Antichristo triumphantes, sicut unus ex presbyteris, hi sunt, ait, qui ueniunt ex illa pressura magna et lauerunt uestimentum suum et candidauerunt ipsum in sanguine agni. Vestitus enim animae caro. Sordes quidem baptismate abluuntur, maculae uero martyrio candidantur. Quia et Esecias ex russeo et coccino niueum et laneum repromittit. [11] Magna etiam Babylon cum describitur ebria sanctorum cruore, sine dubio ebrietas eius martyriorum poculis ministratur, quorum formido quid relatura sit aequae ostenditur. Inter omnes enim reprobos, immo ante omnes, timidi. Timidis autem, inquit, dehinc Ceteris particula in stagno ignis et sulfuris. Sic timor [in epistola] eius, quem dilectio foras abicit, habet poenam.

XIII. [1] Paulus uero apostolus de persecutore, qui primus ecclesiae sanguinem fudit, postea gladium stilo mutans et conuertens machaeram in aratrum, lupus rapax Benjamin, dehinc ipse adferens escam secundum Iacob, qualiter martyria iam et sibi optabilia commendat! [2] Cum de Thessalonicensibus gaudens, uti, inquit, gloriemur in uobis in ecclesiis dei pro tolerantia uestra et fide in omnibus persecutionibus et pressuris, quibus sustinetis ostentamen iusti iudicii dei, ut digni habeamini regno eius, pro quo et patimini. [3] Sicut et ad Romanos: non solum autem, uerum etiam exultantes in pressuris, certi, quod pressura tolerantiam perficiat, tolerantia uero probationem, probatio autem spem, spes uero non confundit. [4] Et rursus: quodsi filii et heredes, heredes quidem dei, coheredes uero Christi; siquidem compatimur, uti et cum illo glorificemur. Reputo enim passionem huius temporis non esse dignas ad gloriam, quae in nos habeat reuelari. Et ideo postmodum, quis, inquit, separabit nos a dilectione Christi? Pressura an angustia an famis an nuditas an periculum an machaera? Secundum quod scriptum est: tua causa mortificamur tota die; deputati sumus ut pecora iugulationis, sed in omnibus istis superuincimus pro eo qui nos dilexit. Persuasum enim habemus, quod neque mors neque uita neque uirtus neque sublimitas neque profundum neque alia condicio poterit nos a dilectione dei separare, quae est in Christo Iesu domino nostro. [5] Sed et Corinthiis passiones suas enumerans patiendum utique praefiniuit: in laboribus abundantius, in carceribus plurimum, in mortibus saepius, a Iudaeis quinquies quadragenas citra unam accepi, ter uirgis caesus, semel lapidatus, et reliqua. [6] Quae si magis incommoda quam martyria uidebuntur, tamen rursus, propter quod, inquit, boni duco in infirmitatibus, in iniuriis, in necessitatibus, in persecutionibus, in angustiis pro Christo. [7] Etiam in superioribus: qui in omnibus tribulemur, sed non coangustemur, et indigeamus, sed non perindigeamus, qui persecutionibus agitemur, sed non derelinquamur, qui deiciamur, sed non pereamus, semper mortificationem Christi in corpore nostro circumferentes. Sed etsi, inquit, exterior hominibus uitiatur, caro scilicet uel persecutionum, sed interior renouatur die et die, anima scilicet spe promissionum. [8] Nam quod ad praesens temporale et leue pressurae nostrae per supergressum in supergressum aeternum pondus gloriae perficit, nobis non intuentibus quae uidentur, sed quae non uidentur. Quae enim uidentur temporalia, de incommodis dicens, quae uero non uidentur aeterna, de praemiis spondens. [9] Thessalonicensibus uero de uinculis scribens utique beatos affirmauit quibus donatum esset non tantum credere in Christum, sed etiam pro ipso pati. Eundem, inquit, agonem habentes quem in me et uidistis et nunc auditis. Nam etsi labor super sacrificium, gaudeo et congaudeo omnibus uobis, perinde et uos gaudete et congaudete mihi. [10] Vides, quam martyrii definiat felicitatem, cui de gaudio mutuo acquirit sollemnitatem. Vt proximus denique uoti sui factus est, qualiter de prospectu eius exultans scribit Timotheo: ego enim labor iam, et tempus diiunctionis instat; agonem bonum decertaui, cursum consummaui, fidem custodiui; superest corona, quam mihi dominus illa die reddet, scilicet passionis. [11] Satis et ipse supra allocutus: fidelis sermo. Si enim commortui sumus Christo, et conuiuemus, si sufferimus, et conregnabimus, si negauerimus, et ille nos negabit: si non credimus, ille fidelis est, negare se non potest. Ne ergo confundaris martyrium domini nostri, neque me uinctum eius; quia praedixerat: non enim dedit nobis deus spiritum timoris, sed uirtutis et dilectionis et sanae mentis. [12] Virtute enim patimur ex dilectione in deum, et sana mente, cum ob innocentiam patimur. Sed et sicubi tolerantiam praecipit, quibus magis eam quam passionibus prospicit? Sicubi ab idololatria diuellit, quid ei magis quam martyria praeuellit?

XIV. [1] Plane monet Romanos omnibus potestatibus subici, quia non sit potestas nisi a deo, et quia non sine causa gladium gestet, et quia ministerium sit dei, sed et ultrix, inquit, in iram ei qui malum fecerit. Nam et praemiserat: Principes enim non sunt timori boni operis, sed mali. Vis autem non timere potestatem, fac bonum, et laudem ab ea referes. Dei ergo ministra est tibi in bonum. Si uero malum facias, time. [2] Ita non in occasione frustrandi martyrii iubet te subici potestatibus, sed in prouocatione bene uiuendi, etiam sub illaram respectu, quasi adiutricum iustitiae, quasi ministrarum diuini iudicii hic etiam de nocentibus praeiudicantis. Dehinc et exequitur, quomodo uelit te subici potestatibus, reddite, iubens, cui tributum, tributum, cui uestigal, uestigal, id est quae sunt Caesaris Caesari, et quae dei deo; solius autem dei homo. [3] Condixerat scilicet Petrus regem quidem honorandum, ut tamen tunc rex honoretur, cum suis rebus insistit, cum a diuinis honoribus longe est; quia et pater et mater diliguntur cum deo, non comparabuntur. Ceterum super deum diligere nec animam licebit.

XV. [1] Num ergo et apostolorum litterae mobiles? Et nos usquequaque simplices animae et solummodo columbae libenter errantes? Credo uiuendi cupiditate. Ita uero sit, ut recedant a litteris suis sensus. Quae tamen passos apostolos scimus, manifesta doctrina est. Hanc intellego solam Acta decurrens, nihil quaero. [2] Carceres illic et uincula et flagella et saxa et gladii et impetus Iudaeorum et coetus nationum et tribunorum elogia et regum auditoria et proconsulum tribunalia et Caesaris nomen interpretem non habent. Quod Petrus caeditur, quod Stephanus opprimitur, quod Iacobus immolatur, quod Paulus distrahitur, ipsorum sanguine scripta sunt. [3] Et si fidem commentarii uoluerit haereticus, instrumenta imperii loquentur, ut lapides Hierusalem. Vitas Caesarum legimus: orientem fidem Romae primus Nero cruentauit. Tunc Petrus ab altero cingitur, cum cruci adstringitur. Tunc Paulus ciuitatis Romanae consequitur natiuitatem, cum illic martyrii renascitur generositate. [4] Haec ubicumque iam legero, pati disco; nec mea interest, quos sequar martyrii magistros, sensusne an exitus apostolorum, nisi quod et sensus in exitibus recognosco. Nihil enim passi fuissent quod non prius patiendum esse scissent. Cum uincula Paulo Agabus gestu quoque prophetasset, discipuli flentes et orantes, ne se Hierosolyma committeret, frustra orauerant. [5] Ille enim quod semper docuerat animatus, quid fletis, inquit, et contristatis cor meum? At ego non modo uincula Hierosolymis pati optauerim, uerum etiam mori pro nomine domini mei Iesu Christi. Atque ita cesserunt dicendo: Fiat uoluntas domini; fidentes scilicet passiones ad dei uoluntatem pertinere. [6] Non enim dehortationis consilio, sed dilectionis retinere temptauerant, ut apostolum desiderantes, non ut martyrium dissuadentes. Quodsi iam tunc Prodicus aut Valentinus adsisteret suggerens non in terris esse confitendum apud homines, minus uereor ne deus humanum sanguinem sitiatur nec Christus uicem passionis quasi et ipse de ea salutem consecuturus exposcat, statim audisset a seruo dei quod audierat diabolus a domino: recede satana, scandalum mihi es. Scriptum, est dominum deum tuum adorabis et illi soli seruias. [7] Sed et nunc audire debebit, quatenus multo post uenena ista suffudit, nulli infirmorum facile nocitura, nisi si qui non hanc nostram ex fide praebiberit uel etiam superbiberit potionem.

De Corona Militis (On the Soldier's Garland)

1. [1] Proxime factum est. Liberalitas praestaatissimorum imperatorum expungebatur in castris, milites laureati adibant. Adhibetur quidam illic magis Dei miles, ceteris constantior fratribus qui se duobus dominis seruire posse praesumpserant. Solus libero capite, coronamento in manu otioso, uulgato iam et ista disciplina christiano, relucebat. [2] Denique singuli designare et ludere eminus, infrendere comminus. Continuo murmur; tribuno defertur et persona : iam ex ordine decesserat. Statim tribunus : « Cur, inquit, tam diuersus habitus? » Negauit ille sibi cum ceteris licere. Causas expostulatus, « christianus sum » respondit. O militem gloriosum in Deo ! Suffragia exinde, et res ampliata et reus ad praefectos. [3] Ibidem grauissimas paenulas posuit, releuari auspicatus, speculatoriam morosissimam de pedibus absoluit, terrae sanctae insistere incipiens, gladium nec dominicae defensionis necessarium reddidit, laurea et de manu claruit. Et nunc, rufatus sanguinis sui spe, calciatus de euangelii paratura, succinctus acutiore uerbo dei, totus de apostolo armatus et de martyrii candida melius coronatus, donatium Christi in carcere expectat. [4] Exinde sententiae super illo, — nescio an christianorum : non enim aliae ethnicorum — , ut de abrupto et praecipiti et mori cupido, qui de habitu interrogatus nomini negotium fecerit, solus scilicet fortis inter tot fratres commilitones, solus christianus. Plane superest ut etiam martyria recusare meditentur, qui prophetias eiusdem spiritus sancti respuerunt. [5] Mussitant denique tam bonam et longam pacem periclitari sibi. Nec dubito quosdam scripturas emigrare, sarcinas expedire, fugae accingi de ciuitate in ciuitatem. Nullam enim aliam euangelii memoriam curant. Noui et pastores eorum: in pace leones et in proelio ceruus. Sed de quaestionibus confessionum alibi docebimus. [6] At nunc, quatinus et illud opponunt : « Vbi autem prohibemur coronari? », hanc magis localem substantiam causae praesentis aggrediar, ut et qui ex sollicitudine ignorantiae quaerunt instruantur, et qui in defensionem delicti contendunt, reuincantur, ipsi uel maxime christiani laureati, quibus id solum quaestio est, quasi aut nullum aut incertum saltem habere possit delictum quod patiat quaeestionem. Nec nullum autem nec incertum hinc interim ostendam.

2. [1] Neminem dico fidelium coronam capite nosse alias, extra tempus temptationis eiusmodi. Omnes ita obseruant a catechumenis usque ad confessores et martyras uel negatores. Videris unde auctoritas moris, de qua nunc maxime quaeritur. Porro cum quaeritur cur quid obseruetur, obseruari interim constat. Ergo nec nullum nec incertum uideri potest delictum quod committitur in obseruationem suo iam nomine uindicandam, et satis auctoratam consensus patrocínio. [2] Plane, ut ratio quaerenda sit, sed salua obseruatione, nec in destructionem eius, sed in aedificationem potius, quo magis obserues, cum fueris etiam de ratione securus. Quale est autem ut tunc quis in quaestionem prouocet obseruationem, cum ab ea excidit? et tunc requirat unde habuerit obseruationem, cum ab ea desiit? quando, etsi ideo uelit uideri ad quaestionem uocare uti ostendat se non deliquisse in obseruationis destitutione, nihilominus deliquisse eum constet retro in obseruationis praesumptione. [3] Si enim non deliquit hodie suscepta corona, deliquit aliquando recusata. Et ideo non ad eos erit iste tractatus, quibus non competit quaestio, sed ad illos qui studio discendi non quaestionem deferunt, sed consultationem. Nam nec semper quaeritur de isto, et laudo fidem quae ante credidit obseruandum esse quam didicit. [4] Et facile est statim exigere ubi scriptum sit ne coronemur. At enim ubi scriptum est ut coronemur? Expostulantes enim scripturae patrocínium in parte diuersa, praeiudicant suae quoque parti scripturae patrocínium adesse debere. Nam si ideo dicetur coronari licere quia non prohibeat scriptura, aequae retorquebitur ideo coronari non licere quia scriptura non iubeat. Quid faciet disciplina? Vtrumque recipiet, quasi neutrum prohibitum sit, an utrumque reiciet, quasi neutrum praeceptum sit? — « Sed quod non prohibetur ultro permissum est. » — Immo prohibetur quod non ultro est permissum.

3. [1] Et quamdiu per hanc lineam serram reciprocabimus, habentes obseruationem inueteratam, quae praeueniendo statum fecit? Hanc si nulla scriptura determinauit, certe consuetudo corroborauit, quae sine dubio de traditione manauit. Quomodo enim usurpari quid potest, si traditum prius non est? Etiam in traditionis obtentu exigenda est, inquis, auctoritas scripta. [2] Ergo quaeramus an et traditio nisi scripta non debeat recipi. Plane negabimus recipiendam, si nulla exempla praeiudicent aliarum obseruationum, quas sine ullius scripturae instrumento, solius traditionis titulo et exinde consuetudinis patrocínio uindicamus. Denique, ut a baptisinate ingrediar, aquam adituri ibidem, sed et aliquanto prius in ecclesia, sub antistitis manu, contestamur nos renuntiare diabolo et pompae et angelis eius. [3] Dehinc ter mergitamur amplius aliquid respondentes quam Dominus in euangelio determinauit. Inde suscepti, lactis et mellis concordiam praegustamus, exque ea die lauacro quotidiano per totam ebdomadem abstinemus. Eucharistiae sacramentum, et in tempore uictus et omnibus mandatum a Domino, etiam antelucanis coetibus nec de aliorum manu quam praesidentium sumimus. Oblationes pro defunctis, pro nataliciis, annua die facimus. [4] Die dominico ieiunium nefas ducimus, uel de geniculis adorare. Eadem immunitate a die Paschae in Pentecosten usque gaudemus. Calicis aut panis etiam nostri aliquid decuti in terram anxie patimur. Ad omnem progressum atque promotum, ad omnem aditum et exitum, ad uestitum, ad calciatum, ad lauacra, ad mensas, ad lumina, ad cubilia, ad sedilia, quacumque nos conuersatio exercet, frontem signaculo terimus.

4. [1] Harum et aliarum eiusmodi disciplinarum si legem expostules, scripturarum nullam leges. Traditio tibi praetendetur auctrix et consuetudo confirmatrix et fides obseruatrix. Rationem traditioni et consuetudini et fidei patrocinaturam aut ipse perspicies aut ab aliquo qui perspexerit disces. Interim non nullam esse credes cui debeatur obsequium. [2] Adicio unum adhuc exemplum, quatinus et de ueteribus docere conueniet. Apud Iudaeos tam sollemne est feminis eorum uelamen capitis ut inde noscantur. Quaero legem, apostolum differo. Si Rebecca conspecto procul sponso uelamen inuasit, priuatus pudor legem facere non potuit, aut, causae suae fecerit, tegantur uirgines solae, et hoc nuptum uenientes, nec antequam cognouerint sponso. [3] Si et Susanna in iudicio reuelata argumentum uelandi praestat, possum dicere : « Et hic uelamen arbitrii fuit. » Rea uenerat, erubescens de infamia sua, merito abscondens decorem, uel quia timens iam placere. Ceterum in stadio mariti non putem uelatam deambulasse quae placuit. Fuerit nunc uelata semper, in ipsa quoque legem habitus requiro uel in quacumque alia. [4] Si legem nusquam reperio, sequitur ut traditio consuetudini morem hunc dederit, habiturum quandoque apostoli auctoritatem ex interpretatione rationis. His igitur exemplis renuntiatum erit posse etiam non scriptam traditionem in obseruatione defendi, confirmatam consuetudine, idonea teste probatae tunc traditionis ex perseuerantia obseruationis. [5] Consuetudo autem etiam in ciuilibus rebus pro lege suscipitur, cum deficit lex, nec differt scriptura an ratione consistat, quando et legem ratio commendat. Porro si ratione lex constat, lex erit omne iam quod ratione constiterit a quocumque productum.

An non putas omni fideli licere concipere et constituere, dumtaxat quod Deo congruat, quod disciplinae conducat, quod saluti proficiat, dicente Domino : « Cur autem non et a uobis ipsis quod iustum iudicatis? » [6] Et non de iudicio tantum, sed de omni sententia rerum examinandarum dicit et apostolus : « Si quid ignoratis, Deus uobis reuelabit », solitus et ipse consilium subministrare, cum praeceptum Domini non habebat, et edicere a semetipso, spiritum Dei habens deductorem omnis ueritatis. Itaque consilium eius diuini iam praecepti instar obtinuit de rationis diuinae patrocinio. [7] Hanc nunc expostula saluo traditionis respectu, quocumque traditore censetur, nec auctorem respicias, sed auctoritatem, et in primis consuetudinis ipsius quae propterea colenda est ne non sit rationis interpret, ut, si et hanc Deus dederit, tunc discas non an obseruanda sit tibi consuetudo, sed cur.

5. [1] Maior efficitur ratio christianarum obseruationum, cum illas etiam natura defendit, quae prima omnium disciplina est. Ideoque haec prima praescribit coronam capiti non conuenire. Puto autem, naturae Deus, Deus noster, qui figurauit hominem et fructibus rerum appetendis, iudicandis, consequendis certos in eo sensus ordinauit propria membrorum quodam modo organa: auditum in auribus fodit, uisum in oculis accendit, gustum in ore conclusit, odoratum in naribus uentilauit, contactum in manibus extimauit. [2] Per haec exterioris hominis ministeria interiori homini ministrantia fructus munerum diuinorum ad animam deducuntur a sensibus. Quis igitur fructus ex floribus? Substantia enim propria, certe praecipua, coronarum flores agri. Aut odor, inquis, aut color, aut pariter utrumque. Qui erunt sensus coloris et odoris? Visus, opinor, et odoratus. Istos sensus quae membra sortita sunt? Oculi, nisi fallor, et nares. Vtere itaque floribus uisu et odoratu, quorum sensuum fructus est, utere per oculos et nares, quae eorum sensuum membra sunt. Substantia tibi a Deo tradita est, habitus a saeculo. [3] Quamquam nec habitus extraordinarius ordinario usui obstrepit : hoc sint tibi flores et inserti et innexi, et in filo et in scirpo, quod liberi, quod soluti : spectaculi scilicet et spiraculi res. Coronam, si forte, fascem existima florum per seriem comprehensorum, ut plures semel portes, ut omnibus pariter utaris. Iam uero et in sinum conde, si tanta munditia est, et in lectulum sparge, si tanta mollitia est, et in poculum crede, si tanta innocentia est : tot modis frui quot et sentis. [4] Ceterum in capite quis sapor floris, quis coronae sensus, nisi uinculi tantum, quo neque color cernitur neque odor ducitur nec teneritas commendatur? Tam contra naturam est florem capite sectari quam cibum aure, quam sonum nare. Omne autem, quod contra naturam est, monstri meretur notam penes omnes, penes nos uero etiam elogium sacrilegii in Deum, naturae dominum et auctorem.

6. ^[1] Quaeres igitur Dei legem? Habes communem istam in publico mundi, in naturalibus tabulis ad quas et apostolus solet prouocare, ut cum in uelamine feminae : « Nec natura, inquit, uos docet? », ut cum ad Romanos, natura facere dicens nationes ea quae sunt legis, et legem naturalem suggerit et naturam legalem. Sed et in priore epistula naturalem usum conditionis in non naturalem masculos et feminas inter se demutasse affirmans ex retributione erroris in uicem poenae, utique naturalibus patrocinator. ^[2] Ipsum Deum secundum naturam prius nouimus, scilicet deum appellantes deorum, et bonum praesumentes et iudicem inuocantes. Quaeris an conditioni eius fruendae natura nobis debeat praeire? Ne illa ui rapiamur qua Dei aemulus uniuersam conditionem, certis usibus homini mancipatam, cum ipso homine corrumpit : unde eam et apostolus inuitam ait uanitati succidisse, uanis primum usibus, tum turpibus et iniustis et impiis subuersam. ^[3] Sic itaque et circa uoluptates spectaculorum infamata conditio est ab eis qui natura quidem omnia Dei sentiunt, ex quibus spectacula instruuntur, scientia autem deficiunt illud quoque intellegere, omnia esse a diabolo mutata. Sed et huic materiae propter suauiludios nostros Graeco quoque stilo satis fecimus.

7. ^[1] Proinde coronarii isti agnoscant interim naturae auctoritatem communis sapientiae nomine, qua homines, sed propriae religionis pignore, qua Deum naturae de proximo colentes, atque ita uelut ex abundanti ceteras quoque rationes dispiciant, quae nostro priuatim capiti coronamentis, et quidem omnibus interdunt. ^[2] Nam et urguemur a communione naturalis disciplinae conuerti ad proprietatem christianam totam iam defendendam per ceteras quoque species coronarum, quae aliis usibus prospectae uidentur ut aliis substantiis structae, ne, quia non ex floribus constant, quorum usum natura signauit, ut ipsa haec laurea militaris, non credantur admittere sectae interdictionem quia euaserint naturae praescriptionem. Video igitur et curiosius et plenius agendum ab originibus usque ad profectus et excessus rei. ^[3] Litterae ad hoc saeculares necessariae. De suis enim instrumentis saecularia probari necesse est. Quantulas attigi, credo, sufficient. Si fuit aliqua Pandora, quam primam feminarum memorat Hesiodus, hoc primum caput coronatum

est a Charitibus, cum ab omnibus muneretur, unde Pandora. Nobis uero Moyses, propheticus, non poeticus pastor, principem feminam Euam facilius pudenda foliis quam tempora floribus incinctam describit. Nulla ergo Pandora. Sed ut de mendacio erubescenda est coronae origo, iam nunc et de ueritatibus suis. [4] Certe enim ceteros fuisse constat auctores rei uel illuminatores. Saturnum Pherecydes ante omnes refert coronatum, Iouem Diodorus post deuictos Titanas hoc munere a ceteris honoratum. Dat et Priapo taenias idem, et Ariadnae sertum ex auro et Indicis gemmis, Vulcani opus, ac post Liberi munus, postea sidus. Iunoni uitem Callimachus induxit. Ita et Argi signum eius palmite redimitum, subiecto pedibus corio leonino, insultantem ostentat nouercam de exuuiis utriusque priuigni. Hercules nunc populum capite praefert, nunc oleastrum, nunc apium. [5] Habes tragoediam Cerberi, habes Pindarum atque Callimachum, qui et Apollinem memorat interfecto Delphico dracone lauream induisse, qua supplicem. Erant enim supplices coronati apud ueteres. Liberum, eundem apud Aegyptios Osirim, Harpocraton industria ederatum argumentatur, quod ederae naturae sit cerebrum ab heluco defensare. Sed et alias Liberum principem coronae, plane laureae in qua ex Indis triumphauit, etiam uulgus agnoscit, cum dies in illum sollemnes Magnam appellat Coronam. [6] Si et Leonis Aegyptii scripta euoluas, prima Isis repertas spicas capite circumtulit, rem magis uentris. Plura quaerentibus omnia exhibebit praestantissimus in hac quoque materia commentator Claudius Saturninus. [7] Nam est illic de coronis liber, et origines et causas et species et sollemnitates earum ita edisserens ut nullam gratiam floris, nullam laetitiam frondis, nullum caespitem aut palmitem non alicuius capiti inuenias consecratum: quo satis instruamur quam alienum iudicare debeamus coronati capitis institutionem ab eis prolatam et in eorum deinceps honorem dispensatam, quos saeculum deos credidit. [8] Si enim mendacium diuinitatis diabolus operatur, in hac etiam specie a primordio mendax, sine dubio et eos ipse prospexerat, in quibus id mendacium diuinitatis ageretur. Quale igitur habendum est apud homines Dei ueri quod agentibus candidatis diaboli introductum et ipsis a primordio dictum est, quoque iam tunc idolis latriae initiabantur ab idolis et in idolis adhuc uiuis? non quasi aliquid sit idolum, sed quoniam, quae idolis ab aliis fiunt ad daemones pertinent. [9] Porro si quae alii idolis faciunt ad daemones pertinent, quanto magis quod ipsa sibi idola fecerunt, cum adiuuerent? Ipsi scilicet sibi procurauerunt daemones, per eos in quibus esurierant ante quod procurauerunt.

8. [1] Tene interim hunc finem, dum incursum quaestionis excutio. Iam enim audio dici et alia multa, ab eis prolata quos saeculum deos credidit, tamen et in nostris hodie usibus et in pristinorum sanctorum et in Dei rebus et in ipso Christo deprehendi, non alias scilicet homine functo quam per communia ista instrumenta exhibitionis humanae. Plane ita sit, nec antiquius adhuc in origines disceptabo. [2] Primus litteras Mercurius enarrauerit : necessarias confitebor et commercii rerum et nostris erga Deum studiis. Sed et si neruos idem in sonum strinxit, non negabo et hoc ingenium eius sanctis fecisse et Deo ministrasse, audiens Daud. Primus medellas Aesculapius explorauerit : meminit et Esaias Ezechiae languenti aliquid medicinale mandasse, scit et Paulus stomacho uinum modicum prodesse. Sed et Minerua prima molita sit nauem : uidebo nauigantem Ionan et apostolos. [3] Plus est quod et Christus uestitur; habebit etiam, paenulam Paulus. Si et uniuscuiusque suppellectilis et singulorum uasorum aliquem ex diis saeculi auctorem nominaris, agnoscam necesse est et recumbentem in lectulo Christum, et cum peluem discipulorum pedibus offert, et cum aquam ex urceo ingerit, et cum linteo circumstringitur, propria Osiridis ueste. [4] Huiusmodi quaestioni sic ubique respondeo, admittens quidem utensilium communionem, sed prouocans eam ad rationalium et irrationalium distinctionem, quia passiuitas fallit obumbrans corruptelam conditionis qua subiecta est uanitati. [5] Dicimus enim ea demum et nostris et superioribus usibus et Dei rebus et ipsi Christo competisse, quae meras utilitates et certa subsidia et honesta solacia necessariis uitae humanae procurant, ut et ipso Deo inspirante dantur, priore prospectore et instructore et oblectatore, si forte, hominis sui ; quae uero hunc ordinem excesserunt, ea non conuenire usibus nostris, praesertim quae propterea scilicet nec apud sanctum ullum nec in Dei rebus nec in conuersationibus Christi recognosci est.

9. [1] Quis denique patriarches, quis prophetes, quis leuites aut sacerdos aut archon, quis uel postea apostolus aut euangelizator aut episcopus inuenitur coronatus? Puto, nec ipsum Dei templum nec arca testamenti, nec tabernaculum martyrii, nec altare, nec candelabrum, quibus utique et in prima dedicationis sollemnitate et in secunda restitutionis gratulatione competisset coronari, si dignum Deo esset. [2] Atquin si figurae nostrae fuerunt, — nos enim sumus et templa Dei et altaria et luminaria et uasa, — hoc quoque figurate portendebant, homines Dei coronari non oportere. Imagini ueritas respondere debbit. Si forsitan opponis ipsum Christum coronatum, ad hoc breuiter interim audies : « Sic et tu coronare; licitum est. » [3] Tamen nec illam impietatis contumeliosae coronam populus consciuit. Romanorum militum fuit commentum, ex usu rei saecularis, quem populus Dei nec publicae umquam laetitiae nec ingenitae luxuriae nomine admisit, facilius cum tympanis et tibiis et psalteriis reuertens de captiuitate Babyloniae quam cum coronis, et post cibum et potum exurgens ad ludendum sine coronis. [4] Nam neque laetitiae descriptio neque luxuriae denotatio de coronae decore aut dedecore tacuisset. Adeo et Esaias : « Quoniam, inquit, cum tympanis et psalteriis et tibiis uinum bibunt », dicturus etiam « cum coronis », si umquam hic usus fuisset et in Dei rebus.

10. [1] Ita cum idcirco proponis deorum saecularium commenta etiam apud Deum deprehendi, ut inter haec coronam quoque capitis communi usui uindices, ipse tibi iam praescribis non habendum in communione usus apud nos quod non inueniatur in Dei rebus. Quid enim tam indignum Deo quam quod dignum idolo? Quid autem tam dignum idolo quam quod et mortuo? [2] Nam et mortuorum est ita coronari, quoniam et ipsi idola statim fiunt et habitu et cultu consecrationis, quae apud nos secunda idololatria est. Igitur qui careant sensu, illorum erit perinde uti ea re, cuius careant sensu, atque si abuti eo uellent, si sensu non carerent. Nulla uero distantia est abutendi, cum ueritas cessat utendi: cessante natura sentiendi qua uult, quis abutatur, cum non habeat qua utatur? [3] Nobis autem abuti apud apostolum non licet, facilius non uti docentem. Nisi quod nec abutuntur qui nihil sentiunt, sed uacant totum, et est ipsum quoque opus mortuum, quantum in idolis, uiuum plane, quantum in daemoniis ad quae pertinet superstitio. « Idola nationum, inquit Dauid, argentum et aurum : oculos habent, nec uident, nares, nec odorantur, manus, nec contrectabunt. » [4] Per haec enim floribus frui est. Quod si tales edicit futuros qui idola fabricantur, tales iam sunt qui secundum idolorum ornatum quid utuntur. Omnia munda mundis; ita et immunda omnia immundis. Nihil autem immundius idolis. — Ceterum substantiae mundae, ut Dei res, et hac sua condicione communes usui. — Sed et ipsius usus administratio interest. [5] Nam et ego mihi gallinaceum macto, non minus quam Aesculapio Socrates, et si me odor alicuius loci offenderit, Arabiae aliquid incendo, sed non eodem ritu, nec eodem habitu, nec eodem apparatu, quo agitur apud idola. Si enim uerbo nudo conditio polluitur, — ut apostolus docet : « Si quis autem dixerit :

hoc idolothytum est, ne contigeris », — multo magis, cum saltitaueris habitu et ritu et apparatu idolothytorum, contaminatur. Ita et corona idolothytum efficitur. [6] Hoc enim ritu et habitu et apparatu idolis immolatur auctoribus suis, quorum eo uel maxime proprius est usus, ne in communionem possit admitti, quod in Dei rebus non inuenitur. Propterea apostolus clamat : « Fugite idololatriam ! » Omnem utique et totam. [7] Recogita siluam et quanta latitant spinae. Nihil dandum idolo; sic nec sumendum ab idolo. Si in idolio recumbere alienum est a fide, quid in idoli habitu uideri? Quae communio Christo et Beliae? Et ideo fugite. Longum enim diuortium mandat ab idololatria. In nullo proxime agendum : draco etiam terrenus de longinquo homines spiritu absorbet. [8] Altius Iohannes : « Filioli, inquit, custodite uos ab idolis! »; non iam ab idololatria quasi officio, sed ab idolis, id est ab ipsa effigie eorum. Indignum enim ut imago Dei uiui imago idoli et mortui fias. Vsque adhuc proprietatem istius habitus et ex originis censu et ex superstitionis usu idolis uindicamus, ex eo praeterea quod, dum in rebus Dei non refertur, magis magisque illorum deputatur in quorum et anti quitatibus et sollemnitatibus et officiis conuenitur. [9] Ipsae denique fores et ipsae hostiae et arae, ipsi ministri ac sacerdotes eorum coronantur. Habes omnium collegiorum sacerdotalium coronas apud Claudium. Sed et illam interstruximus distinctionem differentium rationalium et inrationalium eis occurrentem, qui communionem in omnibus de quorundam exemplorum occasione defendunt. [10] Ad hanc itaque partem causas iam ipsas coronarias inspicere superest, ut, dum ostendimus extraneas, immo et contrarias disciplinae, nullam earum rationis patrocinio fultam probemus, quo posset habitus huiusmodi quoque communioni uindicari, sicut et quidam quorum exempla nobis obiectantur.

11. [1] Etenim, ut ipsam causam coronae militaris aggrediar, puto prius conquirendum an in totum christianis militia conueniat. Quale est alioquin de accidentibus retractare, cum a praecedentibus culpa sit? Credimusne humanum sacramentum diuino superduci licere, et in alium dominum respondere post Christum, et eierare patrem ac matrem et omnem proximum, quos et lex honorari et post Deum diligere praecepit, quos et euangelium, solum Christum pluri faciens, sic quoque hono-rauit? [2] Licebit in gladio conuersari, Domino pronuntiante gladio periturum qui gladio fuerit usus? Et proelio operabitur filius pacis, cui nec litigare conueniet? Et uincula et carcerem et tormenta et supplicia administrabit, nec suarum ultor iniuriarum?

[3] Iam et stationes aut aliis magis faciet quam Christo, aut et dominico die, quando nec Christo? Et excubabit pro templis quibus renuntiavit? Et cenabit illic, ubi apostolo non placet? Et quos interdum exorcismis fugavit, noctibus defensabit, incumbens et requiescens super pilum quo perfossum est latus Christi? Vexillum quoque portabit aemulum Christi? Et signum postulabit a principe, qui iam a Deo accepit? Mortuus etiam tuba inquietabitur aeneatoris, qui excitari a tuba angeli expectat? Et cremabitur ex disciplina castrensis christianus, cui crederetur mari non licuit, cui Christus merita ignis indulxit? [4] Quanta alibi illicita circumspici possunt castrensi munitionum, transgressionum interpretanda! Ipsum de castris lucis in castra tenebrarum nomen deferre transgressionis est. Plane, si quos militia praeueniens fides posterior inuenit, alia condicio est, ut illorum quos Iohannes admittebat ad lauacrum, ut centurionum fidelissimorum quem Christus probat et quem Petrus catechizat, dum tamen, suscepta fide atque signata, aut deserendum statim sit, ut a multis actum, aut omnibus modis cauendum, ne quid aduersus Deum committatur quae nec extra militiam permittuntur, aut nouissime perpetiendum pro Deo, quod aequae fides pagana condixit. [5] Nec enim delictorum impunitatem aut martyriorum immunitatem militia promittit. Nusquam christianus aliud est, unum euangelium et idem : Iesus negaturus omnem negatorem et confessurus omnem confessorem, et saluam facturum animam pro nomine eius amissam, perditurus autem de contrario aduersus nomen eius lucrum habitum. Apud hunc tam miles est paganus fidelis quam paganus est miles fidelis. [6] Non admittit status fidei necessitates. Nulla est necessitas delinquendi, quibus una est necessitas non delinquendi. Nam et ad sacrificandum et directo negandum necessitate quis premitur tormentorum siue poenarum. Tamen nec illi necessitati disciplina conuenit, quia potior est necessitas timendae negationis et obeundi martyrii quam euadendae passionis et implendi officii. [7] Ceterum subuertit totam substantiam sacramenti causatio eiusmodi, ut etiam uoluntariis delictis fibulam laxet. Nam et uoluntas poterit necessitas contendere, habens scilicet unde cogatur uel ipsa. Haec praestruxerim et ad ceteras officialium coronarum causas, quibus familiarissima est aduocatio necessitatis, cum idcirco aut officia fugienda sunt ne delictis incidamus, aut martyria toleranda sunt ut officia rumpamus. De prima specie quaestionis, etiam militiae ipsius illicitae, plura non faciam, ut secunda reddatur, ne, si omni ope expulero militiam, frustra iam de corona militari prouocarim. Puta denique licere militiam usque ad causam coronae.

12. [1] Sed et de corona prius dicamus. Laurea ista Apollini uel Libero sacra est, illi ut deo telorum, huic ut deo triumphorum. Sic docet Claudius, [2] cum et myrto ait milites redimiri solere: Veneris enim myrtus, matris Aeneadarum, etiam amicalae Martis, per Iliam et Romulos Romanae. Sed ego Venerem non credo ex hac parte cum Marte Romanam, qua pelicis dolor est. Cum et olea militia coronatur, ad Mineruam est idololatria, armorum aequae deam, sed et pace cum Neptuno inita ex hac arbore coronatam. In his erit serti militaris superstitio, ubique polluta et polluens omnia. Quae iam polluantur et causis. [3] Ecce annua uotorum nuncupatio : quid uidetur? Prima in principiis, secunda in capitoliis. Accipe, post loca, et uerba : « Tunc tibi, Iuppiter, bouem cornibus auro decoratis uouemus esse futurum. » Cuius sententiae uox est? Vtique negationis. Etiam si tacet illic christianus ore, coronatus capite respondit. Eadem laurea in donatiui dispensationem denuntiatur. Plane non gratuita [4] idololatria, aliquibus aureis uenditans Christum, ut argenteis Iudas. Hoc erit « Non potestis Deo seruire et mammonae », mammonae manum tradere et Deo absistere? Hoc erit « Reddite quae sunt Caesaris Caesari et quae Dei Deo », nec hominem Deo reddere et denarium Caesari auferre? Triumphus laurea foliis struitur an cadaueribus? Iemnicis ornatur an bustis? unguentis delibuitur an lacrimis coniugum et matrum? Fortasse quorundam et christianorum : et apud barbaros enim Christus. [5] Qui hanc portauerit in capite causam, nonne et ipse pugnavit? Est et alia militia, regiarum familiarum. Nam et castrenses appellantur, munificae et ipsae sollemnium Caesarianorum. Sed et tu proinde miles ac seruus alterius, et si duorum, Dei et Caesaris, certe tunc non Caesaris, cum te Deo debes, etiam in communibus, credo, potiori.

13. [1] Coronant et publicos ordines laureis publicae causae, magistratus uero insuper aureis, ut Athenis, ut Romae. Superferuntur etiam illis Etruscae. Hoc uocabulum est coronarum quas gemmis et foliis ex auro quercinis ab Ioue insignes ad deducendas tensas cum palmatis togis sumunt. Sunt et prouinciales aureae, imaginum pro numero capita maiora quaerentes. Sed tui ordines et tui magistratus et ipsum curiae nomen ecclesia est Christi. Illius es concriptus in libris uitae. [2] Illic purpurae tuae sanguis Domini, et clauus latus in cruce ipsius; illic secures, ad caudicem iam arboris positae; illic uirgae ex radice Iesse. Viderint et publici equi cum coronis suis. Dominus tuus, ubi

secundum scripturam Hierusalem ingredi uoluit, nec asinum habuit priuatum. « Isti in curribus et isti in equis, nos autem in nomine Domini nostri inuocabimus. » [3] Ab ipso incolatu Babylonis illius in Apocalypsi Iohannis submouemur, nedum a suggestu. Coronatur et uulgus, nunc ex principalium prosperitatum exultatione, nunc ex municipalium sollemnitatum proprietate. Est enim omnis publicae laetitiae luxuria captatrix. [4] Sed tu, peregrinus mundi huius et ciuis ciuitatis supernae Hierusalem, — « Noster, inquit, municipatus in caelis », — habes tuos census, tuos fastos, nihil tibi cum gaudiis saeculi, immo contrarium debes. « Saeculum enim gaudebit, uos uero lugebitis. » Et, puto, felices ait lugentes, non coronatos. Coronant et nuptiae sponso. Et ideo non nubemus ethnicis, ne nos ad idololatriam usque deducant, a qua apud illos nuptiae incipiunt. [5] Habes legem a patriarchis quidem, habes apostolum in Domino nubere iubentem. Coronat et libertas saecularis. Sed tu iam redemptus es a Christo, et quidem magno. Seruum alienum quomodo saeculum manumittet? Etsi libertas uidetur, sed et seruitus uidebitur: omnia imaginaria in saeculo et nihil ueri. Nam et tunc liber hominis eras, redemptus a Christo, et nunc seruus es Christi, licet manumissus sis ab homine. [6] Si ueram putes saeculi libertatem, ut et corona eam consignes, redisti in seruitutem hominis, quam putas libertatem, amisisti libertatem Christi, quam putasti seruitutem. Numquid et agonisticae causae disputabuntur, quas statim tituli sui damnant, sacras et funebres scilicet? Hoc enim superest, ut Olympius Iuppiter et Nemausus Hercules et misellus Archemorus et Antinous infelix in christiano coronentur, ut ipse spectaculum fiat quod spectare non debet. [7] Vniuersas, ut arbitror, causas enumerauimus, nec ulla nobiscum est : omnes alienae, profanae, illicitae, semel iam in sacramenti testatione eieratae. Haec enim erant pompae diaboli et angelorum eius : officia saeculi, honores, sollemnitates, popularitates, falsa uota, humana seruitia, laudes uanae, gloriae turpes; et in omnibus istis idololatriae, in solo quoque censu coronarum, quibus omnia ista redimita sunt. [8] Praefabitur quidem Claudius etiam caelum sideribus apud Homeri carmina coronatum, certe a Deo, certe homini : igitur et homo ipse a deo coronandus est. Ceterum a saeculo coronantur et lupanaria et latrinae et pistrinae et carcer et ludus et ipsa amphitheatra et ipsa spoliaria ipsaeque libitinae. Quam sacer sanctusque, quam honestus ac mundus sit habitus iste, noli de uno poetico caelo, sed de totius mundi commerciis aestimare. [9] At enim christianus nec ianuam suam laureis infamabit, si norit quantos deos etiam ostiis diabolus adfinxerit : Ianum a ianua, Limentinum a limine, Forculum et Carnam a foribus atque cardinibus, etiam apud Graecos Thyraeum Apollinem et Antelios daemonas.

14. [1] Tanto abest ut capiti suo munus inferat idololatriae, immo iam dixerim Christo, siquidem caput uiri Christus est : tam liberum quam et Christus, ne uelamento quidem obnoxium, nedum obligamento. Porro et quod obnoxium est uelamento, caput feminae, hoc ipso iam occupatum non uacat etiam obligamento. Habet humilitatis suae sarcinam. [2] Si nudo capite uideri non debet propter angelos, multo magis coronato. Fortasse tunc illos coronato scandalizauerit. Quid enim est in capite feminae corona quam formae lena, quam summae lasciuiae nota, extrema negatio uerecundiae, conflatio inlecebrae? Propterea nec ornabitur operosius mulier ex apostoli prospectu, ut nec crinium artificio coronetur. [3] Qui tamen et uiri caput est et feminae facies, uir ecclesiae Christus Iesus, quale, oro te, sertum pro utroque sexu subiit? Ex spinis, opinor, et tribulis, in figuram delictorum quae nobis protulit terra carnis, abstulit autem uirtus crucis, omnem aculeum mortis in dominici capitis tolerantia obtundens, certe praeter figuram : contumelia in promptu est, et dedecoratio et turpitudine et his implexa saeuitia. [4] Quae tunc Domini tempora et foedauerunt et lancinauerunt, uti tu nunc laurea et myrto et olea et inlustriore quaque fronde et, quod magis usui est, centenariis quoque rosis de horto Midae lectis et utrisque liliis et omnibus uiolis coroneris, etiam gemmis forsitan et auro? ut et illam Christi coronam aemuleris, quae postea ei obuenit? Atquin et fauos post fella gustauit, nec ante rex gloriae a caelestibus salutatus est quam rex Iudaeorum proscriptus in cruce, minoratus primo a patre modico quid citra angelos, et ita gloria et honore coronatus. Si ob haec caput ei tuum debes, tale, si forte, ei repende, quale suum pro tuo obtulit, aut nec floribus coroneris si spinis non potes, quia floribus non potes.

15. [1] Serua Deo rem suam intaminatam. Ille eam, si uolet, coronabit. Immo et uult, denique inuitat : « Qui uicerit, inquit, dabo ei coronam uitae. » Esto et tu fidelis ad mortem, decerta et tu bonum agonem, cuius coronam et apostolus repositam sibi merito confidit. Accipit et angelus uictoriae coronam, procedens in candido equo ut uinceret; at alius iridis ambitu ornatur caelesti prasio. Sedent et presbyteri coronati, eodemque auto et ipse filius hominis super nubem micat. [2] Si tales imagines in uisione, quales ueritates in repraesentatione? Illas aspice, illas adora. Quid caput strophiole aut dracontario damnas, diademati destinatum? Nam reges nos Deo et patri suo fecit Christus Iesus. Quid tibi cum flore morituro? Habes florem ex uirga Iesse, super quem tota diuini Spiritus gratia requieuit, florem incorruptum, immarcescibilem, sempiternum. [3] Quem et bonus miles eligendo in caelesti ordinatione profecit. Erubescite, commilitones eius, iam non ab ipso iudicandi, sed ab aliquo Mithrae milite. Qui cum initiatur in spelaeo, in castris uere tenebrarum, coronam interposito gladio sibi oblatam quasi mimum martyrii, dehinc capiti suo accommodatam, monetur obuia manu a capite pellere et in humerum, si forte, transferre, dicens Mithran esse coronam suam. [4] Atque exinde numquam coronatur, idque in signum habet ad probationem sui, sicubi temptatus fuerit de sacramento, statimque creditur Mithrae miles, si deiecerit coronam, si eam in deo suo esse dixerit. Agnoscamus ingenia diaboli, idcirco quaedam de diuinis affectantis ut nos de suorum fide confundat et iudicet.

De velandis Virginibus (On Veiling Virgins)

I. [1] Proprium iam negotium passus meae opinionis Latine quoque ostendam virgines nostras velari oportere, ex quo transitum aetatis suae fecerint; hoc exigere veritatem, cui nemo praescribere potest, non spatium temporum, non patrocinia personarum, non privilegium regionum; ex his enim fere consuetudo initium ab aliqua ignorantia vel simplicitate sortita in usum per successionem corroboratur et ita adversus veritatem vindicatur. [2] Sed dominus noster Christus veritatem se, non consuetudinem cognominavit. Si semper Christus et prior omnibus, aequae veritas sempiterna et antiqua res. Viderint ergo, quibus novum est, quod sibi vetus est. [3] Haeresis non tam novitas quam veritas revincit. Quodcumque adversus veritatem sapit, hoc erit haeresis, etiam vetus consuetudo. Ceterum suo vitio quis quid ignorat; quod autem ignoratur, fuit tam requirendum quam recipiendum, quod agnoscitur. [4] Regula quidem fidei una omnino est, sola immobilis et irreformabilis, credendi scilicet in uni cum deum omnipotentem, mundi conditorem, et filium eius Iesum Christum, natum ex virgine Maria, crucifixum sub Pontio Pilato, tertia die resuscitatum a mortuis, receptum in caelis, sedentem nunc ad dexteram patris, venturum iudi care vivos et mortuos per camis etiam resurrectionem. [5] Hoc lege fidei manente cetera iam disciplinae et conversationis admittunt novitatem correctionis, operante scilicet et proficiente usque in finem gratia dei. [6] Quale est enim, ut diabolo semper operante et adiciente cottidie ad iniquitatis ingenia opus dei aut cessaverit aut proficere destiterit? cum propterea paraclitum miserit dominus, ut, quoniam humana mediocritas omnia semel capere non poterat, paulatim dirigeretur et ordinaretur et ad perfectum perduceretur disciplina ab illo vicario domini, spiritu sancto. [7] Adhuc multa habeo loqui ad vos, sed nondum potestis ea baiulare; cum venerit ille spiritus veritatis, deducet vos in omnem veritatem et supervenientia renuntiabit vobis. Sed et supra de hoc eius opere pronuntiavit. [8] Quae est ergo paracliti administratio nisi haec, quod disciplina dirigitur, quod scripturae revelantur, quod intellectus reformatur, quod ad meliora proficitur? Nihil sine aetate est, omnia tempus expectant; denique Ecclesiastes Tempus, inquit, omni rei. [9] Aspice ipsam creaturam paulatim ad fructum promoveri: granum est primo et de grano frutex oritur et de frutice arbuscula enititur, deinde rami et frondes invalescunt et totum arboris nomen expanditur, inde germinis tumor et flos de germine solvitur et de flore fructus aperitur; is quoque rudis aliquamdiu et informis paulatim aetatem suam dirigens eruditur in mansuetudinem saporis. [10] Sic et iustitia — nam idem deus iustitiae et creaturae — primo fuit in rudimentis, natura deum metuens, dehinc per legem et prophetas promovit in infantiam, dehinc per evangelium efferbuit in iuventutem, nunc per paracletum componitur in maturitatem. [11] Hic erit solus a Christo magister et dicendus et verendus; non enim ab se loquitur, sed quae mandantur a Christo; hic solus antecessor, quia solus post Christum; hunc qui receperunt, veritatem consuetudini anteponunt; hunc qui audierunt usque non olim prophetantem, virgines contegunt.

II. [1] Sed nolo interim hunc morem veritatis deputare; consuetudo sit tantisper, ut consuetudini etiam consuetudinem opponam. Per Graeciam et quasdam barbarias eius plures ecclesiae virgines suas abscondunt; est et sub hoc caelo institutum istud alicubi, ne qui gentilitati Graecanicae aut barbaricae consuetudinem illam ascribat. [2] Sed eas ego ecclesias proposui, quas et ipsi apostoli vel apostolici viri condiderunt et puto, ante quosdam. Habent igitur et illae eandem consuetudinis auctoritatem; tempora et antecessores opponunt magis quam posteræ istae. Quid observabimus, quid eligimus? [3] Non possumus respuere consuetudinem, quam damnare non possumus, utpote non extraneam, quia non extraneorum, cum quibus communicamus scilicet ius pacis et nomen fraternitatis. Una nobis et illis fides, unus deus, idem Christus, eadem spes, eadem lavacri sacramenta, semel dixerim, una ecclesia sumus. Ita nostrum est, quodcumque nostrorum est, ceterum dividis corpus. [4] Tam<en> hic, sicut in omnibus varie institutis et dubiis et incertis fieri solet, adhibenda fuit examinatio, quae magis ex duabus tam diversis consuetudinibus disciplinae dei conveniret, et utique ea deligenda, quae virginis includit, soli deo notas — quibus, praeter quod a deo, non ab hominibus captanda gloria est, etiam ipsum bonum suum erubescendum est: virginem magis laudando quam vituperando confundas, quia delicti durior frons est, ab ipso et in ipso delicto impudentiam docta — ; nam illam consuetudinem, quae virgines negat, dum ostendit, nemo probasset nisi aliqui talis quales virgines ipsae. [5] Tales enim oculi volent virginem visam, quales habet virgo, quae videri volet; invicem se eadem oculorum genera desiderant; eiusdem libidinis est videri et videre. Tam sancti viri est subfundi, si virginem viderit, quam sanctae virginis, si a viro visa sit.

III. [1] Sed nec inter consuetudines dispicere voluerunt illi sanctissimi antecessores. Tamen tolerabilius apud nos ad usque proxime utrique consuetudini communicabatur; arbitrio commissa res erat, ut quaeque voluisset, aut tegi aut prostitui, sicut et nubere, quod et ipsum neque cogitur neque prohibetur. [2] Contenta erat veritas pacisci cum consuetudine, ut tacite sub consuetudinis nomine frueretur se vel ex parte. Sed quoniam coeperat agnitio proficere, ut per licentiam utriusque moris indicium melioris partis emergeret, statim ille adversarius bonorum multoque institutorum opus suum fecit. [3] Ambiunt virgines hominum adversus virgines dei, nuda plane fronte temerarie <in> audaciam excitatae, et virgines videntur, quae aliquid a viris petere possunt, nedum tale factum, ut scilicet aemulae earum, tanto magis liberae quanto Christi solius ancillae, dedantur illis! [4] ‘Scandalizamur’, inquit, ‘quia aliter aliae incedunt’, et malunt scandalizari quam provocari. Scandalum, nisi fallor, non bonae rei, sed malae exemplum est, aedificans ad delictum; bonae res neminem scandalizant nisi malam mentem. [5] Si bonum est modestia, verecundia, fastidium gloriae, soli deo captans placere, agnoscant malum suum, quae de tali bono scandalizantur. Quid enim? si incontinentes dicant se a continentibus scandalizari, et continentia revocanda est? et ne multinubi scandalizentur, monogamia recusanda est? [6] Cur non magis hae qu[a]erantur scandalo sibi esse petulantiam, impudentiam ostentaticiae virginitatis? Propter huiusmodi igitur capita nundinaticia trahantur virgines sanctae in ecclesiam, erubescences, quod cognoscantur in medio, paventes, quod detegantur accersitae quasi ad stuprum? Non minus enim et hoc pati nolunt. [7] Omnis publicatio virginis bonae stupri passio est. Et tamen vim carnis pati minus est, quia de officio naturae venit; sed cum spiritus ipse violatur in virgine sublato velamine, didicit amittere, quod tuebatur. [8] O sacrilegae manus, quae dicatum deo habitum detrahare potuerunt! Quid peius aliquis persecutor fecisset, si hoc a virgine electum agnovisset? Denudasti puellam a capite et nota iam sibi virgo non est, alia est facta. [9] Exsurge igitur, veritas, exsurge et quasi de patientia erumpe! Nullam volo consuetudinem defendas; nam iam et illa consuetudine, sub qua te fruebaris, expugnatur. Te esse demonstra, quae virgines tegis, ipsa scripturas tuas interpretare, quas consuetudo non novit; si enim nosset, numquam esset.

IV. [1] Quatenus autem et de scripturis adversus veritatem argumentari consuetudo est, statim opponitur nobis nullam mentionem virginum ab

apostolo factam, ubi de velamine praefinit, sed tantum mulieres nominatas, cum, si voluisset et virgines tegi, de virginibus quoque cum mulieribus nominatis pronuntiasset, ‘quomodo illic’, inquit, ‘ubi de nuptiis tractat, quid observandum sit etiam de virginibus declarat’; itaque non contineri eas lege velandi capitis ut non nominatas in hac lege, immo ex hoc ve<tari ve>lari, quae non iubentur, quae neo nominantur. [2] Sed et nos eandem argumentationem retorquemus. Qui enim sciebat in alias utriusque generis facere mentionem — virginis dico et mulieris, id est non virginis — ex causa distinctionis, in his, in quibus non nominat virginem, non faciens distinctionem ostendit condicionis communionem. [3] Ceterum potuit hic quoque constituere differentiam inter virginem et mulierem, sicut alibi dicit: Divisa est mulier et virgo. Igitur quas non divisit tacendo, in altera uniit. Nec tamen quia illic divisa est et mulier et virgo, hic quoque patrocina-bitur illa divisio, ut quidam volunt. [4] Quanta enim alibi dicta non valent, ubi dicta scilicet non sunt! nisi si eadem sit causa quae alibi, ut sufficiat semel dictum. Illa autem causa virginis et mulieris longe divisa est ab hac specie. Divisa est, inquit, mulier et virgo. Quare? quoniam innupta, id est virgo, cogitat ea, quae, sunt domini, ut sit sancta et corpore et spiritu, nupta autem, id est non virgo, cogitat quomodo placeat viro. [5] Haec erit interpretatio divisionis illius, nullum habens locum in isto capitulo, in quo neque de nuptiis neque de animo et cogitatu muliebri et virginis pronuntiatum, sed de capite velando. Cuius nullam volens esse disceptationem spiritus sanctus uno nomine mulieris etiam virginem intelligi voluit, quam proprie non nominando a muliere non separavit et non separando coniunxit ei, a qua non separavit. [6] Novum est nunc ergo principali vocabulo uti et cetera nihilominus in eo vocabulo intelligi, ubi nulla est necessitas singillatim distinguendae universitatis? Naturaliter compendium sermonis et gratum et necessarium est, quoniam sermo laciniosus et onerosus et vanus est. Sic et generalibus vocabulis contenti sumus comprehendentibus in se specialium intellectum. [7] Ergo iam de vocabulo ipso. Naturale vocabulum est femina, naturalis vocabuli generale mulier, generalis etiam speciale virgo vel nupta vel vidua vel quot etiam aetatis nomina accedunt. Subiectum est igitur generali speciale, quia generale prius est, ut sub<cessivum antecessivo et portionale universalis: in ipso intelligitur, cui subicitur, et in ipso significatur, quia in ipso continetur. [8] Sic nec manus nec pes nec ullum membrorum desiderat nominari corpore nominato; et si mundum dixeris, illic erit et caelum et quae in eo, sol et luna et sidera et astra, et terra et freta et omnis census elementorum. Omnia dixeris, cum id dixeris, quod ex omnibus constat. Sic et mulierem nominando quicquid est mulieris nominavit.

V. [1] Sed quoniam ita mulieris nomen usurpant, ut non putent competere illud nisi ei soli, quae virum passa sit, probari a nobis oportet proprietatem eius vocabuli ad sexum ipsum, non ad gradum sexus pertinere, quo communiter etiam virgines censeantur. [2] Cum hoc genus secundi hominis a deo factum est in adiutorium hominis, femina illa statim mulier cognominata est, adhuc felix, adhuc digna paradiso, adhuc virgo: Vocabitur, inquit, mulier. Habes itaque nomen, non dico iam virgini commune, sed proprium, quod a principio virgo sortita est. [3] Sed ingeniose quidam de futuro volunt dictum vocabitur mulier, quasi quae hoc futura esset, cum virginitatem resignasset, quoniam et adicit: Propterea relinquet homo patrem et matrem et conglutinabitur mulieri suae et erunt duo in carne una. Ostendant igitur primo, uti s<c>it subtilitas ista, si de futuro mulier cognominata est, quod interea vocabulum acceperit; non potest enim sine vocabulo praesentis qualitatis suae fuisse. [4] Ceterum quale est, ut, quae in futurum vocaretur nomine designato, in praesenti nihil cognominaretur! Omnibus animalibus Adam nomina imposuit et nemini ex futura condicione, sed ex praesenti institutione, cui conditio quaecumque serviret, hoc appellata, quod ex primordio voluit. [5] Quid ergo tunc vocabatur? Atquin quotienscumque in scriptura nominatur, mulier appellatur, antequam nupta, et numquam virgo, cum virgo; hoc nomen tum unum illi fuit, et quando nihil prophetico modo dictum est. [6] Nam cum scriptura refert fuisse nudos duos, Adam et mulierem eius, nec hoc de futuro sapit, quasi mulierem dixerit eius in praesagio uxoris, sed quoniam et innupta illius mulier ut de substantia eius: Hoc, inquit, os ex ossibus meis et caro ex carne mea vocabitur mulier. [7] Hinc ergo tacita conscientia naturae ipsa divinitas animae in usum sermonis eduxit nescientibus hominibus — sicut et alia multa, quae ex scriptura fieri et dici solere alibi poterimus ostendere — , uti mulieres nostras dicamus uxores, quamquam et improprie quaedam loquamur; nam et Graeci, qui magis vocabulo mulieris in uxore utuntur, alia habent propria vocabula uxoris; sed malo hunc usum ad scripturae testimonium deputare. [8] Ubi enim duo in unam carnem efficiuntur per matrimonii nexum, ‘caro ex carne et os ex ossibus’ vocatur secundum originem mulier eius, ex cuius substantia incipit censeri facta uxor. Ita mulier non natura nomen est uxoris, sed uxor condicione nomen est mulieris. Denique mulier et non uxor dici potest, non mulier autem uxor dici non potest, quia nec esse. [9] Constituto igitur nomine novae feminae, quod est mulier, et explicito quod prius fuit, id est nomine assignato, convertit iam ad propheticam rationem, uti diceret: Propter hanc relinquet homo patrem et matrem. Adeo separatum est nomen a prophetia quantum et ab ipsa persona, ut non utique de ipsa Eva dixerit, sed in illas feminas futuras, quas in matrice generis feminini nominarit. [10] Alioquin non Adam relicturus erat patrem et matrem, quos non habebat, propter Evam; ergo non ad Evam pertinet, quia nec ad Adam, quod prophetice dictum est; de maritorum enim condicione praedictum, qui ob mulierem parentes suos erant relicturi, quod in Evam cadere non potuit, quia nec in Adam. [11] Si ita res est, apparet non propter futurum mulierem cognominatam, ad quam futurum non pertinebat. Eo accedit, quod ipse rationem eius nominis edidit; cum enim dixisset: Vocabitur mulier: Quoniam ex viro suo sumpta est et ipso adhuc virgine. Sed dicemus et de viri nomine suo loco. [12] Nemo itaque nomen ad prophetiam interpretetur, quod ex alia significatione deductum est, praesertim cum appareat, ubi de futuro nomen acceperit, illic scilicet, ubi Eva cognominatur, personali iam vocabulo, quia naturale praecesserat. Si enim Eva mater viventium est, ecce ex futuro cognominatur, ecce uxor et non virgo praenuntiatur. Hoc erit vocabulum nupturae; ex nupta enim mater. [13] Ita hic quoque ostenditur non de futuro mulierem tunc nominatam, quae postmodum acceptura erat futurae condicionis suae nomen. Responsum satis est ad hanc partem.

VI. [1] Videamus nunc, si et apostolus formam vocabuli istius secundum Genesim observat, sexui deputans illuc, sic mulierem vocans virginem Mariam quemadmodum et Genesis Evam. Scribens enim ad Galatas: Misit, inquit, deus filium suum factum ex muliere, quam utique virginem constat fuisse, licet Hebion resistat. [2] Agnosco et angelum Gabrielem ad virginem missum; sed cum benedicit illam, inter mulieres, non inter virgines deputat: Benedicta tu inter mulieres. Sciebat et angelus mulierem etiam virginem dici. [3] Sed et ad haec duo ingeniose quidam respondisse sibi visus est, quoniam quidem desponsata est Maria, idcirco et ab angelo et ab apostolo mulierem pronuntiatam; ‘desponsata enim quodammodo nupta’. Tamen inter quodammodo et verum satis interest, dumtaxat hoc in loco; nam alibi ita sane habendum est. [4] Nunc vero non quasi iam nuptam mulierem Mariam pronuntiaverunt, sed quasi nihilominus feminam, etiamsi non sponsam, quasi hoc a primordio dictam; illud enim praeiudicet necesse est, a quo forma descendit. [5] Ceterum quod pertineat ad hoc capitulum, si hic desponsatae adaequatur, ut ideo mulier dicta sit Maria, non qua femina, sed qua maritata, iam ergo Christus non ex virgine natus est, quia ex desponsata, quae virgo esse desierit hoc nomine; quod si ex virgine natus est, licet ex desponsata, tamen integra, agnosce mulierem etiam virginem, etiam integram dici. [6] Hic certe nihil propheticè dictum videri potest, ut futuram mulierem, id est nuptam, apostolus nominarit dicendo factum ex muliere; non enim poterat posteriorem mulierem nominare, de qua Christus nasci non habebat, id est virum passam, sed illam, quae erat praesens, quae erat virgo et mulier vocabatur.

VII. [1] Post vocabuli huius proprietatem secundum primordii formam virginis et ita universo mulierum generi defensam (7.) convertamus ad ipsas iam rationes recensendas, per quas apostolus docet velari feminam oportere, an eadem etiam virginibus competa<n>t, ut ex hoc quoque vocabuli communio inter virgines et non virgines constet, dum eadem velaminis causae in utraque parte deprehenduntur. [2] Si caput mulieris vir est, utique et virginis, de qua fit mulier illa quae nupsit, nisi si virgo tertium genus est monstruosum aliquod sui capitis. Si mulieri turpe est radi sive tonderi, utique et virgini. Proinde viderit saeculum, aemulum dei, si ita virgini caesum capillum decori mentitur, quemadmodum et puero permissum. Ergo cui aequè non convenit radi sive tonderi, aequè convenit operiri. [3] Si gloria viri est mulier, quanto magis virgo, quae et sibi gloria est; si mulier ex viro et propter virum, costa illa Adae virgo primum fuit; si mulier potestatem habere super caput debet, vel eo iustius virgo, ad quam pertinet, quod in causa est. [4] Si enim propter angelos, scilicet quos legimus a deo et caelo excidisce ob concupiscentiam feminarum, quis praesumere potest quales angelos maculata iam corpora et humanae libidinis reliquias desiderasse, ut non ad virgines potius exarserint, quarum flos etiam humanam libidinem excusat? [5] Nam et scriptura sic suggerit: Et factum est, inquit, cum coepissent homines plures fieri super terram, et filiae natae sunt eis; conspicati autem, filii dei filias hominum, quod pulchrae essent, acceperunt sibi uxoris ex omnibus quas elegerunt. Hic enim nomen mulierum Graecum uxoris sapit, quia de nuptiis mentio est. [6] Cum ergo filias hominum dicit, manifeste virgines portendit, quae adhuc apud parentes deputarentur — nam nuptae maritorum nuncupantur — , cum potuerit dixisse uxores hominum; aequae non adulteros nominans angelos, sed maritos, dum innuptas sumunt filias hominum, quas natas supra dixit, sic quoque virgines significavit, supra natas, at hic angelis nuptas. Aliud eas nescio quam natas et dehinc nuptas. [7] Debet ergo adumbrari facies tam periculosa, quae usque ad caelum scandala iaculata est, ut cum deo assistens, cui rea est angelorum exterminatorum, ceteris quoque angelis erubescat et malam illam aliquando libertatem capitis sui comprimant, iam nec hominum oculis offerendam. [8] Sed etsi contaminatas iam feminas angeli illi appetissent, tanto magis propter angelos virgines velari debuissent, quanto magis propter virgines angeli deliquisse potuissent. [9] Si autem et naturae praeiudicium adicit apostolus, quod honor sit mulieris redundantia capillorum, quia coma pro operimento est, utique hoc maxime virgini insigne est, quarum et ornatus ipse proprie sic est, ut concumulata in verticem ipsam capitis arcem ambitu crinium contegat.

VIII. [1] Horum certe omnium contraria efficiunt, ne vir caput velet, scilicet quia non sit naturaliter consecutus ambitionem capillorum, quia radi sive tonderi non sit turpe illi, quia non propter illum angeli exorbitarint, quia gloria et imago dei sit, quia caput eius Christus. [2] Itaque cum de viro et muliere apostolus tractet, cur illam oporteat velari, illum vero non, apparet, cur et virginis silentium fecerit, eadem ratione scilicet virginem in mulierem intelligendam sinens, qua et puerum ut in viro deputandum non nominavit, totum ordinem utriusque sexus propriis vocabulis complexus, mulieris et viri. [3] Sic etiam Adam, adhuc integer, vir in Genesi est cognominatus: Vocabitur, inquit, mulier; quia ex viro suo sumpta est. Sic vir Adam ante nuptiarum congressum, quemadmodum et Eva mulier. [4] De utraque parte satis ad universam speciem cuiusque sexus apostolus pronuntiavit et breviter et plene tam instructa definitione: Omnis, inquit, mulier. Quid est omnis, nisi omnis generis, omnis ordinis, omnis condicionis, omnis dignitatis, omnis aetatis? siquidem omne totum est et integrum et nulla sui parte defectum. Pars autem mulieris et virgo est. [5] Aequae et de viro non velando omnis inquit. Ecce duo diversa nomina, vir et mulier, omnis uterque; duae leges obnoxiae invicem, hinc velandi, inde nudandi. [6] Igitur si eo, quod dictum sit omnis vir, commune est nomen viri etiam nondum viri, masculi investis, commune autem cum sit nomen secundum naturam, communis est et lex non velandi eius, qui inter viros virgo est, secundum disciplinam, cur non praeiudicatum sit proinde et mulierem virginem omnem muliere nominata contineri consortio nominis, ut contineatur et communione legis? [7] Si virgo mulier non est, nec vir investis est; si non operitur virgo, quia mulier non sit, operiatur investis, quia vir non sit; eiusdem virginitatis aequa sit venia; sicut virgines non coguntur velari, ita pueri non iubeantur revelari. Cur ex parte definitionem apostoli agnoscimus absolutam circa omnem virum nec detractamus, quare non et puerum nominavit, ex parte autem praevaricamur, aequae absoluta ea circa omnem mulierem? [8] Si quis, inquit, contentiosus est, nos talem consuetudinem non habemus neque ecclesia dei: ostendit contentionem aliquam de ista specie fuisse, ad quam extinguendam toto compendio usus est, neque virginem nominans, ut ostenderet dubitandum de velanda non esse, et omnem nominans mulierem, cum nominasset virginem. Sic et ipsi Corinthii intellexerunt; hodie denique virgines suas Corinthii velant: quid docuerint apostoli, qui didicerunt approbant.

IX. [1] Videamus nunc, an, sicut naturae et causae argumenta virgini quoque competere monstravimus, ita etiam disciplinae ecclesiasticae praescripta de muliere in virginem spectent. [2] Non permittitur mulieri in ecclesia loqui, sed nec docere nec tinguere nec offerre nec ullius virilis muneris, nedum sacerdotalis officii sortem sibi vindicarent. Quaeramus, an aliquid horum virgini liceat. [3] Si virgini <non> licet, sed in omnibus eadem condicione subicitur et necessitas humilitatis cum muliere censetur, unde illi unum hoc licebit, quod omni feminae non licet? Quid praerogativae meretur adversus condicionem suam? [4] Si qua virgo est et carnem suam sanctificare proposuit, idcirco velaminis venia fit illi, ut in ecclesiam notabilis et insignis introeat, ut honorem sanctitatis in libertate capitis ostendat? Potuit dignius honorari aliqua praerogativa virilis aut gradus aut officii. [5] Plane scio alicubi virginem in viduatu ab annis nondum viginti collocatam. Cui si quid refrigerii debuerat episcopus, aliter utique salvo respectu disciplinae praestare potuisset, ne tale nunc miraculum, ne dixerim monstrum, in ecclesia denotaretur, virgo vidua, hoc quidem portentuosior, quod nec qua vidua caput texit, utrumque se negans, et virginem, quae vidua deputetur, et viduam, quae virgo dicatur. [6] Sed ea auctoritate illic sedet intacta qua et virgo; ad quam sedem praeter annos sexaginta non tantum univirae, id est nuptae, aliquando eliguntur, sed et matres et quidem educatrices filiorum, scilicet ut experimentis omnium affectuum structae et facile norint ceteras et consilio et solacio iuvare et ut nihilominus ea decucurrerint, per quae femina probari potest. Adeo nihil virgini ad honorem de loco permissum est, X. [1] sic nec de aliquibus insignibus.

Ceterum satis inhumanum, si feminae quidem per omnia viris subditae honorigeram notam virginitatis suae praeferant, qua suspiciantur et circumspiciantur et magnificentur a fratribus, viri autem tot virgines, tot spadones voluntarii caeco bono suo incedant, nihil gestantes, quod et ipsos faceret illustres. [2] Debebunt etiam et ipsi aliqua sibi insignia defendere, aut pennas Garamantum aut stropulos barbarorum aut cicadas Atheniensium aut cirros Germanorum aut stigmata Britonum; aut ex diverso fiat: capite velati in ecclesia lateant. [3] Certi sumus spiritum sanctum magis masculis tale aliquid subscribere potuisse, si feminis subscripsisset, cum praeter sexus auctoritatem etiam ipsius continentiae nomine masculos potius honorari oportuisset, quorum quanto sexus avidior et calidior in feminas, tanto continentia maioris ardoris laboratior ideoque dignior omni ostentatione, si ostentatio virginitatis est dignitas. [4] Non enim et continentia virginitati antistat sive viduorum sive qui ex consensu contumeliam communem iam recusaverunt? Nam virginitas gratia constat, at continentia vero virtute; non concupiscendi, cui concupiscendo inoleveris, grande certamen est; cuius autem concupiscendi ignoraveris fructum, facile non concupisces, adversarium non habens, concupiscentiam fructus. [5] Quomodo ergo non magis viris aliquid tale deus in honorem subscripsisset vel quia familiariori scilicet imagini suae vel quia plus laboranti? Si autem nihil masculo, multo magis feminae.

XI. [1] Sed quod supra intermisimus ex parte subsecutae disputationis, ne cohaerentiam eius dispergeremus, nunc responso expungemus. Ubi enim gradum fiximus de apostoli absoluta definitione, omnem mulierem etiam omnis aetatis intelligendam, responderi ex diverso habebat, ergo a nativitate et a primo nomine aetatis virginem operiri oportere. [2] Non ita est autem, sed ex quo intelligere se coeperit et sensum naturae suae intrare et de virginis exire et pati novum illud, quod alterius aetatis est. [3] Nam et principis generis Adam et Eva quamdiu intellectu carebant, nudi agebant; at ubi de arbore agnitionis gustaverunt, nihil primum senserunt quam erubescendum; ita sui quique sexus intellectum tegmine notaverunt. [4] Sed etsi propter angelos velanda est, sine dubio ab ea aetate lex velaminis operabitur, a qua potuerunt filiae hominum concupiscentiam sui adducere et nuptias pati; ex illo enim virgo desinit, ex quo potest non esse. [5] Et ideo penes Israellem illicitum est ad virum tradere nisi post contestatam sanguine maturitatem; ita ante hunc indicem acerba res est. Igitur si tamdiu virgo, quamdiu acerba est, desinit virginem, cum matura cognoscitur, et ut non virgo iam legi applicatur sicut et nuptiis. [6] Et desponsatae quidem habent exemplum Rebeckae, quae, cum ad sponsum ignotum adhuc ignota perduceretur, simul ipsum cognovit esse, quem de longinquo prospexerat, non sustinuit dexterarum collutationem nec osculi congressionem nec salutationis communicationem, sed confessa quod senserat, id est spiritu nuptam, negavit virginem velata ibidem. O mulierem iam de Christi disciplina! ostendit enim etiam nuptias de aspectu et animo fieri quemadmodum stuprum. [7] Nisi quod etiam Rebeckam quidam adhuc velant, de ceteris vero, id est quae desponsatae non sunt, viderit aut parentum procrastinatio ex angustiis vel scrupulositate descendens, viderit et ipsum continentiae votum: nihil pertinet ad aetatem sua spatia currentem suaque debita maturitati luentem; alia in occulto mater, natura, et alius in latenti pater, tempus, filiam suam legibus suis maritarunt. [8] Aspice nuptam iam in illam tuam virginem, et animam expectatione[m] et carnem transfiguratione[m], cui tu secundum paras maritum: iam et vox obsoleta est et membra completa sunt et pudor ubique vestitur et menses tributa defendunt, ac tu mulierem negas, quam muliebria pati dicis? [9] Si congressio viri mulierem facit, non tegantur nisi post ipsam nuptiarum passionem — atquin etiam apud ethnicos velatae ad virum ducuntur — ; si autem ad desponsationem velantur, quia et corpore et spiritu masculo mixtae sunt per osculum et dexterarum, per quae primum resignerunt pudorem spiritu, per commune conscientiae pignus, quo totam condixerunt confusionem, quanto magis tempus illas velabit, sine quo sponsari non possunt et quo urgente sine sponsalibus virgines desinunt esse! [10] Tempus etiam ethnici observant, ut ex lege naturae iura sua aetatibus reddant; nam feminas quidem a duodecim annis, masculum vero a duobus amplius ad negotia mittunt, pubertatem in annis, non sponsalibus aut nuptiis decernentes; mater familiae vocatur, licet virgo, et pater familiae, licet investis. A nobis nec naturalia observantur, quasi alius sit deus naturae quam noster.

XII. [1] Agnosce et mulierem, agnosce et nuptam de testimoniis et corporis et spiritus, quae patitur et in conscientia et in carne; haec sunt tabellae priores

naturalium sponsalium et nuptiarum. Impone velamen extrinsecus habenti tegumen intrinsecus; tegantur etiam superiora, cuius inferiora nuda non sunt. [2] Vis scire, quae sit aetatis auctoritas? Propone utramque, immature compressam in habitu mulieris et quae maturitate progressa in virginitate duret cum suo habitu: facilius illa mulier negabitur, quam ista virgo credetur; tanta est adeo fides aetatis, ut nec habitu obstrui possit. [3] Quid, quod etiam haec nostrae etiam habitu mutationem aetatis confitentur, simulque se mulieres intellexerunt, de virginibus educantur? a capite quidem ipso deponentes quod fuerunt vertunt capillum et acu lasciviores comas sibi inserunt, crinibus a fronte divisis apertam professae mulieritatem; [4] iam et consilium formae a speculo petunt et faciem morosiores lavacro macerant, forsitan et aliquo eam medicamine interpolent, pallium extrinsecus iactant, calceum stipant multiformem, plus instrumenti ad balneas deferunt. [5] Quid singula persequar? Solae autem manifestae paraturae totam circumferunt mulieritatem, sed virginari volunt sola capitis nuditate, uno habitu negantes, quod toto suggestu profitentur.

XIII. [1] Si propter homines habitu abutuntur, impleant illum etiam in hoc, ut et apud ethnicos caput <re>velent; certe in ecclesia virginitatem suam abscondant, quam extra ecclesiam celant. Timent extraneos? revereantur et fratres aut constanter audeant et in vicis virgines videri, sicut audent in ecclesiis; laudabo vigorem, si aliquid et apud ethnicos virginitatis nundinarint. [2] Eadem natura foris quae et intus, eadem institutio apud homines et apud dominum eadem libertate constat. Quo ergo foris quidem bonum suum abstrudunt, in ecclesia vero provulgant? Exposco rationem. Utrumne ut fratribus suis placeant an ut ipsi deo? [3] Si ut ipsi deo, tam idoneus est ad conspicienda, quaeque in occulto fiunt, quam iustus ad remuneranda, quae soli sibi fiunt; denique praecipit, nihil debucinemus eorum, quae apud illum mercedem merebuntur, nec ea ab hominibus compensemus. [4] Quodsi unius victoriati vel quamcumque elemosinae operationem sinistra conscia facere prohibemur, quantum tenebrarum circumfundere debemus, cum tantam oblationem deo offerimus ipsius corporis et ipsius spiritus nostri, cum illi ipsam naturam consecramus? [5] Ergo quod non potest videri propter deum fieri, quia sic fieri deus non vult, sequitur, ut hominum gratia fiat, utique primo illicitum ut gloriae libidinosum; gloria enim illicitum est eis, quorum probatio in omni humiliatione constat. [6] Et si a deo confertur continentiae virtus, quid gloriaris, quasi non acceperis? si vero non acceperis, quid habes, quod datum tibi non est? Hoc ipso autem constat a deo datum tibi non esse, quod illum non soli deo praestas. Videamus ergo, quod humanum est, an firmum sit et verum.

XIV. [1] Referunt aliquando dictum a quodam, cum primum quaestio ista temptata est: 'Et quomodo ceteras sollicitabimus ad huiusmodi opus?' Scilicet felices nos facient, si plures erunt, et non dei gratia vel merita cuiusque. Virgines ecclesiam an ecclesia virgines ornant deo sive commendant? [2] Confessus est igitur gloriam esse in causa; porro ubi gloria, illic sollicitatio, ubi sollicitatio, illic coactio, ubi coactio, illic necessitas, ubi necessitas, illic infirmitas. Merito itaque dum caput non tegunt, ut sollicitentur gloriae causa, ventres tegere coguntur infirmitatis ruina; aemulatio enim illarum, non religio producit. [3] Aliquando et ipse venter deus earum, quia facile virgines fraternitas suscipit. Nec tantum autem ruunt, sed et funem longum delictorum sibi attrahunt; prolatae enim in medium et publicato bono suo elatae et fratribus omni honore et caritatis operatione cumulatae dum <clarent>, non latent, ubi quid admissum est, tantum dedecoris cogitantes, quantum honoris habuerunt. [4] Si intectum caput virginitati adscribitur, si qua virgo exciderit de gratia virginitatis, ne prodatur, intecto permanet capite esse et tunc iam alieno ambulat habitu [id est quem sibi vindicat virginitas; permanet nihilo minus in habitu vel tunc saltem alieno, ne scilicet mutatione prodatur].

multis, dum digitis demonstrantium titillatur, dum nimium amatur, dum inter amplexus et oscula assidua concalescit. Sic frons duratur, sic pudor feritur, sic solvitur, sic discitur aliter iam placere desiderare.

XV. [1] Sed enim vera et tota et pura virginitas nihil magis timet quam semetipsam. Etiam feminarum oculos pati non vult: alios ipsa oculos habet. Confugit ad velamen capitis quasi ad galeam, quasi ad clipeum, qui bonum suum protegat adversus ictus temptationum, adversus iacula scandalorum, adversus suspiciones et susurros et aemulationem, ipsum quoque livorem. [2] Nam est aliquid, etiam apud ethnicos metuendum, quod fascinum vocant, infeliciorem laudis et gloriae enormioris eventum. Hoc nos interdum diabolo interpretamur, ipsius enim est boni odium, interdum deo deputamus, illius est enim superbiae iudicium, extollentis humiles et deprimentis elatos. [3] Timebit itaque virgo sanctior vel in nomine fascini hinc adversarium, inde deum, illius lividum ingenium, huius censorium lumen, et gaudebit sibi soli et deo nota. Sed et si cui innotuerit, sapit, si temptationibus gradum ob(s)truxerit. [4] Quis enim audebit oculis suis premere faciem clausam, faciem non sentientem, faciem, ut dixerim, tristem? Quicumque malus cogitatus ipsa severitate frangetur. Iam se etiam mulierem negat, quae virginem celat.

XVI. [1] In his consistit defensio nostrae opinionis secundum scripturam, secundum naturam, secundum disciplinam. Scriptura legem condit, natura contestatur, disciplina exigit. Cui ex his consuetudo opinionis prodest vel qui diversae sententiae color? [2] Dei est scriptura, dei est natura, dei est disciplina; quicquid contrarium est istis, dei non est. Si scriptura incerta est, natura manifesta est et de cuius testimonio scriptura incerta non potest esse; si de natura dubitatur, disciplina quid magis deo ratum sit ostendit. [3] Nihil est illi carius humilitate, nihil acceptius modestia, nihil operosius gloria et studio hominibus placendi. Illud itaque sit tibi et scriptura et natura et disciplina, quod ratum deo inveneris, sicut iuberis omnia examinare et meliora quaeque sectari. [4] Superest etiam, ut ad ipsas convertamur, quo libentius ista suscipiant. Oro te, sive mater sive soror sive filia virgo, secundum annorum nomina dixerim, vela caput, si mater, propter filios, si soror, propter fratres, si filia, propter patres: omnes in te aetates periclitantur. [5] Indue armaturam pudoris, circumduc vallum verecundiae, murum sexui tuo strue, qui nec tuos emittat oculos nec admittat alienos. Adimple habitum mulieris, ut statum virginis serves. Mentire aliquid ex his, quae intus sunt, ut soli deo exhibeas

XVII. [1] Sed et vos admonemus, alterius pudicitiae mulieres, quae nuptias incidistis, ne sic a disciplina velaminis exsolescatis, ne quidem in momento horae, ut, quia reicere illam non potestis, alio modo destruat is neque tectae neque nudae incedentes. [2] Mitris enim et lanis quaedam non velant caput, sed conligant, a fronte quidem protectae, qua proprie autem caput est, renudae; aliae modice linteolis, credo, ne caput premant, nec ad aures usque demissis cerebro tenus operiuntur, Misereo<r>, si tam infirmo auditu sunt, ut per tegmen audire non possint. [3] Sciant, quia totum caput mulier est; limites et fines eius eo usque porriguntur, unde incipit vestis; quantum resoluti crines occupare possunt, tanta est velaminis regio, ut cervices quoque ambientur; ipsae enim sunt, quas subiectas esse oportet, propter quas potestas supra caput haberi debet; velamen iugum illarum est. [4] Iudicabunt vos Arabiae feminae ethnicae, quae non caput, sed faciem quoque ita totam tegunt, ut uno oculo liberato contentae sint dimidiam frui lucem quam totam faciem prostituere: mavult femina videre quam videri. [5] Quas propterea infelicissimas ait Romana quaedam regina, quod adamare magis quam adamari possint, cum sint vel ex alterius <in>felicitatis et quidem frequentioris immunitate felices, quia facilius adamari quam adamare feminae possint. [6] Et ethnicae quidem disciplinae meracior et, ut ita dixerim, barbarior modestia; nobis dominus etiam revelationibus velaminis spatia metatus est. Nam cuidam sorori nostrae angelus in somnis cervices, quasi applauderet, verberans: ‘Elegantes’, inquit, ‘cervices et merito nudae! Bonum est, usque ad lumbos a capite <re>veleris, ne et tibi ista cervicum libertas non prosit.’ Et utique quod uni dixeris, omnibus dixeris. [7] Quantam autem castigationem merebuntur etiam illae, quae inter psalmos vel in quacumque dei mentione relectae perseverant meritoque etiam in oratione ipsa facillime fimbriam aut villum aut quodlibet filum cerebro superponunt et tectas se opinantur! Tanti caput suum me[n]tiuntur. [8] Aliae, quibus plane maior est palma omni fimbria et filo, non minus capite suo abutuntur, ut bestia quaedam magis quam avis, licet pennata, brevi capite, protracta cervice, cetera integra[n]dia; hanc aiunt, cum delitescendum habet, caput solum plane totum in condensum abstrudere, reliquam se in aperto relinquere; ita dum in capite segura est, nuda, qua maior est, capitur tota cum capite. Tales enim erunt et istae minus quam utile est tectae. [9] Oportet ergo tempore omni et omni loco memores legis incedere, paratas et instructas ad omnem dei mentionem, qui si fuerit in pectore, cognoscetur et in capite feminarum. Haec cum bona pace legentibus, utilitatem consuetudini praeponentibus pax et gratia a domino nostro Iesu redundet cum Septimio Tertulliano, cuius hoc opusculum est.

De Exhortatione Castitatis (On Exhortation to Chastity)

I. [1] Non dubito, frater, te post uxorem in pace praemissam ad compositionem animi conuersum de exitu singularitatis cogitare et utique consilii indigere. Quamquam in huiusmodi cum fide sua conloqui debet unusquisque eiusque uires consulere, tamen quoniam in ista specie carnis necessitas cogitatum mouet, quae fere apud eandem conscientiam fidei resistit, opus est fidei extrinsecus consilio tamquam aduocato aduersus carnis necessitatem. [2] Quae quidem necessitas facillime circumscribi potest, si uoluntas potius dei quam indulgentia consideretur. Nemo indulgentia utendo promeretur, sed uoluntati obsequendo. [3] Voluntas dei est sanctificatio nostra. Vult enim imaginem suam nos etiam similitudinem fieri, ut simus sancti, sicuti et ipse sanctus est. Id bonum, sanctificationem dico, in species distribuit complures, ut in aliqua earum deprehendamus. [4] Prima species est uirginitas a natiuitate: secunda, uirginitas a secunda natiuitate, id est a lauacro, quae aut in matrimonio purificat ex compacto, aut in uiduitate perseuerat ex arbitrio: tertius gradus superest monogamia, cum post matrimonium unum interceptum exinde sexui renuntiatur. [5] Prima uirginitas felicitatis est, non nosse in totum a quo postea optabis liberari: secunda uirtutis est, contemnere cuius uim optime noris: reliqua species, hactenus nubendi post matrimonium morte disiunctum, praeter uirtutis etiam modestiae laus est. Modestia est enim ablatum non desiderare, et ablatum a domino deo, sine cuius uoluntate nec folium de arbore delabitur nec passer assis unius ad terram cadit.

II. [1] Quam denique modesta illa uox est: Dominus dedit, dominus abstulit, ut domino uisum est, ita factum est. Et ideo si nuptias sublatas restauremus, sine dubio contra uoluntatem dei nitimur, uolentes habere rursus quod habere nos noluit. Si enim uoluisset, non abstulisset. Nisi si et hoc uoluntatem dei interpretamur, quasi et rursus nos uoluerit habere quod iam noluit. [2] Non est bonae et solidae fidei sic omnia ad uoluntatem dei referre, et ita adulari < sibi > unumquemque dicendo nihil fieri sine nutu eius, ut non intellegamus esse aliquid in nobis ipsis. Ceterum excusabitur omne delictum, si contenderimus nihil fieri a nobis sine dei uoluntate, et ibi definitio ista in destructionem totius disciplinae, etiam ipsius dei, si aut quae non uult de sua uoluntate producat, aut nihil est quod deus non uult. [3] Sed quomodo uetat quaedam quibus etiam supplicium aeternum comminatur (utique enim quae uetat non uult, a quibus et offenditur), sic et e contrario quae uult et praecipit et accepto facit et aeternitatis mercede dispungit. Igitur cum utrumque ex praeceptis eius didicerimus, quid nolit et quid uelit, tamen nobis est uoluntas et arbitrium eligendi alterum, sicut scriptum est: Ecce posui ante te bonum et malum: gustasti enim de agnitionis arbore. [4] Et ideo non debemus quod nostro expositum est arbitrio in domini referre uoluntatem, quod non ipse uult aut non uult quod bonum est qui malum non uult. Ita nostra est uoluntas, cum malum uolumus aduersus dei uoluntatem, qui bonum uult. [5] Porro si quaeris, unde uenit ista uoluntas, qua quid uolumus aduersus dei uoluntatem, dicam: ex nobis ipsis. Nec temere. Semini enim tuo respondeas necesse est, siquidem ille princeps et generis et delicti Adam uoluit quod deliquit. Neque enim diabolus uoluntatem ei imposuit delinquendi, sed materiam uoluntatis subministravit. Ceterum uoluntas ei de inobaudientia uenerat. [6] Proinde et tu si non oboedieris deo, qui te proposito praecepto liberae potestatis instituit, per uoluntatis libertatem uolens deuerge in id quod deus non uult, et ita te putas a diabolo subuersum, qui etsi quid uult te uelle quod deus non uult, non tamen facit ut et uelis, quia nec tunc inuitos protoplastos ad uoluntatem delicti subegit, immo neque inuitos neque ignorantes quid deus nolle. [7] Vtique enim nolebat fieri, cui admisso mortem destinabat. Ita diaboli opus unum est, temptare, quod in te est, an uelis. At ubi uoluisti, sequitur ut te sibi subigat, non operatus in te uoluntatem, sed nactus occasionem uoluntatis. [8] Igitur cum solum sit in nobis uelle, et in hoc probetur nostra erga deum mens, an ea uelimus quae cum uoluntate ipsius faciant, alte et impresse recogitandam esse dico dei uoluntatem, quid etiam in occulto uelit.

III. [1] Quae enim in manifesto, scimus omnes, eaque ipsa qualiter in manifesto sint perspicendum est. Nam etsi quaedam uidentur uoluntatem dei sapere, dum ab eo permittuntur, non statim omne quod permittitur ex mera et tota uoluntate procedit eius qui permittit. [2] Ex indulgentia est quodcumque permittitur. Quae etsi sine uoluntate non est, quia tamen aliquam habet causam in illo cui indulgetur, quasi de inuita uenit uoluntate, passa causam sui quae cogit uoluntatem. Vide qualis sit uoluntas cuius alter est causa. [3] Secunda item species consideranda est, purae uoluntatis. Vult nos deus agere quaedam placita sibi, in quibus non indulgentia patrocinator, sed disciplina dominatur. Si tamen alia istis praeposuit, utique quae magis uult, dubiumne est ea nobis sectanda esse quae mauult, cum quae minus uult, quia alia magis uult, perinde habenda sunt atque si nolit? [4] Nam ostendens quid magis uelit, minorem uoluntatem maiore deleuit, quantoque notitiae tuae utramque proposuit, tanto definiit id te sectari debere quod declarauit se magis uelle. Ergo si ideo declarauit, ut id secteris quod magis uult, sine dubio, nisi ita facis, contra uoluntatem eius sapis, sapiendo contra potioem eius uoluntatem, magisque offendis quam promereris, quod uult quidem faciendo et quod mauult respuendo. [5] Ex parte delinquis; ex parte, si non delinquis, non tamen promereris. Non porro et promereri nolle delinquere est? Secundum igitur matrimonium si ex illa dei uoluntate quae indulgentia uocatur, negabimus meram uoluntatem cui indulgentia est causa, si ex ea cui potior alia praeponitur continentiae magis appetendae, didicerimus non potioem a potiore rescindi. [6] Haec praestruxerim, ut iam apostoli uoces decurram. In primis autem non uidebor inreligiosus, si quod ipse profitetur animaduertam, omnem illum indulgentiam nuptiarum de suo, id est de humano sensu, non de diuino praescripto induxisse. Nam et cum de uiduis et innuptis definiit uti nubant, si continere non possunt, quia melius sit nubere quam uri, conuersus ad alteram speciem: Nuptis autem denuntio, inquit, non quidem ego, sed dominus. Ita ostendit ex translatione personae suae in dominum id quod supra dixerat non ex domini persona, sed ex sua pronuntiasse: Melius est nubere quam uri. [7] Quae uox licet ad eos pertineat qui innupti uel uidui a fide deprehenduntur, quia tamen omnes eam ad nubendi licentiam amplectuntur, uelim retractare quale bonum ostendat quod melius est poena, quod non potest uideri bonum nisi pessimo comparatum, ut ideo bonum sit nubere, quia deterius sit ardere. [8] Bonum ita est, si perseueret nomen obtinens sine comparatione, non dico mali, sed etiam boni alterius, ut, etsi bono alii comparatur et alio adumbratur, nihilominus remaneat in boni nomine. Ceterum si per mali collationem cogitur bonum dici, non tam bonum est quam genus mali inferioris, quod a superiore malo obscuratum ad nomen boni impellitur. [9] Aufer denique condicionem comparationis, ut non dicas: Melius est nubere quam uri, et quaero an dicere audeas: Melius est nubere, non adiciens quid sit id quo melius est. Ergo quod non melius, utique nec bonum, quia abstulisti et remouisti condicionem comparationis, quae dum melius illud facit, ita bonum haberi cogit. [10] Melius est nubere quam uri sic accipiendum est, quomodo melius est uno oculo quam duobus carere: si tamen a comparatione discedas, non erit melius unum oculum habere quia nec bonum.

IV. [1] Ceterum de secundo matrimonio scimus plane apostolum pronuntiasse: Solutus es ab uxore, ne quaesieris uxorem, sed et si duxeris, non delinques. Perinde tamen et huius sermonis ordinem de consilio suo, non de diuino praecepto introducit. Multum autem interest inter dei praeceptum et consilium hominis. Praeceptum domini, inquit, non habeo, sed consilium do, quasi misericordiam consecutus a domino fidelis esse. [2] Ceterum neque in euangelio neque in ipsius Pauli epistolis ex praecepto dei inuenias permissam matrimonii iterationem. Vnde unum habendum confirmatur, quia quod a domino permissum non inuenitur, id agnoscitur interdictum. Adde quod et haec ipsa humani consilii interiectio, quasi iam recogitationem excessus sui passa, statim se refrenat et reuocat, cum subiungit: Verumtamen huiusmodi pressuram carnis habebunt, cum parcere se eis dicit, cum Tempus in collecto esse adicit, quo oporteat etiam habentes matrimonia pro non habentibus agere, cum sollicitudinem nuptorum et innuptorum committit. [3] Per haec enim docens cur non expediat nubere, dissuadet ab eo quod supra indulserat. Et hoc de primo matrimonio: quanto magis de secundo? Cum uero nos ad exemplum suum hortatur, utique ostendens quid nos uelit esse, id est continentem, pariter declarat quid nos esse nolit, id est incontinentem. Ita et ipse cum aliud uult, id quod non uult nec sponte nec ueritate permittit. Si enim uellet, non permisisset, immo imperasset. [4] ‘Sed ecce rursus mulierem marito defuncto dicit nubere posse, si cui uelit, tantum in domino’. At enim felicius erit, inquit, si sic permanserit, secundum meum consilium. Puto autem, et ego dei spiritum habeo. Videmus duo consilia, quo supra nubendi ueniam facit, et quo postmodum continentiam nubendi docet. [5] Cui ergo, inquis, assentabimur? Inspice et lege. Cum ueniam facit, hominis prudentis consilium allegat, cum continentiam indicit, spiritus sancti consilium affirmat. Sequere admonitionem cui diuinitas patrocinator. Spiritum quidem dei etiam fideles habent, sed non omnes fideles apostoli. Cum ergo qui se fidelem dixerat adiecit postea spiritum dei se habere, quod nemo dubitaret etiam de fideli, idcirco id dixit, ut sibi apostoli fastigium redderet. [6] Proprie enim apostoli spiritum sanctum habent, qui plene habent in operibus prophetiae et efficacia uirtutum documentisque linguarum, non ex parte, quod ceteri. Ita spiritus sancti auctoritatem ad eam speciem adire fecit, cui magis nos obsequi uoluit, et factum est iam non consilium diuini spiritus, sed pro eius maiestate praeceptum.

V. [1] Ad legem semel nubendi dirigendam ipsa origo humani generis patrocinator, contestans quid deus in primordio constituerit in formam posteritatis recensendum. Nam cum hominem figulasset eique parem necessariam prospexisset, unam de costis eius mutuatus unam illi feminam finxit, cum utique nec artifex nec materia defecisset. Plures costae in Adam et infatigabiles manus in deo, sed non plures uxores apud deum. [2] Et ideo homo dei Adam et mulier dei Eua unis inter se nuptiis functi formam hominibus dei de originis auctoritate et prima dei uoluntate sanxerunt. Denique, erunt, inquit, duo in carne una, non tres, neque quattuor. Alioquin iam non una caro nec duo in unam carnem. Tunc erunt, si coniunctio et concretio in unitatem semel fiat. Si uero rursus aut saepius, iam una esse desiit, et erunt iam non duo in unam carnem, sed una plane caro in plures. [3] At cum apostolus in ecclesiam et Christum interpretatur 'erunt duo in unam carnem', secundum spirituales nuptias ecclesiae et Christi (unus enim Christus et una eius ecclesia), agnoscere debemus duplicatam et exaggeratam esse nobis unius matrimonii legem tam secundum generis fundamentum quam secundum Christi sacramentum. [4] De uno matrimonio censemur utrobique, et carnaliter in Adam et spiritaliter in Christo. Duarum natiuitatum unum est monogamiae praescriptum. In utraque degenerat qui de monogamia exorbitat. Numerus matrimonii a maledicto uiro coepit. Primus Lamech duabus maritatus tres in unam caraem effecit.

VI. [1] 'Sed et benedicti', inquis, patriarchae non modo pluribus uxoribus, uerum etiam concubinis coniugia miscuerunt'. Ergo propterea nobis quoque licebit innumerum nubere? Sane licebit, si qui adhuc typi alicuius futuri sacramenti supersunt, quod nuptiae tuae figurent, uel si etiam nunc locus est uocis illius: Crescite et multiplicamini, id est, si nondum alia uox superuenit, tempus iam in collecto esse, restare, ut et qui uxores habeant tamquam non habentes agant. [2] Vtique enim continentiam indicens et compescens concubitum, seminarium generis, abolefecit 'crescite' illud 'et multiplicamini'. Vt opinor autem, unius et eiusdem dei utraque pronuntiatio et dispositio est, qui tum quidem in primordio sementem generis emisit indultis coniugiorum habenis, donec mundus repleretur, donec nouae disciplinae materia proficeret. Nunc uero sub extremitatibus temporum compressit quod emiserat et reuocauit quod indulserat, non sine ratione prorogationis in primordio et repastinationis in ultimo. Semper initia laxantur, fines contrahuntur. [3] Propterea siluam quis instituit et crescere sinit, ut tempore suo caedat. Silua erat uetus dispositio, quae ab euangelio nouo deputatur, in quo et securis ad radicem arboris posita. Sic et oculum pro oculo et dentem pro dente iam senuit ex quo iuuenit ‘malum pro malo nemo reddat’. Puto autem etiam humanas constitutiones atque decreta posteriora pristinis praeualere.

VII. [1] Cur autem de pristinis exemplis non ea potius agnoscamus quae cum posterioribus communicant de disciplina et formam uetustatis ad nouitatem transmittunt? Ecce enim in uetere lege animaduerto castratam licentiam saepius nubendi. Cautum in Leuitico: ‘Sacerdotes mei non plus nubent’. Possum dicere etiam illud plus esse quod semel non est. Quod non unum est, numerus est. Denique post unum incipit numerus. Vnum autem est omne quod semel est. [2] Sed Christo seruabatur, sicut in ceteris, ita in isto quoque legis plenitudo. Inde igitur apud nos plenius atque instructius praescribitur unius matrimonii esse oportere qui alleguntur in ordinem sacerdotalem. Vsque adeo quosdam memini digamos loco deiectos. Sed dices: ergo ceteris licet, cum quibus non liceat excipit. Vani erimus, si putauerimus quod sacerdotibus non liceat laicis licere. [3] Nonne et laici sacerdotes sumus? Scriptum est: Regnum quoque nos et sacerdotes deo et patri suo fecit. Differentiam inter ordinem et plebem constituit ecclesiae auctoritas et honor per ordinis consessum sanctificatus. Adeo ubi ecclesiastici ordinis non est consessus, et offers et tinguis et sacerdos es tibi solus. Sed ubi tres, ecclesia est, licet laici. [4] Vnusquisque enim fide sua uiuit, nec est personarum exceptio apud deum, quoniam non auditores legis iustificantur a domino, sed factores, secundum quod et apostolus dicit. Igitur si habes ius sacerdotis in temetipso ubi necesse est, habeas oportet etiam disciplinam sacerdotis, ubi necesse sit habere ius sacerdotis. Digamus tinguis? digamus offers? [5] Quanto magis laico digamo capitale est agere pro sacerdote, cum ipsi sacerdoti digamo facto auferatur agere sacerdotem! ‘Sed necessitati’, inquis, ‘indulgetur’. Nulla necessitas excusatur quae potest non esse. Noli denique digamus deprehendi, et non committis in necessitatem administrandi quod non licet digamo. [6] Omnes nos deus ita uult dispositos esse, ut ubique sacramentis eius obeundis apti simus. Vnus deus, una fides, una et disciplina. Vsque adeo nisi et laici ea obseruent per quae presbyteri alleguntur, quomodo erunt presbyteri qui de laicis alleguntur? Ergo pugnare debemus ante laicum iussum a secundo matrimonio abstinere, dum presbyter esse non alius potest quam laicus semel fuerit maritus.

VIII. [1] Liceat nunc denuo nubere, si omne quod licet bonum est. Idem apostolus exclamat: Omnia licent, sed non omnia prosunt. Quod non prodest, oro te, bonum potest dici? Si licita sunt et quae non prosunt, ergo et quae non bona sunt licita sunt. Quid autem magis uelle debebis, quod ideo bonum est quia licet, an quod ideo quia prodest? Multum existimo esse inter licentiam et salutem. De bono non dicitur ‘licet’, quia bonum permitti non exspectat, sed assumi. [2] Permittitur autem quod an bonum sit in dubio est, quod potest etiam non permitti, si non habeat aliquam sui causam, primam, quia propter incontinentiae periculum permittitur nubere, secundo, quia nisi licentia alicuius non bonae rei subiaceret, non esset in quo probaretur qui diuinae uoluntati et qui potestati suae obsequeretur, quis nostrum utilitatis praesentiam sectetur et quis occasionem licentiae amplexetur. [3] Licentia plerumque temptatio est disciplinae, quoniam disciplina per temptationem probatur, temptatio per licentiam operatur. Ita fit, ut omnia liceant, sed non omnia expediant, dum temptatur cui permittitur, et iudicatur dum in permissione temptatur. Licebat et apostolis nubere et uxores circumducere. Licebat et de euangelio ali. Sed qui iure hoc usus non est in occasionem, ad exemplum nos suum prouocat, docens in eo esse probationem in quo licentia experimentum abstinentiae praestruxit.

IX. [1] Si penitus sensus eius interpretemur, non aliud dicendum erit secundum matrimonium quam species stupri. Cum enim dicat maritos hoc in sollicitudine habere, quemadmodum sibi placeant, non utique de moribus (nam bonam sollicitudinem non suggillaret), sed de cultu et ornatu et omni studio formae ad inlecebras moliendas sollicitos intellegi uelit, de forma autem et cultu placere carnalis concupiscentiae ingenium sit, quae etiam stupri causa est, ecquid uidetur tibi stupri affine esse secundum matrimonium, quoniam ea in illo deprehenduntur quae stupro competunt? [2] Ipse dominus, qui uiderit, inquit, mulierem ad concupiscendum, iam stuprauit eam in corde suo. Qui autem eam ad ducendum uiderit, minus an plus fecit? Quid si etiam duxerit? quod non faceret, nisi et ad ducendum concupisset et ad concupiscendum uidisset. Nisi si potest duci uxor quam non uideris nec concupieris. [3] Multum sane interest, maritus an caelebs aliam concupiscat. Omnis mulier etiam caelibis alia est, quamdiu aliena, nec per aliud tamen fit marita, nisi per quod et adultera. Leges uidentur matrimonii et stupri differentiam facere, per diuersitatem illiciti, non per condicionem rei ipsius. Alioquin quae res et uiris et feminis omnibus adest ad matrimonium et stuprum? commixtio carnis scilicet, cuius concupiscentiam dominus stupro adaequauit. [4] ‘Ergo’, inquit, ‘iam et primas, id est unas nuptias destruis?’ Nec immerito, quia et ipsae ex eo constant quod est stuprum. Ideo optimum est homini mulierem non attingere, et ideo uirginis principalis est sanctitas, quia caret stupri affinitate. Et cum haec etiam de primis et unis nuptiis praetendi ad causam continentiae possint, quanto magis secundo matrimonio recusando praeiudicabunt? Gratus esto, si semel tibi indulsit deus nubere. Gratus autem eris, si iterum indulsisse illum tibi nescias. Ceterum abuteris indulgentia, cum sine modestia uteris. Modestia a modo intellegitur. [5] Non tibi sufficit de summo illo immaculatae uirginitatis gradu in secundum recidis nubendo, sed in tertium adhuc deuolueris, et in quartum, et fortassis in plures, postquam in secunda statione continens non fuisti, quia nec prohibere plures nuptias uoluit qui de secundis prouocandis retractauit. Nubamus igitur quotidie, et nubentes ab ultimo die deprehendamus, tamquam Sodoma et Gomorra, quo die ‘uae’ illud super praegnantem et lactantem adimplebitur, id est super maritos et incontinentes; de nuptiis enim uteri et ubera et infantes. Et quando finis nubendi? Credo post finem uiuendi.

X. [1] Renuntiemus carnalibus, ut aliquando spiritalia fructificemus. Rape occasionem, etsi non exoptatissimam, attamen opportunam, non habere cui debitum solueres et a quo exsoluereris. Desisti esse debitor: o te felicem! Dimisisti debitorem: sustine damnum. Quid si, quod diximus damnum, lucrum senties? Per continentiam enim negotiaberis magnam substantiam sanctitatis, parsimonia carnis spiritum acquires. [2] Recogitemus enim ipsam conscientiam nostram, quam alium se homo sentiat, cum forte a sua femina cessat. Spiritualiter sapit; si orationem facit ad dominum, prope est caelo; si scripturis incumbit, totus illic est; si psalmum canit, placet sibi; si daemonem adiurat, confidit sibi. Ideo apostolus temporalem purificationem orationum commendandarum causa adiecit, ut sciremus, quod ad tempus prodest semper nobis exercendum esse, ut semper prosit. Quotidie, omni momento oratio hominibus necessaria, utique et continentia, postquam oratio necessaria est. [3]

Oratio de conscientia procedit: si conscientia erubescat, erubescit oratio. Spiritus deducit orationem ad deum. Si spiritus reus apud se sit conscientiae erubescantis, quomodo audebit orationem deducere ad altare, qua erubescante et ipse suffunditur sanctus minister? [4] Etenim est prophetica uox ueteris testamenti: Sancti eritis, quia et deus sanctus, et rursus: Cum sancto sanctificaberis, et cum uiro innocenti innocens eris et cum electo electus. Debemus enim ita ingredi in disciplina domini ut dignum est, non secundum carnis squalentes concupiscentias. [5] Ita enim et apostolus dicit quod sapere secundum carnem mors sit, secundum spiritum uero sapere uita aeterna sit in Christo Iesu domino nostro. Item per sanctam prophetidem Priscam ita euangelizatur, quod sanctus minister sanctimoniam nouerit ministrare. ‘Purificantia enim concordat, ait, et uisiones uident, et ponentes faciem deorsum etiam uoces audiunt manifestas, tam salutes quam et occultas.’ [6] Si haec obtusio, etiam cum in unis nuptiis res carnis exercetur, spiritum sanctum auertit, quanto magis, cum in secundo matrimonio agitur?

XI. [1] Duplex enim rubor est, quia in secundo matrimonio duae uxores eundem circumstant maritum, una spiritu, alia in carne. Neque enim pristinam poteris odisse, cui etiam religiosiorem reseruas affectionem, ut iam receptae apud dominum, pro cuius spiritu postulas, pro qua oblationes annuas reddis. [2] Stabis ergo ad dominum cum tot uxoribus quot in oratione commemores et offeres pro duabus et commendabis illas duas per sacerdotem de monogamia ordinatum aut etiam de uirginitate sancitum, circumdatum uiduis uniuius? et ascendet sacrificium tuum libera fronte, et inter cetera bonae mentis postulabis tibi et uxoris castitatem?

XII. [1] Scio quibus causationibus coloremus insatiabilem carnis cupiditatem. Praetendimus necessitates adminiculorum: domum administrandam, familiam regendam, loculos, clauas custodiendas, lanificium dispensandum, uictum procurandum, curas comminuendas. Scilicet solis maritorum domibus bene est. Perierunt caelibum familiae, res spadonum, fortunae militum aut peregrinantium sine uxoribus. Non enim nos et milites sumus, eo quidem maioris disciplinae, quanto tanti imperatoris? Non et nos peregrinantes in isto saeculo sumus? Cur autem ita dispositus es, o Christiane, ut sine uxore non possis? [2] Nunc et consors onerum domesticorum necessaria est? Habe aliquam uxorem spiritalem. Assume de uiduis fide pulchram, paupertate dotatam, aetate signatam: bonas nuptias feceris. Huiusmodi uxores etiam plures haberi deo gratum est. [3] Sed posteritatem recogitant Christiani, quibus crastinum non est? Haeredes dei seruus desiderabit, qui semetipsum de saeculo exhereditauit? Et ideo quis repetat matrimonium, si de pristino non habeat liberos? Habebit itaque hoc primum bonum, ut diutius uelit uiuere, ipso apostolo festinante ad dominum? Certe expeditissimus in persecutionibus, constantissimus in martyriis, promptissimus in communicationibus rerum, temperantissimus in acquisitionibus, postremo securus morietur, relictis filiis, forsitan qui illi parentent. [4] Numquid ergo huiusmodi et rei publicae prospectu aguntur? ne ciuitates deficiant, si suboles non exerceantur, ne legis iura, ne commercia delabantur, ne templa derelinquantur, ne non sint qui acclament 'Christianis leonem!' Haec enim audire desiderant qui filios quaerunt. [5] Sufficiat ad consilium uiduitatis uel ista, praecipue apud nos, importunitas liberorum, ad quos suscipiendos legibus compelluntur homines, quia sapiens quisque numquam libens filios desiderasset. Quid ergo facies, si nouam uxorem de tua conscientia impleueris? dissoluas medicaminibus conceptum? Puto nobis magis non licere nascentem nocere quam et natum. Sed fortasse illo tempore praegnantis uxoris remedium tantae sollicitudini a deo petere audebis, quod in te positum recusasti? [6] Aliqua, opinor, sterilis prospicietur, iam uel frigidioris aetatis. Satis consulte et imprimis fideliter. Nullam enim credidimus deo uolente sterilem aut anum enixam. Quod adeo magis euenire potest, si quis praesumptione huius prouidentiae suae dei aemulationem prouocarit. Scimus denique quendam ex fratribus, cum propter filiam suam secundo matrimonio sterilem captasset uxorem, tam iterum patrem factum quam et iterum maritum.

XIII. [1] Ad hanc meam cohortationem, frater dilectissime, accedunt etiam saecularia exempla, quae saepe nobis etiam in testimonio posita sunt, cum quid bonum et deo placitum ab extraneis quoque agnoscitur et testimonio honoratur. Denique monogamia apud ethnicos ita in summo honore est, ut et uirginibus legitime nubentibus uniuiरा pronuba adhibeatur; et si auspicii causa, utique boni auspicii est; item, ut in quibusdam sollemnibus et officiis prior sit uniuiराe locus. Certe Flaminica non nisi uniuiरा est; quae et Flaminis lex est. Nam quod ipsi Pontifici Maximo iterare matrimonium non licet utique monogamiae gloria est. [2] Cum autem dei sacramenta satanas affectat, prouocatio est nostra, immo suffusio, si pigri simus ad continentiam deo exhibendam, quam diabolo quidam praestant, nunc uirginitate, nunc uiduitate perpetua. Nouimus uirgines Vestae, et lunonis apud Achaiae oppidum, et Apollinis apud Delphos, et Mineruae et Dianae quibusdam locis. Nouimus et continentes uiros, et quidem tauri illius Aegyptii antistites: feminas uero Cereri Africanae, cui etiam sponte abdicato matrimonio assenescunt, auersantes exinde contactum masculorum usque ad oscula filiorum. Inuenit scilicet diabolus post luxuriam etiam castitatem perditricem, quo magis reus sit Christianus qui castitatem recusauerit conseruatricem. [3] Erunt nobis in testimonium et feminae quaedam saeculares ob uniuiratus obstinationem famam consecutae; aliqua Dido, quae profuga in alieno solo, ubi nuptias regis ultro optasse debuerat, ne tamen secundas experiretur, maluit e contrario uri quam nubere; uel illa Lucretia, quae etsi semel per uim et inuita alium uirum passa est, sanguine suo maculatam carnem abluit, ne uiueret iam non sibi uniui. Plura exempla curiosius de nostris inuenias, et quidem alteris potiora, quanto maius est uiuere in castitate quam pro ea mori. Facilius animam ponas quia bonum amiseris, quam uiuendo serues ob quod emori malis. 4. Quanti igitur et quantae in ecclesiasticis ordinibus de continentia censentur, qui deo nubere maluerunt, qui carnis suae honorem restituere, quique se iam illius aevi filios dicauerunt, occidentes in se concupiscentiam libidinis, et totum illud quod intra paradisum non potuit admitti! Vnde praesumendum est hos qui intra paradisum recipi uolent tandem debere cessare ab ea re a qua paradisus intactus est.

De Fuga in Persecutione (On Flight in Persecution)

I. [1] Quaesisti proxime, Fabi frater, fugiendum necne sit in persecutione, quod nescio quid annuntiaretur. Ibidem ego oblocutus aliquid pro loco ac tempore et quarundam personarum importunitate semittractatam materiam abstuli mecum, plenius in eam de stilo nunc renuntiaturus, utpote quam ei tua consultatio commendarat et condicio temporum suo iam nomine iniunxerat. Quanto enim frequentiores imminet persecutiones, tanto examinatio procuranda est, quomodo eas excipere fides debeat. Procuranda autem examinatio penes [s]vos, <qui> si forte Paraclitum non recipiendo, deductorem omnis veritatis, merito adhuc etiam aliis quaestionibus obnixi estis. [2] Igitur consultationi tuae ordinem quoque indidimus, animadvertentes ante determinari oportere de statu ipsius persecutionis, utrum a deo veniat an a diabolo, quo facilius de obitu eius constare possit; omnis enim rei inspectio auctore cognito planior.

Satis est quidem praescribere nihil fieri sine dei voluntate; sed non statim hac sententia ceteris retractatibus locum dabimus, ne a praesenti articulo avocemur, si qui responderit: 'Ergo et malum a deo et delictum a deo, nihil iam in diabolo, nihil etiam in nobis ipsis.' [3] De persecutione nunc quaeritur; circa hanc interim dixerim nihil fieri sine dei voluntate, respiciens eam inprimis deo dignam esse et, ut ita dixerim, necessariam, ad probationem scilicet servorum eius sive reprobationem. Quis est enim exitus persecutionis, quis effectus alius nisi probatio et reprobatio fidei, qua suos utique dominus examinavit? Hoc nomine iudicium est persecutio, per quam quis aut probatus aut reprobatus iudicatur; porro iudicium soli deo competit. [4] Haec pala illa, quae et nunc dominicam aream purgat, ecclesiam scilicet, confusum acervum fidelium eventilans et discernens frumentum martyrum et paleas negatorum, haec etiam scalae, quas somniat Iacob, aliis ascensum in superiora, aliis descensum ad inferiora demonstrantes. [5] Si et agonem intelligi capit persecutionem, a quo certamen edicatur, nisi a quo corona et praemia proponuntur? Legis edictum agonis istius in Apocalypsi, quibus praemiis ad victoriam invitet vel maxime illos, qui proprie vicerint in persecutione vincendo, luctati revera non adversus carnem et sanguinem, sed adversus spiritalia nequitiae; ita agnosces ad eundem agonethetam pertinere certaminis arbitrium, qui invitat ad praemium. [6] Totum, quod agitur in persecutione, gloria dei est, probantis et reprobantis, imponentis et deponentis; quod autem ad gloriam dei pertinet, utique ex voluntate illius eveniet. Sed quando deus magis creditur, nisi cum magis timetur, nisi in tempore persecutionis? [7] Ecclesia in attonito est: tunc et fides in expeditione, sollicitior et disciplinatio in ieiuniis et stationibus et orationibus et humilitate, in alterutra diligentia et dilectione, in sanctitate et sobrietate; nihil enim vacatur nisi timori et spei. Adeo et ex hoc ipso ostenditur nobis non posse diabolo deputari eam, quae meliores efficit dei servos.

II. [1] Si, quod iniquitas a deo non est, sed a diabolo, persecutio autem ex iniquitate consistit — quid enim iniquius quam veri dei antistites, omnis sectatores veritatis, nocentissimorum more tractari? — , ideo videtur persecutio a diabolo evenire, a quo iniquitas agitur, ex qua constat persecutio, scire debemus, quatenus nec persecutio potest sine iniquitate diaboli nec probatio fidei sine persecutione propter probationem fidei necessariam, iniquitatem non patrocinium praesentare persecutioni, sed ministerium; praecedere enim dei voluntatem circa fidei probationem, quae est ratio persecutionis, sequi autem diaboli iniquitatem ad instrumentum persecutionis, quae ratio est probationis. [2] Nam et alias in quantum iustitiae iniquitas aemula est, in tantum materia est ad testimonium eius, cuius est aemula, ut sic iustitia iniquitate perficiatur, quomodo virtus in infirmitate perficitur. Nam infirma mundi electa sunt a deo, ut confundantur fortia, et stulta eius, ut confundantur sapientia. Ita et iniquitas adhibetur, ut iustitia probetur confundens iniquitatem. Igitur, quod ministerium non est arbitrii, sed servitii — arbitrium enim domini persecutio propter fidei probationem, ministerium autem iniquitas diaboli propter persecutionis instructionem — , ita eam per diabolum si forte, non a diabolo evenire credimus. [3] Nihil satanae in servos dei vivi licebit, nisi permiserit dominus, ut aut ipsum destruat per fidem electorum in temptatione victricem aut homines eius fuisse traducat, qui defecerint ad illum. Habes exemplum Iob, cui diabolus nullam potuit incutere temptationem, nisi a deo accepisset potestatem, nec in substantiam quidem eius, nisi dominus Ecce, dixisset, omnia, quae sunt ei, in manu tua do, in ipsum autem ne extenderis manum. Denique nec extendit nisi posteaquam et hoc postulanti dominus Ecce, dixisset, trado tibi illum, tantum animam eius custodi. [4] Sic et in apostolos facultatem temptationis postulavit non habens eam scilicet nisi ex permissu, siquidem dominus in evangelio ad Petrum Ecce, inquit, postulavit satanas, uti cerneret vos velut frumentum, verum ego rogavi pro te, ne deficeret fides tua, id est, ne tantum diabolo permitteretur, ut fides periclitaretur. Per quod ostenditur utrumque apud deum esse, et concussionem fidei et protectionem, cum utrumque ab eo petitur, concussio a diabolo, protectio a filio.

[5] Et utique cum filius dei protectionem fidei habet in sua potestate, quam a patre postulat, a quo omnem accipit potestatem in caelis et in terris, quale est, ut concussionem fidei diabolus in manu sua habeat? Sed in legitima oratione, cum dicimus ad patrem: Ne nos inducas in temptationem — quae autem maior temptatio quam persecutio? — , ab eo illam profiteamur accidere, a quo veniam eius deprecamur; hoc est enim quod sequitur: Sed erue nos a maligno, id est, ne nos induxeris in temptationem permittendo nos maligno; tunc enim eruimur diaboli manibus, cum illi non tradimur in temptationem.

[6] Nec in porcorum gregem diaboli legio habuit potestatem, nisi eam de deo impetrasset; tantum potestatem abest ut in oves dei habeat. Possum quoque dicere porcorum quoque setas tunc numeratas apud deum fuisse, nedum capillos sanctorum. [7] Habere videtur diabolus propriam iam potestatem si forte in eos, qui ad deum non pertinent, semel ‘in stillam situlae et in pulverem areae et in salivam’ nationibus deputatis a deo ac per hoc diabolo expositis in vacuam quodammodo possessionem; [8] ceterum in domesticos dei nihil illi licet ex propria potestate, quia, quando liceat, id est ex quibus causis, exempla in scripturis signata demonstrant. Aut enim ex causa probationis conceditur ei ius temptationis provocato vel provocanti ut in superioribus aut ex causa reprobationis traditur ei peccator quasi carnifici in poenam ut Saul — Et abscessit, inquit, spiritus domini a Saule et concutiebat eum spiritus nequam a domino et suffocabat eum — aut ex causa cohibitionis, ut apostolus refert datum sibi sudem angelum satanae, ut colaphizaretur, ne <ignoremus> hanc speciem permitti diabolo in sanctos humiliandos per carnis vexationem, simul ut et virtus, tolerantiae scilicet, in infirmitate perfici possit. [9] Nam et ipse apostolus Phygelum et Hermogenem tradidit satanae, uti emendentur, ne blasphement. Videtis iam et a servis dei facilius diabolus accipere potestatem; tanto abest, ut eam ex proprietate possideat.

III. [1] Cum ergo et haec exempla magis in persecutionibus eveniant, siquidem magis tunc probamur vel reprobamur et magis tunc humiliamur vel emendamur, ab eo permittatur vel imperetur necesse est catholice fieri haec a quo et ex parte, scilicet ab illo qui dicit: Ego sum, qui facio pacem et condo mala, id est bellum; hoc est enim contrarium paci. Nostrae autem paci quod est bellum quam persecutio? [2] Si persecutionis vel maxime exitus aut vitam afferunt aut mortem, aut plagam aut sanationem, habes auctorem eiusdem: Ego percutiam et sanabo, ego vivificabo et mortificabo. [3] Uram, inquit, illos, sicut uritur aurum, et probabo, inquit, illos, sicut probatur argentum. Cum enim exurimur persecutionis ardore, tunc probamur de fidei tenore. Haec erunt ‘igneae iacula’ diaboli, per quae fidei ustio et conflatio administratur, ex dei tamen voluntate. [4] De isto quis dubitare possit, ignoro, nisi plane frivola et frigida fides, deprehendens eos, qui timide conveniunt in ecclesiam. Dicitis enim [inquit]: ‘Quoniam’ <inquit> ‘incondite convenimus et simul convenimus et complures concurrimus in ecclesiam, quaerimur a nationibus et timemus, ne turbentur nationes hae.’ Non scitis, quod deus sit omnium dominus, et si velit deus, tunc persecutionem patieris, si vero noluerit, silebunt nationes? Credas utique, si tamen in eum deum credis, sine cuius voluntate nec unius passer assis cadit in terram; nos autem, puto, multis passeribus antistamus.

IV. [1] Igitur si constat, a quo persecutio eveniat, possumus iam consultationem tuam inducere et determinare ex hoc ipso praetractatu fugiendum in persecutione non esse. Si enim persecutio a deo evenit, nullo modo fugiendum erit, quod a deo evenit, sicut duplex ratio defendit, quia neque debeat devitari neque possit evadi, quod a deo evenit. Non debet devitari, quia bonum; necesse est enim bonum esse omne, quod deo visum est. Et numquid ideo in Genesi sic positum est: Et vidit deus, quia bonum est, non quod ignoraret bonum esse, nisi vidisset, sed ut hoc sono portenderet bonum esse, quod deo visum est? Multa quidem sunt, quae a deo eveniunt et alicuius malo eveniunt — immo bonum est ideo, quia a deo venit ut divinum, rationale; quid enim divinum non rationale, non bonum? quid bonum non divinum? — [2] si autem sensui cuiusque videtur, non sensus hominis praeiudicat statui rerum, sed status sensui; status enim unusquisque certum quid est et dat sensui legem ita sentiendi statum sicut est. Si autem statu quidem bonum, quod a deo venit — nihil enim a deo non bonum, quia divinum, quia rationale — , sensui vero malum videtur, erit status in tuto, sensus in vitio. Statu optima res pudicitia et veritas et iustitia, quae a multorum sensu displicent; numquid ideo status sensui addicitur? [3] Ita et persecutio statu bona est, quia divina et rationalis dispositio, sensui eorum vero, quorum malo venit, displicet. Sed qui <vi>de[s]t etiam illud malum rationale apud deum haberi, cum quis in persecutione evertitur de salute, sicut et bonum illud ratione contingere, cum quis ex persecutione proficit in salute — nisi si inrationaliter quis aut perit apud dominum aut salvus est —, is non poterit persecutionem malum dicere, quae etiam in mali parte bonum est, dum ratione administratur. [4] Ita si bonum persecutio quoquo modo, quia de statu constat, merito definimus, quod bonum est, vitari non oportere, quia delictum sit, quod bonum est, recusare, eo amplius, quod deo visum est, iam vero nec posse vitari, quia a deo evenit, cuius voluntas non vitari poterit. <Ad>eo [ad]igitur qui putant fugiendum, aut malum exprobrant deo, si persecutionem uti malum fugiunt — bonum enim nemo devitat —, aut fortiores se deo existimant, qui putant se evadere posse, si deus tale aliquid voluerit evenire.

V. [1] ‘Sed quod meum est’, inquit, ‘fugio, ne peream, si negavero; illius est, si voluerit, etiam fugientem me reducere in medium.’ Hoc mihi prius responde: certus es te negaturum, si non fugeris, an incertus? Si enim certus, iam negasti, quia praesumendo te negaturum id despopondisti, de quo praesumpsisti, et vane iam fugis, ne neges, qui, si negaturus es, iam negasti; [2] si vero incertus es, cur non ex aequalitate incerti metus inter utrumque eventum etiam confiteri te posse praesumis et salvum magis fieri, quominus fugias, sicut negaturum te praesumis, ut fugias? Iam nunc aut in nobis est utrumque aut totum in deo; si in nobis aut confiteri aut negare, cur non id praesumimus, quod est melius, id est confessuros nos? — nisi si <non> vis confiteri, <ne> patiaris; nolle autem confiteri negare est —; [3] si vero in deo totum est, cur non totum relinquimus arbitrio eius, agnoscentes virtutem et potestatem, quod possit nos sicut fugientes educere in medium, ita et non fugientes, immo et in medio populo conversantes obumbrare? [4] Quale est, ut ad fugiendum deo honorem reddas, qui possit te etiam fugientem producere in medium, ad constandum autem inhonores illum desperans potentiam protectionis ab illo? Quanto magis ex hac parte, constantiae et fiduciae in deum, dicis: ‘Ego quod meum est facio: non discedo; deus si voluerit, ipse me proteget’! Hoc potius nostrum est, stare sub dei arbitrium quam fugere sub nostro. [5] Rutilius sanctissimus martyr cum totiens fugisset persecutionem de loco in locum, etiam periculum, ut putabat, nummis redemisset, post totam securitatem, quam sibi prospexerat, ex inopinato apprehensus et praesidi oblatus, tormentis dissipatus — credo pro fugae castigatione — , dehinc ignibus datus passionem, quam vitarat, misericordiae dei rettulit. Quid aliud voluit dominus nobis demonstrare hoc documento quam fugiendum non esse, quia nihil fuga prosit, si deus nolit?

VI. [1] ‘Immo’, inquit, ‘quia praeceptum adimplevit fugiens de civitate in civitatem.’ Sic enim voluit quidam, sed et ipse fugitivus, argumentari et qui proinde nolunt intelligere sensum domini illius pronuntiationis, ut eam ad velamentum timiditatis suae utantur, cum et personas suas habuerit et tempora et causas. Cum coeperint, inquit, persequi vos, fugite de civitate in civitatem.

[2] Hoc in persona proprie apostolorum et in tempora et in causas eorum pertinere defendimus, sicut subsequentes sensus probabunt, qui nonnisi in apostolos competunt: In viam nationum ne ieritis et in civitatem Samaritanorum ne introieritis, sed ite potius ad oves perditas domus Israelis.

[3] Nobis autem et via nationum patet, in qua et inventi sumus et usque in finem incedimus, et nulla civitas excepta est, quo per totum orbem praedicamus; sed nec cura nobis Israelis iniuncta est extra ordinem, nisi qua et omnibus gentibus praedicare debemus; [4] etiam si apprehendamus, non in concilia eorum perducemur nec in synagogis eorum flagellabimur, sed Romanis utique potestatibus et tribunalibus obiciemur. [5] Si <c> igitur et fugae praeceptum apostolorum condicio desiderabat, quoniam primum praedicandum erat ad oves perditas domus Israelis. Ut ergo perciperetur praedicatio, apud quos priores eam perfici oportebat, uti panem ante filii quam canes sumerent, ideo illis fugere tunc ad tempus praecepit, non propter eludendum periculum proprio nomine persecutionis — atquin persecutiones eos passuros praedicabat et tolerandas docebat — , sed propter profectum annuntiationis, ne statim oppressis evangelii quoque disseminatio perimeretur. Neque enim quasi tacite in aliquam civitatem transfugiendum erat, sed quasi ubique annuntiaturis et ex hoc ubique persecutiones subituris, donec replerent doctrinam suam. [6] Denique Non consummabitis, inquit, civitates Israelis; adeo intra terminos Iudaeae praeceptum fugae continebatur. Nobis autem nulla Iudaeae praefinitio competit praedicationis in omnem iam carnem effuso spiritu sancto. [7] Itaque Paulus et apostoli ipsi memores

praecepti dominici contestantur illud apud Israel, quem iam doctrina sua impleverant: Vobis oportuit in primis sermonem dei tradi; sed quoniam repulistis eum nec dignos vos aeterna vita existimastis, ecce convertimus nos ad nationes, Atque exinde conversi, ut ipsi antecessores instituerant, et in viam nationum abierunt et in civitates Samaritanorum introierunt, ut in totam scilicet terram exiret sonus eorum et in terminos orbis voces eorum. [8] Si ergo cessavit exceptio viae nationum et introitus in civitates Samaritanorum, cur non cessaverit et fugae praeceptum pariter emissum? Denique ex quo saturato Israele apostoli in nationes transierunt, nec fugerunt de civitate in civitatem nec pati dubitaverunt. [9] Atquin Paulus, qui se per murum concesserat expediri de persecutione, qua ad hoc tempus erat praecepti, idem iam in clausula officii et in consummatione praecepti discipulis magnopere deprecantibus, ne se Hierosolymam committeret passurus illic, quae Agabus prophetaverat, sollicitudini eorum non subscripsit, sed e contrario: Quid, inquit, facitis lacrimantes et conturbantes cor meum? ego enim non modo vincula pati optaverim, sed etiam mori Hierosolymis pro nomine domini mei Iesu Christi. [10] Atque ita omnes aierunt: Fiat voluntas domini. Quae erat voluntas domini? Utique non fugiendi iam persecutionem. Ceterum poterant et priorem domini voluntatem proposuisse, qua fugere mandaverat, qui illum persecutionem vitasse maluerant. [11] Igitur cum etiam sub apostolis ipsis temporale fuerit fugae praeceptum sicut et reliquorum praescriptorum, non potest apud nos perseverare, quod apud doctores nostros concessavit, etsi non proprie ad illos fuisset emissum; aut, si perseverare illud dominus voluit, deliquerunt apostoli, qui non usque in finem fugere curaverunt.

VII. [1] Videamus nunc, an et cetera domini edita congruant perpetuo fugae praecepto. Primo quidem, si a deo persecutio est, quale est, ut idem fugiendam eam mandet, qui et infert? Quam si evadi vellet, melius non immitteret, ne voluntatem suam alia voluntate praevaricare videretur; aut pati enim nos voluit persecutionem aut fugere: si fugere, quomodo pati? si pati, quomodo fugere? Iam vero quanta inaequalitas sententiarum iubentis fugere et invitantis ad passionem (quae) contraria[m] fugae! [quae]. [2] Qui confessus fuerit me, et ego confitebor illum coram patre meo: quomodo confitebitur fugiens? quomodo fugiet confitens? Qui mei confusus fuerit, et ego confundar eius coram patre meo: devito passionem, confundo<r> confessionem. Felices, qui persecutionem passi fuerint causa nominis mei:

infelices ergo, qui fugiendo ex praecepto non erunt passi. Qui sustinuerit in finem, iste salvabitur: quid ergo me iubens fugere vis in finem sustinere? Tanta diversitas sententiarum si non congruit divinae gravitati, apparet ex his quoque praeceptum fugae suam tunc habuisse rationem, quam ostendimus.

[4] Atque exinde quae timidus praefinit? Qui plures fecerit animam suam quam me, non est me dignus, et qui non tollit crucem suam et sequitur me, non potest esse meus discipulus. Postremo in Apocalypsin non fugam timidus offert, sed inter ceteros reprobos particulam in stagnum sulphuris et ignis, quod est mors secunda.

VIII. [1] Refugit et ipse vim interdum, sed eadem ratione, qua apostolis fugere praeceperat, donec scilicet doctrinam suam impleret, qua consummata, non dico stetit, sed nec auxilium a patre angelorum exercituum desideravit, increpito etiam Petri gladio. [2] Professus quidem et ipse est animam anxiam usque ad mortem et carnem infirmam, ut tibi ostenderet primo in se utramque substantiam humanam fuisse ex proprietate anxietatis animae et imbecillitatis carnis, ne aliam, ut quidam nunc induxerunt, aut carnem aut animam Christi interpretareris, dehinc ut demonstratis condicionibus earum scires illas nihil valere per semetipsas sine spiritu; [3] et ideo praeponit: Spiritus promptus, ut utramque condicionem substantiae utriusque respiciens intelligas in te esse etiam fortitudinem spiritus quomodo et infirmitatem carnis ac iam hinc scias, quid unde facias et quid cui subiecias, infirmum scilicet forti, ne, ut nunc facis, de carnis quidem infirmitate causeris, de spiritus autem firmitate dissimules. [4] Postulavit et ipse a patre, si fieri posset, transiret ab illo calix passionis: postula et tu, sed stans ut ille, sed postulans tantum, sed subiungens et reliqua: Verum non quod ego volo, sed quod tu. Fugiens autem quomodo hoc postulabis, ipse tibi calicis praestans translationem nec quod pater vult faciens, sed quod tu?

IX. [1] Omnia apostoli secundum deum utique docuerunt, omnia + evangelizare voluerunt +. Ubi illos ostendis praeceptum fugiendi de civitate in civitatem restaurasse? quia nec potuissent tale quid constituere tam contrarium exemplis suis, ut fugam mandarent, qui cum maxime de vinculis vel insulis, quibus ob confessionem, non ob fugam nominis continebantur, ad ecclesias scribebant. [2] Infirmos sustineri iubet Paulus, utique enim non fugientes; quomodo enim sustinebantur absentes? At patientia dicit sustinendos, si cum per infirmitatem fidei suae offenderint; sic et pusillanimes consolari, non tamen in fugam mitti.

Sed <et> cum admonet, ne locum malo demus, non fugae suggerit consilium, sed iracundiae docet temperamentum, et si redimendum tempus dicit, quia dies nequam sunt, non per fugam, sed per sapientiam conversationis lucrari nos vult commeatum. Ceterum qui fulgere nos iubet velut filios lucis, non iubet fuga abscondi ut filios tenebrarum. Stare immobiles praecipit — utique nec fuga mobiles — et accinctos: in fugam an in occursum evangelii? Arma quoque demonstrat, quae fugituris non essent necessaria; inter quae et clipeum, quo possitis tela diaboli extinguere, resistentes sine dubio et excipientes omnem vim illius.

X. [1] Sed omissis quidam divinis exhortationibus illum magis Graecum versiculum saecularis sententiae sibi adhibent: ‘Qui fugiebat, rursus sibi

proeliabitur'. Ut et rursus forsitan fugiat? Et quando vincet, qui, cum fugerit, victus est? Bonum militem Christo imperatori suo praestat, qui tam plene ab apostolo armatus, ut tubam persecutionis audit, a<d> diem deserit persecutionis! [2] Respondebo et ego de saeculo aliquid: 'Usque adeone mori miserum est?' Morietur quoquo modo, aut victus aut victor; nam etsi negando ceciderit, cum tormentis tamen proeliat. Malo miserandum quam erubescendum; pulchrior est miles in pugna proelio amissus quam in fuga salvus. [3] Times hominem, Christiane, quem timeri oportet ab angelis, siquidem angelos iudicaturus es? quem timeri oportet a daemoniis, siquidem et in daemones accepisti potestatem? quem timeri oportet ab universo mundo, siquidem et in te mundus iudicatur? [4] Christum indutus es — siquidem in Christum tinctus es — , qui fugis diabolum? Depreisti Christum, qui in te est, fugitivum cum diabolo te reddidisti. Sed dominum fugiens exprobras omnibus fugitivis sui[s] vanitatem consilii: fugerat et quidam animosus propheta dominum, traiecerat ab Ioppen Tarsum, quasi et a deo transfretaret; sed illum, non dico in mari et in terra, verum in utrum etiam bestiae invenit, in quo nec mori per triduum potuit nec vel sic deum evadere. [5] Quanto melius <dei> servus, qui sive iniquitatis dominum timens non fugit eum, sed potius contemnit, confidens scilicet de tutela domini, sive deum reformidat, quanto magis sub oculis eius astitit, dicens: 'Dominus est, potens est; omnia illius sunt; ubi fuero, in manu illius sum; faciat quod vult, non discedo, et si perire me volet, ipse me perdat, dum me ego illi servo. Malo invidiam ei facere per voluntatem ipsius pereundo quam bilem per meam evadendo'.

XI. [1] Haec sentire et facere omnem servum dei oportet, etiam minoris loci, ut maioris fieri possit, si quem gradum in persecutionis tolerantia ascenderit. Sed cum ipsi auctores, id est ipsi diaconi et presbyteri et episcopi fugiunt, quomodo laicus intelligere poterit, qua ratione dictum: Fugite de civitate in civitatem? Itaque cum duces fugiunt, quis de gregario numero sustinebit ad gradum in acie figendum suadere? [2] Certe quidem bonus pastor animam pro pecoribus ponit, ut Moyses non domino adhuc Christo revelato et iam in se figurato ait: Si perdis hunc populum, inquit, et me pariter cum eo disperde. Ceteram Christo confirmante figuras suas malus pastor est, qui viso lupo fugit et pecora diripienda derelinquit; proicietur de villa pastor huiusmodi, detinebuntur illi mercedes missionis suae in compensatione, immo et de priore peculio eius exigetur detrimenti dominici restitutio: Etenim qui habet, dabitur ei, ab eo autem, qui non habet, etiam quod videtur habere, auferetur. [3] Sic Zacharias comminatur: Exurge, rhomphaea, in pastores et evellite oves et superducam manum meam in pastores. In quos et Ezechiel et Hieremias isdem minis perorant, quod non tantum de pecoribus improbe vescantur pascentes potius semetipsos, verum et dispersam gregem faciant et in praedam esse omnibus bestiis agri, dum non est pastor illis. Quod numquam magis fit, quam cum in persecutione ecclesia destituitur a clero. Si et Spiritum quis agnoverit, audiet fugitivos denotantem. [4] Porro si eos, qui gregi praesunt, fugere, cum lupi irruunt, nec decet, immo nec licet — qui enim talem pastorem malum pronuntiavit, utique damnavit; omne autem quod damnatur, illicitum factum est sine dubio —, ideo praepositos ecclesiae in persecutione fugere non oportebit. Ceterum si grex fugere deberet, non debere<t> praepositos gregis stare, sine causa staturos ad tutelam gregis, quam grex non desiderat, scilicet ex licentia fugae.

XII. [1] Quod pertineat, frater, ad tuum problema, habes sententiae nostrae responsionem et exhortationem. Porro si quis quaerit, an persecutio fugienda sit, sequentem quoque <quaestionem> iam prospiciat necesse est, an, si fugienda non est, redimenda certe sit. Ultro igitur et de hoc tibi suggeram, definiens persecutionem, quam constat non esse fugiendam, proinde nec redimendam. [2] Pretium interest; ceterum sicut fuga redemptio gratuita est, ita redemptio nummaria fuga est. Certe et huius timiditatis consilium est. Quod times, redimis, ergo fugis; pedibus stetisti, nummis curristi; hoc ipsum, quod ex redemptione stetisti, fugisti. [3] Ut autem redimas hominem tu nummis, quem ex sanguine suo redemit Christus, quam indignum deo et dispositionis eius, qui filio suo non pepercit pro te, ut fieret pro nobis maledictum — quia maledictus, qui pependerit in ligno —, qui tamquam ovis ad victimam ductus est, et tamquam agnus ante tondentem sic non aperuit os, sed posuit dorsum suum in flagella, maxillas autem in palmas et faciem non avertit a sputaminibus et inter iniquos deputatus est et traditus est in mortem, mortem autem crucis: [4] totum hoc, ut nos a peccatis lucraretur. Sol cessit die[m] emptionis nostrae: apud inferos remancipatio nostra est et stipulatio nostra in caelis; sublevatae sunt portae sempiternae, ut introiret rex gloriae, dominus virtutum, hominem de terris, immo ab inferis mercatus in caelos. [5] Quis est nunc, qui adversus illum reluetatur, immo depretiat mercedem eius tam magno comparatam, pretiosissimo scilicet sanguine agni immaculati? Iam ergo melius fugere quam fieri viliores, si non tanto sibi constabit homo, quanti constitit domino. Et dominus quidem illum redemit ab angelis munditinentibus potestatibus, a spiritalibus nequitiae, a tenebris huius aevi, a iudicio aeterno, a morte perpetua; tu autem pro eo pacisceris cum delatore vel milite vel furunculo aliquo praeside sub tunica et sinum, quod aiunt, ut furtivo, quem coram toto mundo Christus emit, immo et manumisit. Hunc ergo liberam pretio aestimabis et pretio possidebis nisi eodem, quanto, ut diximus, domino constitit, sanguine suo scilicet? [6] Ut quid ergo de homine Christum redimis in homine, in quo Christus est? Non aliter et Simon facere temptavit, cum pecuniam apostolis obtulit pro spiritu Christi. Audiet ergo et iste, qui se redimens Christi spiritum redemit: Pecunia tua tecum sit in interitum, quoniam gratiam dei pretio consequendam putasti. [7] Quis talem <non ut> abnegatorem spernat? Quid enim dicit ille concussor? ‘Da mihi pecuniam.’ Certe ne eum tradat, siquidem non aliud venditat, quam quod praestaturus est praemio tuo. Cum das, utique ne tradaris voluisti; non traditus autem traduci habebas? Ergo dum nolendo tradi non vis traduci, nolendo negasti te esse, <quod> traduci noluisti. ‘Immo’, inquis, ‘dum nolo traduci quod sum, confessus id esse, quod nolo traduci, id est Christianum’. Potes itaque te martyrem vindicare, <si> constanter ostendis[se] Christum; redimens non ostendit. Apud unum si forte confessus es, ergo et apud plures nolendo confiteri negasti. Ipsa salus iudicabit hominem excidisse, dum evadit; excidit ergo, qui maluit evasisse. Negatio est etiam martyrii recusatio. [8] Christianus pecunia salvus est et in hoc nummos habet, ne patiatur, dum adversus deum erit dives? At enim Christus sanguine fuit dives pro illo. Felices itaque pauperes, quia illorum, inquit, est regnum caelorum, qui animam solam in confiscato habent. Si non possumus deo servire et mammonae, possumus et a deo redimi et a mammona? Quis enim magis serviet mammonae, quam quem mammonas redemit? [9] Postremo quo exemplo uteris in redemptionem traditionis? Apostoli tractantes persecutionibus agitati quando se pecunia liberaverunt, quae illis utique non deerat ex praediorum pretiis ad pedes eorum depositis? Certe multis locupletibus credentibus, viris ac feminis, qui his etiam refrigeria subministrabant, quando Onesiphorus aut Aquila aut Stephanas hoc modo eis in persecutionem succurrerunt? Paulus quidem, cum Felix praeses pecunias accepturum se pro eo a discipulis sperasset, de quo et ipse in secreto tractavit cum ipso, neque ipse pro se neque discipuli pro eo numeraverunt, [10] illi utique discipuli, qui flentes, quod [n]aeque Hierosolymam tendere perseveraret et persecutiones praedicatas illic non praecaveret, postremo inquiunt: Fiat voluntas dei. Quae ista voluntas? utique ut pateretur pro nomine domini, non ut redimeretur. Oportet enim, quomodo Christus animam suam posuit pro nobis, ita fieri pro eo et a nobis nec tantum pro ipso, immo etiam pro fratribus propter ipsum. Quod <et> Iohannes docens non [et] pro fratribus numerandum, sed moriendum potius pronuntiavit. Nihil interest, si quem Christianum redimere non debeas alium an te. [11] Et adeo voluntas dei sic est: aspice regnorum et imperiorum utique a deo dispositum statum, in cuius manu cor regis: tanta cotidie aerario augendo prospiciuntur remedia censuum, vectigalium, collationum, stipendiorum nec umquam tamen usque adhuc ex Christianis tale aliquid prospectum est sub aliqua redemptione capitis et sectae redigendis, cum tantae multitudinis nemini ignotae fructus ingens meti posset; sanguine empti, sanguine numerati nullum nummum pro capite debemus, quia caput nostrum Christus est: non decet Christum pecunia constare. Quomodo et martyria fieri possent in gloriam domini, si tributo licentiam sectae compensaremus? Itaque qui eam praemio paciscitur, dispositioni divinae adversatur. [12] Cum igitur nihil nobis Caesar indixerit in hunc modum stipendiariae sectae, sed nec indictum umquam tale quid possit, antichristo iam instante et in sanguinem, non in pecunias hiantes Christianorum, quomodo mihi proponere potest scripturam esse: Reddite quae sunt Caesaris Caesari? Miles me vel delator vel inimicus concutit, nihil Caesari exigens, immo contra fas faciens, cum Christianum legibus humanis reum mercede dimittit. Alius denarius, quem Caesari debeo, qui ad eum pertinet, de quo tunc agebatur, tributarius, tributariis scilicet, non a liberis debitus. [13] Aut quomodo reddam, quae sunt dei, deo, utique proinde imaginem et monetam ipsius inscriptam nomine eius, id est hominem Christianum? Quid autem deo debeo sicut denarium Caesari nisi sanguinem, quem pro me filius fudit ipsius? Quodsi deo quidem hominem et sanguinem meum debeo, nunc vero in eo sum tempore, ut quod deo debeo expostuler, utique fraudem deo facio id agens, ne quod debeo solvam. Bene observavi praeceptum Caesari reddens, quae sunt Caesaris, deo vero, quae sunt dei, abnegans!

XIII. [1] ‘Sed et omni petenti me dabo’: in causa elemosinae, non in concussurae. Petenti inquit; porro qui incutit, non petit; qui comminatur, si non acceperit, non postulat, sed extorquet; non elemosinam expectat, qui non miserandus, sed timendus venit. Dabo igitur misericordiae, non timiditatis meae nomine, ubi, qui accepit, deum honorat et benedictionem mihi reddit, non ubi amplius et benefactum praestitisse se credit et praedam suam aspiciens dicit: ‘De reatu’. [2] Tascam et inimicum!’ Sed <etsi> inimicitiae et alios habent titulos, non tamen dixit traditorem aut persecutorem aut concussorem; nam huic quanto magis carbones acervabo super caput, si non me redemero! ‘Proinde’, inquit, ‘qui tibi tunicam sustulerit, vel etiam pallium concede.’ Ad eum pertinet, qui rem, non qui fidem meam eripere quasierit; concedam et pallium nil [o]minanti; traditionem si minatus fuerit, etiam tunicam reposcam. [3] Omnium iam nunc dominicarum (sententiarum) suae sunt et causae et regulae; termini non in infinitum nec ad omnia spectant; atque adeo omni petenti dari iubet, ipse signum petentibus non dat. Alioquin si omnibus passim petentibus dandum putas, tu mihi videris, non dico vinum febricitanti, sed etiam venenum aut gladium mortem desideranti daturus. [4] Facite autem vobis amicos de mammona quomodo intelligendum sit, parabola praemissa te doceat ad populum Iudaicum dictum, qui, commissam sibi rationem domini cum male administrasset, deberet de mammonae hominibus, quod nos eramus, amicos sibi potius prospicere quam inimicos et relevare nos a debitis peccatorum, quibus deo detinebamur, si nobis id dominica ratione conferrent, ut, cum coepisset ab his deficere gratia, ad nostram fidem refugientes reciperentur in tabernacula aeterna. Quamvis nunc puta aliam interpretationem parabola et sententiae istius, dum scias verisimile non esse, ut concussores nostri in amicitiam redacti per mammonam recipiant tunc nos in aeterna tabernacula. [5] Sed quid non timiditas persuadebit? Quasi et fugere scriptum permittat et redimere praecipiat! Parum denique est, si tinus aut alius ita eruitur: massaliter totae ecclesiae tributum sibi irrogaverunt! Nescio, dolendum an erubescendum sit, cum in matrioibus beneficiariorum et curiosorum inter tabernarios et ianeos et fures balnearum et aleones et lenones Christiani[s] quoque vectigales continentur. [6] Hanc episcopatus formam apostoli providentius condiderunt, ut regno suo securi frui possent sub obtentu procurandae salutis? Scilicet enim talem pacem Christus ad patrem regrediens mandavit a militibus per Saturnalia redimendam!

XIV. [1] ‘Sed quomodo colligemus?’ inquis, ‘quomodo dominica sollemnia celebrabimus?’ Utique quomodo et apostoli, fide, non pecunia tuti, quae fides si montem transferre potest, multo magis militem. Esto sapientia, non praemio cautus! Neque enim statim et a populo eris tutus, si officia militaria redemeris. Una ergo tibi fides et sapientia ad tutelam opus est, quibus non adhibitis et redemptionem tuam potest perdere, adhibitis autem redemptionem <nec> desiderare. [2] Postremo si colligere interdum non potest, habes noctem, luce Christi luminosi adversus eam. Non potes discurrere per singulos? si<t> tibi e[s]t in tribus ecclesia; melius, turbas tuas aliquando non videas, quam addicas. Serva Christo virginem sponsam; nemo quaestum de ea faciat.

[3] Haec tibi, frater, dura forsitan et intolerabilia videntur, sed recita deum dixisse: Qui capit, capiat, id est, qui non capit, discedat. Non potest, qui pati timet, ei esse, qui passus est; at qui pati non timet, iste erit perfectus in dilectione, utique dei; perfecta enim dilectio foras mittit timorem. Et ideo multi vocati, pauci electi; non quaeritur, qui latam viam sequi paratus sit, sed qui angustam; et ideo paraclitus necessarius, deductor omnium veritatum, exhortator omnium tolerantiarum. Quem qui receperunt, neque fugere persecutionem neque redimere noverunt, habentes ipsum, qui pro nobis erit, sicut locuturus in interrogatione ita iuvaturus in passione.

De Monogamia (On Monogamy)

[1] Haeretici nuptias auferunt, psychici ingerunt; illi nec semel, isti non semel nubunt. Quid agis, lex creatoris? Inter alienos spadones et aurigas tuos tantundem quereris de domestico obsequio quantum de fastidio extraneo; proinde te laedunt qui abutuntur quemadmodum qui non utuntur. [2] Verum neque continentia emsmodi laudanda, quia haeretica est, neque licentia defendenda, quia psychica est; illa blasphemat, ista luxuriat; illa destruit nuptiarum deum, ista confundit. [3] Penes nos autem, quos Spiritales merito dici facit agnitio spiritualium charismatum, continentia religiosa est cum licentia verecunda; ambae cum creatore sunt: continentia legem nuptiarum honorat, licentia temperat; illa non cogitur, ista regitur; illa arbitrium habet, haec modum. [4] Unum matrimonium novimus sicut unum deum. Magis honorem refert lex nuptiarum, ubi habet et pudorem. [5] Sed psychicis non recipientibus Spiritum ea quae sunt Spiritus non placent. Ita, dum quae sunt Spiritus non placent, ea quae sunt carnis placebunt ut contraria Spiritus. Caro, inquit, adversus spiritum concupiscit et spiritus adversus carnem. [6] Quid autem concupiscet caro quam quae magis carnis sunt? Propter quod et in primordio extranea spiritus facta est; non, inquit, permanebit spiritus meus in istis hominibus in aevum, eo quod caro sint.

II. [1] Itaque monogamiae disciplinam in haeresim exprobrant nec ulla magis ex causa Paraclitum negare coguntur, quam dum existimant novae disciplinae institutorem et quidem dirissimae illis, ut iam de hoc primum consistendum sit in generali retractatu, an capiat Paraclitum aliquid tale docuisse, quod aut novum deputari possit adversus catholicam traditionem aut onerosum adversus levem sarcinam. [2] De utroque autem ipse dominus pronuntiavit; dicens enim: Adhuc multa habeo quae, loquar ad vos, sed nondum potestis portare ea; cum venerit spiritus sanctus, ille vos ducet in omnem veritatem, satis utique praetendit edocturum illum, quae et nova existimari possint ut numquam retro edita et aliquanto onerosa ut idcirco non edita. [3] ‘Ergo’, inquis, ‘hac argumentatione quidvis novum et onerosum paraclito adscribi poterit, etsi ab adversario spiritu fuerit.’ Non utique; adversarius enim spiritus ex diversitate praedicationis appareret, primo regulam adulterans fidei et ita ordinem adulterans disciplinae, quia cuius gradus prior est, eius corruptela antecedit, id est fidei, quae prior est disciplina: ante quis ^[4] deo haereticus sit necesse <e>st et tunc de instituto; 4. paraclitus autem multa habens edocere, quae in illum distulit dominus, secundum praefinitionem ipsum primo Christum contestabitur qualem credimus cum toto ordine dei creatoris et ipsum glorificabit et de ipso commemorabit et sic de principali regula illa multa, quae sunt disciplinarum, revelabit fidem dicente pro eis integritate praedicationis, <licet> novis, quia nunc revelantur, licet onerosis, quia nec nunc sustinentur, non alterius tamen Christi quam qui habere se dixit et alia multa quae a paraclito edocerentur, non minus istis onerosa quam illis, a quibus nondum tunc sustinebantur.

III. ^[1] Sed an onerosa monogamia, viderit adhuc impudens infirmitas carnis; an autem nova, de hoc interim constet. Illud enim amplius dicimus: etiamsi totam et solidam virginitatem sive continentiam paraclitus hodie determinasset, ut ne unis quidem nuptiis fervorem carnis despumare permetteret, sic quoque nihil novi inducere videretur, ipso domino spadonibus aperiente regna caelorum ut et ipso spadone, quem spectans et apostolus, propterea et ipse castratus, continentiam mavult. ^[2] ‘Sed salvo’, inquis, ‘iure nubendi’. Plane salvo et videbimus quousque, nihilominus tamen ex ea parte destructo, qua continentiam praefert. Bonum, inquit, homini mulierem non contingere — <ergo malum est contingere;> nihil enim bono contrarium nisi malum — ideoque superesse, ut et qui habeant uxores sic sint quasi non habentes, quo magis qui non habent habere non debeant. ^[3] Reddit etiam causas, cur ita suadeat, quod innupti de deo cogitent, nupti vero, quomodo in matrimonio quis suo placeat. Et possum contendere non mere bonum esse quod permittitur; quod enim mere bonum est, non permittitur, sed ultro licet; permissio habet causam aliquando et necessitatis. Denique in hac specie non est voluntas permittentis nubere; aliud enim vult: Volo vos, inquit, omnes sic esse quomodo et ego. ^[4] Et cum ostendit melius esse, quid utique se velle confirmat, quam quod melius esse praemisit? Et ita si aliud quam quod voluit permittit, non voluntate, sed necessitate permittens, non mere bonum ostendit, quod invitus indulsit. Denique cum dicit: Melius est nubere quam uri, quale id bonum intelligendum, quod melius est [et] poena, quod non potest videri melius nisi pessimo comparatum? ^[5] Bonum illud est, quod per se hoc nomen tenet sine comparatione non dico mali, sed etiam boni alterius, ut, et si alio bono comparatum adumbretur, remaneat nihilominus in boni nomine. Ceterum si per mali collationem cogitur bonum dici, non tam bonum est quam genus mali inferioris, quod ab altiore malo obscuratum ad nomen boni impellitur. [6] Aufer denique condicionem, ut dicas: Melius est nubere quam uri, et quaero, an dicere audeas: ‘Melius est nubere’, non adiciens, quo melius sit. Ergo iam non melius, et dum non melius, nec bonum, sublata condicione, quae, dum melius illud facit alio, ita bonum haberi cogit. Melius est unum oculum amittere quam duos; si tamen discedas a comparatione utriusque, non erit melius unum oculum habere, quia nec bonum. [7] Quid nunc, si omnem indulgentiam nubendi de suo, id est de humano sensu accommodat, ex necessitate qua diximus, quia melius sit nubere quam uri? Denique conversus ad alteram speciem dicendo: Nuptis autem denuntio, non ego, sed dominus, ostendit illa, quae supra dixerat, non dominicae auctoritatis fuisse, sed humanae aestimationis. [8] At ubi ad continentiam reflectit animos: Volo autem vos sic esse omnes: Puto autem, inquit, et ego spiritum dei habeo, ut, si quid indulserat ex necessitate, id spiritus sancti auctoritate revocaret. [9] Sed et Iohannes monens sic nos incedere debere quemadmodum et dominus, utique etiam secundum sanctitatem carnis admonuit incedere. Adeo manifestius: Et omnis, inquit, qui spem istam in illo habet, castificat se, sicut et ipse castus est. Nam et alibi: Estote sancti, sicut et ille sanctus fuit, scilicet carne; de spiritu enim non dixisset, quia spiritus ultro sanctus agnoscitur nec <ex>spectat sanctitatis admonitionem, quae propria natura est eius; caro autem docetur sanctitatem, quae et in Christo fuit sancta. [10] Igitur si omnia ista oblitterant licentia<m> nubendi et condicione licentiae inspecta et praelatione continentiae imposita, cur non potuerit post apostolos idem spiritus superveniens ad deducendam disciplinam in omnem veritatem per gradus temporum — secundum quod Ecclesiastes: Tempus omni rei inquit — supremam iam carni fibulam imponere, iam non oblique a nuptiis avocans, sed exerte, cum magis nunc tempus in collecto factum sit annis circiter CLX exinde productis? [11] Nonne ipse apud te retractares, vetus haec disciplina sit, praemonstrata iam tunc in carne domini et in voluntate, dehinc in apostolorum eius tam consiliis quam exemplis? ‘olim sanctitati huic destinabamur; nihil novi Paraclitus inducit; quod praemonuit, definit, quod sustinuit, exposcit.’ Et nunc recogitans ista facile tibi persuadebis multo magis unicas nuptias competisse Paraclito praedicare, qui potuit et nullas, magisque credendum temperasse illum, quod et abstulisse decuisset. [12] Si, quae velit Christus, intelligas, in hoc quoque Paraclitum agnoscere debes

IV. [1] Secedat nunc mentio Paracliti ut nostri alicuius auctoris; evolvamus communia instrumenta scripturarum pristinorum. Hoc ipsum demonstratur a nobis neque novam neque extraneam esse monogamiae disciplinam, immo et antiquam et propriam Christianorum, ut Paraclitum restitutorem potius sentias eius quam institutorem. [2] Quod pertineat ad antiquitatem, quae potest antiquior forma proferri quam ipse census generis humani? Unam feminam masculo deus finxit una costa eius decerpta et utique ex pluribus. Sed et in praefatione ipsius operis: Non est, inquit, homini bonum eum solum esse; faciamus adiutorium illi; adiutores enim dixisset, si pluribus eum uxoribus destinasset. [3] Adiecit et legem de futuro, siquidem prophetiae dictum est: Et erunt duo in unam carnem, non tres neque plures; ceterum iam non duo, si plures. Stetit lex; denique perseveravit unio coniugii in auctoribus generis ad finem usque, non quia non erant feminae aliae, sed quia ideo non erant, ne primitiae generis duplici matrimonio contaminarentur. [4] Alioquin si deus voluisset, et esse potuisset; certe de filiarum suarum numerositate sumpsisset, non minus ex ossibus et ex carne sua habens Evam, si hoc pie fieret. [5] At ubi primum scelus homicidium in fratricidio dedicatum, tam dignum secundo loco scelus non fuit quam duae nuptiae; neque enim refert, duas quis uxores singulas habuerit an pariter singulae duos fecerint: idem numerus coniunctorum et separatorum. [6] Semel tamen vim passa institutio dei per Lamech constitit postea in finem usque gentis illius; secundus Lamech nullus exstitit quomodo duabus maritus: negat scriptura, quod non notat. Aliae diluvium iniquitates provocaverunt, semel defensae, quales fuerunt, non tamen septuagies septies, quod duo matrimonia meruerunt. [7] Sed et reformatio secundi generis humani monogamia matre censetur: iterum duo in unam carnem crescere et redundare suscipiunt, Noe et uxor filiique eorum in unicis nuptiis. [8] Etiam in ipsis animalibus monogamia recognoscitur, ne vel bestiae de moechia nascerentur: Ex omnibus, inquit, bestiis ex omni carne duo induces in arcam, ut vivant tecum; masculus et femina erunt; de animalibus volatilibus secundum genus et de omnibus serpentibus terrae secundum genus ipsorum duo ex omnibus introibunt ad te, masculus et femina. [9] Eadem forma et septena ex binis adlegi mandat, ex masculo et femina uno et una. Quid amplius dicam? Immundis quoque alitibus cum binis feminis introire non licuit.

V. [1] Haec quantum ad primordiorum testimonium et originis nostrae patrociniū et divinae institutionis praeiudiciū. Quae utique lex est, non monimentum, quoniam, si ita factum est a primordio, invenimus nos ad initram dirigi a Christo, sicut in quaestione repudiū dicens illud propter duritiā ipsorum a Moyse esse permissum, ab initio autem non ita fuisse, sine dubio ad initium revocat matrimonii individuitatem; ideoque quos deus ab initio coniunxit in unam carnem duos, hodie homo non separabit. [2] Dicit et apostolus scribens ad Ephesios deum proposuisse in semetipso ad dispensationem adimpletionis temporum ad caput, id est ad initium, reciprocare universa in Christo, quae sunt super caelos et super terras in ipso. [3] Sic et duas Graeciae litteras, summam et ultimam, sibi induit dominus, initii et finis concurrentium in se figuras, uti, quemadmodum A ad Ω <usque volvitur et rursus Ω ad A> replicatur, ita ostenderet in se esse et initii decursum ad finem et finis reorsum ad initium, ut omnis dispositio in eo desinens, per quem coepta est, per sermonem scilicet dei, qui[a] caro factus est, proinde desinat, quemadmodum et coepit. [4] Et adeo in Christo omnia revocantur ad initium, ut et fides reversa sit a circumcisione ad integritatem carnis illius, sicut ab initio fuit, et libertas ciborum et sanguinis solius abstinētia, sicut ab initio fuit, et matrimonii individuitas, sicut ab initio fuit, et repudiū cohibitio, quod ab initio non fuit; et postremo totus homo in paradisiū revocatur, ubi ab initio fuit. [5] Cur ergo vel monogamum illo <non> debeat Adam referre, qui [non] potest tam integrum quam inde dimissus est? Quantum pertinet itaque ad initii restitutionem, id a te exigit et dispositionis et spei tuae ratio, quod ab initio fuit; secundum initium, quod tibi et in Adam censetur <et in Noe recensetur>, elige, in quo eorum initium tuum deputes: in ambobus te sibi monogamiae censura defendit. [6] Sed et si initium transmittit ad finem ut A ad Ω , quomodo finis remittit ad initium <ut Ω ad A>, atque ita census noster transfertur in Christum, animalis in spiritalem, quia non primo, quod spiritale est, sed quod animale, dehinc quod spiritale, proinde videamus, an id ipsum debeas huic quoque censui secundo, an in eandem te formam conveniat novissimus quoque Adam in quam et primus, quando novissimus Adam, id est Christus, innuptus in totum, quod etiam primus Adam ante exiliū. [7] Sed donato infirmitati tuae carnis suae exemplo perfectior Adam, id est Christus, eo quoque nomine perfectior qua integrior, volenti quidem tibi spado occurrit in carne; si vero non sufficis, monogamus incurrit in spiritu, unam habens ecclesiam sponsam secundum figuram, quam apostolus <in> illud magnum sacramentum interpretatur, in Christum et ecclesiam, competentes carnali monogamiae per spiritalem. [8] Vides igitur, quemadmodum etiam in Christo nova<n>s censum non possis eum sine monogamiae professione deferre, nisi carne sis, quod spiritu ille est, licet et quod fuit carne, aequae esse debueris.

VI. [1] Sed adhuc nobis quaeramus aliquos originis principes. Non placent enim quibusdam monogami parentes Adam et Noe; fortasse nec Christus. Ad Abraham denique provocant, prohibiti patrem alium praeter deum agnoscere. Sit nunc pater noster Abraham: sit et Paulus: In evangelio, inquit, ego vos genui. [2] Etiam Abrahae te filium exhibe; non enim passivus tibi census est in illo: certum tempus est, quo tuus pater est. Si enim ex fide filii deputemur Abrahae, ut apostolus docet dicens ad Galatas: Cognoscitis nempe, quia, qui ex fide, isti sunt filii Abrahae, quando credidit Abraham deo et deputatum est ei in iustitiam? Opinor, adhuc in monogamia, quia in circumcissione nondum. [3] Quodsi postea in utrumque mutatus est, et in digamiam per ancillae concubinatum et in circumcisionem per testamenti signaculum, non potes illum patrem agnoscere nisi tunc, cum deo credidit, siquidem secundum fidem filius eius es, non secundum carnem; aut si posteriorem Abraham patrem sequeris ut et digamum, recipe et circumcismus. [4] Si reicis circumcismus, ergo recusabis et digamum; duas dispositiones eius binis inter se modis diversas miscere non poteris. Digamia cum circumcissione esse orsus est et monogamia cum praeputatione: recipis digamiam, admitte et circumcisionem; tueris praeputationem, teneris et monogamiae. [5] Adeo autem monogamiae Abrahae filius es sicut et praeputati, ut, si circumcidaris iam, non sis filius, quia non eris ex fide, sed ex signaculo fidei in praeputatione iustificatae. Habens apostolum disce cum Galatis. Proinde etsi digamiam iam tibi intuleris, non es illius, cuius fides in monogamia praecessit. Nam etsi postea pater multarum nationum nuncupatur, sed earum, quae ex fide digamiam praecedente filii habeant deputari Abrahae. [6] Exinde res viderint: aliud sunt figurae, aliud formae, aliud imagines, aliud definitiones: imagines transeunt adimpletae, definitiones permanent adimplendae; imagines prophetant, definitiones gubernant. [7] Quid digamia illa Abrahae portendat, idem apostolus edocet interpretator utriusque testamenti, sicut idem semen nostrum in Isaac vocatum determinat. Si ex libera es, ad Isaac pertines; hic certe unum matrimonium pertulit. [8] Isti itaque sunt, ut opinor, in quibus censeor. Ceteros nescio; quorum si exempla circumspicio, alicuius David etiam per sanguinem nuptias sibi ingerentis, alicuius Salomonis etiam uxoribus divitis, meliora sectari iussus habes et Iosephum uniugum — et hoc nomine audeo dicere patre meliorem — , habes Moysen dei de proximo arbitrium, habes Aaronem principalem. sacerdotem. [9] Secundus quoque Moyses populi secundi, qui imaginem nostram in promissionem dei induxit, in quo primo nomen domini dedicatum est, non fuit digamus.

VII. [1] Post vetera exempla originalium personarum aequae ad vetera transeamus instrumenta legalium scripturarum, ut per ordinem de omni nostra paratura retractemus. Et quoniam quidam interdum nihil sibi dicunt esse cum lege — quam Christus non dissolvit, sed adimplevit — , interdum quae volunt legis arripiunt, plane et nos sic dicimus decessisse legem, ut onera quidem eius, secundum sententiam apostolorum quae nec patres sustinere valuerunt, concessarint, quae vero ad iustitiam spectant, non tantum reservata permaneant, verum et ampliata, ut scilicet redundare possit iustitia nostra super scribarum et Pharisaeorum iustitia[m]. [2] <Si> iusti<tia>, utique et pudicitia. Si ergo, quoniam in lege praecipitur, ut quis fratris sui uxorem sine liberis defuncti in matrimonium adsumat ad suscitandum fratri suo semen, idque saepius evenire in unam personam potest secundum callidam illam quaestionem Sadducaeorum, ideo et alias putant permissam frequentiam nuptiarum, intelligere debebunt primo rationem ipsius praecepti et ita scient illam rationem iam cessantem ex eis esse, quae evacuata sint. [3] Necessario succedendum erat in matrimonium fratris sine liberis defuncti, primum, quia adhuc vetus illa benedictio decurrere habebat: Crescite et redundate, dehinc, quoniam patrum delicta etiam de filiis exigebantur, tertio, quoniam spadones et steriles ignominiosi habebantur. [4] Itaque ne proinde maledicti iudicarentur, qui non naturae reatu, sed mortis praeventu orbi decessissent, ideo illis ex suo genere vicaria et quasi postuma suboles supparabatur. At ubi et crescite et redundate evacuavit extremitas temporum inducente apostolo: Superest, ut et qui habent uxores sic sint, ac si non habeant, quia tempus in collectum est, et desinit uva acerba a patribus manducata filiorum dentes obstupefacere — unusquisque enim in suo delicto morietur — et spadones non tantum ignominia caruerunt, verum et gratiam meruerunt invitati in regna caelorum, sepulta lege succedendi in matrimonium fratris contrarium eius obtinuit non succedendi in matrimoniam fratris. [5] Et ita, ut praediximus, quod cessavit valere cessante ratione non potest alii argumentationem accommodare. Ergo non nubet defuncto viro uxor, fratri utique nuptura, si nupserit; omnes enim nos fratres sumus; et illa nuptura in domino habet nubere, id est non ethnico, sed fratri, quia et vetus lex adimit coniugum allophylorum. [6] Cum autem et in Levitico cautum sit: Quicumque sumpserit fratris uxorem, immunditia est, turpitudine, sine liberis morietur, sine dubio, dum ille prohibetur denuo nubere, et illa prohibetur non habens nubere nisi fratri. Quomodo ergo apostolo conveniet et legi, quam non in totum impugnat, cum ad epistolam ipsius venerimus, ostendetur. [7] Interim quod pertineat ad legem, magis nobis competunt argumentationes eius; denique prohibet eadem sacerdotes denuo nubere; filiam quoque sacerdotis iubet viduam vel eiectam, si semen non fuerit illi, in domum patris sui regredi et de pane eius ali. Ideo ‘si semen non fuerit illi’, non ut, si fuerit, denuo nubat — quanto magis enim non imbet, si filios habeat? — sed ut, si habuerit, a filio potius alatur quam a patre, quo et filius praeceptum dei exsequatur: Honora patrem et matrem. [8] Nos autem Iesus summus sacerdos et magnus patris de suo vestiens, quia qui in Christo tinguntur, Christum induerunt, sacerdotes deo patri suo fecit secundum Iohannem. Nam et illum adolescentem festinantem ad exsequias patris ideo revocat, ut ostendat sacerdotes nos vocari ab eo, quos lex vetabat parentum sepulturae adesse: Super omnem, inquit, animam defunctam sacerdos non introibit et super patrem suum et super matrem suam non contaminabitur. [9] Ergo et hoc nos interdictum observare debemus? Non utique; vivit enim unicus pater noster deus et mater ecclesia et neque mortui sumus, qui deo vivimus, neque mortuos sepelimus, quia et illi vivunt in Christo; certe sacerdotes sumus a Christo vocati, monogamiae debitores ex pristina dei lege, quae nos tunc in suis sacerdotibus prophetavit.

VIII. [1] Nunc ad legem proprie nostram, id est evangelium conversi qualibus excipimur exemplis, dum ad sententias pervenimus? Ecce statim quasi in limine duo nobis antistites Christianae sanctitatis occurrunt, monogamia et continentia, alia pudica in Zacharia sacerdote, alia integra in Iohanne antecursore, alia placans deum, alia praedicans Christum, alia totum praedicans sacerdotem, alia plus praeferens quam prophetam, scilicet eum, qui non tantum praedicaverit aut demonstraverit coram, verum etiam baptizaverit

Christum. [2] Quis enim corpus domini dignius initiaret quam eiusmodi caro, qualis et concepit illud et peperit? Et Christum quidem virgo enixa est, semel nuptura post partum, ut uterque sanctitatis titulus in Christi censu disponderetur per matrem et virginem et univiram. [3] At ubi infans templo exhibetur, quis illum in manus suscipit, quis in spiritu primus agnoscit? Vir iustus et cautus et utique non digamus, vel ne dignius mox a femina Christus praedicaretur vetere vidua et univire, quae et templo dedita satis in semetipsa portendebat, quales spiritali templo, id est ecclesiae, debeant adhaerere. [4] Tales arbitros infans dominus expertus non alios habuit et adultus. Petrum solum invenio maritum per socrum, monogamum praesumo per ecclesiam, qua super illum omnem gradum ordinis sui de monogamis erat collocatura. [5] Ceteros cum maritos non invenio, aut spadones intelligam necesse est aut continentes. Nec enim, si penes Graecos communi vocabulo censentur mulieres et uxores pro consuetudinis facilitate — ceterum est proprium vocabulum uxorum — , ideo Paulum sic interpretabimus, quasi uxores demonstret apostolos habuisse. [6] Si enim de matrimoniis disputasset — quod in sequentibus facit, ubi magis apostolus aliquod exemplum nominare potuisset — , recte videretur dicere: Non enim habemus potestatem uxores circumducendi sicut ceteri apostoli et Cephas? [7] At ubi ea subiungit, quae de victuaria exhibitione abstinentiam eius ostendunt dicentis: Non enim habemus potestatem manducandi et bibendi?, non uxores demonstrat ab apostolis deductas, quas et qui non habent, potestatem tamen manducandi et bibendi habent, sed simpliciter mulieres, quae illis eodem instituto quo et dominum comitantes ministrabant. [8] Iam vero si Christus reprobat scribas et Phariseos sedentes in cathedra Moysi nec facientes quae docerent, quale est, ut et ipse super cathedram suam collocaret, qui sanctitatem carnis praecipere magis, non etiam obire meminissent, quam illis omnibus modis insinueret et docendam et agendam? [9] in primis de suo exemplo, tunc de ceteris argumentis, cum puerorum dicit esse regna caelorum, cum consortes illis facit alios post nuptias pueros, cum ad simplicitatem columbae provocat, avis non tantum innocuae, verum et pudicae, quam unam unus masculus novit, cum Samaritanae maritum negat, ut adulterum ostendat numerosum maritum, [10] cum in revelatione gloriae suae de tot sanctis et prophetis Moysen et Heliam secum mavult, alterum monogamum, alterum spadonem — non enim aliud fuit Helias quam Iohannes, qui in virtute et spiritu venit Heliae — , cum ille vorator et potator homo, prandiorum et cenarum cum publicanis et peccatoribus frequentator semel apud unas nuptias cenat multis utique nubentibus; totiens enim voluit celebrare eas, quotiens et esse.

IX. [1] Sed hae argumentationes potius existimentur de coniecturis coactae, si non et sententiae astiterint, quas dominus emisit in repudii retractatu, quod permissum aliquando iam prohibet, inprimis quia ab initio non fuit sicut matrimonii numeras, tunc quia quos deus coniunxit, homo non separabit, scilicet ne contra dominum faciat. [2] Solus enim ille separabit, qui et coniunxit; separabit non autem per duritiam repudii, quam exprobrat compescit, sed per debitum mortis, siquidem unus ex passeribus duobus non cadit in terram sine patris voluntate. [3] Igitur si quos deus coniunxit, homo non separabit repudio, ecquid consentaneum est, ut, quos separavit morte, homo novo coniungat matrimonio, proinde contra dei voluntatem iuncturus separationem atque si separasset coniunctionem? [4] Hoc quantum ad dei voluntatem non destruendam et initii formam restruendam. Ceterum et alia ratio conspirat, immo non alia, sed quae initii formam imposuit et voluntatem dei movit ad prohibitionem repudii, quoniam qui dimiserit uxorem suam praeter ex causa adulterii, facit eam adulterari, et qui dimissam a viro duxerit, adulteratur utique. [5] ‘Non et nubere legitime [non] potest repudiata et, si quid taliter commiserit sine matrimonii nomine, non capit elogium adulterii, qua adulterium in matrimonio crimen est?’ Deus aliter censuit, citra quam homines, ut in totum sive per nuptias sive vulgo alterius viri admissio adulterium pronuntietur, immo <. . >. [6] Ideo videamus enim, quid sit matrimonium apud deum, et ita cognoscemus, quid aeque adulterium. Matrimonium est, cum deus duos iungit in unam carnem aut iunctos deprehendens in eadem carne coniunctione<m> signavit; adulterium est, cum quoquo modo disiunctis duobus alia caro, immo aliena misceatur, de qua dici non possit: Haec est caro ex carne mea et hoc os de ossibus meis. [7] Semel enim hoc et factum et pronuntiatum sicut ab initio ita et nunc in aliam carnem non potest convenire. Itaque sine causa dices deum vivo marito nolle repudiatam alii viri iungi, quasi mortuo velit, quando, si mortuo non tenetur, proinde nec vivo; [8] tam in repudio matrimonmm dirimente quam morte non tenebitur ei, cui, per quod tenebatur, abreptum est. Cui ergo tenebitur, nihil de eo interest, vivo an mortuo a viro nubat; neque enim illo delinquit, sed in semetipsam: [9] Omne delictum, quod admiserit homo, extra corpus est; qui autem adulteratur, in corpus suum delinquit. Adulteratur autem, sicut praestruimus, qui aliam carnem sibi immiscet super illam pristinam, quam deus aut coniunxit in duos aut coniunctam deprehendit. [10] Ideoque abstulit repudium, quod ab initio non fuit, ut, quod ab initio fuit, muniat, duorum in unam carnem. perseverantiam, ne necessitas vel occasio tertiae concarnationis irrumpat, ei soli causae permittens repudium, si forte praeveniret, cui praecavetur. [11] Adeo autem repudium a primordio non fuit, ut apud Romanos post annum sexcentessimum urbis conditae id genus duritiae commissum denotetur. Sed illi etiam non repudiantes adulteria commiscunt; nobis, et si repudiemus, ne nubere quidem licebit.

X. [1] Video iam hinc nos apostolum provocantem. Ad cuius sensum facilius perspicendum tanto instantius praeculcandum est mulierem magis defuncto marito teneri, quominus alium virum admittat. Recogitemus enim repudium aut discordia fieri aut discordiam facere, mortem vero ex lege, non ex hominis offensa evenire idque omnem esse debitum, etiam non maritorum. [2] Igitur si repudiata, quae per discordiam et iram et odium et causas eorum, iniuriam vel contumeliam vel quamlibet querelam, et anima et corpore separata est, tenetur inimico, ne dicam marito, quanto magis illa, quae neque suo neque mariti vitio, sed dominicae legis eventu matrimonio non separata, sed relicta, eius erit etiam defuncti, cui etiam defuncto concordiam debet? [3] A quo repudium non audiit, non divertit; cui repudium non scripsit, cum ipso est; quem amisisse noluit, retinet; habet secum animi licentiam, qui omnia homini, quae non habet, imaginario fructu repraesentat. [4] Ipsam denique interrogo feminam: ‘Dic mihi, soror, in pace praemisisti maritum tuum?’ Quid respondebit? An in discordia? Ergo hoc magis evincta est, cum quo habet apud deum causam; non discessit, quae tenetur. Sed in pace? Ergo perseveret in ea cum illo necesse est, quem iam repudiare non poterit, nec sic quidem nuptura, si repudiare potuisset. (4.) [5] Enimvero et pro anima eius orat et refrigerium interim adpostulat ei et in prima resurrectione consortium et offert annuis diebus dormitionis eius. [6] Nam haec nisi fecerit, <quomodo potuit,> vere repudiavit, quantum in ipsa est, et quidem hoc iniquius, quanto [quomodo potuit] <iam aequius, si> quia non potuit, et hoc indignius, quanto iam [in]dignius, si quia non meruit. [7] Aut numquid nihil erimus post mortem secundum aliquem Epicuram et non secundum Christum? Quodsi credidimus mortuorum resurrectionem, utique tenebimur, cum quibus resurrecturi sumus rationem de alterutro reddituri. Si autem in illo aevo neque nubent neque nubentur, sed erunt aequales angelis, non ideo non tenebimur coniugibus defunctis, quia non erit restitutio coniugii? [8] Atquin eo magis tenebimur, quia in meliorem statum destinamur, resurrecturi in spiritale consortium, agniture quam nosmetipsos quam et nostros. Ceterum quomodo gratias deo in aeternum canemus, si non manebit in nobis sensus et memoria debiti huius? Substantia, non conscientia reformabimur? [9] Ergo qui cum deo erimus, simul erimus, dum omnes apud deum unum — licet merces varia, licet multae mansiones penes patrem eundem — , uno denario eiusdem mercedis operati, id est vitae aeternae, in qua magis non separabit quos coniunxit deus, qui in ista minore vita separari vetat. [10] Cum ita sint, quomodo alii viro vacabit, quae suo etiam in futurum occupata est? — utrique autem sexui loquimur, etsi ad alterum sermo est, quia una omnibus disciplina praeest; — aliud habebit in spiritu aliud et in carne? Hoc erit adulterium, unius feminae in duos viros conscientia. [11] Si alter a carne disiunctus est, sed in corde remanet, illic, ubi etiam congregatus sine carnis congressu et adulterium ante perficitur ex concupiscentia et matrimonium ex voluntate, usque adhuc maritus est, ipsum. illud possidens, per quod et factus est, id est animum, in quo si et alius habitabit, hoc erit crimen. [12] Ceterum non est exclusus, si a viliore commercio carnis discessit: honoratior maritus est, quanto mundior factus est.

XI. [1] Ut igitur in domino nubas secundum et apostolum — si tamen vel hoc curas — , qualis es id matrimonium postulans, quod eis a quibus postulas non licet habere, ab episcopo monogamo, a presbyteris et diaconis eiusdem sacramenti, a viduis, quarum sectam in te recusasti? [2] Et illi plane sic dabunt viros et uxores quomodo bucellas — hoc enim est apud illos: Omni petenti te dabis — et coniungent vos in ecclesia virgine, unius Christi unica sponsa, et orabis pro maritis tuis, novo et vetere? [3] Elige, cui te adulteram praestes; puto, ambobus. Quodsi sapias, taceas defuncto; repudium sit illi silentium tuum, alienis iam dotalibus scriptum. Hoc modo novum promereberis maritum, si veteris obliviscaris: debes magis illi placere, propter quem deo placere non maluisti. [4] Haec psychici volunt apostolum probasse aut in totum non recogitasse, cum scriberet: Mulier vincta est, in quantum temporis vivit vir eius; si autem mortuus fuerit, libera est: cui vult nubat, tantum in domino. Ex hoc enim capitulo defendunt licentiam secundi matrimonii, immo et plurimi, si secundi; quod enim semel esse desiit, omm obnoxium est numero. [5] Quo autem sensu apostolus scripserit, ita relucebit, si prius constet non hoc illum sensu scripsisse, quo psychici utuntur; constabit autem, si quis ea recordetur, quae huic capitulo diversa sunt et apud doctrinam et apud voluntatem et apud propriam ipsius Pauli disciplinam. [6] Si enim secundas nuptias remittit, quae ab initio non fuerunt, quomodo affirmat omnia ad initium recolligi in Christo? Si vult nos iterare coniugia, quomodo semen nostrum in Isaac semel marito auctore defendit? [7] Quomodo totum ordinem ecclesiae de monogamis disponit, si non haec disciplina praecedat in laicis, ex quibus ecclesiae ordo proficit? Quomodo in matrimonio adhuc positos a fructu matrimonii avocat dicens in collectum esse tempus, si per mortem matrimonio elapsos iterum in matrimonium revocat? [8] Haec si diversa sunt ei capitulo, de quo agitur, constabit, ut diximus, non hoc illum sensu scripsisse, quo psychici utuntur, quia facilius est, ut aliquam rationem habeat unum illud capitulum, quae cum ceteris <s>apiat, quam ut apostolus diversa inter se docuisse videatur. [9] Eam rationem in ipsa materia poterimus recognoscere. Quae ista materia apostolo fuit scribendi talia? Tirocinium novae et quam maxime orientis ecclesiae, quam lacte scilicet educabat, nondum solido cibo validioris doctrinae, adeo ut prae illa infantia fidei ignorarent adhuc, quid sibi agendum esset circa carnis et sexus necessitatem. [10] Cuius etiam ipsas species ex rescriptis intelligimus: cum dicit: De his autem quae scribitis: bonum est homini mulierem non attingere; propter fornicationes autem unusquisque uxorem suam habeat, ostendit fuisse qui in matrimonio a fide deprehensi verebantur, ne non liceret illis matrimonio suo exinde uti, quia in carnem sanctam Christi credidissent. [11] Et tamen secundum veniam concedit, non secundum imperium, id est indulgens, non praecipiens ita fieri. Ceterum malebat omnes id esse quod et ipse. Proinde et de repudio rescribens demonstrat quosdam de isto quoque cogitasse, vel maxime, quia et in ethnicis matrimoniis non putabant post fidem perseverandum. [12] Quarebant et de virginibus consilium — praeceptum enim domini non erat — : bonum esse homini, si sic permaneat, utique quomodo a fide fuerit inventus: Vinctus es enim uxori? ne quaesieris solutionem; solutus es ab uxore? ne quaesieris uxorem. Si autem acceperis uxorem, non deliquisti, quia ante fidem soluto ab uxore non numerabitur post fidem secunda uxor, quae post fidem prima est. [13] A fide enim etiam ipsa vita nostra censetur. Sed hic parcere se dicit illis; alioquin pressuram carnis subsecuturam prae angustiis temporum impedimenta matrimonii recusantibus; quin potius de domino sollicitudinem habendam promerendo quam de marito. Et ita revocat, quod permisit. [14] Sic ergo in eodem ipso capitulo, quo definivit unumquemque, in qua vocatione vocabitur, in ea perseverare debere, adiciens: Mulier vincta est, quamdiu vivit vir eius; si autem dormierit, libera est: cui volet nubat, tantum in domino, hanc quoque eam demonstrat intelligendam, quae et ipsa sic fuerit inventa soluta a viro, quomodo et vir solutus ab uxore, per mortem utique, non per repudium facta solutione, quia repudiatis non permetteret nubere adversus pristinum praeceptum. [15] Itaque et mulier, si nupserit, non delinquit, quia nec hic secundus maritus deputabitur, qui est a fide primus, et adeo sic est, ut propterea adiecerit: Tantum in domino, quia de ea agebatur, quae ethnicum habuerat et amisso eo crediderat, ne scilicet etiam post fidem ethnico se nubere posse praesumeret, licet nec hoc psychici curent. [16] Sciamus plane non sic esse in Graeco authentico, quomodo in usum exiit per duarum syllabarum aut callidam aut simplicem eversionem: Si autem dormierit vir eius, quasi de futuro sonet ac per hoc videatur ad eam pertinere, quae iam in fide virum amiserit. [17] Hoc quidem si ita esset, in infinitum emissa licentia totiens virum dedisset, quotiens amissus esset, sine ullo pudore nubendi etiam ethnicos congruente[s]. Sed si ita esset quasi de futuro: ‘si cuius maritus mortiras fuerit’, tantundem et futurum ad eam pertineret, cuius ante fidem morietur maritus. Quavis accipe, dum cetera non evertas. [18] Nam cum et illa sententiae <prae>cedant: Servus vocatus es? ne curaveris; in praeputi<o voc>atus es? ne circumcidaris; circumcisis vocatus es? ne adduxeris — quibus concurrat: Vinctus es uxori? ne quaesieris solutionem; solutus es ab uxore? ne quaesieris uxorem —, satis manifestum est ad eos haec pertinere, qui in nova et recenti vocatione constituti de his consulebant, in quibus a fide fuerant deprehensi. [19] Haec erit interpretatio capituli istius, de hoc examinanda, an et tempori et causae et tam exemplis et argumentis praecedentibus quam et sentiis et sensibus subsequentibus et in primis an ipsius apostoli et consilio proprio congruat et instituto; nihil enim custodiendum est, quam ne diversus sibi deprehendatur.

XII. [1] Audi et aliam subtilissimam e contrario argumentationem. ‘Adeo’, inquiunt, ‘permisit apostolus iterare conubium, ut solos qui sint in clero monogamiae iugo adstrinxerit; quod enim quibusdam praescribit, id non omnibus praescribit.’ [2] Numquid ergo et quod omnibus praecipit, solis episcopis non praescribit, si, quod episcopis praescribit, non et omnibus praecipit? An ideo omnibus, quia et episcopis, et ideo episcopis, quia et omnibus? Unde enim episcopi et clerus? Nonne de omnibus? [3] Si non omnes monogamiae tenentur, unde monogami in clerum? An ordo aliquis seorsum debet institui monogamorum, de quo allectio fiat in clerum? [4] Sed cum extollimur et inflamur adversus cleram, tunc unum omnes sumus, tunc omnes sacerdotes, quia sacerdotes nos deo et patri fecit; cum ad peraequationem disciplinae sacerdotalis provocamur, deponimus infulas et pares <non> sumus. [5] De ecclesiasticis ordinibus agebatur, quales ordinari oporteret. Oportebat igitur omnem communis disciplinae formam sua fronte proponi, edictum quodammodo futurum universis impressioni, quo magis sciret plebs eum ordinem sibi observandum, qui faceret praepositos, et ne vel ipse honor aliquid sibi ad licentiam quasi de privilegio loci blandiatur. [6] Prospiciebat spiritus sanctus dicturos quosdam: ‘Omnia licent episcopis’, sicut ille vester Utinensis nec Scantiniam timuit. Quot enim ex digamia praesident apud vos, insultantes utique apostolo, certe non erubescences, cum haec sub illis leguntur! [7] Age iam, qui putas acceptionem monogamiae de episcopis factam, recede <et> a reliquis tuis titulis disciplinae, qui cum monogamia episcopis ascribuntur: noli esse irreprehensibilis, sobrius, bene moratus, ornatus, hospitalis, docibilis, quin vero et vino deditus et [manu promptus ad caedendum et] pugnax et pecuniae amans et domum non regens nec filiorum curans disciplinam, sed nec ab extraneis famam bonam sectans. [8] Si enim suam habent episcopi legem circa monogamiam, etiam cetera, quae monogamiae accedere oportebit, episcopis erunt scripta, laicis vero, quos monogamia non convenit, cetera quoque aliena sunt. Evasisti, psychice, si velis, vincula disciplinae totius; praescribe constanter non omnibus praecipi, quae quibusdam sint praecepta. [9] Aut si cetera quidem communia sunt, monogamia vero solis episcopis imposita est, numquid illi soli Christiani pronuntiandi, in quos tota disciplina collata est?

XIII. [1] ‘Sed et Timotheo scribens vult iuvenculas nubere, filios suscipere, matres familias agere.’ Ad eas dirigit, quales supra denotat, iuvenculas viduas, quae in viduitate deprehensae et aliquamdiu assectatae, postquam in deliciis habuerunt Christum, nubere volunt, habentes iudicium, quod primam fidem resciderunt, illam scilicet, a qua in viduitate inventae et professae eam non perseverant. [2] Propter quod vult eas nubere, ne primam fidem susceptae viduitatis postea rescindant, non ut totiens nubant, quotiens in viduitate temptanda, immo et in deliciis habita noluerint perseverare. [3] Legimus et ascribentem Romanos eum: Quae, autem sub viro est mulier, viventi viro vincta est; si autem obierit, evacuata est a lege viri. Nempe ergo vivente viro adulterare putabitur, si facto fuerit alii viro; si vero obierit vir, liberata est a lege, quod non sit adultera, facta alii viro. [4] Sed et sequentia recognosce, quo sensus iste, qui tibi blanditur, evadat. Itaque, inquit, fratres mei, mortificamini et vos legi per corpus Christi, ut efficiamini alteri, ei scilicet, qui a mortuis resurrexit, uti fructum feramus deo. Cum enim eramus in carne, passiones delictorum, quae per legem, efficiebantur in membris nostris ad fructum ferendum morti; nunc autem evacuati sumus a lege, mortui, in quo tenebamur, ad serviendum [deo] in novitate spiritus et non in vetustate litterae. [5] Igitur si mortificari nos iubet legi per corpus Christi, quod est ecclesia, quae spiritu novitatis constat, non per litteram vetustatis, id est legis, auferens te a lege, quae <non> tenet uxorem marito defuncto, quominus alii viro fiat, ad contrariam te redigit condicionem, ne amisso viro nubas; [6] quantumque non deputereris adultera, alteri viro facta post mortem mariti, si adhuc in lege agere deberes, tanto ex diversitate condicionis adulterii praeiudicat te post mortem mariti alii nubentem: quia iam mortificare legi, non potest tibi licere, cum recessisti ab ea, apud quam tibi licebat.

XIV. [1] Nunc <si> et absolute apostolus permisisset in fide amisso matrimonio nubere, proinde fecisset quemadmodum et cetera, quae adversus formam regulae suae pro condicione temporum gessit, circumcidens Timotheum propter superducticios falsos fratres et rasos quosdam inducens in templum propter observationem Iudaeorum, ille qui Galatas in lege volentes agere castigat. [2] Sed ita res exigebant, ut omnibus omnia fieret, quo omnes lucrificeret, parturiens illos, donec formaretur Christus in ipsis, et calefaciens tamquam nutrix parvulos fidei, docendo quaedam per veniam, non per imperium — aliud est enim indulgere, aliud iubere — , proinde temporalem licentiam permittens denuo nubendi propter infirmitatem carnis quemadmodum Moyses repudiandi propter durtiam cordis. [3] Et hic itaque reddemus supplementum sensus istius. Si enim Christus abstulit, quod Moyses praecepit, quia ab initio non fuit sic, nec sic ideo ab alia virtute venisse reputabitur Christus, cur non et Paracletus abstulerit, quod Paulus indulsit, quia et secundum matrimonium ab initio non fuit, nec ideo suspectus habendus sit quasi spiritus alienus, tantum ut deo et Christo dignum sit, quod superducitur? [4] Si deo et Christo dignum fuit duritiam cordis tempore expleto compescere, cur non dignius sit et deo et Christo infirmitatem carnis tempore iam collectiore discutere? Si iam iustum est matrimonium non separari, utique et non iterari honestum est. Denique apud saeculum utrumque in bona disciplina deputatur, aliud concordiae nomine, aliud pudicitiae. [5] Regnavit duritia cordis usque ad Christum, regnaverit et infirmitas carnis usque ad Paracletum; nova lex abstulit repudium — habuit et, quod auferret — et nova prophetia secundum matrimonium, non minus repudium prioris. [6] Sed facilius duritia cordis Christo cessit quam infirmitas carnis; plus haec sibi Paulum defendit quam illa Moysen, si tamen defendit, cum indulgentem eum captat, praescribentem recusat, quae potiores sententias et perpetuas voluntates eius eludit, quae non sinit nos hoc apostolo praestare quod mavult. [7] Et quousque infirmitas ista impudentissima in expugnando meliora perseverabit? Tempus eius donec Paracletus operaretur, fuit, in quem dilata sunt a domino, quae tunc sustinere non poterant, quae iam nemini competit portare non posse, quia, per quem datur portare posse, non deest. [8] Quamdiu causabimur carnem, quia dixit dominus: Caro infirma? Sed praemisit et: Spiritus promptus, ut vincat spiritus carnem, ut cedat quod infirmum est fortiori. Nam et: Qui potest capere, capiat inquit, id est qui non potest discedat; discessit et ille dives, qui non ceperat substantiae dividendae egenis praeceptum, et dimissus est sententiae suae a domino. [9] Nec ideo duritia imputabitur Christo de arbitrii cuiuscumque liberi vitio: Ecce, inquit, posui ante te bonum et malum; elige quod bonum est; si non potes, quia non vis — posse enim te, si velis, ostendit, quia tuo arbitrio utrumque proposuit —, discedas oportet ab eo, cuius non facis voluntatem.

XV. [1] Quae igitur hic duritia nostra, si non facientibus voluntatem dei renuntiamus? quae haeresis, si secundas nuptias ut illicitas iuxta adulterium iudicamus? Quid est enim adulterium quam matrimonium illicitum? [2] Notat apostolus eos, qui in totum nubere prohibebant, qui et de cibis interdicebant, quos deus condidit. Nos vero non magis nuptias auferimus, si secundas recusamus, quam cibos reprobamus, si saepius ieiunamus. Aliud est auferre, aliud temperare, aliud est legem non nubendi ponere, aliud est modum nubendi statuere. [3] Plane, qui exprobrant nobis duritiam vel haeresim in hac causa aestimant. si in tantum foveant carnis mei <in>firmitatem, ut in nubendo frequenter sustinendam putant, cur illam in alia causa neque sustinent neque venia foveant, cum tormentis expugnata est in negationem? [4] Utique enim illam magis excusari capit, quae in proelio cecidit quam quae in cubiculo, quae in eculeo succubuit quam quae in lectulo, quae crudelitati cessit quam quae libidini, quae gemens devicta est quam quae subans. Sed illam quidem a communicatione depellunt, quia non sustinuit in finem, hanc vero suscipiunt, quasi et haec sustinuerit in finem. [5] Propone, quid utraque non sustinuerit in finem, et invenies eius causam honestiorem, quae saevitiam quam quae pudicitiam sustinere non potuit. Et tamen nec cruentam defectionem infirmitas carnis excusat, nedum impudicam.

XVI. [1] Rideo autem, cum infirmitas carnis opponitur, quae summa fortitudo dicenda est. Iterum nubere virium res est; resurgere in opera carnis de continentiae otio substantia est laterum. Talis infirmitas et tertio et quarto et usque septimo forsitan matrimonio sufficit, ut quae totiens fortior quotiens fuerit infirmior, habitura iam non apostolum auctorem, sed Hermogenem aliquem, plures solitum mulieres ducere quam pingere. [2] Materia enim in illo abundat, unde et animam esse praesumens multo magis spiritum a deo non habet, iam nec psychicus quia non de afflatu dei psychicus. [3] Quid, si inopiam quis causetur, ut carnem suam aperte prostitutam profiteatur exhibitionis causa nubentem, oblitus de victu et vestitu non esse cogitandum? Habet deum etiam corvorum educatorem, etiam florum excultorem. [4] Quid, si solitudinem domus ostendat? Quasi una mulier frequentiam praestet homini ad fugam proximo. Habet viduam utique, quam assumat licebit: non unam huius generis uxorem, sed iam plures habere concessum est. [5] Quid, si de posteritate quis cogitet isdem animis quibus oculis uxor Loth, ut ideo quis repetat matrimonium, quia de priore liberos non habuit? Heredes scilicet Christianus quaeret, saeculi totius exheres: habet fratres, habet ecclesiam matrem. [6] Aliud est, si et apud Christum legibus Iuliis agi credunt et existimant caelibes et orbos ex testamento dei solidum capere non posse. Nubant igitur huiusmodi in finem usque, ut in ista confusione carnis sicut Sodoma et Gomorra et diluvii dies ab illo ultimo exitu saeculi deprehendantur. [7] Adiciant tertium dictum: Manducemus et bibamus et nubamus, cras enim moriemur, non recogitantes vae illud praegnantibus et lactantibus multo gravius et amarius eventurum in concussione totius mundi, quam evenit in vastatione unius particulae Iudae. [8] Satis opportunos novissimis temporibus fructus iteratis matrimoniis colligant: ubera fluitantia et uteros nauseantes et infantes pipiantes; parent antichristo, in quo libidinosius saeviat; adducet illis carnifices obstetrices.

XVII. [1] Habebunt plane, Christo quod legent speciosum privilegium, carnis usquequaque imbecillitatem. Sed hanc iudicabunt iam non Isaac monogamus pater noster nec Iohannes aliqui Christi spado nec Iudith [nec] filia Merari nec tot alia exempla sanctorum: solent ethnici iudices destinari. [2] Exsurget regina Carthagini et decernet in Christianas, quae . profuga et in alieno solo et tantae civitatis cum maxime formatrix, cum regis nuptias ultro optasse debuisset, ne tamen secundas eas experiretur, maluit e contrario uri quam nubere. [3] Assidebit et illi matrona Romana, quae etsi per vim nocturnam nihilo minus alium virum experta maculam carnis suo sanguine abluit, ut monogamiam in semetipsam vindicaret. Fuerunt et quae pro viris mori mallent quam post viros nubere. [4] Idolis certe et [in] monogamia et viduitas apparent: Fortunae Muliebri coronam non imponit nisi univiris sicut Matri Matutae; pontifex maximus et flaminica semel nubunt; Cereris sacerdotes viventibus etiam viris et consentientibus amica separatione viduantur. [5] Sunt et quae de tota continentia iudicent nos, virgines Vestae et Iunonis Achaicae et Dianae Scythicae et Apollinis Pythii; etiam bovis illius Aegyptii antistites de continentia infirmitatem Christianorum iudicabunt. [6] Embesce, caro, quae Christum induisti! Sufficiat tibi semel nubere, in quod a primordio facta es, in quod e fini revocaris. Redi in Adam vel priorem, si in novissimum non potes; semel gustavit ille de arbore, semel concupiit, semel pudenda protexit, semel deo erubuit, semel ruborem suum abscondit, semel de paradiso sanctitatis exulavit, semel exinde nupsit. [7] Si in illo fuisti, habes tuam formam, si in Christum transisti, melior esse debebis. Exhibe te tertium Adam et hunc digamum et tunc poteris esse, quod inter duos non potes.

De Jeuniis, adversus psychicos (On Fasting, against the materialists)

CAP. I. 1. Mirarer psychicos istos, si sola luxuria tenerentur, qua saepius nubunt, si non etiam ingluvie lacerarentur, qua ieiunia oderant. Monstrum scilicet haberetur libido sine gula, cum duo haec tam unita atque concreta sint, ut si disiungi omnino potuissent, ipsi prius uentri pudenda non adhaerent. Specta corpus, et una regio est. 2. Denique pro dispositione membrorum ordo uitiorum. Prior uenter, et statim cetera saginae substructa lasciuiam est; per edacitatem salacitas transit. Agnosco igitur animalem fidera studio carnis, qua tota constat, tam multuorantiae quam multinubentiae pronam, ut merito spiritalem disciplinam pro substantia aemulam in hac quoque specie continentiae accuset perinde gulae frenos imbuentem per nullas interdum uel seras uel aridas escas, quemadmodum et libidini per unicas nuptias. 3. Piget iam cum talibus congregari, pudet etiam. de eis altercari quorum nec defensio uerecunda est. Quomodo enim protegam castitatem et sobrietatem sine taxatione aduersariorum? Quinam isti sint, semel nominabo: exteriores et interiores botuli psychicorum. Hi paracleta controuersiam faciunt; propter hoc nouae prophetiae recusantur; non quod alium deum praedicent Montanus et Priscilla et Maximilla, nec quod Iesum Christum soluant, nec quod aliquam fidei aut spei regulam, euertant, sed quod plane doceant saepius ieiunare quam nubere. 4. De modo quidem nubendi iam edidimus monogamiae defensionem. Nunc de castigatione uictus secunda uel magis prima continentiae pugna est. Arguunt nos, quod lemma propria custodiamus, quod stationes plerumque in uesperam producamus, quod etiam xerophagias obseruemus siccantes cibum ab omni carne et omni iurulentia et uuidioribus quibusque pomis nec quid uinositatis uel edamus uel potemus; lauacri quoque abstinentiam, congruentem arido uictui. 5. Nouitatem igitur obiectant, de cuius illicito praescribant aut haeresin iudicandam, si humana praesumptio est, aut pseudoprophetiam pronuntiandam, si spiritalis indictio est, dum quaque ex parte anathema audiamus, qui aliter adnuntiamus.

CAP II. 1. Nam quod ad ieiunia pertineat, certos dies a deo constitutos opponunt, ut cum in Leuitico praecipit dominus Moysi decimam mensis septimi diem placationis, sancta, inquit, erit uobis dies, et uexabitis animas uestras, et omnis anima, quae uexata non fuerit in illa die, exterminabitur de populo suo. 2. Certe in euangelio illos dies ieiuniis determinatos putant, in quibus ablati sunt sponsus, et hos esse iam. solos legitimos ieiuniorum. Christianorum abolitis legalibus et prophetis uetustatibus. Vbi uolunt enim, agnoscunt quid sapiat lex et prophetae usque ad Iohannem. 3. Itaque de cetero indifferenter ieiunandum ex arbitrio, non ex imperio nouae disciplinae, pro temporibus et causis uniuscuiusque; sic et apostolos obseruasse, nullum aliud imponentes iugum certorum et in commune omnibus obeundorum ieiuniorum, proinde nec stationum, quae et ipsae suos quidem dies habeant quartae feriae et sextae, passim tamen currant, neque sub lege praecepti neque ultra supremam diei, quando et orationes fere hora nona concludat de Petri exemplo, quod Actis refertur. 4. Xerophagias uero nouum adfectati officii nomen et proximum ethnicae superstitioni, quales castimoniae Apim, Isidem et Magnam Matrem certorum eduliorum exceptione purificant, cum fides libera in Christo ne Iudaicae quidem legi abstinentiam quorundam ciborum debeat, semel in totum macellum ab apostolo admissa, detestatore eorum qui sicut nubere prohibeant, ita iubeant cibis abstinere a deo conditis. 5. Et ideo non esse iam tunc praenotatos in nouissimis temporibus abscedentes a fide, intendentes spiritibus mundi seductoribus, doctrinis mendaciloquorum inustam habentes conscientiam. Quibus, oro te, ignibus? Credo, quibus nuptias saepe deducimus et cenas quotidie coquimus? 6. Sic et cum Galatis nos quoque percuti aiunt obseruatores dierum et mensium et annorum. Iaculantur interea et Esaia pronuntiasse: non tale ieiunium dominus elegit, id est non abstinentiam cibi, sed opera iustitiae, quae subtextit; et ipsum dominum in euangelio ad omnem circa uictum scrupulositatem compendio respondisse, non his communicari hominem quae in os inferantur, sed quae ex ore proferantur, cum. et ipse manducaret et biberet usque in notationem: ecce homo uorator et potator! 7. Sic et apostolum docere, quod esca nos deo non commendat, neque abundantes, si edamus, neque deficientes, si non edamus. His et huiusmodi sensibus eo iam subtiliter tendunt, ut unusquisque prior uentri possit superuacua nec adeo necessaria existimare sublata uel deminuta uel demorati cibi officia, praeposante scilicet deo iustitiae et innocentiae opera. 8. Et scimus, quales sint carnalium commodorum suasoriae, quam facile dicatur: opus est de totis praecordiis credam, diligam deum et proximum tamquam me. In his enim duobus praecceptis tota lex pendet et prophetae, non in pulmonum et intestinorum meorum inanitate.

CAP III. 1. Ita que nos hoc prius affirmare debemus quod occulte subruī periclitatur, quantum ualeat apud deum inanitas ista, et ante omnia, unde ratio ipsa processerit hoc modo promerendi deum. Tunc enim agnoscetur obseruationis necessitas, cum eluxerit rationis auctoritas a primordio recensendae. 2. Acceperat Adam a deo legem non gustandi de arbore agnitionis boni et mali, moriturus si gustasset. Verum et ipse tunc in psychicum reuersus post ecstasin spiritalem, in qua magnum illud sacramentum in Christum et ecclesiam prophetauerat, nec iam capiens quae erant spiritus, facilius uentri quam deo cessit, pabulo potius quam praecepto annuit, salutem gula uendidit. Manducauit denique et periit, saluus alioquin, si uni arbusculae ieiunare maluisset; ut iam hinc animalis fides semen suum recognoscat exinde deducens carnalium adpetitionem et spiritualium recusationem. 3. Teneo igitur a primordio homicidam gulam tormentis atque suppliciis inediae puniendam, etiamsi deus nulla ieiunia praecepisset. Ostendens tamen, unde sit occisus Adam, mihi reliquerat intellegenda remedia offensae, qui offensam demonstrat. Vltro cibum, quibus modis quibusque temporibus potuissem, pro ueneno deputarem et antidotum famem sumerem, per quam purgarem mortis a primordio causam in me quoque cum ipso genere transductam, certus hoc deum uelle cuius contrarium noluit satisque confidens placituram illi continentiae curam, a quo damnatam comperissem incontinentiae culpam. 4. Porro, cum et ipse ieiunium mandet et animam conquassatam proprie utique cibi angustiis sacrificium, appellet, quis iam dubitabit omnium erga uictum macerationum hanc fuisse rationem, qua rursus interdicto cibo et obseruato praecepto primordiale iam delictum expiaretur, ut homo per eandem materiam causae satis deo faciat per quam offenderat id est per cibi interdictionem, atque ita salutem aemulo modo redaccenderet inedia, sicut extinxerat sagina, pro unico illicito plura licita contemnens?

CAP IV. 1. Haec ratio seruabatur apud prouidentiam dei pro temporibus omnia modulantis, ne quis ex diuerso ad deiciendam propositionem nostram, cur ergo, dicat, non statim deus aliquam uictus constituit castigationem, quin immo et auxit permissionem? 2. Nam in primordio quidem herbidum solummodo et arboreum homini pabulum addixerat: ecce dedi uobis omne faenum sementium seminans semen quod est super terram, et omne lignum quod habet in semetipso fructum seminis sementiui uobis erit in escam. Postea uero ad Noe enumerata subiectione omnium bestiarum terme et uolatilium caeli et mouentium in terra et piscium maris et omnis serpentis, erunt, inquit, uobis in escam: uelut holera faeni dedi uobis uniuersa, uerum carnem in sanguine animae suae non edetis. 3. Nam et hoc ipso, quod eam solam carnem esui eximit, cuius anima non per sanguinem effunditur, omnis reliquae carnis usum concessisse manifestum est. Ad haec respondemus non competisse onerari hominem aliqua adhuc abstinentiae lege, qui cum maxime tam leuem interdictionem unius scilicet pomi tolerare non potuit; remissum itaque illum libertate ipsa corroborandum. Aequè post diluuium in reformatione generis humani suffecisse unam interim legem a sanguine abstinendi permissu usu ceterorum. 4. Iam enim iudicium dominus ostenderat per diluuium, adhuc etiam comminatus fuerat per exquisitionem sanguinis de manu fratris et de manu bestiae omnis. Itaque iustitiam iudicii praeministrans materiam libertatis emisit per ueniam supparans disciplinam, permittens omnia, ut demeret quaedam, plus exacturus, si plus commisisset, abstinentiam imperaturus, cum indulgentiam praemisisset, quo magis, ut diximus, primordiale delictum expiaretur maioris abstinentiae operatione in maioris licentiae occasione.

CAP V. 1. Denique ubi iam et familiaris populus allegi deo coepit et restitutio hominis imbui potuit, tunc leges disciplinaeque omnes impositae, etiam quae decerperent uictum, adeptis quibusdam ueluti immundis, quo facilius aliquando ieiunia toleraret homo perpetua in quibusdam abstinentia usus. 2. Nam et primus populus primi hominis resculpserat crimen pronior uentri quam deo deprehensus, cum de duritia Aegyptiae seruitutis ualida manu dei et sublimi brachio ereptus dominus eius uisus est, terrae lacte et melle mananti destinatus, statim autem solitudinis incopiosae circumspectu scandalizatus, saturitatis Aegyptiae detrimenta suspirans in Moysen et Aaron mussitauit: utinam obiissemus percussi a domino in terra Aegypti, quando super ollas carnum sedebamus et panes in plenitudinem comedebamus. Quomodo eduxisti nos in haec deserta ad interficiendam synagogam istam fame? 3. Eadem uentris praelatione deploraturus erat eosdem duces suos et dei arbitros, quos desiderio carnis et recordatu Aegyptiarum copiarum exacerbabat. Quis nos uescet carne? Venerunt in mentem nobis pisces quos in Aegypto edebamus gratis, et cucumeres et pepones et porri et cepe et allia. At nunc anima nostra arida, nihil nisi manna uident oculi nostri. 4. Ita et illis xerophagiae panis angelici displicebant, allium potius et cepe quam caelum fragrare malebant. Et ideo tam ingratis gratiora et esculentiora quaeque

CAP VI. 1. Nunc si temere rationes castigati a deo uictus et castigandi propter deum a nobis ad primordiorum experimenta reuocauimus, conscientiam communem consulamus. Ipsa natura enuntiabit, quales nos ante pabulum et potum in uirgine adhuc salua exhibere consuerit rebus dumtaxat sensu agendis, quo diuina tractantur, si multo pollentioris mentis, si multo uiuacioris cordis, quam cum totum illud domicilium interioris hominis escis stipatum, uinis inundatum, decoquendis iam, stercoribus exaestuans praemeditatorium efficitur latrinarum, in quo plane nihil tam in proximo supersit quam ad lasciuiam sapere. 2. Manducauit populus et bibit, et surrexerunt ludere. Intellege sanctae scripturae uerecundiam: lusum nisi impudicum non denotasset. Ceterum quotusquisque meminerit religionis occupatis memoriae locis, impeditis sapientiae membris? Nemo ita ut decet, ita ut par est, ita ut utile est, recordabitur dei eo in tempore, quo ipsum sibi hominem excidere sollemne est. Omnem disciplinam uictus aut occidit aut uulnerat. Mentior, si non dominus ipse obliuionem sui exprobrans Israeli causam plenitudini reputat. 3. Incrassatus est dilectus et pinguefactus et dilatatus est, et dereliquit deum, qui fecit eum, et abscessit a domino salificatore suo. Denique in eodem Deuteronomio eandem causam praecaueri iubens, ne, inquit, cum manducaueris et biberis et domos optimas aedificaueris, ouibus et bubus tuis multiplicatis et argento et auro extollatur cor tuum et obliuiscaris domini dei tui. 4. Praeposuit corruptelae diuitiarum edacitatis enormitatem, cui ipsae diuitiae procurant. Per illam scilicet incrassatum erat cor populi, ne oculis uideret et auribus audiret et corde coniceret adipibus obstructo, quas nominatim esui abstulit dedocens hominem saginae studere. 5. Ceterum cui cor erectum potius inueniebatur quam impinguatum, qui quadraginta diebus totidemque noctibus supra humanae naturae facultatem ieiunium perennauit spiritali fide uirtutem subministrante, et uidit oculis dei gloriam et audiuit auribus dei uocem et corde coniecit dei legem iam tunc docentis non in solo pane uiuere hominem, sed in omni uerbo dei, cum quidem nec ipsum Moysen deo pastum inediaeque eius nomine saginatam constanter contemplari ualeret pinguior populus. Merito igitur etiam in carne se dominus ei ostendit collegae ieiuniorum suorum, non minus et Heliae. 6. Nam et Helias hoc primum, quod famem fuerat imprecatus, satis

iam se ieiuniis uouerat. Viuit, inquit, dominus, cui adsisto in conspectu eius, si erit ros istis annis et imber. Dehinc minantem Iezabel fugiens post unicum. pabulum et potum, quem ab angelo expergefactus inuenerat, et ipse quadraginta diebus et noctibus uacuo uentre, arido ore peruenit in montem Choreb, ubi cum in speluncam deuertisset, quam familiari congressu dei exceptus est! 7. Quid tu Helia hic? Multo amicior ista uox quam Adam ubi es? Illa enim pasto homini minabatur, ista ieiuno blandiebatur. Tanta est circumscripti uictus praerogatiua, ut deum praestet homini contubernalem, parem reuera pari. Si enim deus aeternus non esuriet, ut testatur per Esaia, hoc erit tempus, quo homo deo adaequetur, cum sine pabulo uiuit.

CAP VII. 1. Processimus itaque iam ad exempla, uti reuoluamus utilitatis efficacia potestates istius officii, quod etiam iratum deum homini reconciliat. Deliquerat Israel in aquatione apud Maspha congregatus a Samuele, sed ita statim. delictum. ieiunio diluit, ut periculum proelii simul fugerit. Cum maxime Samuel offerebat holocaustum (in nullo magis procuratam audimus dei clementiam quam in abstinentia populi) et allophyli proelio admouebant, ibidem dominus intonuit uoce magna super allophylos, et confusi sunt et corruerunt in conspectu Israelis, et processerunt uiri Israel ex Maspha et persecuti sunt allophylos et usque Bethor ceciderunt, pastos impasti, armatos inermes. 2. Hae erunt uires ieiunantium deo. Caelum pro eiusmodi militat. Habes formam praesidii etiam spiritalibus bellis necessariam. Perinde cum rex Assyriorum Sennacherib compluribus iam ciuitatibus captis Israeli per Rapsacen blasphemias et minas intentaret, nihil aliud illum a proposito in Aethiopias auertit. 3. Dehinc quid aliud centum et octoginta quatuor milia de exercitu eius per angelum absumpsit quam Ezechiae regis humiliatio? Siquidem duritia hostis adnuntiata uestem scidit, saccum induit eodemque habitu seniores sacerdotum ad deum per Esaia adire iussit utique ieiunio preces prosequente. Neque enim. cibi tempus in periculo nec saturitatis cultis in sacco. 4. Semper inedia maeroris sequela est sicut laetitia accessio saginae. Per hanc maeroris sequelam et inediam etiam ciuitas illa peccatrix Niniue de exitio praedicato liberatur. Satis enim paenitentia scelerum commendauerat ieiunium triduo functam, etiam pecudibus enectis, quibus iratus deus non erat. Sodoma quoque et Gomorra euasissent, si ieiunassent. Hoc remedium agnoscit et Achab. 5. Cum illi post transgressionem et idololatriam et necem Nabuthae propter uineam interempti a Iezabel exprobrasset Helias: qualiter occidisti et hereditatem possedisti : in loco quo sanguinem Nabuthae canes delinxerant, tuum quoque delinguent, destituit semetipsum et saccum carni suae imposuit et ieiunauit et dormiuit in sacco. Et tunc sermo domini ad Heliam: uidisti ut reueritus sit Achab a facie mea : pro eo, quod reueritus est, non superducam laesuram in diebus ipsius, sed in diebus filii eius superducam eam, qui non erat ieiunaturus. 6. Ita ieiunium in deum reuerentiae opus est, per quod Anna quoque ambiens uxor Helcanae retro sterilis impetrauit facile a deo inanem cibo uentrem filio implere et quidem propheta. Sed non modo naturae mutationem aut periculorum auersionem aut delictorum obliterationem, uerum etiam sacramentorum agnitionem ieiunia de deo merebuntur. 7. Aspice Danielis exemplum. Circa somnium regis Babylonis omnes turbantur sophistae, negant ultra de praestantia humana posse cognosci. Solus Daniel deo fidens et sciens, quid ad demerendam dei gratiam faceret, spatium tridui postulat, cum sua fraternitate ieiunat, atque ita orationibus commendatis et ordinem et significationem somni per omnia instruitur, tyranni sophistis parcitur, deus glorificatur, Daniel honoratur, non minorem dei gratiam et postea quoque relaturus anno primo regis Darii, cum ex recogitatu praedicatorum temporum ab Hieremia dedit faciem suam deo in ieiuniis et sacco et cinere. 8. Nam et angelus missus ad eum hanc statim professus est causam diuinae dignationis : ueni, inquit, demonstrare tibi, quatenus miserabilis es, ieiunando scilicet. Si deo miserabilis, leonibus in lacu fuerat horribilis, ubi quidem illi sex diebus ieiunanti prandium angelus procurauit.

CAP VIII. 1. Reddimus et cetera. Ad noua enim nunc documenta properamus. In limine euangelii Anna prophetis, filia Phanuelis, quae infantem dominum et agnouit et multa super eo praedicauit expectantibus redemptionem Israelis, post egregium titulum uete ris et uniuiuae uiduitatis ieiuniorum quoque testimonio augetur, ostendens, in quibus officiis adsideri ecclesiae debeat, et a nullis magis intellegi Christum quam semel nuptis et saepe ieiunis. 2. Ipse mox dominus baptisma suum, et in suo omnium, ieiuniis dedicauit habens efficere panes ex lapidibus, etiam Iordanem uino fortasse manare, si ita uorator et potator fuisset. Immo nouum hominem in ueteris sugillationem uirtute fastidiendi cibi initiabat, ut eum diabolo rursus per escam temptare quaerenti fortiolem fame tota ostentaret. Praestituit exinde ieiuniis legem sine tristitia transigendis. 3. Cur enim triste, quod salutare?

Docuit etiam aduersus diriora daemonia ieiuniis proeliandum. Quid enim mirum, si eadem operatione spiritus iniquus educitur, qua sanctus inducitur? 4. Denique, ut in centurionem Cornelium necdum tinctum dignatio spiritus sancti cum charismate insuper prophetiae festinasset, ieiunia eius legimus exaudita. Puto autem et apostolus in secunda Corinthiorum inter labores suos et pericula et incommoda post famem ac sitim ieiunia quoque plurima enumerat.

CAP IX. 1. Principalis haec species in castigatione uictus potest iam de inferioribus quoque abstinentiae operationibus praeiudicare ut et ipsis pro modo utilibus aut necessariis. Nam exceptio eduliorum quorundam portionale ieiunium est. Inspiciamus igitur et xerophagiarum nouitatem aut uanitatem, si non et in his tam antiquissimae quam efficacissimae religionis operatio est. 2. Redeo ad Danielelem et fratres eius leguminum pabulum et aquae potum ferculis et oenophoris regiis praeferentes atque exinde formosiores, ne qui de specie quoque corpusculi metuat, ceterum spiritu insuper cultos. Dedit enim deus adolescentulis scientiam et intellegentiam in omni litteratura et Danieli in omni uerbo et in somniis et in omni sophia, qua hoc ipsum quoque saperet, quibus modis de deo impetraretur agnitio sacramentorum. 3. Anno denique tertio Cyri regis Persarum cum in recogitatum incidisset uisionis, aliam formam humiliationis prospexit. In illis, inquit, diebus ego Daniel eram lugens per tres hebdomadas, panem suauem non edi, caro et uinum non introierunt in os meum, oleo unctus non sum, donec consummarentur tres hebdomades, quibus transactis angelus emissus est taliter alloquens: Daniel, homo es miserabilis, ne timueris, quoniam ex die prima, qua dedisti animam tuam recogitatu et humiliationi coram deo, exauditum est uerbum tuum, et ego introiui uerbo tuo. 4. Ita xerophagiarum miseratio et humiliati metum expellunt et aures dei aduertunt et occultorum compotes faciunt. Reuertor etiam ad Heliam. Cum corui illum pane et carne saturare consuessent, cur postmodum apud Bersabe Iudaeae excitato ei de somno quidam ille angelus sine dubio panem solum et aquam obtulit? 5. Defecerant corui, qui eum liberalius pascere, an difficile angelo fuerat aliquem alicunde de conuiuio regis ministrum cum instructissimo ferculo raptum ad Heliam transferre, sicut Danieli in lacu leonum esurienti prandium metentium exhibitum est? 6. Sed constitui oportebat exemplum docens in tempore pressurae et persecutionis et cuiuscunque circumstantiae xerophagiis esse uiuendum. Tali uictu Dauid exomologesin suam expressit cinerem quidem edens uelut panem, id est panem uelut cinerem aridum et sordidum, potum uero fletu miscens utique pro uino. 7. Habet enim et abstinentia uini suos titulos, quae et Samuelem deo uouerat et Aaronem consecrarat. Nam de Samuele mater, et uinum, inquit, et ebriamen non bibet; talis enim et ipsa deum orabat. Et dominus ad Aaron: uinum et siceram non bibetis, tu et filius tuus post te, si quando ingrediemini tabernaculum uel ascendetis ad altare, et non moriemini. 8. Adeo moriuntur qui non sobrii in ecclesia ministrauerint. Sic et Israeli proximo exprobrat et potum: dabatis sanctificatis meis uinum. Et haec autem, strictura potus xerophagiae portio est. Quamquam ubi abstinentia uini aut a deo exigitur aut ab homine uouetur, illic intellegatur etiam pabuli pressura formam praestruens potui. Qualis enim esus, talis et potus. Verisimile non est, ut quis dimidiam gulam deo immolet, aquis sobrius et cibus ebrius. 9. An autem et apostolus xerophagias norit, qui maiora celebrauerat, sitim et famem et multa ieiunia, qui ebrietates et comessiones recusauerat, uel de discipulo Timotheo argumenti satis est, quem propter stomachum et adsiduas imbecillitates modico uino monens uti, quo ille non ex institutione, sed ex deuotione abstinebat (ceterum stomacho magis consuetudo prodesset), hoc ipso abstinentiam uini dignam deo suasit, quam ex necessitate dissuasit.

CAP X. 1. Aequae stationes nostras ut indictas, quasdam uero et in serum constitutas nouitatis nomine incusant, hoc quoque munus et ex arbitrio obeundum esse dicentes et non ultra nonam detinendum, de suo scilicet more. Sed quod pertineat ad indictionis quaestionem, semel pro omnibus causis respondebo. Nunc ad proprium huius speciei articulum, de modo temporis dico, de ipsis prius expostulandum, unde hanc formam nona dirimendis stationibus praescribant. 2. Si, qua Petrus et qui cum eo ad horam nonam orationis templum introgressi leguntur, quis mihi probabit illos ea die statione functos, ut horam nonam ad clausulam et expunctionem stationis interpretetur? Atqui facilius inuenias Petrum hora sexta capiendi cibi causa prias in superiora ad orandum ascendisse, quo magis sexta diei finiri officio huic possit, quae illud absolutura post orationem uidebatur. 3. Porro cum in eodem commentario Lucae et tertia hora orationis demonstretur, sub qua spiritu sancto initiati pro ebriis habebantur, et sexta, qua Petrus ascendit in superiora, et nona, qua templum sunt introgressi, cur non intellegamus salua plane indifferentia semper et ubique et omni tempore orandi tamen tres istas horas ut insigniores in rebus humanis, quam diem distribuunt, quae negotia distinguunt, quae publice resonant, ita et sollemniores fuisse in orationibus diuinis? 4. Quod etiam suadet Danielis quoque argumentum ter die orantis, utique per aliquarum horarum exceptionem, non aliarum autem quam insigniorum, exinde apostolicarum, tertiae, sextae, nonae. Hinc itaque et Petrum dicam ex uetere potius usu nonam obseruasse tertio orantem supremae orationis munere. 5. Haec autem propter illos qui se putant ex forma Petri agere, quam ignorant; non quasi respuamus nonam, cui et quarta sabbati et sexta plurimum fungimur, sed quia eorum quae ex traditione obseruantur tanto magis dignam rationem adferre debemus, quanto carent scripturae auctoritate, donec aliquo caelesti charismate aut confirmentur aut corrigantur. Et si qua, inquit, ignoratis, dominus uobis reuelabit. 6. Itaque seposito confirmatore omnium istorum paracleto, duce uniuersae ueritatis, an dignior apud nos ratio adferatur nonam obseruandi require, ut etiam Petro ea ratio deputanda sit, si statione tunc functus est. Venit enim de exitu domini, quem etsi semper commemorari oportet sine differentia horarum, impressius tamen tum ei secundum ipsum stationis uocabulum addicimur. 7. Nam et milites numquam immemores sacramenti magis stationibus parent. Itaque in eam usque horam celebranda pressura est, in qua a sexta contenebratus orbis defuncto domino lugubre fecit officium, ut tunc et nos reuertamur ad iucunditatem, cum et mundus recepit claritatem. 8. Hoc si magis ad religionem sapit Christianam, dum magis Christi gloriam celebrat, possum aequae serae stationis ex eodem rei ordine statum figere, ut ieiunemus ad serum expectantes tempus dominicae sepulturae, cum Ioseph postulatum detulit corpus et condidit. Inde et irreligiosum est ante famulorum carnem refrigerari quam domini. 9. Sed hactenus haec ex argumentationum prouocatione commiserim comecturas comecturis et tamen puto fidelioribus repercutiens. Videamus, an aliquid tale nobis de uetustatibus quoque patrocinetur. In Exodo habitus ille Moysis aduersus Amalech orationibus proeliantis usque in occasum. perseuerans nonne statio fuit sera? 10. Iesum Naue debellantem Amorrhaeos prandisse illa die existimamus qua ipsis elementis stationem imperauit? Stetit sol in Gabaon et luna in Aialon, stetit sol et luna in statione, donec ultus est populus de inimicis suis, et stetit sol medio caelo. Vt autem accedebat in occasum et finem diei unius, non fuit dies talis retro et in nouissimo, utique tain prolixus, ut, inquit, exaudiret deus hominem, parem scilicet solis, instantem tam diu in officio, stationem et sera longiorem. 11. Certe Saul et ipse in proelio constitutus manifeste munus istud indixit : maledictus homo, qui ederit panem ad uesperam usque, dum ulciscar de inimico meo, et non gustauit totus populus eius, et tota terra prandebat. 12. Tantam autem deus praestitit auctoritatem edicto stationis illius, ut Ionathan, filius Saulis, quamquam ignarus ieiunationis in serum definitae gustum mellis admiserat, et forte mox de delicto sit traductus et uix per precem populi periculo, exemptus. Gulae enim, licet simplicis reus fuerat. 13. Sed et Daniel anno primo regis Darii, cum ieiunus in sacco et cinere exomologesin deo ageret, et adhuc, inquit, loquente me in oratione, ecce uir, quem uideram in somnis initio, uelociter uolans appropinquauit mihi quasi hora uespertini sacrificii. Haec erit statio sera quae ad uesperam ieiunans pinguiorem orationem deo immolat.

CAP XI. 1. Omnia autem ista credo ignota eis, qui ad nostra turbantur, aut sola forsitan lectione, non etiam intentione comperta secundum maiorem uim imperitorum apud gloriosissimam scilicet multitudinem psychicorum. Propterea per singulas direximus species ieiunationum, xerophagiarum, stationum, ut, dum recensemus secundum utriusque testamenti paraturam, quantum proficiant recusati uel recisi uel retardati pabuli officia, eos retundamus, qui haec uelut uacantia infirmant, item dum pariter ostendimus, quo semper in ordine fuerint religionis, eos reuincamus, qui haec ut noua accusant; nec nouum enim quod semper nec uacuum quod utile. 2. Sed et illud in medio est, quaedam ex his officiis a deo homini imperata legem constituisse, quaedam ab homine deo oblata uotum expunxisse. Tamen et uotum, cum a deo acceptatum est, legem in postenim facit per auctoritatem acceptatoris; exinde enim faciendum mandauit qui factum comprobauit. Itaque et hinc in alia specie altercatio diuersae partis obducitur, cum dicunt: aut pseudopropheta est, si spiritalis uox sollemnia ista constituit, aut haeresis, si humana praesumptio adinuenit. 3. Eam enim formam reprehendentes, quae et uetera decucurrerunt, et ex ea retorquentes, quae et aduersarÿ ueterum aduersus illa poterunt retractare, aut et illa recusare debebunt aut exerta ista suscipere; necessarie maxime cum et ista, a quocumque institutore sunt siue spiritali siue tantum fideli, eidem deo currebant, cui et uetera. 4. Indubitate enim. et haeresis et pseudopropheta diuinitatis diuersitate iudicabuntur apud nos omnes unici dei creatoris et Christi eius antistites, adeoque indifferenter hanc partem defendo illis offerens in quo uelint gradum figere. Spiritus diaboli est, dicis, o psychice. Et quomodo dei nostri officia indicit nec alii offerenda quam deo nostro? 5. Aut contendit diabolus cum deo facere nostro aut satanas paracletus habeatur. Sed hominem antichristum adfirmas; hoc enim uocantur haeretici nomine penes Iohannem. Et quomodo, quisquis ille est, in Christo nostro haec erga dominum. nostrum officia disposuit, cum et antichristi erga deum, aduersum nostrum processerint Christum? Quo itaque putas laterum confirmatum apud nos spiritum, cum imperat an cum probat, quae deus noster et imperauit semper et probauit? 6. Sed rursus palos terminales figitis deo, sicut de gratia, ita de disciplina, sicut de charismatibus, ita et de sollemnibus, ut perinde officia cessauerint, quemadmodum et beneficia eius, atque ita negetis usque adhuc eum munia imponere, quia et hic lex et prophetae usque ad Iohannem. Superest ut totum auferatis, quantum in uobis, tam otiosum.

CAP. XII. 1. Iam enim et in ista specie ditati saturatique regnatis, non delicta incursantes, quae ieiuniis elimentur, nec reuelationum scientia indigentes, quae xerophagiis extorqueantur, nec bella propria metuentes, quae stationibus discutiantur. 2. Vt ab Iohanne paracletus obmutuisset, et ipsi nobis prophetae in hanc maxime causam exitissemus, iam non dico ad exorandam dei iram nec ad impetrandam tutelam eius aut gratiam, sed ad praemuniendam per nosmet ipsos nouissimorum temporum condicionem indicentes omnem tapeinofronhsin, cum carcer ediscendus et fames ac sitis exercendae et tam inediae quam anxii uictus tolerantia usurpanda sit, ut in carcerem talis introeat Christianus, qualis inde prodisset, non poenam illic passurus, sed disciplinam, nec saeculi tormenta, sed sua officia, eoque fidentior processurus ad certamen e custodia abusus nihil habens carnis, sic ut nec habeant tormenta materiam, cum sola et arida sit cute loricatus, et contra ungulas corneus, praemisso iam sanguinis suco tamquam animae impedimentis, properante iam et ipsa, quae iam saepe ieiunans mortem de proximo norit. 3. Plane uestrum est in carceribus popinas exhibere martyribus incertis, ne consuetudinem quaerant, ne taedeat uitae, ne noua abstinentiae disciplina scandalizentur, quam nec ille Pristinus uester non Christianus martyr adtigerat, quem ex facultate custodiae liberae aliquamdiu fartum, omnibus balneis quasi baptismate melioribus et omnibus luxuriae secessibus quasi ecclesia secretioribus et omnibus uitae istius inlecebris quasi aeterna dignioribus hoc puto obligatum, ne mori uellet, postremo ipso tribunalis die luce summa condito mero tamquam antidoto praemedicatum ita enervastis, ut paucis unguulis titillatus (hoc enim ebrietas sentiebat) quem, dominum confiteretur interroganti praesidi respondere non potuerit amplius, atque ita de hoc iam extortus, cum singultus et ructus solos haberet, in ipsa negatione discessit. 4. Ideo sobrietatis disciplinam qui praedicant, pseudoprophetae, ideo haeretici, qui observant. Quid ergo cessatis paracletum, quem in Montano negatis, in Apicio credere?

CAP XIII. 1. Praescribitis constituta esse sollemnia huic fidei scripturis uel traditione maiorum nihilque observationis amplius adiciendum ob illicitum innouationis. State in isto gradu, si potestis. Ecce enim conuenio uos et praeter pascha ieiunantes citra illos dies, quibus ablatus est sponsus, et stationum semi-ieiunia interponentes, et uos interdum pane et aqua uicitantes, ut cuique uisum est. 2. Denique respondetis haec ex arbitrio agenda, non ex imperio. Mouistis igitur gradum excedendo traditionem, cum quae non saut constituta obitis. Quale est autem ut tuo arbitrio permittas, quod imperio dei non das? Plus humanae licebit uoluntati quam diuinae potestati? Ego me saeculo, non deo liberum memini. Sic meum est ultro officium facere domino, sic indicare illius est. 3. Non tantum obsequi ei debeo, sed et adulari; illud enim imperio eius, hoc arbitrio meo praesto. Bene autem, quod et episcopi uniuersae plebi mandare ieiunia adsolent, non dico de industria stipium conferendarum, ut uestrae capturae est, sed interdum. et ex aliqua sollicitudinis ecclesiasticae causa. 4. Itaque si et ex hominis edicto et in unum omnes tapeinofronhsin agitis, quomodo in nobis ipsam quoque unitatem ieiunationum et xerophagiarum, et stationum denotatis? 5. Nisi forte in senatus consulta et in principum mandata coitionibus opposita delinquimus. Spiritus sanctus, cum in quibus uellet terris et per quos uellet praedicaret, ex prouidentia imminentium siue ecclesiasticarum. temptationum siue mundialium plagarum, qua paracletus id est aduocatus ad exorandum iudicem dicitur, huiusmodi officiorum remedia mandabat, puta, nunc ad exercendam. sobrietatis et abstinentiae disciplinam; hunc qui recipimus, necessario etiam quae tunc constituit obseruamus. 6. Aspice ad Iudaicos fastos et inuenies nihil nouum, si, quae patribus sunt praecepta, omnis deinceps posteritas hereditaria religione custodit. Aguntur praeterea per Graecias illa certis in locis concilia ex uniuersis ecclesiis, per quae et altiora quaeque in commune tractantur, et ipsa repraesentatio totius nominis Christiani magna ueneratione celebratur. 7. Et hoc quam dignum fide auspicante congregari undique ad Christum! Vide, quam bonum et quam iucundum habitare fratres in unum! Hoc tu psallere non facile nosti, nisi quo tempore cum compluribus cenas. 8. Conuentus autem illi stationibus prius et ieiunationibus operati dolere cum dolentibus et ita demum congaudere gaudentibus norunt. Si et ista sollemnia, quibus tunc praesens patrociniatus est sermo, nos quoque ini diuersis prouinciis fungimur in spiritu inuicem repraesentati, lex est sacramenti.

CAP XIV. 1. Horum igitur tempora obseruantes et dies et menses et annos galaticamur? Plane, si Iudaicarum caeremoniarum, si legalium sollemnitatum obseruantes sumus; illas enim apostolus dedocet compescens ueteris testamenti in Christo sepulti perseuerantiam et nouisistens. 2. Quod si noua conditio in Christo, noua et sollemnia esse debebunt: aut si omnem in totum deuotionem temporum et dierum et mensium et annorum erasit apostolus, cur pascha celebramus annuo circulo in mense primo? Cur quinquaginta exinde diebus in omni exultatione decurrimus? Cur stationibus quartam et sextam sabbati dicamus et ieiuniis parasceuen? 3. Quamquam uos etiam sabbatum, si quando, continuatis, numquam nisi in pascha ieiunandum secundum rationem alibi redditam. Nobis certe omnis dies etiam uulgata consecratione celebratur. Nec ergo apud apostolum differentiae ratio, distinguentem noua et uetera. 4. Sed et hic inaequalitas uestra ridebitur, cum uetustatum formam nobis exprobratis in quo causam nouitatis accusatis.

CAP XV. 1. Reprobat etiam illos qui iubeant cibis abstinere, sed de prouidentia spiritus sancti, praedamnans iam haereticos perpetuam abstinentiam praecepturos ad destruenda et despicienda opera creatoris, quales inueniam apud Marcionem, apud Tatianum, apud Iouem, hodiernum de Pythagora haereticum, non apud paracletum. 2. Quantula est enim apud nos interdictio ciborum? Duas in anno hebdomadas xerophagiarum nec totas, exceptis scilicet sabbatis et dominiicis, offerimus deo abstinentes ab eis quae non reicimus, sed differimus. 3. Atqui ad Romanos scribens uos nunc compungit detractatores huius officii. Ne propter pabulum solueritis, inquit, opus dei. Quod opus? De quo ait : bonum est carnem non edere et uinum non potare. Nam qui in istis seruit, placabilis et propitiabilis deo nostro est. Quidam credit omnia manducanda esse, quidam autem infirmus holera uescitur; qui manducat, ne nullificet non manducantem. Tu quises, qui alienum seruum iudicas? Et qui manducat et qui non manducat, deo agit gratias. 4. Cum autem humano arbitrio uetet controuersiam fieri, quanto magis diuino? Ita sciebat quosdam castigatores et interdictores uictus incusare, qui ex fastidio, non qui ex officio abstinerent, probare uero qui in honorem, non qui in conuicium creatoris. 5. Et si clauēs macelli tibi tradidit permittens esui omnia ad constituendam idolothytorum exceptionem, non tamen in macello regnum dei inclusit. Nec enim, inquit, esus aut potus est dei regnum, et, esca nos deo non commendat, non ut de arida dictum putes, sed potius de uncta et accurata, siquidem subiciens : nec si manducauerimus, abundabimus, nec si non manducauerimus, deficiemus, tibi magis intonat, qui abundare te existimas, si edas, et deficere, si non edas, et ideo ista detractas. 6. Dominium quoque quam indigne ad tuam libidinem interpretaris passim manducantem et bibentem, sed puto, quod etiam ieiunarit, qui beatos non saturatos, sed esurientes et sitientes pronuntiarit, qui escam profitebatur, non quam discipuli existimarant, sed paterni operis perfectionem, docens operari escam quae permanet in uitam aeternam, in ordinaria etiam oratione panem mandans postulandum, non et Attalicas diuitias. 7. Sic et Esaias non negauit deum elegisse ieiunium, sed quale non elegerit enumerauit. In diebus enim, inquit, ieiuniorum uestrorum inueniuntur uoluntates uestrae, et omnes subiectos uobis succutitis aut ad conuicia et lites ieiunatis et caeditis pugnis. Non tale ieiunium ego elegi, sed quale subiecit, et subiciendo non abstulit, sed confirmauit.

CAP XVI. 1. Nam et si manuult opera iustitiae, non tamen sine sacrificio, quod est anima conflictata ieiuniis. Ille certe deus, cui nec populus incontinenens gulae placuit, nec sacerdos nec propheta. Manent adhuc monumenta concupiscentiae, ubi sepultus est populus carnis audivissimus usque ad cholera ortygomētras cruditando. 2. Eliditur pro templi foribus senior Heli, fili eius in acie ruunt, nurus expirat in partu. Hanc enim meruerat a deo plagam domus impudens, sacrificiorum carnalium defraudatrix. Sameas, homo dei, cum exitum prophetasset idololatriae introductae a rege Hieroboam, post manum eius regis arefactam et statim restitutam, post altare diffissum, ob haec signa ad satisfactionem inuitatus a rege plane excusauit (prohibitus enim a deo fuerat) illic cibum in totum attingere; sed ab alio mox sene mentito prophetam temere pastus secundum uerbum dei ibidem factum super mensam non est in paternis sepultus. 3. Leonis enim in uia occursu prostratus et apud externos conditus poenam deserti ieiunii luit. Haec erunt exempla et populo et episcopis, etiam spiritalibus, si quam incontinentiam gulae admiserint. Sed nec apud inferos admonitio cessauit, ubi in diuite epulone quidem conuiuia craciantur, ini paupere uero ieiunia recreantur, habentia praeceptores Moysen et prophetas. 4. Nam et Iohel exclamauit: sancite ieiunium et praedicate curationem, prospiciens iam tunc et alios apostolos et prophetas sancituros ieiunium et praedicaturos officia curantia deum. Vnde et qui in idolis comendis et in hac re ornandis et ad singulas horas salutandis diis adulantur, curationem facere dicuntur. 5. Sed et omnem tapeinofronhsin ethnici agnoscunt. Cum stupet caelum et aret annus, nudipedalia denuntiantur, magistratus purpuras ponunt, fasces retro auertunt, precem indigitant, hostiam instaurant. Apud quasdam uero colonias praeterea annuo ritu saccis uelati et cinere conspersi idolis suis inediam supplicem obiciunt, balnea et tabernae in nonam usque cluduntur. Vnus in publico ignis apud aras, aquae nec in lancibus. 6. Niniuiticum credo iustitium. Iudaicum certe ieiunium ubique celebratur, cum omissis templis per omne litus quocumque in aperto aliquando iam precem ad caelum mittunt. Et licet cultu et ornatu maeroris munus infament, tamen fidem abstinentiae adfectant et stellae auctoritatem demorantis suspirant. 7. Sed bene quod tu nostris xerophagiis blasphemias ingerens casto Isidis et Cybeles eas adaequas. Admitto testimonialem comparisonem. Hinc diuinam constabit, quam diabolus diuinorum aemulator imitatur. Ex ueritate mendacium struitur, ex religione superstitio compinigitur. 8. Hinc tu eo inreligiosior, quanto ethnicus paratior. Ille denique idolo gulam suam mactat, tu deo non uis. Deus enim tibi uenter est et pulmo templum et aqualiculus altare et sacerdos cocus et sanctus spiritus nidor et condimenta charismata et ructus prophetia.

CAP XVII. 1. Vetus es, uera si uelimus dicere, tu qui tantum gulae indulges, et merito te priorem iactitas; semper agnosco sapere Esau uenatorem ferarum ; ita passim indagandis turdis studes, ita de campo laxissimae disciplinae tuae uenis, ita spiritu deficis. 2. Si tibi lenticulam defruto inrufatam obtulero, statim totos primatus tuos uendes; apud te agape in caccabis feruet, fides in culmis calet, spes in ferculis iacet. 3. Sed maioris est agape, quia per hanc adulescentes tui cum sororibus dormiunt. Appendices scilicet gulae lasciuiam atque luxuriae. Quam societatem et apostolus sciens cum praemisisset non in ebrietatibus nec in comessionibus, adiunxit nec in cubilibus et libidinibus. 4. Ad elogium gulae tuae pertinet, quod duplex apud te praesidentibus honor binis partibus deputatur, cum apostolus duplicem honorem dederit ut et fratribus et praepositis. Quis sanctior inter uos, nisi conuiuandi frequentior, nisi obsonandi pollucibilior, nisi calicibus instructor?

5. Merito homines solius animae et carnis spiritalia recusatis. Talibus si placerent prophetae, mei non erant. Cur ergo non constanter praedicatis: manducemus et bibamus, cras enim moriemur? Sicuti nos non dubitamus exerte mandare : ieiunemus fratres et sorores, ne forte cras moriamur. 6. Palam disciplinas nostras uindicemus. Nos certi sumus eos qui in carne sunt deo placere non posse, non utique ini substantia carnis, sed in cura, sed in affectione, sed in operatione, sed in uoluntate. Macies non displicet nobis; neque enim ad pondus deus carnem tribuit, sicut nec spiritum ad mensuram. 7. Facilius, si forte, per angustam salutis ianuam introibit caro exilior; citius resuscitabitur caro leuior, diutius ini sepultura durabit caro aridior. Saginentur pugiles et pyctae Olympici. Illis ambitio corporis competit, quibus et uires necessariae, et tamen illi quoque xerophagiis inualescunt. 8. Sed nostra alia robor aliaeque uires, sicut et alia certamina, quibus non est luctatio aduersus carnem et sanguinem, sed aduersus mundi potestates, aduersus spiritalia malitiae. Aduersus haec non carne et sanguine, sed fide et spiritu robusto oportet adistere. 9. Ceterum saginatio Christianus ursis et leonibus forte quam deo erit necessarius, nisi quod et aduersus bestias maciem exercere debet.

EXPLICIT LIBER TERTVLLIANI DE IEIVNIO ADVERSVS PSYCHICOS.

De Pudicitia (On Modesty)

I. [1] Pudicitia, flos morum, honor corporum, decor sexuum, integritas sanguinis, fides generis, fundamentum sanctitatis, praeiudicium omnibus bonae mentis, quamquam rara nec facile perfecta uixque perpetua, tamen aliquatenus in saeculo morabatur, si natura praestruxerat, si disciplina persuaserat, si censura compresserat, siquidem omne animi bonum aut nascitur aut eruditur aut cogitur. [2] Sed ut mala magis uincunt, quod ultimorum temporum ratio est, bona iam nec nasci licet, ita corrupta sunt semina, nec erudiri, ita deserta sunt studia, nec cogi, ita exarmata sunt iura. [3] Denique de qua incipimus eo usque iam exoleuit, ut non eiuratio, sed moderatio libidinum pudicitia credatur, isque satis castus habeatur, qui non nimis castus fuerit. [4] Sed uiderit saeculi pudicitia cum saeculo ipso, cum suo ingenio si nascebatur, cum suo studio si erudiebatur, cum suo seruitio si cogeatur; nisi quod infelicius etiam, si stetisset ut infructuosa, quae non apud Deum egisset. Malo nullum bonum quam uanum. Quid prodest esse, quod non prodest?

[5] Nostrorum bonorum status iam mergitur, Christianae pudicitiae ratio concutitur, quae omnia de caelo trahit, et naturam per lauacrum regenerationis, et disciplinam per instrumentum praedicationis, et censuram per iudicia ex utroque testamento, et coacta constantius ex metu et uoto aeterni ignis et regni. [6] Aduersus hanc nunc, ne dissimulare potuissem, audio etiam edictum esse propositum, et quidem peremptorium. Pontifex scilicet maximus, episcopus episcoporum, edicit: « Ego et moechiae et fornicationis delicta paenitentia functis dimitto. » [7] O edictum cui adscribi non poterit: Bonum factum! Et ubi proponetur liberalitas ista? Ibidem, opinor, in ipsis libidinum ianuis, sub ipsis libidinum titulis. Illic eiusmodi paenitentia promulganda est, ubi delinquentia ipsa uersabitur. Illic legenda est uenia, quo cum spe eius intrabitur. [8] Sed hoc in ecclesia legitur, et in ecclesia pronuntiatur, et uirgo est. Absit, absit a sponsa Christi tale praeconium! Illa, quae uera est, quae pudica, quae sancta, carebit etiam aurium macula. [9] Non habet, quibus hoc repromittat, et si habuerit, non repromittit, quod et terrenum Dei templum citius spelunca latronum appellari potuit a Domino quam moechorum et fornicatorum.

sententiae retro penes illos societatem, quo magis hoc mihi in notam leuitatis obiciant. Numquam societatis repudium delicti praeiudicium. Quasi non facilius sit errare cum pluribus, quando ueritas cum paucis ametur. [11] At enim me non magis dedecorabit utilis leuitas quam ornarit nocens. Non suffundor errore quo carui, quia caruisse delector, quia meliorem me et pudiciorem recognosco. [12] Nemo proficiens erubescit. Habet et in Christo scientia aetates suas, per quas deuolutus est et apostolus: Cum paruulus, inquit, essem, tamquam paruulus loquebar, tamquam paruulus sapiebam; at ubi uir sum factus, ea quae paruuli fuerant euacuaui. [13] Adeo diuertit a sententiis pristinis nec idcirco deliquit, quod aemulator factus est non paternarum traditionum, sed Christianarum, optans etiam ut praeciderentur qui circumcisionem detinendam suadebant. [14] Atque utinam et isti, qui meram et ueram integritatem carnis obtruncant amputantes non summam superficiem, sed intimam effigiem pudoris ipsius, cum moechis et fornicatoribus ueniam pollicentur aduersus principalem Christiani nominis disciplinam, quam ipsum quoque saeculum usque adeo testatur, ut, si quando, eam in feminis nostris inquinamentis potius carnis quam tormentis punire contendat id uolens eripere quod uitae anteposunt. [15] Sed iam haec gloria extinguitur et quidem per eos quos tanto constantius oportuerat eiusmodi maculis nullam subscribere ueniam, quando propterea, quotiens uolunt, nubant, ne moechiae et fornicationi succidere cogantur, quod melius est nubere quam uri. [16] Nimirum propter continentiam incontinentia necessaria est, incendium ignibus extinguetur. Cur ergo et crimina postmodum indulgent paenitentiae nomine, quorum remedia praestituunt multinubentiae iure? [17] Nam et remedia uacabunt, cum crimina indulgentur et crimina manebunt, si remedia uacabunt. Itaque utrobique de sollicitudine et neglegentia ludunt, praecauendo uanissime quibus parcunt et parcendo ineptissime quibus praecauent, cum aut praecauendum non sit ubi parcitur aut parcendum non sit ubi praecauetur. [18] Praecauent enim, quasi nolint admitti tale quid, indulgent autem, quasi uelint admitti; quando si admitti nolint, non debeant indulgere; si indulgere uelint, non debeant praecauere. [19] Nec enim moechia et fornicatio de modicis et de maximis delictis deputabuntur, ut utrumque competat, et sollicitudo quae praecauet et securitas quae indulget. Sed cum ea sint quae culmen criminum teneant, non capiunt et indulgeri quasi modica et praecaueri quasi maxima.

[20] Nobis autem maxima aut summa sic quoque praecauentur, dum nec

secundas quidem post fidem nuptias permittitur nosse, nuptialibus et dotalibus, si forte, tabulis a moechiae et fornicationis opere diuersas, et ideo durissime nos infamantes Paracletum disciplinae enormitate digamos foris sistimus. [21] Eundem limitem liminis moechis quoque et fornicatoribus figimus ieiunas pacis lacrimas profusuris nec amplius ab ecclesia quam publicationem dedecoris relaturis.

II. [1] « Ceterum Deus, inquit, bonus et optimus et misericors et miserator et misericordiae plurimus, quam omni sacrificio anteponit, non tanti ducens peccatoris mortem quam paenitentiam, salutificator omnium hominum et maxime fidelium. [2] Itaque et filios Dei misericordes et pacificos esse oportebit, donantes inuicem sicut et Christus donauit nobis, non iudicantes, ne iudicemur. Domino enim suo stat quis uel cadit: tu quis es, ut seruum iudices alienum ? Dimitte, et dimittetur tibi. » [3] Talia et tanta sparsilia eorum, quibus et Deo adulantur et sibi lenocinantur, effeminantia magis quam uigorantia disciplinam, quantis et nos et contrariis possumus repercutere, quae et Dei seueritatem intentent et nostram constantiam prouocent? [4] Quia etsi bonus natura Deus, tamen et iustus. Ex causa enim, sicut sanare nouit, ita et caedere, faciens pacem, sed et condens mala, paenitentiam malens, sed et Hieremiae mandans, ne pro populo peccatore deprecaretur. Quod, et si ieiunauerint, inquit, non exaudiam obsecrationem eorum. [5] Et rursus: Et tu ne adoraueris pro populo et ne postulaueris pro his in prece et oratione, quoniam non exaudiam in tempore, quo inuocauerint me, in tempore adflictionis suae. [6] Et adhuc supra, idem misericordiae praelator quam sacrificii: Et tu ne adoraueris pro populo isto et ne postulaueris misericordiam consequi eos et ne accesseris pro his ad me, quoniam non exaudiam utique misericordiam postulantes, utique ex paenitentia flentes et ieiunantes et adflictationem suam offerentes Deo. [7] Deus enim zelotes, et qui naso non deridetur, adulantium scilicet bonitati eius, et qui licet patiens, tamen per Esaiaem comminatur patientiae finem: Tacui, numquid et semper tacebo et sustinebo? Qui eui uelut parturiens, exurgam et arescere faciam. Ignis enim procedet ante faciem ipsius, et exuret inimicos eius, non solum corpus, uerum et animas occidens in gehennam. [8] Ceterum iudicantibus quomodo Dominus comminetur ipse demonstrat: Quo enim iudicio iudicaueritis, iudicabitur de uobis. Ita non prohibuit iudicare, sed docuit. [9] Vnde et apostolus iudicat et quidem in causa fornicationis, dedendum eiusmodi hominem satanae in interitum carnis, increpans etiam quod fratres non apud sanctos iudicarentur. Adiciens enim inquit: Vt quid mihi eos qui foris sunt iudicare? [10] Dimittis autem, ut dimittatur tibi a Deo. Delicta mundantur, quae quis in fratrem, non Deum admiserit. Debitoribus denique dimissuros nos in oratione profiteamur.

Sed non decet ultra de auctoritate scripturarum eiusmodi funem contentiosum alterno ductu in diuersa distendere, ut haec restringere frenos disciplinae, illa laxare uideantur, quasi incertae et paenitentiae subsidium illa prosternere per lenitatem, haec negare per austeritatem. [11] Porro si et auctoritas scripturae in suis terminis stabit sine alterutra oppositione, et paenitentiae subsidium suis condicionibus determinatur sine passiuā concessione, et ipsae prius causae eius distinguuntur sine confusa propositione. [12] Causas paenitentiae delicta condicimus. Haec diuidimus in duos exitus. Alia erunt remissibilia, alia inremissibilia. Secundum quod nemini dubium est alia castigationem mereri, alia damnationem. [13] Omne delictum aut uenia dispungit aut poena, uenia ex castigatione, poena ex damnatione. De ista differentia iam et quasdam praemisimus altercationes scripturarum hinc retinentium hinc dimittentium delicta. [14] Sed et Iohannes docebit: Si quis scit fratrem suum delinquere delictum non ad mortem, postulabit et dabitur uita ei; quia non ad mortem delinquit, hoc erit remissibile. Est delictum ad mortem; non pro illo dico, ut quis postulet, hoc erit inremissibile. [15] Ita ubi est postulationis <ratio>, illic etiam remissionis; ubi nec postulationis, ibi aequē nec remissionis. Secundum hanc differentiam delictorum paenitentiae quoque condicio discriminatur. [16] Alia erit quae ueniam consequi possit, in delicto scilicet remissibili, alia quae consequi nullo modo possit, in delicto scilicet inremissibili. Et superest specialiter de moechiae et fornicationis statu examinare, in quam delictorum partem debeant redigi.

III. [1] Sed prius decidam intercedentem ex diuerso responsionem ad eam paenitentiae speciem, quam cum maxime definimus uenia carere. « Si enim, inquirunt, aliqua paenitentia caret uenia, iam nec in totum agenda tibi est. Nihil enim agendum est frustra. [2] Porro frustra agetur paenitentia, si caret uenia. Omnis autem paenitentia agenda est. Ergo omnis ueniam consequatur, ne frustra agatur, quia non ent agenda, si frustra agatur. Porro frustra agitur, si uenia carebit. » [3] Merito itaque opponunt, quod huius quoque paenitentiae fructum, id est ueniam, in sua potestate usurpauerunt. Quantum enim ad illos, a quibus pacem humanam consequitur, <frustra agitur>. Quantum autem ad nos, qui solum Dominum meminimus delicta concedere, et utique mortalia, non frustra agetur. [4] Ad Dominum enim remissa et illi exinde prostrata, hoc ipso magis operabitur ueniam, quod eam a solo Deo exorat, quod delicto suo humanam pacem sufficere non credit, quod ecclesiae mauult erubescere quam communicare. [5] Adsistit enim pro foribus eius et de notae exemplo ceteros admonet et lacrimas fratrum sibi quoque aduocat et redit plus utique negotiata, compassionem scilicet quam communicationem. Et si pacem hic non metit, apud Dominum seminat. [6] Nec amittit, sed praeparat fructum. Non uacabit ab emolumento, si non uacauerit ab officio. Ita nec paenitentia huiusmodi uana nec disciplina eiusmodi dura est. Deum ambae honorant. Illa nihil sibi blandiendo facilius impetrabit, ista nihil sibi adsumendo plenius adiuuabit.

IV. [1] Possumus igitur demandata paenitentiae distinctione ad ipsorum iam delictorum regredi censum, an ea sint, quae ueniam ab hominibus consequi possint. Inprimis quod moechiam et fornicationem nominamus, usus expostulat. [2] Habet et fides quorundam nominum familiaritatem. Ita in omni opusculo usum custodimus. Ceterum et si adulterium et si stuprum dixero, unum erit contaminatae carnis elogium. [3] Nec enim interest nuptam alienam an uiduam quis incurset, dum non suam feminam; sicut nec <de> locis refert, in cubiculis an in turribus pudicitia trucidetur. Omne homicidium <et> extra siluam latrocinium est. [4] Ita et ubicumque uel in quacumque semetipsum adulterat et stuprat, qui aliter quam nuptiis utitur. Ideo penes nos occultae quoque coniunctiones, id est non prius apud ecclesiam professae, iuxta moechiam et fornicationem iudicari periclitantur, ne inde consertae obtentu matrimonii crimen eludant. [5] Reliquas autem libidinum furias impias et in corpora et in sexus ultra iura naturae non modo limine, uerum omni ecclesiae tecto submouemus, quia non sunt delicta, sed monstra.

V. [1] Ergo moechia, quod etiam fornicationis est res secundum opus criminis, quanti aestimanda sit sceleris prima lex Dei praesto est. Siquidem post interdictam alienorum deorum superstitionem ipsorumque idolorum fabricationem, post commendatam sabbati uenerationem, post imperatam in parentes secundam a Deo religionem, nullum aliud in talibus titulis firmandis muniendisque substruxit praeceptum quam non moechaberis. [2] Post spiritalem enim castitatem sanctitatemque corporalis sequebatur integritas. Et hanc itaque muniuit hostem statim eius prohibendo moechiam. Quale

delictum iam intellege, cuius cohibitionem post idololatriam ordinauit. [3] Nihil secundum longinquat a primo. Nihil tam proximum primo quam secundum. Quod fit ex primo, aliud quodammodo primum est. [4] Itaque moechia adfinis idololatriae — nam et idololatria moechiae nomine et fornicationis saepe populo exprobrata — etiam sorte coniungetur illi, sicut et serie; etiam damnatione cohaerebit illi, sicut et dispositione. [5] Eo amplius praemittens non moechaberis, adiungit non occides. Honorauit utique moechiam, quam homicidio anteponit, in prima itaque fronte sanctissimae legis, in primis titulis caelestis edicti, principalium utique delictorum proscriptione signatam. De loco modum, de ordine statum, de confinio meritum cuiusque dignoscas. [6] Est et mali dignitas, quod in summo aut in medio pessimorum collocatur. Pompam quandam atque suggestum aspicio moechiae, hinc ducatum idololatriae antecedentis, hinc comitatum homicidii insequentis. [7] Inter duos apices facinorum eminentissimos sine dubio digna consedit, et per medium eorum quasi uacantem locum pari criminis auctoritate compleuit. [8] Quis eam talibus lateribus inclusam, talibus costis circumfultam a cohaerentium corpore diuellet, de uicinorum criminum nexu, de propinquorum scelerum complexu, ut solam eam secernat ad paenitentiae fructum? [9] Nonne hinc idololatria, inde homicidium detinebunt et, si qua uox fuerit, reclamabunt: « Noster hic cuneus est, nostra compago? Ab idololatria metamur, illa distinguente coniungimur, illi de medio emicanti adunamur; concorporauit nos scriptura diuina, litterae ipsae glutina nostra sunt, iam nec ipsa sine nobis potest. [10] Ego quidem idololatria saepissime moechiae occasionem subministro. Sciunt luci mei et mei montes, et uiuae aquae ipsaeque in urbibus templa quantum euertendae pudicitiae procurem. [11] Ego quoque homicidium nonnumquam moechiae elaboro. Vt tragoedias omittam, sciunt hodie uenenarii, sciunt magi, quot pellicatus ulciscar, quot riuaitates defendam, quot custodes, quot delatores, quot conscios auferam. Sciunt etiam obstetrices, quot adulteri conceptus trucidantur. [12] Etiam apud Christianos non est moechia sine nobis. Ibidem sunt idololatriae, ubi immundi spiritus res est; ibidem est et homicidium, ubi homo, cum inquinatur, occiditur. [13] Igitur aut nec illi aut etiam nobis paenitentiae subsidia conuenient. Aut detinemus eam, aut sequimur. » [14] Haec ipsae res loquuntur. Si res uoce deficiunt, adsistit idololatrias, adsistit homicida, in medio eorum adsistit et moechus. Pariter de paenitentiae officio sedent, in sacco et cinere inhorrescunt, eodem fletu ingemiscunt, eisdem precibus ambiunt, eisdem genibus exorant, eandem inuocant matrem. [15] Quid agis, mollissima et humanissima disciplina? Aut omnibus eis hoc esse debebis, beati enim pacifici, aut, si non omnibus, nostra esse. Idololatrem quidem et homicidam semel damnas, moechum uero de medio excipis? idololatrae successorem, homicidae antecessorem, utriusque collegam: personae acceptatio est; miserabiliores paenitentias reliquisti.

VI. [1] Plane, si ostendas, de quibus patrociniis exemplorum praeceptorumque caelestium soli moechiae et in ea fornicationi quoque ianuam paenitentiae expandas, ad hanc iam lineam dimicabit nostra congressio. Praescribam tamen tibi formam necesse est, ne ad uetera manum emittas, ne in terga respicias. [2] Vetera enim transierunt secundum Esaïam, et nouata est iam nouatio secundum Hieremiam, et obliiti posteriorum in priora porrigimur secundum apostolum, et lex et prophetae usque ad Iohannem secundum Dominum. [3] Nam et si cum maxime a lege coepimus demonstrando moechiam, merito ab eo statu legis, quem Christus non dissoluit, sed impleuit. Onera enim legis usque ad Iohannem, non remedia. Operum iuga reiecta sunt, non disciplinarum. Libertas in Christo non fecit innocentiae iniuriam. [4] Manet lex tota pietatis sanctitatis humanitatis ueritatis castitatis iustitiae misericordiae beneuolentiae pudicitiae. In qua lege beatus uir qui meditabitur die ac nocte. De qua idem Dauid rursus: Lex Domini inuituperabilis, conuertens animas; iura Domini directa, oblectantia corda; praeceptum Domini longe lucens, inluminans oculos. [5] Sic et apostolus: Itaque lex quidem sancta est, et praeceptum sanctum et optimum; utique: Non moechaberis. Sed et supra: Legem ergo euacuamus per fidem? Absit, sed legem sistimus, scilicet in his quae et nunc nouo testamento interdicta etiam cumulatiore praecepto prohibentur. [6] Pro « non moechaberis », « qui uiderit ad concupiscentiam, iam moechatus est in corde suo », et pro « non occides » « qui dixerit fratri suo Racha, reus erit gebennae ». Quaere, an salua sit lex non moechandi, cui accessit nec concupiscendi.

apostatae ueniam, quia et populum ipsum totiens reum istorum totiens inuenimus retro restitutum. [9] Communicabis et homicidae, quia et Nabothae sanguinem Achab deprecatione deleuit et Dauid Vriae caedem cum causa eius moechia confessione purgauit. [10] Iam et incesta donabis propter Loth et fornicationes cum incesto propter Iudam et turpes de prostitutione nuptias propter Osee, et non tantum frequentatas, uerum et simul plures, propter patres nostros. [11] Vtique enim dignum est peraequari nunc quoque gratiam circa omnia retro indulta, si de pristino aliquo exemplo uenia moechiae uindicatur. [12] Habemus quidem et nos eiusdem uetustatis exempla pro sententia nostra, non modo non indulti, uerum etiam repraesentati iudicii fornicationis. [13] Et utique sufficit tantum numerum XXIV milium populi fornicantis in filias Madian una plaga ruisse. [14] Sed malo in gloriam Christi a Christo deducere disciplinam. Habuerint pristina tempora omnis impudicitiae, si uolunt psychici, etiam potestatem. Luserit ante Christum caro, immo perierit antequam a Domino suo requisita est: nondum erat digna dono salutis, nondum apta officio sanctitatis. [15] Adhuc in Adam deputabatur cum suo uitio, facile quod speciosum uiderat concupiscens et ad inferiora respiciens et de ficulneis foliis pruriginem retinens. Inhaerebat usquequaque libidinis uirus et + lacteae sordes, non habentes, id onear quod nec ipsae adhuc aquae lauerant. [16] At ubi sermo Dei descendit in carnem ne nuptiis quidem resignatam et sermo caro factus est ne nuptiis quidem resignanda, quae ad lignum non incontinentiae, sed tolerantiae accederet, quae non dulce aliquid, sed amarum inde gustaret, quae non ad inferos, sed ad caelum pertineret, quae non lasciuiiae frondibus, sed sanctimoniae floribus praecingeretur, quae munditias suas aquis traderet, exinde caro quaecumque in Christo reliquas sordes pristinas soluit, alia iam res est, noua emergit, iam non ex seminis limo, non ex concupiscentiae fimo, sed ex aqua pura et spiritu mundo. [17] Quid itaque illam de pristino excusas? Non corpus Christi, non membra Christi, non templum Dei uocabatur, cum ueniam moechiae consequencebatur. [18] Itaque si exinde, quo statum uertit, et in Christum tincta induit Christum et magno redempta est, sanguine scilicet Domini et agni, tenes aliquod exemplum siue praeceptum siue formam siue sententiam indultae siue indulgendae fornicationis atque moechiae habes etiam temporis a nobis definitionem, ex quo deputetur aetas quaestionis.

VII. [1] A parabolis licebit incipias, ubi est ouis perdita a Domino requisita et humeris eius reuecta. Procedant ipsae picturae calicum uestrorum, si uel in illis perlucebit interpretatio pecudis illius, utrumne Christiano an ethnico peccatori de restitutione conliniet. [2] Praescribimus enim ex naturae disciplina, ex lege auris et linguae, ex mentis sanitate ea semper responderi quae prouocantur [id est ad ea quae prouocant]. Prouocauit, ut opinor, quod Pharisei publicanos et peccatores ethnicos admittentem Dominum et cum illis de uictu communicantem indignati mussitabant. [3] Ad hoc Dominum pecudis perditae restitutionem, cui alii configurasse credendum est quam ethnico perduto, de quo agebatur, non [de] Christiano, qui adhuc nemo? Aut quale est, ut Dominus quasi cauillator responsionis omissa specie praesenti, quam repercutere deberet, de futura labore? [4] Sed « ouis proprie Christianus et grex Domini ecclesiae populus et pastor bonus Christus et ideo Christianus in oue intellegendus, qui ab ecclesiae grege errauerit. » [5] Ergo nihil ad Phariseorum mussitationem respondisse uis Dominum, sed ad tuam praesumptionem? Et tamen ita eam uindicare debebis, ut neges in ethnicum competere, quae in Christianum existimas conuenire. [6] Dic mihi, nonne omne hominum genus unus Dei grex est? Nonne uniuersarum gentium idem Deus et Dominus et pastor est? Quis magis perit a Deo quam ethnicus, quamdiu errat? Quis magis requiritur a Deo quam ethnicus, quando reuocatur a Christo? [7] Denique antecedit hic ordo in ethnicis; siquidem non aliter Christiani ex ethnicis fiunt nisi prius perditum et a Deo requisiti et a Christo reportati. Ita etiam hunc ordinem seruari oportet, ut in eos tale aliquid interpretemur, in quibus prius.

[10] Proinde drachmae parabolam, ut ex eadem materia prouocatam, aequae

in ethnicum interpretamur, etsi in domo amissam, quasi in ecclesia, etsi ad lucernae lumen repertam, quasi ad Dei uerbum. [11] Atquin totus hic mundus una omnium domus est, in quo magis ethnico gratia Dei inlucet, qui in tenebris inuenitur, quam Christiano, qui iam in Dei luce est. [12] Denique et oui et drachmae unus error adscribitur. Nam si iam in Christianum peccatorem defingerentur post fidem perditum, et <de> iterata amissione eorum et restitutione tractaretur. [13] Decedam nunc paulisper de gradu isto, quo magis eum etiam decedendo commendem, cum sic quoque obduxero diuersae partis praesumptionem. Con dico Christianum iam peccatorem in parabola utraque portendi, non tamen ideo eum adfirmandum, qui de facinore moechiae et fornicationis restitui per paenitentiam possit. [14] Licet enim perisse dicatur, erit et de perditionis genere retractare, quia et ouis non moriendo, sed errando et drachma non interiando, sed latitando perierunt. Ita licet dici perisse, quod saluum est. [15] Perit igitur et fidelis elapsus in spectaculum quadrigarii furoris et gladiatorii cruoris et scaenicae foeditatis et xysticae uanitatis, in lusus, in conuiuia saecularis sollemnitatis, <si> in officium, in ministerium alienae idololatriae aliquas artes adhibuit curiositatis in uerbum ancipitis negationis aut blasphemiae impegit. [16] Ob tale quid extra gregem datus est uel et ipse forte ira, tumore, aemulatione, quod denique saepe fit, dedignatione castigationis abruptit. Debet requiri atque reuocari. Quod potest recuperari, non perit, nisi foris perseuerauerit.

[17] Bene interpretaberis parabolam uiuentem adhuc reuocans peccatorem. Moechum uero et fornicatorem quis non mortuum statim admisso pronuntiabit? Quo ore mortuum restitues in gregem ex parabola eius auctoritate, quae non mortuum pecus reuocat? [18] Denique si meministi prophetarum, cum pastores increpantur, puto Ezechielis est uox: Pastores, ecce lac deuoratis et lanis uestimini; quod forte est occidistis, quod infirmum est non curastis, quod comminutum est non ligastis, quod expulsum est non conuertistis, quod periit non requisistis. [19] Numquid et de mortuo exprobrat, quod non et illud in gregem reficere curauerint? Plane ingerit, quod perire oues fecerint et a bestiis agri comedi — neque possunt nec perire in mortem nec comedi, si relinquantur — non, ut peritae in mortem et comestae resumantur.

quae ibidem delitescunt mox ibidem et reperta statim ibidem cum gaudio emendationis transigantur. [21] Moechiae uero et fornicationis non drachma, sed talentum, quibus exquirendis non lucernae spiculo [lumine], sed totius solis lancea opus est. [22] Simul apparuit, statim homo de ecclesia expellitur nec illic manet nec gaudium confert repertrici ecclesiae, sed luctum nec congratulationem aduocat uicinarum sed contristationem proximarum fraternitatum. [23] Commissa itaque etiam hac nostra cum illorum interpretatione eo magis in ethnicum spectabunt et ouis et drachmae argumenta, quanto nec in eius delicti Christianum competere possunt, propter quod in Christianum de diuersa parte coguntur.

VIII. [1] Sed enim plerosque interpretes parabolarum idem exitus decipit, quem in uestibus purpura oculandis saepissime euenire est. Cum putaueris recte conciliasse temperamenta colorum et credideris comparationes eorum inter se amasse, erudito mox utroque corpore et luminibus expressis errorem omnem traducta diuersitas euomet. [2] Eadem itaque caligine circa filiorum quoque duorum parabolam quibusdam ad praesens concolorantibus figuris a uero lumine exorbitant eius comparationis quam parabolae materia praetexit. [3] Duos enim populos in duobus filiis collocant, Iudaicum maiorem, Christianum minorem. Nec enim possunt exinde Christianum peccatorem in filio minore disponere ueniam consecuturum, nisi in maiore Iudaicum expresserint. [4] Porro si Iudaicum ostendero deficere a comparatione filii maioris, consequenter utique nec Christianus admittetur de configuratione filii minoris. Licet enim filius audiat et Iudaeus et maior, quia prior in adoptione, licet et Christiano reconciliationem Dei Patris inuideat, quod uel maxime diuersa pars carpit, sed non erit Iudaei dictum ad patrem: Ecce quot annis tibi serui et praeceptum tuum numquam praeteriui. [5] Quando enim non transgressor legis Iudaeus, aure audiens et non audiens, odio habens traduentem in portis et aspernamento sermonem sanctum? Sic nec patris ad Iudaeum erit uox: Tu semper mecum es, et omnia mea tua sunt. [6] Iudaei enim apostatae filii pronuntiantur, generati quidem et in altum elati, sed qui non computauerint Deum et qui dereliquerint Dominum et in iram prouocauerint sanctum Israelis. [7] Omnia plane Iudaeo concessa dicemus, cui etiam condicio gratior quaeque de gula erepta est, nedum ipsa terra paternae promissionis. Atque adeo non minus hodie Iudaeus quam minor filius producta substantia Dei in aliena regione mendicat seruiens usque adhuc principibus eius, id est saeculi huius. [8] Quaerant igitur alium Christiani suum fratrem; Iudaeum enim parabola non recipit. Multo aptius Christianum maiori et Iudaeum minori filio adaequassent secundum fidei comparisonem, si ordo utriusque populi ab utero Rebeckae designatus permetteret demutationem. Nisi quod et clausula refragaretur. [9] Christianum enim de restitutione Iudaei gaudere et non dolere conueniet, siquidem tota spes nostra cum reliqua Israelis expectatione coniuncta est. Ita etsi quaedam facient, sed aliis contra sapientibus interimitur exemplorum peraequatio. [10] Quamquam, etsi omnia ad speculum respondere possint, unum sit praecipuum periculum interpretationum, ne aliorum temperetur facilitas comparisonum, quam quo parabola cuiusque materia mandauit. [11] Meminimus enim et histriones, cum allegoricos gestus adcommodant canticis, alia longe a praesenti et fabula et scaena et persona et tamen congruentissime exprimentes. Sed uiderit ingenium extraordinarium. Nihil enim ad Andromacham. [12] Sic et haeretici easdem parabolas quo uolunt tribuunt, non quo debent. Aptissime excludunt. Quare aptissime? Quoniam a primordio secundum occasiones parabolarum ipsas materias confinxerunt doctrinarum. Vacuit scilicet illis solutis a regula ueritatis ea conquirere atque componere, quorum parabola uidentur.

IX. [1] Nos autem quia non ex parabolis materias commentamur, sed ex materiis parabolas interpretamur, nec ualde laboramus omnia in expositione torquere, dum contraria quaeque caueamus. [2] Quare centum oues? Et quid utique decem drachmae? Et quae illae scopae? Necesse erat, qui unius peccatoris salutem gratissimam Deo uolebat exprimere, aliquam numeri quantitatem nominaret, de quo unum quidem perisse describeret; necesse erat, ut habitus requirentis drachmam in domo tam scoparum quam lucernae adminiculo adcommodaretur. [3] Huiusmodi enim curiositates et suspecta faciunt quaedam et coactarum expositionum subtilitate plerumque deducunt a ueritate. Sunt autem, quae et simpliciter posita sunt ad struendam et disponendam et texendam parabolam, ut illuc perducantur, cui exemplum procuratur. [4] Et duo utique filii illuc spectabunt, quo et drachma et ouis. Quibus enim cohaerent, eandem habent causam, eandem utique mussitationem Pharisaeorum erga commercium Domini <et> ethnicorum. [5] Aut si quis dubitat ethnicos fuisse publicanos apud Iudaeam usurpatam iam pridem Pompeii manu atque Luculli, legat Deuteronomium: Non erit uectigal pendens ex filiis Israel. [6] Nec tam execrabile esset nomen publicanorum apud

Dominum, nisi extraneum, uendentium ipsius caeli et terrae et maris transitus. Peccatores autem cum adiungit publicanis, non statim Iudaeos ostendit, etsi aliqui fuisse potuerunt. [7] Sed unum genus ethnicorum alios ex officio peccatores id est publicanos, alios ex natura id est non publicanos, pariter ponendo distinxit. Ceterum nec denotaretur cum Iudaeis communicans uictum, sed cum ethnicis, quorum mensam Iudaica disciplina depellit. [8] Nunc de filio prodigo id prius considerandum est quod utilius. Non enim admittetur exemplorum adaequatio, licet in agina congruentissima, si fuerit saluti nocentissima. Totum autem statum salutis in tenore disciplinae constitutum subuerti uidemus ea interpretatione, quae ex diuerso adfectatur. [9] Nam si Christianus est qui acceptam a Deo patre substantiam utique baptismatis, utique Spiritus sancti et exinde spei aeternae longe euagatus a patre prodigit ethnice uiuens, si exutus bonis mentis etiam principi saeculi (cui alii quam diabolo?) seruitium suum tradidit et ab eo porcis alendis, immundis scilicet spiritibus curandis praepositus resipuit ad patrem reuerti, iam non moechi et fornicarii, sed idololatrae et blasphemi et negatores et omne apostatarum genus hac parabola patri satisfacient, et elisa est uerissime hoc magis modo tota substantia sacramenti. [10] Quis enim timebit prodigere, quod habebit postea recuperare? Quis curabit perpetuo conseruare, quod non perpetuo poterit amittere? Securitas delicti etiam libido est eius. [11] Recuperabit igitur et apostata uestem priorem, indumentum Spiritus sancti, et anulum denuo, signaculum lauacri, et rursus illi mactabitur Christus, et recumbet eo in toro, de quo indigne uestiti a tortoribus solent tolli et abici in tenebras, nedum spoliati. Plus est igitur, si nec expedit in Christianum conuenire ordinem filii prodigi.

errores et inlecebras et libidines saeculi, ubi fame ueritatis compulsus tradidit se principi huius aeui. Ille eum praefecit porcis (ut familiare id daemonum pecus pasceret), ubinec illi compos esset uitalis esca simulque alios uideret in opere diuino abundantes pane caelesti. [16] Recordatur patris Dei, satisfacto reddit, uestem pristinam recipit, statum scilicet eum, quem Adam transgressus amiserat. Anulum quoque accipit tunc primum, quo fidei pactionem interrogatus obsignat, atque ita exinde opimitate dominici corporis uescitur, eucharistia scilicet. [17] Hic erit prodigus filius, qui numquam retro frugi, qui statim prodigus, quod non statim Christianus. Hunc et Pharisei de saeculo ad patris complexus reuertentem in publicanis et peccatoribus maerebant. [18] Et ideo ad hoc solum maioris fratris adcommodatus est liuor, non quia innocentes et Deo obsequentes Iudaei, sed quia inuidentes nationibus salutem, plane quos semper apud patrem esse oportuerat. [19] Et utique Iudaeus ad primam statim uocationem Christiani gemit, non ad secundam restitutionem. Illa enim etiam ethnicis relucet, haec uero quae in ecclesiis agitur ne Iudaeis quidem nota est.

[20] Puto me et materiae parabolarum et congruentiae rerum et tutelae disciplinarum adcommodatiores interpretationes reddidisse. Ceterum si in hoc gestit diuersa pars ouem et drachmam et filii luxuriam Christiano peccatori configurare, ut moechiam et fornicationem paenitentia donent, aut et cetera delicta pariter capitalia concedi oportebit aut paria quoque eorum moechiam et fornicationem inconcessibilia seruari. [21] Sed plus est, quod nihil aliud argumentari licet citra id de quo agebatur. Denique si aliorum parabolas transducere liceret, ad martyrium potius dirigeremus spem illarum, quod solum omni substantia producta restituere filium poterit et drachmam inter omnia licet in stercore repertam cum gaudio praedicabit, et ouem per aspera quaeque et abrupta fugitiuam humeris ipsius Domini in gregem referet. [22] Sed malumus in scripturis minus, si forte, sapere quam contra. Proinde sensum Domini custodire debemus atque praeceptum. Non est leuior transgressio in interpretatione quam in conuersatione.

X. [1] Excusso igitur iugo in ethnicum disserendi parabolas istas et semel dispecta uel recepta necessitate non aliter interpretandi quam materia propositi est, contendunt iam nec competere ethnicis paenitentiae denuntiationem, quorum delicta obnoxia ei non sint, ignorantiae scilicet imputanda, quam sola natura ream Deo faciat, [2] Porro nec remedia sapere quibus pericula ipsa non sapiant, illic autem paenitentiae constare rationem ubi conscientia et uoluntate delinquitur, ubi et culpa sapiat et gratia, illum lugere, illum uoluntari, qui sciatur et quid amiserit et quid sit recuperaturus, si paenitentiam Deo immolarit, utique eam magis filiis offerenti quam extraneis.

[3] Num ergo et Ionas idcirco ethnicis Niniuitis non putabat paenitentiam necessariam, cum cauillaretur in praedicationis officio, an potius misericordiam Dei prouidens etiam in extraneos profusam quasi destructuram praeconium uerebatur? [4] Atque adeo propter ciuitatem profanam, nondum Dei compotem, adhuc ignorantia delinquentem, paene periit propheta? Nisi quod exemplum passus est dominicae passionis ethnicos quoque paenitentes redempturae. [5] Bene quod et Iohannes Domini uias sternens non minus militantibus et publicanis quam filiis Abraham paenitentiae erat praeco. Ipse Dominus Sidoniis et Tyriis praesumpsit paenitentiam, si uirtutum documenta uidissent. [6] Atquin ego illam naturalibus magis peccatoribus competere contendam quam uoluntariis. Magis enim merebitur fructum eius qui nondum eo usus est quam qui iam et abusus est, magisque sapient remedia prima quam exoleta. [7] Nimirum Dominus ingratis benignus magis quam ignaris et citius reprobatis misericors quam nondum probatis, ut non magis irascatur contumeliis clementiae suae quam blandiatur, et non libentius extraneis eam impertiat quam in filiis perdidit, cum gentes sic adoptauerit, dum Iudaei de patientia ludunt. [8] Sed hoc uolunt psychici, ut Deus iusti iudex eius peccatoris paenitentiam malit quam mortem qui mortem paenitentia maluit. Quod si ita est, peccando promeremur. [9] « Age tu funambule pudicitiae et castitatis et omnis circa sexum sanctitatis, qui tenuissimum filum disciplinae eiusmodi ueri a uere uia pendente uestigio ingrederis, carnem spiritu librans, animam fide moderans, oculum metu temperans. [10] Quid itaque in gradu totus es? Perges ne, si potueris, si uolueris, dum tamen securus et quasi in solido es. Nam si qua te carnis uacillatio, animi auocatio, oculi euagatio de tenore decusserit, Deus bonus est. [11] Suis, non ethnicis, sinum subicit; secunda te paenitentia excipiet; eris iterum de moechno Christianus. » Haec tu mihi benignissime Dei interpres. [12] Sed cederem tibi, si scriptura « Pastoris », quae sola moechos amat, diuino instrumento meruisset incidi, si non ab omni concilio ecclesiarum, etiam uestrarum, inter apocrypha et falsa iudicaretur, adultera et ipsa et inde patrona sociorum, a qua et alias initiaris, cui ille, si forte, patrociniabitur pastor, quem in calice depingis, prostitutorem et ipsum Christiani sacramenti, merito et ebrietatis idolum et moechiae asylum post calicem subsecuturæ, de quo nihil libentius bibas quam ouem paenitentiae secundae. [13] At ego eius pastoris scripturam haurio, qui non potest frangi. Hanc mihi statim Iohannes offert cum paenitentiae lauacro et officio dicentem: Facite dignos paenitentiae fructus, et ne dixeritis, patrem habemus Abraham (ne scilicet rursum blandimenta delinquentiae de patrum resumerent gratia): Potest enim Deus de lapidibus istis filios suscitare Abrahae. [14] Sic et nos sequitur, ut eos, qui hactenus delinquant, facientes dignum paenitentiae fructum. Quid enim ex paenitentia maturescit quam emendationis effectus? Sed et si uenia potius est paenitentiae fructus, hanc quoque consistere non licet sine cessatione delicti. Ita cessatio delicti radix est ueniae, ut uenia sit paenitentiae fructus.

XI. [1] Exinde quod ad euangelium pertinet, parabolarum quidem discussa iam quaestio est. Si uero et factis aliquid tale pro peccatoribus edidit Dominus, ut cum peccatrici feminae etiam corporis sui contactum permittit lauanti lacrimis pedes eius et crinibus detergenti et unguento sepulturam ipsius inauguranti, ut cum Samaritanae sexto iam matrimonio non moechae, sed prostitutæ, etiam quod nemini facile, quis esset ostendit, nihil ex hoc aduersariis confertur, et si iam Christianis ueniam delictorum praestitisset. [2] Nunc enim dicimus, soli Domino hoc licet, hodie potestas indulgentiae eius operetur. Ad illa tamen tempora, quibus in terris egit, hoc definimus nihil aduersum nos praeiudicare, si peccatoribus etiam Iudaeis uenia conferebatur. [3] Christiana enim disciplina a nouatione testamenti et, ut praemisimus, a redemptione carnis id est Domini passione censetur. Nemo perfectus ante repertum ordinem fidei, nemo Christianus ante Christum caelo resumptum, nemo sanctus ante Spiritum sanctum de caelo repraesentatum ipsius disciplinae determinatorem.

XII. [1] Itaque isti qui alium Paracletum in apostolis et per apostolos receperunt, quem nec in prophetis propriis agnitum iam nec in apostolis possident, age nunc uel de apostolico instrumento doceant maculas carnis post baptismum respersae paenitentia dilui posse. [2] Nos in apostolis quoque ueteris legis forma soluta cernimus moechiae quanta sit demonstrationem, ne forte lenior existimetur in nouitate disciplinarum quam in uetustate. [3] Cum primum intonuit euangelium et uetera concussit, ut de legis retinendae necessitate disceptaretur, primum hanc regulam de auctoritate Spiritus sancti apostoli emittunt ad eos qui iam ex nationibus allegi coeperant. [4] Visum est, inquit, Spiritui sancto et nobis nullum amplius uobis adicere pondus quam eorum a quibus necesse est abstinere, a sacrificiis et a fornicationibus et sanguine. A quibus obseruando recte agetis uetante uos Spiritu sancto. [5] Sufficit et hic seruatum esse moechiae et fornicationi locum honoris sui inter idololatriam et homicidium. Interdictum enim sanguinis multo magis humani intellegemus. [6] Porro qualia uideri uolunt apostoli crimina, quae sola in obseruatione de lege pristina excerptunt, quae sola necessario abstinenda praescribunt? Non quod alia permittant, sed quod haec sola praeponant utique non remissibilia, qui ethnicorum causa cetera legis onera remissibilia fecerunt. [7] Cur ergo ceruicem nostram a tanto iugo excusant, nisi ut illi compendia ista disciplinae semper imponant? Cur tot uincula indulgent, nisi ut perpetuo ad necessaria constringant? [8] Soluerunt a pluribus, ut nocentioribus obseruandis obligaremur. Compensatione res acta est. Lucrati sumus multa, ut aliqua praestemus. Compensatio autem reuocabilis non est, nisi denique reuocabitur iteratione moechiae utique et sanguinis et idololatriae. [9] Tota enim iam lex sumetur, si ueniae condicio soluetur. Sed non leuiter nobiscum pactus est Spiritus sanctus, etiam ultro pactus, quo magis honorandus. Sponsionem eius nemo dissoluet nisi ingratus. Iam nec recipiet quae dimisit nec dimittet quae retinuit. [10] Nouissimi testamenti semper indemutabilis status est, et utique recitatio decreti consiliumque illud cum saeculo desinet. Satis denegauit ueniam eorum, quorum custodiam elegit, uindicauit quae non proinde concessit. [11] Hinc est, quod neque idololatriae neque sanguini pax ab ecclesiis redditur. De qua finitione sua apostolos excidisse, puto, non licet credere; aut si credere quidam possunt, debebunt probare.

XIII. [1] Nouimus plane et hic suspensiones eorum. Reuera enim suspicantur apostolum Paulum in secunda ad Corinthios eidem fornicatori ueniam dedisse, quem in prima dedendum satanae in interitum carnis pronuntiarit, impium patris de matrimonio heredem, quasi uel ipse postea stilum uerterit, scribens: [2] Si quis autem contristauit, non me contristauit, sed ex parte, ne uos onerem omnes. Satis est talis increpatio quae a multis fit; uti e contrario magis nos donare et aduocare, ne forte abundantiore tristitia deuoretur eiusmodi. Propter quod oro uos, constituatis in eum dilectionem. [3] In hoc enim et scripsi, uti cognoscam probationem uestram, quod in omnibus obauditis mihi. Si cui autem donaueritis, et ego. Nam et ego si quid donauit, donauit in persona Christi, ne fraudemur a satana, quoniam non ignoramus iniectiones

eius. [4] Quid hic de fornicatore, quid de paterni tori contaminatore, quid de Christiano ethnicorum impudentiam supergresso intellegitur, cum proinde utique speciali uenia absoluisset quem speciali ira damnasset? [5] Obscurius miseretur quam indignatur. Apertior est in austeritate quam in lenitate. Atquin facilius ira quam indulgentia obliqua est. Magis tristiora cunctantur quam laetiora. [6] De modica scilicet indulgentia agebatur; quae, si forte, nunc aestimaretur, quando maxima quaeque non soleant etiam sine praedicatione donari, tanto abest sine significatione. [7] Et tu quidem paenitentiam moechi ad exorandam fraternitatem in ecclesiam inducens conciliatum et concineratum cum dedecore et horrore compositum prosternis in medium ante uiduas, ante presbyteros, omnium lacrimas suadentem, omnium uestigia lambentem, omnium genua detinentem, inque eum hominis exitum quantis potes misericordiae inlecebris bonus pastor et benedictus papa contionaris et in parabola ouis capras tuas quaeris? [8] Tua ouis ne rursus de grege exiliat (quasi non exinde iam liceat quod nec semel licuit), ceteras etiam metu comples cum maxime indulgens. [9] Apostolus uero sceleratam libidinem fornicationis incesto onustam tam proiecte ignouisset, ut nec hunc saltem habitum legatum paenitentiae, quem ab ipso didicisse deberes, ab eo exegerit? Nihil de postero sit comminatus, nihil de cetero allocutus? [10] Quin immo et ultra obsecrat, constituerent in eum dilectionem, quasi satisfaciens, non quasi ignoscens. Et tamen dilectionem audio, non communicationem. [11] Quod et ad Thessalonicenses: Si quis autem non obaudit sermoni nostro per epistolam, hunc notate, ne commisceamini illi, ut reuereatur, non quasi inimicum deputantes, sed quasi fratrem obiurgantes. [12] Adeo potuisset dicere et fornicatori dilectionem solummodo concessam, non et communicationem, incesto uero nec dilectionem, quem scilicet auferri iussisset de medio ipsorum, multo magis utique de animo. [13] Sed uerebatur, ne fraudarentur a satana circa eius personae amissionem, quem satanae ipse proiecerat, aut ne abundantia maeroris deuoraretur, quem in interitum carnis addixerat. [14] Hic iam carnis interitum in officium paenitentiae interpretantur, quod uideatur ieiuniis et sordibus et incuria omni et dedita opera malae tractationis carnem exterminando satis Deo facere, ut ex hoc argumententur fornicatorem, immo incestum illum non in perditionem satanae ab apostolo traditum, sed in emendationem, quasi postea ueniam ob interitum id est conflictationem carnis consecuturum, igitur et consecutum.

[15] Plane idem apostolus Hymenaeum et Alexandrum satanae tradidit, ut emendarentur non blasphemare, sicut Timotheo suo scribit. Sed et ipse datum sibi ait sudem, angelum satanae, a quo colaphizaretur, ne se extolleret. [16] Si et hoc tangunt, ut traditos satanae ab illo in emendationem, non in perditionem intellegamus, quid simile blasphemia et incestum et anima ab his integra, immo non aliunde quam ex summa sanctitate et ex omni innocentia elata, quae in apostolo colaphis, si forte, cohibebatur, per dolorem, ut aiunt, auriculae uel capitis? [17] Incestum uero atque blasphemia totos homines in possessionem ipsi satanae, non angelo eius tradidisse meruerunt. Et de hoc enim interest, immo et ad hoc plurimum refert, quod illos traditos ab apostolo legimus satanae, apostolo uero angelum datum satanae. [18] Postremo cum deprecatur Dominum Paulus, quid audit? Satis habere gratiam meam, uirtus enim in infirmitate perficitur. Hoc qui satanae deduntur audire non possunt. [19] Hymenaei autem et Alexandri crimen si et in isto et in futuro aeuo inremissibile est, blasphemia scilicet, utique apostolus non aduersus terminum Domini sub spe ueniae dedisset satanae iam a fide in blasphemiam mersos. [20] Vnde et naufragos eos iuxta fidem pronuntiauit, non habentes iam solacium nauis ecclesiae. Illis enim uenia negatur, qui de fide in blasphemiam impegerunt. Ceterum ethnici et haeretici cotidie ex blasphemiam emergunt. [21] Sed et si dixit: Tradidi eos satanae, uti disciplinam acciperent non blasphemandi, de ceteris dixit, qui illis traditis satanae id est extra ecclesiam proiectis erudiri haberent blasphemandum non esse. [22] Sic igitur et incestum fornicatorem non in emendationem, sed in perditionem tradidit satanae, ad quem iam super ethnicum delinquendo transierat, ut discerent fornicandum non esse. [23] Denique in interitum, inquit, carnis, non in cruciatum, ipsam substantiam damnans, per quam exciderat, quae exinde iam perierat baptismate amisso, ut spiritus, inquit, saluus sit in die Domini. [24] Et de hoc enim quaeratur, si spiritus hominis ipsius saluus erit. Ergo saluus erit spiritus tanto scelere pollutus, propter hoc perdita carne, ut saluus sit in poena? Ergo poenam sine carne censebit contraria interpretatio. Sic resurrectionem carnis amittimus. [25] Superest igitur ut eum spiritum dixerit, qui in ecclesia censetur, saluum id est integrum praestandum in die Domini ab immunditiarum contagione eiecto incesto fornicatore. Siquidem subiungit: Non scitis, quod modicum fermentum totam desipiat consparsionem? Et tamen fornicatio incesta non erat modicum, sed grande fermentum.

XIV. [1] Et his itaque discussis, quae intercesserant, regredior ad secundam Corinthiorum, ut probem illud quoque apostoli dictum: Sufficiat eiusmodi homini increpatio ista quae a multis, non in fornicatoris persona conuenire. [2] Si enim dedendum satanae pronuntiauerat in interitum carnis, utique damnauerat eum magis quam increpauerat. Alius ergo erat, cui uoluit sufficere increpationem; siquidem fornicator non increpationem de sententia eius retulerat, sed damnationem. [3] Nam et hoc ipsum dispiciendum tibi offero, an fuerint in epistola prima et alii qui apostolum contristauerint incondite agentes et contristati sint ab illo increpationem referentes iuxta sensum epistolae secundae, ex quibus in ea ueniam aliquis potuerit adipisci. [4] Animaduertamus autem totam epistolam primam, ut ita dixerim, non atramento, sed felle conscriptam, tumentem, indignantem, dedignantem, comminantem, inuidiosam et per singulas causas in quosdam quasi mancipēs earum figuratam. [5] Sic enim exegerant schismata et aemulationes et dissensiones et praesumptiones et elationes et contentiones, ut et inuidia onerarentur et correptione retunderentur et superbia elimarentur et austeritate deterrerentur. Et qualis inuidia humilitatis aculeus? [6] Deo gratias ago, quod neminem uestrum tinxerim, nisi Crispum et Gaium, ne qui dicat, quod in nomine meo tinxerim. Nec enim iudicaui scire aliquid in uobis quam Iesum Christum et hunc crucifixum. [7] Et puto, nos Deus apostolos nouissimos elegit uelut bestiariorum, quoniam spectaculum facti sumus huic mundo et angelis et hominibus et purgamenta huius mundi facti sumus, omnium peripsema, et: Non sum liber, non sum apostolus, non Christum Iesum Dominum nostrum uidi? [8] De quali contra supercilio pronuntiare compulsus est: Mihi autem in modico est, ut a uobis interroger aut ab humano die; neque enim conscius mihi sum, et: Gloriam meam nemo inaniet. Non scitis quod angelos sumus iudicaturi? [9] Ceterum libertas quam aperta obiurgationis, quam exerta acies machaerae spiritalis: Iam ditati estis, iam saturati estis, iam regnatis, et: Si quis se putat scire, nondum scit quemadmodum oporteat eum scire! [10] Nonne et tunc in faciem alicuius impingens, quis enim, inquit, te discernit? Quid autem habes, quod non accepisti? <Si autem accepisti,> quid gloriaris, quasi non acceperis? Nonne et illos in os caedit? [11] Quidam autem in conscientia usque nunc quasi idolothytum edunt. Sic autem delinquentes percutiendo conscientias fratrum infirmas in Christum delinquent. Iam uero et nominatim: Aut non habemus potestatem manducandi et bibendi et mulieres circumducendi, sicut et ceteri apostoli et fratres Domini et Cephas ? Et: Si alii de potestate uestra consequuntur, non magis nos? [12] Aequae et illos singulari stilo figit: Propterea qui se putat stare, uideat ne cadat, et: Si quis contentiosus uidetur, nos talem consuetudinem non habemus neque ecclesia Domini. [13] Tali clausula maledicto detexta, si quis non amat Dominum Iesum, sit anathema maranatha, aliquem utique percussit.

Sed illic magis stabo, ubi apostolus magis feruet, ubi ipse fornicator aliis quoque negotium fecit. [14] Quasi non sim uenturus ad uos, inflati sunt quidam. Veniam autem citius, si permiserit Dominus, et cognoscam non sermonem eorum qui inflati sunt, sed uirtutem. Non enim in sermone est regnum Dei, sed in uirtute. Et quid uultis? Veniam ad uos in uirga an in spiritu lenitatis? [15] Quid enim suberat? Auditur in uobis in totum fornicatio et talis fornicatio, qualis nec in gentibus, ut uxorem patris sui quis habeat. Et uos inflati estis, et non luxistis potius, ut auferatur de medio uestrum qui tale facinus admisit? [16] Pro quo lugerent? Vtique pro mortuo. Ad quem lugerent? Vtique ad Dominum, ut quo modo auferatur de medio eorum, non utique ut extra ecclesiam detur (hoc enim non a Deo postularetur quod erat in praesidentis officio), sed ut per mortem hanc quoque communem et propriam carnis ipsius, quae iam cadauer, quo captiuum, esset, immunditia inrecuperabili tabiosum, plenius de ecclesia deberet auferri. [17] Et ideo, quomodo interim potuit auferri, iudicauit dedendum eiusmodi satanae in interitum carnis. Maledici enim eam sequebatur, quae diabolo proiciebatur, ut sacramento benedictionis exauctoraretur numquam in castra ecclesiae reuersura. [18] Videmus itaque hoc in loco diuisam apostoli seueritatem in quendam inflatum et in quendam incestum, in alterum uirga, in alterum sententia armatam: uirga, qua minabatur, sententia, quam exsequebatur; illam adhuc coruscantem, hanc statim fulminantem, qua increpabat quaque damnabat. [19] Certumque est exinde increpitum quidem sub intentione uirgae tremuisse, damnatum uero sub repraesentatione poenae perisse. Stat enim ille timens plagam, abiit ille luens poenam.

ignoscebatur, cui deuoratio ex maerore nimio timebatur, deuorari adhuc increpitus periclitabatur deficiens ob comminationem et maerens ob increpationem ; damnatus uero et culpa et sententia iam deuoratus deputabatur, qui non maerere haberet, sed pati quod ante passionem maerere potuisset. [23] Si idcirco ignoscebatur, ne fraudaremur a satana, in eo utique detrimentum praecauebatur quod nondum perisset. Nihil de transacto praecauetur, sed de adhuc saluo. [24] Damnatus autem et quidem in possessionem satanae iam tunc perierat ecclesiae, cum tale facinus admiserat, nedum cum et ab ipsa eierabatur. Quomodo uereretur fraudem pati eius, quem iam et ereptum amiserat et damnatum habere non potuerat? [25] Postremo, quid iudicem indulgere conueniet, quod pronuntiatione deciderit an quod interlocutione suspenderit, et utique eum iudicem, qui non solet ea quae destruxit reaedificare, ne transgressor habeatur? [26] Age iam, si non tot personas prima epistola contristasset, si neminem increpuisset, neminem terruisset, si solum incestum cecidisset, si nullum in causam eius in pauorem misisset, inflatum consternasset, nonne melius suspicareris et fidelius argumentareris aliquem potius longe alium apud Corinthios tunc in eadem causa fuisse, ut increpitus et territus et maerore saucius propterea permittente modulo delicti ueniam postea ceperit, quam ut eam incesto fornicatori interpretareris? [27] Hoc enim legisse debueras, etsi non epistola, sed in ipsa apostoli secta, a pudore clarius quam stilo eius impressum, ne scilicet Paulum apostolum Christi, doctorem nationum in fide et ueritate, uas electionis, ecclesiarum conditorem, censorem disciplinarum, tantae leuitatis inficeres, ut aut damnauerit temere quem mox esset absoluturus aut temere absoluerit quem non temere damnasset, ob solam licet fornicationem simplicis impudicitiae, nedum ob incestas nuptias et impiam luxuriam et libidinem parricidalem, quam nec nationibus comparauerat, ne in consuetudinem deputaretur, quam absens iudicaret, ne spatium reus lucraretur, quam aduocata etiam Domini uirtute damnauerat, ne humana sententia uideretur. [28] Lusit igitur et de suo spiritu et de ecclesiae angelo et de uirtute Domini, si quod de consilio eorum pronuntiauerat, rescidit.

XV. [1] Si etiam sequentia illius epistolae ad intentationem apostoli extendas, nec ipsa comparabuntur ad obliterationem incesti, ne et hic suffundatur apostolus posteriorum incongruentia sensuum. [2] Quale est enim, ut cum maxime incesto fornicatori postliminium largitus ecclesiasticae pacis statim ingesserit de auersatione immunditiarum, de amputatione macularum, de exhortatione sanctimoniarum, quasi nihil contrarium paulo ante decreuerit?

[3] Compara denique, an eius sit dicere: Propterea habentes ministracionem istam, secundum quod misericordiam consecuti sumus, non deficimus, sed abdicamus occulta dedecoris, qui non dedecoris tantum, sed et sceleris manifestum dedamnauerit. [4] An eiusdem sit excusare aliquam impudicitiam qui inter titulos laborum suorum post angustias atque pressuras, post ieiunia et uigilias castimoniam quoque praedicarit. [5] An eiusdem sit recipere in communicationem reprobos quosque qui scribat: Quae enim societas iustitiae et iniquitati? Quae autem communicatio luci et tenebris? Quae consonantia Christo et Belial? Aut quae pars fidei cum infidei? Aut quis consensus templo Dei et idolis? [6] Nonne constanter audire debebit, et quomodo discernis quae supra incesti restitutione iunxisti? Illo enim concorporato rursus ecclesiae et iustitia cum iniquitate sociatur et tenebrae cum luce communicant et Belial consonat Christo et infidelis cum fidei sacramenta participat. [7] Et uiderint idola, ipse templi Dei uitiator in templum Dei conuenit. Nam et hic, uos enim, inquit, estis templum Dei uiui. Dicit enim, quia inhabitabo in uobis, et inambulabo, et ero Deus illorum, et illi erunt mihi populus. Propter quod discedite de medio eorum, separamini et immundum ne attigeritis. [8] Hoc quoque euoluis, o apostole, ut cum maxime ipse tanto immunditiarum gurgiti manum tradis, immo et adhuc superdicis: Habentes igitur promissionem istam, dilecti, emundemus nos ab omni inquinamento carnis et spiritus perficientes castimoniam in Dei timore. [9] Oro te, qui talia infigit mentibus nostris, reuocauerat aliquem fornicatorem in ecclesiam? An ideo scribit, ne tibi nunc reuocasse uideatur?

Haec sicuti et praeteritis praescribere, ita et sequentibus praeiudicare debebunt. [10] In finem enim epistolae dicens, ne rursus cum uenero, humiliet me Deus, et lugeam multos eorum qui ante deliquerunt et paenitentiam non egerunt super immunditia quam admiserunt, fornicatione et uilitate, non utique recipiendos constituit, si paenitentiam inissent, quos in ecclesia inuenturus erat, sed lugendos et sine dubio eiciendos, ut paenitentiam perderent. [11] Et ceterum non competit eum de communicatione aliquid hic ostendisse, qui eam supra luci et tenebris, iustitiae et iniquitati negarat. Sed ignorant apostolum omnes isti, qui aliquid contra naturam atque propositum hominis ipsius, contra formam et regulam doctrinarum eius intellegunt, ut sanctitatis omnis etiam ex semetipso magistrum, impuritatis omnis exsecratorem et expiatorem et ubique talem citius incesto quam alicui humaniori reo ecclesiam reddidisse praesumant.

XVI. [1] Necesse est igitur usque illis apostolum ostendi quem ego et in secunda Corinthiorum talem defendam qualem et in omnibus litteris noui. Qui et in prima primus omnium templum Dei dedicauit: Non scitis uos templum Dei esse et in uobis Dominum habitare? [2] Qui et templo sanciendo purificandoque aeditualem legem scripsit: Si quis templum Dei uitiauerit, uitiaabit illum Deus; templum enim Dei sanctum est, quod estis uos. [3] Age iam, quis omnino uitiatum a Deo redintegrauit id est traditum satanae in interitum carnis, cum idcirco substruxerit: Nemo seducat semetipsum id est nemo praesumat uitiatum a Deo redintegrari denuo posse? [4] Sicut rursus inter cetera, immo et ante cetera, moechos et fornicatores et molles et masculorum concubitores negans regnum Dei consecuturos praemisit: Ne erraueritis, scilicet si putaueritis eos consecuturos. [5] Quibus autem regnum adimitur, utique nec uita permittitur quae inest regno. Etiam ingerens: Sed haec quidem fuistis, sed abluti estis, sed sanctificati estis in nomine Domini Iesu Christi et in spiritu Dei nostri, quanto delicta ista ante lauacrum accepto facit, tanto post lauacrum inremissibilia constituit, siquidem denuo ablui non licet. [6] Agnosce et in sequentibus Paulum columnam immobilem disciplinarum: Cibi uentri, et uenter cibus, Deus et hunc et illos confidet; corpus autem non fornicationi, sed Deo (faciamus enim hominem, ait Deus, ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram, et fecit hominem Deus, ad imaginem et similitudinem Dei fecit illum) et Dominus corpori (sermo enim caro factus est). [7] Deus autem et Dominum suscitauit et nos suscitabit per uirtutem suam), propter corporis scilicet nexum cum illo. [8] Et ideo: Non scitis corpora uestra membra Christi? Quia et Christus Dei templum. Euertite templum hoc, et ego illud in triduo resuscitabo. Auferens membra Christi faciam membra fornicariae? Non scitis, quod, qui adglutinetur fornicariae, unum corpus efficitur? Erunt enim duo in unam carnem. Qui autem adglutinetur Domino, unus est spiritus. Fugite fornicationem.

[9] Si reuocabilem uenia, quomodo fugiam moechus denuo futurus? Nihil profecero, si eam fugero; unum ero corpus, cui communicando adglutinabor. Omne delictum quod admiserit homo extra corpus est; qui autem fornicatur, in corpus suum peccat. [10] Ac ne hoc dictum in licentiam fornicationis inuaderes, ut in rem tuam, non Domini delicturus, aufert te tibi, et Christo, sicut disposuerat, addicit: Et non estis uestri, statim apponens: Empti enim estis pretio, sanguine scilicet Domini: Glorificate et tollite Deum in corpore uestro. [11] Hoc qui praecipit, uide an ignouerit ei, qui dedecorauerit Deum et qui deiecerit eum de corpore suo et quidem per incestum.

[12] Si uis omnem notitiam apostoli ebibere, intellege, quanta secure censurae omnem siluam libidinum caedat et eradicet et excaudicet, ne quidquam de recidiuo fruticare permittat, aspice illum a iusta fruge naturae, a matrimonii dico pomo, animas ieiunare cupientem. [13] De quibus autem scripsistis, bonum est homini mulierem non contingere; sed propter fornicationem unusquisque uxorem suam habeat; uir uxori et uxor uiro debitum reddat. [14] Huius boni fibulam quis illum nesciat inuitum relaxasse, ut fornicationi obuiam esset? Quam si cui indulsit uel indulget, utique consilium remedii sui infregit et tenebitur iam frenandis continentiae coniugiis, si fornicatio, ob quam permittuntur, non timebitur. Non enim timebitur quae ignoscetur. [15] Et tamen ignouisse se profitetur matrimonii usum, non imperasse. Vult enim omnes sibi esse aequales. Vnde autem licita ignoscuntur, inlicita qui sperant? Innuptis quoque et uiduis bonum esse dicit exemplo eius perseuerare, si uero deficerent, nubere; quia praeest nubere quam uri. [16] Quibus, oro, ignibus deterius est uri, concupiscentiae an poenae? Atquin si fornicatio habet ueniam, non urit concupiscentia eius. Apostoli autem magis est poenae ignibus prouidere. Quod si poena est quae urit, ergo ueniam non habet fornicatio, quam manet poena. [17] Interea et diuortium prohibens pro eo aut uiduitatis perseuerantiam aut reconciliationem pacis dominico praecepto aduersus moechiam procurat, quia qui dimiserit uxorem praeter causam moechiae, facit eam moechari, et qui dimissam a uiro ducit, moechatur. [18] Quanta remedia Spiritus sanctus instaurat, ne id scilicet denuo admittatur quod ignosci denuo non uult? Iam si usquequaque optimum dicit homini sic esse: Iunctus es uxori, ne quaesieris solutionem, ut moechiae locum non des: Solutus es ab uxore, ne quaesieris uxorem, ut opportunitatem tibi serues. [19] Quod et si duxeris uxorem, et si nupserit uirgo, non peccat, pressuram tamen carnis habebunt huiusmodi, — et hic parcendo permittit. Ceterum tempus in collecto constituit, ut et qui habent uxores sic sint tamquam non habentes. Praeterit enim habitus huius mundi, iam scilicet non desiderantis: Crescite et multiplicamini. [20] Sic uult nos praeter sollicitudinem degere, quia innupti de

Domino curent quomodo placeant Deo, nupti uero de mundo recogitent quomodo placeant coniugio. Sic melius facere pronuntiat uirginis conseruatorem quam erogatorem. [21] Sic et illam beatiorem discernit quae amisso uiro fidem ingressa amauerit occasionem uiduitatis.

Si haec omnia contmentiae consilia ut diuina commendat, puto, inquit, et ego spiritum Dei habeo, [22] quis iste est adsertor audacissimus omnis impudicitiae, moechorum et fornicatorum et incestorum plane fidelissimus aduocatus, quibus honorandis suscepit hanc causam aduersus Spiritum sanctum, ut falsum testimonium recitet de apostolo eius? [23] Nihil tale Paulus indulsit, qui totam carnis necessitatem de probis etiam titulis obliterare conatur. Indulget sane non adulteria, sed nuptias. Parcit sane matrimoniis, non stupris. Temptat ne naturae quidem ignoscere, quique culpa blandiatur? Studet compescere benedictionis concubitus, ne maledictionis excusetur.

[24] Hoc ei supererat, carnem uel a sordibus purgare; a maculis enim non potest. Sed est hoc sollemne peruersis et idiotis haereticis, iam et psychicis uniuersis, alicuius capituli ancipitis occasione aduersus exercitum sententiarum instrumenti totius armari.

XVII. [1] Prouoca ad apostolicam aciem, aspice epistulas eius, omnes pro pudicitia, pro castitate, pro sanctitate praetendunt, omnes in luxuriae et lasciuiae et libidinis negotia iaculantur. [2] Quid denique et Thessalonicensibus scribit? Aduocatio enim nostra non ex seductione nec ex immunditia, et: Haec est uoluntas Dei, sanctimonia uestra, abstinere uos a fornicatione, scire unumquemque uas suum possidere in sanctimonia et bonore, non in libidine concupiscentiae, sicut nationes, quae Deum ignorant. [3] Quid Galatae legunt? Manifesta sunt opera carnis. Quaenam ista? In primis posuit fornicationem immunditiam lasciuiam, quae praedico uobis, sicut praedixi, quod qui talia agunt, regnum Dei non sunt consecuturi hereditati. [4] Romani uero quid magis discunt quam non derelinquere Dominum post fidem? Quid ergo dicimus? Perseueremus in delinquentia, ut superet gratia? Absit. Qui mortui sumus delinquentiae, quomodo uiuemus in ea adhuc? [5] An ignoratis, quod, qui tincti sumus in Christo, in mortem eius sumus tincti? Consepulti ergo illi sumus per baptismum in mortem, ut, sicut Christus resurrexit a mortuis, ita et nos in nouitate uitae incedamus. [6] Si enim consepulti sumus simulacro mortis eius, sed et resurrectionis erimus, hoc scientes quod uetus homo noster confixus est illi. Si autem mortui sumus cum Christo, credimus quod et conuiuemus cum illo, scientes quod Christus suscitatus a mortuis iam non moriatur; mors non iam dominetur eius. [7] Quod enim mortuus est delinquentiae, mortuus est semel. Quod autem uiuit, Deo uiuit. Ita et uos reputate uosmetipsos mortuos quidem delinquentiae, uiuentes autem Deo per Christum Iesum. [8] Igitur semel Christo mortuo nemo potest, qui post Christum mortuus, delinquentiae, et maxime tantae, reuiuiscere. Aut si possit fornicatio et moechia denuo admitti, poterit et Christus denuo mori.

[9] Instat autem apostolus prohibens regnare delinquentiam in corpore nostro mortali, cuius infirmitatem carnis nouerat. Sicut enim exhibuistis membra uestra famula immunditiae et iniquitati <in iniquitatem>, ita et nunc exhibete ea famula iustitiae in sanctimoniam. [10] Nam etsi habitare bonum in carne sua negauit, sed secundum legem litterae, in qua fuit, secundum autem legem spiritus, cui nos annectit, liberat ab infirmitate carnis. Lex enim, inquit, spiritus uitae manumisit te a lege delinquentiae et mortis. [11] Licet enim ex parte ex Iudaismo disputare uideatur, sed in nos dirigit integritatem et plenitudinem disciplinarum, propter quos laborantes in lege miserit Deus per carnem filium suum in similitudine carnis delinquentiae, et propter delinquentiam damnauerit delinquentiam in carne, ut ius legis, inquit, impleretur in nobis, qui non secundum carnem, sed secundum spiritum incedimus. Qui enim secundum carnem incedunt, ea quae carnis sunt sapiunt, et qui secundum spiritum, ea quae sunt spiritus. [12] Sensum autem carnis mortem adfirmavit esse, dehinc et inimicitiam et in Deum, et eos qui sunt in carne, id est in sensu carnis, Deo placere non posse. [13] Et, si secundum carnem uiuitis, inquit, futurum est ut moriamini. Quid autem intellegimus carnis sensum et carnis uitam nisi quodcumque pudet pronuntiare? Cetera enim carnis et apostolus nominasset.

[14] Proinde et Ephesiis pristina reputans de futuro monet: In quibus et nos conuersati sumus facientes concupiscentias et uoluptates carnis. Notans denique illos qui se negassent, scilicet Christianos, eo quod se tradidissent in operationem immunditiae omnis, uos autem, inquit, non sic didicistis Christum. [15] Et iterum si dicit: Qui furabatur, iam non furetur, silet qui moechabatur hactenus, non moechetur, et qui fornicabatur hactenus, non fornicetur. Adiecisset enim et haec, si talibus ueniam porrigere consuesset uel porrigi omnino uoluisset, qui nec uerbo pollui uolens. [16] Omnis, inquit, sermo turpis non procedat ex ore uestro. Item: Fornicatio autem et immunditia

omnis ne nominetur quidem inter uos, sicut decet sanctos, tanto abest ut excusetur, hoc scientes, quod omnis fornicator aut immundus non habeat Dei regnum. Nemo uos seducat inanibus uerbis. Propter hoc uenit ira Dei super filios incredulitatis. [17] Quis seducit inanibus uerbis, nisi qui contionatur remissibilem esse moechiam? Non intuens etiam fundamenta eius ab apostolo effossa, cum ebrietates et comessationes compescit, sicut et hic: Et nolite inebriari uino, in quo est luxuria. [18] Demonstrat et Colossensibus, quae membra mortificent super terram, fornicationem immunditiam libidinem concupiscentiam malam et turpiloquium.

Concede iam tot ac talibus sententiis unum illud quod tenes. Pauca multis, dubia certis, obscura manifestis adumbrantur. [19] Etiam si pro certo apostolus Corinthio illi fornicationem donasset, esset aliud, quod semel contra institutum suum pro ratione temporis fecerat. Circumcidit Timotheum solum et tamen abstulit circumcisionem.

XVIII. [1] Sed haec, inquit, ad interdictionem pertinebunt omnis impudicitiae et ad indictionem omnis pudicitiae, saluo tamen loco ueniae, quae non statim denegatur, si delicta damnantur, quando ueniae tempus cum damnatione <non> concurrat, quam excludit. [2] Sequebatur et hoc psychicos sapere, et ideo reseruauimus huic loco quae aperte ad communicationem ecclesiasticam causis eiusmodi negandam etiam antiquitus cauta sunt. [3] Nam et in prouerbiis Salomon, quae paroimi/aj dicimus, specialiter de moecho nusquam expiabili, moechus autem, inquit, per indigentiam sensuum perditionem animae suae acquirit, dolores et dehonestationes sustinet. Ignominia autem eius non abolebitur in aeuum. Plena enim zeli indignatio uiri non parcat in die iudicii. [4] Hoc si de ethnico putaueris dictum, certe de fidelibus iam audisti per Esaïam: Excedite de medio eorum et separamini et immundum ne attigeritis. Habet statim in psalmis: Beatum uirum, qui non abierit in consilio impiorum nec in uia peccatorum steterit et in cathedra pestilentiae non sederit. [5] Cuius et postea uox: Non sedi cum consensu uanitatis, et cum inique agentibus non introibo, odiui ecclesiam male agentium et cum impiis non sedebo, et: Lauabo cum innocentibus manus meas et altare tuum circumdabo, Domine, ut solus plures, quoniam quidem cum sancto sanctus eris: Et cum uiro innocente innocens eris, et cum electo electus eris, et cum peruerso peruersus eris. [6] Et alibi: Peccatori autem dicit Dominus, ut quid tu exponis iustificationes meas et adsumis testamentum

meum per os tuum? Si uidebas furem, currebas cum eo et cum adulteris portionem tuam ponebas. [7] Hinc igitur informatus et apostolus: Scripti, inquit, uobis in epistola, non commisceri fornicatoribus, non utique fornicatoribus huius mundi, et reliqua. Ceterum oportebat uos exire de mundo. [8] Nunc autem scribo uobis, si quis frater nominatur in uobis fornicator aut idololatres (quid enim tam coniunctum?) aut fraudator (quid enim tam propinquum ?) et cetera, cum talibus ne cibum quidem sumere, nedum eucharistiam; quoniam scilicet et fermentum modicum totam desipit consparsionem. [9] Item ad Timotheum: Manus nemini cito imponas neque communicates delictis alienis. Item ad Ephesios: Nolite ergo participes esse eorum; fuistis enim aliquando tenebrae. [10] Et adhuc pressius: Nolite communicare operibus infructuosis tenebrarum, immo et reuincite ea. Quae enim in occulto ab eis fiunt, turpe est et dicere. [11] Quid turpius impudicitii? Si autem et ab otiose incedente fratre denuntiat subduci Thessalonicensibus, quanto magis et a fornicatore?

Haec enim consultata sunt Christi ecclesiam diligentis, qui se pro ea tradidit, uti eam sanctificet emundans lauacro aquae in uerbo et sistat sibi ecclesiam gloriosam non habentem maculam aut rugam, utique post lauacrum, sed sit sancta et sine opprobrio, exinde scilicet sine ruga uetustatis ut uirgo, sine macula fornicationis ut sponsa, sine probro uilitatis ut emundata.

paenitentiam ostendens Dominum malle, quae ante fidem, quae ante baptisma morte peccatoris potior habeatur, semel diluendi per Christi gratiam semel pro peccatis nostris morte functi. [16] Nam hoc etiam in sua persona apostolus statuit. Adfirmans enim Christum ad hoc uenisse, ut peccatores saluos faceret, quorum primus ipse fuisset, quid adicit? Et misericordiam sum consecutus, quoniam ignorans feci in incredulitate. [17] Ita clementia illa Dei malentis paenitentiam peccatorum quam mortem ad ignorantes adhuc et adhuc incredulos spectat, quorum causa liberandorum uenerit Christus, non qui iam Deum norint et sacramentum didicerint fidei. [18] Quod si clementia Dei ignorantibus adhuc et infidelibus competit, utique et paenitentia ad se clementiam inuitat, salua illa paenitentiae specie post fidem, quae aut leuioribus delictis ueniam ab episcopo consequi poterit aut maioribus et inremissibilibus a Deo solo.

XIX. [1] Sed quonam usque de Paulo, quando etiam Iohannes nescio quid diuersae parti subplaudere uideatur? Quasi in Apocalypsi manifeste fornicationi posuerit paenitentiae auxilium, ubi ad angelum Thyatirenorum Spiritus mandat habere se aduersus eum, quod teneret mulierem Iezabel, quae se prophetem dicit et docet atque seducit seruos meos ad fornicandum et edendum de idolothytis. [2] Et largitus sum illi temporis spatium, ut paenitentiam iniret, nec uult eam inire nomine fornicationis. Ecce dabo eam in lectum et moechos eius cum ipsa in maximam pressuram, nisi paenitentiam egerint operum eius. [3] Bene autem quod apostolis et fidei et disciplinae regulis conuenit. Siue enim ego, inquit, siue illi, sic praedicamus. Totius itaque sacramenti interest nihil credere ab Iohanne concessum quod a Paulo sit denegatum. [4] Hanc aequalitatem Spiritus sancti qui obserauerit, ab ipso deducetur in sensus eius. Haereticam enim feminam, quae quod didicerat a Nicolaitis docere susceperat, in ecclesiam latenter introducebat et merito ad paenitentiam urgebat. [5] Cui enim dubium est haereticum institutione deceptum cognito postmodum casu et paenitentia expiato et ueniam consequi et in ecclesiam redigi? Vnde et apud nos, ut ethnico par, immo et super ethnicum, haereticus etiam per baptisma ueritatis utroque nomine purgatus admittitur. [6] Aut si certus es mulierem illam post fidem uiuam in haeresi postea exspirasse, ut non quasi haereticae, sed quasi fidei peccatrici cui ueniam ex paenitentia uindices, sane agat paenitentiam, sed in finem moechiae, non tamen et restitutionem consecutura. Haec enim erit paenitentia, quam et nos deberi quidem agnoscimus multo magis, sed de uenia Deo reseruamus.

[7] Denique eadem Apocalypsis in posterioribus propudiosos et fornicatores, sicut timidos et incredulos et homicidas et ueneficos et idololatrias, qui tale quid in fide fuerint, in stagnum ignis sine ulla condicionali damnatione decreuit. [8] Non enim de ethnicis uidebitur sapere, cum de fidelibus pronuntiauit: Qui uicerint, hereditate habebunt ista, et ero illis Deus, et illi mihi in filios, et ita subiunxerunt: Timidis autem et incredulis et propudiosis et fornicatoribus et homicidis et ueneficis et idololatriis particula in stagno ignis et sulphuris., quod est mors secunda. [9] Sic et rursus: Beati qui ex praeceptis agunt, ut in lignum uitae habeant potestatem et in portas ad introeundum in sanctam ciuitatem. Canes, uenefici, fornicator, homicida foras, utique qui non ex praeceptis agant. Illorum est enim foras dari qui intus fuerunt. Ceterum quid mihi eos, qui foris sunt, iudicare ? praecesserat.

[10] De epistola quoque Iohannis carpunt. Statim dictum est: Sanguis filii eius emundat nos ab omni delicto. Semper ergo et omnifariam delinquemus, si semper et ab omni delicto emundat nos ille; aut si non semper, non etiam post fidem, et si non ab omni delicto, non etiam a fornicatione. [11] Vnde autem exorsus est? Lumen praedixerat Deum et tenebras non esse in illo et mentiri nos, si dicamus nos communionem habere cum eo et in tenebris incedamus. Si uero, inquit, in lumine incedamus, communionem cum eo habebimus, et sanguis Iesu Christi Domini nostri emundat nos ab omni delicto. [12] Ergo in lumine incedentes delinquimus et in lumine delinquentes emundabimur? Nullo pacto. Qui enim delinquit, non in lumine est, sed in tenebris. Vnde et ostendit, quomodo emundabimur a delicto in lumine incedentes in quo delictum agi non potest. A Deo sic emundari nos ait, non quasi delinquamus, sed quia non delinquamus. [13] Incedentes enim in lumine, tenebris uero non communicantes, emundati agemus, non deposito, sed non admissio delicto. Haec est enim uis dominici sanguinis, ut quos iam  delicto mundarit et exinde in lumine constituerit, mundos exinde perstare, si in lumine incedere perseuerauerint. [14] Sed subicit, inquit, si dicamus nos delictum non habere, seducimus nosmetipsos, et ueritas non est in nobis. Si confitemur delicta nostra, fidelis et iustus est, ut dimittat ea nobis et emundet nos ab omni iniustitia. [15] Numquid ab immunditia? Aut si ita est, ergo et ab idololatria? Sed aliud in sensu est. Ecce enim et rursus, si dicamus, ait, nos non deliquisse, mendacem facimus illum, et sermo eius non est in nobis. [16] Eo amplius, filioli, haec scripsi uobis, ne delinquatis, et si deliqueritis, aduocatum habemus apud Deum patrem, Iesum Christum iustum, et ipse placatio est pro delictis nostris. Secundum haec, inquis, et delinquere nos et ueniam habere constabit. [17] Quid ergo fiet, cum procedens aliud inuenio? Negat enim nos omnino delinquere, et in hoc plurimum tractat, ut nihil tale concedat, proponens semel a Christo delicta deleta, non habitura postea ueniam, in quo hos sensus ad admonitionem castimoniae demandat. [18] Omnis, inquit, qui habet spem istam, castificat semetipsum, quia et ille castus est. Omnis qui facit delictum, et iniquitatem facit, et delictum est iniquitas. Et scitis quod ille manifestatus sit, ut auferat delicta, utique hactenus admittenda. [19] Siquidem subiungit: Omnis, qui manet in illo, non delinquet. Omnis qui delinquit, neque uidit neque cognouit eum. Filioli, nemo uos seducat. Omnis qui facit iustitiam, iustus est, sicut et ille iustus est. Qui facit delictum, ex diabolo est, quoniam diabolus a primordio delinquit. In hoc enim manifestatus est filius Dei, ut soluat opera diaboli. [20] Nam et soluit liberans hominem per lauacrum donato ei chirographo mortis. Et ideo omnis, qui ex Deo nascitur non facit delictum, quia semen Dei manet in illo, et non potest delinquere, quia ex Deo natus est. In hoc manifesti sunt filii Dei et filii diaboli. [21] In quo, nisi illi non delinquendo, ex quo de Deo nati sunt, isti delinquendo, quia de diabolo sunt, proinde atque si numquam sint ex Deo nati? Quod si dicit, qui non est iustus, ex Deo non est, qui non pudicus, quomodo rursus ex Deo fiet, qui iam esse desiit? [22] Iuxta est igitur ut excidisse sibi dicamus Iohannem in primore quidem epistola negantem nos sine delicto esse, nunc uero praescribentem non delinquere omnino, et illic quidem aliquid de uenia blandientem, hic uero districte negantem filios Dei quicumque deliquerint. [23] Sed absit. Nam nec ipsi excidimus a qua digressi sumus distinctione delictorum. Et hic enim illam Iohannes commendauit, quod sint quaedam delicta cotidianae incursionis, quibus omnes simus obiecti. [24] Cui enim non accidet aut irasci inique et ultra solis occasum, aut et manum immittere aut facile maledicere aut temere iurare aut fidem pacti destruere aut uerecundia aut necessitate mentiri? In negotiis, in officiis, in quaestu, in uictu, in uisu, in auditu quanta temptamur? Vt, si nulla sit uenia istorum, nemini salus competat. [25] Horum ergo erit uenia per exoratorem Patris Christum. Sunt autem et contraria istis, ut grauiora et exitiosa, quae ueniam non capiant, homicidium, idololatria, fraus, negatio, blasphemia, utique et moechia et fornicatio, et si qua alia uiolatio templi Dei. [26] Horum ultra exorator non erit Christus; haec non admittet omnino, qui natus ex Deo fuerit, non futurus Dei filius, si admiserit. Ita Iohannis ratio constabit diuersitatis, distinctionem delictorum disponentis, cum delinquere filios Dei nunc adnuit, nunc abnuit. [27] Prospiciebat enim clausulam litterarum suarum, et illi praestruerat hos sensus dicturus in fine manifestius: Si quis scit fratrem suum delinquere delictum non ad mortem, postulabit, et dabit ei uitam Dominus, qui non ad mortem delinquit. Est enim delictum ad mortem; non de eo dico, ut quis postulet. [28] Meminerat et ipse Hieremiam prohibitum a Deo deprecari pro populo mortalia delinquente. Omnis iniustitia delictum est, et est delictum ad mortem. Scimus autem, quod omnis, qui ex Deo natus sit, non delinquit, scilicet delictum quod ad mortem est.

Ita nihil iam superest quam aut neges moechiam et fornicationem mortalia esse delicta, aut inremissibilia fatearis, pro quibus nec exorare permittitur.

XX. [1] Disciplina igitur apostolorum proprie quidem instruit ac determinat principaliter sanctitatis omnis erga templum Dei sacramentum et ubique de ecclesia eradicat omne sacrilegium impudicitiae sine ulla restitutionis mentione. Volo tamen ex redundanti alicuius etiam comitis apostolorum testimonium superducere, idoneum confirmandi de proximo iure disciplinam magistrorum. [2] Extat enim et Barnabae titulus ad Hebraeos, a Deo satis auctorati uiri, ut quem Paulus iuxta se constituerit in abstinentiae tenore: Aut ego solus et Barnabas non habemus operandi potestatem? Et utique receptior apud ecclesias epistola Barnabae illo apocrypho Pastore moechorum. [3] Monens itaque discipulos omissis omnibus initiis ad perfectionem magis tendere nec rursus fundamenta paenitentiae iacere ab operibus mortuorum, impossibile est enim, inquit, eos qui semel inluminati sunt et donum caeleste gustauerunt et participauerunt Spiritum sanctum et uerbum Dei dulce gustauerunt, occidente iam aeuo cum exciderint, rursus reuocari in paenitentiam, refigentes cruci in semetipsos filium Dei et dedecorantes. [4] Terra enim quae bibit saepius deuenientem in se humorem et peperit herbam aptam his propter quos et colitur, benedictionem Dei consequitur; proferens autem spinas reproba et maledictioni proxima, cuius finis in exustionem. [5] Hoc qui ab apostolis didicit et cum apostolis docuit, numquam moecho et fornicatori secundam paenitentiam promissam ab apostolis norat. Optime enim legem interpretabatur et figuras eius iam in ipsa ueritate seruabat. [6] Ad

hanc denique speciem disciplinae de leproso cautum fuit: Si autem uarietas effloruerit in cutem et totam cutem texerit a capite usque ad pedes per omnem conspectum, et sacerdos cum uiderit, emundabit eum, quoniam conuertit in album, mundus est. Qua uero die uisus fuerit in eiusmodi color uiuus, inquinatus est. [7] Conuersum enim hominem de pristino carnis habitu in candorem fidei, quae uitium et macula aestimatur in saeculo, et totum nouatum mundum uoluit intellegi, qui iam non sit uarius, non sit de pristino et nouo aspersus. Si uero post abolitionem in uetustatem aliquid ex illa reuixerit, rursum in carne eius quod emortuum delicto habebatur immundum iudicari nec expiari iam a sacerdote. Ita moechia de pristino recidiua et unitatem noui coloris, a quo fuerat exclusa, commaculans immundabile est uitium. [8] Item de domo: Si quae maculae et cauositates adnuntiatae in parietibus sacerdoti fuissent, priusquam introiret ad inspiciendam eam, iubet auferri de domo omnia, ita immunda non futura quae domus essent. [9] Dehinc introgressus sacerdos si inuenisset cauositates uiridicantes nel rubescentes, et aspectum earum humiliorem citra parietinam formam, exiret ad ianuam et secerneret domum illam septem diebus. Dehinc die septima regressus si animaduertisset diffusum in parietibus tactum illum, imperaret exterminari eos lapides, in quibus tactus leprae fuisset, et abici extra ciuitatem in locum immundum, et sumi alios lapides politos et solidos et reponi loco pristinorum et puluere alio inliniri domum. [10] Oportet enim, cum peruenitur ad summum sacerdotem Patris Christum, de domo hominis nostri in tempore hebdomadis auferri omnia impedimenta prius, ut munda sit quae remanet domus, caro et anima, ut ubi introierit eam sermo Dei et inuenerit maculas ruboris et uiroris, extrahi statim et abici foras sensus mortiferos et cruentos (nam et Apocalypsis uiridi equo mortem, russeo autem praeliatorem imposuit), proque illis politos et in compaginem aptos et firmos substrui lapides, quales in Abrahae <filios>, fiunt, ut ita homo habilis Deo sit. [11] Quod si post recuperationem et reformationem rursus sacerdos animaduernerit in eadem domo de pristinis cauis aliquid et maculis, immundam eam pronuntiauit, et iussit deponi materias et lapides et omnem structuram eius et abici in locum immundum. [12] Hic erit homo caro atque anima, qui post baptisma et introitum sacerdotum reformatus denuo resumat scabra et maculas carnis, et abicitur extra ciuitatem in locum immundum, deditus scilicet satanae in carnis interitum, nec amplius reaedificatur in ecclesia post ruinam. [13] Sic et de famulae concubitu, quae homini esset reseruata, necdum redempta, necdum liberata. Prospicietur; inquit, illi et non morietur, quia nondum est manumissa, cui seruabatur. Nondum enim caro a Christo manumissa, cui seruabatur, impune contaminabatur, ita iam manumissa non habet ueniam.

XXI. [1] Haec si apostoli magis norant, magis utique curabant. Sed et in hunc iam gradum decurram, excernens inter doctrinam apostolorum et potestatem. Disciplina hominem gubernat, potestas adsignat. Sed rursum quid potestas? <Spiritus>. Spiritus autem Deus. [2] Quid autem docebat? Non communicandum operibus tenebrarum. Obserua quod iubet. Quis autem poterat donare delicta? Hoc solius ipsius est. Quis enim dimittit delicta, ni solus Deus ? Et utique mortalia, quae in ipsum fuerint admissa et in templum eius? [3] Nam tibi quae in te reatum habeant etiam septuagies septies iuberis indulgere in persona Petri. Itaque si et ipsos beatos apostolos tale aliquid indulsisse constaret, cuius uenia a Deo, non ab homine competeret, non ex disciplina, sed ex potestate fecissent. [4] Nam et mortuos suscitauerunt, quod Deus solus, et debiles redintegrauerunt, quod nemo nisi Christus, immo et plagas inflixerunt, quod noluit Christus. Non enim decebat eum saeuire qui pati uenerat. Percussus est Ananias et Elimas, Ananias morte, Elimas caecitate, ut hoc ipso probaretur Christum et haec facere potuisse. [5] Sic et prophetae caedem et cum ea moechiam paenitentibus ignouerant, quia et seueritatis documenta fecerunt.

Exhibe igitur et nunc mihi, apostolice, prophetica exempla, ut agnoscam diuinitatem, et uindica tibi delictorum eiusmodi remittendorum potestatem. [6] Quod si disciplinae solius officia sortitus est, nec imperio praesidere, sed ministerio, quis aut quantus es indulgere, qui neque prophetam nec apostolum exhibens cares ea uirtute cuius est indulgere? [7] « Sed habet, inquis, potestatem ecclesia delicta donandi. » Hoc ego magis et agnosco et dispono, qui ipsum Paracletum in prophetis nouis habeo dicentem: « Potest ecclesia donare delictum, sed non faciam, ne et alia delinquant. » [8] Quid, si pseudopropheticus spiritus pronuntiauit? atqui magis euersoris fuisset et semetipsum de clementia commendare et ceteros ad delinquentiam temperare. Aut si et hoc secundum spiritum ueritatis adfectare gestiuit, ergo spiritus ueritatis potest quidem indulgere fornicatoribus ueniam, sed cum plurium malo non uult.

[9] De tua nunc sententia quaero, unde hoc ius ecclesiae usurpes. Si quia

dixerit Petro Dominus: Super hanc petram aedificabo ecclesiam meam, tibi dedi clauces regni caelestis, uel: Quaecumque alligaueris uel solueris in terra, erunt alligata uel soluta in caelis, idcirco praesumis et ad te deriuasse soluendi et alligandi potestatem, id est ad omnem ecclesiam Petri prouinciam, [10] qualis es, euertens atque commutans manifestam Domini intentionem personaliter hoc Petro conferentem? Super te, inquit, aedificabo ecclesiam meam, et: Dabo tibi clauces, non ecclesiae, et: Quaecumque solueris uel alligaueris, non quae soluerint uel alligauerint. [11] Sic enim et exitus docet. In ipso ecclesia extracta est id est per ipsum, ipse clauem imbuat, uides quam: Viri Israelitae, auribus mandate quae dico: Iesum nazarenum uirum a Deo uobis destinatum, et reliqua. [12] Ipse denique primus in Christi baptismo reserauit aditum caelestis regni, quo soluuntur alligata retro delicta et alligantur quae non fuerint soluta, secundum ueram salutem, et Ananiam uinxit uinculo mortis et debilem pedibus absoluit uitio uoletudinis. [13] Sed et in illa disceptatione custodiendae <necne> legis primus omnium Petrus spiritu instinctus et de nationum uocatione praefatus, et nunc, inquit, cur temptastis Dominum de imponendo iugo fratribus, quod neque nos neque patres nostri sufferre ualuerunt? Sed enim per gratiam Iesu credimus nos salutem consecuturos, sicut et illi. [14] Haec sententia et soluit quae omissa sunt legis et alligauit quae reseruata sunt. Adeo nihil ad delicta fidelium capitalia potestas soluendi et alligandi Petro emancipata. [15] Cui si praeceperat Dominus etiam septuagies septies delinquenti in eum fratri indulgere, utique nihil postea alligare id est retinere mandasset, nisi forte ea quae in Dominum, non in fratrem, quis admiserit. Praejudicatur enim non dimittenda in Deum delicta, cum in homine admissa donantur.

[16] Quid nunc et ad ecclesiam et quidem tuam, psychice? Secundum enim Petri personam spiritalibus potestas ista conueniet, aut apostolo aut prophetae. Nam et ipsa ecclesia proprie et principaliter ipse est spiritus, in quo est trinitas unius diuinitatis, Pater et Filius et Spiritus sanctus. Illam ecclesiam congregat quam Dominus in tribus posuit. [17] Atque ita exinde etiam numerus omnis qui in hanc fidem conspirauerint ecclesia ab auctore et consecratore censetur. Et ideo ecclesia quidem delicta donabit, sed ecclesia spiritus per spiritalem hominem, non ecclesia numerus episcoporum. Domini enim, non famuli est ius et arbitrium; Dei ipsius, non sacerdotis.

XXII. [1] At tu iam et in martyras tuos effundis hanc potestatem. Vt quisque

ex consensione uincula induit adhuc mollia in nouo custodiae nomine, statim ambiunt moechi, statim adeunt fornicatores, iam preces circumsonant, iam lacrimae circumstagnant maculati cuiusque, nec ulli magis aditum carceris redimunt quam qui ecclesiam perdiderunt. [2] Violantur uiri ac feminae in tenebris plane ex usu libidinum notis, et pacem ab his quaerunt qui de sua periclitantur. Alii ad metalla confugiunt et inde communicatores reuertuntur, ubi iam aliud martyrium necessarium est delictis post martyrium nouis. [3] Quis enim in terris et in carne sine culpa? Quis martyr saeculi incola, denariis supplex, medico obnoxius et feneratori? Puta nunc sub gladio iam capite librato, puta in patibulo iam corpore expanso, puta in stipite iam leone concesso, puta in axe iam incendio adstructo, in ipsa, dico, securitate et possessione martyrii, quis permittit homini donare quae Deo reseruanda sunt, a quo ea sine excusatione damnata sunt, quae nec apostoli, quod sciam, martyres et ipsi donabilia iudicauerunt? [4] Denique iam ad bestias depugnauerat Paulus Ephesi, cum interitum decernit incesto.

Sufficiat martyri propria delicta purgasse. Ingrati uel superbi est in alios quoque spargere, quod pro magno fuerit consecutus. Quis alienam mortem sua soluit, nisi solus Dei filius? Nam et in ipsa passione liberauit latronem. Ad hoc enim uenerat, ut ipse a delicto purus et omnia sanctus pro peccatoribus obiret. [5] Proinde qui illum aemularis donando delicta, si nil ipse deliquisti, plane patere pro me. Si uero peccator es, quomodo oleum faculae tuae sufficere et tibi et mihi poterit?

baptisma. Vnde et ex uulnere lateris dominici aqua et sanguis, utriusque lauacri paratura manauit. [11] Debeo ergo et primo lauacro alium liberare, si possum secundo.

Ingeram usque in finem necesse est: quaecumque auctoritas, quaecumque ratio moeche et fornicatori pacem ecclesiasticam reddit, eadem debet et homicidae et idololatrae paenitentibus subuenire, certe negatori, et utique illi, quem in proelio confessionis tormentis conluctatum saeuitia deiecit. [12] Ceterum indignum Deo et illius misericordia, eius qui paenitentiam peccatoris morti praeuertit, ut facilius in ecclesiam redeant, qui subando quam qui dimicando ceciderunt. Vrget nos dicere indignitas: contaminata potius corpora reuocabis quam cruentata? [13] Quae paenitentia miserabilior titillatam prosternens carnem an uero laniatam? Quae iustior uenia in omnibus causis, quam uoluntarius an quam inuitus peccator implorat? Nemo uolens negare compellitur, nemo nolens fornicator. [14] Nulla ad libidinem uis est, nisi ipsa; nescit quo libet cogi. Negationem porro quanta compellunt ingenia carnificis et genera poenarum? Quis magis negauit, qui Christum uexatus an qui delectatus amisit? Qui cum amitteret doluit, an qui cum amitteret lusit?

Spuria

Adversus Omnes Haereses

I. [1] Quorum haereticorum, ut plura praeteream, pauca perstringam. Taceo enim Iudaismi haereticos, Dositheum, inquam Samaritanum, qui primus ausus est prophetas quasi non in spiritu sancto locutos repudiare, taceo Sadducaeos, qui ex huius erroris radice surgentes ausi sunt ad hanc haeresim etiam resurrectionem carnis negare, praetermitto Pharisaeos, qui additamenta quaedam legis adstruendo a Iudaeis diuisi sunt, unde etiam hoc accipere ipsum quod habent nomen digni fuerunt, cum his etiam Herodianos, qui Christum Herodem esse dixerunt: ad eos me conuerto qui ex evangelio haeretici esse voluerunt. [2] Ex quibus est primus omnium Simon Magus, qui in Actis Apostolorum condignam meruit ab apostolo Petro iustamque sententiam. Hic ausus est summam se dicere virtutem, id est summum deum, mundum autem ab angelis suis institutum, ad daemonem se errantem, quid esset sapientia, descendisse quaerendum, apud Iudaeos se in phantasmate dei non passum, sed esse quasi passum. [3] Post hunc Menander discipulus ipsius, similiter magus, eadem dicens quae Simon aequè quicquid se Simon dixerat, hoc se Menander esse dicebat, negans habere posse quemquam salutem, nisi in nomine suo baptizatus fuisset. [4] Secutus est post haec et Saturninus, et hic similiter dicens innascibilem Virtutem, id est deum, in summis et illis infinitis partibus et in superioribus manere, longe autem distantes ab hoc angelos inferiorem mundum fecisse, et quia splendor quidam luminis desursum in inferioribus refulsisset, ad similitudinem illius luminis angelos hominem instituere curasse: hunc super terram iacuisse reptantem; cuius lumen illud et virtutem illam superiorem propter misericordiam scintillam salvam esse, cetera hominis perire: Christum in substantia corporis non fuisse, et phantasmate tantum quasi passum fuisse: resurrectionem carnis nullo modo futuram esse. [5] Postea Basilides haereticus erupit. Hic esse dicit summum deum nomine Abraxan, quo mentem creatam, quam Graece nou~n appellat; inde verbum; ex illo providentiam, uirtutem et sapientiam, ex ipsis inde principatus et potestates et angelos factos, deinde infinitas angelorum editiones et probolas, ab istis angelis trecentos sexaginta quinque caelos institutos, et mundum in honore Abraxae, cuius nomen hunc in se habebat numerum computatum. In ultimis quidem angelis, et qui nunc fecerunt mundum, novissimum ponit Iudaeorum deum, id est deum legis et prophetarum, quem deum negat, sed angelum dicit: huic sortito obtigisse semen Abrahae, atque ideo hunc de terra Aegyptio filios Israël in terram Chanaam transtulisse: hunc turbulentiore prae ceteris angelis, atque ideo et seditioes frequenter et bella concutere, sed et humanum sanguinem fundere: Christum autem non ab hoc, qui fecerit mundum, sed ab illo Abraxa missum, venisse in phantasmate, sine substantia carnis fuisse; hunc passum apud Iudaeos non esse, sed vice ipsius Simonem crucifixum esse; unde nec in eum credendum esse qui sit crucifixus, ne quis confiteatur in Simonem credidisse. Martyria negat esse facienda. Carnis resurrectionem graviter impugnat, negans salutem corporibus repromissam. [6] Alter haereticus Nicolaus emersit. Hic de septem diaconis, qui in Actis Apostolorum allecti sunt, fuit. Hic dicit tenebras in concupiscentia luminis et quidem foeda et obscoena fuisse; ex hac permixtione pudor est dicere quae foetida et immunda sunt. Sunt et cetera obscoena. Aeones enim refert quosdam turpitudinis natos, et complexus et permixtiones execrabiles obscenasque coniunctas, et quaedam ex ipsis adhuc turpiora. Natos praeterea daemones et deos et spiritus septem, et alia satis sacrilega pariter et foeda, quae referre erubescimus, et iam praeterimus. Satis est nobis, quod totam istam haeresim Nicolaitarum Apocalypsis domini gravissima sententiae auctoritate damnavit dicendo Quia hoc tenes, odisti doctrinam Nicolaitarum, quam et ego odi.

II. [1] Accesserunt his haeretici etiam illi qui Ophitae nuncupantur. Nam serpentem magnificent in tantum, ut illum etiam ipsi Christo praeferant. Ipse enim, inquiunt, scientiae nobis boni et mali originem dedit. Huius animadvertens potentiam et maiestatem Moyses, inquiunt, aereum posuit serpentem, et quicumque ipsum aspexerunt, sanitatem consecuti sunt. Ipse, aiunt praeterea, Christus in evangelio suo imitatur serpentis ipsius sacram potestatem dicendo, Et sicut Moyses exaltavit serpentem in deserto, ita exaltari oportet filium hominis. Ipsum introducunt ad benedicenda eucharistia sua. [2] Sed tota istius erroris et scena et doctrina inde fluxit. Dicunt enim de illo summo primario Aeone complures alios Aeones extitisse inferiores, omnibus tamen istis Aeonem antistare cuius sit nomen Ialdabaoth. Hunc autem conceptum esse ex altero Aeone Aeonibus inferioribus permixto, seque postea, cum in superiora voluisset eniti, gravitate materiae permixta sibi non potuisse ad superiora pervenire, in medietate relictum extendisse se totum, effecisse sic caelum. [3] Ialdabaoth tamen inferius descendisse et fecisse sibi filios septem: quem occlusisse superiora dilatatione, ut, quia angeli quae superiora essent scire non possent, ipsum solum deum putarent. Virtutes igitur illas et angelos inferiores hominem fecisse, et quia ab infirmioribus et mediocribus virtutibus institutus esset, quasi vermem iacuisse reptantem; illum vero Aeonem, ex quo Ialdabaoth processisset, invidia commotum scintillam quamdam iacenti homini immisisse, qua excitatus per prudentiam saperet et intelligere posset superiora. [4] Sic rursum Ialdabaoth istum in indignationem conuersum ex semetipso edidisse virtutem et similitudinem serpentis, et hanc fuisse virtutem in paradiso, id est istum fuisse serpentem cui Eva quasi filio deo crediderat. Decerpsit, inquiunt, de fructu arboris, atque ideo generi humano scientiam bonorum et malorum contribuit. Christum autem non in substantia carnis fuisse; salutem carnis sperandam omnino non esse. [5] Nec non etiam erupit alia quoque haeresis, quae dicitur Cainaeorum. Et ipsi enim magnificant Cain, quasi ex quadam potenti virtute conceptum, quae operata sit in ipso. Nam Abel ex inferiore virtute conceptum procreatum, et ideo inferiorem repertum. Hi qui hoc adserunt, etiam Iudam proditorem defendunt, admirabilem illum et magnum esse memorantes, propter utilitates quas humano generi contulisse iactatur. [6] Quidam enim ipsorum gratiarum actionem Iudae propter hanc causam reddendam putant. Animadvertens enim, inquiunt, Iudas, quod Christus vellet veritatem subvertere, tradidit illum, ne subverti veritas posset. Et alii sic contra disputant et dicunt. Quia potestates huius mundi nolebant pati Christum, ne humano generi per mortem ipsius salus pararetur, saluti consulens generis humani tradidit Christum, ut salus, quae impediabatur per virtutes quae obsistebant ne pateretur Christus, impediri omnino non posset, et ideo per passionem Christi non posset salus humani generis retardari. [7] Sed et illa haeresis processit, quae dicitur Sethoitarum. Huius perversitatis doctrina haec est: Duos homines ab angelis constitutos, Cain et Abel, propter hos magnas inter angelos contentiones et discordias extitisse; ob hanc causam illam virtutem quae super omnes virtutes esset, quam matrem pronuntiant, dum Abel interfectum dicerent, voluisse concipi et nasci hunc Seth loco Abelis, ut evacuarentur angeli illi qui duos priores illos homines condidissent, dum hoc semen mundum oritur et nascitur. [8] Permixtiones enim dicunt angelorum et hominum iniquas fuisse, ob quam causam illam virtutem, quam, sicut diximus, pronuntiant matrem, ad vindictam etiam cataclysmum inducere, ut et illud permixtionis semen tolleretur et hoc solum semen, quod esset purum, integrum custodiretur. [9] Sed enim illos, qui seminis illos prioris instituissent, occulte et latenter et ignorante illa matre virtute cum illis octo animabus in arcam misisse, etiam semen Cham, quo semen malitiae non periret, sed cum ceteris conservatum et post cataclysmum terris redditum exemplo ceterorum excresceret et effunderetur et totum orbem et impleret et occuparet. De Christo autem sic sentiunt, ut dicant illum tantummodo Seth, et pro ipso Seth ipsum fuisse.

III. [1] Carpocrates praeterea hanc tulit sectam: Unam esse dicit virtutem in superioribus principalem, ex hac prolatos angelos atque virtutes, quos distantes longe a superioribus virtutibus mundum istum in inferioribus partibus condidisse; Christum non ex virgine Maria natum, sed ex semine Ioseph hominem tantummodo genitum, sane prae ceteris iustitiae cultu, vitae integritate meliorem; hunc apud Iudaeos passum, solam animam ipsius in caelo receptam, eo quod et firmior et robustior ceteris fuerit; ex quo colligeret, retentata animarum sola salute, nullas corporis resurrectiones. [2] Post hunc Cerinthus haereticus erupit, similia docens. Nam et ipse mundum institutum esse ab illis dicit; Christum ex semine Ioseph natum proponit, hominem illum tantummodo sine diuinitate contendens, ipsam quoque legem ab angelis datam perhibens, Iudaeorum deum non dominum, sed angelum promens. [3] Huius successor Ebion fuit, Cerintho non in omni parte consentiens, quod a deo dicat mundum, non ab angelis factum, et quia scriptum sit, Nemo discipulus super magistrum, nec servus super dominum, legem etiam proponit, scilicet ad excludendum evangelium et vindicandum Iudaismum.

IV. [1] Valentinus autem haereticus multas introducit fabulas. Has ego circumducens breuiter expediam. Introducit enim Pleroma et Aeones triginta; exponit autem hos per syzygias, id est, coniugationes quasdam. Nam dicit in primis esse Bython et Silentium, ex his processisse Mentem et Veritatem, ex quibus erupisse Verbum et Vitam, de quibus rursus creatum Hominem et Ecclesiam. Sed enim ex his quoque processisse duodecim Aeonas; de Sermone autem et Vita Aeonas alios decem: hanc esse Aeonum triacontada, quae fit in Pleromate ex ogdoade et decade ac duodecade. [2] Tricesimum autem Aeonem Bython illum videre voluisse et ad videndum illum ausum esse in superiora conscendere, et quoniam ad magnitudinem ipsius videndam capax non fuit, in defectione fuisse et paene dissolutum esse, nisi qui missus ad constabiliendum illum, ille quem appellant Horon, confirmasset illum dicto

Iao pronuntiatio. [3] Istum autem Aeonem in defectionem factum Achamoth dicit in passionibus desiderii quibusdam fuisse et ex passionibus materias edidisse. Expavit enim, inquit, et extimuit et contristatus est, et ex his passionibus concepit et edidit. Hinc fecit caelum et terram et mare et omnia quaecunque sunt in eis, [4] ob quam causam omnia infirma esse et fragilia et caduca et mortalia, quaecunque sunt ab ipso facta, quoniam quidem ipse fuerit de defectione conceptus atque prolatus; hunc tamen instituisse istum mundum ex his materiis quas Achamoth vel pavendo vel timendo vel contristando vel sudando praestiterat. Nam ex pavore, inquit, tenebrae factae sunt, ex timore et ignorantia spiritus nequitiae et malignitatis, ex tristitia et lacrimis humida fontium, fluminum materia marisque. [5] Christum autem missum ab illo propatore, qui est Bythos. Hunc autem in substantia corporis nostri non fuisse, sed spiritale nescio quod corpus de caelo deferentem, quasi aquam per fistulam, sic per Mariam virginem transmeasse, nihil inde vel accipientem vel mutuamem. Resurrectionem huius carnis negat, sed alterius [6] legis et prophetarum quaedam probat, quaedam improbat, id est, omnia improbat, dum quaedam reprobat. Evangelium habet etiam suum praeter haec nostra. [7] Post hunc extiterunt Ptolomaeus et Secundus haeretici, qui cum Valentino per omnia consentiunt, in illo solo differunt. Nam cum Valentinus Aeonas tantum triginta finxisset, isti addiderunt alios complures; quatuor enim primum, deinde alios quatuor adgregaverunt. Et quod dicit Valentinus Aeonem tricesimum excessisse de Pleromate, ut in defectionem, negant isti. Non enim ex illa triacontade fuisse hunc qui fuerit in defectionem propter desiderium videndi propatoris. [8] Extitit praeterea Heracleon alter haereticus, qui cum Valentino paria sentit, sed novitate quadam pronuntiationis vult videri alia sentire. Introducit enim in primis illud fuisse quod pronuntiat, et deinde ex illa monade duo, ac deinde reliquos Aeonas. Deinde introducit totum Valentinum. V. [1] Non defuerunt post hos Marcus quidam et Colarbasus, novam haeresin ex Graecorum alphabeto componentes. Negant enim veritatem sine istis posse litteris inueniri, immo totam plenitudinem et perfectionem veritatis in istis litteris esse dispositam. Propter hanc enim causam Christum dixisse, Ego sum A et W. [2] Denique Iesum Christum descendisse, id est columbam in Iesum venisse; quae Graeco nomine cum peristera pronuntietur, habeat secundum numerum DCCCI. Percurrunt isti W, Y, X, F, U, T, totum usque ad A, B, et computant ogdoadas et decadas. Ita afferre illorum omnes vanitates et ineptum sit et otiosum. [3] Quod tamen non tantum iam vanum, sed etiam periculosum sit, alterum deum fingunt praeter creatorem, Christum in substantia negant carnis fuisse, negant carnis resurrectionem futuram.

VI. [1] Accedit his Cerdon quidam. Hic introducit initia duo, id est duos deos, unum bonum, et alterum saevum, bonum superiorem, saevum hunc mundi creatorem. Hic prophetias et legem repudiat, deo creatori renuntiat, superioris dei filium Christum venisse tractat, hunc in substantia carnis negat, in phantasmate solo fuisse pronuntiat, nec omnino passum, sed quasi passum, nec ex virgine natum, sed omnino nec natum. Resurrectionem animae tantummodo probat, corporis negat. Solum evangelium Lucae, nec tamen totum recipit. Apostoli Pauli neque omnes neque totas epistolas sumit. Acta Apostolorum et Apocalypsim quasi falsa reicit. [2] Post hunc discipulus ipsius emersit Marcion quidam nomine, Ponticus genere, episcopi filius, propter stuprum cuiusdam virginis ab ecclesiae communicatione abiectus. Hic ex occasione qua dictum sit, Omnis arbor bona bonos fructus facit, mala autem malos, haeresim Cerdonis approbare conatus est, ut eadem diceret quae ille superior haereticus ante dixerat. [3] Exstitit post hunc Lucanus quidam nomine, Marcionis sectator atque discipulus, et hic per eadem vadens blasphemiae genera eadem docet quae Marcion et Cerdon docuerant. [4] Post hos subsequitur Apelles, discipulus Marcionis, qui posteaquam in carnem suam lapsus est, a Marcione segregatus est. Hic introducit unum deum infinitis superioribus partibus. Hunc potestates multas angelosque fecisse; propterea et aliam virtutem, quam dici dominum dicit, sed angelum ponit. Hoc vult videri mundum institutum ad imitationem mundi superioris; cui mundo permiscuisse paenitentiam, quia non illum tam perfecte fecisset quam ille superior mundus institutus fuisset. Legem et prophetas repudiat. [5] Christum neque in phantasmate dicit fuisse, sicut Marcion, neque in substantia veri corporis, ut evangelium docet, sed ideo quod e superioribus partibus descenderet, ipso descensu sideream sibi carnem et aeream contexuisse: hunc in resurrectione singulis quibusque elementis quae in descensu suo mutuata fuissent in ascensu reddidisse, et sic dispersis quibusque corporis sui partibus in caelo spiritum tantum reddidisse. [6] Hic carnis resurrectionem negat. Solo utitur et apostolo, sed Marcionis, id est non toto. Animarum solarum dicit salutem. Habet praeterea privatas, sed extraordinarias lectiones suas, quas appellat phaneroeis, Philumenes cuiusdam puellae, quam quasi prophetissam sequitur.

VII. ^[1] His haereticis omnibus accedit Tatianus quidam alter haereticus. Hic Iustini martyris discipulus fuit; post hunc diuersa sentire coepit. Totus enim secundum Valentinum sapit, adiciens illud, Adam nec salutem consequi posse, quasi non, si rami salvi fiant, et radix salva sit. ^[2] Accesserunt alii haeretici, qui dicuntur Secundum Phrygas, sed horum non una doctrina est. Sunt enim qui Kata Proclum dicuntur, sunt alii qui Secundum Aeschinem pronuntiantur. Hi habent aliam communem blasphemiam, aliam blasphemiam non communem, sed peculiarem et suam: et communem quidem illam, qua in apostolis quidem dicant spiritum sanctum fuisse, paracletum non fuisse, et qua dicant paracletum plura in Montano dixisse quam Christum in evangelium protulisse, nec tantum plura, sed etiam meliora atque maiora. Privatam autem blasphemiam illi qui sunt Kata Aeschinem hanc habent qua adiciunt etiam hoc, uti dicant Christum ipsum esse filium et patrem. VIII. ^[1] Est praeterea his omnibus etiam Blastus accedens, qui latenter Iudaismum vult introducere. Pascha enim dicit non aliter custodiendum esse, nisi secundum legem Moysi XIII. mensis. Quis autem nesciat quoniam evangelica gratia evacuatur, si ad legem Christum rediget? ^[2] Accedit his Theodotus haereticus Byzantius, qui posteaquam Christi pro nomine adprehensus negavit, in Christum blasphemare non destitit. Doctrinam enim introduxit qua Christum hominem tantummodo diceret, deum autem illum negaret, ex spiritu quidem sancto natum ex virgine, sed hominem solitarium atque nudum, nulla alia prae ceteris nisi sola iustitiae auctoritate. ^[3] Alter post hunc Theodotus haereticus erupit, qui et ipse introduxit alteram sectam et ipsum hominem Christum tantummodo dicit ex spiritu sancto ex virgine Maria conceptum pariter et natum, sed hunc inferiorem esse quam Melchisedech, eo quod dictum sit de Christo: Tu es sacerdos in aeternum secundum ordinem Melchisedech. Nam illum Melchisedech praecipuae gratiae caelestem esse virtutem, eo quod agat Christus pro hominibus, deprecator et advocatus ipsorum factus. Melchisedech facere pro caelestibus angelis atque virtutibus. Nam esse illum usque adeo Christo meliorem, ut a)pa&pwr sit, a)mh&twr sit, a)genealoghtoj sit, cuius neque initium neque finis comprehensus sit aut comprehendi possit. ^[4] Sed post hos omnes etiam Praxeas quidam haeresim introduxit, quam Victorinus corroborare curavit. Hic deum patrem omnipotentem Iesum Christum esse dicit, hunc crucifixum passumque contendit et mortuum, praeterea se ipsum sibi sedere ad dexteram suam, cum prophana et sacrilega temeritate proponit.

Carmen ad Senatorem

CAPUT PRIMUM.

Cum te diversis iterum vanisque viderem
Inservire sacris, priscoque errore teneri;
Obstipui monitus; quia carmina semper amasti,
Carmine respondens, properavi scribere versus;
Ut te corripere, tenebras praeponere luci.
Quis patiatur enim, te Matrem credere magnam
Posse Deam dici, rursusque putare colendam, Cujus cultores infamia turpis inurit?
Namque sacerdotes tunicis mulieribus iidem
Interius ritum cultu interiore fatentur;
Idque licere putant, quod non licet; unde per orbem
Leviter incedunt, mollita voce loquentes, Lapsatosque tenent extenso pollice lumbos,
Et proprium mutant vulgato crimine sexum.
Cumque suos celebrant ritus, his esse diebus
Se castos memorant; at si tantummodo tunc sunt,
Ut perhibent, casti; reliquo jam tempore quid sunt?
Sed quia coguntur saltem semel esse pudici,
Mente fremunt, lacerant corpus, funduntque cruorem.
Quale sacrum est vero, quod fertur nomine sanguis?

CAPUT II.

Nunc etiam dicis, quod te non fecerit aetas.
Sed tua religio calvum, caligaque remota
Gallica, sit pedibus molli redimita papyro.
Res miranda satis dejectaque culmine summo.
Si quis ab Isiaco Consul procedat in urbem,
Risus oris erit: quis te non rideat autem,
Qui fueris Consul, nunc Isidis esse ministrum?
Quodque pudet primo, te non pudet esse secundo:
Ingeniumque tuum turpes damnare per hymnos

Respondente tibi vulgo et lacerante Senatu.
Teque domo propria pictum cum fascibus ante,
Nunc quoque cum sistro faciem portare caninam.
Haec non humilitas, sed humilitatis imago est.
Aedibus illa tuis semper monumenta manebunt.
Rumor et ad nostras pervenit publicus aures,
Te dixisse: Dea, erravi, ignosce, redivi.
Dic mihi si valeas, cum talia saepe rogaes,
Et veniam peteres; quae tecum verba locuta est?
Vere mente cares, sequeris qui mente carentes.
Haec iterum repetis, nec te delinquere sentis.
Quid mereare vide; minus esses forte notandus,
Si tantum hoc scires, et in hoc errore maneres;
At cum vericolae penetraveris ostia legis,
Et tibi nosse Deum paucis accesserit annis;
Cur linquenda, tenes aut cur retinenda relinquis?
Nilque colis, dum cuncta colis; nec corde retractas
Vera quid a falsis, quid ab umbris lumina distent.
Philosophum fingis, cum te sententia mutet;
Nam tibi si stomachum popularis moverit aura;
Et Judaeus eris, totusque incertus haberis.
Indulge dictis, sapientia non placet alta;
Omne quod est nimium, contra cadit, unum operantur
Et calor et frigus; sic hoc, sic illud adurit;
Sic tenebrae visum, sic sol contrarius aufert;
Et pariter laedunt gelidum fervensque lavacrum;
Esca alitur corpus, corpus corrumpitur esca;
Vimque suam minuit, si quid protenditur ultra.
Denique si sedeas, requies est magna laboris:
Si multum sedeas, labor est. Maro namque poeta
Pro poena posuit: Sedet, aeternumque sedebit
Infelix Theseus; semper nocet utile longum;
Prandia longa nocent, jejunia longa fatigant;
Sic nimium sapere stultum facit improba secta.
Me dea sic docuit, moderamen amabile, dixit.

Sed tu nec sectam modo, nec moderamina curas
Mens autem stabilis nullo pervertitur aestu, Ipsaque simplicitas nunquam mala cogitat ulla.
Hinc sincera fides aeterna fide fruetur;
Et contra dolus longo cruciabitur igni.
Elige quid velis, ut digna piacula vites.
Sic tamen hanc veniam mereatur creditor inquam;
Ut leve crimen erit, si nolis noscere vera;
Non leve crimen erit, si cognita vera relinquas.
Sed te correctum forsán matura senectus
In melius revocat satiatum erroribus istis:
Tempus enim mutat mala, digerit omnia tempus.
Tunc igitur cum te consulta reduxerit aetas,
Disce Deo servare fidem, ne forte bis unum
Incurras lapsum, quia vere dicitur illud
Qui pedis offensi lapidem vitare secundo
Nescit, et incautus iterum vexaverit artus:
Imputet ipse sibi, nec casibus imputet ullis.
Corrige delictum fidamine, corrige mentem.
Suffecit peccare semel, desiste vereri:
Non erit in culpa, quem poenitet ante fuisse.

Carmen de Iona Propheta

Post Sodomum et Gomorum viventia funera in aevum, Et cinerum senio signata incendia poenae,
Et frustra solis oculis nascentia poma,
Et pariter facti mortem maris et salis illic,
Si quid homo est poenam mutati corpore servans,
Paene alios ignes superi decusserat imbris
Urbs aequi iustique viam transgressa Ninive.
Nam quis subversae menti metus? Omnia vulgo Poenarum documenta vacant, ubi possidet error.
At bonus et nostri patiens et plectere serus
Omnipotens dominus nullam iaculabitur iram,
Ni prius admoneat durataque pectora pulset,
Praesagos agitans augusta mente prophetas.
Namque Ninivium meritis mandarant Ionan
Praefari exitium dominus; sed conscius ille
Parcere subiectis et debita cedere poenae
Supplicibus, facilemque boni, cessabat obire,
Ne vanum caneret, cessura pace minarum.
Mox fuga consilium, si qua est tamen ista facultas,
Evitare deum dominique evadere dextram,
Quo subtertotus trepidans compescitur orbis.
At ratio est quod agit sancto de corde prophetae?
Littoris in labio portu celeberrima fido
Urbs oras Cilicum contra libratur Ioppe.
Inde igitur Tarsos properus rate poscit Ionas,
Eiusdem per signa dei; nec denique mirum,
Si dominum in terris fugiens invenit in undis.
Parvula nam subito maculaverat aera nubes
Vellere sulphureo, de semine concita venti, Paulatimque globum pariens cum sole cohaesit,
Deceptumque diem caliginis agmine clusit.
Fit speculum caeli pelagus, niger ambitus undas
Inficit, in tenebras ruit aether et mare surgit.
Nec quicquam medium est, fluctus dum nubila tangunt,

Gloria ventorum quos omnes turbine miscet.
Diversus furor in profugum frendebat Ionan.
Una ratis certamen erat caeloque fretoque,
Tunditur hinc illinc, tremit omnis silva sub ictu
Fluctifrago, subter concussae spina carinae
Palpitat, antennae stridens labor horret ab alto, Ipsa etiam infringi dubitans inflectitur arbor.
Nauticus interea genitus clamor omnia temptat
Pro rate proque anima, spiras mandare morantes
Oblaqueare mithram, clavorum stringere nisus, Vel reluctantes impellere pectore gyros.
Pars maris interni puteum gravem odore vicissim
Egrege rapiunt. Tum merces atque onus omne Praecipitant, certantque pericula vincere damnis.
Sunt miserae voces ad singula fragmina ponti,
Expanduntque manus nullorum ad numina divum,
Quos maris et caeli vis non timet, haud minus illos
Puppibus abstrusos irato turbine mergens.
Nescius haec reus ipse cavo sub fornice puppis
Sternentem inflata resonabat nare soporem,
Iam tunc in somno domini formando figuram.
Hunc simul undisecae qui cogit munia prorae,
Pace soporatum placida, requiete superbum
Institit impulsans: Quid, ait, discrimine in isto
Somnia nare canis? tantoque in turbine portum
Solus habes? en unda operit, spes unica divum est.
Tu quoque, quisque tibi deus est, dic vota precesque
Indigetans patrium supplex inflectito numen.
Exin quis culpa propior, quis causa procellae,
Discere sorte placet, nec sors mentitur Ionan.
Tunc rogitant, quis, et unde bominum, quis denique rerum,
Quo populo, qua sede cluis? famulum ille fatetur
Praetimidumque dei, qui caelum sustulit alte,
Qui terram posuit, qui totum corpore fudit,
Ipsius sese profugum causasque revelat.

Diriguere metu. Quid nos igitur tibi culpae?
Quid fore nunc? quonam placabimus aequora facto ?
Namque magis multoque magis freta saeva tumbant.
Tunc domini vates ingesta spiritus infit:
En ego tempestas, ego tota insania mundi,
In me, inquit, vobis aether ruit et mare surgit,
In me terra procul, mors proxima, nulla dei spes.
Quin date praecipitem causam, navemque levantes
Unum onus hoc magnum pelago iactate volentem.
Ast isti frustra nituntur vertere cursum
In reditum, nec clavus enim torquere sinebat,
Dura nec antennae mutari libra volebat.
Postremo ad dominum: Ne nos in mortis hiatus,
Unam animam propter dederis, ne sanguine iusti
Respersisse velis, si sic tua dextera ducit - Iamque illic imo exoriens de gurgite cetus
Squamosum conchis, evolvens corporis agmen,
Urgebat propius concusso marmore fluctus,
Sponte dei praedam rapiens, quam puppis ab arce
Provolutatam limosis faucibus hausit,
Viventemque dapem longam properavit in alvum,
Cumque viro caeli rabiem pelagique voravit.
Sternitur aequoris unda, resolvitur aetheris umbra.
Hinc fluctus, illinc flatus redduntur amici,
Securamque viam placida signante carina
Candida caeruleo florent vestigia sulco.
Nauta at tum domino leti venerando timorem
Sacrificat grates, tum portus intrat amicos.
Navigat et vates alio susceptus Ionas
Navigio fluctumque secat sub fluctibus imis,
Viscera velificans, anima inspirata ferina,
Conclusus, neque tinctus aquis, maris intimus exter,
Inter semesas classes resolutaque putri
Corpora digestu, sua iam tum funera discens.
In signum sed enim domini quandoque futurus,

Non erat exitii, sed mortis testis abactae.

Carmen de Iudicio Domini

Qui mihi ruricolae optavi carmine musas et vernis roseas titulavi floribus auras aestivasque graves maturavi messis aristas, succidi tumidas autumnus vitibus uvas et hiemis placidas laudavi semper olivas
atque modulatas exclusi fontibus undas frondentisque vago cecini de gramine silvas, protinus aetherias modulabor luminis oras:
iam mihi luciferas liceat contingere musas, pandere secretas fluviali vertice nymphas et laetas alio positas sub sidere silvas;
aeternasque simul memorabor carmine flammis, unde mare tumidas immensum fluctuet undas,
quae virtus moveat solidas tremescere terras,
et lux unde novo praefulserit aurea mundo,
quis hominem laeto potuisset fingere limo,
unde genus vacuo potuisset crescere saeculo,
et varia populo quae sit vivendi cupido,
quae creata malo primum moriendi propago,
unde bonus roseis odorque ruborque coronis,
quid faciat laetis ut vitis aestuet uvis,
utque nova teneris lactescant hordea culmis,
arbor ut in glacie nigris pubescat olivis, germinibus variis quis det crementa viroris
mollibus et matrem filiorum protegat umbris.
omnia nosse bonum quae sint incepta ramorum,
ut per cuncta Deum liceat agnoscere verum, qui lucem maria caelum terramque paravit ornavitque novum variato sidere mundum et pecudes primum volucres procedere iussit et dedit aequoreas conpleri piscibus undas atque fecundatas animalibus egit harenas.

taliter conpositis deducam carmina musis salubremque nobis exponam fontibus undam

et laetum placidis venientem nubibus imbrem, in animas hominum penitus ultroque fluentem
excipiam plenis in nostra novalia rivis.

nunc age securam vivamque adtingite nympham et celeres vitae facilem haurite liquorem, si qui vellit poenas aeternae evadere flammae ignarusque die venturique inscius aevi, et iustae potius adipisci praemia vitae:
hunc unum meminisse Deum solumque precandum
qui tolum in libra posuit sub limine mundum, aeternumque manens semperque futurus in aevum,
saecula cuncta tenens et ante saecula solus, ingenitus sine fine Deus, thronumque divinum
solus habens caelos semper supereminet altos, omnipotens solus cui parent omnia rerum,
qui sibi conplacitum hominem formavit in aevum, pastorem pecudum, dominum dedit esse ferarum, iusque dedit volucrum, pontumque solum dominandum, qui sermone tenuis potuit extendere caelum et solidam verbo iussit suspendere terram ac dicto citius separavit aequoris undam, hanc manibus caram dilexit fingere formam decoramque suam voluit inesse figuram, spiritu vivificam adflavit vultibus auram.
quanta Deus homini permisit munera mundi et praedulce sui signavit pignus amoris, utilia et cara tribuit mandata salutis,
nec ultra monitum quicquam contingeret: unum,
unde malum sciret el unde dinosceret aequum
protinus, illicitum vetuit contingere pomum.
sub dicione dedit terras animamque viventem, pinnatumque genus, pecudes, genus omne ferarum et genus aequoreum, animalia cuncta natantum.

sed quoniam primo transgressus crimine legem
iamiam primus homo Domini mandata mutabat, coniuge cuncta mala suadente morte peribat.

nam peccati malum conmisit femina primum proditaque suum decepit lege maritum.
inmemor ille Dei temere committere tanta.
Eva persuasa male patefecit limina leto et sibi cum genere creavit funera loto.
hinc (nefas!) incautum mors emanavit in aevum.
inde magis facinus facile percerebruit altum acriorque labor agitavit saevius annum.
callidus hoc zelo serpens iniecit iniquo.
inde magis populi multa commissa malorum et nefanda malis pepererunt semina factis.

idcircoque Deus solus cui summa potestas et super alta tenens summa fastigia caeli, altus inaccessam habitans in saecula lucem praeteritique memor et praescius ante futuri, progeniem meriti decretum servat in aevum,
et cunctas animas quae corpora tarda gubernant et ratione movent hominem vagante per artus, ut primum posito membrorum pondere cedunt terrenisque leves resolutae nexibus ibunt
ac proprias repetent diversis partibus oras, illicet occultis alias includi tenebris,
ast alias laetis revocari protinus auris,
servari penitus decreta ad praemia legis,
donec iterum mortis resurgant corpora membris:
nunc homines primae pensare fenora vitae
iudicesque Dei memores adstare priorum, expectare suam suo quemque ex crimine poenam.
funditus aut pecorum sine nomine pendere statu incassumve Dei finiendo fundere fletum.

an Deus omnipotens cuius sub nutu reguntur omnia, non valeat post mortem reddere vitam, aut aliquid rerum Dominum non posse videtur?
si potuit tenebris claram excludere lucem

atque omnem verbo potuit componere molem, omnia de nihilo potente voce parare,
cur non ex aliquo possit conpingere notam,
quae fuerat quondam, quae vixerat ante, figuram,
similemque suae iubeat resurgere formam?
cum sint cuncta Dei, reddit magis omnia tellus, iussa revocabit quidquid contexerat olim.
si quem forte rogis abolevit flamma sopitum,
aut aliquem caecis deiecerat aequor in undis,
si cuiusque famem satiarunt viscera piscis,
aut fixere ferae crudelia funera membris,
alitibus iacuit raptato corpore sanguis,
ultima nec Domino negabunt funera quemquam, adparere Deo vivos de morte necesse est
resumptisque suis homines adstare figuris.

semina sic versis creduntur arida terris et penitus fixis putrescunt mortua sulcis, inde reparatis animatur culmus aristis
el iterum vivis flavescunt fortia granis consurguntque novae vario cum fenore messes.
sidera cuncta cadunt, iterum renata lucescunt,
et dies in densa moritur cum lumine nocte, occidit inque diem nox rebus luce relectis
ac dies alta suis iterum resurgit in astris;
solque cadit supero referturque lumine claro, lux perit umbrato venienti vespere mundo et remeat toto renovatque gaudia saeclo.
sic cremata suo vivit de funere phoenix extemploque suo volucris resurgit e busto, et nudata foliis suo tempore fructicat arbor
atque iterum pomi curvat ex germine ramos.

ergo ut ad vocem mundo tremante divinam et penitus motis virtutibus aeris alti, tunc fragor insolitus et maxima murmura caeli promovente Deo, veniente iudice mundi.

protinus innumeri concurrunt ire ministri,
convallantque Deum cum maiestate caelesti.
angelica late descendunt agmina terris, omnes nuntii Dei, quibus est divina facultas
praecipua et forma, virtutis spiritus omnes.
igneus his vigor est, rutilantia corpora caeli, vis divina micat: hinc totus murmurat orbis, hinc trepidans terra penitus universa remugit parturiens homines quos reddere iussa debebit.
mirantur comites, turbantur denique nimbi, astra mirata pavent subito virtutis ab alto.

hinc iubente Deo facile cum voce potenti
continuo ruptis per omnia regna sepulcris omnis humus latis effundit hiatibus ossa viventisque patens populos eructat harena.
haerent membra comis, nectuntur ossa medullis, consertique regunt spirantia corpora nervi et simul infusae moventur sanguine venae dimissaeque cavis animae redduntur apertis organaque sua repetunt surgentia cunclae.
pro miranda fides! hinc omnis pullulat aetas, pullulat antiqua mortuorum pulvere turba.
matres atque viri repetita luce resurgunt, magnanimi iuvenes, pueri innuptaeque puellae defunctique senes animis viventibus adstant infantumque gemens resonat vagitibus orbis, con variae gentes veniunt de sedibus imis, Eoumque manus et quas videt ultima tellus,
quae colunt medias devexo in climate zonas Rifeasque tenent pruinosi sideris arces.
omnis adest pavidus finis cuiusque colonus,
rusticus et miles, posito diademate reges,
pauperi permixtus aequali in agmine dives.
altus ubique tremor, precibus nunc ingemit orbis, tendentesque manus populi clamore mirantur.

ipse sedens Dominus eminenti lumine clarus et praepotens cunctis micat in virtutibus ignis, excelsoque throno caelesti sede coruscat martyribus septus, numero candente virorum, beatisque suis comitatus vatibus extat,
clara quibus niveis effulgent tempora taenis.
iamque sacerdotes nitidis in vestibus adsunt gestantes rutilas praemia vitae coronas submissique omnes genibusque reflexis adorant.
'solus agius sanctusque Deus' vox omnibus una est.
hinc Dominus geminam iubebit sistere plebem, imperat et iustos numero discerni malorum, indutosque iubet devicta morte vigorem semper inextinctam habere luminis auram, ire per antiqua semper florentia regna,
ditia per nemora, semper amoena virecta,
degere perpetuam praeclaro in corpore vitam.

est locus Eois Domino dilectus in oris lux ubi clara nitet spiratque salubrior aura, aeternaque dies atque immulabile tempus et secreta Deo regio ditissima campis beataque nimis sereno in cardine sedes.
semper aer laetus semperque in luce futurus lenis et adspirans vitalia flamina ventus.
omnia fert aequa solo prodivite tellus.
floreas libratis conflagrat purpura pratis,
omnia praeutilam miscent non invida lucem,
flos alium laetus suo lumine vestit amictum.
hinc rosea niveo variantur semine rura et roseis nivea crispantur floribus arva.
nescias illa quibus suavescent pulchrius arva
aut quibus aetheria spiret felicius aura, quis melior specie vel plus praececellat honore.
nunquam florigeris similes nascuntur in hortis,
lilia nec nostris floruerunt talia campis,

nec sic nostra rubent, mox ut rosa panditur, arva, purpura nec Tyrio sic est incocta rubore.
gemma coloratis fulget speciosa lapillis,
prasinus inde nitet, illinc carbunculus ardet,
zmaragdusque lapis micantia lumina fundit.
hic et odoriferis nascuntur cinnama virgis et viridi laetum folio conflagrat amomum.
hic iacet ingenitum radiati luminis aurum et nemora alta lenens florenti vertice caelum virentisque gravant uberrima germina ramos.
nulla suos similes porrexit India lucos,
non ita densa levat viridis cacumina pinus,
nec sic alta comas crispat vibrata cupressus,
nec vernus melius floret cum tempore ramus.
hic aliter celsae florent in vertice nigrae aeternumque virent solae sine grandine silvae.
nulla cadunt folia, nullus flos tempore deficit,
robore compacto viret et purpurat arbor.
sed puto, flos ille rosa est, rubor aequus in illo,
sic species, talem foliis adspirat odorem.
stat cum flore novis arbor pulcherrima pomis vitalemque frugem felicia robora densant.
mella viridatis conflagrant pingua ramis,
lac etiam plenis manat potabile rivis.
vitam spirat ibi quidquid pia terra virescit beatoque simul quidquid de germine floret, atque solum pulchrae redolet medicabile Cretae.
fons illic placidus perfundit agmine campos,
quattuor inde rigant partita flumina terras.
ver, puto, semper agit vestitus floribus aether.
non frigus variat hiberni sideris auras,
nec radiata micat pressis caloribus aestas.
caelum luce sua serena temperat auras et reficit fetam meliore flamine terram.
nox ibi nulla, sua defendunt astra tenebras.

iraeque insidiaeque absunt et dira cupido, exclususque metus, pulsaeque a limite curae.
hinc malus extremis relegatur exul in oris, beatosque labor vetitus contingere fines.
illic prisca fides electa in sede quiescit.
iustitia gaudens aeterno in foedere vivit et secura salus placidis laetatur in auris semper victura semperque in luce futura.
hic quicumque pius aequi bonique colonus, quique Deum metuit innoxia mente tonantem
atque suos coluit sacra pietate parentes et coluit sanctam semper sine crimine vitam aut inopem quotiens opibus solatus amicis atque laborantes nimium subvenit egenos, pauperis adiutor, solitus salvare pupillos,
eruit et nocitos, subvenit crimine pressis,
hospitibus carae tribuit sua pignera mensae,
omnia divinis gessit sua munera iussis,
non aliquem nocuit, non aliena cupivit, illi exultantes divinis laudibus omnes orantesque simul referunt ad sidera voces;
psallentes Domino celebrant per gaudia grates
bealamque viam nuntiis comitantibus ibunt.

postquam haec Dominus felicia dona peregit et iustos pariter aeterna in regna remisit, et miseranda venit lugens sua crimina turba.
fit gemitus, maerent lacrimis agentibus omnes testanturque sua crebris ululatibus acta.
flammae pro meritis instantia tela tremescunt.
angeli conripiunt iamiam prohibentque precari et prohibent seras paenitentiae fundere voces, iamque precum venia flamma veniente negatur.
o miseri, quotiens vobis divina potestas innotuit, quotiens maiestas cognita veri!
audistis sonitus, vidistis fulgora caeli,

adsidue pluvias, ventorum et grandinis iras
experti, quotiens noctesque diesque serenos!
tempora fecundabant Dei munera donis:
ver abundabat rosas, frugibus nec defuit aestas, autumnus varia praebebat mitia poma,
semper hiems laetas glacialis fregit olivas.
cuncta Deus tribuit, bonitas nec defuit ulla,
nec per tanta Deum genus omne scivit humanum.
terra Deum tremuit, pontus Dei nutu pependit et fluvius siccis trepidus refluxit harenis, et genitura Deum per omnia laeta fatetur.

vos tamen hunc Dominum caeli terraeque negastis et iustos potius crudeli caede necastis praeconesque Dei plerique saepe fugastis.
veritas in vobis pro crimine semper inhaesit.
et ideo fructum capietis sementis, iniqui!
noscitis ecce diem quem vos ridere soletis.
ibitis in tenebras ignis et sulphuris altas ardendo saevas passuri doloribus iras.
hos aeternae iubet Dominus discedere poenae, ire sub ardore semper sine fine gehennae,
urgueri molem per stagna torrentia flammae.
in flammas converti iubet elementa minantis
atque omnem caeli descendere nubibus ignem.

tunc avidus rapidos excludit tartarus ignis
atque procellosas ructuabunt aequora flammae, totaque viventis confundit terra favillis, flammeus et sulcos aer vibrabit iratos
atque omnibus facibus torrens armabitur orbis impetu tartareo frendent incendia mundo.
illi praecipitem pulsati tolluntur in aestum,
hinc fugiunt, illinc cursu referuntur acuto.
obvia fit saeva flammae fugientibus ira,
agnoscuntque suam iamiam de crimine poenam.
iamque vaga nullo tellus possessa colono et maris extremis pressa sub fine profundo, qua sol emenso radios definit Olympo ortaque transacto conduntur sidera mundo.

gliscit aer densis abstrusa luce tenebris,
ultima secretis stagna flammantia rivis.
est natura loci signatis ignea poenis, et palus infernis candens ardoribus ima
intonat; horrificis fertur poenale caminis, aestuat et rapido turbatus vertice flammās
in tormenta ruens fluctuanti gurgite flumen.
torrida se cuncta caeno miscetur harena.
huc captiva gemens mittetur turba malorum arsurumque (nefas!) scelerati corporis agmen.
magnus plangor ibi fletu sociante clamorem et stridor rabidus; ululatus inde dolentum exsurget de flamma procul altusque sonoras ignis et ardentis gemilus consurgit in auras.

tunc humana mali pendet commissa propago, incipientque preces ad caelum tendere seras
atque Deum nunc nosse volunt quem nosse nolebant.
illic quisque suae fatebitur effera vitae nocentesque manus et saevas crimine mentes atque infanda sui testabitur effera vitae.
iam primum quicumque Deum male senserat ante et vaga mentito coluisset numine saxa atque cruentatas signis sacraverat aras et picturatas timuit sine voce figuras ac falsi tenuis adoravit numinis umbras, et quemcumque malus seduxit protinus error,
si quis adulter erat, natos quicumque necarat.
si quocumque malo quis conscia mente vivebat aut rapto grassatus erat aut fraude clientis, si quis humano suas maculabat sanguine palmas
atque latebrosa miscebat morte venena, tunc si quis vacuo scelerabat pectora furlo

aut alieni mali lucro gaudebat iniquo, admisit quicumque nefas quodcumque malorum,
altus ardor eos igni torquebit amaro, suppliciumque dabunt vivente funere cuncti
sic hominum tolam maerentes servare turbam.
haec adeo sancti quotiens cecinere prophetae,
spiritu saepe Dei moniti dixere futura?
sic Deus omnipotens voluit sua praemia nosci
atque minas positae per talia legis miltendo plures caelestia verba clamantes.
denique iussu Dei conpegit ossa prophetes et stupuit mota subito non sponte sepulcra, cineribus creta iacuisse corpora passis, surgere tunc vivos anima veniente miratus et cum voce sua ad caelum lendere palmas.
illi quidem tumulos repetiere silentes servandique Dei diei cessere futuro:
paulisper iussit retineri cubilibus imis, donec ille dies completo tempore magnus adveniat. cuncti Dominum cognoscite verum qui solus animam faciat conscendere lucem eandemque potest in Tartara trudere poenae et cui cuncta patet vitae mortisque potestas.
posse Deo nam velle sat est, factumque dicendo
ille meus solus metuendus sensibus imis.
et quoniam leto cursus concluditur omnis, quicumque est hodie, secum sua vita feretur.
et ideo, dum vita manet, dum carpere lucem, dum paeniteri licet, prius quam terminus aevi
occupet incautos et nescia lumina solvat ultimus ille dies mortis qui lege tenetur, quod primum superest, carae vigilate saluti et faciles certique bonum deflectite cursum.
post errata suis et pressa piacula sacris postque vagas nimium quae vos vexere procellas

rectas adite vias et flumina laeta tenete.
hinc laetis prius animis repellite crimen,
et concreta diu proluatur pectore culpa;
tunc conmissa mali mites abolete nefanda aeternisque Deum precibus placate tremendum, pessima cuncta bonis cedant, morialia vivis.
quod servate novam iamiam sine crimine vitam et servate pias veroque in nomine mentes, ac veniam primis supplices rogate delictis.
iamiam pura piis maturescant corda colonis, innocuasque manus precibus adtollite iustis
laudibus et faciles divinis reddite voces, incipiantque bonis verisque adsuescere mentes divinaeque magis celebrentur munera legis, et memorate bona simulque invadite facta.
sordida nitescant olim conmissa malorum,
et meliora piis flagrabunt omnia vobis,
horrendisque simul liberatur vita periclis
atque aeterna suis veniet ad praemia votis.

Carmen Genesis

Principio Dominus caelum terramque locauit:
Namque erat informis fluctuque abscondita tellus,
Immensusque Deus super aequora uasta meabat,
Dum chaos et nigrae fuscabant cuncta tenebrae.
Has dum disiungi iussit de cardine, fatur:
Lux fiat, claro et micuerunt omnia mundo.
Cum Dominus primi compleret facta diei,
Condidit albatem nebulis nascentibus axem:
Accipit inmensus errantia littora pontus,
Multiplices rapiens ualidis cum tractibus amnes.
Tertia lux faciem terrarum fulua rexit,
Arida mox posito narratur nomine terra,
Flore a uentosis consurgunt germina campis
Pomiferique simul procuruant brachia rami.
Quarta die generat solis cum lampade lunam
Et stellas tremulo radiantes lumine fingit:
Haec elementa dedit subiecto insignia mundo,
Tempora quae doceant uarios mutanda per ortus.
Quinta die accipiuut liquentia flumina pisces
Et uolucres uarias suspendunt aere pennas.
Sexta pater gelidos in spiras lubricat angues
Quadrupedumque greges totos diffundit in agros
Cunctaque multiplici mandauit crescere passim
Germine et immensis errare et pascere terris.
Haec ubi constituit diuina potentia iussu,
Rectorem inspiciens mundanis defore rebus
Haec memorat: hominem nostris faciamus in unguem
Vultibus adsimilem, toto qui regnet in orbe.
Et licet hunc uno posset componere uerbo,
Ipse tamen sancta dignatus ducere dextra,
Inspirat brutum diuino a pectore pectus.
Quem postquam effigie formatum ceu sua uidit,
Metitur solum mordaces uoluere curas.
Illicet irriguo perfundit lumina somno,

Mollius ut uulsa formetur femina costa
Atque artus mixtu gemino substantia firmet.
Inditur et nomen uitae quod dicitur Eua.
Quapropter nati linquunt de more parentes
Coniugibusque suis positis cum sedibus haerent.
Septima luce Deus factorum fino quieuit,
Sacratam statuens uenturi ad gaudia saeculi:
Ilicet exhibitis animantum ex ordine turbis
Viritim cunctis nomen quod permanet indit
Adamus donata sibi prudentia sollers.
Quem Deus alloquio iunctam dignatur et Euam:
Crescite multimodo uentura in tempora partu,
Vt polus et plenae uestro sint germine terrae,
Heredesque mei, uarios decerpite fructus,
Quos nemora et pingui reddunt de cespite campi.
Haec ubi disseruit, laeta paradisu in aula
Instruitur primique aspectat lumina solis.
Gignitur haec inter pomis letalibus arbos,
Coniunctum generans uitae mortisque saporem.
Aedibus in mediis puro fluit agmine flumen,
Quod rigat insignes liquidis de fluctibus ortus
Quadrifidosque secat undante ex fonte meatus.
Fison auriferis praediues fluctuat undis
Conspicuasque terit rauco de gurgite gemmas:
Prasinus huic nomen, illi est carbunculus ardens,
Perspicuusque uadis terram praelambit Euilat.
Post hunc Aethiopus Gaeon adlapsus opimat.
Tertius est Tigris, Eufrati adiunctus amoeno, Assyriam celeri discretim flumine sulcans.
Hic positus custos Adamus cum coniuge fida
Atque opifex tali formatur uoce tonantis:
Ne trepidate simul licitos praecerpere fructus,
Quos nemus intonsum ramo frondente creauit,
Solliciti ne forte malum noxale legatis,
Quod uiret ex gemino discreta ad munia suco.

Nec minus interea caecos nox alta tenebat
Ac modo formatos uestis nec texerat artus.
Has inter sedes et baccis mitibus ortus,
Spumeus astuto uincens animalia sensu,
Serpebat tacite spiris frigentibus anguis,
Liuida mordaci uoluens mendacia sensu,
Femineo temptat sub pectore mollia corda:
Dic mihi cur metuas felidia germina mali?
Numquid poma Deus non omnia nota sacrauit?
E quis si studeas mellitos carpere uictus,
Aureus astrigero redibit cardine mundus.
Illa negat uetitosque timet contingere ramos:
Sed tamen infirmo uincuntur pectora sensu.
Illicet ut niueo iam mitia dente momordit,
Adfulsit nulla maculatum nube serenum.
Tum sapor illecebram mellitis faucibus indens,
Compulit insueto munus deferre marito.
Quod simul ac sumpsit, deterosa nocte nitentes
Emicuere oculi mundo splendente sereni.
Ergo ubi nudatum prospexit corpus uterque
Cumque pudenda uident, ficulnis frondibus umbrant.
Forte sub occiduo Domini iam lumine solis
Agnoscunt sonitum trepidique ad deuia tendunt.
Tum Dominus caeli maestum compellat Adamum:
Dic ubi nunc degas ? respondit talia supplex :
O Domine, adfatus pauido sub corde tremisco,
Magne, tuos nudusquo metu frigente fatigor.
Tum Dominus: quis poma dedit noxalia uobis?
Tradidit haec mulier, dum dicit lumina promptim
Candenti perfusa die liquidumque sorem
Adfulsisse sibi solemque et sidera caeli.
Protinus ira Dei turbatam territat Euam,
Auctorem uetiti dum quaerit maximus acti.
Illa sub haec pandit: serpentis suasa loquentis
Accepi fallente dolo blandoque rogatu:

Nam sua uipereis intexens uerba uenenis
Haec mihi prae cunctis narrauit dulcia pomis.
Illicet omnipotens condemnat gesta draconis,
Praecipiens cunctis inuisum uisere monstrum:
Pectore mox fuso prorepere, tum sola morsu
Mandere, mansuro quaecumque in tempora bello
Humanos inter sensus ipsumque labantem,
Vertice ut abiecto pronus post crura uirorum
Serperet, ut calcet dum labens comminus instat.
Femina fraudigeris misere decepta suadelis,
Praecipitur duro discrimine ponere partum
Seruitiumque sui studio perferre mariti.
Tu uero cui uisa fuit sententia uerax
Coniugis, immiti cessit quae uicta draconi,
Deflebis miserum per tempora longa laborem:
Nam tibi triticeae surget pro germine messis
Carduus et spinis multum paliurus acutis,
Vt cum uisceribus lassis et pectore maesto
Plurima sollicitos praestent suspiria uictus,
Donec in occiduo uenientis tempore mortis,
Vnde geris corpus, terrae reddare iacenti.
His actis Dominus trepidis dat taedia uitae,
Deiectosque procul sacratis dimouet hortis
Obuersosque locat medioque eliminat igni,
In quo perceleri Cherubim euoluitur aestu,
Dum calidus deferuet apex flammisque uolutat.
Quis Dominus, pigro ne frigore membra rigerent,
Consuit euulsas pecudum de uiscere pelles
Operiens nudos calidis de uestibus artus.
Ergo ubi coniugio sese iam fidus Adamus
Esse uirum sensit, nomen genitricis amatae
Exhibet uxori. binos qui germine factus
Continuo genitor diuersis nuncupat orsis.
Atque Cain hic nomen habet, cui iunctus Abelus:
Innocuas multa seruabat cura bidentes,

At alius curuo terram uertebat aratro.
Hi cum perpetuo ferrent sua dona torianti,
Dissimiles fructus sensu suadente dedere.
Nam prior uberibus fuerant quae prosata glebis
Optulit: ast alius miti se deuouet agno,
Exta gerens sincera manu adipemque niuaalem.
Confestimque placet Domino pia uota tuenti.
Quod propter gelida Cain incanduit ira.
Quem Deus adloquio dignatus talibus infit:
Dic mihi, si rectum uiuas et noxia cernas,
Degere non possis contracto a crimine purus?
Desine mordaci fratrem disperdere sensu,
Qui tibi ceu Domino subiectus colla praebebit.
Nec tamen his fractus fratrem deducit ad arua
Atque ubi deprensus deserto in gramine uidit,
Elidit geminis fraudans pia guttura palmis.
Quod factum Dominus caelo speculatus ab alto
Disquirat quonam terrarum degat Abelus ?
Ille negat positum custodem se fore fratris.
Cui Deus effatur: nonne uox sanguinis eius
Ad me missa sonat celsumque ascendit ad axem?
Nosce igitur mansura tibi pro crimine tanto:
Nam modo quae maduit germani sanguine terra,
Inuiso maledicta tibi commissa negabit
Semina et absumtis fructum non proferet herbis, Torpidus ut multo collidens membra tremore

De Execrandis Gentium Diis

1. Tantum caecitatis invasit genus Romanum, ut inimicum suum Dominum vocent et ablatores bonorum adeo datorem sibi esse praedicent, atque illi gratias agant; vocant ergo illos nominibus humanis, non propriis; nesciunt enim eorum nomina; quia sint daemones intelligunt, sed historias veterum Regum legunt, quorum actum cum videant fuisse mortalem, deifico honorificant eos nomine.

2. Iovem quem vocant quemque putant summum Deum, quando natus est, a constitutione mundi erant ad illum tempus anni ferme tria millia. Hic in Graecia nascitur de Saturno et Ope, et ne a patre interficeretur, aut si fas est dicere, denuo pareretur, Cretam delatus consilio matris in antro Idaeo nutritur, a Cretibus hominibus natis arma quatientibus occultatur, caprae ubera sugit, cuius excoriatae pelle amictus utitur nutricis suae, scilicet a se interfectae: sed tres cincinnos aureos ei assuit centenum boum singulos pretium valentes, sicut meminit auctor eorum Homerus, credere si aequum est. Hic adulta aetate cum patre annis compluribus bellum gessit, superavit, parricidio domum invasit, sorores virgines stupravit, quarum unam in connubio elegit, patrem armis fugavit: caetera autem actus illius scripta sunt. Ex connubiis alienis aut virginibus violatis filios sibi adulteros generavit, pueros ingenuos attaminavit, tyrannico regalique imperio oppressit populos, sine lege. 3. Hunc pater quem Initialem deum fuisse opinantur errantes, celari in insula Creta ignoravit, filius quoque, quem potentiores deum credunt, fugatum a se patrem latere in Italia nescit. Si erat in caelo, cum non videbat quid in Italia gereretur? Non enim in angulo est terra Italia. Quamquam si fuisset deus, latere eum nihil debebat: latuisse autem ibi, quem Itali Saturnum vocitaverunt, liquido approbatum est, a cuius latitatione lingua Hesperia Latina nominata est usque in hodiernum: sicut etiam auctor eorum Virgilius meminit.

4. Ergo in terra generatus dicitur, dum, et ne ab eo regno pellatur, timet, et tamquam aemulum quaerit necare, et subreptum nescit latere, et postea deus filius patrem prosequitur, interficere quaerit immortalis immortalem, credi potest, et intervallo pelagi fallitur, et fugisse ignorat, et cum haec agerentur inter duos deos in terris caelum desertum est. Nemo administrabat pluvias, nemo tonabat, nemo gubernabat tantam molem orbis. Nec enim possunt dicere actum illorum, et bella in caelo esse facta: haec enim in monte Olympo fiebant in Graecia: sed nec caelum Olympum vocatur, caelum enim caelum

5. De quibus ergo actibus eorum primum tractabimus, de nativitate, de latitatione, de ignorantia, de parricidio, de adulteriis, de obscenis actibus, de rebus non a deo, sed ab hominibus immundissimis et truculentissimis commissis, qui si essent in his temporibus, omnibus legibus rei subiacerent, quae multo iustiores et severiores quam actus illorum. Patrem armis pulsavit, lex Falcidia et Sempronia parricidam in culeo cum feris ligaret, et sorores corruptit, lex Papinia omnibus poenis per singula membra probrium puniret, connubia aliena invasit, lex Iulia adulterum suum capite afficeret, pueros ingenuos attaminavit, lex Cornelia transgressi foederis amissum novis exemplis novi coitus sacrilegum damnaret.

6. Hic nec divinitatem habuisse ostenditur: erat enim homo: latuit eum fuga patris: huic tali homini, tam nefando regi, tam obsceno tamque crudeli dei assignatus est honos ab hominibus, qui utique cum sit in terra natus et per incrementa aetatum adultus, in qua omnia haec mala admisit et modo non sit in ea, quid putatur, nisi mortuus, aut nunquid putat stultus error pennas ei natas in senectute, unde ad caelum volaret? sed possunt et hoc credere orbiati sensu homines, si tamen credunt eum cygnum factum esse, ut generaret Castores, et aquilam, ut contaminaret Ganymedem, et taurum, ut violaret Europam, aurum, ut violaret Danaen; et equum, ut generaret Pirithoum; hircum, ut generaret Egyppam de capra, satyrum, ut opprimeret Antiopam, haec quia adulteria spectant, ad quae proni sunt peccatores: ideo facile credunt, ut male facti auctoritates et omnis spurcitiae de ficto deo mutuentur.

Roman villas at Carthage — it is believed that Tertullian spent most of his life in Carthage.

From 'Catholic Encyclopedia (1913), Volume 14 Tertullian'

Ecclesiastical writer in the second and third centuries, b. probably about 160 at Carthage, being the son of a centurion in the proconsular service. He was evidently by profession an advocate in the law-courts, and he shows a close acquaintance with the procedure and terms of Roman law, though it is doubtful whether he is to be identified with a jurist Tertullian who is cited in the Pandects. He knew Greek as well as Latin, and wrote works in Greek which have not come down to us. A pagan until middle life, he had shared the pagan prejudices against Christianity, and had indulged like others in shameful pleasures. His conversion was not later than the year 197, and may have been earlier. He embraced the Faith with all the ardour of his impetuous nature. He became a priest, no doubt of the Church of Carthage. Monceaux, followed by d'Ales, considers that his earlier writings were composed while he was yet a layman, and if this be so, then his ordination was about 200. His extant writings range in date from the apologetics of 197 to the attack on a bishop who is probably Pope Callistus (after 218). It was after the year 206 that he joined the Montanist sect, and he seems to have definitively separated from the Church about 211 (Harnack) or 213 (Monceaux). After writing more virulently against the Church than even against heathen and persecutors, he separated from the Montanists and founded a sect of his own. The remnant of the Tertullianists was reconciled to the Church by St. Augustine. A number of the works of Tertullian are on special points of belief or discipline. According to St. Jerome he lived to extreme old age.

The year 197 saw the publication of a short address by Tertullian, "To the Martyrs", and of his great apologetic works, the "Ad nationes" and the "Apologeticus". The former has been considered a finished sketch for the latter; but it is more true to say that the second work has a different purpose, though a great deal of the same matter occurs in both, the same arguments being displayed in the same manner, with the same examples and even the same phrases. The appeal to the nations suffers from its transmission in a single codex, in which omissions of a word or several words or whole lines are to be deplored. Tertullian's style is difficult enough without such super added causes of obscurity. But the text of the "Ad nationes" must have been always rougher than that of the "Apologeticus", which is a more careful as well as a more perfect work, and contains more matter because of its better arrangement; for it is just the same length as the two books "Ad nationes".

The "Ad nationes" has for its entire object the refutation of calumnies against Christians. In the first place they are proved to repose on unreasoning hatred only; the procedure of trial is illogical; the offence is nothing but the name of Christian, which ought rather to be a title of honour; no proof is forthcoming of any crimes, only rumour; the first persecutor was Nero, the worst of emperors. Secondly, the individual charges are met; Tertullian challenges the reader to believe in anything so contrary to nature as the accusations of infanticide and incest. Christians are not the causes of earthquakes and floods and famine, for these happened long before Christianity. The pagans despise their own gods, banish them, forbid their worship, mock them on the stage; the poets tell horrid stories of them; they were in reality only men, and bad men. You say we worship an ass's head, he goes on, but you worship all kinds of animals; your gods are images made on a cross framework, so you worship crosses. You say we worship the sun; so do you. A certain Jew hawked about a caricature of a creature half ass, half goat, as our god; but you actually adore half-animals. As for infanticide, you expose your own children and kill the unborn. Your promiscuous lust causes you to be in danger of the incest of which you accuse us. We do not swear by the genius of Caesar, but we are loyal, for we pray for him, whereas you revolt. Caesar does not want to be a god; he prefers to be alive. You say it is through obstinacy that we despise death; but of old such contempt of death was esteemed heroic virtue. Many among you brave death for gain or wagers; but we, because we believe in judgment. Finally, do us justice; examine our case, and change your minds. The second book consists entirely in an attack on the gods of the pagans; they are marshalled in classes after Varro. It was not, urges the apologist, owing to these multitudinous gods that the empire grew.

Out of this fierce appeal and indictment was developed the grander "Apologeticus", addressed to the rulers of the empire and the administrators of justice. The former work attacked popular prejudices; the new one is an imitation of the Greek Apologies, and was intended as an attempt to secure an amelioration in the treatment of Christians by alteration of the law or its administration. Tertullian cannot restrain his invective; yet he wishes to be conciliating, and it breaks out in spite of his argument, instead of being its essence as before. He begins again by an appeal to reason. There are no witnesses, he urges, to prove our crimes; Trajan ordered Pliny not to seek us out, but yet to punish us if we were known; - what a paralogism! The actual procedure is yet more strange. Instead of being tortured until we confess, we are tortured until we deny. So far the "Ad Nationes" is merely developed and strengthened. Then, after a condensed summary of the second book as to the heathen gods, Tertullian begins in chapter xvii an exposition of the belief of Christians in one God, the Creator, invisible, infinite, to whom the soul of man, which by nature is inclined to Christianity, bears witness. The floods and the fires have been His messengers. We have a testimony, he adds, from our sacred books, which are older than all your gods. Fulfilled prophecy is the proof that they are divine. It is then explained that Christ is God, the Word of God born of a virgin; His two comings, His miracles, passion, resurrection, and forty days with the disciples, are recounted. The disciples spread His doctrine throughout the world; Nero sowed it with blood at Rome. When tortured the Christian cries, "We worship God through Christ". The demons confess Him and they stir men up against us. Next, loyalty to Caesar is discussed at greater length than before. When the populace rises, how easily the Christians could take vengeance: "We are but of yesterday, yet we fill your cities, islands, forts, towns, councils, even camps, tribes, decuries, the palace, the senate, the forum; we have left you the temples alone". We might migrate, and leave you in shame and in desolation. We ought at least to be tolerated; for what are we? - a body compacted by community of religion, of discipline, and of hope. We meet together to pray, even for the emperors and authorities, to hear readings from the holy books and exhortations. We judge and separate those who fall into crime. We have elders of proved virtue to preside. Our common fund is replenished by voluntary donations each month, and is expended not on gluttony but on the poor and suffering. This charity is quoted against us as a disgrace; see, it is said, how they love one another. We call ourselves brethren; you also are our brethren by nature, but bad brethren. We are accused of every calamity. Yet we live with you; we avoid no profession, but those of assassins, sorcerers, and such like. You spare the philosophers, though their conduct is less admirable than ours. They confess that our teaching is older than theirs, for nothing is older than truth. The resurrection at which you jeer has many parallels in nature. You think us fools; and we rejoice to suffer for this. We conquer by our death. Inquire into the cause of our constancy. We believe this martyrdom to be the remission of all offences, and that he who is condemned before your tribunal is absolved before God.

These points are all urged with infinite wit and pungency. The faults are obvious. The effect on the pagans may have been rather to irritate than to convince. The very brevity results in obscurity. But every lover of eloquence, and there were many in those days, will have relished with the pleasure of an epicure the feast of ingenious pleading and recondite learning. The rapier thrusts are so swift, we can hardly realize their deadliness before they are renewed in showers, with sometimes a blow as of a bludgeon to vary the effect. The style is compressed like that of Tacitus, but the metrical closes are observed with care, against the rule of Tacitus; and that wonderful maker of phrases is outdone by his Christian successor in gemlike sentences which will be quoted while the world lasts. Who does not know the anima naturaliter Christiana (soul by nature Christian); the Vide, inquit, ut invicem se diligant (see they exclaim, how they love one another), and the Semen est sanguis Christianorum (The blood of Christians is seed)? It was probably about the same time that Tertullian developed his thesis of the “Testimony of the Soul” to the existence of one God, in his little book with this title. With his usual eloquence he enlarges on the idea that common speech bids us use expressions such as “God grant”, or “If God will”, “God bless”, “God sees”, “May God repay”. The soul testifies also to devils, to just vengeance, and to its own immortality.

Two or three years later (about 200) Tertullian assaulted heresy in a treatise even more brilliant, which, unlike the “Apologeticus”, is not for his own day only but for all time. It is called “Liber de praescriptione haereticorum”. Prescription now means the right obtained to something by long usage. In Roman law the signification was wider; it meant the cutting short of a question by the refusal to hear the adversary’s arguments, on the ground of an anterior point which must cut away the ground under his feet. So Tertullian deals with heresies: it is of no use to listen to their arguments or refute them, for we have a number of antecedent proofs that they cannot deserve a hearing. Heresies, he begins, must not astonish us, for they were prophesied. Heretics urge the text, "Seek and ye shall find", but this was not said to Christians; we have a rule of faith to be accepted without question. "Let curiosity give place to faith and vain glory make way for salvation", so Tertullian parodies a line of Cicero's. The heretics argue out of Scripture; but, first, we are forbidden to consort with a heretic after one rebuke has been delivered, and secondly, disputation results only in blasphemy on the one side and indignation on the other, while the listener goes away more puzzled than he came. The real question is, "To whom does the Faith belong? Whose are the Scriptures? By whom, through whom, when and to whom has been handed down the discipline by which we are Christians? The answer is plain: Christ sent His apostles, who founded churches in each city, from which the others have borrowed the tradition of the Faith and the seed of doctrine and daily borrow in order to become churches; so that they also are Apostolic in that they are the offspring of the Apostolic churches. All are that one Church which the Apostles founded, so long as peace and intercommunion are observed [dum est illis communicatio pacis et appellatio fraternitatis et contesseratio hospitalitatis]. Therefore the testimony to the truth is this: We communicate with the apostolic Churches". The heretics will reply that the Apostles did not know all the truth. Could anything be unknown to Peter, who was called the rock on which the Church was to be built? or to John, who lay on the Lord's breast? But they will say, the churches have erred. Some indeed went wrong, and were corrected by the Apostle; though for others he had nothing but praise. "But let us admit that all have erred:- is it credible that all these great churches should have strayed into the same faith"? Admitting this absurdity, then all the baptisms, spiritual gifts, miracles, martyrdoms, were in vain until Marcion and Valentinus appeared at last! Truth will be younger than error; for both these heresiarchs are of yesterday, and were still Catholics at Rome in the episcopate of Eleutherius (this name is a slip or a false reading). Anyhow the heresies are at best novelties, and have no continuity with the teaching of Christ. Perhaps some heretics may claim Apostolic antiquity: we reply: Let them publish the origins of their churches and unroll the catalogue of their bishops till now from the Apostles or from some bishop appointed by the Apostles, as the Smyrnaeans count from Polycarp and John, and the Romans from Clement and Peter; let heretics invent something to match this. Why, their errors were denounced by the Apostles long ago. Finally (36), he names some Apostolic churches, pointing above all to Rome, whose witness is nearest at hand, - happy Church, in which the Apostles poured out their whole teaching with their blood, where Peter suffered a death like his Master's, where Paul was crowned with an end like the Baptist's, where John was plunged into fiery oil without hurt! The Roman Rule of Faith is summarized, no doubt from the old Roman Creed, the same as our present Apostles' Creed but for a few small additions in the latter; much the same summary was given in chapter xiii, and is found also in "De virginibus velandis" (chapter I). Tertullian evidently avoids giving the exact words, which would be taught only to catechumens shortly before baptism. The whole luminous argument is founded on the first chapters of St. Irenaeus's third book, but its forceful exposition is not more Tertullian's own than its exhaustive and compelling logic. Never did he show himself less violent and less obscure. The appeal to the Apostolic churches was unanswerable in his day; the rest of his argument is still valid.

A series of short works addressed to catechumens belong also to Tertullian's Catholic days, and fall between 200 and 206. "De spectaculis" explains and probably exaggerates the impossibility for a Christian to attend any heathen shows, even races or theatrical performances, without either wounding his faith by participation in idolatry or arousing his passions. "De idololatria" is by some placed at a later date, but it is anyhow closely connected with the former work. It explains that the making of idols is forbidden, and similarly astrology, selling of incense, etc. A schoolmaster cannot elude contamination. A Christian cannot be a soldier. To the question, "How am I then to live?", Tertullian replies that faith fears not famine; for the Faith we must give up our life, how much more our living? "De baptismo" is an instruction on the necessity of baptism and on its effects; it is directed against a female teacher of error belonging to the sect of Gaius (perhaps the Anti-Montanist). We learn that baptism was conferred regularly by the bishop, but with his consent could be administered by priests, deacons, or even laymen. The proper times were Easter and Pentecost. Preparation was made by fasting, vigils, and prayers. Confirmation was conferred immediately after by unction and laying on of hands. "De paenitentia" will be mentioned later. "De oratione" contains an exposition of the Lord's Prayer, totius evangelii breviarium. "De cultu feminarum" is an instruction on modesty and plainness in dress; Tertullian enjoys detailing the extravagances of female toilet and ridiculing them. Besides these didactic works to catechumens, Tertullian wrote at the same period two books, "Ad uxorem", in the former of which he begs his wife not to marry again after his death, as it is not proper for a Christian, while in the second book he enjoins upon her at least to marry a Christian if she does marry, for pagans must not be consorted with. A little book on patience is touching, for the writer admits that it is an impudence in him to discourse on a virtue in which he is so conspicuously lacking. A book against the Jews contains some curious chronology, used to prove the fulfilment of Daniel's prophecy of the seventy weeks. The latter half of the book is nearly identical with part of the third book against Marcion. It would seem that Tertullian used over again what he had written in the earliest form of that work, which dates from this time. "Adversus Hermogenem" is against a certain Hermogenes, a painter (of idols?) who taught that God created the world out of pre-existing matter. Tertullian reduces his view ad absurdum, and establishes the creation out of nothing both from Scripture and reason.

The next period of Tertullian's literary activity shows distinct evidence of Montanist opinions, but he has not yet openly broken with the Church, which had not as yet condemned the new prophecy. Montanus and the prophetesses Priscilla and Maximilla had been long dead when Tertullian was converted to belief in their inspiration. He held the words of Montanus to be really those of the Paraclete, and he characteristically exaggerated their import. We find him henceforth lapsing into rigorism, and condemning absolutely second marriage and forgiveness of certain sins, and insisting on new fasts. His teaching had always been excessive in its severity; now he positively revels in harshness. Harnack and d'Alès look upon "De Virginibus velandis" as the first work of this time, though it has been placed later by Monceaux and others on account of its irritated tone. We learn that Carthage was divided by a dispute whether virgins should be veiled; Tertullian and the pro-Montanist party stood for the affirmative. The book had been preceded by a Greek writing on the same subject. Tertullian declares that the Rule of Faith is unchangeable, but discipline is progressive. He quotes a dream in favour of the veil. The date may be about 206. Shortly afterwards Tertullian published his largest extant work, five books against Marcion. A first draft had been written much earlier; a second recension had been published, when yet unfinished, without the writer's consent; the first book of the final edition was finished in the fifteenth year of Severus, 207. The last book may be a few years later. This controversy is most important for our knowledge of Marcion's doctrine. The refutation of it out of his own New Testament, which consisted of St. Luke's Gospel and St. Paul's Epistles, enables us to reconstitute much of the heretic's Scripture text. The result may be seen in Zahn's, "Geschichte des N. T. Kanons", II, 455-524. A work against the Valentinians followed. It is mainly based on the first book of St. Irenaeus.

In 209 the little book "De pallio" appeared. Tertullian had excited remark by adopting the Greek pallium, the recognized dress of philosophers, and he defends his conduct in a witty pamphlet. A long book, "De anima", gives Tertullian's psychology. He well describes the unity of the soul; he teaches that it is spiritual, but immateriality in the fullest sense he admits for nothing that exists, - even God is corpus. Two works are against the docetism of the Gnostics, "De carne Christi" and "De resurrectione carnis". Here he emphasizes the reality of Christ's Body and His virgin-birth, and teaches a corporal resurrection. But he seems to deny the virginity of Mary, the Mother of Christ, in partu, though he affirms it ante partum. He addressed to a convert who was a widower an exhortation to avoid second marriage, which is equivalent to fornication. This work, "De exhortatione castitatis", implies that the writer is not yet separated from the Church. The same excessive rigour appears in the "De corona", in which Tertullian defends a soldier who had refused to wear a chaplet on his head when he received the donative granted to the army on the accession of Caracalla and Geta in 211. The man had been degraded and imprisoned. Many Christians thought his action extravagant, and refused to regard him as a martyr. Tertullian not only declares that to wear the crown would have been idolatry, but argues that no Christian can be a soldier without compromising his faith. Next in order is the "Scorpiace", or antidote to the bite of the Scorpion, directed against the teaching of the Valentinians that God cannot approve of martyrdom, since He does not want man's death; they even permitted the external act of idolatry. Tertullian shows that God desires the courage of the martyrs and their victory over temptation;

he proves from Scripture the duty of suffering death for the Faith and the great promises attached to this heroism. To the year 212 belongs the open letter “Ad scapulam”, addressed to the proconsul of Africa who was renewing the persecution, which had ceased since 203. He is solemnly warned of the retribution which overtakes persecutors.

The formal secession of Tertullian from the Church of Carthage seems to have taken place either in 211 or at the end of 212 at latest. The earlier date is fixed by Harnack on account of the close connection between the “De corona” of 211 with the “De fuga”, which must, he thinks, have immediately followed the “De corona”. It is certain that “De fuga in persecutione” was written after the secession. It condemns flight in time of persecution, for God’s providence has intended the suffering. This intolerable doctrine had not been held by Tertullian in his Catholic days. He now terms the Catholics “Psychici”, as opposed to the “spiritual” Montanists. The cause of his schism is not mentioned. It is unlikely that he left the Church by his own act. Rather it would seem that when the Montanist prophecies were finally disapproved at Rome, the Church of Carthage excommunicated at least the more violent among their adherents. After “De fuga” come “De monogamia” (in which the wickedness of second marriage is yet more severely censured) and “De jejunio”, a defence of the Montanist fasts. A dogmatic work, “Adversus Praxean”, is of great importance. Praxeas had prevented, according to Tertullian, the recognition of the Montanist prophecy by the pope; Tertullian attacks him as a Monarchian, and develops his own doctrine of the Holy Trinity (see MONARCHIANS and PRAXEAS). The last remaining work of the passionate schismatic is apparently “De pudicitia”, if it is a protest, as is generally held, against a Decree of Pope Callistus, in which the pardon of adulterers and fornicators, after due penance done, was published at the intercession of the martyrs. Monceaux, however, still supports the view which was once commoner than it now is, that the Decree in question was issued by a bishop of Carthage. In any case Tertullian’s attribution of it to a would-be episcopus episcoporum and pontifex maximus merely attests its peremptory character. The identification of this Decree with the far wider relaxation of discipline with which Hippolytus reproaches Callistus is uncertain.

The argument of Tertullian must be considered in some detail, since his witness to the ancient system of penance is of first-rate importance. As a Catholic, he addressed “De paenitentia” to catechumens as an exhortation to repentance previous to baptism. Besides that sacrament he mentions, with an expression of unwillingness, a “last hope”, a second plank of salvation, after which there is no other. This is the severe remedy of exomologesis, confession, involving a long penance in sackcloth and ashes for the remission of post-baptismal sin. In the “De pudicitia” the Montanist now declared that there is no forgiveness for the gravest sins, precisely those for which exomologesis is necessary. It is said by some modern critics, such as Funk and Turmel among Catholics, that Tertullian did not really change his view on this point the writing of the two treatises. It is pointed out that in “De paenitentia” there is no mention of the restoration of the penitent to communion; he is to do penance, but with no hope of pardon in this life; no sacrament is administered, and the satisfaction is lifelong. This view is impossible. Tertullian declares in “De pud.” That he has changed his mind and expects to be taunted for his inconsistency. He implies that he used to hold such a relaxation, as the one he is attacking, to be lawful. At any rate in the “De paen.” he parallels baptism with exomologesis, and supposes that the latter has the same effect as the former, obviously the forgiveness of sin in this life. Communion is never mentioned, since catechumens are addressed; but if exomologesis did not eventually restore all Christian privileges, there could be no reason for fearing that the mention of it should act as an encouragement to sin, for a lifelong penance would hardly be a reassuring prospect. No length is mentioned, evidently because the duration depended on the nature of the sin and the judgment of the bishop; had death been the term, this would have been emphatically expressed. Finally. And this is conclusive, it could not be insisted on that no second penance was ever allowed, if all penance was lifelong.

For the full understanding of Tertullian’s doctrine we must know his division of sin into three classes. There are first the terrible crimes of idolatry, blasphemy, homicide, adultery, fornication, false witness, fraud (Adv. Marc., IV, ix; in “De Pud.” he substitutes apostasy for false witness and adds unnatural vice). As a Montanist he calls these irremissible. Between these and mere venial sins there are modica or media (De Pud., I), less grave but yet serious sins, which he enumerates in “De Pud.”, xix: “Sins of daily committal, to which we are all subject; to whom indeed does it not occur to be angry without cause and after the sun has set, or to give a blow, or easily to curse, or to swear rashly, or break a contract, or lie through shame or necessity? How much we are tempted in business, in duties, in trade, in food, in sight, in hearing! So that, if there were no forgiveness for such things, none could be saved. Therefore there will be forgiveness for these sins by the prayer of Christ to the Father” (De Pud., xix).

Another list (De pud., vii) represents the sins which may constitute a lost sheep, as distinguished from one that is dead: “The faithful is lost if he attend the chariot races, or gladiatorial combats, or the unclean theatre, or athletic shows, or playing, or feasts on some secular solemnity, or if he has exercised an art which in any way serves idolatry, or has lapsed without consideration into some denial or blasphemy”. For these sins there is forgiveness, though the sinner has strayed from the flock. How is forgiveness obtained? We learn this only incidentally from the words: “That kind of penitence which is subsequent to faith, which can either obtain forgiveness from the bishop for lesser sins, or from God only for those which are irremissible” (ib., xviii). Thus Tertullian admits the power of the bishop for all but “irremissible” sins. The absolution which he still acknowledges for frequent sins was obviously not limited to a single occasion, but must have been frequently repeated. It is not even referred to in “De paen”, which deals only with baptism and public penance for the gravest sins. Again, in “De pud.”, Tertullian repudiates his own earlier teaching that the keys were left by Christ through Peter to His Church (Scorpiace, x); he now declares (De pud., xxi) that the gift was to Peter personally, and cannot be claimed by the Church of the Psychici. The spiritual have the right to forgive, but the Paraclete said: “The Church has the power to forgive sins but I will not do so, lest they sin afresh.”

The system of the Church of Carthage in Tertullian’s time was therefore manifestly this: Those who committed grievous sins confessed them to the bishop, and he absolved them after due penance enjoined and performed, unless the case was in his judgment so grave that public penance was obligatory. This public penance was only allowed once; it was for protracted periods, even sometimes until the hour of death, but at the end of it forgiveness and restoration were promised. The term was frequently shortened at the prayer of martyrs.

Montanist manner of prophesying, “De ecstasi”, in six books, with a seventh book against Apollonius. To the peculiarities of Tertullian’s views which have already been explained must be added some further remarks. He did not care for philosophy: the philosophers are the “patriarchs of the heretics”. His notion that all things, pure spirits and even God, must be bodies, is accounted for by his ignorance of philosophical terminology. Yet of the human soul he actually says that it was seen in a vision as tender, light, and of the colour of air! All our souls were contained in Adam, and are transmitted to us with the taint of original sin upon them, - an ingenious if gross form of traducianism. His Trinitarian teaching is inconsistent, being an amalgamation of the Roman doctrine with that of St. Justin Martyr. Tertullian has the true formula for the Holy Trinity, tres Personae, una Substantia. The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are numerically distinct, and each is God; they are of one substance, one state, and one power. So far the doctrine is accurately Nicene. But by the side of this appears the Greek view which was one day to develop into Arianism: that the unity is to be sought not in the Essence but in the origin of the Persons. He says that from all eternity there was reason (ratio) in God, and in reason the Word (Sermo), not distinct from God, but in vulva cordis. For the purpose of creation the Word received a perfect birth as Son. There was a time when there was no Son and no sin, when God was neither Father nor Judge. In his Christology Tertullian has had no Greek influence, and is purely Roman. Like most Latin Fathers he speaks not of two Natures but of two Substances in one Person, united without confusion, and distinct in their operations. Thus he condemns by anticipation the Nestorian, Monophysite, and Monothelite heresies. But he seems to teach that Mary, the Mother of Christ, had other children. Yet he makes her the second Eve, who by her obedience effaced the disobedience of the first Eve.

Tertullian’s doctrine of the Holy Eucharist has been much discussed, especially the words: “Acceptum panem et distributum discipulis corpus suum illum fecit, hoc est corpus meum dicendo, id est, figura corporis mei”. A consideration of the context shows only one interpretation to be possible. Tertullian is proving that Our Lord Himself explained bread in Jer., xi, 19 (mittamus lignum in panem ejus) to refer to His Body, when He said, “This is My Body”, that is, that bread was the symbol of His Body. Nothing can be elicited either for or against the Real Presence; for Tertullian does not explain whether the bread is the symbol of the Body present or absent. The context suggests the former meaning. Another passage is: Panem, quo ipsum corpus suum repraesentat. This might mean “Bread which stands for His Body”, or “Presents, makes present”. D’Ales has calculated that the sense of presentation to the imagination occurs seven times in Tertullian, and the similar moral sense (presentation by picture, etc.) occurs twelve times, whereas the sense of physical presentation occurs thirty-three times. In the treatise in question against Marcion the physical sense alone is found, and fourteen times. A more direct assertion of the real presence is Corpus ejus in pane censetur (De orat., vi). As to the grace given, he has some beautiful expressions, such as: “Itaque petendo panem quotidianum, perpetuitatem postulamus in Christo et individuitatem a corpore ejus” (In petitioning for daily bread, we ask for perpetuity in Christ, and indivisibility from His body. - Ibid.). A famous passage on the Sacraments of Baptism, Unction, Confirmation, Orders and Eucharist runs: “Caro abluitur ut anima maculetur; caro ungitur ut anima consecretur; caro signatur ut et anima muniatur; caro manus impositione adumbratur ut et anima spiritu illuminetur; caro corpore et sanguine Christi vescitur ut et anima de Deo saginetur” (The flesh is washed, in order that the soul may be cleansed; the flesh is anointed, that the soul may be consecrated; the flesh is signed [with the cross], that the soul, too, may be fortified; the flesh is shadowed with the imposition of hands, that the soul also may be illuminated by the Spirit; the flesh feeds on the body and blood of Christ, that the soul likewise may have its fill of God - “Deres. Carnis.”, viii). He testifies to the practice of daily communion, and the preserving of the Holy Eucharist by private persons for this purpose. What will a heathen husband think of that which is taken by his Christian wife before all other food? “If he knows that it is Bread, will he not believe that it is simply what it is called?” This implies not merely the Real Presence, but transubstantiation. The station days were Wednesday and Friday; on what other days besides Holy Mass was offered we do not know. Some thought that Holy Communion would break their fast on Station days; Tertullian explains: “When you have received and reserved the Body of the Lord, you will have assisted at the Sacrifice and have accomplished the duty of fasting as well” (De oratione, xix). Tertullian’s list of customs observed by Apostolic tradition though not in Scripture (De cor., iii) is famous: the baptismal renunciations and feeding with milk and honey, fasting Communion, offerings for the dead (Masses) on their anniversaries, no fasting or kneeling on the Lord's Day and between Easter and Pentecost, anxiety as to the falling to the ground of any crumb or drop of the Holy Eucharist, the Sign of the Cross made continually during the day.

Tertullian's canon of the Old Testament included the deuterocanonical books, since he quotes most of them. He also cites the Book of Enoch as inspired, and thinks those who rejected it were wrong. He seems also to recognize IV Esdras, and the Sibyl, though he admits that there are many sibylline forgeries. In the New Testament he knows the Four Gospels, Acts, Epistles of St. Paul, I Peter (Ad Ponticos), I John, Jude, Apocalypse. He does not know James and II Peter, but we cannot tell that he did not know II, III John. He attributes Hebrews to St. Barnabas. He rejects the "Pastor" of Hermas and says that many councils of the Psychici had also rejected it. Tertullian was learned, but careless in his historical statements. He quotes Varro and a medical writer, Soranus of Ephesus, and was evidently well read in pagan literature. He cites Irenaeus, Justin, Miltiades, and Proclus. He probably knew parts of Clement of Alexandria's writings. He is the first of Latin theological writers. To some extent, how great we cannot tell, he must have invented a theological idiom and have coined new expressions. He is the first witness to the existence of a Latin Bible, though he seems frequently to have translated from the Greek Bible as he wrote. Zahn has denied that he possessed any Latin translation, but this opinion is commonly rejected, and St. Perpetua certainly had one at Carthage in 203.

I. LIFE.

The earliest of the great Latin Fathers, their chief in fire and daring, and the first to create a technical Christian Latinity, is known almost entirely through his writings. It can only be conjectured that he was born between a.d. 150 and 160, and died between 220 and 240, with preference for the later dates. He was born at Carthage (Hieron. Catal. Script. Eccl. 53; cf. Tertull. Apol. c. ix.) of heathen parents (de Poen. c. i.; Apol. c. xviii. “de vestris sumus”), his father being a proconsular centurion (Hieron.). Tertullian received a good education (Apol. c. xiv.; adv. Prax. c. iii.). In after-life he recalled his school studies in Homer (ad Nat. i. c. x.); but poetry attracted him less than philosophy, history, science, and antiquarian lore. He spoke and composed in Greek, but his Greek writings are lost. He studied the systems of the philosophers if he mocked and hated the men (cf. de Anima, cc. i.–iii.). Possibly destined for state-official life, he was celebrated for his knowledge of Roman law (Eus. H. E. ii. 2), and the legal fence and juridical style of the advocate are observable throughout his apologetic and polemical writings.

He was probably attracted to Christianity by complex irresistible and converging forces: “Fiunt, non nascuntur Christiani” (Apol. c. xviii.). The constancy of the Christians in times of persecution staggered him. He knew men who began by denouncing such “obstinacy,” and ended in embracing the belief which dictated it (Apol. c. i.; ad Scap. c. v.). Demons confessed the superiority of the new faith (Apol. c. xxiii.), and Tertullian, in common with his heathen and Christian contemporaries, was a profound believer in demons (cf. Réville, La Religion à Rome sous les Sèvéres, p. 46. 130 seq.). These facts led him to examine the faith which seemed to promise a foothold which no philosophical system furnished. It was illustrated by a life of holiness and humility — that of its Founder, the Just One — in contrast with which the life of the Cynic and the Stoic sickened him.

His conversion took place c. 192, in Carthage more probably than in Rome. Carthage was his home and usual dwelling-place (de Pallio, c. i.; Apol. c. ix.; Scorpiace, c. vi.; de Resur. Carnis, c. xlii.); Rome he had visited (de Cultu Femin. i. c. vii.), and he was well known there for his abilities (Eus. l.c.), but critics are by no means agreed whether he ever went there as a Christian (cf. Baron. Annal. Eccl. ii. 476, ed. Theiner). He was married but childless (cf. the two treatises ad Uxorem), and became a priest of the church. He probably exercised his presbyterate at Carthage and not at Rome.

In middle age (c. 119–203), says Jerome, Tertullian became a Montanist, his constitution and temperament predisposing him to a rigour opposed to the laxity prevalent at Rome, and so finding the austere doctrines and practices of Montanus perfectly congenial (Kaye, Account of the Writings of Tertullian,³). He became the head of the Montanist party in Africa — a party which existed till the 5th cent. under the name of “Tertullianists.”

II. TIMES.

The golden age of the empire died with Marcus Aurelius (161–180); the age of iron began with his son Commodus (180–193). The golden age of the church began with that iron age of the empire (Aubé, Les Chrétiens dans l'empire romain, a.d. 180–249, pp. iii, 495–498). Expiring polytheism and ancient philosophy were confronted by a new philosophy and a nascent faith.

From one quarter only of the empire was the comparative peacefulness noticeable elsewhere absent. In Africa persecution, sharp, short, fitful, and frequent, marked the reign of Septimius Severus and the most active period of Tertullian's life. It is stamped in letters of blood upon his pages.

The church in Africa has no historian before Tertullian, though its foundation is placed, with much probability, at the end of cent. i. or the beginning of cent. ii. By the end of cent. ii. the Christians in Roman Africa were to be counted by thousands (cf. Aubé,) if not by millions (cf. Apol. c. xxxvii.; ad Scapulam, cc. ii. v.). They were fully organized and had their bishops, priests, deacons, places of assembly, and cemeteries. Immunity from the wholesale decimation which had befallen, by imperial command (cf. Apol. c. v.), other Christian bodies of the East and West, allowed in Africa growth and development, accelerated by occasional suffering and martyrdom. But the tempest broke upon the African church at last.

Facts connected with the persecutions can be followed in those writings of Tertullian which all critics place between a.d. 197 and 212, from the ad Martyres to the ad Scapulam.

The tract ad Martyres depicts men and women in prison, visited and relieved by the brethren, exhorted to unity, and prepared by fasting and prayer for the death which should be a victory for the church. Vigellius Saturninus was the first proconsul to draw the sword against Christians (ad Scapulam, c. iii.), and his date is not apparently earlier than 198 (see Aubé, , etc.). The martyrology of Africa had begun in 180. In a time of peace the Scillitan martyrs had died at Carthage (Görres, Jahr. f. Prot. Theol. 1884, pts. ii. iii.); but after that there is a blank till 198, when Namphamo was the new "archimartyr" of the church. A few months' respite followed. It was disturbed by an event which is with some plausibility alleged to have taken place at Carthage. A certain soldier refused the donativum of Severus and Caracalla, publicly declined the laurel crown accepted by his fellow-soldiers, and proclaimed himself a Christian. The incident is described in the de Corona; Tertullian, making it a test case, debated whether the Christian could accept military service. His advice, and the conduct founded upon it, infuriated the heathen. Under Hilarian (202–203) persecution broke out again. It took the special form of refusing the Christian dead their usual place of burial; the cry invaded the proconsul's tribune, "Areae non sint!" ("No cemeteries for the Christians!"). Just then the decree issued in 202 by Severus indirectly if not directly gave sanction to all measures of repression. It forbade proselytizing by either Jew or Christian. It was easy, were the African proconsul so minded, to read into this purely prohibitive measure a licence to persecute. The "fight of martyrdom and the baptism of blood" which ensued is perhaps to be traced in Tertullian's de Fuga and Scorpiace (between 202–212). These treatises are fiercely scornful against the flight once counselled when persecution raged. The de Fuga (c. v.) denounces, not less angrily, a growing practice — purchase of immunity. Of sterner mould and of more loving faith were the brothers Satyrus and Saturninus, the slaves Revocatus and Felicitas, and the nobly born and nobly-wedded Perpetua. The Acts of their passion, by some (e.g. Bonwetsch and Salmon) attributed to Tertullian himself, have preserved a picture of the times — a reluctant proconsul, all-willing martyrs, and a scoffing crowd saluting their baptism of blood with the mocking cry, "Salvum lotum" (see the Acts in Migne's Patr. Lat. iii., and Aubé's collation, op. cit. p. 224, 509, etc.).

Again there came a respite, and again must the character of the proconsul have been instrumental in securing it. Of Julius Asper (proconsul in 205 or 206) it is told that not only did he refuse to force a Christian to sacrifice who under the torture had lapsed from the faith, but publicly expressed regret to his assessors and the advocates at having to deal with such cases (ad Scapulam, c. iv.). For five or six years persecution was stayed, years of literary activity on the part of Tertullian. In 211, for some unknown reason, the religious war broke out afresh, and its cruel if brief progress is told in the ad Scapulam. Tertullian's last "Apology" is worthy of the Christian gladiator. Stroke upon stroke he deals his ponderous blows against the proconsul. "We battle with your cruelty," he cries; but his weapons are the "offensive" weapons which Christ had put in his hands — prayer for the persecutors, love for enemies

(Matt. v. 44d). God's judgments, he warns them, were abroad. Drought, fires, eclipses, declared His wrath; the miserable deaths of persecuting proconsuls betokened it. "This our sect shall never fail," is his triumphant shout. "Strike it down, it will rise the more. We recompense to no man evil for evil, but we warn you — Fight not against God!"

In 212 the blessing of peace rested again upon Africa and continued for some years.

III. WRITINGS.

Tertullian's literary activity is by some confined to 197–212; by others, with far greater probability, it is extended to at least c. 223. A general chronological arrangement only is possible, the dates given being few and uncertain. The only work which supplies positive evidence of date is the first book adv. Marcionem (3rd ed.). In c. xv. Tertullian says he is writing in the 15th year of Severus, now considered to be a.d. 207 (Bonwetsch, Die Schriften Tertullians nach der Zeit ihrer Abfassung,). Tertullian was then a Montanist, but his pen had for some years been employed in behalf of the church.

Tertullian's writings represent him variously as layman, priest, and schismatic; and divide broadly into works written in the Catholic or Montanist periods of his life. The latter must further be subdivided into treatises in which Catholic or schismatic elements are respectively prominent. In character they are threefold: (a) Apologetic; (b) Dogmatic and polemical; (c) Moral and ascetic. The arrangements of Bp. Kaye and Bonwetsch have in the main suggested that which follows; though the dates attached are in almost all cases conjectural.

(1) Works written while still in the church: (a) Apologetic writings (c. 197–198): ad Martyres; Apologeticum; de Testimonio Animae; ad Nationes, i. ii.; adv. Judaeos.

(b) Other works of this period, but of less certain date: de Oratione; de Baptismo; de Poenitentia; de Spectaculis; de Cultu Feminarum, i.; de Idololatria; de Cultu Feminarum, ii.; de Patientia; ad Uxorem, i. ii. (the last five c. 197–199); de Praescriptione Haereticorum (c. 199); adv. Marcionem i. (1st ed.), c. 200.

(2) Montanistic writings: —

(a) Defending the church and her teachings (c. 202–203): de Corona; de Fuga in Persecutione; de Exhortatione Castitatis.

(b) Defending the Paraclete and His discipline: de Virginibus Velandis (c. 203–204, a transition work); adv. Marcion. (2nd ed.; c. 206); ib. (3rd ed.; c. 207). Between 200–207 or later: adv. Hermogenem; adv. Valentinianos; adv. Marcion. (iv.); de Carne Christi; de Resurrectione Carnis; adv. Marcion. (v.). De Pallio and de Anima (c. 208–209); Scorpiace (c. 212; al. 203 or 204); ad

Scapulam (c. 212). Three c. 217, al. 203–207: de Monogamia; de Jejunio; de Pudicitia; and adv. Praxeas (c. 223, al. c. 208–209).

A. Tertullian, Layman and Apologist. — Ad Martyres. — Two thoughts (c. iii.) should animate the martyrs. (1) Christians were soldiers, “called to the military service of the living God” by a sacramental oath, to which they must be true. (2) They were Christian athletes whose prison was their training-school (palaestra), where “virtus duritia extruitur, mollitia vero destruitur.” The words of Christ (Matt. xxvi. 41) should help them to subject the flesh to the spirit, the weaker to the stronger; the example of the heathens, Lucretia and Mucius, Heraclitus and Peregrinus, Dido and the wife of Hasdrubal, would teach them to count their sufferings trifling if, by enduring them, they might obtain a heavenly glory and a divine reward. In their own day many persons of birth, rank, and age had met their death at the hands of the emperor. Should Christians hesitate to suffer as much in the cause of God?

Apologeticum. — This Apology — the greatest of his works — was a cry for bare justice.

(1) A heading to c. i., “Quod religio Christiana damnanda non sit, nisi qualis sit prius intelligatur,” sums up its protest: The rulers of Carthage were persecuting and condemning a “sect” which forthcoming evidence proved unworthy of condemnation. Their conduct was the reverse of that enjoined by the emperor Trajan — that Christians were not to be sought out; but if brought before Pliny were to be punished. Tertullian reminds the rulers (c. v.) that the laws against Christians had been enforced only by emperors whose memory men had learnt to execrate: e.g. Nero and Domitian. Not such as these was Tiberius (cf. Eus. H. E. ii. 2), in whose day Christ came into the world (cf. c. vii.), and who had desired the senate to admit Him among the Roman deities. Marcus Aurelius was a protector. Not even Hadrian, Vespasian, Pius, nor Verus had put into force the laws against Christians. The men who were demanding this were daily and contemptuously infringing laws of all kinds. In proof he draws a sad picture of luxury and immorality. The good old laws had gone which encouraged in women modesty and sobriety.

(2) Chaps. vii.–ix. What were the charges against the Christians? “We are called miscreants” — and the evidence was only rumour! “Fama malum, quo non aliud velocius ullum.” It was, Tertullian retorts, the existence (secret or open) of evil practices among the heathen which explained their belief in similar deeds among Christians.

(3) Chaps. x.–xxvii. Tertullian faces the first of the two great charges, “sacrilege and treason.” His “apology” as regards the former consists, briefly speaking, of (a) “demonstratio religionis eorum” (cc. x.–xvi. xxiv.–xxvii.) and of (b) “demonstratio religionis nostrae” (cc. xvii.–xxiii.), a most valuable evidential passage.

(a) You Christians, said the heathen, do not worship our gods: No, said Tertullian, and we won’t, because we do not recognize them to be gods. They were nothing but men of long ago, whose merits should have plunged them into the depths of Tartarus. How much better would it have been if the deus deificus had waited and taken up to heaven in their place such men as Socrates, Aristides, Themistocles, and others. The images excite Tertullian’s intense scorn, as “the homes of hawks and mice and spiders.” Caustically does he describe the heathen treatment of their household gods. “You pledge them, sell them, change them. They wear out or get broken, and you turn your Saturn into a cooking-pot and your Minerva into a ladle! You put your national gods in a sale-catalogue; and the man who will sell you herbs in the herb-market will sell you gods at the Capitol. Or what could be more insulting than the company you give them? You worship Larentina, the prostitute, together with Juno or Ceres or Diana. You erect (at Rome) a statue to SIMON MAGUS and give him as inscription the title of sanctus deus (see Kaye’s Tertull., and Oehler’s note here). You turn into a god a sodomite like Antinous” (see Kellner’s note).

What then, it was asked, did Christians worship if not the gods? Tertullian answers, “Take in this first of all: they who are not worshippers of a lie are worshippers of truth.” From this might be deduced the whole of the Christian religious belief. But before Tertullian proceeds to do this, he refutes some very false, but common, opinions about the Christians, e.g. the vulgar belief that the god of the Christians was an ass’s head, that they worshipped the cross, or the sun. Lately a bestiarius (see Semler’s and Kellner’s notes) had exhibited a picture at Rome inscribed Deus Christianorum ονοκοιτης. The figure had the ears of an ass, one foot was hoofed, in his hand was a book, and he was dressed in a toga (see D. C. A. s.n. “Asinari”). The name and the form only made us laugh, says Tertullian; and then he retorts: “But our opponents might well have worshipped such a bifurmed deity: for they have dog-headed and lion-headed gods, gods with horns, gods with wings, gods goat-limbed, fish-limbed, or serpent-limbed from the loins!”

(b) Tertullian turns from what Christianity was not to what it was, and the main lines of the evidences of Christianity in the 2nd cent. are still those of our own. These chapters (xvii.–xxiii.), so valuable in the history of religious belief, deserve the student’s close attention. The eloquence, fervour, humility, and devoutness of the writer will be felt to be contagious. Irony and passion are comparatively absent. The section details (*b*₁) the nature and attributes of the Creator, (*b*₂) the mission of the prophets, men full of (inundati) the Holy Spirit, (*b*₃) the character of the Scriptures, and (*b*₄) the history of the Lord. Under *b*₃ Tertullian notes two things. These Scriptures were marked, first, by that antiquity which his opponents rightly valued. The most ancient heathen writings were far less ancient than those of Moses, the contemporary of the Argive Inachus, and (as some thought) 500 years older than Homer. Nay, the very last prophet was coeval with the first of the (heathen) philosophers, lawgivers, and historians. “Quod prius est, semen sit necesse est.” Secondly, the Scriptures were marked by majesty. “Divinas probamus (scripturas), si dubitatur antiquas.” This internal evidence was a proof of their antiquity, while the external and daily fulfilment of prophecy was a reason for expecting the verification of what was not yet fulfilled.

*b*₄ is in answer to the questions, Why did Jews and Christians differ? Did not these differences argue worship of different gods? Tertullian’s reply (c. xxi.) is a history of the origin of the Christian sect and name, and an account of the Founder of Christianity, such as we have in the Gospels. His account is interspersed with most interesting statements, e.g. the Jewish inference from the humility of Christ that He was only man, and from His miraculous power that He was a magician, and not the Logos of God; the record of the darkening of the sun at the crucifixion preserved in the secret archives of the empire; the reason for the seclusion of the Lord after the resurrection, viz. “that the wicked should be freed from their error, and that faith destined for so glorious a reward should be established upon difficulty”; his own opinion that Caesars (such as Tiberius) would have believed in Christ, if they could have been Caesars and Christians at the same time; the sufferings of the disciples at the hands of the Jews; and at last, through Nero’s cruelty, the sowing the seed of Christianity at Rome in their blood (cf. c. l.). He concludes: “Deum colimus per Christum.” Count Him a mere man if you like. By Him and in Him God wishes to be known and worshipped.

One more point remained. Romans considered their position as masters of the world the reward of their religious devotion to their gods, and affirmed that they who paid their gods the most service flourished the most. Tertullian traverses this “assumption” in ironical terms, or meets it with positive denial.

(4) Chaps. xxviii.–xxxvi. — The charge laesae augustioris majestatis is now reached. The evil spirits stirred up the heathen to compel Christians to sacrifice pro salute imperatoris; and that compulsion was met by resistance not less determined. Ironically does Tertullian commend in the heathen the dread with which they regarded Caesar as more profound and reverential than that which they accorded to the Olympian Jupiter. Christians were counted publici hostes, because they would not pay to the emperor vain, lying, or unseemly honours; and because, as verae religionis homines, they kept the festival days not lasciviously, but as conscientious men. Truly if public joy was to be expressed by public shame, the Christians deserved condemnation.

(5) Chaps. xxxvii.–xl. — This section, dealing with minor points of objection to the Christians, opens with an impassioned protest on behalf of men who, actuated by the principle “Idem sumus imperatoribus qui et vicinis nostris,” never took vengeance for the wrongs done to them. Mob-law had attacked them with stones and fire, or with Bacchanalian fury had torn their dead from the graves to rend their bodies asunder. Had Christianity tolerated repaying evil with evil, what secret vengeance could have been wrought in a single night with a torch or two! Or, had they determined to act as open enemies, what numbers and resources would they have had! “We are but of yesterday,” is Tertullian’s proud boast (cf. c. i.), “and yet we have filled your cities, fortresses, towns, assemblies, camp, palace, senate, and forum: sola vobis reliquimus templa. Should we determine to separate from you and betake ourselves to some remote corner of the globe, your loss of so many citizens would cover you with shame. The solitude, silence, and stupor as of a dead world would fill you with fear. You would have to seek subjects to govern. Your enemies would be more numerous than your citizens. At present it is your Christian citizens who make your enemies so few.” Tertullian therefore asks that Christians should be admitted “inter licitas factiones.” The “sect” was incapable of any such acts as were dreaded in forbidden societies.

If they had indeed their own occupations (negotia), why should that give offence? For what were the “negotia Christianae factionis”? (c. xxxix.). Tertullian’s answer is a touching picture of the simple Christendom of his day. “We are a body linked together by a common religious profession, by unity of discipline, and by a common hope. We meet as a congregation and pray to God in united supplication. Haec vis Deo grata est. We pray for the emperors, their ministers, and those in authority, for the welfare of the world, for peaceful times, and for the delaying of the end (see c. xxxii.). We come together to listen to our Holy Scriptures (cf. Just. Mart. Apol. ii.); and by holy words we nourish faith, raise hope, stablish confidence, and strengthen discipline. Our presidents are elders of approved character, who have obtained this honour not by purchase but by desert. On the monthly day appointed each gives to the chest what he likes; the money is disbursed not in feasting and drinking, but in supporting and burying the poor, in providing for destitute orphan boys and girls, in supporting the aged, the infirm, and the shipwrecked, and in succouring those sent to the mines or incarcerated in prisons ex causa Dei sectae.”

(6) Chaps. xlv. — Accusations had been met and the case of the Christian stated. What remained? One last perversion on the part of unbelief: “Christianity was no divine institution, but simply a kind of philosophy.” The refutation of this closes the Apology. Tertullian, if frequently satirical, is at first grave and dignified, sober and patient, more than is his wont; but the smouldering fire bursts out at last; his last chapter is a climax of withering scorn and impassioned appeal.

Ad Nationes (i. ii.) is practically a short form of the Apology. It covers the same ground, uses the same arguments and largely the same language. But the Apology was addressed to the rulers and magistrates of Carthage, this to the people. Its whole cast is consequently more popular, its arguments less prolonged, its illustrations less reserved (cf. I. cc. iv. viii. xvi.; II. c. xi.).

De Testimonio Animae was written very soon after the Apology, to which it refers (c. v.). Some have thought it the most original and acute of his works (see Neander, Antignosticus,). Many of his predecessors, says Tertullian (c. i.), had ransacked heathen literature to discover in it support of the Christian efforts to expel error and admit equity. The attempt was, in his opinion, a mistake and a failure. He would not repeat it. Neither would he adduce

Christian writings when dealing with heathen, for nobody consulted them unless already a Christian. Therefore he turns to another and a new testimony, that of the soul. Apostrophizing it, he cries, "Thou art not, so far as I know, Christian. The soul is not born Christian [cf. Apol. xviii.], but becomes Christian. Yet Christians beg now for a testimony from thee, as from one outside them; a testimony against thine own that the heathen may blush for their hatred and mockery of us." The testimony of the soul to God is found in popular phrases indicative of knowledge and fear of God; then it is adjured to speak about immortality and the resurrection of the body (c. iv.; cf. Apol. xlviii.).

Adversus Judaeos. — The authenticity and integrity of the treatise, as usually printed, have both been disputed; the latter with justice, the former needlessly, and principally on account of the discredit attaching to the latter portion. Chaps. i.–viii. are certainly Tertullian's, written while still a churchman. The latter chapters are different, both in character and style. The treatise was occasioned by a dispute between a Christian and a heathen converted, not to Christianity but to Judaism. Practically, the question between them was the exclusion or not of Gentiles from the promises of God. But there was a preliminary question. Was any one expected, and if expected, had any one come, "novae legislator, sabbati spiritalis cultor, sacrificiorum aeternorum antistes, regni aeterni aeternus dominator," or was His advent still matter of hope? (c. vii.). The fulfilment of prophecy rightly understood was the answer. Tertullian does not need to prove that the Christ should come. Every Jew believed and hoped it. Is. xlv. 1 was sufficient proof of it. (He renders the passage differently from the present Hebrew text, and with one especially interesting variation, reading, "Thus saith the Lord God to my Christ the Lord (Κυρίω)," etc., instead of "to Cyrus (Κύρω) His anointed," etc. So also in adv. Prax. cc. xi. xxviii.] In the then fulfilment of this prophecy he sees the proof that the Christ had come. Upon whom but upon Christ had the nations believed? — nations such as (int. al.) Moors, Spaniards, Gauls, Britons, "inhabiting places inaccessible to the Romans but subjugated to Christ" (in the same chapter he speaks of them as "shut up within the circuit of their own seas"), Germans and others, unknown to him, and too numerous to mention. Christ reigned everywhere, was adored everywhere: "omnibus aequalis, omnibus rex, omnibus judex, omnibus Deus et Dominus est."

B. Tertullian the Priest. — Tertullian had hitherto written as a layman. The writings now to be considered indicate more or less directly that he had become a priest (cf. de Baptismo, cc. xvii. xviii.). Persecution was for a time suspended. It is highly probable that about this time a synod of African bishops met at Carthage to discuss matters affecting the organization, discipline, and teaching of the church; and the occasion may have been used to ordain one who, as an “apologist,” had proved himself so fearless a champion of the church. Questions concerning heretical baptism, and the attitude of the church towards the heretical sects, were very probably discussed, and Tertullian’s lost treatise on heretical baptism was written in Greek to circulate the synod’s decisions beyond the confines of the African church.

Other points, however, dealing with Christian life and ethics, came before him in his work in Carthage as a priest. The flock looked to their pastors for guidance: prayer, baptism, repentance, and the discipline connected with them; woman’s dress and woman’s life, married or unmarried; pleasures, amusements, how far lawful or unlawful, — all were matters upon which direction was desirable, and to all does Tertullian apply himself. Roughly divided, the treatises were practical and doctrinal, but the division must not be pressed too closely.

(1) Practical Treatises. — De Oratione. (a) Of the Lord’s Prayer specifically (cc. i.–xi.); (b) of prayer generally — times, places, and customs (cc. xii.–end).

(a) As Christ was Spirit, Word, and Reason, so His prayer was formed of three parts: the word by which it was expressed, the spirit by which alone it had power, the reason by which it was appropriated (the reading is disputed); and the practice of prayer was recommended with three injunctions: that it should be offered up in secret, marked by modesty of faith,” and distinguished by brevity. It was in very truth “breviarium totius evangelii.” It is reckoned as containing seven clauses, the doxology not being given; and each clause is considered separately. The comments are reflections rather than interpretations; and if unequal and sometimes fanciful, they are very beautiful and can never be read without profit. His own summary (c. ix.) is a mine of spiritual thought. He approves of other prayers being used corresponding with the special circumstances of him who prays, but never to the omission of this,

the regular and set form of prayer.

(b) Certain ceremonies, “empty” (vacuae) Tertullian calls them, but illustrative of many an interesting point of ritual and practice of the time, are next considered: Washing the hands before prayer; praying with the cloak taken off; sitting after prayer; the kiss of peace; the “Stations” (c. xix. ; see Oehler’s note); the dress of women, and veiling or non-veiling of virgins; kneeling in prayer; place and time of prayer; prayer when brethren met or parted; prayer and psalm. The closing chapter, dealing with the power and effect of prayer, is one of the gems of Tertullian’s writings. “Never,” he cries, “let us walk unarmed by prayer. Under the arms of prayer guard we the standard of our emperor; in prayer await we the angel’s trump. Angels pray; every creature prays. ‘Quid amplius? Etiam ipse Dominus oravit.’”

De Baptismo. — One Quintilla, “a viper of the Cainite heresy,” had sought to destroy baptism. “What good could water do? Was it to be believed that a man could go down into the water, have a few words spoken over him, and rise again the gainer of eternity?” (see c. vi.). Quintilla was apparently a Gnostic, and the very simplicity of the means of grace repelled her. “Miratur simplicia quasi vana, magnifica quasi impossibilia.” Her sneers had corrupted some; others were disturbed by such doubts as, Why was baptism necessary? Abraham was justified without it. The Christ Himself did not baptize. No mention was made in Scripture of the baptism of the apostles; St. Paul himself was bidden not to practise it. Answers had to be given, lest catechumens should perish through lack of right instruction.

(a) The foundation for the sacrament (religionem) of baptism Tertullian finds in (cc. i.–ix.) the history of the creation. The hovering of the Spirit of God over the waters was typical of baptism; and water still, after invocation of God, furnished the sacrament of sanctification. Shortly but beautifully he describes the baptismal ceremonies (cf. de Spect. c. iv.), notes the types and figures of baptism in O.T., and the testimony to baptism in the life and passion of the Lord.

(b) Larger questions acquiescing in the necessity of baptism awaited consideration.

(i) Heretical Baptism. — Christians held firmly to a belief in one God, one Baptism, one Church. This unity was, as regards baptism, imperilled by heretical baptism. The ademptio communicationis (by some = deprivation of communion; by others = excommunication) stamped heretics as strangers. "We and they have not the same God, nor one [i.e. the same] Christ. Therefore we and they have not one [i.e. the same] baptism. What [baptism] they have, they have it not rightly, and therefore have not baptism at all." On these grounds he rejected heretical baptism. On the whole subject consult Libr. of the Fath. x. p seq.

(ii) Second Baptism. — The belief and practice of the church Tertullian states thus: "We enter the font but once; our sins are washed away but once, because they ought not to be repeated." The Christian had, nevertheless, a second baptism, viz. the Baptism of Blood (cf. Luke xii. 50). Two baptisms had Christ sent forth from the wounds in His pierced side, that they who believed in His Blood might be washed with water, and that they who had been washed with water might also drink His Blood. This was that Baptism which stood in the place of the font when it had not been received, or restored it when lost (cf. Scorp. c. vii.).

(c) The remainder of the treatise deals with points of church practice and discipline as regards baptism (cc. xvii.–xx.). Laymen as well as clerics could administer it, but only if disciples and in cases of necessity. "Layman" was not taken to include women. Baptism was not to be administered rashly (cf. Matt. vii. 6). Tertullian, like the teachers of Alexandria, recommends delaying it in the case of children, till they had passed "the age of innocence," and in the case of the unwedded and widowed. The times most suitable for baptism were the Passover and Pentecost; but not to the exclusion of other opportunities. When about to receive baptism, candidates should prepare themselves by prayer, fasting, vigil, and confession of sins (cf. Mat. iii. 6); and after baptism they should rejoice rather than fast. Tertullian suggests to them a prayer: "When you rise from that holy font of your new birth and spread your hands for the first time in the house of your mother Church with your brethren, ask of the Father, ask of the Lord, special grace ["peculia gratiae"] and the divers gifts of the Holy Spirit ["distributiones charismatum"]. And, he adds with touching humility, "I pray you that when you ask, you remember in your prayers Tertullian the sinner."

De Poenitentia. — Repentance of sin before baptism (cc. i.–vi.). True repentance had its measure and its limit in the fear of God. God Himself initiated repentance, when He rescinded His sentence on Adam. He exhorted men to it by His Prophets; by St. John He pointed out its sign and seal in baptism. Its aim was the salvation of man through the abolition of sin. There was a tendency to say "God was satisfied with the devotion of heart and mind. Even if men did sin in act, they could do so without prejudice to their faith and fear." With an intensity of sarcasm Tertullian replies, "You shall be thrust down into hell without prejudice to your pardon." Such Antinomianism explained another frequent and lamentable practice. The Christians of the day most firmly believed in the washing away of sins in Holy Baptism, and in the necessity of true repentance as preparatory to the reception of it; but this led "novices" ("inter auditorum tirocinia") not to a willing and holy eagerness to receive baptism, but to a presumptuous and unholy spirit of delay, that they (the soldiers of the Cross) might steal the intervening time as a furlough ("commentum") for sinning rather than for learning not to sin. Tenderly and wisely does Tertullian plead with them. "If a man who has given himself to God is not to cease sinning till he be bound by baptism, I hardly know whether he will not feel, after baptism, more sorrow than joy."

De Spectaculis. — A period of temporary peace after persecution (cf. c. xxvii.) had fallen upon the church in Carthage. Spectacular shows and games were being given, possibly in commemoration of the victory of Severus over Albinus, and the grave question had to be faced — Should Christians attend them? The seal (signaculum) of baptism supplied the reason against attendance. All the preparations connected with the spectacles were based upon idolatry, and idolatry was renounced at the font. In cc. v.–xiii. Tertullian draws out in detail the origin of the spectacles, their titles, apparatus, localities, and arts; and the reader can realize to the very life the places and scenes he describes in impassioned but often one-sided invective. Everywhere in the circus were images and statues, chariots dedicated to gods, their thrones, crowns, and equipments. Religious rites preceded, intervened, and succeeded the games; guilds, priests, and attendants served the conventus daemoniorum. Consecrated to the sun, the solar temple rose in the midst, the solar effigy glittered on the summit. The chariots of the circus were dedicated to the gods, the charioteers wore the colours (white, red, green, and blue) of idolatry. The designator and the haruspex were two most befouled masters of the ceremonies connected with the funereal and sacrificial rites. The theatrum was the home of Venus and Bacchus; the performances there claimed their patronage. The very artistic gifts employed in producing the spectacles were the inspiration of demons, glozed over by a fallacious consecration. Men pleaded, "We cannot live without pleasure." Well, Christians had pleasures many and noble. What greater pleasure could be conceived than reconciliation to God and pardon of the many sins of a past life? What delight should exceed the trampling idolatry under foot, the expulsion of demons, acts of healing, a life unto God? These were the pleasures and spectacles of Christians, holy, perpetual, and free. In the Christian circus they might behold immodesty hurled down by chastity, perfidy slain by fidelity, cruelty bruised by mercy, wantonness overcome by modesty! These were the contests in which to gain the Christian crown. "or do you wish to see the blood shed? Behold Christ's!" Then Tertullian closes his eyes to the spectacles of earth. There looms before him (c. xxx.) the spectacle close at hand of the Lord coming in His glory and triumph. He depicts angels exulting, saints rising from the dead, the kingdom of the just and the city of the New Jerusalem, the hell of the persecutor and scoffer; and there were spectacles even more glorious still. Man could not conceive them; but they were nobler than those of the circus, the amphitheatre, or the racecourse.

De Cultu Feminarum, i. and ii. — The luxury and extravagance of the women of the time is matter of notoriety. Tertullian and Clement of Alexandria do not express one whit more strongly than Seneca their ambition, cruelty, and licentiousness. Therefore, when women became Christians, and matronly and wifely virtues or virgin purity and modesty characterized them, it extorted the admiration of some and the impatient scorn of others. But luxury began to creep in and overrule the daughters of the church. Tertullian saw it, and the above works were among other efforts to recall Christian women to the Christian life.

De Idololatria is a protest against serving two masters — Christianity and heathenism. Many Christians had in adult age come over to Christianity from heathenism, and many Christian craftsmen gained their living by distinctly heathen trades, and would not or could not see that they were wrong. Many "servants of God" had official or professional engagements which brought them perpetually in contact with heathen customs, legal forms, sacrificial acts, and social courtesies. They drew sophistical distinctions between what they might write but not speak, or the image they might make but not worship. To Tertullian such contact and collusion, and therefore such professions and trades, were radically wrong. Heathenism in all its shapes was idolatry. Two professions connected with idolatry were especially obnoxious to him, (a) the astrologer (c. ix.), arguing that "astrology was the science of the stars which affirmed the Advent of Christ"; (b) the schoolmaster (ludimagister) and other professors of letters (c. x.), who had to teach the names, genealogies, honours of heathen gods, and keep their festivals from which they derived their income. On festival-days, in honour of emperors, victories, and the like, the doors of Christians were more decorated with lamps and laurels than those of the heathen (cf. Apol. c. xxxv.), men quoting Christ's command; "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's" (Matt. xxii. 21). Private and social festivals stood on a different footing (c. xvi.), e.g. the natural ceremonies connected with the assumption of the toga virilis, espousals, nuptials, and the naming of children. It was a more important question (c. xvii.) what was to be the line of slaves or children who were believers, of officials in attendance upon their lords, patrons, or the chief magistrates when sacrificing? Tertullian answers all such questions in detail. From idolatry in act Tertullian passes to idolatry in word (c. xx.), forbidding ejaculations such as "By Hercules!" "By the god of truth" (Medius-fidius, see Andrews's Lex. s.n. Fidius). Lastly a yet subtler form of idolatry is considered (c. xxiii.). Christians borrowed money from the heathen, and by giving bonds in security avoided taking an oath. "Scripsi sed nihil dixi. Non negavi, quia non juravi." Indignantly does Tertullian protest against such sophistry: faults committed in mind were faults in deed (Matt. v. 28).

De Patientia, one of the most spiritual of Tertullian's compositions, is a sermon preached to himself quite as much as to others. His experience as a priest had taught him the need of patience every time he confronted pettiness not less than pride, frivolity not less than idolatry.

Ad Uxorem, i. and ii. — Among the questions discussed in, and disturbing, the Christian church at Carthage was that of second marriages. These were evidently numerous. Tertullian gave his advice in a treatise in two books addressed to his wife, which he hoped might be profitable to her and to any other woman "belonging to God." He does not go here beyond the position taken by St. Paul. If he evidently considered celibacy the higher state, though himself married, he does not forbid marriage. But second marriages were different, and he argues strongly against them.

(2) Doctrinal Treatises. — Three positions laid down by Tertullian (de Praes. Haer. cc. xxi. xxxii. xxxvi.), (a) apostolic doctrine, (b) episcopal succession from the apostles, (c) the apostolic canon of Scripture, were rocks on which the church was then firmly fixed.

(a) His Regula Fidei (cf. de Praes. Haer. c. xiii.; de Virg. Vel. c. i.; adv. Prax. c. ii.) is the form given by Irenaeus (contr. Haer. l. c. x.; cf. the two in Denzinger's Enchiridion, p. 2), expanded upon points which had come to the front during a lapse of about 30 years. But it had become something more than a mere regula; it had risen to a doctrina; and in the brotherhood of Carthage it was the contesseratio (cf. de Praes. Haer. cc. xx. xxxvi.) which reason and tradition united in approving. (b) The regula had come down to them through bishops "per successionem ab initio decurrentem" (cf. ib. c. xxxii.), and those bishops had received "cum successionem charisma veritatis certum" (Iren. iv. c. xxvi. 2). The former fact gave historical value to the regula, the latter dogmatic credibility. The unworthy life of many a successor of the apostles (cf. de Pudicitia, c. i.) did not annul the validity of the doctrine. For (c) it was supported by the Scriptures. In the time of Irenaeus and Tertullian the Law and the Prophets, the Gospels and the Apostolic Epistles (cf. de Praes. Haer. c. xxxvi.) formed an undisputed canon. Tertullian's nomenclature for the Bible (see Rösensch, Das N. T. Tertullian's, p. 49) is alone sufficient record of the high value attached to the writings in the custody of "the one Holy Catholic Church." The sacred Scriptures contained the solution of every difficulty (cf. de Idololat. c. iv. et pass.). It was the armoury of weapons offensive and defensive which the church permitted her children alone to use (cf. de Praes. c. xv., etc.), for she alone had taught them to use them aright. With such an equipment and in defence of "mother" church (ad Mart. c. i.; de Orat. c. ii. and aliter). Tertullian went forth to attack the "heresies" of men who, calling themselves Christians, yet abandoned the apostolic tradition for doctrines whose parentage he attributed to the devil, and whose precepts he scorned as derived from non-Christian religious systems and speculations, or as the offspring of self-willed wickedness.

De Praescriptione Haereticorum. — This treatise, with its title drawn from the language of jurisprudence, consists of (i), an introduction (cc. i.–xiv.), (ii) the main division of the work (cc. xv.–xl.). It is more than probable that it originated in the desire to emphasize the doctrinal stability of the African church in the face of some fresh tendency towards Gnosticism in general and the views of Marcion especially. (i), Persons of weak faith and character (c. iii.) were unsettled because some once accounted firm in the faith were passing over to heresy; and it was not sufficient simply to refer to Scripture, which the Gnostic teachers could apply as much as the orthodox. For the time Tertullian conceived no better way of meeting their difficulty than by positive injunction to refuse appeal to Scripture to their would-be seducers, to note the character of the heretics, and to surrender themselves entirely to the guidance of the church. The authority men advanced for their deviations from the faith was nothing less than the words of the Lord, "Seek, and ye shall find" (Matt. vii. 7). Tertullian argues that Christ's words could bear no such interpretation; they contained advice to search after definite truth and to rest content with it when found. There was safety only in the belief that "Christus instituit quod quaeri oportet, quod credi necesse est." Parables (Luke xi. 5, Luke xv. 8, Luke xviii. 2, 3) taught the same lesson— "finis est et quaerendi et pulsandi et petendi." Therefore Christians were to seek "in their own, from their own, and concerning their own; and only such questions as might be deliberated without prejudice to the rule of faith.

This mention of the regula fidei leads (c. xiii.) to the statement of it. This passage is therefore one of the most important in Tertullian's writings as an index to the articles of the Christian faith believed and accepted in his day (consult Pusey's notes in loco). This "rule" the Christians held to have been taught by Christ. Tertullian is quite willing (c. xiv.) that it should be examined, discussed, and explained to novices by some "doctor gratia scientiae donatus." But he gives a caution. It was not Biblical skill ("exercitatio scripturarum") but faith which saved (cf. Luke xviii. 42). Faith lay deposited in this "rule"; it had a law, and in the keeping of that law came salvation. "Cedat curiositas fidei, cedat gloria saluti."

(ii) Chaps. xv.–xl. — Heresy was sometimes defended on the ground that heretics used and argued from the Scriptures. But, answered Tertullian, their use of them was "audacious" and not to be admitted. None but they whose were the Scriptures had a right to use them. Tertullian adopts this position not from any distrust of his cause, but in accordance with apostolic injunctions (c. xvi.; cf. I. Tim. vi. 3, 4; Tit. iii. 10). Heretics did not deal fairly with the

Scriptures; one passage they perverted, another they interpreted to suit their own purposes (cf. c. xxxviii.). A man might have a most admirable knowledge of the Scripture, but yet make no progress with heretical disputants. Everything he maintained they would deny, everything he denied they would maintain. As a result, the weak in faith, seeing neither side had decidedly the better in the discussion, would go away confirmed in uncertainty. Certain questions had therefore to be settled. Where was the true faith? Whose were the Scriptures? From whom, through whom, when, and to whom had been handed down the “disciplina qua fiunt Christiani”? It might be assumed that wherever the true Christian discipline and faith was, there would be also the true Scriptures, true exposition, and all true Christian traditions (c. xix.). In Christ, Tertullian finds Him Who first delivered the faith openly to the people or privately to His disciples, of whom He had chosen twelve “destinatos nationibus magistros.” These twelve (St. Matthias having been chosen in the place of Judas) went forth and founded churches everywhere; and from them other churches derived then, and still derived, the tradition of faith and the seeds of doctrine. Hence their name of “apostolic churches.” Though so many, they sprang from but one, the primitive church founded by the apostles. Thus all were primitive, all apostolic, all one; and this unity was proved by their peaceful inter-communion, by the title of brotherhood, and by the exercise of hospitality — all of which owed their basis and continuance to one and the same sacramental faith. From this was to be deduced the first rule (c. xxi.) None were to be received (cf. Matt. xi. 27) as preachers but those (apostles) whom the Lord Jesus Christ appointed and sent. A second rule was that what the apostles preached could only be proved by those churches which the apostles themselves founded, to which they preached, and to which they afterwards sent epistles. All doctrine therefore which agreed with these apostolic churches (“matricibus et originalibus fidei”) was to be counted true, and firmly held as having been received by the church from the apostles, by the apostles from Christ, by Christ from God; and all doctrine must be pronounced false which contained anything contrary to the truth declared by the churches and apostles of Christ and of God. These rules Tertullian and his co-religionists affirmed to be held by the Holy Church to which they belonged: “Communicamus cum ecclesiis Apostolicis, quod nulla doctrina diversa. Hoc est testimonium veritatis.”

Heretics advanced two “mad” objections to these rules: (a) The apostles did not know all things (c. xxii.). (b) Arguing from I. Tim. vi. 20 and II. Tim. i. 14, the apostles did not reveal everything to all men. Some doctrines they proclaimed openly and to all, others secretly and to a few (c. xxv.). Tertullian addressed himself to both these points.

C. Tertullian and Montanism. — About the end of 2nd cent. Montanism invaded Africa. Tertullian would seem to have embraced it wholeheartedly. It suited his temperament; it furnished the logical solutions to problems practical and theological which had been disturbing him. But his Montanism was not the Montanism of 172–177 or of Asia Minor; it had come to him through the purifying medium of distance and time. He knew or remembered nothing of the extravagances connected with the first deliverances of the “new prophets.” Montanism was in truth to Tertullian little more than a name; development and restoration rather than novelty underlie the intention, and are stamped upon the thoughts, of every treatise which follows those hitherto considered. The practices Tertullian favoured and advocated, the doctrines he loved and enforced, had alike their roots in the existing practices and doctrines of the church. It is the manner in which he has insisted upon the one which has so much discredited it; it is the juridical fence with which he has driven home the other which has angered opponents. He defended his practice and teaching as necessary for his day. New fasts, protests against second marriages, a sterner accentuation of discipline, were conceived as absolutely necessary by the man who, beginning by tightening bonds which the church had wisely left relaxed, ended by the Pharisaic assumption that he and his were πνευματικοὶ and his opponents ψυχικοί. But if he drew his descriptive language from Gnostic codes, he burned in the spirit to depose Gnostic heresy. The merit he assigned to ecstasy, dream, vision, new prophecy, and special endowment by the Paraclete, were expansions of simpler but Scriptural teaching, with something of Pharisaic lordliness, but ever directed against the Sadduceeism, the materialism, the Patripassianism, and the Monarchianism of his day.

The career of Tertullian, his whole being and character, left him no choice when he had to make his decision. He was bound to side with the sterner party, and he did. If at first he retained his position in the church, that position before long became intolerable. The breach took place of which the de Virg. Vel. gives the ostensible cause; and the passion which animated the apologist in defence of the church was presently employed to revile, discard, and injure her. Few treatises are more painful to read than the de Monogamia, de Jejuniis, and de Pudicitia. It is a relief to turn from them to the adv. Praxean. If the heart of the ascetic has been alienated from the church, he can still defend her faith with all his old loving energy, and, by his last existing writing, command respect from those whose affection he had lost.

(1) Practical Treatises. — De Corona is usually counted the first treatise which indicates traces of Montanism (cf. c. i.; Hauck places the de Virg. Vel. before it), and it was written after the de Spectac. (cf. c. vi.). Opinions were divided as to the soldier's conduct. Some blamed him as rash, as eager to die, some as bringing trouble on the Christian name about a mere matter of dress. Tertullian, with one word of laudation of the man — “solus scilicet fortis inter tot fratres commilitones, solus Christianus” — turns furiously upon his decriers.

De Fuga in Persecutione. — It may well have been that excitement threatening persecution was aroused against Christians by the conduct of the soldier specified in the de Corona. In Carthage (c. iii.) the question was anxiously debated, “May Christians flee from persecution or not?” The clergy answered “Yes,” and set an example (c. xi.), which they probably defended by Christ's words (Matt. x. 23), and by the practice of a Polycarp and others. A few years before (ad Uxor. i. c. iii.) Tertullian himself had conceded that flight was “better” where the Christian was likely to deny the faith through the agony of torture; but now he thought differently. Montanistic severity had laid its spell upon him. His work deals with the two modes by which the timid and doubtful sought to evade persecution: (a) flight (cc. i.–xi.), and (b) bribery (cc. xii.–end).

De Exhortatione Castitatis. — Some years had elapsed since Tertullian had written ad Uxorem, deprecating for women a second marriage. The death of a friend's wife gave him an opportunity of urging upon men a like continence; and he did so in language declaratory of views far more exaggerated.

De Virginibus Velandis. — The veiling of virgins was a burning question among Christians at Carthage; and partisans in Carthage took sides according as they argued from what St. Paul (I. Cor. xi.) had said or had left to be inferred. Did his term “women” include virgins? Christian married women appeared veiled everywhere, in the church as well as the marketplace; their veil was the mark of their status. The Christian virgin did one of three things: she went everywhere unveiled, or veiled in the streets but unveiled in the church, or everywhere veiled. Of these the first was the oldest and local custom — it was the mark of the virgin and the practice of the majority. But a strong minority had adopted the last of the three practices. This Tertullian approved (cf. de Orat. cc. xx.–xxii.).

(2) Doctrinal Works. — The majority of these were written when Tertullian had become a Montanist. They present more or less the catch-words of the sect, and refer to the Paraclete and the new prophecy, if the doctrines inculcated and defended are those of the church Catholic. To be a Montanist was not with Tertullian to be a seceder from the church in points of faith, though the church found it necessary for the sake of her unity in life and doctrine to count him and his outside her.

Adv. Hermogenem. — For the nature of the opinions of this heretical teacher and of Tertullian's treatise against him see HERMOGENES. The treatise contains two very beautiful passages, (a) the eulogy of wisdom (c. xviii.), and (b) the description of the development of cosmical order out of chaos (c. xxix.).

Adv. Valentinianos. — For a review of the opinions of this school ("frequentissimum plane collegium inter haereticos") see VALENTINUS. Tertullian's treatise does not so much discuss these opinions as state them; it is not so much a refutation as a satire, intended to provoke mirth (c. vi.). It claims no originality, but to be a faithful reflection of the teaching of Justin, Miltiades (cf. Eus. H. E. v. 17) Irenaeus, and Proculus.

De Carne Christi. — This is Tertullian's principal contribution to the Christological problem of the time: Was the flesh of Christ born of the Virgin and human in its nature (c. xxxv.)? In his de Resurrectione Carnis (c. ii.) he himself specifies the tenets he opposes here to be those of Marcion, Basilides, Valentinus, and Apelles. These "modern Sadducees" (c. i.; de Praes. Haer. c. xxxiii.) were apprehensive lest if they admitted the reality of Christ's flesh, they must also admit His resurrection in the flesh, and consequently the resurrection generally. It was necessary to discuss, therefore, His bodily substance. (i) (a) Marcion's views are examined (cc. ii.–v.); then (b) those of Apelles (cc. vi.–ix.) ; then (c) that of the Valentinians (cc. x.–xvi.). (ii) The second part of the treatise deals more especially with the single point— "Did

The treatise fully responds to the intention of the writer. It examines the arguments employed and the Scriptures advanced (see esp. c. xviii.) ; and does so, on the whole, in a style moulded by the recollection that the subject was a grave and solemn one. There are bursts of irony (e.g. cc. ii. iv.); paradoxes (see c. v., perhaps the most famous of Tertullian's many paradoxes) and retorts; but the total result is a valuable contribution to the literature of the subject. His line of argument and his statement of the church's doctrine is that of Irenaeus. For a general view of the opinions attacked see APELLES, MARCION, and VALENTINUS.

De Resurrectione Carnis. — Tertullian wrote this (c. ii.) in fulfilment of the intention expressed in the de Carne Christi (c. xxv.), against those who allowed that the soul would rise again, but refused resurrection to the flesh on account of its worthlessness. It was a logical sequence to their fundamental position that the works of the Demiurge, or the god who created the world and was opposed to the supreme God, were marked by corruption and worthlessness, and that the flesh of man was consequently so also. Tertullian grants that his subject was invested with uncertainty; but it was too important to be passed over. The question affected the very Oneness of the Godhead. To deny the resurrection of the flesh would be to shake that doctrine, to vindicate the resurrection of the flesh would establish it. In contrast to the unseemly language (spurciloquium) of heathen and heretic, he will adopt a more honourable and modest style (cf. de Anima, c. xxxii.); and he has kept his word. There are few sentences which grate upon the ear, while there are many passages of considerable beauty and profound Christian faith.

Adv. Marcionem, bks. i.—v. — This work in its present form is assigned to the 15th year of Severus (bk. i. c. xv.) or c. 208; and comes to us as a work touched and retouched during many years (cf. i. c. xxii.). Tertullian had in other cases felt dissatisfaction with his writings of an earlier period, or altered his arguments to meet the ever-altering phases of false belief. Thus in the earlier work, de Praes. Haer. c. xix., he declines to allow appeal to the Scriptures in the discussion of heresy; in a later treatise, de Resurr. Carnis, c. iii., he demands of heretics that they should support their inquiries from Scripture alone (cf. adv. Prax. c. xi.). So now, his earliest edition of this treatise, if placed (conjecturally) c. 200, would have seemed to him very defective when writing c. 208. He had separated from his old friends, now branded as the “Psychics” (iv. c. xxii.), to find among the Montanists the true church (i. c. xxi.; iv. c. v.). To him “the new prophecy” was now the highest authority, the Paraclete the sole guide unto all truth. The doctrinal controversy between Tertullian and Marcion turned principally on questions of anthropology and Christology. All that Tertullian has to say upon it has been summed up under MARCION.

De Anima. — In the treatise de Testimonio Animae Tertullian had sought to prove that the soul of man bore natural testimony to the truth of the representations given in Holy Scripture of the unity, nature, and attributes of God, and of a future state. In the treatise de Anima, written some ten years or so later, he deals with the soul itself. Between these surviving treatises is to be placed one now lost, de Censu Animae, in which he had combated the opinion of Hermogenes that the origin of the soul was to be found in matter by the counter-opinion that it was formed by the afflatus of God (cf. de Anima, cc. i. iii. xi.; adv. Marc. ii. c. ix.). The attributes of the soul (animae naturalia) pointed, in his opinion, to propinquity to God and not to matter (cf. de Anima, c. xxii.), an opinion supported by the views of Plato, who had taught the divinatio animae (cf. de Anima, c. xxiv.). The discussion of its origin is followed by a general inquiry respecting the nature, powers, and destiny of the soul. An admirable analysis is that of Bp. Kaye (p-207; cf. also Neander, the careful analysis of Böhringer, and Hauck). In c. xxii. Tertullian gives his definition of the soul as deriving its origin from the breath of God (iv. xi.). The soul is immortal, corporeal (v.-viii.), and endowed with form (ix.); simple in its substance (x. xi.); possessing within itself the principle of intelligence (xii.); working in different ways or channels (xiii.-xv.); endued with free will; affected by external circumstances, and thus producing the infinite variety of disposition observable among mankind; rational (xvi.); supreme over man (xvii. xviii.); and possessing natural insight into futurity (xix.). The Gospels, in (e.g.) the history of the rich man in torment (Luke xvi. 23, 24), proved the corporeity of the soul (c. vii.; also a Stoic opinion), and medical science, “the sister of philosophy,” in the volumes of a contemporary physician, Soranus (c. vi.), also attested this belief. The invisibility of the soul was no disproof of its corporeity; witness St. John, who, “when in the spirit,” “beheld the souls of the martyrs” (Rev. vi. 9); witness also the testimony of “the sister so endowed with gifts of revelation” (c. ix.). This latter testimony is of interest as exhibiting Montanist religious observances. Revelations used to come to her in the church on the Lord’s Day. While the solemn services were being performed, she used to fall into an “ecstasy in the spirit.” In that state she conversed with angels, sometimes even with the Lord; she saw and heard mysteries (sacramenta); she read men’s hearts; she prescribed remedies to the sick. Sometimes these visions took place when the Scriptures were being read, or when the Psalms were being chanted, or at the time of preaching or of prayer. On one occasion Tertullian thinks that he must have been preaching about the soul. The “sister” was rapt in spiritual ecstasy. After the people had been dismissed, she told him, as was her habit, what she had seen. “The soul was shewn to me in a bodily form. It seemed a spirit; not, however, an empty illusion, but one which could be grasped, ‘tenera et lucida et aerii coloris, et forma per omnia humana.’” Such testimony was to the Montanist Tertullian all-conclusive.

The main purpose of cc. xxiii.–xxvii. is to prove that the souls of all mankind are derived from one common source, the soul of Adam. In cc. xxviii.–xxxv. Tertullian ridicules the conclusions necessitated by metempsychosis and metempsychosis.

As a preliminary to the consideration of the manner in which the soul encounters death, Tertullian considers the subject of sleep — the image of death (cc. xlii.–end). He adopts by preference the Stoic definition of sleep as the temporary suspension of the activity of the senses (“resolutionem sensualis vigoris”), and limits the senses affected to those of the body; the soul, being immortal, neither requiring nor admitting a state of rest. While the body is asleep or dead, the soul is elsewhere.

Death, to which Tertullian now turns (c.1.), was to be the lot of all, let Epicurus and Menander say what they would. The voice of God (Gen. ii. 17) had declared death to be the death of nature. Independent of heathen examples of this truth, Tertullian finds one in the translation of Enoch and Elijah. Their death was deferred only; “they were reserved for a future death, that by their blood they might extinguish Antichrist” (Oehler refers to Rev. xi. 3). Where would the soul be when divested of the body (cc. liii.–lviii.)? Tertullian answers, In Hades; but his Hades is not that of Plato, nor his answer to the question that adopted by philosophers. To Hades, “a subterranean region,” did Christ go (Matt. xii. 40; I. Pet. iii. 19); therefore Christians must keep at arms' length those who were too proud to believe that the souls of the faithful deserved to be placed in the lower regions. From Hades shall men remove to heaven at the day of judgment. But what would take place while the soul was in Hades? Would it sleep? No, Tertullian replies; souls do not sleep when men are alive. Full well the soul will know in Hades how to feel joy or sorrow even without the body. The "prison" of the Gospel (Matt. v. 25) was Hades, and "the uttermost farthing" the very smallest offence which had to be atoned there before the resurrection. Hence the soul must undergo in Hades some compensatory discipline without prejudice to the full accomplishment of the resurrection, when recompense would be paid to the flesh also. This conclusion Tertullian affirms to be one communicated by the Paraclete, and therefore accepted by all who admitted the force of His words from a knowledge of His promised gifts.

De Pallio. — This, a treatise intentionally extravagant, is a vindication of the philosopher's mantle (pallium) ridiculed by the people of Carthage. It might be called a juridical plea, couched in witty and forensic language, in an imaginary case of Pallium (see description s.v. in D. C. A.) v. Toga. Some have seen in Tertullian's assumption of the pallium an indication that he adopted it to show his separation from the church. The conjecture has nothing to prove or disprove it. The mantle had virtues of its own (cc. v. vi.). Did it not illustrate simplicity and capacity, economy and austerity, in protest against the follies and effeminacies, the gluttony and extravagance, the impurity and intemperance of the togati? "Grande pallii beneficium est." It was the garb not only of the philosopher, but also of those benefactors of the human race — the grammarian and the rhetorician, the sophist and the physician, the poet and the musician, the student of astronomy and the pupil of national history. In face of such facts, why mind the sneer, "The pallium ranked below the toga of the Roman knight," or the indignant question, "Shall I give up my toga for the pallium?" There was no indignity in the matter. "'Gaude gallium et exsulta!' Thou art honoured by a better philosophy from the time that thou didst become a Christian garment."

Scorpiace. — A defence of martyrdom stronger than is found in the Montanist works of his previous period, perhaps c. 211.

211, the African proconsul Scapula authorized the persecution to which this work refers. He was a fierce opponent of the Christians, and permitted his fanaticism to override his sense of justice (c. iv.). This treatise uses the arguments of the Apology, but with a change in tone. Tertullian's passion is still strong, but gravely and soberly expressed. There is the same appeal for justice, but defiance has given place to prayer, and hatred of the persecutor to love for the enemy. The treatise may fairly take rank among the best and most interesting of all which have been preserved. Scapula is told frankly that they who had joined the "sect" of Christians were prepared to accept its conditions. The persecutions of men ignorant of what they were doing did not alarm them or make them shrink from heathen "savagery." Against the charges usually brought against them (cf. c. ii.; Apol. cc. vii.–ix.) Scapula should set one plain fact — the behaviour of Christians. They formed the majority in every city, yet their conduct was always marked by silence and modesty. Their "discipline" enforced a patience which was divine; if they were known at all among men, it was for their reformation of the vices which once degraded them. Tertullian does not write to intimidate, but to warn — μή θεομαχεῖν. "Perform your duties as proconsul, but remember to be humane." If the Christians of Carthage should see fit to come to Scapula, how many swords and fires would he need for such multitudes of every sex, age, and rank! He would have to slaughter the leading persons of the city, and decimate the noble men and women of his own rank, friends and relations of his own circle. "Spare thyself, Scapula, if thou wilt not spare us. Spare Carthage, if thou wilt not spare thyself. Spare thy province, which the mere mention of thine intention has subjected to the threats and extortions of soldiers and of private foes [cf. de Fuga, cc. xii. xiii.]. As for us, we have no Master but God. Those whom you reckon your masters are but men, and must one day die. Our community shall never die. The more you pull it to the ground, the more it will be built up."

De Monogamia. — Some years passed, of peace from without but not from within; and a third time (c. 217) Tertullian returns to that question — marriage — which had occupied him in the ad Uxorem and de Exhortatione Castitatis. The third treatise is the bitterest. Tertullian now claims for his party that they and they alone were guided by the Paraclete. From Him they had received their teaching on monogamy. He had come to supersede the teaching of St.

Paul by yet higher counsels of perfection. Much of Tertullian's argument — e.g. from Scripture — is repeated from his former treatises, and much of it is strained and conjectural, as he felt it would be said to be (c. ix.); but no one will dispute Tertullian's earnestness. Immorality was prevalent and contagious, and in monogamy — supposing celibacy and widowhood to be impossible — he saw a counteracting agency. Discipline and spirituality would be at least practicable to those who would rally round the standard of monogamy.

De Jejuniis Adversus Psychicos (al. de Jejuniis). — Another great subject of difference between churchmen and Montanists had reference to fasts. Tertullian's paper is most distressing to read, scanty in argument, plentiful in abuse. Both sides indulged in unmeasured invective; both had lost their temper. The charges of luxury, gluttony, and immorality unhesitatingly and almost exultingly brought by Tertullian against church ecclesiastics and laymen are so gross as almost to refute themselves by their very exaggeration. They are more than the retort of a man infuriated by unjust accusations and meeting them by counter-charges. The ascetic has become a fanatic, and in his mad hatred besmirches and calumniates the church he had once so tenderly loved.

De Pudicitia. — This work has been placed before the de Monogamia and the de Jejuniis, but internal and negative evidence, if slight, seems to assign it a place after them. An edict (c. i.) of the bp. of Rome (Zephyrinus, 202–218, or Callistus, 218–223) lashed Tertullian into fury, and completely dissolved the last links of union between him and the Psychics. The treatise is marked by intense bitterness from beginning to end.

Adversus Praxean. — For the history of Praxeas, the nature of his views and Tertullian's answer, see PRAXEAS.

Tertullian was the first who, in the controversy against the Monarchians, introduced prominently the doctrine of the Holy Spirit. Praxeas did not touch it. Hence the value of such chapters as viii. ix. xxv. xxx. He fully maintains the personality of the Third Person of the Trinity (cf. ad Mart. c. iii.) if his language is occasionally ambiguous (cf. c. xii., his comment on Gen. i. 26). He bases as usual his arguments on Scripture (cc. xxi. to end), and if not always free from his well-known tendency to read into them what he wants, the passages are as a rule well and wisely handled either in defence of the Catholic position or in refutation of that of Praxeas. He gives (c. xx.) the 3 texts especially valued by this teacher in support of his heresy (Is. xlv. 5; John x. 30, xiv. 9, 10), and refutes his views at length (cc. xxi.–xxiv.).

IV. SUMMARY.

The brief sketch here presented of these powerful writings will have indicated the investigation of many a doctrine and the record of contemporaneous practices heathen and Christian, as well as illustrated the mind, character, and style of their writer.

(a) Tertullian and Heathenism. — On its moral side, extravagance, luxury, immorality, and cruelty were to all external appearance as rampant in his day as ever. Tertullian knows heathenism only in its coarseness and repulsiveness. Yet a reformation was proceeding, religious in origin and intention, which must not be forgotten in any true estimate of the age. Tertullian lived when old pagan traditions and new tendencies were co-operating; when there had risen that religious movement which, owing its impulse to the eclecticism of a Julia Domna, passed through the stirring phases successively represented in the neo-Pythagoreanism of her salon, in the subordination by Elagabalus of every other cultus to that of the Oriental sun-god, and in the equalization by Alexander Severus of all worshipful beings in his common cultus of the heroes of humanity. That movement was the product of a real awakening.

The main centre of these changes and developments was Rome, but Tertullian's writings against heathenism prove that Carthage at least felt the effects of this great tidal wave of religiousness. They are as full of attack as of defence. He strikes at a vigorous paganism as much as he beats off the charges alleged against Christianity. Every page teems with allusions which reflect without effort the firm foothold acquired by all forms of heathen cultus. Ridicule of the worship of the ancient deities of Greece and Rome, of the cultus of the emperors, of the "genius," and of demons is found allied with contempt of the gods of Alexandria (Isis and Serapis), of Phrygia (the Magna Mater and Bellona), of Syro-Phoenicia (the Dea Syria), and of Carthage (the Juno Coelestis). The very fierceness of his invective and scorn against the polytheistic revival, the ridicule he pours upon galli and flamines, priests and priestesses, itinerant and mendicant propagators of this or that cultus, guilds, processions, festivals, evidences the success and popularity of heathenism. The Apology of Apuleius (end of 2nd cent.) is illustrated by the Apology of Tertullian, and the statements of Dio, Spartian, Herodian, Lampridius, etc., can be compared with those of our writer. Were those heathen works lost, it would be almost possible to reproduce from his pages, shorn of their extravagance, a picture of the religiousness of the age such as they have given.

(b) Tertullian and Christianity. — In passing from heathenism to Christianity, Tertullian believed himself to be passing from darkness to light and from corruption to purity. He embraced it with all the strength of a matured mind and life. All the more intelligible, therefore, is his vehement anger with any form of Christian precept and practice, whether at Rome or Carthage, which fell short of his ideal. The church was to him the Virgin and spotless Bride of the Ascended Lord, and her children — bishops, priests, and people — must worthily reflect her purity and faith. He would permit no shortcomings because he would admit no failure. A writer of the 4th cent. has left on record that the Africans as he knew them were “faithless and cunning. There might be some good people among them, but they were not many” (quoted in Mommsen, The Provinces of the Roman Empire, ii.). This estimate is reflected a century earlier in Tertullian’s pages. It is a summary of his opinion of the spurious devotion which marked the Christian fop (de Poenit. c. xi.; cf. de Cultu Fem. ii. c. viii.), the would-be penitent (de Poenit. c. ix.), the rich Christian lady (de Cultu Fem. i. c. ix., ii. cc. v.–vii.; de Virg. Vel. c. xvii.), the fashionable virgin (ib. c. xii.; in contrast with her holy sister, c. xv.), the drugged and petted martyr (de Jej. c. xii., in contrast with the willing and happy martyr, ad Martyres, cc. i.–iii.); and it explains that final revulsion of mind which, spurning every kind of compromise, heaped indiscriminate abuse on what was best as well as what was worst in the life of the Christians of the church, and turned to find in asceticism and Montanism a seriousness and elevation impossible to him elsewhere. Paradoxical as it may seem, it was the same impulsive spirit which kept him staunch to the faith of that church whose discipline and ritual he abjured or carried with him to a schismatic body. Gnosticism was to Tertullian the embodiment of theological corruption, darkness, and falsehood, and he fought it with all his natural vehemence. His theology, if developed by Montanism, is in substance that which the church accepted, and accepts. The admiration felt for his writings by his countryman Cyprian (200–258), bp. of Carthage, should never be forgotten. Cyprian, says St. Jerome, never passed a day without reading a portion of Tertullian’s works; he frequently asked for them with the words, “Da mihi magistrum”;

and it is impossible to read Cyprian's existing treatises without seeing how largely the thoughts of Tertullian have been absorbed by him, if the language has been softened and deepened. In our own country Bp. Bull (Defensio Fidei Nicenae) and Pearson (On the Creed) have used many an argument which the Montanist of Africa had prepared for them, and Bp. Kaye's illustrations of the Articles of the Church of England from Tertullian's writings (p, etc.) concur in establishing the force of Möhler's description of his dogma as "so homelike" (Patr. i.). It is based on the teaching of Christ as handed down by apostles and apostolic men, and formulated in the "regula fidei una, sola, immobilis et irreformabilis" (cf. de Praes. Haer. cc. viii. ix.; de Virg. Vel. c. i.). Theology owes practically to him such words (int. al.) as Trinitas, satisfactio, sacramentum, substantia, persona, liberum arbitrium, transferred (some of them) from the Latin law courts to take their definite place in the language of Latin divinity (cf. the index verborum at the end of Oehler, vol. ii.).

(c) Tertullian, the Man. — Of no one, says Ebert, is Buffon's saying truer, "the style is the man," and the best illustration of his style he finds in the Apology (Geschichte der Christlich-Lateinischen Literatur, p-37). Tertullian cared nothing for form save as it best expressed his thought. He said right out from his heart what he had to say about friend or foe, without attempt to clothe his speech with the graceful charm of the Greek or the dignified periods of the Roman. Abrupt and impetuous, eloquent and stern, his sentences follow one another with the sweeping, rushing force of storm-waves. The very exceptions do but prove the rule. Such tender or beautiful passages as those which depict the life of Christ on earth (de Pat. c. iii.; Apol. c. xxi.; were these written with any acquaintance with the Life of the pagan Christ, Apollonius of Tyana, edited by Philostratus at the command of Julia Domna?), the power and effect of prayer (de Orat. c. xxix.), the virtues and portrait of patience (de Pat. c. xv.), contemporary civilization (de Anima, c. xxx.), the happy marriage (ad Uxor. ii. 8), and faith, the barque of the church (de Idol. c. xxiv.); or the impressive analogies of the resurrection he finds in nature (re Resurr. Carnis, c. xii.), and the illustrations of the Trinity (adv. Prax. c. viii.), come upon the reader as a surprise, as something so unlike one who is more in his recognized element when describing the place-hunter (de Poenit. c. xi.), the traitor (Apol. c. xxxv.), and the knowing Valentinian (adv. Val. end), or painting that ghastliest of his portraits, murder and idolatry crooning over adultery (de Pud. c. v.). His paradoxes are characteristic: To him the unity of heretics was schism (de Praes. Haer. c. xlii.); and heresy itself “tantum valeat quantum si non fuisset” (ib. c. i.). “God is great when little” (adv. Marc. ii. c. ii.); “Lie to be true” (de Virg. Vel. c. xvi.), contain thoughts only a shade less startling than the “Mortuus est Dei Filius; prorsus credibile est quia ineptum est; et sepultus resurrexit; certum est quia impossibile est” (de Carne Christi, c. v.), or the well-known “the blood of martyrs is the seed of the church” (Apol. c. i.). His right appreciation of the methods of Scripture exegesis (de Pud. c. ix.; cf. de Res. Carn. c. xxi.) is found side by side with such signal examples of perverse interpretation as those which disfigure the de Jejunio and de Pudicitia, or such fanciful expositions as his view of the cross (adv. Marc. iii. c. xviii.; cf. adv. Jud. cc. x. xiii.), St. Peter and the sword (de Idol. c. xix.), God’s Voice to Adam (adv. Marc. ii. c. xxv.), and the phoenix (de Res. Carn. c. xiii.). Such paradoxes, contrasts, and contradictions are characteristic indications not so much of a want of comprehensiveness as of a determination to occupy himself with but one idea or one aspect of a great truth, and subjugate to that the wider bearings of the question. His great acuteness, power, eloquence, and causticity are concentrated for the time being upon a single principle; and whatever will illustrate it, prove it, and drive it home, is drawn into its service, often regardless of its fitness (see this drawn out in Pusey’s pref. to Libr. of the Fath. vol. x.) Tertullian’s style is strongly marked by the early training of his life: it is juridical in thought, language, and exposition — a fact which explains so much of its difficulty. The advocate is always present. His conduct of the contest between Christianity and heathenism is that of a law-court contest, God v. the devil; his conception of the contest between Montanist and Churchman is that of one who asserted and developed Christianity v. one who surrendered it or left it defective. Tertullian was often wrong, and the church has, with sorrow, so adjudged him; but the character of the man explains everything.

What that character was he has himself told: “Miserrimus ego, semper aeger caloribus impatientiae” (de Pat. c. i.). The sentence, caught up by Jerome, explained to him the man (“homo acris et vehementis ingenii”), as it explains his secession to Montanism and his intellectual and moral defects. Perverse in the sense of wrongheaded he often was in his narrow estimates, but he was never wrong-hearted. His life and work, full of the shades and contrasts of one who loved well and hated well, were after all a life and a work from which more has been gained than lost. If Hilary can regret that his “later error took away from the authority of what he had written,” Vincentius can remind us that those writings were “thunderbolts”; they were hurled forth in defence of faith and practice. It will be to his earlier life or less polemical treatises that the reader will turn with Cyprian by preference, and in the perverse impatience of his later life see at once “the fire which kindles and the beacon which warns” (Pusey).

V. LITERATURE.

Oehler's ed. of Tertullian is on the whole the best extant. A new and scientific ed. was commenced by Rufferscheid and Wissowa in the Vienna Corpus Scr. Eccl. Lat. xx. See a full list of recent litt. in Bardenhewer's Patrology (Freiburg im Br. 1908). Kaye is most serviceable in elucidating many points as to his life, era, teaching, and style. Translations into Eng. of some of his apologetic and practical treatises are in Lib. of the Fathers, vol. x., and of almost all his works in Ante-Nicene Lib. vols. ii. vii. xi. xviii.; but the translations are very unequal. Recent edd. are de Praescrip. Haer., ad Martyres, and ad Scapulam in one vol. with intro. and notes, and adv. Gentes, both ed. by T. H. Bindley (Oxf. Univ. Press); de Baptismo, ed. with intro. and notes by J. M. Lupton (Camb. Univ. Press); de Poen. and de Pud. with French notes and intro. by Prof. de Labriolle (1906); and a reprint of the bp. of Bristol's illustrations of Ecclesiastical History from Tertullian's writings in the A. and M. Theol. Libr. (Griffith).
